Cut Bank. Town in NW Montana, county seat of Glacier County, ab. 180 mi. N of Butte, in an oil and natural gas area. Part of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation adjoins the town. 3,721 (1950).

Cutch (kuch). See Kutch.

Cuthah (kū'thą). [Also, Cuth (kuth).] In Biblical geography, a city in Babylonia from which Shalmaneser IV (727–722 B.C.) brought colonists into Samaria (2 Kings, xvii. 24). These Cutheans, mingling with other peoples, became the progenitors of the Samaritans. In the cuneiform inscriptions the city is often mentioned under the name of Kutu. It was situated a little to the E of Babylon, and is now represented by the ruins of Tel Ibrahim. The statement (2 Kings, xvii. 30) that the principal god of the Cutheans was Nergal (the god of war) is confirmed by the inscriptions. Nebuchadnezzar (604–561) records that he restored the temple of Nergal in the city of Cuthah.

Cuthbert (kuth'bėrt), Saint. d. at Farne, in Northumbria, March 20, 687. English monk. He was prior of Melrose from 661 to 664, and in 664 of Lindisfarne, and bishop of Lindisfarne from 685 to 687.

Cuthbert. City in SW Georgia, county seat of Randolph County: seat of Andrew College. Farm products, lumber, and cotton are produced in the area; the town has canneries and a plywood factory. 4,025 (1950).

Cuthbert Clutterbuck (klut'ėr.buk), Captain. See Clutterbuck, Captain Cuthbert.

Cuticle (kū'ti.kl), Surgeon. Character in White-Jacket (1850), novel by Herman Melville.

Cutler (kut'lėr), Manasseh. b. at Killingly, Conn., May 13, 1742; d. at Hamilton, Mass., July 28, 1823. American botanist and Congregational clergyman, one of the founders of Marietta, Ohio, in 1788.

Cutler, Timothy. b. at Charlestown (now part of Boston), Mass., May 31, 1684; d. at Boston, Aug. 17, 1765. American clergyman, president of Yale College from 1719 to 1722.

Cuttack (ku.tak'). [Also: Cattack, Katak, Kuttack.] District in Orissa, Union of India, bounded on the E and SE by the Bay of Bengal, and traversed by the Mahanadi River: forest products, wheat, and rice. Capital, Cuttack; area, 3,654 sq. mi.; pop. 2,431,427 (1941).

Cuttack. [Also: Cattack, Katak, Kuttack.] Capital of the district of Cuttack and of Orissa state, Union of India, on the Mahanadi River, ab. 250 mi. SW of Calcutta. It is on the main line of the railroad from Madras to Calcutta. Once a busy port, it is no longer important as such because the railroad has taken most of the coastal trade and the port is too shallow for the modern deep-drafted ships. Ravenshaw College, a government institution, is located here. The city was taken from the Mahrattas by the British in 1803. Pop. 74,291 (1941).

Cutten (kut'ęn), George Barton. b. at Amherst, Nova Scotia, April 11, 1874—. American educator. Graduated from Yale (B.A., 1897; Ph.D., 1902; B.D., 1903), he was president of Acadia University, Nova Scotia (1910–22) and of Colgate University (1922–42) and acting president (1943–44) of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School. He is the author of The Psychology of Alcoholism (1906), The Psychological Phenomena of Christianity (1908), Instincts of Religion (1940), Should Prohibition Return (1944), and other books.

Cutter (kut'ėr), Charles Ammi. b. at Boston, March 14, 1837; d. at Walpole, N.H., Sept. 6, 1903. American librarian. He was librarian (1868–93) of the Boston Athenaeum, cofounder (1876) of the American Library Association and of the Library Journal, of which he was general editor (1881–93), and aided (1894) in the development of the Forbes Library at Northampton, Mass. His classification of books by author initial-marks and numbers is a basis for the system now in wide usage. He was the author of the Catalogue of the Library of the Boston Athenaeum (5 vols., 1874–82), Rules for a Printed Dictionary Catalogue (1875), and Expansive Classification (1891–94).

Cutter, George Washington. b. at Quebec, Canada, 1801; d. Dec. 25, 1865. American poet and lawyer. He was a member (1838–39) of the Indiana legislature and later a stump speaker for the Know-Nothing Party. A captain in the Mexican War, he was inspired by his experiences at Buena Vista to write his best-known work, published in Buena Vista and Other Poems (1848). He was the author also of The Song of Steam and Other Poems (1857) and Poems, National and Patriotic (1857).

Cutting of an Agate, The. Volume of essays by William Butler Yeats, published in 1912.

Cuttle (kut'l), Captain Edward. In Charles Dickens's Dombey and Son, "a kind-hearted, salt-looking" old retired sailor with a hook in place of his right hand. He is a friend of Sol Gills, the ships' instrument-maker. One of his favorite expressions is "When found, make a note on."

Cutts (kuts), John. [Title, Baron Cutts of Gowran; called "Salamander."] b. 1661; d. at Dublin, Ireland, Jan. 26, 1707. English soldier. Returned to England with William of Orange at the time of the revolution of 1688, soon becoming colonel of his regiment; distinguished himself at Boyne (1690) where Macaulay states he was at the head of his regiment, the 5th Fusiliers; wounded at the siege of Limerick; called "Salamander" for his bravery during the siege of Namur (1695); as brigadier general he accompanied (1701) Marlborough to Holland; third in command at the battle of Blenheim, where his division fought strenuously throughout the day; appointed commander in chief in Ireland under the Duke of Ormonde.

Cutwa (kut'wą). See Katwa.

Cuverville Island (kū'vėr.vil). [Also, Cavelier de Cuverville Island.] Dark, rounded rock with precipitous cliffs in Antarctica, lying ab. 1 mi. NE of De Rongé Island along the Danco Coast, in ab. 64°40′ S., 62°33′ W.

Cuvier (kü.vyā), Frédéric. b. at Montbéliard, Doubs, France, June 27, 1773; d. at Strasbourg, France, July 25, 1838. French naturalist; brother of Georges Cuvier. He became director of the menagerie of the Jardin des Plantes, at Paris, in 1804, and in 1827 was appointed professor of comparative anatomy at the Jardin des Plantes. He wrote Des dents des mammifères, considerées comme caractères zoologiques (1825) and (in coöperation with Geoffroy Saint-Hilaire) Histoire naturelle des mammifères (1819–39).

Cuvier, Georges Léopold Chrétien Frédéric Dagobert, Baron. b. at Montbéliard, Doubs, France, Aug. 23, 1769; d. at Paris, May 13, 1832. French naturalist, the founder of the science of comparative anatomy; brother of Frédéric Cuvier. He was educated at the Gymnasium (advanced secondary school) at Montbéliard and the Academia Carolina at Stuttgart, was tutor (1788–94) in the family of the Comte d'Héricy, became assistant professor of comparative anatomy at the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle in 1795, and a member of the National Institute in 1795. He was named professor of natural history in the Collège de France in 1800, life secretary of the Academy of Sciences in 1803, and councilor of the Imperial University in 1808; was appointed councilor of state by Napoleon in 1814; was admitted to the French Academy in 1818; was president (1819–32) of the Committee of the Interior; received the title of baron in 1820; was appointed superintendent of the Faculty of Protestant Theology in 1822; was made grand officer of the Legion of Honor in 1826; and was created a peer of France in 1831. His chief works are Anatomie comparée (1800–05), Recherches sur les ossements fossiles (1812), Le Règne animal (1817), and Histoire naturelle des poissons (with Valenciennes; 1828–49). Cuvier was a persistent opponent of the evolutionary doctrines advanced by Lamarck and Geoffroy Saint-Hilaire.

Cuvilliès (kü.vē.yes), François de. [Also, Cuvilles.] b. at Soissons, France, 1698; d. 1767 or 1768. French architect and decorator. He went to Paris in his youth to study architecture, and as early as 1720 was commissioned to execute important works at Cologne for the elector James Clement. In 1738 he was appointed architect to the elector Charles Albert of Bavaria who, upon becoming emperor under the title of Charles VII, elevated him to the post of architect to the imperial court. He brought the German rococo style to its most lavish perfection, especially in some of his creations at Munich, best known of which is probably the Amalienburg pavilion.

Cuxhaven (kůks'hä.fən). [Also, Kuxhaven.] City in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly belonging to the free city of Hamburg, situated at the mouth of the Elbe River, ab. 57 mi. NW of Hamburg. It has large port facilities, shipyards, important fisheries (especially for herring and codfish), fish-smoking plants and fish markets, canneries, and metallurgical, electrical, leather, and other industries. It is also a seaside resort with a large bathing beach. The city was frequently bombed during World War II; the Döser Church was partly destroyed. The contents of the museum had been evacuated to safe storage and were thus saved. The increase in population between 1939 and 1946 amounted to 37.1 percent. 42,542 (1946), 46,861 (1950).

Cuyabá (kö.yą.bä'). Former spelling of Cuiabá.

Cuyaguateje (kö.yä.gwä.te'hā). River in W Cuba, flowing S to the Caribbean Sea.

Cuyahoga (kī.hog'ą, ku-, kī.ą.hō'gą). River in N Ohio which flows into Lake Erie at Cleveland. Length, ab. 90 to 100 mi.

Cuyahoga Falls. City in NE Ohio, in Summit County, on the Cuyahoga River near Akron. Manufactures include rubber goods, tools, and chemicals. 29,195 (1950).

Cuyler (kī'lėr), Theodore Ledyard. b. at Aurora, N.Y., Jan. 10, 1822; d. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Feb. 26, 1909. American clergyman and author. He was pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church at Brooklyn (1860–90), and then retired to devote himself to temperance reform and other philanthropic work. He helped to organize the Republican Party in 1856. In addition to his Recollections of a Long Life (1902), he was the author of many religious works, contributions to periodicals, and others.

Cuyo (kö'yō). In the history of Spanish South America, a region E of the Andes. It was originally settled from Chile, and remained a province of that captain-generalcy until 1776, when it was united to the new viceroyalty of Buenos Aires. The limits were never definitely fixed, and the name is now obsolete.

Cuyo Islands. [Also, Cuyos.] Group of small islands in the Philippines, E of the N part of Palawan and belonging to that province.

Cuyp or Kuyp (koip), Albert. b. at Dordrecht, Netherlands, 1620; d. there, 1691. Dutch painter; son of Jacob Cuyp. He was a skillful painter of genre scenes, architectural views, and country landscapes and also of animals, all of which he especially liked to place against backgrounds of diffused golden light. Some of his best-known works are Promenade, Dapple-grey Horses, View of Dordrecht, and Piper with Cows.

Cuyp or Kuyp, Jacob Gerritsz. b. 1575; d. 1651. Dutch painter, father of Albert Cuyp. He was known for both portraits and landscapes.

Cuypers (kī'pėrs), Petrus Josephus Hubertus. b. at Roermond, Netherlands, May 16, 1827; d. there, March 3, 1921. Dutch architect. He is best known for his prize-winning design for the Rijksmuseum (built 1877–85) at Amsterdam. He studied at the Antwerp Academy and established (1852) a workshop for Christian art at Amsterdam and later at Roermond. He built many Catholic churches in Holland and the Central Railway Station (built 1881–89) at Amsterdam. He is remembered for his restoration (1872–75) of Mainz Cathedral, and he supervised with fine understanding the restoration (1874 et seq.) of many medieval buildings in the Netherlands.

Cuyuni (kö.yö'ni). River in NE British Guiana. It flows W and empties into the Essequibo. Length, ab. 500 mi.

Cuza (kö'zä), Alexander John. See Alexander John I (of Rumania).

Cuzco (kös'kō). See Cusco.

Cvijić (tsvē'yēch), Jovan. b. at Loznitsa, Serbia, 1865; d. 1927. Serbian geographer, who played an influential role at the Paris peace conference in support of South Slav claims. He was professor of geography (1893 et seq.) at the University of Belgrade and the author of La Péninsule balkanique: Géographie humaine (1918, and later editions).

CWA. See Civil Works Administration.

Cwmbran (kům'brän). Urban district and industrial center in W England, in Monmouthshire, ab. 4 mi. S of Pontypool, ab. 140 mi. W of London by rail. It has manufactures of iron and steel and is a coal-mining center. 13,162 (1951).

Cwmry (kům'ri). See Cymry.

Cyaxares (sī.ak'są.rēz). King of the Medes (625–584 B.C.). In the cuneiform inscriptions his name is Uvakshtra. He may be considered as the founder of Media's power and greatness. After repelling the hordes of the Scythian invasion, he captured Nineveh (608 B.C.), in alliance with Nabopolassar, viceroy of Babylonia, and destroyed the Assyrian empire. Toward the W Cyaxares conquered Armenia, and thus extended his dominion as far as the river Halys (the modern Kizil Irmak) in Asia Minor. He even attempted the conquest of Lydia on the other side of the Halys, but had to desist on account of an eclipse which took place (585) during the battle.

Cybele (sib'ę.lē). [Also, Rhea.] In Greek mythology, the wife of Cronos (Saturnus), and mother of the Olympian gods: hence called the "Great Mother of the Gods." The original home of her worship was Phrygia, in Asia Minor. Her priests were called Corybantes, and her festivals were celebrated with wild dances and orgiastic excesses amid the resounding music of drums and cymbals. She was conceived as traversing the mountains in a chariot drawn by lions. From Asia her worship came to Greece, and during the second Punic War in 264 B.C. it was introduced into Rome, where the Megalesia, later also the Taurobolia and Criobolia, were celebrated in her honor. The oak, pine, and lion were sacred to her. She is usually represented enthroned between lions, with a diadem on her head and a small drum or cymbal, the instrument used in her rites, in her hand.

Cyclades (sik'lą.dēz). [Also: Kikladhes, Kyklades, Kykladon Nesoi.] Group of islands belonging to Greece, situated in the Aegean Sea. The name, from the Greek word for "circle," derived from the belief that they formed a ring about Delos. Among the major islands are Andros, Tenos, Keos, Syros, Naxos, Melos, and Paros. They now form, with neighboring islands, the nomos (department) of Cyclades, which includes the provinces of Andros, Thera, Kea, Milo, Naxos, Syra, and Tenos. Capital, Hermopolis; area, 1,023 sq. mi.; pop. 121,256 (1951).

Cyclic Poets (sī'klik). The authors of Greek epic poems, composed between 800 B.C. and 550 B.C., relating to the Trojan War and the war against Thebes. Among these poems are Cypria (The Cyprian Lays), Aethiopis (The Lay of Aethiopia), The Sack of Troy, The Little Iliad, Nostoi (The Homeward Voyages), Telegonia (The Lay of Telegonus), all belonging to the Trojan cycle, and the Thebais and the Epigoni, belonging to the Theban cycle. A few fragments of these poems are extant.

Cyclops (sī'klops) or Cyclopes (sī.klō'pēz). In Greek mythology, a race of one-eyed giants, represented in the Homeric cycle of legends as Sicilian cannibalistic shepherds, whose leader was Polyphemus. Hesiod names them as the three sons of Uranus and Gaea who helped Zeus in his struggle against Cronus, and who gave Zeus his thunderbolts. They were slain by Apollo. In later mythology they were assistant forgers to Hephaestus.

Cydamus (sī'dą mus). Latin name of Gadames.

Cydippe (sī dip'ē). See under Acontius.

Cydnus (sid'nus). In ancient geography, a river of Cilicia, Asia Minor, flowing into the Mediterranean Sea ab. 12 mi. S of Tarsus.

Cydonia (sī.dō'ni.ą). Ancient Greek name of Canea, city.

Cygnaeus or Cygnäus (süng.nā'ŭs), Fredrik. b. 1807; d. 1881. Finnish poet, literary historian, and educator, writing in the Swedish language. His career as an educator began at his alma mater, the University of Abo (now Turku), but in 1854 he became professor of esthetics and literature at the University of Helsingfors (now Helsinki). His own creative work in poetry and the drama, and his historical and critical writings, were influential in the development of Finnish culture, especially as long as Swedish remained the literary language of that country.

Cygnus (sig'nus). Swan: an ancient northern constellation in the Milky Way.

Cymbeline (sim'bę.lēn). Drama by Shakespeare, produced probably c1610; so called from one of the chief characters, a legendary ruler (Cunobeline) of Britain. Part of the play was no doubt derived from Holinshed; the part relating to Iachimo is in Boccaccio's Decameron. It was first published in the folio of 1623. Garrick produced his alteration in 1762.

Cyme (sī'mē). Ancient Greek city in W Asia Minor, ab. 28 mi. N of what is now Izmir (Smyrna), Turkey, on a small coastal bay. It was founded in the early Greek colonization of Aeolis, and rose to prominence as the principal city of this region. In the 7th century B.C. Cyme was ruled by a king, but later it had oligarchic rule. It was involved in the intrigues between Athens and Sparta, and changed hands numerous times in the struggles between Greek and Persian empires. In 17 A.D. it was severely damaged by an earthquake. The site of Cyme is supposed to be at the small village of Namúrt Kjöi.

Cymric (kim'rik). See under Welsh.

Cymru (kim'rō). Welsh name of Wales.

Cymry (kim'ri). [Also: Cymri, Cwmry, Kymry.] Name given to themselves by the Welsh. In its wider application the term is often applied to that division of the Celtic peoples embracing the Welsh, and including also the Cornishmen and the Bretons or Armoricans.

Cynaegirus (sin.ē.jī'rus). Athenian soldier; brother of Aeschylus. He distinguished himself at the battle of Marathon in 490 B.C., in which, according to Herodotus, he pursued the Persians to the sea, and, having seized one of their triremes to prevent its putting off, fell with his right hand severed. Later writers add that, having lost both his hands, he seized the vessel with his teeth.

Cynewulf (kin'ę.wŭlf) or Cynwulf. [Also, Kynewulf.] fl. in the latter part of the 8th century. Anglo-Saxon poet, probably Northumbrian; sometimes identified with a Cynewulf who was bishop of Lindisfarne from 737 to 780. The discovery of his putative identity was based upon runic inscriptions in the epilogues of four poems attributed to him, The Ascension, The Legend of St. Juliana, Elene, and The Fates of the Apostles. These poems are preserved in the collections of Old English poems known as the Vercelli Book and Exeter Book. Other works ascribed to Cynewulf include The Dream of the Rood, Andreas, and others in the so-called Cynewulfian cycle.

Cynics (sin'iks). School of Greek philosophers founded by Antisthenes of Athens (b. c444 B.C.), who sought to develop the ethical teachings of Socrates, whose pupil he was. The chief doctrines of the Cynics were that virtue is the only good, that the essence of virtue is self-control, and that pleasure is an evil if sought for its own sake. They were accordingly characterized by an ostentatious contempt of riches, art, science, and amusements. The most famous Cynic was Diogenes of Sinope, a pupil of Antisthenes, who carried the doctrines of the school to an extreme and ridiculous asceticism, and is improbably said to have slept in a tub which he carried about with him.

Cynosarges (sī.nō.sär'jēz). A gymnasium of very early foundation in ancient Athens, combined with a sanctuary of Hercules, and possessing a grove. The philosopher Antisthenes taught here, and his school was hence called the Cynic. The Cynosarges lay somewhat high up on the S slope of Lycabettus; its site is now occupied by the Monastery of the Asomatôn and the British and American schools of archaeology.

Cynoscephalae (sin.ọ.sef'ą.lē). Heights in Thessaly, Greece, between ab. 10 and 20 mi. SE of Larissa. Here the Thebans under Pelopidas defeated (364 B.C.) Alexander of Pherae and the Romans under Flamininus defeated (197 B.C.) Philip V of Macedon.

Cynosura (sī.nō.shō'rą). In Greek mythology, a nymph of Ida, and nurse of Zeus, metamorphosed into the constellation Ursa Minor.

Cynosura. The constellation of Ursa Minor ("Little Bear") or Little Dipper, containing the polestar (which forms the tip of the tail), and thus often the object to which the eyes of mariners are directed.

Cynosuria (sī.nō.shō'ri.ą). See Cynuria.

Cynthia (sin'thi.ą). In Congreve's Double Dealer, a flippant fine lady, the daughter of Lord and Lady Pliant, in love with Mellefont.

Cynthiana (sin.thi.an'ą). City in C Kentucky, county seat of Harrison County, on the South Fork of the Licking River, ab. 48 mi. S of Cincinnati: residential community. Tobacco, horses, and farm products are raised in the area. Settled in 1793 and incorporated in 1806, it was the scene of John H. Morgan's raids in 1862 and 1864 during the Civil War. 4,847 (1950).

Cynthia's Revels, or The Fountain of Self-Love. "Comicall satyre" by Ben Jonson, acted by the Children of the Queen's Chapel in 1600. It was printed in quarto in 1601 and with large additions in a folio of 1616.

Cynthia, the Lady of the Sea. Elegy by Sir Walter Raleigh, in which he expresses his loyalty and devotion to Queen Elizabeth (who is called "Cynthia" in accordance with a custom common among Elizabethan poets) and his unhappiness at having lost her favor. The poem is mentioned in print for the first time by Spenser, in his Colin Clout's Come Home Again (1595), but Raleigh had already read it, or some part of it, to Spenser in or about 1589, when they were in Ireland. Exactly when it was composed is not known. It was long thought to be lost, but a portion of it was discovered, and printed for the first time in 1870, by John Hannah the younger, archdeacon of Lewes, in his volume The Courtly Poets from Raleigh to Montrose (later published as Poems of Sir Walter Raleigh and Other Courtly Poets, 1875 and 1892). Hannah thought that it was composed when Raleigh was a prisoner in the Tower of London under James I, but evidence indicates that the discovered fragment goes back to the earlier poem. It was Spenser's habit to call Raleigh "the Ocean" or "the Shepherd of the Ocean," a manner of address that Raleigh himself adopted, so that another name by which this poem is called, The Ocean to Cynthia, simply means Raleigh to Queen Elizabeth.

Cynthius (sin'thi.us). See also Giraldi, Giovanni Battista.

Cynthius. Epithet of Apollo, the sun god, as the moon goddess is called Cynthia.

Cynthus (sin'thus). In ancient geography, a mountain in Delos, from which are derived Cynthia and Cynthius, the surnames, respectively, of Artemis and Apollo.

Cynuria (sī.nū'ri.ą). [Also, Cynosuria.] In ancient geography, a district in Greece in the E part of the Peloponnesus, situated on the Gulf of Argolis.

Cynwulf (kin'wŭlf). See Cynewulf.

Cyparissus (sip.ą.ris'us). In Greek mythology, a youth, a son of Telephus. He accidentally killed Apollo's favorite stag, and was so overcome with grief that Apollo metamorphosed him into a cypress.

Cypern (tsē'pern). German name of Cyprus.

Cypress Hills. Hilly region in SE Alberta and SW Saskatchewan, Canada, ab. 35 mi. SE of Medicine Hat, Alberta. The hills rise abruptly from the prairie and are quite rough and dissected. A scrubby growth of jack pine grows on the higher hills. The area is chiefly used for grazing. A provincial park now occupies part of the area in Saskatchewan. Peak elevation, ab. 4,810 ft. Length, ab. 80 mi.

Cypria (sip'ri.ą). [Also, Cyprian Lays.] One of the poems of the Trojan cycle, anciently attributed to Homer, and later to Stasinus, or Hegesias, or Hegesinus. It was so named either in reference to the home of the author (Cyprus), or because it celebrated the Cyprian Aphrodite.

It served as an introduction to the Iliad, relating the first nine years of the siege of Troy.

Cyprian (sip'ri.ạn), Saint. [Full Latin name, Thascius Caecilius Cyprianus.] b. c200; beheaded at Carthage, Sept. 14, 258. Christian church father, bishop, and martyr. Nothing is known of his early life, but he was a man of education and of considerable wealth when in middle age (according to tradition, in 246) he was converted to Christianity, became a priest, and in 248 was made bishop of Carthage. During the persecutions begun by Decius in 250, many Christians apostatized; subsequently some bishops took an unforgiving attitude toward the backsliders, but Cyprian, like Pope Calixtus I, urged a more compassionate course. He gave most of his income to the poor, worked ardently for church unity, and wrote much on theological matters in an elegant style (his works were edited at Rome in 1471, and several times since). He was greatly influenced by Tertullian, and in turn he influenced later theologians, including Saint Augustine. He suffered martyrdom, being beheaded during the persecution begun by Valerian.

Cyprus (sī'prus). [French, Chypre; German, Cypern; Greek, Kypros; Italian, Cipro; Turkish, Kibris.] British crown colony, one of the largest islands of the Mediterranean, situated in its E corner, ab. 40 mi. S of Turkey and ab. 240 mi. N of Egypt, with the mountain range of the Lebanon on the mainland to the E and that of Taurus to the N. Its name is supposed to be derived from its rich mines of copper (Greek, kypros). Cyprus has limestone mountains averaging ab. 2,000 ft. in elevation along its N coast, and a higher and more extensive range occupies the S and W parts of the island, culminating in Mount Olympus, or Troodos (6,000 ft.). Between these ranges lies a fertile plain where agriculture is well developed. Carobs (a kind of bean), potatoes, wines, spices, raisins, and tobacco are among the agricultural products exported. Besides copper, Cyprus produces gypsum, ochre, umber, asbestos, chromium, and other minerals. Agriculture and mining are the principal occupations, but there are factories processing tobacco and foodstuffs and making wines, soap, buttons, and artificial teeth, among other items. Livestock raising is also of some importance, and mules are among the exports. Cyprus has ab. 70 mi. of railroad. Famagusta is the chief seaport, and there is an airport at Nicosia. The principal religions of the inhabitants are Greek Orthodox and Mohammedan; the population contains elements of Greek, Turkish, and Armenian origin. Capital, Nicosia; area, 3,572 sq. mi.; pop. 450,114 (1946), 492,297 (est. 1951).

History. Cyprus was celebrated in antiquity as the birthplace and favorite abode of Aphrodite, and was famous for its beauty and wealth, but also for its licentiousness. It was early settled by Phoenicians, who were followed by Greeks. Its principal cities were Paphos (still known by that name) on the W coast (a center of the cult of Aphrodite), Salamis (near modern Famagusta) on the E, Kittim, or Citium (on the site of modern Larnaca) on the SE, and Amathus (near modern Limassol) on the S. In the center of the island were the Phoenician mining cities Tamassus and Idalium (modern Dali), with the celebrated grove of Aphrodite. For a time Cyprus was tributary to Assyria. Its name in the cuneiform inscriptions is Yatnan, and the Assyrian king Sargon relates that seven kings from this island (probably chiefs of the Phoenician colonies) brought him costly gifts and "kissed his feet," i.e., acknowledged his sovereignty. He in turn presented them with a marble stele containing a full-length sculptured portrait of himself, and an inscription commemorating his principal deeds. This monument was found in 1846, well preserved, near Larnaca (the ancient Kittim or Citium), and was acquired by the Royal Museum of Berlin. Cyprus was in succession subject to Persia, Macedon, and Egypt, and in 57 B.C. became a Roman province. In the Middle Ages it belonged alternately to the Byzantine Empire and the Saracens, and from 1192 formed a kingdom ruled by the house of Lusignan. In 1489 Caterina Cornaro transferred the sovereignty to Venice. In 1571 it was taken by the Turks. Cyprus began to be administered by Great Britain according to a convention between that country and Turkey in 1878. At the outbreak of World War I the British government annexed the island outright, and it was made a crown colony in 1925. A movement for union with Greece caused trouble in 1931 and again in 1948, when a split in the legislative assembly led to the dissolving of that body by the colonial administration.

Cypselus (sip'sē.lus). Tyrant of Corinth c655–625 B.C.

Cyrankiewicz (tsi.ran.kye'vēch), Józef. b. 1911—. Polish politician; premier of the post-World War II Polish government. Until World War II he was secretary of the Polish Socialist Party at Kraków. Sent by the Germans to the infamous concentration camp at Oswiecim (Auschwitz), he was liberated in 1944 and immediately joined the Soviet-controlled faction of the Socialist Party at Warsaw. As its general secretary he promoted the establishment of a united communist and socialist party (the United Workers' Party), as a member of which he became (1947) premier of the Polish government.

Cyrano de Bergerac (sē.rȧ.nō dẹ ber.zhẹ.rȧk; Anglicized, sir'ạ.nō dẹ bėr'zhẹ.rāk). Play by Edmond Rostand, first produced in 1897. The character of the hero is modeled upon that of a historic original, but is sketched by the dramatist in superlative. He is depicted as extraordinarily brave, extravagantly lavish, superbly indifferent to patronage, extremely ugly (owing to his very large nose), and loyally self-sacrificing in his love for his cousin Roxane. The events of the play are, however, substantially those which are reported to have befallen the original Cyrano. The elder Coquelin (supported by Sarah Bernhardt as Roxane) originally played the part of Cyrano in French. Richard Mansfield, Walter Hampden, and (most recently) José Ferrer are among the well-known actors who have played it in English.

Cyrano de Bergerac. Opera in four acts by Walter Damrosch, first performed at the New York Metropolitan Opera House on Feb. 27, 1913. The libretto, by William J. Henderson, is based on the Rostand play.

Cyrano de Bergerac, Savinien. b. at the Château de Bergerac, in Périgord, France, c1620; d. at Paris, 1655. French writer and duelist. He was wounded at the siege of Arras in 1640, and devoted himself to study. Among his works are Agrippine, a tragedy (1653), Le Pédant joué, a comedy (1654), and two works published after his death, Histoire comique des états et empires de la lune (1656) and Histoire comique des états et des empires du soleil (1661). These two are said to have served to suggest at least Micromégas and Gulliver's Travels. Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac takes his name, but only slightly parallels the actual course of his life.

Cyrenaica (sir.ẹ.nā'i.kạ). [Also, Pentapolis.] In ancient geography, a country in N Africa, lying between the Mediterranean on the N, Marmarica on the E, the desert on the S, and the Syrtis Major (modern Gulf of Sidra) on the W. It corresponded closely to the modern territory of the same name, in NE Libya, and was noted for its fertility. It was settled (c631 B.C.) by Therians, was subject to Egypt from 321 B.C., and formed (67 B.C.) with Crete a Roman province. Its cities were ruined by invasions of Persians and Saracens in the 7th century A.D.

Cyrenaica. [Also, Cirenaica.] Territory in NE Libya, N Africa, until 1951 a trust territory of the United Nations under British administration. Before World War II it formed the E portion of the Italian colony of Libya. It is bounded on the E by Egypt, on the S by the Libyan desert, on the W by Tripolitania, and on the N by the Mediterranean Sea. Under Turkish rule from the 16th to the 20th century, Cyrenaica was made part of the Turkish vilayet of Tripoli in 1835, and was occupied by Italy in 1911 and annexed in 1912. Libya became an autonomous kingdom in 1951. The chief towns are Bengasi and Tobruk. Area, ab. 330,000 sq. mi.; pop. 327,000 (est. 1938).

Cyrenaics (sī.rẹ.nā'iks). School of Greek hedonistic philosophers, founded by Aristippus of Cyrene, a disciple of Socrates.

Cyrene (sī.rē'nē). [Also, Cirene.] In ancient geography, the principal city in Cyrenaica, situated ab. 10 mi. from the Mediterranean coast. It was founded (c631 B.C.) by Therians, under Battus, and was a seat of Greek learning and culture. The modern town on its site contains many antiquities. It was the birthplace of Aristippus, Eratosthenes, and other famous men.

Cyrene. In Greek mythology, a nymph, mother of Aristaeus.

Cyril (sir'il), Saint. [Called Saint Cyril of Jerusalem.] b. at or near Jerusalem, c316; d. probably on March 18, 386. Christian theologian and bishop. Before becoming bishop of Jerusalem in 350, he seems to have hesitated for a time between Arianism and orthodoxy, but, at least after his elevation to the episcopacy, he was one of the foremost enemies of the Arian heresy, particularly crossing controversial swords with Acacius, the Arian bishop of Caesarea, who procured his deposition in 357. Cyril was in fact forced by his Arian enemies to go into exile three times, but he was finally securely restored to his see in 381. His writings, consisting chiefly of catechistical lectures (edited in 1720), throw much light on 4th-century theological thought, and it has been surmised that he, even more than Athanasius, may have been the father of the Nicene creed. His feast is celebrated on March 18.

Cyril, Saint. [Called Saint Cyril of Alexandria.] b. at Alexandria; d. there, in June, 444. Christian theologian and archbishop. Coming to the archiepiscopal see of Alexandria in 412, he is conceded by all students of early church history to have been intemperately zealous in his measures against pagans, Novatians, Nestorians, and Jews. He despoiled the Novatians of their church property, expelled the Jews from the city, and is supposed by some to have instigated the murder (422), by a lector of Alexandria, of the pagan philosopher Hypatia, although many historians consider the evidence of this to be questionable at best. Especially after 428 he led the struggle against Nestorianism, and presided at the Council of Ephesus (431) which condemned Nestorius as a heretic. The proceedings of the council were marked by extreme acrimony, leaving the Christians of Antioch so embittered that two years later Cyril had to come to a compromise with them, under a formula which maintained his orthodoxy but is said by some scholars to have opened the way to certain subsequent theological errors. Cyril was in the thick of the extremely intricate doctrinal debates of those times, and his writings (which were edited in 1638) are mainly controversial. He is commemorated in the Greek, Roman, and Anglican churches on January 28.

Cyril, Saint. [Called the "Apostle of the Slavs"; original name, Constantine.] b. at Thessalonica, 827; d. at Rome, Feb. 4, 869. Christian prelate and scholar. He engaged with his brother, Saint Methodius, in missionary labors among the Moravians, Bulgarians, and other Slavic nations. He translated the gospels and various liturgical works into Slavonic, and is said to have devised the Cyrillic alphabet.

Cyril, Mount. Mountain in Antarctica, in the Commonwealth Range, in ab. 83°57′ S., 172°55′ E. Elevation, ab. 6,100 ft.

Cyril Lucar (lō'kąr). See Lucaris, Cyrillus.

Cyrnos (sir'nos, kūr'nôs). Greek name of Corsica.

Cyropaedia (sī"rō.pē.dī'ą), The. Work of Xenophon, in eight books, describing the education of Cyrus, the founder of the Persian Empire, his great deeds, and his dying advice to his sons and ministers.

Cyrrhestes (si.res'tēz), Andronicus. See Andronicus of Cyrrhus.

Cyrrhestica (si.res'ti.ką) or Cyrrhus (sir'us). In ancient geography, a region in N Syria, W of the Euphrates and S of Commagene.

Cyrus (sī'rus). [Called Cyrus the Great; name in the Old Testament, Koresh; in the cuneiform inscriptions, Kurush, Kurshu; Old Persian, Kurush.] d. 529 B.C. Founder of the Persian Empire. All accounts of his birth and early youth are heavily encrusted by various legends. However, much information of some historical repute has been obtained from the inscriptions, among them a cylinder belonging to Cyrus himself, discovered in the ruins of Babylon and Sepharvaim (Sippar), combined with the accounts of the Greek historians (Herodotus, Xenophon, and Ctesiphon). On his cylinder he calls himself the son of Cambyses, grandson of Cyrus and great-grandson of Shishpish (Theispes), who were all "Kings of Anshan." Anshan is evidently identical with Anzan, the plain of Susa, and stands for Elam, which was conquered by Theispes, the son of Achaemenes, founder of the dynasty. In 549 Cyrus, after conquering Ecbatana (modern Hamadan), dethroned Astyages, king of Media, and united Media with Persia. He then directed his arms against the Lydian kingdom of Croesus (who made an offensive and defensive alliance with Nabonidus, king of Babylonia, and the reigning pharaoh of Egypt), defeated him, and captured the capital Sardis. The ensuing years Cyrus used for consolidating his power in the conquered countries. In 538 he marched with a great army into Babylonia. Sepharvaim (Sippar) was captured without fighting, Nabonidus, who defended it, fled, and two days afterward Babylon itself, which was held by Nabonidus's son Belshazzar, fell into the hands of the conqueror, likewise "without battle and fight," as he records. According to Eusebius, Nabonidus after the fall of Babylon fortified himself in Borsippa; the city was besieged by Cyrus, and after it had capitulated he treated it and Nabonidus himself with mercy, allowing the latter to make his residence in Carmania (modern Kerman). It is certain that he showed great generosity and consideration to the conquered capital (Babylon), sparing its inhabitants and their religious feelings; he even represented himself as having been called by Merodach (Marduk), the god of the city, to avenge his neglect at the hands of the preceding kings. Cyrus's attitude toward the Jewish exiles in Babylonia is well known from the Old Testament (Ezra, i.). He permitted them to return to their own country (thus ending the Babylonian Exile), to rebuild Jerusalem, and to restore the temple, and even returned to them the vessels of the temple which had been carried away by Nebuchadnezzar. Cyrus's death, like his birth, is somewhat shrouded in legend. The most common view is that he fell in battle with the Messagetes on the river Jaxartes (modern Syr Darya).

Cyrus. [Called Cyrus the Younger.] d. 401 B.C. Persian satrap; son of Darius Nothus, king of Persia, and Parysatis. He sought to overthrow his brother Artaxerxes II, king of Persia, attacked him with the aid, among others, of the ten thousand Greeks (as described by Xenophon in the Anabasis), and perished on the battlefield of Cunaxa.

Cyrus. Ancient name of the Kura.

Cyrus Choke (chōk), General. See Choke, General Cyrus.

Cysarz (tsē'zärts), Herbert. b. 1896—. German historian of literature, professor at the University of Vienna. His Literaturgeschichte als Geisteswissenschaft (1926), as also his studies of less sweeping themes (Von Schiller und Nietzsche, 1928; Deutsche Barockdichtung, 1924; Zur Geistesgeschichte des Weltkrieges, 1930), illustrate his dissatisfaction with traditional methods, but are considered by some critics to raise more problems than they can cope with.

Cythera (si.thir'ą). [Also: Cerigo, Cerigotto; Greek, Kithira, Kythera, Kytherion.] One of the Ionian Islands in S Greece, in the nomos (department) of Argolis and Corinthia, situated between 8 and 10 mi. S of Laconia. Grain, wine, and olives are produced. The village of Kythera (pop. 628, 1936) is the seat of a bishopric. There is an ancient shrine of Aphrodite on the island. Area, ab. 110 sq. mi.; pop. 9,022 (1936).

Cytherea (sith.ę.rē'ą) or Cythera (si.thir'ą). In classical mythology, surnames of Aphrodite, from the island of Cythera, or from a place of the same name which once existed in Crete.

Cytherea. Novel by Joseph Hergesheimer, published in 1922.

Cythna (sith'ną). Character in Shelley's poem The Revolt of Islam.

Cyveiliog (ku.vī'lyōg), Hugh of. See Hugh of Cyveiliog (or Kevelioc).

Cyveiliog, Owain. See Owain Cyveiliog.

Cyzicus (siz'i.kus). [Also, Cyzicum (-kum).] In ancient geography, the peninsula (modern Turkish, Kapidağı) projecting from Mysia, Asia Minor, into the Sea of Marmara; also, the Greek town on its isthmus. Among its ruins are a Roman amphitheater, a temple of Hadrian, and an ancient theater. The Roman amphitheater dates from the 2nd century A.D. The ruins still rise to a height of 65 ft., built of rubble faced with rusticated masonry in granite. There are 32 arched entrances in the lower story. The longer axis of the ellipse is 325 ft. The temple of Hadrian, dedicated in 167 A.D., was greatly admired in antiquity. It was a Corinthian peripteros (building surrounded by a row of columns) of six by 15 columns, of white marble. The cella, or main chamber, was small, without pronaos (vestibule) or opisthodomos (rear chamber); there were four interior rows of columns in front and two behind. The temple measured 112 by 301 ft.; the cella 70 by 140 ft. The columns were 7 ft. in base-diameter and 70 ft. high (the highest of any classical temple). The pediments and the cella were richly adorned. The ancient theater, apparently contemporaneous with the amphitheater, was in part built up of rough masonry and faced with marble. The diameter is 328 ft.

Czacki (chäts'kē), Tadeusz, Count b. at Poryck, in Volhynia (a region, formerly Polish, now in the Ukraine), Aug. 28, 1765; d. at Dubno, in Volhynia, Feb. 8, 1813. Polish writer, and promoter of education in Poland. His chief work is one on the laws of Lithuania and Poland (1800).

Czajkowski (chī.kôf'skē), Michał. b. 1808; d. 1886. Polish novelist, and general in the Turkish service. His works include Wernyhora (1838) and other novels of Ukranian and Cossack life.

Czarniecki (chär.nyets'kē), Stefan. [Also, Czarnecki (-nets'kē).] b. in Poland, 1599; d. at Sokolowka, in Volhynia (a region, formerly Polish, now in the Ukraine), 1665. Polish general, who distinguished himself in the war against the Swedes (1655–58) and in that against the Russians and Cossacks (1660–65).

Czartoryski (chär.tô.ris'kē), Adam Casimir, Prince. b. c1734; d. at Sieniawa, in Galicia, March 19, 1823. Polish politician and general, a candidate for the Polish throne in 1763.

Czartoryski, Adam Jerzy, Prince. b. at Warsaw, Poland, Jan. 14, 1770; d. at Montfermeil, near Paris, July 15, 1861. Polish politician and general; son of Adam Casimir, Prince Czartoryski. He was in the Russian ministry of foreign affairs (1802–05) and was president of the Polish provisional government in 1830, and of the national government in 1831.

Czartoryski, Isabella, Princess. [Title, Countess of Flemming.] b. at Warsaw, Poland, c1746; d. at Wysock, in Galicia, June 17, 1835. Polish writer and patriot; wife of Adam Casimir, Prince Czartoryski.

Czartoryski, Michael (or Fryderyk Michał), Prince. b. 1697; d. 1773. Polish politician. When the elector of Saxony was also king of Poland with the title of Augustus II, this young scion of one of the first families of the Polish nobility won favor at the court of Dresden and was made vice-chancellor of Lithuania. He was among the nobles who endeavored to assure the succession of the Polish crown to Augustus II's son, who did in fact, after the second abdication of Stanislaus I, become Augustus III (1736). During his reign Czartoryski, who was elevated to the grand chancellorship of Lithuania in 1752, was the most influential of Polish leaders. He promoted an orientation of Polish foreign policy toward an alliance with Russia, Austria, and England to balk the meddling of France and Prussia in Polish affairs, and he endeavored to bring about internal reforms to curb the disastrous factionalism of the Polish nobility. In later years his policy was more vacillating, reflecting many frustrations, but within the frame of the troubled history of Poland in that period, he may be seen as a patriot and a statesman.

Czar und Zimmermann (tsär' ùnt tsim'ér.män). [Eng. trans., "Czar and Carpenter."] Comic opera in three acts by Albert Lortzing, first performed at Leipzig on Dec. 22, 1837. The libretto is by the composer. The story deals with the life of Peter the Great of Russia, and has been performed in English under the title Peter the Shipwright.

Czaslau (chäs'lou). A German name of Čáslav.

Czechoslovak Agrarian Party (chek.ō.slō'väk, -vak). See Agrarian Party.

Czechoslovakia (chek"ō.slō.vä'ki.ą, -vak'i.ą). [Czech, Československo; official Czech name, Československá Republika.] Country in E central Europe, bounded on the N and W by Germany, on the S by Austria and Hungary, on the E by the U.S.S.R., and on the NE by Poland. Capital, Prague; area, 49,355 sq. mi.; pop. 12,463,000 (est. 1949).

Terrain and Climate. The W, N, and NE frontiers are marked by densely forested mountain ranges which rise highest in the Tatra Mountains, on the NE, in the central Carpathians. There are two major breaks, however: one is the upper Odra (German, Oder) River basin around Ostrava, opening up toward W Poland; the other is the valley of the Ohře River W of Cheb which leads into Franconia, Germany. From the high Tatra Mountains the terrain ranges to the fertile plain of southern Slovakia, the rolling hills of the Moravian uplands, and the central Bohemian basin which is bounded by the Sudeten Mountains on the N and E, the Harz chain on the NW, and the Bohemian Forest on the S. The entire southern border is devoid of natural divisions. There is rolling hill country between Vienna and Brno and likewise along the Slovakian-Hungarian frontier between the Ipel River and the Ukrainian border; the Danube River, between the influx of the Morava and Ipel rivers, forms the only natural barrier in the otherwise open country, which is a continuation of the Hungarian plain. Within the country, two low mountain ranges divide Bohemia from Moravia-Silesia and the latter from Slovakia, respectively. In terms of river basins, the inner divisions of Czechoslovakia are distinct. Bohemia belongs in its entirety to the Labe (German, Elbe) River basin which points toward the North Sea and hence forms the connecting link with the West. Moravia-Silesia is divided in itself: Silesia lies in the Odra basin, which points toward the Baltic Sea and is now divided between Poland and Germany, with the Polish influence prevailing; Moravia, through the Morava River, and likewise all of Slovakia, are part of the Danube basin which points toward the Black Sea and the countries of the Middle East. The central Bohemian and Moravian plain and hill region and that part of Slovakia which adjoins the Hungarian plain are exceptionally fertile, with mild climate. Through southern Moravia and Slovakia runs the northern limit of wine cultivation in Europe. The mountains, particularly the Carpathians, have high precipitation and cold winters. On the whole the climate is more central European than east European in character.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. The country is well suited to a balanced economy, combining large areas of arable land with wooded regions, pasture, and a variety of natural resources ranging from coal and iron ore to uranium deposits in its western extremity. Its chief industries are glass, porcelain, and earthenware manufacture, brewing, machinery, textiles, and sugar refining, as well as the processing of a variety of other foodstuffs. Before World War II, its primary exports were in finished manufactured products. Its currency was the Czech koruna (crown), which was stable and commanded a good exchange rate on the world money market. Agriculture is highly developed and diversified. Rye, wheat, barley, and oats are grown. Hops are of excellent quality and form together with barley the basis for Czechoslovakia's well-known beer production. Other important products are sugar beets, potatoes, turnips, hemp, and flax. Cattle, pigs, goats, sheep, horses, and fowl are raised in considerable numbers. Czechoslovakia ranks among the most richly wooded countries in Europe. Agricultural, foodstuff, and timber industries are widely dispersed in the country. The mineral production includes both soft and hard coal: the chief hard-coal fields are near Ostrava, the chief soft-coal (lignite) fields near Most, Teplice-Sanov, Falknov, and Chomûtov. Kaolin, graphite, and silver are mined in Bohemia, some silver, iron, copper, and lead in Slovakia. Czechoslovakia is a country of mineral springs and spas. Of 19,695 factories which were counted in 1947, 2,827 were metal and machine factories, 2,286 textile mills, 2,558 glass, stoneware, and ceramics factories, 1,789 food-producing factories, and 1,164 wood and furniture factories. All these industries are highly diversified and comprise units producing raw materials, half-finished, and finished products. The textile industry produces cotton, woolen, linen, and silk yarns, and also cloth, hosiery, and knitwear. The leather industry comprises tanneries, Europe's most highly developed shoe industry, and the production of gloves and handbags. The metal and engineering industries produce numerous products, including aircraft engines. In the manufacture of glassware, porcelain, costume jewelry, and beer Czechoslovakia has long been of international importance. However, the East-West conflict into which Czechoslovakia has been drawn is detrimental to its sensitive commercial organism. A further element of uncertainty is introduced by the nationalization of industry and mines and by the land reform. On June 21, 1945, the decree on land reform was issued; on Aug. 25, 1945, the nationalization of mines and of many industries, as well as banks and insurance companies, was decreed. The nationalization of industry has been completed.

History and Government. The country has a long history. It was inhabited by Celtic tribes before the Christian Era and acquired its Slavic population during the great European migrations in about the 6th century. After a period of obscurity and after the rise in the 9th century of a short-lived Moravian empire, the kingdom of Bohemia and Moravia emerged as a prominent medieval state in the 11th century, its king later becoming one of the electors of the Holy Roman Empire as his lands and fortunes became more deeply involved in the politics of that empire. It rose to the pinnacle of its power in the 14th century when its king, Charles IV, became Holy Roman Emperor. In the 15th century, the country became the center of religious controversy and war and at the same time enjoyed a rapid development of national culture under the stimulus of the Hussite reform movement. After 1526 the land was governed by Hapsburg rulers, and it lost its political independence for 300 years when it tried to end the Hapsburg elective succession in 1620. Thereafter it was a crownland of the Austrian emperors until its restoration as an independent republic in 1918. The earlier history of Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia is treated under the separate entries. The modern Czechoslovak state came into existence on Oct. 28, 1918, when the Czech national council took over the government of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia. Two days later, the Slovak national council expressed the desire to unite politically with the Czechs. On Nov. 14, 1918, the first national assembly formally declared the republic, with Thomas G. Masaryk as president. The treaty of St.-Germain in the following year added international recognition. Sub-Carpathian Ruthenia was joined to the state. The attempts of the Sudeten Germans to set up their own state were suppressed. The republic had a democratic constitution (1920), a president, a responsible cabinet, two legislative chambers, and a free judiciary. Personal and religious freedoms were guaranteed. As such it continued as the most stable and prosperous of the Austrian succession states, until it was compelled to cede territories to Germany and Hungary following the Munich pact. The decision of the Four-Power Conference (Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy) which was made at Munich on Sept. 29, 1938, broke up the territory of Czechoslovakia. The regions largely inhabited by Germans were formed into a Sudeten-German territory and incorporated into Germany. Southern Slovakia was returned to Hungary. Subsequently, Polish troops occupied the territory of Těšín. On March 14, 1939, the Slovakian diet declared Slovakia an independent state. On the next day, the Germans occupied Bohemia and Moravia, which were incorporated into the German Reich as the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia. This development was a large contributing factor to the outbreak of World War II. The German occupation became more and more oppressive and the Czech population restive as the war proceeded. A Czech government in exile was set up in London under the leadership of Dr. Eduard Beneš. In Czechoslovakia itself numerous executions and deportations took place. The number of victims is estimated at 250,000, more than half of these Jews. The military liberation by Russian and American armed forces took place between October, 1944 and May, 1945. The sovereignty of Czechoslovakia over Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia was fully restored. However, sovereignty over the easternmost region, called Carpathian Ruthenia, was transferred to the U.S.S.R. The Sudeten-German problem was solved radically by the expulsion of the native German population to Germany. Only a few hundred thousand Germans, either declared anti-Nazis or indispensable technicians, remained in the country. At the same time, a population exchange with Hungary took place in Slovakia. The Czechoslovak republic, as it emerged from World War II, was again based on the constitution of 1920, as revised in conformity with the Košice program of 1945, insuring personal liberties and parliamentary government but seeking to eliminate those groups which had sympathized with the Fascist regime. Slovakia was granted self-government within the framework of the common state. Following a cabinet crisis in February, 1948, the second president, Eduard Beneš, resigned and the country came under Communist control following the general elections of 1948 and the elevation of Klement Gottwald to the presidency. The three provinces of Bohemia, Moravia-Silesia, and Slovakia were abolished by decree of Dec. 21, 1948, and replaced by 19 kraj (counties or regions), named for their chief cities.

Culture. Culture in Czechoslovakia is not uniform. The country is inhabited chiefly by two closely allied Slavic peoples, the Czechs and the Slovaks, and has had considerable German and Hungarian minorities. It is rich in monuments and institutions reflecting an ancient peasant tradition and recalling its prominence during the Gothic and Baroque periods. Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia from the early Middle Ages formed part of the Holy Roman Empire, and from the middle of the 16th century they were united with Austria. They were within West-European civilization while Slovakia, a backward part of Hungary, merely formed an outlying bastion. The country suffered an intellectual and cultural eclipse during two centuries of Hapsburg and Jesuit rule which gave place to a national revival at the end of the 18th century. Emphasis was then placed on the study of Slavic antiquities (Dobrovský, Jungmann), history (Palacký, Havlíček), music (Smetana, Dvořák), and art (Mánes). Focal points around which this growth centered were the National Museum (1818), the revived Czech section of Charles University (1882), and the National Theater (1883). The achievement of political independence in 1918 greatly aided further cultural activities. Czech culture, on a peasant foundation, is urbanized while Slovak culture until recently has been entirely rural. However, both Czechs and Slovaks had to assert themselves against German and Hungarian dominance in commerce and industry, in literature, and in politics. The landed estates were in German and Hungarian hands. The strength of the native peasantry grew throughout the 19th century, but only the land reform of the 1920's decided their dominance. At the same time, the peasant-bred Czechoslovak intelligentsia took over the state. By that time, approximately one third of the population of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia was German and one fourth of the population of Slovakia Hungarian; the German settlement in Slovakia was sparse. The Germans and the Czechs had struggled for supremacy in Bohemia and Moravia since the dawn of history, when both found themselves inhabiting one country. The spirit of compromise was lacking and all attempts to arrive at a modus vivendi failed. In the end, the very oppressiveness of the German rule after 1938 resulted in their expulsion when the Nazi domination was overthrown. In its ethnic composition, the country is now more nearly homogeneous than before, but the losses in population are not yet replaced. In religion the majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but about one million former Roman Catholics adhere now to an independent Czechoslovak church. Hussite sentiments are strong and many nominal Catholics are actually freethinkers. About one million are Protestants, in part Lutherans, in part Czech Brethren. The former Greek-Orthodox minority was concentrated in Carpathian Ruthenia and most of its members now reside outside the state. The ancient Jewish minority has disappeared through deportation and extermination. The language of the Czechs belongs to the western Slavic group, and the language of the Slovaks is closely related to Czech. Education and youth movements are highly developed. The SOKOL youth organization was for decades the leader of the nationalist revival movement; these groups are now under government control. There are four universities, two technical universities, and a number of agricultural, commercial, mining, art, musical, and theological academies. There is a well-developed press and literature. The musical culture and the religious mysticism of Bohemia have been a continuing influence in European civilization.

Czechoslovak National Democratic Party. See National Democratic Party.

Czechoslovak Social Democratic Party. Oldest organized political group of its kind in Bohemia before World War I. It subscribed to the Erfurt program with other European Social Democratic parties. Its non-Marxist wing was founded in 1896 as the National Socialist Party, was renamed the Czechoslovak Socialist Party in 1918, but returned to its old name in 1925. It has no similarities or connections with the German party of that name, and had Eduard Beneš as one of its leading members. The party advocated evolutionary state socialism and the bettering of social and laboring conditions. The Czechoslovak Communist Party was created in 1920 after a split within the Social Democratic groups.

Czechs (cheks). Inhabitants of the western part of Czechoslovakia, especially Bohemia and Moravia, numbering about six million. Linguistically, they belong to the Western branch of the Slavic family, with the Poles. Throughout their history the Czechs have been largely dominated by the Austrians. The Catholic faith is predominant among them.

Czegléd (tseg'lād). See Cegléd.

Czeladź (che'lyächh). [German, Tscheliads.] Town in SW Poland, in the województwo (province) of Śląsk (Silesia), situated on the Brinitza River, ab. 4 mi. NW of Sosnowiec. A coal-mining town, it belonged until 1919 (plebiscite 1921) to Upper Silesia, Germany. 16,624 (1946).

Czelakowski (che.lä.kôf'skē). See Čelakovský.

Czenstochau (chen'stō.ċhou). German name of Częstochowa.

Czenstochowa (cheń.stô.ʜô'vä). See Częstochowa.

Czermak (cher'mäk), Jaroslaw. b. at Prague, in Bohemia, Aug. 1, 1831; d. at Paris, April 23, 1878. Bohemian historical painter; brother of Johann Nepomuk Czermak. His best-known works are paintings of life in Montenegro and Hercegovina.

Czermak, Johann Nepomuk. b. at Prague, in Bohemia, June 17, 1828; d. at Leipzig, Germany, Sept. 16, 1873. Bohemian physiologist; brother of Jaroslaw Czermak. He introduced the use of the laryngoscope and the rhinoscope.

Czernin (cher'nin), Ottokar, Count. b. at Dimokur, in Austria-Hungary, Sept. 26, 1872; d. at Vienna, April 4, 1932. Austro-Hungarian diplomat and statesman. During his service as minister to Rumania, he attempted to keep that nation neutral in World War I; as minister of foreign affairs he represented Austria at Brest (or Brest Litovsk) and at Bucharest (1918). He worked for an early peace and was forced to retire because of the "Sixtus letter" Emperor Charles had written during the negotiations for a separate peace. He wrote his memoirs, Im Weltkriege (1919).

Czernowitz (cher'nō.vits). German name of Chernovtsy.

Czerny (cher'nē), Adalbert. b. at Szcakowa, in Galicia, March 25, 1863; d. at Berlin, Oct. 3, 1941. German pediatrician. He became Privatdocent of pediatrics (1893) at the University of Prague, professor (1894) at the University of Breslau, professor at Strasbourg (1910), and in 1913 succeeded J. O. Heubner at Berlin. He made studies of the physiology and pathology of digestion and metabolism in children and of nutritional disorders. He is responsible for the concept of the "exudative diathesis" (1907) which is still important in concepts of the pathogenesis of children's diseases. Author of Der Arzt als Erzieher des Kindes (1908) and Des Kindes Ernährung, Ernährungsstörungen und Ernährungstherapie (1906–18).

Czerny, Karl. b. at Vienna, Feb. 20, 1791; d. there, July 15, 1857. Austrian pianist and composer, noted for his piano exercises. Among his pupils were Liszt, Kullak, Döhler, and Ninette von Belleville.

Czerny, Vincenz. b. at Trutnov in Bohemia, Nov. 19, 1842; d. at Heidelberg, Germany, Oct. 3, 1916. Bohemian surgeon. He was assistant to Theodor Billroth and served as professor at the universities of Freiburg (1871 et seq.) and Heidelberg (1877 et seq.), establishing (1906) at the latter the Institute for Experimental Cancer Research. He contributed successfully to experimental and clinical surgery, including the treatment of bone and joint tuberculosis, the operation of inguinal hernia, total hysterectomy by the vaginal route, the enucleation of subperitoneal uterine fibroids, and the resection of the intestines. He recommended intestinal suturing. In renal surgery he succeeded in pyelolithotomy (1880) and was very successful in plastic surgery. Author of Beiträge zur operativen Chirurgie (1887), Über die Entwicklung der Chirurgie während des 19. Jahrhunderts und ihre Beziehung zum Unterricht (1903), Das Heidelberger Institut für experimentelle Krebsforschung (1912), and Über die neuen Bestrebungen, das Los der Krebskranken zu verbessern (1913).

Czerny George (cher'ni jôrj). See Karageorge.

Częstochowa (cheń.stô.ʜô'vä). [Also: Czenstochowa; Russian, Chenstokhov, Tschenstochow; German, Czenstochau.] City in C Poland, in the województwo (province) of Kielce, situated on the Warta River, ab. 65 mi. W of Kielce. There are steel and iron, cotton and woolen textile, leather, and paper industries, and breweries; coal mines are in the vicinity. It is the seat of a bishopric and one of the most frequented places of pilgrimage in Poland because of the miraculous wooden image of the Holy Virgin contained in the Monastery of Jasnagora. The monastery was erected in 1382; the present church is in the baroque style. The city and monastery were defended successfully against the Swedes in 1665; the fortifications were razed by Czar Alexander I. Częstochowa was occupied by the Germans in November, 1914, and again in September, 1939. Pop. 101,255 (1946).

Czluchów (chlö'ʜôf). [German, Schlochau.] Town in NW Poland, in the województwo (province) of Szczecin, formerly in the Grenzmark (frontier district) of Posen-Westpreussen, Germany, situated near the former German-Polish border, ab. 120 mi. SW of Danzig: sawmills. The ruins of a 14th-century castle of the Teutonic Order are here. The town came under Polish administration in 1945. Pop. 6,029 (1939); 3,711 (1946).

Czolgosz (chôl'gôsh), Leon F. b. at Detroit, 1873; executed at Auburn, N.Y., Oct. 29, 1901. American assassin. Influenced by anarchistic teaching, he shot President McKinley in the Temple of Music of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, N.Y., on Sept. 6, 1901.

Czuczor (tsö'tsōr), Gergely. b. at Andód, Neutra, Hungary, Dec. 17, 1800; d. at Pest (now part of Budapest), Sept. 9, 1866. Hungarian poet and lexicographer. His best-known poems are the Battle of Augsburg (1824) and Diet of Arad (1828).

D

Dã (däń). See Dan.

Dabaiba (dä.bī'bä) or Dabaybe (dä.bī'bā). [Also: Davaive, Abibe.] Name given in the early part of the 16th century to a region S of the Isthmus of Panama, somewhere in the vicinity of the Atrato River. It was probably the appellation of a chief, or his title, transferred by the Spaniards to the territory over which he ruled. According to reports Dabaiba contained a temple lined with gold, where human sacrifices were made. Balboa vainly searched for this temple in 1512 and 1515, and it was long an object of the Spanish expeditions.

D'Abernon (dab'ėr.non), 1st Viscount. [Title of Edgar Vincent.] b. 1857; d. at Hove, Sussex, England, Nov. 1, 1941. English financier and diplomat who was British ambassador (1920–26) to Germany. He served for five years in the Coldstream Guards. He became president (1883) of the council of the Ottoman public debt, was financial adviser (1883–89) to Egypt, and was governor (1889–97) of the Imperial Ottoman Bank at Constantinople. During his embassy in Germany, the Locarno agreements concerning maintenance of European peace and the admission of Germany to the League of Nations were negotiated. He was a Conservative member of Parliament (1899–1906) from Exeter. In 1929 he headed a British economic mission to Argentina and Brazil. He was the author of Dawes to Locarno—1924–1926 and of a grammar of modern Greek adopted by the University of Athens.

Dabih (dā'bē). The third magnitude star β Capricorni. Originally the Arabs applied the name to the two stars α and β.

Dabit (dȧ.bē), Eugène. b. at Paris, Sept. 21, 1898; d of scarlet fever while en route to attend the funeral of Maxim Gorky, at Sevastopol, Russia, Aug. 21, 1936. French novelist. He was the author of Hôtel du Nord (1929; Eng. trans., 1931), Petit-Louis (1930), Villa Oasis (1932), Faubourgs de Paris (1933), Un Mort tout neuf (1934), L'Ile (1934), La Zone verte (1935), and Trains de vie (1936). Self-educated and very poor, he won the Populist prize with his first novel, was taken up by Gide, Roger Martin du Gard, and other influential patrons, and was, at the time of his death, considered one of the most promising of the young French novelists.

Dablon (dȧ.blôṅ), Claude. b. at Dieppe, France, c1619; d. at Quebec, Sept. 20, 1697. French Jesuit missionary. He arrived in New France in 1655, was with Marquette on Lake Superior in 1668, and was appointed superior of the missions of the Upper Lakes in 1670, serving in that capacity during the period when the Jesuits accomplished their most notable explorations in the area. He edited the Relation of 1671–72, and compiled an account of Marquette's journey.

Dabney (dab'ni), Charles William. b. at Hampden-Sidney, Va., June 19, 1855; d. at Asheville, N.C., June 15, 1945. American chemist and educator, president of the University of Cincinnati from 1904 to 1920. He was graduated from Hampden-Sidney College in 1873 and the University of Virginia in 1877, and studied (1878–80) at Berlin and Göttingen. He was state chemist (1880–87) of North Carolina, professor of agricultural chemistry and director of the agricultural experiment station (1887–90) in the University of Tennessee, and president (1887–1904) of the university. He served (1894–97) as assistant secretary of agriculture. His publications include numerous papers on scientific and educational topics.

Dabo (dā'bō), Leon. b. at Detroit, July 9, 1868—. American muralist and landscape painter, whose works are collected by many large galleries in the U.S., France, Japan, and Canada. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts and the Julian Academy, both at Paris; his works have been exhibited in the U.S., England, France, and elsewhere. He is an associate of the National Academy of Design, chevalier of the Legion of Honor, member of the Royal Society of Arts and Sciences at London, and of the National Arts Club. Among his works are Moore Park, The Cloud, The Hudson, The Ocean, Gray Cloud, Lawn Party, Sun and Mist, Cooper's Lake, and The Storm; also 20 religious panels in the Church of John the Baptist at Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dąbrowa Górnicza (dôm.brô'vä gör.nē'chä). [Also: Dombrowa Gora; German, Dombrau.] City in SW Poland, in the województwo (province) of Śląsk (Silesia), NE of Sosnowiec. It belonged formerly to the province of Kielce. It is the center of an important coal-mining district, and has zinc and iron foundries and timber, chemical, and food industries. 28,070 (1946).

Dąbrowska (dôm.brôf'skä), Marja. [English, Maria Dabrowska.] b. at Rusów, Kalisz province, in what was then Russian Poland, 1892—. Polish novelist, reformer, and playwright. She has written numerous studies of the peasant problem in Poland, including The Landless (1925), Crossroads (1937), and Hand in Hand (1939); also, two dramas on historical themes, Orphan Genius (1939) and Bogumil and Bolesław (1944), and especially the long novel Nights and Days (1932–34), which depicts the fortunes of a Kalisz family following the uprising of 1863. She is believed to be resident now in Poland.

Dąbrowski (dôm.brôf'skē), Jan Henryk. See Dombrowski, Jan Henryk.

Dacca (dak'ą). [Also, Dhaka.] Division in East Bengal, Pakistan. Jute is the most important crop in the area, followed by rice and tobacco. Capital, Dacca; area, 15,937 sq. mi.; pop. 16,683,714 (1941).

Dacca. [Also, Dhaka.] District in Dacca division, East Bengal, Pakistan. Capital, Dacca; area, 2,738 sq. mi.; pop. 4,222,143 (1941).

Dacca. [Also, Dhaka.] Capital of the division and district of Dacca, and of East Bengal province, Pakistan, on the Buriganga River, ab. 160 mi. NE of Calcutta. It was for many years the chief city of Bengal. It was noted for its muslin, and its jute industry is important. 273,159 (1951).

Dacca Jelalpur (je.läl'pör). See Faridpur.

Dach (däch), Simon. b. at Memel, Lithuania, July 29, 1605; d. at Königsberg, in East Prussia, April 15, 1659. German poet, author of occasional lyrics that were not collected until after his death. The depressing period in which he lived and his own poor health (he died of tuberculosis) lent a somber cast to his writings. The poem for which he has been chiefly known, Anke van Tharaw, supposedly written by him for a friend's wedding and long accepted as a folk song, may actually have been written by some other poet.

Dachau (däch'ou). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Upper Bavaria, situated on the Amper River, ab. 10 mi. NW of Munich: an agricultural market town, with lumber and paper mills, cement works, and a brewery. It is also a health resort, known for its mud baths. The castle, reconstructed in 1715, contains a local museum. In the vicinity was the huge concentration camp of Dachau, opened in 1933 and used for the imprisonment of victims of racial and political persecution during the entire period of the National Socialist regime. Many people were put to death here by various methods; others were shipped to death camps in eastern Europe after 1941. The camp was occupied by Allied troops on April 29, 1945, after a revolt of the surviving prisoners (of all European nations) had prevented further killings; 32,000 people were liberated. A monument to the dead has been erected on the site. 23,552 (1951).

Dachstein (däch'shtīn). One of the chief peaks in the Salzkammergut region, in W central Austria, ab. 18 mi. S of Ischl. It is one of the highest peaks of this group. 9,829 ft.

Dacia (dā'shą). In ancient geography, a province of the Roman Empire, lying between the Carpathian Mountains on the N, the Tissus or Tisia (Tisza) on the W, the Ister (Danube) on the S, and the Tyras or Danastris (Dniester) on the E. It corresponded approximately to modern Rumania, including Transylvania. The inhabitants were the Getae or Daci. It was invaded by Alexander the Great in 335 B.C., by Lysimachus c292 B.C., and its people defeated the generals of Domitian in 86–90 A.D. It was conquered by Trajan in 101, and succeeding years, and made a Roman province. It was abandoned by the Romans in the reign of Aurelian (270–275), but not before the Romans, during some 200 years of occupation, had left their imprint on the region by establishing the language that has developed into modern Rumanian.

Dacia. Diocese in the N part of the later Roman prefecture of Illyricum (Serbia and W Bulgaria).

Dacicus (dā'si.kus). A surname of Trajan.

Dacier (dȧ.syā), André. b. at Castres, France, April 6, 1651; d. at Paris, Sept. 18, 1722. French classical scholar and academician; husband of Anne Dacier. He translated into French (for the use of Monseigneur, the Dauphin, Louis de France) Valerius Flaccus, Horace, Epictetus, Aristotle's Poetics, and other ancient Greek and Latin works.

Dacier, Anne. [Maiden name, Lefebvre or Lefèvre.] b. at Saumur, France, in March, 1654; d. at Paris, Aug. 17, 1720. French classical scholar; wife of André Dacier. She translated the Iliad (1699), the Odyssey (1708), and other Greek and Latin classics into French.

Dacoit (dą.koit'). [Hindustani, Dakait.] A member of any of the groups of armed bandits who long fought British forces in Bengal, India. Dacoity was the term applied to the raids by guerrilla bands which harassed the British-Indian government in Burma after the defeat of King Thebaw in 1885, after the annexation of Burma, and at intervals until recent times. During the disturbances incident to World War II, the reoccupation, and the end of British rule in Burma, dacoity greatly increased and, in the form of armed gangsterism preying upon peaceful villages, has become a major problem for the new Burmese government. The term is occasionally applied also to outlawry in Thailand (Siam) where, likewise, it results from unsettled conditions.

Da Costa (dä kôs'tä), Izaak. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, Jan. 14, 1798; d. at Leiden, Netherlands, April, 28 1860. Dutch poet and Protestant theologian. His works include Prometheus (1820, a translation of Aeschylus's play), Po zii (1821–22), Feestliederen (1828), Hagar (1840), and various historical and theological treatises.

Dacre (dā'kėr), Baron. Title held by various members of the Brand family; see also Fiennes, Thomas.

Dacre of Gilsland (gilz'land), Baron. A title of Howard, Charles (1629–85).

Dacres (dā'kėrz), Sir Richard James. b. 1799; d. at Brighton, England, Dec. 6, 1880. British field marshal. He served in the Crimean War, commanding the royal horse-artillery at the battle of the Alma and the artillery at the battle of Balaklava.

Dacres, Sir Sidney Colpoys. b. at Totnes, Devonshire, England, Jan. 9, 1805; d. at Brighton, England, March 8, 1884. British admiral. He entered the Royal Navy in 1817, and became a captain in 1840. He commanded the Sans Pareil in the operations before Sevastopol, including the bombardment of Oct. 17, 1854, was placed in charge of the port of Balaklava, on Oct. 27, 1854, and was appointed captain of the fleet in the Mediterranean in 1859. He was commander in chief in the English Channel in 1863, first sea lord in 1868, and admiral in 1870.

Dactyls (dak'tilz) or Dactyli (dak'ti.lī) or Daktyloi (-loi). In Greek and Roman mythology, supernatural and magical beings living on Mount Ida in Phrygia, the discoverers of iron and copper and of the art of working them. They were transferred, in the legends, to Mount Ida in Crete, and were there identified with the Curetes, Corybantes, and other mountain-dwelling semidivine beings. Their number, originally three, was increased, in various accounts, to ten, and even to one hundred.

Dade City (dād). City in C Florida, county seat of Pasco County, NE of Tampa: center for a citrus and truck farming community. 3,806 (1950).

Daedalus (ded'ạ.lus, dē'dạ.lus). In Greek legend, an Athenian; son of Metion and grandson of Erechtheus. He was regarded as the personification of all handicrafts and of art, and as such was worshiped by artists' guilds in various places, especially in Attica, and was a central figure in various myths. He was said to have made various improvements in the fine arts, including architecture, and to have invented many mechanical appliances, as the ax, the awl, and the bevel. For the murder of his nephew Talus, of whose inventive skill he was jealous, he was driven to Crete, where he constructed, to contain the monster Minotaur, the famous labyrinth, in which he, with his son Icarus, was confined for furnishing the clue of it to Ariadne. (In another legend a different account of his imprisonment is given: he built a cow disguise for Pasiphaë in order that the bull sent by Poseidon might mount her.) Escaping, he and Icarus fled over the sea on wings of wax which they had made. Icarus soared too near the sun, his wings melted, and he fell into the sea (which has since been called, from him, the Icarian Sea). Many archaic wooden images were, in ancient times, believed to be the work of Daedalus (and figures of the type are still called Daedalian).

Daegsastan (dak'sä.stän), Battle of. Victory gained in 603 by the Northumbrian king Ethelfrith over the Scots under Aidan, supposedly near the river Tees.

Daendels (dän'dėls), Herman Willem. b. at Hattem, Gelderland, Netherlands, Oct. 21, 1762; d. on the Gold Coast, Africa, May 2, 1818. Dutch general, and governor general of the Dutch East Indies (1808–11). He took part in the revolutionary agitation in the Netherlands in 1787, and was obliged to seek refuge in France. In 1793 he aided Dumouriez in the expedition against Holland, as colonel of a body of foreign volunteers; and in 1794 served with Pichegru as general of brigade. After this campaign he entered the service of the Batavian Republic as lieutenant general, and in 1799 commanded a division in the successful resistance to the Anglo-Russian invasion. In 1806 he entered the service of the king of Holland, and was made marshal in 1807. He became governor general of the Dutch East Indies under the Napoleonic regime. He inaugurated many of the reforms reintroduced by, and sometimes attributed to, Sir Thomas Stamford Raffles under an equally brief British regime in Java. Because of his uncompromising attitude and the disturbances which arose in Java from the disruption of the traditional economy under a wartime policy of enforced production for export, he was highly unpopular in spite of his humanitarian intentions. He served under Napoleon in the Russian campaign in 1812, and in 1814 was made governor of the Dutch colonies on the Gold Coast of Africa.

Daffodil Fields, The. Narrative poem (1913) by John Masefield.

Daffodil Murderer, The. Poem by Siegfried Sassoon, published in 1913 under the pseudonym Saul Kain. It was awarded the Chantrey prize.

Dafirah (dä.fē'rạ). Rarely used name for the star β Leonis, usually known as Denebola.

Dafne (däf'nā) or Daphne (daf'nē). Musical work credited as being the first opera, as distinguished from a musical drama. It was produced (1596) by the Society of the Alterati at Florence, in the private house of Jacopo Corsi. The music was by Giulio Caccini and Jacopo Peri (who both invented recitative), the words by Ottavio Rinuccini. Opitz made a German translation of the text, and Heinrich Schütz wrote new music for it. This was the first German opera, and was produced (April 13, 1627) at Torgau, at the court of the elector John George I.

Dafoe (dä'fō), Allan Roy. b. May 29, 1883; d. at North Bay, Ontario, Canada, June 2, 1943. Canadian physician who successfully delivered (May 28, 1934) the Dionne quintuplets, at Callander, Ontario. He received (1907) a medical degree from the University of Toronto, and practiced (1909 et seq.) at Callander. He was the personal physician (1934–42) of the Dionne quintuplets. He wrote Dr. Dafoe's Guide Book for Mothers (1936).

Dafoe, John Wesley. b. in Ontario, March 8, 1866; d. Jan. 9, 1944. Canadian journalist. He was correspondent (1883 et seq.) at Ottawa, covering Parliamentary news for the Montreal Star. In 1901 he became editor in chief of the Manitoba (later Winnipeg) Free Press, expressing liberal views even when, as in the case of the government's trade policies, they were at variance with the publisher's. In 1919 he attended the Paris peace conference as press representative of the Canadian Department of Public Information. He was chancellor (1934 et seq.) of the University of Manitoba.

Dafydd ap Gwilym (dä'viтн äp gwi'lim). See David.

Dagami (dä.gä'mē). Town in the NE part of Leyte island in the Philippines. It is on the Binahaan River, at the head of navigation by cascos (native boats), ab. 15 mi. from the river's mouth. 3,460 (1948).

Dagari (dä.gä'rē). [Also: Dagaba, Dagarti, Dagati, Dagatsi.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting the NW part of the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast and E Ivory Coast. Their language is related to those of the Mossi and Dagomba. Their number is estimated at ab. 60,000 (by M. Delafosse, Haut-Sénégal-Niger, 1912). They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal food is millet. They are non-Mohammedan.

Dagda (däg'dạ). See under Tuatha De Danann.

Dagestan Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic (dä.ge.stän'). [Also: Dagestan, Daghestan.] Republic in the U.S.S.R., in the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, located on the W shore of the Caspian Sea, N of the Azerbaijan Soviet Socialist Republic. The surface ranges from mountainous to very hilly. By far the most important product of the area is its oil, but there is also some production of sulfur. Crops include cotton, grapes, tobacco, citrus fruits, and flax. It was formerly a province in the Russian Empire, having submitted to Russia in 1859, and was the scene of an insurrection (1877–78). Capital, Makhachkala; area, 13,124 sq. mi.; pop. 930,527 (1939).

Daggett (dag'ėt), David. b. at Attleboro, Mass., Dec. 31, 1764; d. at New Haven, Conn., April 12, 1851. American jurist. He was a U.S. senator from Connecticut (1813–19).

Daggett, Naphtali. b. at Attleboro, Mass., Sept. 8, 1727; d. at New Haven, Conn., Nov. 25, 1780. American clergyman. He was acting president (1766–67) of Yale College.

Daghestan (dä.ge.stän'). See Dagestan Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic.

Dagnan-Bouveret (dä.nyäṅ bōv.re), Pascal Adolphe Jean. b. at Paris, Jan. 7, 1852; d. 1929. French painter; a pupil of Gérôme. He obtained the second Prix de Rome in 1876. His pictures first appeared in the Paris Salon in 1877. He was awarded several medals, one of the first class in 1880.

Dagö (dägʹē″). See Hiiumaa.

Dagobert (dagʹō.bėrt). See also Daimbert.

Dagobert I (dagʹō.bėrt; French, dȧ.go.ber). b. c602; d c639. Merovingian king of the Franks, son of Clotaire II, by whom he was appointed king of Austrasia in 622, and whom he succeeded as king of the Franks in 628. He founded the abbey of St.-Denis, and reduced to writing the customary laws of the barbarian tribes in his kingdom. During his reign the empire of the Franks attained a wide extent, namely, from the Weser River to the Pyrenees, and from the Western Ocean to the frontiers of Bohemia. Following his reign the Merovingian kings became figureheads while the mayors of the palace took over actual rule.

Dagobert (dȧ.go.ber), Chanson du roi. [Eng. trans., "Song of King Dagobert."] Popular French song concerning King Dagobert I and his favorite counselor, Saint Eloi. It was in existence before the French Revolution. It is a satirical series of couplets sung to a hunting chorus, and has been modified to suit various political epochs. In 1814 it became immensely popular on account of the verses against Napoleon and the Russian campaign. It was forbidden by the police, but was revived on the return of the Bourbons. Every other stanza begins "Le bon roi Dagobert."

Dagomba (dä.gōmʹbä). Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting the E part of the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast and N Togoland. Their language is known as Dagbane, and is related to that of the Mossi. Their population is estimated at ab. 190,000 (based on A. W. Cardinall, The Gold Coast, 1931). They are ruled by a hereditary king known as Na, and have exogamous patrilineal clans. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal foods are yams, millet, sorghum, and maize. They are non-Mohammedan.

Dagon (dāʹgon). In the Old Testament, a deity mentioned as the national god of the Philistines, and as worshiped especially in Gaza and Ashdod (Judges, xvi. 23, and 1 Sam. v.). The name is usually derived from Hebrew dag (fish), and it is assumed that Dagon was depicted as half man and half fish, and had his female counterpart in Derketo, who was worshiped in Ashkelon (Ascalon). 1 Sam. v. 4 would seem to favor this view. On the other hand, Assyro-Babylonian mythology also includes a divinity Dagan, but there he is, etymologically at least, not connected with the fish, as the Assyrian word for fish is not dag but nun; the meaning of the name Dagan has not as yet been determined, but may be connected with the word for grain. At the same time the Babylonian historian Berossus gives an account of such a being, half man and half fish, under the name Oannes, who in the beginning of history emerged at intervals from the sea and taught the Babylonians the arts of civilization. This Oannes of Berossus is identified by some scholars with Ea of the Assyro-Babylonian pantheon, the god of the ocean, and is conceived as a human figure with the skin of a fish on his shoulders as a garment, a representation of which is often met on the early monuments. In Phœnicia the name of the god was connected with dagan (corn) and is accordingly rendered into Greek in the fragments of Philo Byblius as sitos (grain). Dagon was then considered as the god of agriculture, a function which is also emphasized in the Oannes of Berossus.

Dagonet (dagʹō.net, -nėt). Pseudonym of Sims, George Robert.

Dagonet, Sir. [Also, Sir Daguenet (dagʹē.net).] In Arthurian romances, the fool of King Arthur, who "loved him passing well and made him knight with his own hands." He was buffeted and knocked about a good deal, and is frequently alluded to by the dramatists of Shakespeare's time and later.

Daguerre (dȧ.ger), Louis Jacques Mandé. b. at Cormeilles, Seine-et-Oise, France, Nov. 18, 1789; d. at Petit-Brie-sur-Marne, France, July 12, 1851. French painter, and inventor (with Joseph Nicéphore Niepce) of the daguerre type process of photography. He was at first in the internal revenue service, then devoted himself to scene painting, in which he attained celebrity, and in 1822, with Charles Marie Bouton, opened the Diorama (a theater containing painted scenes viewed through openings and so arranged that the light shone through them, giving the illusion of reality) at Paris (burned 1839). In the successful study of the problem of obtaining permanent pictures by the action of sunlight he was anticipated by Nicéphore Niepce, who began his investigations in 1814, and communicated some of his results to Daguerre, who was then occupied with the subject, in 1826; the two worked together from 1829 until Niepce's death in 1833. Daguerre's perfected process was communicated to the Academy of Sciences by Dominique François Arago, Jan. 9, 1839. The daguerreotype was made by exposure to light of a silver plate coated with silver iodide, development in mercury vapor, and fixation with sodium thiosulfate (hypo). In return for pensions granted to Daguerre and Niepce's heir, the process was detailed to the Academy and a description published by the French government.

Daguesseau (dȧ.ge.sō), Henri François. See Aguesseau, Henri François d'.

Dagupan (dä.gōʹpän). Town in Pangasinan province, W Luzon, Philippine Islands: seaport on the SE shore of Lingayen Gulf. 11,254 (1948).

Dahalach or Dahalak (dä.ä.läkʹ). See Dahlak Archipelago.

Daheim (dä.hīmʹ). German illustrated weekly "for family and home," founded by Velhagen and Klasing in 1864 when the more radical Gartenlaube was banned in Prussia. Its first editor was Robert Koenig, well known as the author of a best-selling history of German literature.

Dahl (däl), Hans. b. at Hardanger, Norway, Feb. 19, 1849; d. 1919. Norwegian-born landscape and genre painter who worked in Germany. He studied under Riefstahl and Gude at Karlsruhe, then with Gebhart at Düsseldorf. In 1876 he first exhibited at Berlin, and finally settled there permanently in 1889. He injected much humor into his work, which was much appreciated in Norway.

Dahl, Johan Christian Clausen (or Claussön). b. at Bergen, Norway, Feb. 24, 1788; d. at Dresden, Germany, Oct. 14, 1857. Norwegian landscape painter.

Dahl, Michael. b. at Stockholm, 1656; d. at London, Oct. 20, 1743. Swedish portrait painter. He was a pupil of the Danish painter Ernst Klocke, and in 1688 settled at London, where he acquired an extensive patronage among the nobility and at court. He painted the portraits of the princess (afterward queen) Anne and Prince George, the portrait of Charles XI of Sweden at Windsor, and the series of portraits of admirals at Hampton Court.

Dahl, Vladimir Ivanovich. [Also: Dal, Dale; pseudonym, Kossack Lugansky.] b. at St. Petersburg, 1801; d. at Moscow, Nov. 3, 1872. Russian novelist, philologist, and littérateur. He published a Dictionary of the Living Russian Tongue (4 vols., 1861–66). He was a worker in the field and his investigations resulted in his amassing about 4,000 folk tales and some 30,000 proverbs. His tales of Russian life were popular.

Dahlak Archipelago (dä.läkʹ). [Also: Dahalach, Dahalak; Dahlac.] Group of islands in the Red Sea, NE Africa, off the seaport of Massawa, Eritrea.

Dahlberg (dälʹbery'; Anglicized, -bėrg), Count Erik Jönsson. b. at Stockholm, Oct. 20, 1625; d. there, Jan. 26, 1703. Swedish military engineer and field marshal. He was one of those responsible for the famous forced march (1658) across the ice against Copenhagen by the army of Charles X (Charles Gustavus). From 1676 to 1702 he was his country's chief military engineer in both offensive and defensive operations, and came to be known as the "Vauban of Sweden." As governor of Livonia he twice successfully defended Riga. At his retirement in 1702 he held the rank of field marshal.

Dahlbom (dälʹbōm), Anders Gustaf. b. at Forssa, East Gotland, Sweden, March 3, 1806; d. at Lund, Sweden, May 3, 1859. Swedish entomologist. His chief work was Hymenoptera europaea praecipue borealia (1845).

Dahlgren (dälʹgren), Erik Wilhelm. b. at Stockholm, June 7, 1848; d. 1934. Swedish geographer who served (1903 et seq.) as director of the royal library at Stockholm. He was the author of Les Relations commerciales et maritimes entre la France et les côtes de l'Océan pacifique (Commercial and Maritime Relations Between France and the Coasts of the Pacific Ocean, 1909), and Les Débuts de la cartographie du Japan (The Beginning of Japan's Cartography, 1911).

Dahlgren, John Adolphus Bernard. b. at Philadelphia, Nov. 13, 1809; d. at the Washington navy yard, July 12, 1870. American naval officer, noted as an inventor of ordnance and for his development of the ordnance department at the Washington navy yard. After several years of service at sea, he was appointed (1832) midshipman and served (1834–36) with the coast survey, helping to make in Long Island the first scientifically measured base line in the U.S. He was active in other triangulation work, but had to take a leave of absence when his eyesight became seriously impaired. He received treatment at Paris, retired to the country after his return to the U.S., and in 1843, his eyesight restored, rejoined the navy. In 1847 he went to the Washington navy yard, where he remained for 16 years, eventually becoming commandant of the yard and chief of the ordnance bureau. In his work at the yard, he was responsible for building up the ordnance establishment, for introducing the "Boat Howitzers" (adopted by the navy in 1850), and for designing the smoothbore 11-inch guns called "Dahlgrens," whose seaworthiness he personally supervised during an experimental cruise (1857–59) in the ship Experiment. His achievements did much to prepare the navy for its service in the Civil War, in which Dahlgren, as a rear admiral (promoted February, 1863), commanded the South Atlantic blockading squadron during part of the war. He was commander (1866–68) of the South Pacific squadron and again (1868–69) chief of the ordnance bureau, leaving that post to become commandant of the Washington navy yard. He was the author of 32 Pounder Practise for Ranges (1850), The System of Boat Armament in the United States Navy (1852), Naval Percussion Locks and Primers (1853), and Shells and Shell Guns (1856), and served as professor of gunnery at Annapolis.

Dahlgren, Karl Fredrik. b. at Stensbruk, near Norrköping, Sweden, June 20, 1791; d. at Stockholm, May 2, 1844. Swedish poet, novelist, and humorist. He is best known for his lyric Zephyr and the Maid, but his satires and humorous works are first-class in their field. His complete works were published 1847–52.

Dahlmann (däl'män), Friedrich Christoph. b. at Wismar, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, May 13, 1785; d. at Bonn, Prussia, Germany, Dec. 5, 1860. German historian and statesman, appointed professor at Kiel in 1812, at Göttingen in 1829, and at Bonn in 1842. He was a member of the National Assembly at Frankfort on the Main (1848–49). His works include Quellenkunde der deutschen Geschichte (1830), Geschichte von Dänemark (1840–43), Geschichte der englischen Revolution (1844), Geschichte der französischen Revolution (1845), and others.

Dahlstjerna (däl'sher.nä), Gunno. [Original name, Gunno Eurelius.] b. at Öhr, Dalsland, Sweden, Sept. 7, 1661; d. in Pomerania, Sept. 7, 1709. Swedish poet. He wrote Kungaskald (1697), an elegy on the death of Charles XI, and a poem on Charles XII and Peter the Great.

Dahn (dän), (Julius Sophus) Felix. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Feb. 9, 1834; d. at Breslau, Jan. 3, 1912. German historian and poet. He studied history and jurisprudence at Munich and Berlin. In 1857 he became docent in the faculty of law at the University of Munich, and in 1862 was made professor. The succeeding year he went in the same capacity to Würzburg. In 1872 he became professor of law at the University of Königsberg, and in 1888 at Breslau. His most important works are, in history, Die Könige der Germanen (The Kings of the Germans, 1861–92), Urgeschichte der germanischen und romanischen Völker (Primitive History of the Germanic and Romance Peoples, 1881–90); in law, Die Vernunft im Recht (Reason in Law, 1879). A volume of poems, Gedichte, appeared in 1857, and a second collection in 1873; Balladen und Lieder (Ballads and Songs) in 1878. He was the author of several romances, the principal one, Ein Kampf um Rom (A Struggle for Rome), appeared in 1876, in four volumes; Odhins Trost (Odin's Consolation) in 1880. He wrote, also, a number of dramas, among them Markgraf Rüdeger von Bechelaren (1875).

Dahomey (dȧ.hō'mi). Territory of French West Africa, extending from the Slave Coast inland to the Niger River and the Upper Volta territory. On the W it borders on Togo, on the E on Nigeria. The French occupied the coast in 1851, and in 1894 annexed the entire kingdom of Dahomey. Until 1900 the court at Abomey was allowed to exist, but in that year the king was seized and exiled to the Congo. The territory is administered by a governor, subject to the governor general of French West Africa, and assisted by a privy council and a secretary-general. The land is low and the climate unhealthful. The chief export is palm oil, and some progress is being made in growing cotton. The chief port is Cotonou, near Porto-Novo. Dahomey sends one deputy to the French National Assembly, and two each to the Council of the Republic and the Assembly of the French Union. The many human victims for which certain of their ceremonies are notorious resulted from tribal belief and custom rather than from cruelty; reports were exaggerated, but human sacrifice was based on belief in the king's need for attendants in the afterworld and other beliefs consonant with their philosophy of life and death. They are also called "Fon." Their language is closely allied to Ewe. Capital, Porto-Novo; area, 43,232 sq. mi.; pop. 1,478,020 (1948).

Dahomey. [Also: Dahome, Dahomy.] Former kingdom of a Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, in the area of the present French colony of the same name, with its capital at Abomey. The Dahomeans speak a language related to that of the Ewe, known as Fon (also, Fo, Fou). They have exogamous patrilineal clans which control succession to political office. The king and his court were supported by taxes based on an annual census of livestock and granaries. Through human sacrifice and annual slave-raiding wars with the Yoruba, in which female warriors or "Amazons" took part, the Dahomey acquired an exaggerated reputation for bloodthirstiness, exceeding even that of the Edo. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal crops are maize, yams, and manioc.

Dahra (dä'rä). [Also, Ed Dahra.] Mountainous region in NW Africa, in E French Morocco, close to the Algerian border. In its caverns, during one of the French colonial campaigns of the mid-19th century, ab. 500 to 600 members of the Kabyle tribe were suffocated (1845) by order of the French commander Colonel Aimable Jean Jacques Pélissier.

Dahshur (dä.shör'). [Also, Dashur.] Locality in NE Africa, in Egypt, W of the Nile River and directly S of the great Pyramids. It is noted for its pyramids, two of stone and two of unburned brick. The northernmost, of stone, is of remarkable size, measuring ab. 700 ft. square (originally ab. 720), and 326 ft. high (originally ab. 342½). There is a series of three chambers beneath it. The sides of the other stone pyramid are built in two angles, like a curb roof, from which it is sometimes called the Bent Pyramid. Most of the exterior casing of this pyramid remains; the interior chamber beneath it is ab. 80 ft. high.

Daigleville (dā'gl.vil). Unincorporated community in SE Louisiana, in Terrebonne Parish. 4,809 (1950).

Dai Hoku (dī hō.kö). Japanese name of Taipei, Formosa.

Daikoku (dī.kō.kö). Japanese Buddhist deity of good fortune, whose image is often found in farm houses and on plaques in shops, in association with Ebisu, god of honesty.

Dáil Éireann (dôl ā'ron). Popularly-elected representative chamber of the Oireachtas (National Parliament) of the Irish Republic. Every Irish citizen aged 21 years or more, not disqualified by any constitutional or legal provision, and without discrimination of sex, is eligible to vote for members of, and to stand for election to, this body, which is chosen in accordance with the principles of proportional representation, and to which the executive branch of the government, headed by the Taoiseach (Prime Minister), is responsible. The Sinn Fein organization, at its first convention after becoming a political party, in October, 1917, drew up a plan for a future revolutionary provisional government, in which the name Dáil Éireann was prescribed for the popular assembly-to-be. In a general election (covering Great Britain and Ireland) in December, 1918, the majority of Irish constituencies elected Sinn Fein candidates, who were pledged not to attend the Parliament of the United Kingdom, but to meet in and legislate for Ireland. Accordingly the first Dáil Éireann convened at the Mansion House in Dublin on January 21, 1919, with 27 members present (the full membership was 73, but as to most of this number, as their names were called, the clerk answered "Imprisoned by the English"). During this first session of the Dáil, whose proceedings were wholly in Gaelic, Ireland was proclaimed a republic, a provisional constitution was adopted, an executive ministry was appointed, and delegates were named to the peace conference at Versailles. During the ensuing war with Britain the Dáil functioned with difficulty, but the recognition of the Irish Free State in December, 1921, enabled it to function freely, and it emerged from a period of civil war with its authority firmly established. During subsequent constitutional changes which transformed the Irish Free State into Éire and finally into the Irish Republic, the name Dáil Éireann continued to designate this house of the Oireachtas.

Daillé (dä.yā), Jean. [Latinized, Dallaeus.] b. at Châtellerault, France, Jan. 6, 1594; d. at Charenton, near Paris, April 15, 1670. French Protestant divine and controversialist. A voluminous writer, his chief work is Traité de l'emploi des saints pères pour le jugement des différends qui sont aujourd'hui en la religion (1632; Latin trans., 1656).

Daily Courant (ku.rant'), The. The first successful British daily paper. It was begun on March 11, 1702, and ceased publication in 1735.

Daily Telegraph Affair. International incident precipitated by the publication in the London Daily Telegraph on Oct. 28, 1908, of a summary manuscript of a confidential talk between Kaiser Wilhelm II and an English friend in which the Kaiser criticized the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The tactlessness of Wilhelm's statements not only greatly increased friction between Germany and Great Britain, but also aroused German public opinion. The German chancellor, Prince Bernhard von Bülow, had the support of all parties when he advised Wilhelm II to act more cautiously and discreetly in the future. Wilhelm, though accepting von Bülow's demands, did not forgive his chancellor, whom he dismissed in the following year.

Daimbert (dan.ber) or Dagobert (dä.go.ber). fl. latter part of 11th century; d. in Sicily, 1107. First Latin patriarch of Jerusalem. He became archbishop of Pisa in 1092, and commanded the Pisan and Genoese army in the first Crusade. He was elected patriarch of Jerusalem in 1099.

Daimiel (dī.myel'). Town in C Spain, in the province of Ciudad Real, situated on the Azuer River, ab. 20 mi. NE of Ciudad Real. It has linen and woolen manufactures, distilleries, and wine and oil markets. The Gothic parish church is of interest. 19,759 (1940).

Daimler (dām'lėr; German, dīm'lėr), Gottlieb. b. at Schorndorf, Württemberg, Germany, March 17, 1834; d. at Cannstatt, near Stuttgart, Germany, March 6, 1900. German engineer and inventor, noted as a pioneer manufacturer of automobiles. He invented (1885) an internal-combustion engine for automotive vehicles and independently of Karl Benz, with whose company his later merged, constructed one of the first practical automobiles. A progenitor of the modern automotive industry, he founded (1890) the Daimler Motor Company at Cannstatt (later Daimler-Benz and Company), producing the Mercedes, one of the most famous of automobiles.

Daingerfield (dān'jėr.fēld), Elliott. b. at Harpers Ferry (then in Virginia, now in West Virginia). March 26, 1859; d. Oct. 22, 1932. American painter. He studied at the Art Students League of New York, and in Europe. His work consists of easel pictures and decorations, notably those of the Lady Chapel of the church of Saint Mary the Virgin, New York. In his figure work he formed himself mainly on Italian models, while in landscape he owed much to the friendship and influence of George Inness. In 1906 he was elected a member of the National Academy of Design.

Dai Nippon (dī nēp.pôn). A Japanese name of Japan.

Dainty (dān'ti), Lady. Fashionable, frivolous, fine lady in Colley Cibber's comedy The Double Gallant: "Dogs, doctors, and monkeys are her favorites." She is courted by Careless.

Daiquirí (dī.kē.rē'). Town on the E coast of Cuba, in Oriente province, ab. 15 mi. S of Santiago. In the Spanish-American War, on June 22, 1898, the American army of invasion (excepting Kent's division, which was disembarked at Siboney, June 23) made a successful landing at this place (which, in many of the reports from the front, was miscalled Baiquirí). Pop. under 5,000 (1943).

Dairen (dī'ren'). [Also: Tairen, Tairend; Chinese, Talien, Talienwan; Russian, Dalny.] Seaport in NE China, in the province of Liaoning, Manchuria, situated on the Liaotung Peninsula, ab. 20 mi. NE of Port Arthur. It is the chief port of Manchuria, exporting soybeans, iron and steel products, and wheat. It was founded by the Russians in 1899 and was designed to be the commercial terminus of the Trans-Siberian Railway. During the Russo-Japanese War (1904–05) it was captured by the Japanese. In September, 1906, it was made a free port. It was built up by the Japanese as a modern city and port, but was returned after World War II to China. It has a fine harbor, protected by a breakwater, and is connected by railway with Port Arthur, Mukden, Harbin, and the Eastern Chinese railway system. 722,950 (1946).

Dai Sen (dī sen). [Also, Oyama.] Mountain in S Japan, on the island of Honshu, ab. 130 mi. NW of Kyoto. Elevation, ab. 5,900 ft.

Daisy (dā'zi), Solomon. Bell ringer of Chigwell, near London, in Charles Dickens's Barnaby Rudge, a rusty little fellow who seems all eyes.

Daisy Miller (dā'zi mil'ėr). [Full title, Daisy Miller: A Study.] Novel by Henry James, published in 1879. Daisy Miller is a frank and innocent American girl who, by her unconventional conduct, alienates the American colony in Rome.

Daitya (dī'tya). In Hindu mythology, one of a race of demons and giants who warred with the gods and interferred with sacrifices: the Daityas are parallels of the Greek Titans.

Dajak (dī'ăk). See Dyak.

Dajo (dä.HŌ'). Mountain on Jolo Island, Sulu Archipelago, in the Philippines. An engagement between U.S. troops and Moros took place here March 6–7, 1906. Fifteen Americans, three members of the native constabulary, and 600 Moros were reported killed. Elevation, ab. 2,100 ft.

Dakait (dä.kä'ēt). Hindustani form of Dacoit.

Dakar (dä.kär'). Seaport on the extreme point of Cape Verde, in Senegal territory, French West Africa: the administrative seat of the federation of French West Africa. Here the governor general resides and his privy council of officials meets with the general assembly of Europeans and natives elected by the various territories. In 1924 Dakar and the surrounding suburbs were constituted a circonscription, i.e., given a government of their own separate from that of Senegal, but in 1946 the city and port were reunited with the territory. Dakar is in a strategic position, being on the routes from Europe to S and W Africa, and also a port of call for many ships on the way to South America. A fortified naval station has been established there. Extensive additions and alterations to the port, begun in 1938, were interrupted by World War II but are now complete. Its growth has been phenomenal. With its excellently protected and developed harbor and strong defenses the city remained under the control of the Vichy government in 1940. It withstood an attempt (July 8, 1940) by the Free French to take the city, and was considered a nest for German submarines until the Allies gained command in Africa in 1943. Area of Dakar and the surrounding area (which formerly constituted the circonscription of Dakar and dependencies), 60 sq. mi.; pop. 151,000 (1945).

Dakers (dā'kėrz), Jonathan. Idealistic physician, the hero of Francis Brett Young's novel, My Brother Jonathan (1928).

Dakiki or Daqiqi (dä.kē'kē), Abu Mansur. fl. c1000 A.D. Persian poet, from Tus (in Khurasan) or Bukhara, author of many odes and sonnets. Dakiki had completed a thousand distichs of the Shahnamah (Book of Kings) when he was murdered. Firdausi represents him as appearing to him in a dream, and asking him to incorporate in his work the fragment. To Dakiki Firdausi ascribed the portion of the Shahnamah relating to Gushtasp and Zartusht (Zoroaster).

Dakin (dā'kin), Henry Drysdale. b. at London, 1880; d. Feb. 10, 1952. English biochemist, noted for study of the action of enzymes within the body. A researcher (1905–20) at the Herter Laboratory at New York, he compounded Dakin's solution, an antiseptic that liberates free chlorine, for the treatment of wounds during World War I. He won (1941) the Davy medal of the Royal Society. He is the coauthor of Handbook of Chemical Antiseptics (1917).

Dakka (dak'ə). See Loe Dakka.

Dakota (də.kō'tə). [Also, Sioux.] Group of North American Indian tribes, all speaking languages of the Siouan family, formerly inhabiting a large area of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana.

Dakota River. See James River, in North Dakota.

Dakota Territory. Former territory of the U.S., divided in 1889 into the states of North Dakota and South Dakota.

Daktyloi (dak'ti.loi). See Dactyls.

Dal (däl). [Swedish, Dalälven (älven = "the river").] River in S central Sweden, in the län (counties) of Kopparberg, Gävleborg, and Uppsala. It is formed by the union of the East Dal (Swedish, Österdalälven) and West Dal (Swedish, Västerdalälven) and flows SE, then NE into the Gulf of Bothnia, ab. 58 mi. N of Uppsala, ab. 10 mi. SE of Gävle. Length, ab. 250 mi.

Dal or Dale (däl), Vladimir Ivanovich. See Dahl, Vladimir Ivanovich.

Daladier (dä.lä.dyā), Édouard. b. at Carpentras, Vaucluse, France, June 18, 1884—. French political leader, premier of France at the outbreak of World War II. A graduate of the École Normale Supérieure, he taught history at various schools before World War I; during the war he rose from private to captain. He served as a Radical Socialist deputy (1919–40) and held numerous cabinet posts, including minister of colonies (1924–25), public works (1930–32), foreign affairs (1934, 1940), and national defense (1936–40). He served as premier three times (January–October, 1933; January–February, 1934; April, 1938–March, 1940) and was twice vice-premier (June, 1936–June, 1937; January–April, 1938). He succeeded (January, 1934) Édouard Herriot as president of the Radical Socialist Party and was elected honorary president in 1945. Having resigned the premiership because of inability to cope with the fascist-monarchist riots of February, 1934, following the exposure of the Stavisky scandal, he joined the anti-fascist Popular Front formed the following year, but as premier (1938–40) turned increasingly against the Communists while seeking an agreement with Germany. He signed the Munich agreement (1938) and the declaration of war against Germany (1939). Though granted (August, 1939) temporary rights to rule by decree, he resigned (March 20, 1940) as premier on the eve of the invasion of France. After the armistice by which France surrendered to the Germans, he was arrested by the Vichy authorities, but strenuously denied at the Riom trial (February, 1942) that he had failed to give France the means of defense. He was imprisoned in France (1941–43) and in Germany and Austria (1943–45). He was elected (1946) to the National Assembly.

Dalaguete (dä.lä.gā'tā). Town in the SE part of Cebu, in the Philippine Islands. 2,576 (1948).

Dalai Lama (dä.lī' lä'mə). Title of the temporal and spiritual ruler of Tibet, whose seat is at Lhasa. He is supposed to be a reincarnation of the Mahayana Buddhist deity Avalokiteshvara. The manner of his selection in each new physical incarnation is, by Western standards, extremely curious: he is born, in a manner of speaking (a Tibetan would say that he becomes incarnate), at the precise moment of the death of his predecessor. This means that after the death of a reigning Dalai Lama a considerable search is instituted to determine the whereabouts of a child who can be ascertained to have been born at exactly the moment the former ceased to live. The search is oftentimes lengthy, during which period Tibet is governed by a priestly junta (which also ordinarily serves as a regency during the minority of each new Dalai Lama). Moreover, from the standpoint of a Tibetan, the child thus found cannot properly be called a "new" Dalai Lama; this will be obvious when the reader recalls that the Dalai Lama is, by definition, a reincarnation of Avalokiteshvara, who may therefore be said to have had an uninterrupted existence in various incarnations (14, to date). From this point of view, there is never a "new" Dalai Lama, but only a new incarnation; as one incarnation "dies" the new one instantly begins to "live" (whence the importance of determining the exact moment of birth). From a Western point of view, of course, this concept of continuous reincarnation is difficult to understand, and hence (as in the entry immediately following) many Western scholars tend to think of the Dalai Lama as being, at any particular moment in time, a particular person with an ascertainable date of birth who must inevitably someday die.

Dalai Lama. b. at Gumbum, near Sining, Tsinghai, China, 1934—. Spiritual and (at least nominally) political leader of Tibet. The present holder of this title, a young boy, is the 14th reincarnation. The child was enthroned (1940) at Lhasa, but the actual power was for several years in the hands of a regency. After the Japanese surrender (1945), the regency through him backed the Kuomintang against the Communists in China, but with the collapse of the Kuomintang it ousted (1949) the Chinese Central Government mission from Tibet and sought outside aid to break the tie with China. However, in October, 1950, the determination of the Chinese Communist government to be the chief force in Tibetan political affairs was made bluntly evident by the Chinese invasion of Tibetan territory, and within a few months virtually all members of the Tibetan army (hardly a significant military force by Western standards) had been captured or dispersed. The Dalai Lama withdrew from Lhasa in December, 1950, and established himself with a considerable retinue in territory from which, if necessary, he could seek shelter in India; however, in the latter half of 1951, after negotiations with the Chinese Communists, he returned to Lhasa.

Dalälven (däl'el.vən). Swedish name of the Dal.

Dalarna (dä'lär.nä). Swedish name of Dalecarlia.

Dalayrac or d'Alayrac (dà.lā.rak), Nicolas. b. at Muret, France, June 13, 1753; d. at Tontenay-aux-Roses, France, Nov. 27, 1809. French composer of comic operas. His works include Le Petit Souper (1781), Le Corsaire (1783), Nina (1786), Le Poëte et le musicien (1809), and others.

Dalbeattie (dal.bē'tē, dal-). Police burgh in S Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire, situated on Dalbeattie Burn (a tributary stream of Urr Water), ab. 11 mi. NE of Kirkcudbright, ab. 347 mi. N of London by rail. 3,365 (est. 1948).

Dalberg (däl'berk), Emmerich Joseph. [Title, Duc de Dalberg.] b. at Mainz, Germany, May 30, 1773; d. at Herrensheim, near Worms, Germany, April 27, 1833. Peer of France; son of Wolfgang Heribert von Dalberg. He was created a duke by Napoleon in 1810, and peer by Louis XVIII in 1815. He went (1815) to the Congress of Vienna as one of Talleyrand's assistants and later served as ambassador at Turin and Vienna. His daughter married Sir R. E. Acton and was the mother of the historian Lord Acton (John Emerich Edward Dalberg-Acton, 1st Baron Acton).

Dalberg, Karl Theodor Anton Maria von. b. at Herrensheim, near Worms, Germany, Feb. 8, 1744; d. at Regensburg, Germany, Feb. 10, 1817. German nobleman, prelate, and littérateur, last archbishop-elector of Mainz; brother of Wolfgang Heribert von Dalberg. An adherent of Napoleon, he was primate of the Confederation of the Rhine (1806–13), and was created (1810) grand duke of Frankfort. He was a patron of the arts and a friend of Goethe, Schiller, and Wieland.

Dalberg, Wolfgang Heribert von. b. at Herrensheim, near Worms, Germany, Nov. 18, 1750; d. at Mannheim, Germany, Sept. 27, 1806. German theater director and dramaturgist at Mannheim; descendant of the distinguished lords of Dalberg (or Dalburg) castle near Kreuznach; younger brother of Karl Theodor Anton Maria von Dalberg and father of Emmerich Joseph Dalberg. In his endeavor to establish a German national theater he succeeded in organizing what has been called "a model republic of the stage." In 1782 he staged Schiller's Räuber, and the following year he engaged Schiller as the Mannheim theater playwright. The poet's Briefe an den Freiherrn von Dalberg were published in 1819. Dalberg's own contributions to German stage literature include a number of adaptations of Shakespearian plays.

Dalberg-Acton (dôl'bėrg.ak'tən), John Emerich Edward. See Acton, Lord.

D'Albert (dal'bėrt), Eugène. See Albert, Eugène Francis Charles d'.

D'Albiac (dal'bi.ak), John Henry. b. 1894—. British air officer who headed (June, 1943–1944) with rank of air vice-marshal the Royal Air Force tactical command during World War II. He served (1937–38) with the army coöperation group, which was later (June, 1943) merged with the Royal Air Force tactical command. He commanded (1940) the Royal Air Force units in Greece, and was appointed (1944) deputy commander of the Mediterranean Allied tactical air force. He was a staff member (1945–46) of the air ministry.

Dalbono (däl.bô'nō), Edoardo (or Eduardo). b. at Naples, Italy, 1843; d. 1915. Neapolitan painter of landscapes and historical and mythological scenes. He was schooled at Rome, and then returned to Naples to continue his studies. Later he went to Paris, and was awarded prizes there and elsewhere in Europe. His work was recognized in Italy, Austria, France, and the U.S. Excommunication of King Manfred, Legend of the Sirens, Tarantella, Fishing Boats, and The Bay of Naples are among his best-known works.

Dalby (dôl'bi), Isaac. b. in Gloucestershire, England, 1744; d. at Farnham, Surrey, England, Feb. 3, 1824. English mathematician, employed in the survey of England after 1791.

Dalcroze Institute (dal.krōz'). See Jaques-Dalcroze Institute.

Daldianus (dal.di.ā'nus), Artemidorus. See Artemidorus Daldianus.

Dale (dāl). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Cambria County, near Johnstown: coal mines. 3,310 (1950).

Dale, David. b. at Stewarton, Ayrshire, Scotland, Jan. 6, 1739; d. at Glasgow, March 17, 1806. Scottish philanthropist. He was the founder and first proprietor, with Richard Arkwright, of the Lanark mills, since made famous by their connection with his son-in-law, the socialist Robert Owen. About 1770 he retired from the established church of Scotland, and founded a new communion on congregational principles, known as the Old Independents, of which he was chief pastor. He was noted as a munificent benefactor of the poor.

Dale, Sir Henry Hallett. b. at London, 1875—. English physiologist. He studied at Cambridge, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and University College at London. He directed the Wellcome Physiological Research Laboratories (1904–14), and the National Institute for Medical Research (1928–42) at Hampstead, England. He was professor (1942–46) and director of research at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He served as secretary (1925–35) and president (1940–45) of the Royal Society, was a member (1927–37) of the General Medical Council, and shared (1936) the Nobel prize in physiology and medicine with Otto Loewi for investigations of the chemical transmission of nerve impulses.

Dale, J. S. of. See Stimson, Frederic Jesup.

Dale, Richard. b. near Norfolk, Va., Nov. 6, 1756; d. at Philadelphia, Feb. 26, 1826. American commodore. He served as first lieutenant under John Paul Jones on the Bonhomme Richard in the battle (Sept. 23, 1779) with the Serapis, and commanded (1801–02) a squadron in the Mediterranean during the hostilities with Tripoli.

Dale, Robert William. b. Dec. 1, 1829; d. March 13, 1895. English Congregational clergyman and author. He became associate pastor of the Congregational Church at Carr's Lane, Birmingham, in 1853, and sole pastor in 1859. He was for a number of years editor of the Congregationalist, and was chairman (1868–69) of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. In 1877 he delivered at Yale College a series of lectures on preaching (the first Englishman appointed to the Lyman Beecher Lectureship). He was the author of The Jewish Temple and the Christian Church (1863), Sermons on the Ten Commandments (1871), The Atonement (1874), and others.

Dale, Sir Thomas. d. at Masulipatam, India, Aug. 9, 1619. Colonial governor of Virginia. He became marshal of Virginia in 1609, and in 1611 succeeded Thomas West, Baron De la Warr, as governor, being relieved by Sir Thomas Gates in the same year. He was governor a second time (1614–16), and returned to England, taking with him Thomas Rolfe and Rolfe's wife Pocahontas. His administrations, which were characterized by great severity, were attended by order and prosperity. The first working code of laws in Virginia, noted for their severity, was called popularly Dale's Code.

Dalecarlia (dā.lę.kär'li.ā). [Swedish, Dalarna.] Region and former province of Sweden, corresponding to the län (county) of Kopparberg. Its surface is mountainous. Its people took (1519–23) the leading part in the independence movement under Gustavus I, Gustavus Vasa.

Dalén (dä.lān'), (Nils) Gustaf. b. at Stenstorp, Sweden, Nov. 30, 1869; d. at Stockholm, Dec. 9, 1937. Swedish industrialist and inventor, best known as the inventor of an automatic switch for controlling unattended beacons. He studied (1896–97) at the Zurich Polytechnikum, developed (1897–99) hot-air turbines, and served (1906–09) as chief engineer for the Gas Accumulator Company, making important improvements in the use of acetylene. He won (1912) the Nobel prize in physics. In 1913 he was blinded in an explosion. Among his other inventions are compressors, air pumps, an apparatus for pasteurization, and a milking machine.

Dalgarno (dal.gär'nō), George. b. at Aberdeen, Scotland, c1627; d. at Oxford, England, Aug. 28, 1687. British scholar and writer, inventor of a deaf-mute alphabet. He wrote Ars Signorum (1661), an essay on a language in which the letters would convey concepts, and Didascalocophus (1680), containing his two-hand symbols for deaf-mutes.

Dalgarno, Lord. Malevolent young man in Sir Walter Scott's Fortunes of Nigel. He is the secret enemy of Nigel and the favorite of Prince Charles. Having heartlessly betrayed the Lady Hermione, he is compelled by the king to do her justice. After leaving court in disguise, he is murdered.

Dalgetty (dal.get'i), Captain Dugald. Soldier of fortune in Sir Walter Scott's Legend of Montrose. He had been a divinity student in his youth, and became a mercenary. He was courageous, and not untrustworthy if well paid. The original is said to have been a man named Munro who belonged to a band of Scotch and English auxiliaries in Swinemünde (1630).

Dalhart (dal'härt). City in NW Texas, in the Panhandle, county seat of Dallam County and also partly in Hartley County, NW of Amarillo: distributing and shipping center for grain and cattle. 5,918 (1950).

Dalhousie (dal.hou'zi, -hö'zi). County seat of Restigouche County, New Brunswick, Canada, situated on the S shore of the Bay of Chaleur, near its head. It is connected by rail and road with central Canada, and is a paper-making center, with several mills. 4,939 (1951).

Dalhousie, Earl and Marquesses of. Titles held by various members of the Ramsay family.

Dalhousie University. Institution of higher learning, nonsectarian and coeducational, located at Halifax, Nova Scotia. The College of Halifax, founded in 1818, was renamed Dalhousie College in 1821, in honor of one of the earls of Dalhousie, who laid the cornerstone in 1820, but it did not actually function until 1838. Three years later it was granted university status, but in 1843 it closed down, not to reopen until 1863. In addition to faculties of arts and science, the university comprises schools of engineering, law, medicine and dentistry, and has mutual arrangements with the Halifax Conservatory of Music and with the Nova Scotia College of Pharmacy. It is also associated with the University of King's College, which, dating from 1789, became by royal charter in 1802 the first university in Canada.

Dali (dä'lē). Modern name of Idalium.

Dali, Salvador. b. at Figueras, in Catalonia, Spain, March 11, 1904—. Spanish surrealist painter and etcher of meticulously drawn pictures combining familiar objects in irrational situations, and called by him "paranoiac" in content. He attracted wide attention in America (1934; 1940 et seq.) with window designs, for Fifth Avenue, N.Y., stores, utilizing common household objects made of fur, with paintings employing recurrent symbols such as ants, telephones, crutches, drooping watches, and the like. A precocious and opinionated painter, he was expelled from the School of Fine Arts, Madrid; at Paris (1927 et seq.) he was associated with Picasso, Miró, and Tanguy, experimenting with various new techniques such as pointillism, futurism, constructivism, and scientific cubism, and studying Freudian psychology. He has lived, with some interruptions, in the U.S. since 1940. Characteristic titles among his paintings are The Enigma of William Tell (1934), Nostalgic Echo (1935), Group of Women Imitating the Gestures of a Schooner (1940), and Soft Self-Portrait with Grilled Bacon (1941); his portrait of his wife, Portrait of Gala (1935), is in the Museum of Modern Art, New York. Perhaps his best-known painting is The Persistence of Memory, a desolate landscape with limp watches sagging over cliffs, bare branches, and the like. He is the author of and designer of scenes and costumes for Labyrinth (ballet, 1941); with Luis Bunuel, the scenarist of the surrealist films Le Chien andalou and L'Âge d'or; the illustrator of Lautréamont's Les Chants de maldoror.

Dalías (dä.lē'äs). Town in E Spain, in the province of Almería, situated on the S slope of the Sierra de Gador, near the Mediterranean Sea, ab. 18 mi. W of Almería. It has lead mines and sulfur springs. 11,683 (1940).

Dalida (dal'i.dạ). The Delilah of the Book of Judges is found as Dalila in the Vulgate, but is Dalida in Chaucer, and Dalida is the form used in Wycliffe's Bible. Chaucer uses the form Dalida in the Monk's Tale and in The Book of the Duchess.

Dalin (dä.lēn'), Olof von. b. at Vinberga, Halland, Sweden, Aug. 29, 1708; d. at Drottningholm, Sweden, Aug. 12, 1763. Swedish historian and poet. He was the son of a clergyman. He studied at Lund, and subsequently entered (1726) one of the public offices in Stockholm. He began his literary career by the publication of a weekly journal, Den Svenska Argus (The Swedish Argus), modeled after the Spectator, which he issued (1733–34) anonymously. This was followed by Tankar om Kritiker (Thoughts about Critics, 1736) in the style of Pope's Essay on Criticism, and, after his return from a tour through Germany and France, by the satiric prose allegory Sagan om Hästen (The Story of the Horse, 1738), which is modelled after Swift's Tale of a Tub, and the satiric poem Aprilverk om vår herrliga tid (April-work of Our Glorious Time, 1738). An epic poem in Alexandrines, Svenska Friheten (Swedish Liberty), appeared in 1742. He wrote a tragedy, Brynhilda (1738), and a comedy, Den Afvundsjuke (The Envious Man, 1738), deriving from French models. In 1751 he was made tutor to the crown prince (later Gustavus III), and ennobled. In 1753 he was made privy councilor. In 1756, suspected of being concerned in the revolution of that year, he was banished from the court, but returned in 1761. During this period he was engaged upon his principal work, Svea Rikes historia (History of the Kingdom of Sweden; 4 vols., 1746–62), which extends to 1611, the end of the reign of Charles IX. His collected literary works, Samlade Vitterhetsarbeten, appeared in 1767, in 6 volumes. Dalin was the leading Swedish writer of his day and with his polished style brought Swedish letters back to the level achieved elsewhere in 18th-century Europe.

Dalkeith (dal.kēth', dạl-). Police burgh and market town in S Scotland, in Midlothian, situated on the river North Esk, ab. 7 mi. SE of Edinburgh, ab. 389 mi. N of London by rail. It has no direct rail connections for passengers, being reached by rail to Eskbank Station, ab. ½ mi. from the town. Dalkeith Palace (the residence of the dukes of Buccleuch) is in the vicinity. 8,354 (est. 1948).

Dalkey (dô'ki, dôl'ki). Former town in E Irish Republic, in County Dublin, on Dublin Bay ab. 9 mi. SE of Dublin, now a part of the city borough of Dun Laoghaire. Dalkey has a 15th-century castle, and was a port of some importance in the Middle Ages. It is now a seaside resort and suburban residential area.

Dall (dôl), William Healey. b. at Boston, Aug. 21, 1845; d. March 27, 1927. American naturalist. He took part in the international telegraph expedition to Alaska in 1865, was assistant to the U.S. Coast Survey (1871–84), and was paleontologist to the U.S. Geographical Survey (1884–1909). His works include Alaska and Its Resources (1870), Scientific Results of the Exploration of Alaska by the Parties under the Charge of W. H. Dall (1876), and others.

Dallaeus (da.lē'us). Latinized name of Daillé, Jean.

Dal Lake (däl). Lake in N India, in the Vale of Kashmir, in the W Himalaya highlands near Srinagar: one of the most popular and beautiful tourist centers in NW India.

Dallas (dal'ạs). Town in NW Georgia, county seat of Paulding County, ab. 30 mi. NW of Atlanta. Near here, at New Hope Church, Pickett's Mill, Pumpkin Vine Creek, and other points, there was continued fighting between the Union forces under Sherman and the Confederates under Johnston from May 25 to 29, 1864. Pop. 1,817 (1950).

Dallas. City in NW Oregon, county seat of Polk County, on La Creole Creek, in a lumbering area: milling of lumber, and drying and packing of prunes. It was settled in the 1840's and named for George Mifflin Dallas (1792–1864), U.S. vice-president. Early manufactures consisted of iron products and wool textiles. 4,793 (1950).

Dallas. City in C Texas, county seat of Dallas County, NE of Austin, on the Trinity River: second largest city in the state, and largest city in the cotton belt and in the "black prairie" of Texas. It is a distributing center for cotton and petroleum, a fashion center of the Southwest, and a manufacturing center for agricultural machinery, cotton-ginning machinery, oil-field equipment, textiles and clothing, cottonseed oil, flour, refined petroleum, cement, and airplanes. It was settled c1842 and incorporated in 1856. It is named for George Mifflin Dallas, vice-president of the U.S. from 1845 to 1849. It is the seat of Southern Methodist University and the Dallas Little Theater, and has a number of noteworthy museums, housing geology, natural history, fine arts, history, ethnology, and other collections. 294,734 (1940), 434,462 (1950).

Dallas, Alexander James. b. in Jamaica, British West Indies, June 21, 1759; d. at Trenton, N.J., Jan. 16, 1817. American statesman, secretary of the treasury from 1814 to 1816; father of George Mifflin Dallas. He was the son of a Scottish physician resident in Jamaica. Having studied law in England, he emigrated from Jamaica to Philadelphia in 1783, was admitted to the bar in 1785, and served for a number of years as secretary of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. For a time he edited the reports, the first series prepared, of the U.S. Supreme Court. He was U.S. attorney (1801–14) for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and secretary (1814–16) of the U.S. treasury under Madison, discharging (1815–16) also the functions of secretary of war. As secretary of the treasury (1814–16), he was instrumental in securing the passage of the bill establishing (April 3, 1816) the Second Bank of the United States and recommended the protective tariff system that prevailed for three decades thereafter. The treasury, which was bankrupt when he assumed his post, was in a strong position at his resignation. Among his works were Features of Mr. Jay's Treaty (1795), Laws of the Commonwealth of Pa. (4 vols., 1793–1801), Reports of Cases Ruled and Adjudged in the Several Courts of the United States and Pennsylvania . . . (4 vols., 1790–1807), and Treasury Reports: An Exposition of the Causes and Character of the War (1815).

Dallas, George Mifflin. b. at Philadelphia, July 10, 1792; d. there, Dec. 31, 1864. American lawyer, politician, and diplomat, Democratic Vice-president of the United States under Polk; son of Alexander James Dallas. He graduated (1810) from Princeton and was admitted (1813) to the bar. He was (1813 et seq.) secretary to Albert Gallatin on his mission to Russia to obtain Russian mediation to end the war of 1812 with Great Britain. He was chosen by the American peace commissioners to carry back from Ghent the British peace terms in 1814. After government service at Washington, he returned to Philadelphia, where he was active in Democratic politics, and served as deputy attorney general for the city and county of Philadelphia, mayor, and district attorney (1829–31). He filled a vacancy in the U.S. Senate (1831–33), was (1833–35) attorney general of Pennsylvania, and was minister to Russia (1837 et seq.). After serving as vice-president (1845–49), he became (1856) minister to Great Britain, where he conducted the negotiations that culminated in the Dallas-Clarendon convention (Oct. 17, 1856), relating to U.S.-British differences in Central America, and was successful in inducing Great Britain to yield her right of search vis-à-vis the U.S. He held the post of minister until 1861.

Dallas, Robert Charles. b. at Kingston, Jamaica, British West Indies, 1754; d. at Ste.-Adresse, in Normandy, France, Nov. 20, 1824. British author; brother of Alexander James Dallas. He was educated in England, returned, on coming of age, to Jamaica in the West Indies to take possession of the estates left him by his father, and eventually settled in England. He is noted chiefly for his intimacy with Byron, to whom he gave literary advice, and for whom he acted as agent in dealings with publishers. He wrote Recollections of the Life of Lord Byron from the year 1808 to the end of 1814, which was edited by his son. A. R. C. Dallas.

Dallastown (dal'ȧs.toun). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in York County, near York. 3,304 (1950).

Dalles (dalz). Succession of rapids in a narrow gorge in the Columbia River, near the city of The Dalles, Ore.; also the neighboring heights. The Cascade Locks, built here in 1896 by the U.S. government, made it possible for ships to bypass the rapids. There is a similar formation, also called the Dalles, in the St. Croix River near the village of St. Croix Falls, Wis. Dalles is also a name (now more often Dells) for cascades and curious rock formations in the Wisconsin River, in Wisconsin and in the St. Louis River in Minnesota.

Dalles, The. See The Dalles.

Dalliance of the Eagles, The. Short poem (1881) by Walt Whitman. It is in his Leaves of Grass, in the "By the Roadside" group.

Dallin (dal'in), Cyrus Edwin. b. at Springville, Utah, Nov. 22, 1861; d. at Arlington Heights, Mass., Nov. 14, 1944. American sculptor, particularly of American Indian subjects. As a student at Paris, he worked under Henri Chapu and others. He was made a member (1930) of the National Academy of Design, a fellow (1923) of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and a member of the Royal Society of Arts, London. Prizes were awarded his work at the Paris Salon (1890, 1909), the Paris (1900), Pan-American (1901), and Panama-Pacific (1915) expositions, and others. He taught at the Massachusetts School of Art. Among his well-known sculptures are Signal of Peace, in Lincoln Park at Chicago, Medicine Man, in Fairmount Park at Philadelphia, the Pioneer Monument at Salt Lake City, Appeal to the Great Spirit, in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and Massasoit at Plymouth, Mass.

Dalling and Bulwer (dôl'ing; bůl'wėr), Baron. Title of Bulwer, William Henry Lytton Earle.

Dallmeyer (däl'mī.ėr), John Henry. b. at Loxten, near Versmold, in Westphalia, Germany, Sept. 6, 1830; d. on shipboard near New Zealand, Dec. 30, 1883. German optician. He went to England in 1851, became a manufacturer of telescopes at London in 1859, and patented a single wide-angle photographic lens in 1864. He was elected a fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1861. His work on photographic and microscopic lenses, in both of which he made improvements, was complemented by a technical capability in celestial photography. He wrote On the Choice and Use of Photographic Lenses

Dall'Ongaro (däl.lông'gä.rō), Francesco. b. at Mansue, Treviso, Italy, 1808; d. at Naples, Italy, Jan. 10, 1873. Italian poet, novelist, and political agitator. He was a member of Garibaldi's movement, held office under Mazzini in the republic, and fled when that fell. In 1860 he returned from France, to become professor of dramatic literature at Florence and Naples. His Novelle vecchie e nuove were published in 1869.

Dalloway (dal'ọ.wā), Clarissa. See under Mrs. Dalloway.

Dalman (däl'män), Gustaf Hermann. b. at Niesky, in Silesia, June 9, 1855; d. at Herrnhut, Germany, Aug. 19, 1941. German Protestant theologian, noted as a student of Aramaic. He was graduated from the Moravian theological school at Gnadenfeld, where he was professor (1881–87) of Old Testament and practical theology. He served (1887–1902) as professor and later director of the Institutum Delitzschianum at Leipzig, became (1890) associate professor of Old Testament exegesis at the University of Leipzig, was director (1902–17) of the German Evangelical Archaeological Institute at Jerusalem, and headed (1917 et seq.) the Dalman Institute for Palestine Research at Greifswald. He was the author of Christus im Thalmud (1891), Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch (1894), and Worte Jesu (1898).

Dalmatia (dal.mā'shą). [Serbo-Croatian, Dalmacija (däl.mä'tsē.yä); German, Dalmatien (däl.mä'tē.ęn); French, Dalmatie (dål.mȧ.sē); Italian, Dalmazia (däl.mä'tsyä).] Southern and western part of the federative unit of Croatia in the federal people's republic of Yugoslavia; a narrow strip of rocky coastal country, bordering the Adriatic Sea and including many offshore islands. The surface is mountainous and in part eroded. In antiquity, under the name of Illyricum, Dalmatia formed part of the Roman Empire. It was overrun by Goths and Moors, and in the 7th century by Slavic tribes coming from the northeast. The coastal areas came under the sovereignty and influence of Venice. The Turks occupied the interior in the 16th century but conceded most of it to Venice in 1699 and 1718 (peace treaties of Karlowitz and Passarowitz). The peace of Campo Formio (1797) brought Dalmatia, with Venice, under Austrian rule to which it returned (1815) after a brief interlude of French influence in the Bonapartist Kingdom of Italy and in the Illyrian provinces of the French Empire. Dalmatia, exclusive of the city of Zadar (Zara) and the island of Lastovo (Lagosta), went to the kingdom of Yugoslavia in 1918, the larger northern part to the banovina (province) of Primorska, the smaller southern part to the banovina of Zetska. After Yugoslavia entered (1941) World War II, Dalmatia was occupied by Italy. In 1945 almost the entire coastal strip, inclusive of Zadar, became part of the federative unit of Croatia. Only the regions around Hercegnovi and Metovic, where the railroad line coming from Mostar ends, belong to the federative unit of Bosnia-Hercegovina; the region of Kotor (Cattaro) belongs to the federative unit of Montenegro.

Dalmatie (dål.mȧ.sē), Duc de. Title of Soult, Nicolas Jean de Dieu.

Dalmia (däl'mi.ą), Seth Remakrishna. b. 1893—. Indian industrialist, founder and head of the Dalmia-Jain group of industries embracing a wide range of financial companies, mills, and factories. His centers of industrial activities have developed into self-sufficient towns, named after his ancestors and relatives. He is also known as a benefactor of social institutions in India.

Dalmorès (dål.mo.res), Charles. b. at Nancy, France, Dec. 21, 1871; d. 1939. French tenor singer.

Dalny (däl'ni). Russian name of Dairen.

Dalou (dȧ.lö), Jules. b. at Paris, Dec. 31, 1838; d. there, April 15, 1902. French sculptor. He studied under Duret at the École des Beaux-Arts, and assisted Carpeaux. He sent his first work to the Paris Salon in 1867. On account of complicity with the Commune in 1871 he was obliged to leave Paris, and went to London, where he was appointed professor of sculpture at South Kensington. He returned to Paris, and was associated with Aubé in competition for the monument to the Constitutional Assembly. Their scheme was unsuccessful, but Dalou's sketch for a relief upon the design attracted the attention of Gambetta and Turquet, and was developed into the great bas-relief of Mirabeau and De Dreux-Brezé in the National Assembly, which won the medal of honor in the Salon of 1883. It was accompanied by another bas-relief called Le Triomphe de la république, now in the Hôtel de Ville at Paris. His project of the monument to the republic in the Place de la République won the second prize, and was ordered by the state for La Place des Nations.

Dalriada (dal.ri.ā'dą). In Irish history, an ancient Gaelic kingdom, situated in what is now Ulster province, in Northern Ireland, in the N part of County Antrim. From here, in c500 A.D., the Dalriad Scots migrated to Argyllshire, Scotland, and founded the Scottish kingdom of Dalriada. The Irish district, in present-day Ulster, is called "The Route."

Dalriada. Former name for that part of Argyllshire, in W Scotland, settled (c500) by the Dalriad Scots from Ireland. Originally it comprised only the Kintyre and Knapdale districts, but was gradually extended until it included the whole of Argyllshire. The Dalriad Scots and Picts were united in one kingdom by Kenneth MacAlpine, who removed his court from Dunstaffnage, Argyllshire, to Forteviot, Perthshire, c846.

Dalry (dal'ri). Civil parish in SW Scotland, in Ayrshire, situated on the river Garnock, ab. 6 mi. NE of Ardrossan, ab. 402 mi. N of London by rail. 6,827 (1931).

Dalrymple (dal'rim.pl, dal.rim'pl), Alexander. b. at New Hailes, near Edinburgh, July 24, 1737; d. June 19, 1808. Scottish hydrographer. He entered the East India Company's service in 1752, and in 1762 was appointed to the command of the London, with instructions to open the trade with Sulu, in the Philippine Islands. He returned to England in 1765, and was appointed hydrographer to the East India Company in 1779, and hydrographer to the admiralty in 1795. He was the author of Account of Discoveries in the South Pacific Ocean before 1764 (1767), Historical Collection of South Sea Voyages (1770–71), and others.

Dalrymple of Hailes (hālz), Sir David. d. 1721. Scottish politician. He was made baronet in 1700, represented Culross in the Scottish parliament and served as solicitor-general to Queen Anne (1703), was a commissioner for the treaty of union (1706) with England and was elected (1707) to the English Parliament. He was Queen's advocate in Scotland (1709), and auditor to the Scottish exchequer (1720).

Dalrymple, Sir David. [Title, Lord Hailes.] b. at Edinburgh, Oct. 28, 1726; d. Nov. 29, 1792. Scottish judge and author. He was educated at Eton and at Utrecht, admitted to the Scottish bar in 1748, raised to the bench of the Court of Session with the title of Lord Hailes in 1766, and in 1776 became a judge of the justiciary or criminal court. His most notable works are An Inquiry into the Secondary Causes which Mr. Gibbon has assigned to the Rapid Growth of Christianity (1786), and Annals of Scotland (from Malcolm Canmore to Robert I, 1776; continued to the accession of the house of Stuart, 1779).

Dalrymple, Sir Hew. [Title, Lord North Berwick.] b. 1652; d. Feb. 1, 1737. Scottish statesman, advocate of the union of Scotland and England; third son of Sir James Dalrymple (1619–95) and brother of Sir James Dalrymple of Borthwick and Sir John Dalrymple (1648–1707). He represented New Galloway (1690) and North Berwick (1702), in the last Scottish parliament and served as lord president of session (1698–1737), a post to which he was originally named by William III and in which he succeeded his father. An enthusiastic advocate of union with England, he was in 1702 and 1706 one of the commissioners who drew up the articles. His Decisions of the Court of Session from 1698 to 1718, Collected by the Right Honorable Sir Hew Dalrymple, President of that Court (1758, 1792) was published at Edinburgh.

Dalrymple, Sir James. [Title, 1st Viscount Stair.] b. in Carrick, Scotland, in May, 1619; d. at Edinburgh, Nov. 25, 1695. Scottish lawyer and statesman. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, became professor of logic, morals, and politics in the University of Glasgow in 1641, and was admitted to the Scottish bar in 1648. Appointed a judge of the Court of Sessions by Cromwell in 1657, he was reappointed by Charles II in 1661 and became president of the court in 1670. He was admitted to the Scottish parliament in 1672, fled in 1682 to Holland to avoid the consequences of refusing to take the test oath, supported William III (William of Orange) in 1688, and was created Viscount Stair, Lord Glenluce and Stranraer, in 1690. His chief work is Institutions of the Law of Scotland (1681).

Dalrymple of Borthwick (bôrth'wik), Sir James. fl. 1714. Scottish antiquary; son of Sir James Dalrymple (1619–95) and brother of Sir Hew Dalrymple and Sir John Dalrymple (1648–1707). He was admitted to the Faculty of Advocates (1675), appointed one of the commissaries of Edinburgh and a principal clerk of the court of session, and created baronet in 1698. Author of Collections concerning the Scottish History preceding the death of King David the First in 1153 (1705).

Dalrymple, Sir John. [Title, 1st Earl of Stair.] b. 1648; d. Jan. 8, 1707. Scottish lawyer and statesman; son of Sir James Dalrymple (1619–95). He was admitted to the Scottish bar in 1672, was appointed king's advocate by James II in 1685, supported in 1688 the cause of William III (William of Orange), whose chief adviser in Scottish affairs he became, and was sworn privy councilor under Queen Anne in 1702. He was created 1st Earl of Stair in 1703. He is noted chiefly for his connection with the massacre of the Macdonalds of Glencoe, which was undertaken (1692) by his advice.

Dalrymple, John. [Title, 2nd Earl of Stair.] b. at Edinburgh, July 20, 1673; d. there, May 9, 1747. Scottish general and diplomat; son of Sir John Dalrymple (1648–1707). He was educated at Leiden, Netherlands, is said to have served in various subordinate grades throughout the wars of William III (William of Orange) in Flanders, became aide-de-camp to the Duke of Marlborough in 1703, and commanded a brigade at the siege of Lille and at the battle of Malplaquet. He was commissioned general in 1712. In 1715 he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to Paris; he was raised to the rank of ambassador in 1719, and was recalled in 1720. He was created field marshal in 1742, and was made general of the marines in 1746. He is noted chiefly for the princely style in which he supported his mission at Paris, and for the comprehensive and invaluable information which he remitted in his dispatches concerning the secret intrigues of the French court and of the friends of the Stuart Pretender.

Dalrymple, John. [Title, 5th Earl of Stair.] b. 1720; d. Oct. 13, 1789. British politician and army captain; grandson of Sir John Dalrymple (1648–1707). He presented a petition to the House of Lords on behalf of Massachusetts (1774) and opposed measures which later contributed in part to the outbreak of the Revolutionary War.

Dalrymple, John. [Title, 6th Earl of Stair.] b. 1749; d. June 1, 1821. English soldier in America; eldest son of John Dalrymple (1720–89). He served (1781) as captain of an infantry regiment under Sir Henry Clinton during the Revolutionary War, and was present at the attack on New London and Fort Griswold (September, 1781). On Jan. 5, 1782, he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to the king and republic of Poland and later (Aug. 5, 1785) minister plenipotentiary to Berlin.

Dalton (dôl'tŏn). City in NW Georgia, county seat of Whitfield County, ab. 28 mi. SE of Chattanooga: center of the candlewick-bedspread industry. Near here, on May 9, 1864, an engagement took place between part of Sherman's army and the Confederates. 15,968 (1950).

Dalton. Town (in Massachusetts the equivalent of township in many other states) and unincorporated village in W Massachusetts, in Berkshire County: manufactures of paper for use in currency. Pop. of town, 4,772 (1950); of village, 4,285 (1950).

Dalton, Hugh. b. at Neath, Glamorganshire, Wales, 1887—. English statesman and lawyer. He graduated from Cambridge, was a member (1924 et seq.) of Parliament, was appointed reader (1925–36) in economics at the University of London, and served as undersecretary (1929–31) in the Foreign Office. During World War II, he was minister (1940–42) of economic warfare, and president (1942–45) of the Board of Trade. He was chancellor (1945–47) of the exchequer and minister (1950) of town and country planning.

Dalton, John. b. probably at Dean, Cumberland, England, 1709; d. at Worcester, England, July 22, 1763. English poet and divine. He was graduated (B.A., 1730; M.A., 1734) from Oxford, appointed a canon of Worcester cathedral in 1748, and about the same time obtained the rectory of Saint Mary-at-Hill, London. His most notable work is an adaptation of Milton's Comus for the stage, published in 1738 under the title Comus, a Mask, now adopted to the Stage, as altered from Milton's Mask.

Dalton, John. b. at Eaglesfield, Cumberland, England, Sept. 6, 1766; d. at Manchester, England, July 27, 1844. English chemist and natural philosopher. He was the son of a poor weaver and acquired an education chiefly by private study. He began to teach in 1778, and was appointed (1793) teacher of mathematics and natural philosophy in New College, Manchester (which was removed to York in 1799). He became a member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester in 1794, was elected a fellow of the Royal Society in 1822, and was chosen corresponding member of the French Academy of Sciences in 1816 and foreign associate in 1830. He perfected c1804 the atomic theory, which he propounded in a work entitled A New System of Chemical Philosophy (1808–10 and 1827). Dalton made final the theory that there are classes of matter (elements) that combine in certain proportions as the result of their structure, and that each ultimate particle of such a substance is capable of combining by weight with similar particles of other elements. He suffered from color blindness, and on Oct. 31, 1794, read a paper before the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, in which he gives the earliest account of that peculiarity, which is known from him as Daltonism. Dalton was interested in almost everything and contributed papers to his several societies on matters from meteorology (he kept a meteorological diary from 1787 until the day before he died) to English grammar.

Dalton, John Call. b. at Chelmsford, Mass., Feb. 2, 1825; d. at New York, Feb. 12, 1889. American physiologist. He was professor of physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at New York (1855–83) and was emeritus professor and president of the college from 1883 until his death. He wrote Treatise on Human Physiology (1859), Treatise on Physiology and Hygiene (1868), and others.

Dalton-in-Furness (fėr'nes). [Also, Dalton.] Urban district and market town in NW England, in Lancashire, ab. 4 mi. NE of Barrow-in-Furness, ab. 260 mi. NW of London by rail. It has communications with the sea by a canal ab. 4 mi. long. 10,394 (1951).

Daly (dā'li), Arnold. [Full name, Peter Christopher Arnold Daly.] b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Oct. 22, 1875; d. at New York, Jan. 13, 1927. American actor, noted for introducing the plays of George Bernard Shaw to the New York stage. He produced and acted in Candida (1903) and introduced, among others, You Can Never Tell (1905), John Bull's Other Island (1905), and Mrs. Warren's Profession (1905). This last play, dealing with prostitution, was attacked by Anthony Comstock and banned in New York. Daly was arrested, but acquitted, in a widely publicized case.

Daly, Augustin. [Full name, John Augustin Daly.] b. at Plymouth, N.C., July 20, 1838; d. at Paris, June 7, 1899. American playwright and producer, noted as manager and director of Daly's Theatre at New York. His first theatrical success was Leah the Forsaken (first produced at the Howard Athenaeum at Boston, Dec. 8, 1862), adapted from the German play Deborah, by S. H. von Mosenthal. Following other adaptations of foreign plays, he produced his first known play, Under the Gaslight (New York Theatre, Aug. 12, 1867), followed by other melodramas like A Flash of Lightning (1868) and The Red Scarf (1869). His most outstanding play, Horizon, was produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in 1871. When this theater burned down in 1873, he leased the old New York Theatre and renamed it Daly's Fifth Avenue Theatre, managing it until 1877. Here, where Booth and Wallack, among others, acted under him, he produced such melodramas as Pique (1875) and The Dark City (1877). In 1879 he took over the Old Broadway Theatre, renaming it Daly's Theatre, and directed a company that included Ada Rehan, John Drew, and Otis Skinner. From this time onward he depended chiefly on foreign adaptations. He took his company to Europe in the 1880's and in the following decade gave notable productions of Shakespeare's plays. His achievements at Daly's Theatre rank him as one of the leading theatrical artists of his time. Among his other original plays were Griffith Gaunt (1868), Frou Frou (1870), Seven-Twenty-Eight (1897), and A Night Off (1897). He was also the author of a biography, Woffington, A Tribute to the Actress and the Woman (1888). See The Life of Augustin Daly, by Joseph F. Daly (1917).

Daly, Marcus. b. in Ireland, Dec. 5, 1841; d. Nov. 12, 1900. American mining financier, an organizer of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and the Amalgamated Copper Company. He arrived in the U.S. at the age of 15 and became a California pick-and-shovel man. After discovering (c1876) copper in the Anaconda silver mine, he bought the mine and others within the area and organized supplementary enterprises. His business and political feud (1888–1900) with William A. Clark involved him in Western politics. Their struggle to control the mines and the political machinery made of Montana (admitted to the Union as a state in 1889) a battleground, figuratively in terms of money spent and actually in terms of bloodshed among the miners. Daly made large contributions to Democratic Party campaign funds, giving 50,000 dollars to Bryan's 1896 campaign.

Daly, Reginald Aldworth. b. at Napanee, Ontario, Canada, May 19, 1871—. American geologist and authority on the origin of glaciers. He was professor of physical geology (1907–12) at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and professor of geology (1912–42) at Harvard. His works include Our Mobile Earth (1926), Igneous Rocks and the Depths of the Earth (1933), The Changing World of the Ice Age (1934), Strength and Structure of the Earth (1940), and The Floor of the Ocean (1942).

Daly, Thomas Augustine. b. at Philadelphia, May 28, 1871; d. there, Oct. 4, 1948. American journalist and poet, known for his Italian dialect verse. He was a staff member of the Philadelphia Record (1891–98, 1918–29) and Philadelphia Evening Ledger (1915–18) and a columnist (1929 et seq.) on the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. His works include Canzoni (1906), Carmina (1909), Madrigali (1912), McAroni Ballads (1919), McAroni Medleys (1931), Selected Poems of T. A. Daly (1936), Late Lark Singing (1946), and other collections of verse.

Daly City. City in C California, in San Mateo County, S of San Francisco: residential suburb of San Francisco. 15,191 (1950).

Dalyell or Dalzell (both, dal'yel, dē.el'), Thomas. b. c1599; d. Aug. 23, 1685. British general. He participated in the Royalist rebellion in the Highlands of Scotland in 1654 and entered the Russian service c1655. Returning (1665) to England on the invitation of Charles II, he was appointed commander in chief in Scotland in 1666, was sworn a privy councilor in 1667, entered Parliament in 1678, and in 1681 was commissioned to enroll the celebrated regiment of the Scots Greys.

Dalzel (dal.zel'), Andrew. b. at Kirkliston, Linlithgowshire, Scotland, Oct. 6, 1742; d. Dec. 8, 1806. Scottish classical scholar. He studied at the University of Edinburgh, was for some years tutor in the Lauderdale family, was appointed professor of Greek in Edinburgh University in 1779, assisted in the founding of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783, and became principal clerk to the General Assembly in 1789. He was the author of two collections of Greek miscellaneous pieces.

Dalziel (dal'zi.el), Davison Alexander. [Title, 1st Baron Dalziel of Wooler.] b. at London, Oct. 17, 1854; d. there, April 18, 1928. English newspaper proprietor and industrialist. Learning the newspaper business in the U.S., he returned (1893) to London and founded Dalziel's News Agency; in 1910 he purchased controlling shares in the Standard and the Evening Standard, London papers. He sold them in 1916 and then became active in the Pullman Car Company, International Sleeping Car Company, and similar enterprises. A Conservative member of Parliament (1910–27) for Brixton, he was made (1919) a baronet and became Baron Dalziel of Wooler in 1921.

Dalziel, James Henry. [Title, 1st Baron Dalziel of Kirkcaldy.] b. April 24, 1868; d. at Brighton, Sussex, England, July 15, 1935. English statesman and newspaper proprietor. Educated at Brogue Academy, Shrewsbury High School, and King's College, London, he began his newspaper career in the London office of the Scottish Leader, later joining the staff of Reynolds' Newspaper, a Sunday publication. He purchased (1917) the Pall Mall Gazette, a London evening paper, the Era, and the Country World. He also established the Sunday Evening Telegram and purchased (October, 1918), the entire business of United Newspapers, Ltd., which included the Daily Chronicle, Lloyd's Sunday News, and other papers. He served continuously as member of Parliament (1892–1921) for Kirkcaldy Burghs, and during World War I as chairman of a board in charge of German prisoners. Knighted in 1908, he was made privy councilor in 1912, a baronet in 1918, and a baron in 1921.

Dam (däm), Henrik. [Full name, Carl Peter Henrik Dam.] b. at Copenhagen, Feb. 21, 1895—. Danish biochemist. From 1920 to sometime in 1941 he was associated with his alma mater, the University of Copenhagen, as an instructor, assistant professor and associate professor in chemistry and biochemistry. Coming to America as a war refugee, he lectured in the U.S. and Canada, engaged in research at the University of Rochester, and in 1945 became an associate member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. His work has been largely in the fields of nutrition and vitamins, and his identification of vitamin K led to his receiving in 1943, jointly with Edward A. Doisy, the Nobel Prize in Physiology and Medicine.

Dama (dä'mä) or Bergdama (berg.dä'mä). [Also: Bergdamara, Damra, Damara, Taldama.] Khoisan-speaking people of S Africa, inhabiting the N part of South-West Africa. Their population is estimated at ab. 25,000 (by H. Bauman, R. Thurnwald, and D. Westerman, Völkerkunde von Afrika, 1940). They are true Negro in physical type, but they speak Nama, a Hottentot language. Dama servants are found among the Nama Hottentots, Dama herders among the Herero, and Dama hunters among the Bushmen. One group, the Bergdama, fled into the hills from the Nama and Herero and are nomadic hunters and gatherers whose culture resembles that of the Bushmen. Another group, the Taldama, have settled in the valleys, where they hunt and raise small numbers of goats and cattle. As among the Herero, every village has its sacred fire.

Damaged Souls. Biographical sketches by Gamaliel Bradford, published in 1923.

Dᵊman (dą.män'). See also Damão.

Daman (dä.män'). Region on the border of W Pakistan and Afghanistan, between the Indus River and the Suliman Mountains: sheep raising.

Damanhur (dä.män.hör'). [Ancient name, Hermopolis Parva.] City in NE Africa, in Lower Egypt, the capital of Beheira province, ab. 39 mi. SE of Alexandria on the Alexandria-Cairo railroad line. It occupies the site of ancient Egyptian and Roman cities. 84,983 (1947).

Damão (dą.mouñ'). [Also, Daman.] Seaport and settlement belonging to Portugal, on the W coast of India, ab. 100 mi. N of Bombay. It has a number of saltworks and much transit trade and shipping. It was acquired by Portugal in 1558. Pop. of settlement, 41,671 (1941).

Damar (dä.mär'). See Dhamar.

Damaraland (dam'ą.rą.land", dä.mä'rą-). Region in the N central part of the mandated territory of South-West Africa. British officials withdrew from the territory in 1880 (except from Walvis Bay), and it was annexed by Germany in 1884. The former German colony was given to the Union of South Africa in 1920 as a mandate; it is now a trust territory of the United Nations.

Damascene (dam'ą.sēn), Saint John. See Saint John Damascene.

Damascenus (dam.ą.sē'nus), Nicolaus. Latin name of Nicholas of Damascus.

Damascius (dą.mash'i.us). fl. 6th century A.D. Greek Neoplatonist philosopher. When the school of philosophy at Athens was closed by the emperor Justinian in 529, he, with other Neoplatonists, emigrated to Persia.

Damascus (dą.mas'kus). [Arabic, Dimisq, Esh Sham; French, Damas (dà.mä); Hebrew, Dameseq, Dammeseq; Assyrian, Dimasqu.] Capital and most important city of Syria, situated in the fertile valley of Coele-Syria, E of the Anti-Lebanon Mountains, on the edge of the Syrian Desert: believed to be the oldest city in the world that has been in continuous existence; the seat of the national university and teachers' college. It is served by two railways, many highways, and several air lines. On account of its beautiful fertile surroundings, its lofty position, and its richness in fresh water, Damascus has been praised in antiquity and in modern times as the "paradise of the earth," "the eye of the desert," and "the pearl of the Orient." It is traversed, from the eastern gate to the western, by one of the most famous streets in the world, the Street Called Straight. A city even before the Hittite period (c2000 B.C. et seq.), it became the capital of Syria, and a great part of the country was called by its name. In modern times it became notorious in Western eyes when more than 3,000 Christians were massacred there in 1860. In the Old Testament the name of Damascus occurs as early as the history of Abraham (Gen. xiv. 15, xv. 2). After the time of David, Damascus often came into sharp collision with Israel. In the New Testament Damascus is known especially from the history of Paul (Acts, ix). 286,310 (1943).

Damaskinos (ᴛʜä"mä.skē.nôs'), Archbishop. [Original name, Demetrios Papandreou.] b. at Dorvitsa, in Nafpactia, Greece, 1890; d. 1949. Greek divine. Studied theology and law at University of Athens; served as private in Balkan War (1912). Took orders (1917); archimandrite (1917); reorganized monastery of Pendeli and drafted charter for Mount Athos monasteries in 1918. He was metropolitan (bishop) of Corinth from 1922 to 1938. Founded general union of clergy (1919) and was its president (1919–22). Led relief work after Corinth earthquake of 1928, visiting the U.S. to raise funds; again visited the U.S. in 1930 as representative of the Ecumenical Patriarch to reconcile factions in the U.S. Greek Church. Elected archbishop of Athens, primate of all Greece in 1938, but rejected in favor of Chrysanthus by Metaxas and exiled to a monastery on the island of Salamis; recalled by the Axis occupation forces in 1941, who deposed Chrysanthus. In spite of owing his position to the Axis powers, he was nevertheless an active leader of resistance, organizing the EOChA (National Organization of Christian Solidarity), which was of great help to the guerrillas. He was arrested by the Nazis in 1944. Regent of Greece (1945–46); prime minister (1945); delegate to Council of Foreign Ministers at London (1945).

Damasus I (dam'ą.sus), Saint. b. c306; d. Dec. 11, 384. Pope from 366 to 384. He is now known to have been born of Spanish parents. His election was contested by the deacon Ursinus, who was subsequently banished by Pope Valentinian III. He opposed Apollinarists and Macedonians, whose errors were condemned in two synods at Rome, one in 368 and another in 369.

Damasus II. b. in Bavaria, Germany; d. Aug. 9, 1048. Pope from July 17 to August 9 in the year 1048; successor to Pope Benedict IX.

Damavand (dä'mä.vänd). See Demavend.

Damayanti (dä.mä.yän'tē). In Hindu legend, the wife of Nala, and the heroine of the tale of Nala and Damayanti, an episode of the Mahabharata.

Dambolo (dăm.bō'lō). See Dambulla.

Dambrauskas (dăm.brou'skäs), Aleksandras. [Pseudonym, Adomas Jakštas.] b. at Kuronys, Pagirys township, Lithuania, Sept. 8, 1860; d. at Kaunas, Lithuania, Feb. 19, 1938. Lithuanian poet, critic, journalist, and theologian. He was graduated (1884) from the Kaunas Roman Catholic Theological Seminary, and (1888) from the St. Petersburg Roman Catholic Theological Academy. As a chaplain of the Panevėžys high school he had forbidden the Catholic pupils to attend services at the Russian Orthodox Church and was deported into the interior of Russia (1889–95); professor (1902–06) at the St. Petersburg Theological Academy; president (1907–38) of the Saint Casimir book-publishing society at Kaunas; editor of the magazine Draugija (Society, 1907–14, 1920–22); pioneer of the Lithuanian Esperanto movement and editor (1922–26) of its magazine Litova stello; honorary professor of Kaunas University (Oct. 15, 1922); author of three books of poems, Dainu skrynele (Chest of Songs), Rudens aidai (Echoes of Autumn), and Lyrika (Lyrics), of a collection of essays on Lithuanian literature, and other works.

Dambulla (dăm.bůl'ą). [Also: Dambolo, Dambul (dăm.bōl').] Village in Ceylon, situated ab. 40 mi. N of Kandy: noted for its Buddhistic cave temples. It is a trading center served by two major highways.

Dame aux Camélias (dăm ō kà.mā.lyà), La. [Eng. trans., "The Lady of the Camellias."] Novel by the younger Alexandre Dumas, published in 1848 and dramatized by him in 1852. The English version of the play is called Camille, and that is the name of the heroine. The original French heroine is Marguerite Gautier.

Dame Blanche (dăm blänsh), La. [English title, The White Maid.] Comic opera in three acts by Boieldieu, with libretto by Scribe, first produced at Paris on Dec. 10, 1825.

Dame Christian Constance (or Custance) (dām kris'chan kon'stąns; kus'tąns). See Constance (or Custance), Dame Christian.

Dame du Lac (dăm dü lák). French name of the Lady of the Lake.

Dame Durden (dām dėr'den). See Durden, Dame.

Dame Pliant (plī'ant). See Pliant, Dame.

Damer (dā'mėr), Anne Seymour. b. 1749; d. May 28, 1828. English sculptor; daughter of Henry Seymour Conway. She executed in 1785 two allegorical heads, one representing the river Thames and the other the river Isis, for a bridge at Henly, near her father's house at Park Place, which have been much admired. She also produced a statue of George III and a bust of Nelson.

Dameron (dăm.rôń), Charles Émile. b. at Paris, 1848; d. there, Jan. 22, 1908. French painter; a pupil of Pelousse. His works are chiefly landscapes.

Dame Sirith (dām sir'ith). The only true fabliau (c1250) in English before Chaucer. Dame Sirith, a hypocritical bawd, succeeds in terrifying a young wife named Margeri into accepting as a lover the clerk Wilekin. Although the plot is highly improbable, the tale is skilfully told with an abundance of natural dialogue.

Damian (dā'mi.ən). Youth in Chaucer's "Merchant's Tale" in the Canterbury Tales. He languishes for and obtains the love of May, the young wife of old January.

Damian. Young squire in Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe, an aspirant for the holy Order of Templars.

Damian, Saint. See under Cosmas and Damian, Saints.

Damian, Saint Peter. [Italian, Pietro Damiani or Damiano; Latinized, Petrus Damianus.] b. at Ravenna, Italy, 1007; d. at Faenza, Italy, Feb. 22, 1072. Italian ecclesiastic. In 1035 he became a hermit at Fonte Avellano, near Gubbio in Umbria, and was soon head of all the surrounding hermits and monks. He was noted for his asceticism, and was influential as a reformer, condemning simony and marriage of the clergy. He was made bishop of Ostia and cardinal in 1058, and was the adviser and censor of a number of popes. His works include epistles, sermons, lives of saints, ascetic tracts, and poems. He was declared a Doctor of the Church in 1828.

Damien (dä.myaṅ; Anglicized, dā'mi.ən), Father. [Original name, Joseph de Veuster.] b. at Tremeloo, Belgium, Jan. 3, 1840; d. on the island of Molokai, Hawaii, April 15, 1888. Roman Catholic missionary who devoted his life (from 1873) to the welfare of the lepers in the leper colony on the island of Molokai, Hawaii. He himself contracted leprosy in 1885. Certain allegations against Father Damien by a minister evoked Robert Louis Stevenson's An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. Hyde (1890).

Damiens (dä.myaṅ), Robert François. b. near Arras, France, 1715; executed at Paris, March 28, 1757. French assassin who made an unsuccessful attempt upon the life of Louis XV, on Jan. 5, 1757. Damiens approached the king at Versailles, as he was entering his carriage, and succeeded in stabbing him. In punishment for this deed, his right hand was burned in a slow fire; his flesh was torn with pincers and burned with melted lead; resin, wax, and oil were poured upon the wounds; and he was torn to pieces by four horses.

Damietta (dam.i.et'ạ). [Arabic, Damiat, Dimyat, Dumiat.] City in NE Africa, in Lower Egypt, between the Damietta Branch of the Nile River and Lake Manzala, ab. 7 mi. from the Mediterranean Sea. It was besieged and taken by the Crusaders in 1218–19 and in 1249. The modern city produces textiles. Its harbor fills up with silt very rapidly and therefore is of little use as a port. 53,620 (1947).

Damietta Branch. Chief eastern mouth of the Nile River, Egypt.

Damiotti (dam.i.ot'i; Italian, dä.myôt'tē), Dr. Italian charlatan who exhibits the magic mirror in Sir Walter Scott's Aunt Margaret's Mirror.

Damiri (dä.mē'rē), al-. [Also: al-Demiri; full name, Kamal al-Din Mohammed ibn-Musa al-Damiri.] b. at Cairo, Egypt, c1345; d. there, 1405. Arab jurist and naturalist, author of a Life of Animals.

Damiron (dä.mē.rôṅ), Jean Philibert. b. at Belleville, Rhône, France, May 10, 1794; d. at Paris, Jan. 11, 1862. French writer on philosophy, professor of the history of philosophy in the Faculté des Lettres at Paris. He was the author of Essai sur l'histoire de la philosophie en France au XIXe siècle (1828), Cours de philosophie (1831), and Essai sur l'histoire de la philosophie en France au XVIIe siècle (1846).

Damis (dä.mēs). Impetuous youth in Molière's play Tartuffe; the son of Orgon.

Damkina (dám.kī'nạ). In Assyro-Babylonian mythology, wife of Ea, the god of the ocean, whose center of worship was at Eridu.

Dammam (dam.mam'). See under Saudi Arabia.

Damnation de Faust (dä.nä.syôṅ dẹ fōst), La. Opera or dramatic legend in four parts by Berlioz, first produced at the Paris Opéra-Comique on Dec. 6, 1846. The libretto, by the composer and Gandonnière, is based on Gérard de Nerval's treatment of Goethe's drama.

Damnation of Theron Ware (thir'ọn wār), The. Novel (1896) by the American novelist Harold Frederic. The time is the latter part of the 19th century; the setting is a predominantly Catholic town, Octavius, in New York state. The chief characters are Theron Ware, a Methodist minister, who wants to write a great book; Father Forbes, a Catholic priest; Ledsmar, an agnostic physician; and Celia Madden, whose beauty arouses the man in the minister. Ware's "damnation" comes when he is made to realize his own shortcomings, and causes him to give up the ministry. Regarded as Frederic's best work, it is called Illumination in the English edition.

Damnonium (dam.nō'ni.um), Promontorium. Latin name of Lizard, the.

Damocles (dam'ọ.klēz). fl. in the first half of the 4th century B.C. Syracusan, a courtier of Dionysius the elder. Cicero relates that Damocles, having extolled the good fortune of Dionysius, was invited by the tyrant to taste this royal felicity, and that, in the midst of a splendid banquet and all the luxury of the court, on looking up he beheld above his head a sword suspended by a single horse-hair.

Damocles. King of Arcadia in Robert Greene's Arcadia.

Damodar (dä'mọ.där). [Also, Damudar.] River in NE Union of India. It rises in the Nazaribagh Mountains, in Bihar, flows E and SE, and joins the Hooghly River below Calcutta. Length, ab. 368 mi.

Damoetas (dạ.mē'tạs). Herdsman in Theocritus and Vergil; hence, in pastoral poetry, a rustic. Sir Philip Sidney introduces in his Arcadia a foolish country clown by that name, which afterward seems to have become proverbial for folly.

Damon (dā'mọn). Goatherd in Vergil's Eclogues; hence, in pastoral poetry, a rustic.

Damon, Samuel Foster. b. at Newton, Mass., Feb. 22, 1893—. American teacher and poet. He received B.A. and M.A. degrees from Harvard and taught at Brown University. His books of verse include Astrolabe (1927) and Tilted Moon (1929), and he is the author of such critical works as William Blake; His Philosophy and Symbols (1924) and Amy Lowell (1935).

Damon and Phillida (fil'i.dạ). Pastoral farce by Colley Cibber, produced in 1729 and published anonymously the same year.

Damon and Pithias (pith'i.ạs). Play by Richard Edwards, printed in 1571. Its main subject is tragic, but it was nominally a comedy.

Damon and Pythias (pith'i.ạs). fl. in the first half of the 4th century B.C. Pythagorean philosophers of Syracuse, celebrated for their friendship. Pythias (or Phintias) plotted against the life of Dionysius I of Syracuse, and was condemned to die. As Pythias wished to arrange his affairs, Damon offered to place himself in the tyrant's hands as his substitute, and to die in his stead should he not return on the appointed day. At the last moment Pythias came back, and Dionysius was so struck by the fidelity of the friends that he pardoned the offender, and begged to be admitted into their fellowship.

Damon and Pythias. Tragedy by John Banim and Richard Lalor Sheil, produced in 1821.

Damophon (dam'ọ.fon). b. at Messene, Greece; fl. 2nd century B.C. Greek sculptor. He was one of the masters of Hellenic art, and his work combines the decorative richness of his period with something of the monumental simplicity of the Phidian epoch. He is known to have executed statues of gods in combined wood and marble for Messene and other Peloponnesian cities, and to have done much work in ivory and gold (it was he who restored the Zeus of Phidias after the ivory cracked during an earthquake).

Damoreau (dä.mo.rō), Laure Cinthie. [Stage name, Mademoiselle Cinti; maiden name, Montalant.] b. at Paris, Feb. 6, 1801; d. there, Feb. 25, 1863. French singer. In 1819 she made her first appearance as Cherubino in Le Nozze di Figaro at Paris. In 1822 she appeared at London, and in 1826 at the Grand Opéra, Paris. From this time she sang both in Europe and the U.S. with assured success until 1856, when she retired from the stage. In 1834 she was made professor of singing at the Paris Conservatory.

Dampier (dam'pir), William. b. at East Coker, Somersetshire, England, probably in June, 1652; d. at London, in March, 1715. English freebooter, explorer, and author. His seafaring life began in 1668, and until 1691 he led a life of the wildest adventure, as manager of a Jamaica plantation, as a logwood cutter in Mexico, but generally as a sailor on various piratical cruises, especially against the Spanish colonies on the western coast of America and elsewhere. During this time he circumnavigated the globe, having been marooned in the Far East and acting for a time as a semi-captive master gunner in a British fort. In 1697 he published his New Voyage Round the World, and this was supplemented by a second volume of travels in 1699. In 1699 as a member of the navy he was given command of a ship, the Roebuck, in which he again went round the world, exploring the coasts of Australia and New Guinea. He started again on a privateering cruise with two ships in 1703, but accomplished little, and his company was broken up; he reached England, after a third circumnavigation, in 1707. It was during this voyage that Alexander Selkirk, Robinson Crusoe's original, was marooned in the Juan Fernández islands. Subsequently he was pilot of the privateer Duke, and again went (1708–11) round the world, on this voyage rescuing Selkirk. He published a well-known Discourse on the Winds. The Dampier Archipelago near Australia, two sea passages near New Guinea, both called Dampier Strait, and Dampier Land in Australia were named for him.

Dampier Archipelago. Group of small rocky islands situated NW of Australia. They were discovered by William Dampier, the English explorer, and named for him.

Dampier Island. Former name of Karkar Island.

Dampier Land. Peninsular region in NW Australia, in Western Australia state, on the Timor Sea W of the mouth of the Fitzroy River. It was named for the English explorer William Dampier.

Dampierre (dän.pyer), Auguste Henri Marie Picot, Marquis de. b. at Paris, Aug. 19, 1756; d. near Vicogne, Nord, France, May 9, 1793. French revolutionary general. He distinguished himself in the campaigns of 1792–93, at Valmy, Jemappes, and Neerwinden, and died of wounds received in action.

Dampier Strait (dam'pir). Strait NW of New Guinea, in the SW Pacific, separating that island from Waigeo. It was named for the English explorer William Dampier. Length, ab. 100 mi.; width, ab. 35 mi.

Dampier Strait. Strait NE of the island of New Guinea, separating the trust territory of North-East New Guinea from New Britain. It was named for William Dampier, English explorer. Width, ab. 15 mi.

Damply (dam'pli), Widow. Character in David Garrick's play The Male Coquette.

Dampremy (dän.ṛe.mē). Town in S Belgium, in the province of Hainaut, situated on the Sambre River and th Brussels-Charleroi Canal, E of Mons. It has coal mines, iron foundries, and glassworks. 11,678 (1947).

Damra (däm'rä). See Dama.

Damrosch (dam'rosh; German, däm'rosh), Clara. [Married name, Mannes.] American musician; daughter of Leopold Damrosch (1832–85). She married David Mannes, with whom she conducted (1916 et seq.) the David Mannes Music School and with whom she gave sonata recitals at New York, Boston, and London (1913).

Damrosch, Frank Heino. b. at Breslau, June 22, 1859; d. at New York, 1937. Conductor of choral societies in and near New York, including the Oratorio Society, the Musical Art Society, and the People's Choral Union; son of Leopold Damrosch (1832–85). He was director (1905 et seq.) of the Institute of Musical Art at New York.

Damrosch, Leopold. b. at Posen (then in Germany, now Poznań, Poland), Oct. 22, 1832; d. at New York, Feb. 15, 1885. Conductor, solo violinist, and composer. He settled at New York in 1871, and was instrumental in the establishment of German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, where he conducted during the 1884–85 season. He was director of the Oratorio and Symphony societies and the Männergesangverein Arion, until his death.

Damrosch, Walter Johannes. b. at Breslau, Jan. 30, 1862; d. at New York, Dec. 22, 1950. Composer and conductor; son of Leopold Damrosch (1832–85). He was director (1885 et seq.) of the Oratorio Society, organizer (1894) of the Damrosch Opera Company, and conductor (1903–27) of the New York Symphony Society, with which he toured (1920) Europe; a founder of the Fontainebleau summer music school for American students; conducted (1925) first symphonic concert broadcast by radio; appointed (1927) musical counsel to the National Broadcasting Company. He composed the operas The Scarlet Letter (1894), Cyrano de Bergerac (1913), and The Man without a Country (1937); and choral works including Manila Te Deum (1899) and Abraham Lincoln Song (1936).

Damsel of Brittany. See Eleanor of Brittany.

Damsel of Darien (dăr'i.ẹn), The. Historical romance by William Gilmore Simms, published in 1839.

Damudar (dä'mu.där). See Damodar.

Damuras (dä.mö'räs). See Tamyras.

D'Amville (dam'vil). Atheist in Cyril Tourneur's play The Atheist's Tragedy.

Dan (dan). See also Dan River.

Dan. In the Bible, a son of Jacob by Bilhah, and founder of the tribe of Dan, one of the 12 tribes of Israel. Gen. xxx. 6.

Dan. Hebrew tribe. The portion allotted to the Danites, as described in Josh. xix., was the small but fertile hilly tract west of Benjamin and northwest of Judah to the sea, including the cities of Jaffa, Ekron, Gathrimmon, and others. But though the tribe of Dan was originally one of the strongest numerically, counting 62,000 to 64,000, it was not equal to the task of expelling the Ammonites, and later the Philistines, from that territory, and only for a time prevailed with the help of Ephraim and Judah. Consequently part of the tribe migrated to the extreme north of the country, and conquered the city of Laish, henceforth called Dan. That part which remained in the south, from which the hero Samson descended, disappeared from history, and seems to have been absorbed by the tribe of Judah.

Dan. [Older name, Laish.] In Biblical geography, a city situated on the slopes of Mount Hermon, not far from the modern Baniyas (still called Tel-el-Kadi, "hill of the Judge"), and often mentioned in the Old Testament as the most northern landmark of Palestine, in the formula "from Dan to Beersheba." It was named Dan after its capture by the Danites. It contained a sanctuary with an image the exact nature of which is not known. At the division of the kingdom Jeroboam put up there one of the golden calves worshiped at that time. It is first mentioned in Gen. xiv. 14 as the place at which Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and his four allies were overthrown and defeated by Abraham. The occurrence in this account of the name which was given to the place many centuries later is variously explained. If the Dan of Gen. xiv. is identical with that of Judges, xviii., and if the account of Gen. xiv. is authentic, the name Dan may have been later inserted in the manuscripts for Laish, when the latter was superseded by the former.

Dan (dän). [Also: Dã, Diabouba, Diafoba, Ge, Geme, Gio, Mebe, Ngere, Sa, Samia.] Mande-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting W Ivory Coast and C Liberia. Their population is estimated at ab. 100,000 (by C. Kjersmeier, Afrikanske Negerskulpturer). Culturally they resemble the Kpelle, but the boys' and girls' initiation schools are known as Bo and Bwo. Their carved wooden masks are highly regarded in the field of African art. They are not to be confused with the Dian of E Ivory Coast.

Dana (dā'na), Charles Anderson. b. at Hinsdale, N.H., Aug. 8, 1819; d. at West Island, near Glen Cove, Long Island, N.Y., Oct. 17, 1897. American newspaper editor, noted for his direction of the New York Sun. He attended Harvard and was a member (c1841–46) of the experimental Brook Farm colony. After working as the assistant editor of the Boston Daily Chronotype, he became a reporter, covering the 1848 European revolutions, and then was named city editor of the New York Tribune, later serving as its managing editor (1849–62). Resigning in 1862, he joined the staff of the war department and for a time was special commissioner at Grant's headquarters in the west, suggesting to Secretary of War Stanton that Grant be made supreme commander of the Union forces; as assistant secretary of war (1864–65), he performed valuable service as a field observer with the Union army. He resigned in 1865, subsequently edited the Republican at Chicago, and became part proprietor and editor (1868) of the New York Sun, which soon became known for its news style stressing "human interest." Dana fought against the corruption of the Tweed machine and, after supporting Grant in the 1868 campaign, against the Grant administration's corruption. In his insistence upon the vivid and the concise, Dana was a pioneer of modern news editing. Among the well-known writers who worked under him were Richard Harding Davis, David Graham Phillips, and Jacob Riis. He compiled The Household Book of Poetry (1857), was coeditor of the American Cyclopaedia (1858 et seq.) and wrote The Art of Newspaper Making (1895), Recollections of the Civil War (1898), and Eastern Journeys (1898).

Dana, Charles Loomis. b. at Woodstock, Vt., March 25, 1852; d. at Harmon, N.Y., Dec. 12, 1935. American pathologist, professor of nervous diseases in the Cornell Medical College from 1899. He published A Text-book of Nervous Diseases and Psychiatry (1892).

Dana, Edward Salisbury. b. at New Haven, Conn., Nov. 16, 1849; d. June 16, 1935. American mineralogist and physicist; son of James Dwight Dana. He was assistant professor of natural philosophy at Yale University until 1890, when he became professor of physics.

Dana, Francis. b. at Charlestown, Mass., June 13, 1743; d. April 25, 1811. American diplomat, jurist, and Revolutionary patriot; son of Richard Dana (1700–72). Graduated (1762) from Harvard, he received his M.A. (1765) there and in 1767 was admitted to the bar. Chosen (1774) as a Cambridge delegate to the first provincial congress of Massachusetts, he instead went to England to sound out sentiment there concerning reconciliation. He returned (1776) a convinced American patriot and served (1776–80) as a member of the Massachusetts Council, a delegate (selected in 1776) to the Continental Congress, and in 1779 went to France as secretary of the legation led by John Adams. He served (1780–83) as minister to Russia, although he was not recognized as such by the Russian government. He was appointed (1785) an associate justice of the Massachusetts supreme court, and was its chief justice from 1791 to 1806.

Dana, James Dwight. b. at Utica, N.Y., Feb. 12, 1813; d. at New Haven, Conn., April 14, 1895. American geologist and mineralogist, professor at Yale University from 1850. He was graduated from Yale in 1833, traveled in the Mediterranean as mathematical instructor of midshipmen in the U.S. navy (1833–35), was assistant to Silliman at Yale (1835–38), and took part in the Wilkes exploring expedition (1838–42). His important Reports of the expedition (on geology, corals, and crustaceans) were published between 1846 and 1854. His works include System of Mineralogy (1837), Manual of Geology (1862), Text Book of Geology for Schools and Academies (1864), Corals and Coral Islands (1872), and Characteristics of Volcanoes (1890).

Dana, John Cotton. b. at Woodstock, Vt., Aug. 19, 1856; d. at New York, July 21, 1929. American librarian, at various times head of the Denver Public Library (1889–98), the Springfield, Mass., City Library (1898–1902), and the Newark, N.J., Public Library (1902–29). He made the Newark library a popular institution, and helped to found (1909) the Newark Museum Association, becoming the museum's director. He was the author of Library Primer (1896) and Libraries, Addresses and Essays (1916).

Dana, Paul. b. at New York, Aug. 20, 1852; d. April 7, 1930. American editor; son of Charles Anderson Dana (1819–97). He was associated (1890 et seq.) with the New York Sun, of which his father was editor, and served (1897–1903) as editor of the Sun.

Dana, Richard. b. at Cambridge, Mass., June 26, 1700; d. May 17, 1772. American lawyer and patriot. He was a prominent member of the Boston bar, and, as a supporter of the popular cause, frequently presided over the Boston town meetings between 1763 and 1772, and otherwise took a prominent part in the movements which preceded the Revolutionary War.

Dana, Richard Henry. b. at Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 15, 1787; d. at Boston, Feb. 2, 1879. American poet and essayist; son of Francis Dana (1743–1811) and father of Richard Henry Dana (1815–82).

Dana, Richard Henry. b. at Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 1, 1815; d. at Rome, Jan. 6, 1882. American writer and lawyer, noted as the author of Two Years Before the Mast (1840); son of Richard Henry Dana (1787–1879). Compelled to leave Harvard because of impaired eyesight, he went to sea as a common sailor in 1834, and upon his return in 1836 resumed his studies at Harvard, graduating in 1837. He was an instructor in elocution (1839–40) at Harvard, was admitted to the bar in 1840, and began specializing in admiralty cases. His record of his sea adventures was an immediate success in the U.S. and became popular abroad. He also wrote a maritime law manual, The Seaman's Friend (1841), which became a standard work. He was one of the founders (1848) of the Free-Soil Party. He served as U.S. attorney (1861–66) for the district of Massachusetts, appeared as counsel (1867–68) for the U.S. in the treason proceedings against Jefferson Davis, and was senior counsel (1877) for the U.S. at the fisheries commission at Halifax. He was a lecturer (1866–68) in the Harvard Law School, wrote To Cuba and Back (1859), and brought out an edition of Wheaton's Elements of International Law (1866).

Dana, Richard Henry. b. at Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 3, 1851; d. Dec. 16, 1931. American lawyer; son of Richard Henry Dana (1815–82). He was the founder (1878–79) of the Associated Charities of Boston, originator (1884) of the Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Act, drafted (1888) the first Australian Ballot Act to be made law in the U.S., and was editor (1889–92) of the Civil Service Record. Author of Double Taxation in Massachusetts (1895) and Hospitable England in the Seventies (1921).

Dana, Samuel Luther. b. at Amherst, N.H., July 11, 1795; d. at Lowell, Mass., March 11, 1868. American chemist and writer on agricultural chemistry. He was employed as chemist to the Merrimac Print Works at Lowell upward of 30 years, and invented a new method of bleaching cotton, which was generally adopted.

Dana, William Parsons Winchester. b. at Boston, Feb. 18, 1833; d. April 8, 1927. American painter. In his youth he went to sea, but as early as 1854 he was enrolled at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris, and he continued in that city, studying also with individual instructors, until 1862. In the latter year he opened a studio at New York, but in 1870 he went abroad, and eventually made his home in England. His paintings are mostly either marine or genre pieces, and he received the first prize for marine paintings at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in 1881. He also won awards at international expositions at Paris in 1878 and 1889. From 1867 he was an academician of the National Academy of Design. Examples of his work are to be seen in various American galleries, including the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia.

Dana Coman (kō'mạn), Mount. See Coman, Mount.

Danaë (dan'ạ̄.ē). In Greek mythology, the daughter of Acrisius of Argos and mother of Perseus by Zeus, who visited her, while she was shut up in a brazen tower by her father, in the form of a shower of gold. She was shut up with her child in a chest, thrown into the sea, and carried by the waves to the island of Seriphos. From various difficulties she was in the end rescued by Perseus and brought back to Greece.

Danaë. Subject of a number of famous paintings of the 16th and 17th centuries. Among them are: 1. A painting by Rembrandt, in the Hermitage Museum at Leningrad. Danaë lies, undraped, on a bed covered with green silk; her unloosed girdle has fallen to the floor. An old woman is in attendance behind the curtains. 2. A painting by Correggio, in the Borghese Gallery at Rome. She reclines smiling on her couch, while Cupid before her holds out a fold of the drapery over her knees to catch the golden shower. 3. A painting by Titian in the Museo Nazionale at Naples, painted for the grandson of Pope Paul III. Danaë reclines on a couch while the golden shower falls upon her. 4. A painting by Titian, in the Imperial Gallery at Vienna, one of a number which he made on this subject because of the popularity of the Naples Danaë. Danaë lies, nude, on a cushioned couch; the golden rain falls from a cloud over her, in which the face and hand of Jupiter appear. An old woman seeks to catch some of the shower in a dish.

Danai (dan'ạ̄.ī). [Also, Danaoi.] In ancient Greek history, the Argives; used by Homer to denote the Greeks generally.

Danaïdes (dạ.nā'i.dēz). In Greek legend, the 50 daughters of Danaus, by whose command they slew their husbands. According to later writers, they were condemned in Hades to pour water into sieves.

Danakil (dan'a.kil). [Also: Afar Country, Country of the Danakil.] Region in E Africa, in Ethiopia, lying behind (W of) southern Eritrea and French Somaliland; formerly it extended to the Red Sea coast.

Danakil. [Also: Afar, Afara, Dankali.] Cushitic-speaking people of NE Africa, inhabiting C and S Eritrea, N French Somaliland, and NE Ethiopia, in a triangular region NE of Addis Ababa and between Asmara and Djibouti. Their population is estimated at ab. 250,000 (by E. Cerulli, cited in M. A. Bryan, The Distribution of the Semitic and Cushitic Languages of Africa, 1947). They are Mohammedans, and are divided into numerous nomadic bands ruled by independent chiefs. They are pastoralists, herding cattle and camels, and their principal food is milk. They are predominantly Caucasoid in physical type, although their skin is dark.

Danao (dä.nä'ō). Town in the E part of Cebu, Philippine Islands: seaport. 3,100 (1948).

Danao River. River in Negros Occidental Province, Negros, Philippine Islands.

Danapris (da.nap'ris). An ancient name of the Dnieper.

Danastris (da.nas'tris). An ancient name of the Dniester.

Danaus (dan'ā.us). In Greek legend, a son of Belus and grandson of Poseidon, the founder of Argos, and ancestor of the Danai. He was the brother of Aegyptus.

Danbury (dan'ber''i, -bėr.i). City in SW Connecticut, in Fairfield County, on the Still River, ab. 52 mi. NE of New York: one of the leading hat-manufacturing cities of the U.S., principally of felt hats. It is important for its contribution to labor history through the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the case of Loewe v. Lawlor (1908), popularly known as the Danbury Hatters' Case. Settled in 1684, it was burned by the British in 1777. It is the site of a popular annual county fair in September and October. 22,067 (1950).

Danbury Hatters' Case. See Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274 (1908).

"Danbury News Man." See Bailey, James Montgomery.

Danby (dan'bi), 1st Earl of. A title of Osborne, Sir Thomas.

Danby, Francis. b. at Wexford(?), Ireland, Nov. 16, 1793; d. at Exmouth, England, Feb., 1861. English historical and landscape painter.

Dance (dâns), George. b. 1700; d. 1768. English architect, designer of the Mansion House at London, in 1739; father of George Dance (1741–1825) and Sir Nathaniel Dance-Holland (1734–1811).

Dance, George. b. 1741; d. at London, Jan. 14, 1825. English architect and artist; son of George Dance (1700–68) and brother of Sir Nathaniel Dance-Holland (1734–1811). He designed Newgate Prison at London, in 1770.

Dance-Holland (dâns'hol'and), Sir Nathaniel. b. 1734; d. near Winchester, England, Oct. 15, 1811. English painter; son of George Dance (1700–68) and brother of George Dance (1741–1825).

Dance of Death. [Also, Dance of Macaber; French, Danse Macabre; Latin, Chorea Machabaeorum.] Originally, a kind of morality or allegorical representation intended to remind the living of the power of death. It originated in the 14th century in Germany, and consisted of dialogues between Death and a number of typical followers, which were acted in or near churches by the religious orders. Soon after, it was repeated in France. It became extraordinarily popular, and was treated in every possible way, in pictures, bas-reliefs, tapestry, and other forms. Death is made grotesque and a sort of "horrid Harlequin," a skeleton dancer or musician playing for dancing, leading all mankind. A dramatic poem which grew out of this was imitated in Spain in 1400 as La Danza general de los muertos. In 1425 the French, having illustrated each verse, had the whole series painted on the wall of the churchyard of the Monastery of the Innocents, where they acted the drama. In 1430 the poem and pictures were produced at London, and not long after at Salisbury (1460), Wortley Hall in Gloucestershire, and other places. In Germany it attained its greatest popularity. The drama was acted until about the middle of the 15th century, when the pictures became the main point of interest. A picture of this kind was painted in the Marienkirche at Lübeck, Germany, and one was on the cloister wall of Klingenthal, a convent at Basel, Switzerland, both of the 14th century; the latter disappeared in 1805. One in the Campo Santo at Pisa has been ascribed to Orcagna. In the reign of Henry VII a processional Dance of Death was painted around the cloisters of old Saint Paul's at London. The younger Hans Holbein left 53 sketches for engraving; these he called Imagines Mortis; they are, however, independent, and do not represent a dance. Lydgate wrote a metrical translation of the poem for the chapter of Saint Paul's, to be placed under the pictures in the cloister. Various explanations of the name Macaber or Macabre have been given.

Dance of Death, The. Satirical drama in verse (1933) by Wystan Hugh Auden. The theme of the play, as stated by an announcer at the opening, is the decline and the final death of the British middle class. The unusual nature of the work may be suggested by the fact that it closes with an announcement, made by Karl Marx, that the death has taken place. The title presumably derives from the German morality plays of the Middle Ages and from the famous 16th-century woodcuts designed by the younger Hans Holbein.

Dance of Life, The. Philosophical prose work (1923) by Havelock Ellis. The highly original theme of the work, regarded as his most popular one, is that life and art are identical, and that life, when it reaches its highest development, comes closest to resembling the art of dancing. Dancing, thinking, writing, religion, and morals, all parts of the "dance," are taken up in separate chapters. The idealistic conclusion is the author's belief, or hope, that the world will be saved when man, through his esthetic impulse, discovers the secret of finding pleasure and enjoyment in things without actually owning or possessing them.

Dance of Macabre. Short didactic poem by John Lydgate. It is in 24 quatrains and was written to accompany illustrations. It was printed in 1554, at the end of Tottell's edition of Lydgate's Falls of Princes, in 1638 in Dugdale's St. Paul's, and in 1794 in the Douce edition of the younger Hans Holbein's Dance of Death woodcuts. It was also published in 1846 in Holbein's Alphabet of Death, edited by the French scholar Montaiglon. One of his minor works, it has suffered the fate of all Lydgate's poetry, long or short: it is no longer read.

Dance to Death, The. Poetic tragedy (1882) by Emma Lazarus. It was published in her Songs of a Semite. Although the play deals with anti-Semitism in 12th-century Germany, it is also a passionate attack on Russian anti-Semitism in the 19th century, as practiced under the czars, and was inspired by the anti-Jewish outbreaks of 1881–82.

"Dancing Chancellor." Nickname of Hatton, Sir Christopher.

Dancla (dän.klä), Jean Charles. b. at Bagnères-de-Bigorre, France, Dec. 19, 1817; d. at Tunis, Tunisia, Nov. 8, 1907. French composer and violinist. He was professor (1857 et seq.) at the Paris Conservatory, and organized and played in a chamber music quartet. His compositions include violin concertos and études, symphonies, and quartets. He wrote Les Compositeurs chefs d'orchestre (1873), Miscellanées musicales (1876), and Notes et souvenirs (1893).

D'Ancona (däng.kō'nä), Alessandro. See Ancona, Alessandro d'.

Dancourt (dän.kör), Florent Carton. b. at Fontainebleau, France, Nov. 1, 1661; d. at Courcelles-le-Roi, in Berry, France, Dec. 7, 1725. French comedian and playwright. His plays deal almost exclusively with the middle class. Among them are Le Chevalier à la mode (1687), Les Bourgeoises de qualité (1700), and Les Trois Cousins (1700).

Dandelion Days. Autobiographical novel by Henry Williamson, published in 1922. It is the second volume of a tetralogy under the general title The Flax of Dream.

Dandhu Panth (dun'dö punt'). Original name of Nana Sahib.

Dandie Dinmont (dan'di din'mont). See Dinmont, Dandie.

Dandin (dän.dañ), Perrin. Name given to an ignorant and preposterous judge in Jean Baptiste Racine's Les Plaideurs and in La Fontaine's Fables. He is taken from Rabelais's Perrin Dendin.

Dandolo (dän'dō.lō), Andrea. b. 1310; d. Oct. 7, 1354. Doge of Venice (1343–54). He joined (1343) the Crusade proclaimed by Clement VI against the Turks, which ended in a peace advantageous to Venice in 1346. He waged almost continuous war with Genoa (1348–54). He wrote Chronicon Venetum, a Latin chronicle of Venice, which terminates with the year 1339.

Dandolo, Enrico. b. at Venice, c1108; d. at Constantinople, June 14, 1205. Doge of Venice (1192–1205). He was the leader of the Venetians and Crusaders in the capture of Constantinople (1203 and 1204). He went as ambassador to the Byzantine court in 1173, and was blinded by order of the emperor Manuel.

Dandolo, Count Vincenzo. b. at Venice, Oct. 26, 1758; d. there, Dec. 13, 1819. Italian chemist and economist. He wrote Fondamenti della fisico-chimica (1796), Discorsi sulla pastorizia . . . (1806), and others.

Dandurand (dăn.dü.răn), Raoul. b. at Montreal, Canada, 1861; d. at Ottawa, Canada, March 11, 1942. Canadian lawyer and politician and leader of the Canadian Liberal Party. Educated at Montreal College and Laval University, he was elected (1898) to the Canadian senate, served as speaker of the senate (1905–09) and member of the privy council (1909) and as minister without portfolio (1921–26, 1926–30) in the Dominion cabinet, was appointed Canadian representative (1924) to the League of Nations, president of the sixth League assembly (1925) and delegate to the League council (1927), and was appointed (1941) imperial privy councilor.

Dane (dān), Clemence. [Pseudonym of Winifred Ashton.] English novelist and playwright. Her novels include Regiment of Women (1917), Legend (1919), Wandering Stars (1924), The Babyons (1928), Broome Stages (1931), The Moon Is Feminine (1938), The Arrogant History of White Ben (1939), and He Brings Great News (1946); her plays, A Bill of Divorcement (1921), Will Shakespeare (1921), The Way Things Happen (1923), Naboth's Vineyard (1925), Granite (1926), Mariners (1926), Moonlight Is Silver (1934), Cousin Muriel (1940), and Call Home the Heart (1947); her essays, The Women's Side (1927) and Tradition and Hugh Walpole (1930). She edited the anthologies The Shelter Book (1939) and The Nelson Touch (1942).

Dane, Mrs. Wayward heroine of Henry Arthur Jones's problem play Mrs. Dane's Defence (1900). Mrs. Dane, a woman with a past, wishes to marry young Carteret, but under a merciless cross-examination by his foster father, Sir Daniel, she is forced to confess to an affair she had on the Continent. Like another unfortunate heroine of modern drama, Pinero's Paula Tanqueray, she finds out, too late, that a woman cannot live down her past.

Dane, Nathan. b. at Ipswich, Mass., Dec. 29, 1752; d. at Beverley, Mass., Feb. 15, 1835. American jurist. He drafted the ordinance relating to the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River in 1786–87, and published Abridgment and Digest of American Law (1823–29).

Danegeld (dān'geld). English land tax during the late 10th and until the middle 12th century, originally levied to appease Danish raiders. Unable effectively to protect England against the plundering and ravaging Danes, Norwegians, and Swedes, King Ethelred II bought them off by paying tribute money, raised by taxation on land, in 991 and on four other occasions up to 1012. With the accession (1016) of the Danish King Canute to the English throne, the tax was no longer needed for its original purpose, but the name continued to be applied to taxes levied from time to time for purposes of defense. In the reign of Edward the Confessor the Danegeld fell into disuse, but William the Conqueror seized upon it as a means of raising revenue, and it was partly to facilitate this levy that the Domesday Book came into existence. Under the Norman regime taxes continued to be raised under the name of Danegeld until 1163, after which the designation disappears from the records. Even before the first English payment of Danegeld, similar means were sometimes used to buy off Danish raiders in France.

Danelaw (dān'lô). [Also: Danelage, Danelagh; Old English, Dena Lagu.] That part of England where the Danish influence was paramount during the 9th and 10th centuries. It corresponded to the modern counties of Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire, Northamptonshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, and Hertfordshire.

Dänemark (dā'nę.märk). German name of Denmark.

Danemora (dä.nę.mö'rä). See Dannemora, Sweden.

Danenhower (dan'ęn.hou.ėr), John Wilson. b. at Chicago, Sept. 30, 1849; committed suicide at Annapolis, Md., April 20, 1887. American naval officer and arctic explorer. A graduate (1870) of the U.S. Naval Academy, he was commissioned lieutenant in 1879 and joined Captain G. W. De Long's arctic expedition as executive officer on the Jeannette, which became wedged in an ice pack and was crushed two years later. Survivors made their way to the mouth of the Lena River where a few were rescued. Lieutenant Danenhower's Narrative of the Jeannette (1882) describes his experiences.

Danes (dānz). Natives of Denmark. They were first described early in the 6th century as on the W coast of the Chersonesus Cimbrica or Cimbrian peninsula (now called Jutland), in the territory formerly occupied by the Heruli, whither, according to Jordanes, they had come from Scandinavia. The Old Danish language is preserved in numerous runic inscriptions, the oldest of which date from the Viking age (700–1050), and in literature from the 13th century. Three principal dialectal groups are distinguished, which are typically represented by the dialects of Skåne (Scania) in southern Sweden, Zealand, and Jutland. The Zealand dialect became the literary form at about the time of the Reformation, and it is from this period that modern Danish dates.

Danev (dä'nef), Stoyan. b. at Shumen, Bulgaria, 1858; d. 1940. Bulgarian statesman and jurist. He served (1901–03, 1913) as prime minister and minister of foreign affairs during the critical years before World War I, and was professor of international law at the University of Sofia.

Danewerk (dän'ę.verk). [Danish, Dannevirke.] Ancient intrenchment or wall erected by King Göttrik in the 9th century as a protection of Denmark against invasion from the S. It extended across what is now Schleswig-Holstein from the Schlei (or Sli) inlet to the Treene River, a tributary of the Eider. It was strengthened in the 10th century and later, and was captured from the Danes by the Prussians April 23, 1848.

Danforth (dan'fōrth, -fôrth), Moseley Isaac. b. at Hartford, Conn., Dec. 11, 1800; d. at New York City, Jan. 19, 1862. American painter and engraver. In 1818 he was apprenticed to a Hartford engraver. Quickly mastering the technique of the art, he set up in business for himself at New Haven in 1821, and shortly thereafter moved to New York, where he became a founding member of the National Academy of Design in 1826. In 1827 he went to England and remained there ten years, associating with people of eminence in the arts while he studied painting and continued to perfect his technique as an engraver. He also achieved a considerable mastery of water colors. His most notable and important achievement, however, was the execution of a series of excellent drawings of the Elgin Marbles. After his return to America, while he continued to paint and to do portrait engraving, he became engrossed chiefly in banknote engraving as a business. About 1850 he became a member of the firm of Danforth, Underwood and Company, which in 1858 was absorbed into the American Banknote Company, and of this concern he was vice-president until his death.

Dangeau (dăn.zhō), Marquis de. [Title of Philippe de Courcillon.] French soldier, aide-de-camp to Louis XIV, whom he attended in all his campaigns. He wrote a voluminous journal, covering the period from 1684 to 1720, and giving in minute detail the events and manners of the court of Louis.

Danger (dăn.zhā). See Latude, Jean Henry.

Dangla Range (däng'lä'). See Tanglha Range.

Dangle (dang'gl). Amateur critic, in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's farce The Critic, whose peculiarities are agreeably described by his wife in the first scene; supposed to be a satire on Thomas Vaughan, a playwright.

Dangs (dängz), the. Group of 14 native states in W central Union of India, now part of Bombay state.

Dania (dā'ni.ą). City in Florida, in Broward County, N of Miami: center of a tomato-producing area. It is near the Seminole Indian Reservation. 4,540 (1950).

Danican (dă.nē.kăn), François André. See Philidor.

Daniel (dan'yẹl). [Babylonian, Belteshazzar.] One of the prophets of the Old Testament. According to the book which bears his name, he (probably being of royal or noble descent) was carried off captive to Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim (605 B.C.), and with three other Israelitish youths of noble blood, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, was instructed in the language and learning of the Babylonians and educated for the king's service. They refrained from defiling themselves by partaking of the food of the king. Daniel was especially gifted with "understanding in all visions and dreams," and successfully exercised this gift by interpreting disquieting dreams of Nebuchadnezzar, and the mysterious writing on the wall which disturbed the revelry of Belshazzar (Dan. v. 5). At the accession of Darius he was made "one of the three presidents" of the empire. He was divinely delivered from the lion's den into which he was thrown for refusing to obey a decree of the king forbidding anyone except the king to ask a petition of God or man for 30 days. He was still prosperous under Cyrus. In the third year of Cyrus he saw the vision on the bank of the Tigris, and this is the last mention of him in the Old Testament. He is referred to by Ezekiel as a pattern of righteousness and wisdom. In addition to his Hebrew name a Babylonian one, Belteshazzar, was given him. Legends about him grew up, as in the apocryphal additions to the Biblical book which bears his name, Bel and the Dragon, the story of Susanna and Daniel. According to Mohammedan tradition, Daniel returned to Palestine, where he held the government of Syria, and finally died at Susa, where his supposed tomb is still shown and is visited by crowds of pilgrims.

Daniel. Last of a series of three poems attributed to the "school of Caedmon." The first two poems are Genesis and Exodus.

Daniel (dă.nyel), Saint Antoine. [Also, Saint Antony Daniel.] b. at Dieppe, France, May 27, 1600 or 1601; d. at Teanaostae, Ontario, Canada, July 4, 1648. One of the Jesuit martyrs of North America. Joining the Society of Jesus in 1621, he accompanied Samuel de Champlain to Quebec in 1633, and served as a teacher in a school for Indian boys in that settlement for some two years before going to the mission at Ihonatiria, among the Hurons, where he was to spend the rest of his life. On July 4, 1648, an Iroquois war-party attacked the mission while the Huron warriors were away. Father Daniel, having shepherded the women and children into the chapel, where he pronounced general absolution and baptized a number of catechumens, faced the Iroquois alone, and died pierced by many arrows. He was beatified by the Roman Catholic Church in 1925 and canonized in 1930. His feast is celebrated in the Jesuit order on March 16, and in the Church at large on September 26.

Daniel, Arnaud (or Arnault or Arnaut or Arnauto). fl. 12th century. French troubadour, called "gran maestro d'amore" ("great master of love") by Petrarch. His poetic innovations were much admired and his original sestina stanzaic pattern served as a model to Dante.

Daniel (dan'yẹl), Book of. Book which in the English Bible, as in all other translations, follows Ezekiel as the fourth of the great prophets, while in the original Hebrew Bible it has its place in the third division of the Canon, the Hagiographa. It is generally divided into two parts. The first, chapters i.-vi., contains historical incidents; the second, chapters vii.-xii., visions. Chapters ii. 4-vii., inclusive, are written in Aramaic, the rest in Hebrew. The authenticity and historical character of the book were early called in question. Porphyry, in his discourses against the Christians, and most modern critics relegate the book in its present shape, on historical and linguistic grounds, to the period of the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes (c167 B.C.). The writer exhibits a familiarity with the history of that period, while his historical references to the time in which Daniel is supposed to have lived are vague and in many instances incorrect; as, for instance, that Nebuchadnezzar was the father of Belshazzar, that the latter was the last Babylonian king, and that Darius, and not Cyrus, was the successor of Nabonidus in the rule over Babylonia. The language of the book contains numerous Persian and Greek words which point to a time when these empires had long been established. The object of the author may have been to encourage his people to constancy and faithfulness in the desperate struggle for their country and faith, showing them how the constancy and fidelity of Daniel and his three companions were rewarded, and revealing to them the glorious future which is to follow their present sufferings. This, however, does not exclude a historical basis of the narratives contained in the book; and it is not impossible that a Daniel similar to the one described in the book not only existed during the exile, but that also some written materials were extant from him, which the author of the 2nd century cast, together with the traditions, into a literary form, with a special view to the circumstances of his own time.

Daniel (dă.nyel), Gabriel. b. at Rouen, France, Feb. 8, 1649; d. at Paris, June 23, 1728. French Jesuit historian and theologian, author of Histoire de France (1713).

Daniel (dă'nē.el), Hermann Adalbert. b. at Köthen, Germany, Nov. 18, 1812; d. at Leipzig, Germany, Sept. 13, 1871. German geographer and theologian. He wrote Thesaurus hymnologicus (1841–56), Lehrbuch der Geographie (1845), and others.

Daniel (dan'yel), John Moncure. b. in Stafford County, Va., Oct. 24, 1825; d. at Richmond, Va., March 30, 1865. American journalist and diplomat. He edited the Southern Planter and was editor (1847–53, 1861–65) of the Richmond Examiner. He was appointed U.S. representative to Sardinia, where he remained until South Carolina seceded. He approved secession, advocated military conscription, and conducted a vigorous campaign against Jefferson Davis's administration. During the Civil War he served briefly in the Confederate army.

Daniel, Lewis C. b. at New York, Oct. 23, 1901—. American painter, etcher, and illustrator, best known for his illustrations of books and poems. He was a pupil at the National Academy of Design and the Art Students League of New York and worked (1935–37) at the MacDowell Colony on a fellowship. The Whitney Museum, New York Public Library, Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris), Library of Congress, and Cooper Union Art School have collected his works, among which are He That Is without Sin Among You and Song of the Open Road. He has also illustrated Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass, James Joyce's Ulysses, and The Gospel of Saint John, and has contributed illustrations to many magazines.

Daniel, Peter Vivian. b. in Stafford County, Va., April 24, 1784; d. at Richmond, Va., May 31, 1860. American jurist, associate justice (1841–60) of the U.S. Supreme Court. He was elected to the Virginia legislature (1809), and served as a member (1812–35) of the privy council of Virginia and during his latter years in office as lieutenant governor and ex-officio chairman of the council. He was appointed (1836) judge of the U.S. district court of Virginia and elevated (1841) by Van Buren to the high court.

Daniel, Samuel. b. near Taunton, Somersetshire, England, 1562; d. at Beckington, Wiltshire, England, Oct. 14, 1619. English poet and dramatist. He was educated at Oxford and was for a time tutor to William Herbert, a nephew of Sir Philip Sidney. In 1592 he issued a volume containing Delia, one of the first of the Elizabethan sonnet sequences and his best-known work, and The Complaint of Rosamond, a narrative poem. Cleopatra (1594) was an attempt at Senecan tragedy, as was Philotas (1605). His poem Musophilis, or A General Defence of Learning (1599) upholds poetry as part of the background of the courtier or the warrior. He wrote a Defense of Rime (1603) in answer to Thomas Campion's attack on English rhyme in Observations on the Art of English Poesie (1602). In 1595 he issued The Civil Warres between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York in four books, a verse history expanded in 1609 to eight books but left even then still incomplete. Between 1612 and 1617 he wrote a prose history of England. For a short period in 1599 he is said to have been poet laureate, but to have resigned the post in Ben Jonson's favor. He was appointed (1603) master of the revels and between 1604 and 1615, when he seems to have retired to his Wiltshire farm, he worked at turning out court masques. His complete works, edited by A. B. Grosart, were published in five volumes (1885–96).

Daniel Deronda (dan'yẹl dẹ.ron'dạ). Novel by George Eliot. It appeared in eight monthly parts, beginning in February, 1876, and as a whole in 1877. The book unfolds the author's conceptions of social growth, the strength of tradition, and the impelling force of nationality.

Daniel Jazz, The. Volume of poetry (1920) by Vachel Lindsay. It is generally regarded as one of his poorer works and as marking the beginning of his artistic decline.

Daniell (dan'yĕl), John Frederic. b. at London, March 12, 1790; d. there, March 13, 1845. English physicist and chemist, inventor of a hygrometer (c1820). His works include Meteorological Essays (1823), Introduction to Chemical Philosophy (1839), and others.

Daniell, Samuel. b. at London, 1775 or 1777; d. in Ceylon, in December, 1811. English artist and traveler; nephew of Thomas Daniell.

Daniell, Thomas. b. 1749; d. at London, March 19, 1840. English landscape painter and engraver, best known for his illustrations of works on Eastern subjects.

Daniels (dan'yĕlz), Frank (Albert). b. at Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 15, 1856; d. at West Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 12, 1935. American comedian. His first stage appearance (1879) was in Chimes of Normandie at Chelsea, Mass.; he made his English debut in 1883. Among the plays in which he appeared were An Electric Doll, Little Puck, Miss Simplicity, The Idol's Eye, The Office Boy, The Tattooed Man, The Pink Lady, Wizard of the Nile, Sergeant Brue, and Girl in the Train.

Daniels, Jonathan Worth. b. at Raleigh, N.C., April 26, 1902—. American journalist and author; son of Josephus Daniels. A graduate of the University of North Carolina, he joined (1925) the staff of the Raleigh News and Observer, his father's paper, acted as its editor from 1933 to 1942 while his father was U.S. ambassador to Mexico, and became its editor in 1948 when his father died. During World War II he held several administrative posts in Washington, acting as President F. D. Roosevelt's administrative assistant (1943–45) and as presidential press secretary (1945). He was appointed U.S. representative to the United Nations subcommittee on the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, and was made (1948) a public member of the administrative board of the Economic Cooperation Administration. He has written a novel, Clash of Angels (1930), and A Southerner Discovers the South (1938), A Southerner Discovers New England (1940), Tar Heels: A Portrait of North Carolina (1941), Frontier on the Potomac (1946), and The Man of Independence (1950), a biography of Harry S. Truman.

Daniels, Josephus. b. at Washington, N.C., May 18, 1862; d. at Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 15, 1948. American journalist and statesman; father of Jonathan Worth Daniels. He was editor (1885 et seq.) of the Raleigh State Chronicle, and in 1894 consolidated that paper with the North Carolinian and the News and Observer as the Raleigh News and Observer, of which he was publisher and editor for 53 years. He was head of the Democratic national publicity bureau during Bryan's 1908 presidential campaign and Wilson's successful 1912 campaign. From 1913 to 1921, he was secretary of the navy. His assistant secretary was Franklin D. Roosevelt, who later, when he became president, appointed Daniels U.S. ambassador to Mexico (1933–42). He was the author of The Navy and the Nation (1919), Our Navy at War (1922), Life of Worth Bagley (1924), Life of Woodrow Wilson (1924), Tar Heel Editor (1939), Editor: In Politics (1941), The Wilson Era (1944–45), and Shirt Sleeve Diplomat (1947).

Daniels, Winthrop More. b. at Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1867; d. at Saybrook Point, Conn., Jan. 3, 1944. American transportation authority. A graduate (1888) of Princeton, he was professor of political economy (1892–11) at Princeton, a member (1911–14) of the Public Utilities Commission of New Jersey, member (1914–23) and chairman (1918–19) of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and professor of transportation (1923–40) at Yale. He was the author of Elements of Public Finance, The Price of Transportation Service, and other books.

Danielson (dan'il.sŏn, dan'yĕl-). Borough in NE Connecticut, in Windham County, near the Quinebaug River: most important cotton-manufacturing center in the state. 4,554 (1950).

Danielson-Kalmari (dä'nyel.sôn.käl'mä.rē), Richard. [Full name, Johan Richard Danielson-Kalmari.] b. at Hauho, Finland, May 7, 1853; d. at Helsinki, Finland, May 23, 1933. Finnish political leader and historian, active in the government of Finland under Russian rule before World War I. He served in the Finnish legislature and executive branch until 1909. He was professor (1880–1913) of general history at Turku University, of which he was also vice-chancellor (1903–06) and chancellor (1921–26). He was the leader (1907–14) of the Old Finnish party. After early writings on English and French history, he specialized in the history of Finland.

Danilo I (dä.nē'lô). b. 1677; d. 1735 or 1737. Last elected, and first hereditary, prince-bishop (vladika) of Montenegro. In 1702, captured by the Turks, he barely escaped with his life, and in the following year he plotted an extensive massacre of Moslems which was carried out on Christmas Eve and has sometimes been called "the Montenegrin Vespers." Making his way to St. Petersburg in 1715, he won a pledge from Czar Peter I of Russian assistance to the Montenegrins in their resistance to Turkish encroachments. It became customary thereafter for the Montenegrin prince-bishops to visit St. Petersburg to renew the Russian alliance. Danilo I considerably enlarged the area of Montenegrin territory free from Turkish control. He succeeded in having the title of vladika or prince-bishop made hereditary in his family, and since the ecclesiastical half of the title called for celibacy, he designated his nephew to succeed him, a practice which long continued to be the rule.

Danilo II. b. 1826; d. 1860. Prince of Montenegro. He became prince-bishop in 1851, but being a modern-minded man (and, moreover, wishing to marry, which as bishop he could not do) in 1852 he devolved his churchly office upon an archbishop, and became a secular ruler. The victories of the Montenegrins under his leadership over the Turks in 1853 and again in 1858 assured the country's independence. Danilo's reforms, carried out with a strong hand, raised enemies, one of whom assassinated him.

Daniłowski (dä.nē.lôf'skē), Gustaw. b. 1871; d. 1927. Polish poet and novelist.

Danish (dā'nish). Language of Denmark. It is a Scandinavian language, very closely related to Swedish, Norwegian, and Icelandic.

Danish Academy of Sciences and Letters, Royal. See Academy of Sciences and Letters, Royal Danish.

Danish-American Treaty of 1916. See American-Danish Treaty of 1916.

Danites (dan'īts). Members of the Hebrew tribe of Dan.

Danites. Members of a secret organization in the original Mormon Church, sworn to support the heads of the church in all speech or action.

Danjon (dän.zhôn), André. b. at Caen, France, April 6, 1890—. French astronomer, director of the observatory at the University of Strasbourg. He determined the brightness of the sunlit earth as seen from outer space, and is also known for his work in optics.

Dankali (däng'kä.lē). See Danakil.

Dankl (däng'kl), Baron Viktor von. b. at Udine, Italy (in territory which was then part of Austria), Sept. 18, 1854—. Austro-Hungarian general. He held commands on the Eastern front in 1914 and on the Italian front in 1916. He retired in 1917, and after 1918 was active as a monarchist leader.

Danks (dangks), Hart Pease. b. at New Haven, Conn., 1834; d. at Philadelphia, 1903. American composer, remembered chiefly for his song Silver Threads Among the Gold. His other works include an operetta and many hymns.

Danmark (dän'märk). Danish name of Denmark.

Dan Michel of Northgate (dan mich'ĕl; nôrth'gāt, -găt). See Michel of Northgate, Dan.

Dannat (dan'ăt), William T. b. at New York, 1853; d. March 17, 1929. American figure painter. He studied at Munich and Florence, and with Munkacsy at Paris, and received the third-class medal at Paris in 1883. He was made a commander of the Legion of Honor in 1900.

Dannecker (dän'ek.ĕr), Johann Heinrich von. b. at Waldenbuch, near Stuttgart, Germany, Oct. 15, 1758; d. there, Dec. 8, 1841. German sculptor. In 1771 he entered the Karlsschule at Stuttgart, where he was associated with Schiller. He designed at an early age some statues of children and caryatids for the chateau of Stuttgart and Hohenheim. Appointed court sculptor (1780) to Duke Charles of Württemberg, he went to Paris, where he studied with Pajou. In 1785 he went to Rome, where he met Canova, Goethe, and Herder. His statue of Ceres and Bacchus procured him admission to the academies of Milan and Bologna. On his return to Stuttgart (1790) he was appointed professor at the academy. His most famous work is a statue of Ariadne on a panther. Among his other works are a statue of Sappho, a bust of Schiller, and a bust of Gluck (1809).

Dannemora (dan.ę.mō'rą, -môr'ą). Village in NE New York, in Clinton County, ab. 12 mi. W of Plattsburg. It is the seat of Clinton State Prison. Settled as an iron-mining center, it was named for Dannemora, Sweden. 4,122 (1950).

Dannemora (dän.nę.mö'rä). [Also, Danemora.] Small parish in the län (county) of Uppsala, Sweden, ab. 28 mi. NE of Uppsala. It is celebrated for its iron mines (among the best in Sweden). Pop. ab. 1,050.

Dannevirke (dä'nę.vir.kę). Danish name of the Danewerk.

Dannreuther (dan'roi.tėr; German, dän'-), Edward George. b. at Strasbourg, Nov. 4, 1844; d. at Hastings, England, Feb. 12, 1905. Pianist and musicologist. He made his debut at London in 1863 and afterward lived there. He founded (1872) the Wagner Society and was appointed (1895) professor at the Royal College of Music. His works include Wagner and the Reform of the Opera (1872), Musical Ornamentation (2 vols., 1893–95), and the sixth volume of the Oxford History of Music.

D'Annunzio (dän.nön'tsyō), Gabriele. [Pseudonym, Duca Minimo; title, Prince of Monte Nevoso; original surname (according to some sources), Rapagnetta.] b. at Francavilla al Mare, near Pescara, Italy, 1863; d. at Gardone Riviera, Italy, March 1, 1938. Italian poet and novelist. A rabid nationalist, he advocated Italy's entry into World War I on the side of the Allies, was an officer in the Italian air force, where he lost an eye in combat, and occupied (1919) Fiume at the head of a group of young Italian soldiers, until after the signing of the first treaty of Rapallo (1920) made it an independent city. D'Annunzio was an enthusiastic Fascist and was granted his title in 1924 for his efforts at Fiume. He wrote Primo Vere (1879), Canto Nuovo (1882), Terra Vergine (1882), Intermezzo di rime (1883), Il Libro delle Vergini (1884), L'Isottèo: La Chimera (1885–88), San Pantaleone (1886), Elegie romane (1887–91), Il Piacere (1889; Eng. trans., The Child of Pleasure, 1898), Giovanni Episcopo (1891; Eng. trans., Episcopo and Company, 1896), Poema paradisiaco: Odi navali (1891–93), L'Innocente (1891), Trionfo della Morte (1894; Eng. trans., The Triumph of Death, 1896), Le Vergini delle Rocce (1896), La Città Morta (1898), La Gioconda (1899), Il Fuoco (1900), La Canzone di Garibaldi (1900), Francesca da Rimini (1901), Le Laudi (1904), La Fiaccola sotto il moggie (1905), Più che l'amore (1906), L'Orazione e la canzone in morte d'Giosuè Carducci (1907), La Nave (1908), Il Mistero di S. Sebastiano (1911), La Pisanelle (1913), Notturno (1919), Le Faville del maglio (1924), Juvenilia (1925), Canto novo (1925). Among the actresses appearing in his plays were Sarah Bernhardt and Eleonora Duse, with whom the poet maintained a liaison for a number of years. D'Annunzio's style is rich and fluent in language, but neither deep in thought nor conscious of real social relationships.

Danny; The Story of a Dandie Dinmont (dan'i; dan'di din'mǫnt). Dog novel by Alfred Ollivant, published in 1902.

Dan River (dan). River in S Virginia and N North Carolina, flowing generally E from the Blue Ridge to join the Staunton River just N of Clarksville, Va., forming the Roanoke River. In its upper course it flows through a great gorge, called the Pinnacles of Dan, where a series of power dams were completed in 1938. Length, ab. 180 mi.

Dan Russel (rus'ęl). See Russel, Dan.

Danry (dän.rē), Jean. See Latude, Jean Henry.

Danse Macabre (däns mȧ.kȧbr). Orchestral poem (Opus 40) by Camille Saint-Saëns, composed in 1874, based upon a poem by Henri Cazalis.

Danse Macabre. French name of the Dance of Death.

Dansville (danz'vil). Village in W New York, in Livingston County, ab. 63 mi. SE of Buffalo in a farming and nursery region. Manufactures include heating equipment and shoes. The American Red Cross was founded here by Clara Barton in 1881. It is the seat of a sanitarium, reopened (1929) by Bernarr Macfadden. 5,253 (1950).

Dantan (dän.tän), Antoine Laurent. b. at St.-Cloud, France, Dec. 8, 1798; d. there, May 31, 1878. French sculptor, a pupil of Bosio, known for his portrait work; brother of Jean Pierre Dantan.

Dantan, Jean Pierre. b. at Paris, in December, 1800; d. at Baden-Baden, Germany, in September, 1869. French sculptor, noted especially for grotesque busts; brother of Antoine Laurent Dantan.

Dantan, Joseph Édouard. b. at Paris, Aug. 20, 1848; d. at Trouville, France, 1897. French painter; son of Jean Pierre Dantan. His works include religious, historical, and genre paintings, and book illustrations for, among others, works by Victor Hugo and Émile Zola. He made his bow at the Paris Salon in 1869 with An Episode in the Destruction of Pompeii. He is represented in the Luxembourg Museum at Paris and in other French collections. The Legion of Honor was conferred upon him in 1880.

Dantas (dun'tąsh), Júlio. b. at Lagos, Portugal, May 19, 1876—. Portuguese dramatist, poet, and prose writer. He is a doctor of medicine and has been a member of the Portuguese parliament and a cabinet minister several times. His first book was Nada (1897), a collection of poems. The works which gave him renown were chiefly A Severa (1901), A ceia dos cardeais (1907), and Rosas de todo o ano (1907). The last two have been translated into English and other languages.

Dantas, Manuel Pinto de Souza. b. in Bahia, Brazil, c1825; d. Jan. 15, 1894. Brazilian politician of the liberal party. He was senator from 1879, minister of justice in 1880 and of the interior in 1882, and prime minister from June 6, 1884, to May 7, 1885. He brought forward a bill for emancipation, which, though not passed at the time, led to complete abolition of slavery three years later.

Dante (dan'tē; Italian, dän'tä). [Full name, Dante Alighieri; original prename, Durante.] b. at Florence, in May, 1265; d. at Ravenna, Italy, Sept. 14, 1321. Italian poet, generally considered to be the supreme example of integral Christian humanism. In his Latin letters he gives his name variously as Dantes Alagherius and Dantes Alagherii. His family can be traced back to Adamo of Florence, the father of Cacciaguida who is mentioned in Paradiso (xv., 139–144) as having been killed during the second Crusade in 1147. Dante's first meeting with Beatrice Portinari, who was to become the object of his "courtly," artistic, ideal, moral, spiritual, and symbolic love and the source of his poetic inspiration, can be dated as May 1, 1274. His elementary education was entrusted to a professional teacher named Romano; but Dante attributes his higher intellectual inspiration to Brunetto Latini. Dante tells us in the Convivio that he spent three years in the "schools of the friars (religiosi) and the disputations of the philosophers." It was, however, to his lifelong habit of insatiable reading in the ancient classics, patristic writings, contemporary poets and chroniclers, and scholastic philosophers and theologians that he owed the extraordinarily wide knowledge that is revealed in his works. His first extant sonnet in honor of Beatrice was written in 1283, and published in his first work, the Vita Nuova, c1292. Shortly after the death of Beatrice in 1290, Dante married Gemma Donati, to whom he had been betrothed as a boy in 1277. Gemma was the mother of Dante's four children, Peter, James, John, and Antonia, the first two of whom wrote commentaries on the Divina Commedia; the last became a nun in Ravenna with the name Sister Beatrice. As a young man Dante was trained as a soldier and took part in the battle of Campaldino in 1289. In 1295 he began to play an active role in Florentine political life. The documents show that he took a firm stand against any outside, including papal, interference in the city government. His patriotism was rewarded in 1300 by his election to the highest political office in Florence. It was in this office, as Priore, that he was called upon to banish one of his dearest friends, Guido Cavalcanti, in an effort to curb the factious political rivalry of the Neri (the Blacks, the Guelph faction of the ancient nobility) and Bianchi (the Whites, the Guelph faction of the newly rich banking and commercial bourgeoisie). Shortly after his tenure of office he went to Rome to make the pilgrimage of the Holy Year of Jubilee proclaimed by Pope Boniface VIII. It seems to have been this experience of visiting the center of Christendom and the "capital of the world" that filled Dante with the vision of humanity in history and in eternal life which is the subject matter of the Divina Commedia (The Divine Comedy). During Dante's absence from Florence on an embassy to Pope Boniface VIII in 1301, the party of the Neri, aided by Charles de Valois, destroyed the property of the Bianchi, and Dante himself was condemned to exile in 1302. His resentment at this betrayal by his beloved but stony-hearted city is reflected in the passionate mood of the Pietra sonnets. Having failed, even with Ghibelline help, to change the situation in Florence, Dante decided to become a "party all by himself." His travels throughout Italy, where he found no less than 14 dialects, suggested to him a philosophico-philological work on "courtly" vernacular diction, De vulgari eloquentia. His philosophical reading and reflection prompted him to write the Banquet (Convivio) of ethical essays in which he hoped to discuss in detail the Aristotelian-Thomistic description of the 14 moral virtues. In 1307 he left both works unfinished, and appears to have gone for a period of study in the University of Paris. The crowning of Henry VII (Henry of Luxembourg) as emperor of the Romans in 1312 kindled once more Dante's hope of seeing realized a world society under the triple universal authority of law, truth, and grace, organized by the efforts of the emperor (imperium), the university (studium), and the Pope (Sacerdotium), and renewing the highest traditions of Rome, Athens, and Jerusalem in the spheres of civilization, culture, and religion. Dante hastily returned to Italy; but when Henry died in 1313, all Dante could do was to set forth a theory of proper Church-State relationships in his Monarchia, just as he had already given his theory of the relationship of imperial power to philosophical authority in Book IV of the Convivio. The years after 1314 were filled with the completion of the Divina Commedia. He interrupted the work in 1319 to conduct a correspondence in the form of Eclogae in Latin verses which are as classical in form as they are poetical in inspiration. On Jan. 20, 1320, in the presence of the lord of Verona Can Francesco della Scala (the Can Grande who patronized the arts and was, especially, Dante's protector) and of high ecclesiastical authorities, in the Chapel of Saint Helen, he formally defended, in Scholastic Latin, a Quaestio de Aqua et Terra in order to establish his position as an authorized teacher An embassy to Venice undermined his health and he died on Sept. 14, 1321. The most authentic painting of Dante is that by his friend Giotto, still to be seen on a wall in the Bargello museum at Florence. However, the bust by Vincenzo Vela, based on the scientific examination of Dante's skull by Fabio Frassetto in 1921, is a trustworthy indication of the poet's appearance. The so-called "death-masks" have no authentic value. The bibliography on Dante's period, life, and works is immense.

Dante. Critical essay by James Russell Lowell in his Among My Books (1870; 2nd series, 1876). It is regarded highly by Dante students, and is considered one of the best examples of Lowell's literary criticism. In its way it did for Dante in America what Coleridge and Carlyle did for German literature in England.

Dante. Prose criticism (1929) by T. S. Eliot. It is an essay in appreciation and is intended to serve as an introduction to the work of the Italian poet. It was well received and did much to strengthen Eliot's already strong position as a critic. Eliot had discussed Dante, and other authors, in an earlier volume, The Sacred Wood (1921).

Dantès (däṅ.tes), Edmond. [Title, Count of Monte Cristo.] Principal character in Le Comte de Monte Cristo, novel by the elder Alexandre Dumas. He is originally an innocent youth, unjustly imprisoned. He escapes, becomes immensely wealthy, and carries out an elaborate system of revenge in the various disguises of the Count of Monte Cristo, Lord Wilmore, and the Abbé Busoni.

Dante Symphony (dan'tē, dän'tā). Orchestral and choral composition by Franz Liszt, composed in 1855, based upon The Divine Comedy and dedicated to Wagner.

Danti (dän'tē), Vincenzo. b. at Perugia, Italy, 1530; d. May 24, 1576. Italian goldsmith, sculptor, military architect, and poet. He made the Decapitation of Saint John over the door of the baptistery at Florence, and the statue of Pope Julius III at Perugia.

Danton (däṅ.tôṅ), Georges Jacques. b. at Arcis-sur-Aube, France, Oct. 28, 1759; guillotined at Paris, April 5, 1794. French politician, one of the foremost leaders of the French Revolution. He was a lawyer and president of the Cordeliers (a political club which called for drastic reform of the French government). He took part, perhaps as organizer, in the attack (Aug. 10, 1792) on the Tuileries, when the king and queen, Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, were captured and imprisoned. Soon after, the monarchy was abolished and Danton became minister of justice in the republican government. He was implicated in the "September massacres" of prisoners of the Revolution at a time when it seemed that foreign enemies would march into Paris. In September, 1792, he became a member of the National Convention, where he sat on the "Mountain," the high seats where the Jacobins, the Cordeliers, and the Hébertists sat, near such men as Marat and Robespierre. He was one of those voting (January, 1793) for the death of the king. In March, he was made president of the Jacobins, and he moved the formation of the Revolutionary tribunal. He was one of the nine members, from April to September, 1793, of the Committee of Public Safety. Recognizing that the struggle between the Girondists (the moderates who were slowly swinging towards royalism) and the Jacobins might cause the Revolution to fail, and in view of military reverses, he joined in the purge (June 2, 1793) of the Girondists from the Convention. In March, 1794, he overthrew Jacques René Hébert and his extreme radical party of the Paris commune with the aid of Robespierre, and in turn was overthrown (March 30, 1794) by Robespierre, given a quick semblance of a trial, and executed. Danton was an orator of great power who recognized the need both of eliminating the oppressive monarchy and of preventing the Revolution from deteriorating into a formless anarchy of blood baths, but his lack of resolution in crises doomed him.

Dantzic (dän'tsik) or Dantzig (-tsiċh). See Danzig.

Dantzig (däṅ.tsēk), Duc de. Title of Lefebvre, François Joseph.

Danube (dan'ūb). [Czech, Dunaj; German, Donau; Hungarian, Duna; Rumanian, Dunărea; Russian, Dunai, Dunay; Serbo-Croatian and Bulgarian, Dunav; Latin, Danubius (dạ.nū'bi.us), Ister.] Largest river of Europe next to the Volga, formed by the union of the Breg and Brigach near Donaueschingen in S Baden, Germany. It flows through Germany and Austria, separates the S central part of Czechoslovakia from Hungary, flows S through C Hungary into N Yugoslavia, separates NE Yugoslavia from Rumania, becomes the boundary between Bulgaria and Rumania, flows N through E Rumania to join the Prut on the border of the U.S.S.R., and empties into the Black Sea by three principal mouths. It is navigable to Ulm, in Germany. Its chief tributaries are, on the right bank, the Iller, Lech, and Isar in Germany, the Inn and Enns in Austria, the Rába (Raab) in Hungary, the Drava, Sava, Morava, and Timok in Yugoslavia, the Isker in Bulgaria; on the left bank, the Altmühl, Naab, and Regen in Germany, the Morava (March), Váh (Waag), and Hron (Gran) in Czechoslovakia, the Tisza (Theiss) in Yugoslavia, the Timiş (Temeš), Jiu (Schyl), Olt (Aluta), Argeş (Arjish), Ialomiţa (Yalomitza), Siret (Sereth), and Prut in Rumania. Area of basin, ab. 320,000 sq. mi. Length, ab. 1,770 mi.

Danubian Principalities (dan.ū'bi.ạn). The former principalities of Moldavia and Walachia, now included in Rumania.

Danum (dā'num). Latin name of Doncaster.

Danvers (dan'vẽrz). Town in NE Massachusetts, in Essex County, ab. 17 mi. NE of Boston: manufactures of leather, chemicals, shoes, and crayons. Israel Putnam (1718–90) was born near here. 15,720 (1950).

Danville (dan'vil). City in E Illinois, county seat of Vermilion County: center of a farming and mining area. Its factories produce mining machinery, textiles, and bricks. 37,864 (1950).

Danville. Town in W central Indiana, county seat of Hendricks County, ab. 20 mi. W of Indianapolis in a farming area. It is the seat of Canterbury College. 2,802 (1950).

Danville. City in C Kentucky, county seat of Boyle County, ab. 39 mi. S of Frankfort. It is the seat of Centre College. It was founded in 1775. Pop. 8,686 (1950).

Danville. Borough in E Pennsylvania, county seat of Montour County: manufactures of iron, steel, and textiles 6,994 (1950).

Danville. City in S Virginia, geographically in Pittsylvania County but independent of county administration, on the Dan River: trading and shipping center for tobacco; manufactures of cotton textiles. It was the capital of the Confederacy from April 3 to April 10, 1865. It is the seat of Averett College, the Danville Military Institute, and Stratford College. 35,066 (1950).

Danzi (dän'tsē), Franz. b. at Mannheim, Germany, May 15, 1763; d. at Karlsruhe, Germany, April 13, 1826. German composer. He was a member (1778 et seq.) of the elector palatine's band and kapellmeister (choir leader) at Karlsruhe; composer of operas and of orchestral, chamber, and church music.

Danzig (dan'sig; German, dän'tsiċh). [Also: Dantzic, Dantzig; Polish, Gdańsk.] City in N Poland, in the wojewodztwa (province) of Gdańsk, situated on a bay of the Baltic Sea called the Gulf of Danzig and on the Mottlau River, W of the mouth of the Vistula River: formerly a free city. It has a harbor and shipyards, trade in coal, grain, and lumber, chemical, metallurgical, fur, and textile industries, breweries, and distilleries. Danzig has a theater, a library, and a museum with art, archaeological, and natural science collections, which was reopened in 1948 as the National Museum; an institute of technology (rebuilt), the first Polish academy of medicine (1945), and other educational institutions. The city, a jewel of Renaissance architecture, was almost entirely destroyed by demolition and fighting toward the end of World War II. Among the destroyed or severely damaged monuments are the Church of Mary, an enormous building in the brick-Gothic style (erected in 1343 and later enlarged), the churches of Saint John, Saint Nicholas, and Saint Catherine (12th–15th centuries), the Church of Saint Peter (15th–16th centuries), the city hall and Artus Court (14th–16th centuries) in the Gothic and Renaissance styles, the armory, a brick building in the Renaissance style erected by a Flemish architect, and numerous gates, warehouses, and picturesque private buildings. However, reconstruction is under way; it is expected that most of the buildings of artistic and historical value will be reconstructed by 1955. In the vicinity are a number of seaside resorts and fishing villages. Nearby also is the concentration camp of Stutthof, where many Jewish and Polish civilian prisoners perished during World War II. 117,894 (1946), 175,043 (1950).

History. Danzig is first recorded as having been a missionary post among the Slavs in the 10th century; it was capital of the dukes of Pomerellia in the 12th century, was under the sovereignty of the Teutonic Order from 1309 to 1454, and became a member of the Hanseatic League in 1361. The city seceded from the Teutonic Order in 1454 and was under Polish protection from that year until 1793, during which period it attained a large degree of independence under the privilegium Casimirianum. Danzig flourished commercially, maintained its German ethnic character, and introduced the Lutheran Reformation (1523–57). It was besieged and sacked by the Russians in 1734, fell to Prussia in the third partition of Poland in 1793, was a free city from 1807 to 1814, belonged to Prussia (after 1871, Germany) from 1814 to 1919, and was capital of the province of Westpreussen (West Prussia) in the period 1816–23 and again from 1878 to 1919. The treaty of Versailles (1919) separated the city from Germany and it was declared a free state under the protectorate of the League of Nations in 1920; a customs union with Poland was concluded in 1922. Danzig suffered commercially through the competition of the new Polish port-city of Gdynia. It was annexed to Germany in 1939, immediately preceding the outbreak of World War II, was occupied by the Russians after heavy fighting on March 31, 1945, and was returned to Poland after the Four Power Conference at Potsdam in the same year.

Danzig. German name of Gdańsk, province.

Danzig Crisis. European crisis precipitated (1939) when, after the complete occupation of Czechoslovakia in March, 1939, Hitler began to press for the annexation of the free city of Danzig and a revision of the Polish Corridor. With Danzig in the hands of a Nazi regime that defied the League of Nations high commissioner, and with the threat of German force present, the British announced that they would come to the assistance of Poland if Hitler were to impose a solution by unilateral action. Backed by the Russo-German pact, Hitler demanded (Aug. 29, 1939) the cession of Danzig and other rights for Germany in the Corridor. Polish refusal to negotiate under threats led to the German invasion (Sept. 1) of Poland and the beginning of World War II.

Daphnae (daf'nē). [Also: Daphne; modern name, Tel Defenneh; in the Old Testament, Tahapanes, Tahpanhes, Tahpenes.] Town in ancient Egypt, ab. 25 mi. from Pelusium. Its site has been explored and has yielded archaeological finds of interest.

Daphnaida (daf.nā.ē'dą). Elegy (1590) by Edmund Spenser, on the death of Lady Douglas Gorges, whose husband, Sir Arthur Gorges, poet and translator, was Spenser's friend.

Daphne (daf'nē). See also Dafne.

Daphne. In ancient geography, a famous grove and sanctuary of Apollo, situated ab. 5 mi. SW of Antioch, in ancient Syria. It was established by Seleucus Nicator.

Daphne. In Greek mythology, a nymph, daughter of the river-god Peneius, or, in other accounts of Ladon, an Arcadian. Her lover Leucippus pursued her in woman's clothing, and was killed by the nymphs at the instigation of Apollo. When the god in turn pursued her, she entreated that she might be transformed into the bay tree, and he granted her petition.

Daphne. An asteroid (No. 41) discovered by H. Goldschmidt at Paris, May 22, 1856.

Daphnis (daf'nis). In Greek mythology, a shepherd, son of Hermes and a Sicilian nymph. Pan taught him to sing and play the flute, and the Muses endowed him with a love of poetry, and he is said to have originated bucolic poetry. He was turned into a stone according to one legend; according to another his eyes were torn out by a nymph for his infidelity to her, and he threw himself in despair into the sea. In ancient pastoral poetry his name was frequently given to shepherds.

Daphnis. Gentle shepherd in John Fletcher's play The Faithful Shepherdess.

Daphnis and Chloe (klō'ē). Greek pastoral romance attributed to Longus (4th or 5th century A.D.), a Greek sophist. It recounts the loves and pastoral life of Daphnis, foster son of Lamon, a goatherd, and Chloe, foster daughter of Dryas, a shepherd. The manuscript of Mont-Cassin, taken to Florence, does not name the author. It is known principally through the French version of Amyot (1559), revised by Courier. It has been translated and imitated in all European languages. Tasso's Aminta, Montemayor's Diana, d'Urfé's Sireine, Saint-Pierre's Paul and Virginia, and Allan Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd are founded on it.

Da Ponte (dä pōn'tā), Lorenzo. [Original name, Emanuele Conegliano.] b. at Ceneda, Italy, March 10, 1749; d. at New York, Aug. 17, 1838. Italian librettist and author. He wrote (1786–90) the librettos for Mozart's operas Le Nozzedi Figaro, Don Giovanni, and Così fan tutte. After spending some years in London as a writer, he moved (1805) to the U.S., where he became a teacher of Italian. In 1825 he was appointed professor of Italian language and literature at Columbia University. He is credited with being one of the first to arouse an interest in the U.S. in Italian culture, through his teaching, through his short-lived attempt to establish an Italian opera house in New York, and through his praises of Dante.

Dapper (dap'ėr). In Ben Jonson's comedy The Alchemist, a greedy and credulous lawyer's clerk who desires a "fly" (a spirit or familiar) of the Alchemist to enable him to cheat at horse races by giving him prior information.

Dapperwit (dap'ėr.wit). Vain, foolish, and boastful rake in Wycherley's Love in a Wood.

Dapple (dap'l). Name of Sancho Panza's donkey in Cervantes's romance Don Quixote.

Dapsang (dup.sung'). See Godwin-Austen, Mount.

Daqahliya (dä.kä.lē'yą). Province of Lower Egypt, NE Africa, in the northern part of the Nile delta, E of the Damietta Branch of the river. Capital, Mansura; settled area, 1,023 sq. mi.; pop. 1,414,284 (1947).

Daquin or d'Aquin (dȧ.kaṅ), Louis Claude. b. at Paris, July 4, 1694; d. there, June 15, 1772. French organist and composer. He was appointed to the Cordeliers convent (1732) and subsequently to the chapel royal (1739). His works include organ and harpsichord pieces as well as music for voice and chorus.

DAR. Abbreviation of Daughters of the American Revolution.

Darab (dä.räb′). [Also: Darabgherd, Darabjird.] Town in SW Iran, in the region of Fars, ab. 70 mi. N of Lar: a mountain trading center served by two important trails; oranges and lemons are produced in the surrounding area. Nearby are rock sculptures dating from the 3rd century A.D. It is sometimes identified with the ancient Pasargadae.

Darabani (dä.rä.bä′nē). Town in NE Rumania, in the province of Moldavia, ab. 43 mi. NE of Siret, near the Russian border. 11,379 (1948).

Daraga (dä.rä′gä). Town in Albay province, in the SE part of Luzon, Philippine Islands. The town is at the S base of Mayon volcano. 7,651 (1948).

Dar-al-Baida (där″äl.bī.dä′). An Arabic name of Casablanca.

Daram (dä räm′). Irregularly shaped island on the W coast of Samar, in the Philippines, E of Daram Channel. It is a part of Samar province. Area, 35 sq. mi.

Daram Channel. Channel N of Leyte Island, in the Philippines, It separates Biliran from Daram island, and is connected by Janabatas Channel with San Pedro Bay on the E coast of Leyte.

Darányi (dô′rä.nyē), Koloman. [Also, Kálmán de Darányi.] b. at Budapest, March 22, 1886—. Hungarian politician. He served (1928 et seq.) as political state secretary to minister presidents Bethlen, Karolyi, and Gömbös, became (1935) minister of agriculture, and succeeded Gömbös (October, 1936) as minister president.

Daras (dā′ras). Ancient town of Mesopotamia, situated near Nisibis (Nusaybin), in what is now SE Turkey. It was a frontier post of the Byzantine Empire against Persia in the 6th century A.D.

Darbhanga (dȧr.bung′gȧ). [Also: Darbhangah, Durbunga.] District in Bihar state, Union of India, ab. 200 mi. NE of Benares: wheat, rice, and sugar. Capital, Darbhanga; area, 3,348 sq. mi.; pop. 3,457,070 (1941).

Darbhanga. [Also: Darbhangah, Durbunga.] Capital of Darbhanga district, Bihar, Union of India, ab. 200 mi. NE of Benares: important trading center and rail junction. It is the seat of a medical school. 69,203 (1941).

Darboux (dȧr.bö), Jean Gaston. b. at Nîmes, France, Aug. 13, 1842; d. at Paris, Feb. 25, 1917. French geometer, considered to have been one of his country's greatest. As professor at the Collège de France and the École Normale, member of the Academy of Sciences from 1884, and perpetual secretary of the Academy from 1900, he was active for almost half a century in organizations devoted to the teaching of mathematics. He studied at the École Normale and the École Polytechnique, receiving his doctorate in 1866 with a thesis on orthogonal surfaces. He was especially interested in the application of analysis and differential equations to geometry and mechanics. His most influential work was Leçons sur la théorie générale des surfaces (4 vols., 1887–96).

Darboy (dȧr.bwȧ), Georges. b. at Fayl-Billot, Haute-Marne, France, Jan. 16, 1813; shot at Paris, May 24, 1871. French prelate, archbishop of Paris (1863–71). He was arrested and assassinated by the Communards during the Paris uprising.

Darby (där′bi). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Delaware County, ab. 6 mi. SW of Philadelphia. It is a residential community, settled (1682) by Quakers. 13,154 (1950).

Darby, John. See under Garretson, James Edmund.

Darby, John Nelson. b. at London, Nov. 18, 1800; d. at Bournemouth, Hampshire, England, April 28, 1882. English theological writer, for a time minister of the Church of England. He was one of the founders of the Plymouth Brethren, also called Darbyites.

Darby, Mary. Maiden name of Robinson, Mary.

Darby and Joan (jōn). Married pair who are said to have lived in the 18th century in the West Riding of Yorkshire, noted traditionally for their long and happy married life. There is a ballad on the subject called The Happy Old Couple, supposed to have been written by Henry Woodfall, though it has been attributed to Matthew Prior. A poem Dobson and Joan, by "Mr. B.," is published with Prior's poems.

Darbyites (där′bi.īts). See Plymouth Brethren.

d'Arc or Darc (dȧrk), Jeanne (or Jehanne). See Joan of Arc.

Darcet (dȧr.se), Jean. b. Sept. 7, 1725; d. at Paris, Feb. 13, 1801. French chemist, noted for his achievements in industrial chemistry.

Darcet, Jean Pierre Joseph. b. at Paris, Aug. 31, 1777; d. Aug. 2, 1844. French chemist; son of Jean Darcet (1725–1801). He effected improvements in the manufacture of powder.

Darcy (där′si), Mr. Lover of Elizabeth Bennet, in Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice.

Darcy, Thomas Darcy, Baron. b. 1467; d. 1537. English statesman and rebel.

Dardanelles (där.dȧ.nelz′). [Turkish, Çanakkale Boğazı; Greek, Dardanellia (ᴛʜär″ᴛʜä.ne.lē′ä), Ellespontos; ancient name, Hellespont.] Strait connecting the Sea of Marmara with the Aegean Sea, and separating the peninsula of Gallipoli from Asia Minor, or European from Asiatic Turkey. As the Hellespont, it was celebrated in the legend of Hero and Leander. It was crossed by Xerxes in 480 B.C., and by Alexander the Great in 334 B.C. The passage was forced by the British fleet under Admiral Duckworth in 1807. It was closed against foreign men-of-war by stipulations of 1841, 1856, 1871, and 1878, but was passed by a British fleet in February, 1878, to protect Constantinople (now Istanbul) from the Russians. In 1891 an agreement between Russia and the Turkish government was reached, by which the ships of the so-called volunteer fleet of Russia, bearing the flag of the merchant marine, were allowed free passage of the Dardanelles. Length, ab. 45 mi.; average width, 3 to 4 mi.; narrowest point, ab. 1¼ mi.

Dardani (där′dȧ.nī). Ancient Illyrian people of the southern highland of Moesia. The Dardani became subject to the Macedonians under the Antigoni, and later to the Romans. Their chief city was Dardanus, after which the strait of the Dardanelles was named.

Dardani. Inhabitants of Dardania, mentioned in the Iliad.

Dardania (där.dā′ni.ȧ). [Also, Dardanice (där.dȧ.nī′sē).] In ancient geography, a territory in Mysia, with uncertain boundaries. It is mentioned, indefinitely, in the Iliad.

Dardanius (där.dā′ni.us). Servant to Brutus in Shakespeare's tragedy Julius Caesar.

Dardanus (där′dȧ.nus). [Also, Dardanum (-num).] In ancient geography, a city in Mysia, Asia Minor, situated on the Hellespont, ab. 9 mi. SW of Abydos.

Dardanus. In Greek legends, a son of Zeus and Electra, and mythical ancestor of the Trojans.

Darden (där′dȩn), Miles. b. in North Carolina, 1798; d. in Henderson County, Tenn., Jan. 23, 1857. American noted for his size. His height was said to be 7 feet 6 inches, and his weight (at death) about 1,000 pounds.

Dardistan (där.di.stän′). [Also, Jahistan.] Region in central Asia, chiefly on the NW borders of India (in what are now Kashmir and N Pakistan), referred to by ancient historians as the domain of certain Aryan peoples (the Dard or Dardu), who came there along the valley of the Indus River from the Punjab.

Dare (dār), Virginia. b. on Roanoke Island, Virginia, in August, 1587; date of death not known. First child born of English parents in the New World. She was the daughter of William and Eleanor Dare, and the granddaughter of John White, governor of a colony which was sent out by Sir Walter Raleigh from Plymouth in April, 1587, and reached Roanoke Island in July. White soon went back to England for supplies, and when a relief expedition reached Roanoke in 1591, it found the island deserted (with the word CROATAN carved on a tree). The fate of the "lost colony" is unknown.

Daredevil (dār′dev.il). Atheist in Thomas Otway's comedy of The Atheist. He is a cowardly, boasting fellow, who when in danger forgets his principles and says "two dozen paternosters within a half hour."

Dar-el-Beida (där″el.bā.dä′). An Arabic name of Casablanca.

Dares Phrygius (dâr'ēz frij'i.us, dā'rēz). [English, Dares the Phrygian.] Priest of Hephaestus in Troy mentioned in the Iliad. The authorship of a lost work on the fall of Troy, a pretended Latin translation of which was written about the 5th century A.D., was attributed to him in antiquity.

Dar-es-Salaam (där''es.sä.läm'). [Also, Daressalam.] City in E Africa, capital of Tanganyika territory: railway terminus and chief port of the area. In earlier days it was, with Bagamoyo, a chief meeting place of caravans from the lake region. It was ceded by the sultan of Zanzibar to the German East African Company in 1885. In 1920, with the mandated territory of Tanganyika, the port came into British hands. The railway from the port runs 775 mi. W to Kigoma on Lake Tanganyika. Because of the railway the port is able to serve most of Tanganyika and a small part of E Belgian Congo. 59,160 (1947).

Dareste de la Chavanne (dà.rest dẹ là shà.vàn), Antoine Élisabeth Cléophas. b. at Paris, Oct. 28, 1820; d. at Lucenay-les-Aix, France, Aug. 6, 1882. French historian, author of Histoire de France (1865–73).

Dar Fertit (där' fer.tēt'). Region in C Africa, on the border between Ubangi-Shari province, French Equatorial Africa, and SW Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, S of Darfur.

Darfield (där'fēld). Urban district in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 173 mi. N of London by rail. 6,238 (1951).

Darfur (där.för'). [Also, Darfor.] Province of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, in the E part, in NE Africa, bordering French Equatorial Africa. It is inhabited by Negroes and Arabs, and the religion is Mohammedanism. Darfur was conquered and annexed to Egypt in 1874, but revolted in 1882. It was finally subdued in 1916 by British forces. Capital, El Fasher; area, 138,150 sq. mi.; pop. 949,640 (est. 1949).

Dargan (där'gạn), Edwin Preston. b. at Barboursville, Va., Sept. 7, 1879; d. at Chicago, Dec. 13, 1940. American professor and writer on French literature. He was adjunct professor (1907–10) and assistant professor (1910–11) of French at the University of California, assistant professor (1911–15), associate professor (1915–18), and professor (1918 et seq.) of French literature at the University of Chicago. His works include Aesthetic Doctrine of Montesquieu (1907), Hylas and Other Poems (1910), Honoré de Balzac—A Force of Nature (1932), Anatole France (1937), and, with W. A. Nitze, History of French Literature (1922).

Dargan, Olive. [Pseudonym, Fielding Burke; maiden name, Tilford.] b. in Grayson County, Ky.— American poet and novelist. She attended the University of Nashville and Radcliffe College. She is the author of poetic dramas published in Semiramis and Other Plays (1904) and Lords and Lovers and Other Dramas (1912). Among her volumes of poetry are Path Flowers and Other Poems (1914), The Cycle's Rim (1916), and Lute and Furrow (1922). She is the author of a collection of Kentucky mountain stories, Highland Annals (1925), and of a novel concerning miners, Sons of the Stranger (1948). Under the pseudonym Fielding Burke, she has published two novels, Call Home the Heart (1932) and A Stone Came Rolling (1935).

Dargaud (dàr.gō), Jean Marie. b. at Paray le-Monial, Saône-et-Loire, France, Feb. 22, 1800; d. Jan. 5, 1866. French historian and man of letters. His chief work is Histoire de la liberté religieuse en France (1859).

Dargomijsky (där.go.mish'ski), Aleksandr Sergeyevich. b. in the government of Tula, Russia, Feb. 14, 1813; d. at St. Petersburg, Jan. 17, 1869. Composer of the New Russian school. He was in the government service, but, forming a friendship with Glinka, adopted music as his profession. Of his earlier works the best known are the operas Esmeralda (1847, founded on Victor Hugo's Notre Dame de Paris) and Russalka (1856). He traveled in 1864, but met with little success except in Belgium. On his return he joined Balakiref, and became prominent in the New Russian school, his most notable composition being The Stone Guest, which, while it has not met with popular recognition, is regarded as a remarkable work, embodying the most advanced ideas of his school. Its text is Pushkin's poem Don Juan, and it was orchestrated by Rimsky-Korsakov after the composer's death and performed at St. Petersburg in 1872.

Dariel Pass (dar.i.el'). See Daryal Pass.

Darien (dăr.i.en', dăr'i.ẹn). Town in SW Connecticut, in Fairfield County, on Long Island Sound: suburb of New York City. 11,767 (1950).

Darien (dăr'i.ẹn, dā'ri.ẹn). City in SE Georgia, in McIntosh County, near the mouth of the Altamaha River: fish canneries. It was formerly an important lumber-shipping point, settled early in the 18th century. 1,380 (1950).

Darien (dăr.i.en', dăr'i.ẹn). [Spanish, Darién, in full, Santa María de la Antigua del Darién; also, La Antigua.] Colony founded on the Isthmus of Panama by the Spaniards early in the 16th century. After one or two failures it was taken over in 1510 by Balboa, who used it as a base for his explorations for a time. He was followed by Pedrarias (Pedro Árias de Ávila) who, as governor, moved the colony in 1519 to the site of the present city of Panama.

Darién (dăr.i.en', dăr'i.ẹn; Spanish, dä.ryān'). Province in E Panama, for a time included in Panamá province. Capital, El Real; pop. 14,707 (1950).

Darien (dăr.i.en', dăr'i.ẹn), Colony of. [Also, Darien Scheme.] Scottish colony on the Isthmus of Panama, founded by William Paterson. It was chartered by the Scottish Parliament in 1695; the enterprise was begun in 1698 and the settlement was abandoned in 1700.

Darien, Gulf of. [Spanish, Golfo de Darién.] Branch of the Caribbean Sea, lying N of the republic of Colombia and E of the Isthmus of Panama.

Darien, Isthmus of. See Panama, Isthmus of.

Darien Scheme. See Darien, Colony of.

Darinel (dar'i.nel). Comic shepherd, a character introduced into Florisel de Niquea, the tenth book of Amadis of Gaul.

Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze, The. Collection of short stories by William Saroyan, published in 1934.

Darío (dä.rē'ō), Rubén. [Pseudonym of Félix Rubén García Sarmiento.] b. at Metapa, Nicaragua, 1867; d. at León, Nicaragua, Feb. 7, 1916. Nicaraguan poet, the acknowledged master of the modernists and one of the most prominent figures in the field of Spanish-American verse. After the appearance of his prose-and-poetry Azul (1888), which virtually launched Spanish-American modernism, he was lionized wherever he went in Central and South America, Spain, France, and the U.S. Progressing from his near-worship of form to an awareness of the importance of content and simplicity of expression, he exhibited the peak of his art in Cantos de vida y esperanza (1905). He contributed to newspapers in South America and Europe, and held diplomatic posts for several Spanish-American countries. The 31 volumes of his complete works, published (1922) at Madrid, contain the famous Prosas profanas (1896), El Canto errante (1907), and others. He is buried in the cathedral of León, Nicaragua.

Dariorigum (dar.i.or'i.gum). Ancient name of Vannes.

Darius I (of Persia) (dạ.rī'us). [Called Darius the Great; also known as Darius Hystaspis.] b. c550 B.C.; d. c485 B.C. King of Persia; son of Hystaspes, and fifth in the descent from Achaemenes. He succeeded (521) Cambyses on the Persian throne, after defeating the Magian Gaumata, who claimed to be Bardiya (the Greek Smerdis), brother of Cambyses and son of Cyrus. A record of his reign is given by himself in the long trilingual (Old Persian, Elamite, and Babylonian) inscriptions of Behistun. Besides the revolt in Persia itself, caused by the impostor Gaumata, he had to suppress two uprisings in Babylonia, led by Nidintu-Bel and Arachu, who made claim to be Nebuchadnezzar, son of Nabonidus; in consequence of these uprisings he caused the fortifications of Babylon to be torn down. The other countries under Persian dominion also revolted in turn, but at last were brought to submission. After restoring order in the empire Darius turned his attention to reorganization and reforms of the administration. He divided the whole land into 20 satrapies, introduced regular taxation and uniformity of coinage, constructed roads, and founded a kind of postal system by placing stations and relays with saddled horses at regular intervals on the road between Susa and Sardis. To the capitals Susa in Elam, Ecbatana in Media, and Babylon, he added Persepolis in Persia proper, which was destroyed by Alexander the Great, but whose imposing ruins have survived. On account of his attention to trade and industry he was called "the Huckster." His expedition over the Bosporus and Danube into Scythia was unsuccessful (512). Toward the East he extended his supremacy to the Indus, and compelled north Africa to pay him tribute. Under him began also the great struggle between Persia and Greece, reaching a climax in the battle of Marathon in 490 at which the Greeks were victorious. His tomb is hewn in the rock at a place called Naksh-i-Rustam, near Persepolis, and is adorned with sculptures and inscriptions complementing those of Behistun. Darius I is referred to in the Old Testament in connection with the building of the temple of Zerubbabel. In the second year of his reign he allowed the resumption of the building, and in the sixth it was completed (Ezra, vi. 15).

Darius II (of Persia). [Original name, Ochus; Greek surname, Nothus, meaning "bastard."] Persian king from c423 to 404 B.C.; son of Artaxerxes I. Through his son Cyrus the Younger, and Tissaphernes and Artabazus, satraps in Asia Minor, he pushed the plan to conquer the Athenian power, allying himself with Sparta about 412.

Darius III (of Persia). [Surnamed Codomannus.] d. 330 B.C. Last king of Persia. He reigned from 336 to 330 B.C., when he was dethroned by Alexander the Great, after he had been defeated at Issus (333) and Arbela (the modern Erbil; the battle actually was fought at Gaugamela) in 331. Darius fled to the east, where he was slain by one of his satraps.

Darius the Mede (mēd). 6th cent. B.C. In the Bible, king of Chaldea or Babylonia after the overthrow and death of Belshazzar. He is said to have been a son of Ahasuerus (see Daniel, v. 31; vi. 28; ix. 1; xi. 1; and other passages). Some historians identify him with Cyaxares, son of Astyages, and uncle to Cyrus.

Darjeeling (där.jē'ling). [Also, Darjiling.] District in West Bengal, Union of India, at the foothills of the Himalayas, ab. 320 mi. N of Calcutta. Tea is the outstanding crop of the area. Capital, Darjeeling; area, 1,164 sq. mi.; pop. 376,369 (1941).

Darjeeling. [Also, Darjiling.] Town and sanatarium in Darjeeling district, West Bengal, Union of India. It is the chief health station in Bengal, and the city where Europeans from the valley areas near Calcutta spend the hottest and most humid months of the year. Elevation, ab. 7,000 ft.; pop. 21,000 (est. 1941).

Dark (därk), Eleanor. b. at Sydney, Australia, August 26, 1901—. Australian novelist whose works are distinguished by fine psychological insight. She is best known abroad for The Timeless Land (1941); also author o Sun Across the Sky (1937), Waterway (1938), Storm of Time (1950), and others.

"Dark Continent." See Africa.

Dark Fire, The. Volume of poetry by W. J. Turner, published in 1918.

Dark Flower, The. Novel by John Galsworthy, published in 1913. Divided into three parts, "Spring," "Summer," and "Autumn," it presents the amorous adventures of Mark Lennan.

Dark Forest, The. Novel by Hugh Walpole, published in 1916. It is based on the author's experiences (1914–16) with the Red Cross in Russia during World War I. The Secret City (1919) is a sequel.

Dark Island, The. Novel by V. M. Sackville-West, published in 1934.

Dark Lady, The. Woman mentioned in Shakespeare's later sonnets (numbers 127 et seq.), who has been thought by some scholars to have been Mary Fitton, a maid of honor to Queen Elizabeth in 1595. She was the mistress of William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, who is celebrated in the earlier sonnets. Others have suggested Penelope Devereux, Lady Rich, or any of a number of other women of the court or of London. The speculation concerning her has produced a considerable body of carefully reasoned hypotheses, but as yet no absolute proof of her identity

Dark Lady of the Sonnets, The. Comedy in one act (1910) by George Bernard Shaw, who calls it "this little pièce d'occasion" in his 28-page preface to the 14-page play. It was first produced at the London Haymarket, on Nov. 24, 1910, with Mona Limerick as the Dark Lady, Suzanne Sheldon as Queen Elizabeth, and Granville Barker as Shakespeare. The occasion for which the play was written and performed was to raise funds for a national theater to be erected as a tribute to Shakespeare.

Dark Laughter. Novel by Sherwood Anderson, published in 1925. John Stockton, dissatisfied with his life as a Chicago journalist, walks out on his wife and travels through the Midwest country. During the course of his journey Stockton hears the "dark laughter" of Negroes, symbolizing for him a free and happy acceptance of life. Using an assumed name he becomes a factory worker and elopes with his employer's wife, a woman who shares Stockton's alienation from the machine age.

Darkness. Three-act tragedy (1926) by Liam O'Flaherty.

Dark Night, The. Narrative poem by May Sinclair, published in 1924.

Dark of the Moon. Volume of poetry (1926) by Sara Teasdale. It is characterized, as the title suggests, by a serious and somber tone. Wisdom ("It was a night of early spring"), The Solitary ("My heart has grown rich with the passing of years"), and The Flight ("We are two eagles"), regarded by critics as three of her best poems in the volume, are to be found in various anthologies of American poetry.

Dark Wind, The. Volume of poems by W. J. Turner, published in 1920.

Darlan (där.läñ), Jean Louis Xavier François. b. at Nérac, Lot-et-Garonne, France, Aug. 7, 1881; assassinated at Algiers, French North Africa, Dec. 24, 1942. French naval officer and politician, a leading official of the Vichy regime during World War II, whose transfer of support to the Allied side caused wide controversy. He served as an aide (1926–28) to Georges Leygues, naval minister. After promotion (1929) to rear admiral he returned to duty in the naval ministry (1929–34), was a French delegate to the London conference (1930), and returned briefly to service in the naval ministry before being named (1936) chief of the French naval staff. Promoted to admiral, he took command (1939) of all French naval forces on the eve of World War II. After the defeat of France, he was named (June, 1940) naval minister in Pétain's cabinet, replaced Pierre Laval as vice-premier, and was named (February, 1941) as next in the line of succession to Pétain as chief of state. He quickly took over the ministries of foreign affairs and interior, as well as the Vichy propaganda system. He negotiated the surrender (July, 1941) of French Indochina to Japan. Though replaced (April, 1942) by Laval as vice-premier because of German pressure, he remained as naval minister and commander of all Vichy armed forces. He was in North Africa at the time of the U.S. invasion (November, 1942), was captured and then released by the Americans in order to authorize French units in North Africa to join the Allies, and was made chief of state (high commissioner) in North Africa, despite widespread criticism in Allied countries. He was shot to death by Fernand Eugène Bonnier de la Chapelle, a young French antifascist.

Darlaston (där'las.ton). Urban district in C England, in Staffordshire, situated on the Bentley Canal, ab. 4 mi. SE of Wolverhampton, ab. 124 mi. NW of London by rail. It has an iron industry. 22,024 (1951).

Darley (där'li), Felix Octavius Carr. b. at Philadelphia, June 23, 1822; d. at Claymont, Del., March 27, 1888. American artist, noted as an illustrator. He illustrated Sylvester Judd's novel Margaret (1856), Irving's Legend of Sleepy Hollow and Rip Van Winkle, and the works of Dickens, Cooper, and others.

Darley, George. b. in Ireland, 1795; d. 1846. British poet, critic, and mathematician.

Darling (där'ling). [Also: Barwan, Barwon, Calewatta, Macintyre.] River in Australia which rises in SE Queensland, flows through New South Wales, and joins the Murray in the SW corner of New South Wales. It often dries up in places in the summer season. Length, ab. 1,100 mi.

Darling, Charles John. [Title, 1st Baron Darling of Langham.] b. Dec. 6, 1849; d. at Lymington, Hampshire, England, May 29, 1936. English judge, legal writer, and poet. Called to the bar in 1873, he was made queen's counsel in 1885, was Conservative member of Parliament (1888–97) for Deptford, and judge of the king's bench division from 1897 until his retirement in 1923. He was the author of Scintillae Juris (1877), Medi- tations in the Tea Room (1879), Seria Ludo (1903), On the Oxford Circuit and Other Verses (1909), Musings on Murder (1925), A Pensioner's Garden (1926), Reconsidered Rimes (1930), and Autumnal Leaves (1933). Knighted in 1897, he was made a peer in 1924. He tried Sir Roger Casement, who was hanged by the British during World War I.

Darling, Grace Horsley. b. at Bamborough, Northumberland, England, Nov. 24, 1815; d. Oct. 20, 1842. English heroine who aided in rescuing (Sept. 7, 1838) five persons from the wreck of the steamer Forfarshire near Longstone lighthouse, Farne Islands, where her father was lighthouse keeper.

Darling, Jay Norwood. [Called (from his signature) Ding.] b. at Norwood, Mich., Oct. 21, 1876—. American cartoonist. The son of a Congregational clergyman, he was educated at Yankton College, in South Dakota, Beloit College, in Wisconsin, and Drake University, in Iowa. He originally intended to study medicine, an idea he gave up when he found that he could make more money as a newspaper cartoonist. He began his career as a reporter for the Sioux City (Iowa) Journal, and later became a cartoonist, doing a daily picture, for the Sioux City Tribune, his success in which led to his next position, on the staff of the Des Moines Register. During the period 1911–13 he was on the staff of the New York Globe, and from 1917 on he has been editorial cartoonist for the New York Herald Tribune, although continuing to live at Des Moines. In 1923 he won the Pulitzer prize for a four-strip cartoon, and in 1934 Henry A. Wallace, then secretary of agriculture, asked him to become the head of the U.S. Bureau of Biological Survey, a post he accepted and for which he was qualified by reason of his deep interest, going back to World War I, in game preservation and restoration. Darling is the author of Ding Goes to Russia (1932), a report, with illustrations, of his visit to and his impressions of the U.S.S.R., and The Cruise of the Bouncing Betty (1937), a record of a trailer trip he took from Iowa to Florida. He has frequently disagreed with the policies of the papers that employed him, as when he drew cartoons favoring the League of Nations, although the editorial page of the Tribune fought it bitterly. He is the creator of "Alonzo Applegate," a college character, and "the Iowa Farmer." Individual cartoons that have been praised, and that seem likely to be remembered for a long time, are those on the death of "Buffalo Bill" Cody and on the death of "T. R.," the latter showing the former president as a cowboy, riding a horse, and waving good-by as he disappears in the distance.

Darling, Mr. and Mrs. Parents of Wendy, Michael, and John, in Sir James M. Barrie's fairy play, Peter Pan (1904).

Darling, Samuel Taylor. b. at Harrison, N.J., April 6, 1872; d. in automobile crash at Beirut, Lebanon, May 20, 1925. American pathologist and authority on tropical medicine. A graduate (1903) of the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, he joined (1906) General W. C. Gorgas on the Isthmian Canal Commission and served as chief of laboratories (1906–15) in the Canal Zone. He was appointed (1915) to the International Health Board, became (1918) professor of hygiene and director of laboratories of hygiene at the São Paulo, Brazil, medical school, and was director (1922 et seq.) of the field laboratory for research in malaria under the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation. He was the author of "The Spleen Index in Malaria," published (1924) in the Southern Medical Journal, and "Comparative Helminthology as an Aid in the Solution of Ethnological Problems," published (1925) in the American Journal of Tropical Medicine.

Darling, Wendy. Young girl in Sir J. M. Barrie's Peter Pan (1904). Wendy and her brothers, after Peter teaches them how to fly, accompany him to his home in the Never-Never Land to take care of him; Wendy's home calls her back but she makes Peter happy by her promise that she will return every spring.

Darling Downs. Region in E Australia, in SE Queensland, ab. 150 mi. W of Brisbane. It is an extensive flat to rolling plain in the upper drainage basin of the Darling River, noted for sheep farming and wheat growing.

Darling of the Gods, The. Tragedy by David Belasco and John Luther Long, produced in 1902.

Darling Range. Range of low mountains in W Australia, running parallel to the coast, behind and S of the city of Perth.

Darlington (där'ling.tǫn). County borough, market town, and manufacturing center in NE England, in Durham, situated on the river Skerne, ab. 18 mi. S of Durham. It has manufactures of construction steel, locomotives, metal cables, worsteds, and clothing. It was the terminus of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, said to be the oldest railway in the world (opened in 1825). 84,861 (1951).

Darlington. Town in NE South Carolina, county seat of Darlington County; marketing center for tobacco and cotton; manufactures of textiles and chairs. 6,619 (1950).

Darlington, Henry (Vane Bearns). b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., June 9, 1889—. American Protestant Episcopal clergyman; son of James Henry Darlington. He has been rector (1922 et seq.) of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest at New York.

Darlington, James Henry. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., June 9, 1856; d. Aug. 14, 1930. American Protestant Episcopal clergyman, consecrated (1905) first bishop of Harrisburg. He served as assistant (1882–83) and rector (1883–1905) of Christ Church at Brooklyn, N.Y., and archdeacon (1896–98) of Brooklyn. He was the author of Pastor and the People (1902), and Verses by the Way (1923).

Darlington, William. b. at Birmingham, Pa., April 28, 1782; d. at West Chester, Pa., April 23, 1863. American botanist and politician. He was elected to Congress as a Democrat in 1815, and again in 1819 and in 1821. He wrote Flora Cestrica (1837), and other works on botany and botanists.

Darmesteter (dȧr.mes.te.ter), Arsène. b. at Château Salins, in Alsace, France, Jan. 5, 1846; d. at Paris, Nov. 16, 1888. French lexicographer, an authority on medieval French. He studied the writings of French Jews in the Middle Ages, and from glosses on their manuscripts and the evidence of French words introduced into Hebrew, was able to throw much light on the development of Old French, the subject which he taught as a professor at the Sorbonne. He was coauthor of an extensive and basic work, Dictionnaire général de la langue française, published (1890–1900) after his death. His formulation of rules governing changes of Latin words into French is known as "Darmesteter's law."

Darmesteter, James. b. at Château Salins, in Alsace, March 28, 1849; d. Oct. 19, 1894. French Orientalist, professor of Iranian languages and literature (1885 et seq.) at the Collège de France; brother of Arsène Darmesteter and husband of Mary Darmesteter. He was the author of numerous works on Oriental subjects, including a complete translation into French of the Avesta (3 vols., 1892–93).

Darmesteter, Mary. [Full name, Agnes Mary Frances Darmesteter; maiden name, Robinson.] b. at Leamington, England, Feb. 27, 1857—. Poet and expert on English literature; wife (1888–94) of James Darmesteter and, after Darmesteter's death, of Pierre Émile Duclaux. She is the author of Poésies (1888), Ernest Renan (1898), Grands Écrivains d'outre-Manche (1901), and others. Her works in English include A Handful of Honeysuckles (1878), The Crowned Hippolytus (1880), a translation of Euripides (1881), and The End of the Middle Ages (1889; a historical work).

Darmstadt (därm'shtät; Anglicized, -stat). City in W Germany in the Land (state) of Hessen, American Zone, formerly the capital of the free state of Hesse, situated in the province of Starkenburg, ab. 16 mi. S of Frankfort on the Main. It has chemical and pharmaceutical industries (formerly Merck and Company), metallurgical, machine, paper, and leather-goods factories, and also manufactures orthopedic instruments, precision instruments, furniture, and tobacco. It is the seat of an institute of technology and other educational institutions. Valuable art and ethnographical collections, a notable collection of ceramics, various large libraries, a theater, and scholarly societies are among its cultural resources. Formerly it was known for its artists' colony and art exhibitions. The castle, in its oldest parts dating from the 14th century, was rebuilt in 1568, 1716, and 1786; the castle church dates from the 16th century. The oldest architectural monument, the town church, was built in the 14th century. Most of the official buildings date from the 18th century. Almost the entire city was laid in ruins in World War II; it was occupied by American troops on March 26, 1945. Darmstadt received town privileges in 1330, became part of Hesse in 1479, was declared capital in 1567, and developed largely in the reign of Grand Duke Louis I of Hesse-Darmstadt (1790–1830). The population declined 30.2 percent between 1939 and 1946. It is predominantly Protestant. 94,788 (1950).

Darnay (där.nā'), Charles. [Original surname, St. Evrémonde.] In Charles Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities, a young French nobleman who flees France in disgust with the excesses of the aristocracy, including his own family. He changes his name and marries Lucie Manette, but is condemned to death (partly on evidence obtained through a paper written in prison against his family by Doctor Manette, Lucie's father) and is saved only through the self-sacrifice of Sydney Carton.

Darnétal (dar.nā.tal). Town in NW France, in the department of Seine-Inférieure, situated on the Aubette River, ab. 2 mi. E of Rouen. It is a textile center, producing woolen and cotton materials. 7,765 (1946).

Darnley (därn'li), Lord. [Title of Henry Stuart or Stewart.] b. at Temple Newsam, Yorkshire, England, Dec. 7, 1545; killed near Edinburgh, Feb. 9 or 10, 1567. Second husband of Mary, Queen of Scots; father of James I of England. He was the son of Matthew Stuart, 4th Earl of Lennox, and Margaret Douglas, granddaughter of Henry VII of England, and was cousin-german to Mary, whom he married July 29, 1565. He was treated at first with much kindness by the queen, who promised to induce the Scottish Parliament to grant him a crown matrimonial, but eventually alienated her affections by his stupidity, insolence, and profligacy, and especially by his participation in the murder (March 9, 1566) of her favorite, the Italian secretary David Rizzio. He attempted to reëstablish himself with her by turning over to her his associates in the murder; but then he refused (December, 1566) to attend the baptism of his son James. While convalescent from an attack of illness, smallpox according to some, poisoning according to others, he was removed to a solitary house called the Kirk o' Field, near Edinburgh, which was blown up with gunpowder under the direction of the Earl of Bothwell, apparently with the queen's knowledge, if not her connivance, on the night of Feb. 9–10, 1567. Darnley's body was found in a garden some distance from the house, leading to the hypothesis that he was strangled and the house blown up to cover the crime.

Darrow (dar'ō), Clarence Seward. b. at Kinsman, Ohio, April 18, 1857; d. at Chicago, March 13, 1938. American lawyer. He acted professionally in many cases against monopolies or on the side of labor. He was counsel (1894) in the Debs strike case, and for the miners in the anthracite coal strike arbitration at Scranton and Philadelphia (1902–03); attorney for William (Big Bill) Haywood, Moyer, and Pettibone when they were tried for the murder of ex-Governor Steunenberg of Idaho in 1907; attorney for the McNamara brothers, defendants in the case of the destruction (Oct. 1, 1910) of the Los Angeles Times building in 1911. He defended Leopold and Loeb in their trial (1924) for the murder of young Bobby Franks and saved them from execution; lost his case when serving (1925), against William Jennings Bryan for the prosecution, as defense counsel to John Thomas Scopes, who had violated a Tennessee statute by teaching evolutionary theories in a public school; pleaded for the Negro defendants in the Scottsboro trial (1932). He was the author of the novel Farmington (1904), of Crime, Its Causes and Treatment (1907), and of The Story of My Life (1932), and other books, pamphlets, and articles. Darrow, president of the American League to Abolish Capital Punishment, often pointed out, with some pride, that none of his clients was ever executed.

Dar Runga (där rön'gä). [Also, Dar Rounga.] Former Negro kingdom and vassal state of Ouadai, in C Africa, on the borders of Chad and Ubangi-Shari territories, French Equatorial Africa, near the border of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

Dart (därt). River in SW England, in Devonshire, rising in Dartmoor and flowing SE past Totnes to the English Channel at Dartmouth. Length (to Totnes), 36 mi.; the estuary (to Dartmouth) is additionally ab. 11 mi. long. The river is navigable to Totnes.

Dart, Raymond Arthur. b. at Toowong (now part of Brisbane, Australia, Feb. 4, 1893—. Australian neuroanatomist, palaeontologist, and anthropologist, professor of anatomy (1923 et seq.) at the University of Witwatersrand.

D'Artagnan (dar.ta.nyäñ; Anglicized, där.tan'yan). See Artagnan, D'.

D'Artagnon (dar.ta.nyôñ). See Artagnon.

Dartford (därt'ford). Municipal borough and market town in SE England, in Kent, situated on the river Darent ab. 17 mi. SE of London by rail. Its industries are paper-making, drug and chemical manufacture, flour-milling, cement-making, and brewing. Dartford is a railway junction and has facilities for importing coal and raw materials. There are large chalk quarries nearby. It is a rapidly expanding town located beyond the Outer Ring of London. 37,905 (1951).

Dartiguenave (dar.tēg.náv), Philippe Sudre. President of Haiti (1915–22). He was chosen (Aug. 12, 1915) president by the Haitian congress during American intervention. He signed a treaty (1916) with the U.S. assuring aid for ten years in development of Haitian resources and in the establishment of a firm financial system. A revolt (July, 1918 et seq.) against U.S. authority was suppressed, and peace restored in May, 1920.

Dartle (där'tl), Rosa. In Charles Dickens's David Copperfield, Mrs. Steerforth's excitable companion, in love with Steerforth. She has a scar on her face, caused by Steerforth in his youth.

Dartmoor (därt'mör). Granitic moorland region in SW England, in Devonshire, situated N of Plymouth. It abounds in British antiquities, and is the seat of a prison (opened in 1809 as a military prison) where American seamen were detained in the War of 1812, and where French prisoners of war were confined during the wars with Napoleon; it was made into a convict prison in 1850. Elevation, ab. 1,500 ft.; length, ab. 25 mi.; breadth, ab. 15 mi.

Dartmouth (därt'muth). [Full official name, Borough of Clifton Dartmouth Hardness.] Municipal borough, seaport, and market town in SW England, in Devonshire, situated on the W side of the estuary of the river Dart, opposite Kingswear (the railway terminus), ab. 26 mi. S of Exeter, ab. 209 mi. SW of London by rail. Dartmouth is reached from Kingswear by steam ferries. The Royal Naval Cadet Training College is located here. Dartmouth was an important seaport in the Middle Ages, but is now only of minor importance. 5,842 (1951).

Dartmouth. Town in SE Massachusetts, in Bristol County, near Buzzards Bay: trading point for agricultural and dairy products. 11,115 (1950).

Dartmouth. Seaport in Halifax County, Nova Scotia, Canada, situated on the N side of Halifax Harbor across from the city of Halifax. It is served by motor road and rail line. 15,037 (1951).

Dartmouth, Barons and Earls of. Titles held by various members of the Legge family.

Dartmouth. A former name of Anamosa.

Dartmouth College. Nonsectarian, privately endowed institution of higher learning for men, founded by Eleazer Wheelock, chartered in 1769, opened in 1770, and situated at Hanover, N.H. For a time a state college was affiliated with Dartmouth, but in 1893 this was established separately and became the University of New Hampshire. Chiefly concerned with courses in the liberal arts, Dartmouth also comprises the Tuck School of Business Administration, the Thayer School of Civil Engineering, a school of medicine, and other divisions, as well as the Baker Memorial Library.

Dartmouth College Case. [Formally cited as Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton 518 (1819).] In the history of American jurisprudence, a case which derives great importance from its bearing on the law of corporations. It originated in a dispute between the president and trustees of Dartmouth College. The former, having been removed from office by the latter, appealed to the legislature of New Hampshire, which passed a bill amending the charter of the college, whereby a new corporation was created under the title of Dartmouth University, the property of the college being vested in the new corporation. The college trustees brought action in the Court of Common Pleas in 1817 to recover the property. The case came by appeal before the Supreme Court of the U.S., which in 1819 rendered a decision in favor of the trustees. The decision, by Chief Justice John Marshall, held that a charter is a contract between the state and the corporation created by the charter, and that, as the states are prohibited by the Constitution from passing any laws impairing the obligations of contracts, charters are unalterable except by consent of the corporations created by them. The plaintiffs were represented by Daniel Webster.

Darton (där'tọn). Urban district in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Dearne, ab. 4 mi. NW of Barnsley, ab. 194 mi. N of London by rail. 14,400 (1951).

Daru (dȧ.rü), Napoléon, Comte. b. at Paris, June 11, 1807; d. there, Feb. 19, 1890. French politician; son of Pierre Antoine Daru (1767–1829). He was vice-president (1850–51) of the Legislative Assembly, and minister of foreign affairs in 1870.

Daru, Pierre Antoine, Comte. [Full family name, Pierre Antoine Noël Bruno.] b. at Montpellier, France, Jan. 12, 1767; d. at Becheville, near Meulan, France, Sept. 5, 1829. French statesman and historian. Although an adherent of the principles of the French Revolution, he was imprisoned (1793–94). He became (c1795) intendant-general of the army of the Danube, and was named (c1805) councilor of state; became minister of state in 1811, and a member of the Chamber of Peers in 1819. His chief work is Histoire de la république de Venise (1819–21).

Darwar (där.wär'). See Dharwar.

Darwen (där'wẹn, dar'ẹn). [Also, Over Darwen.] Municipal borough, market town, and manufacturing center in NW England, in Lancashire, ab. 18 mi. NW of Manchester, ab. 203 mi. NW of London by rail. It has manufactures of coarse cotton cloth, primarily for the Oriental trade. Other industries include paper making, coal mining, and plastics and soap manufactures. Darwen formerly had an iron industry. 30,827 (1951).

Darwin (där'win). [Former name, Palmerston.] City in N Australia, a seaport and the principal urban settlement in Northern Territory. Situated on the Timor Sea, it is the administrative center for the Northern Territory. The city was almost completely destroyed by Japanese bombs during World War II. 5,543 (1937).

Darwin, Sir Charles Galton. b. at Cambridge, England, Dec. 19, 1887—. English physicist, son of Sir George Howard Darwin. He has been Tait professor (1923–35) of natural philosophy at the University of Edinburgh, and director (1939 et seq.) of the National Physical Laboratory. He is the author of The New Conceptions of Matter (1931) and other works.

Darwin, Charles Robert. b. at Shrewsbury, England, Feb. 12, 1809; d. at Down, Kent, England, April 19, 1882. English naturalist, original expounder of the theory of evolution by natural selection since known as Darwinism; grandson of Erasmus Darwin (1731–1802) and father of Sir Francis Darwin (1848–1925). Though he studied medicine at Edinburgh and began to prepare for the ministry at Cambridge, his absorbing interest in natural history brought him in touch with the botanist John Stevens Henslow, who secured Darwin's appointment as naturalist with the around-the-world expedition which sailed on H.M.S. Beagle in 1831. The Beagle, on a surveying cruise, stopped at various points along the South American coast and at such neighboring islands as the Galapagos; then it headed across the Pacific to Tahiti, New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania, the Maldives, St. Helena, Brazil, and the Cape Verde and Azores islands, returning to England in 1836. Darwin was much struck by the variations in species in adjacent areas at which the ship stopped, by the close resemblance of the island species to similar species on the mainland, by the differences between fossils and living species in the same area; and he began to attempt to formulate his ideas of the succession of the species. He became friendly with Sir Charles Lyell, the noted geologist, in the period 1838–41, when he was secretary of the Royal Geological Society. In 1842 he took up residence in the secluded village of Down, in Kent, where he devoted himself to a life of study and scientific research. Taking his inspiration from Thomas Malthus's Essay on Population (1798), which investigates the rigorous economic laws that limit the number of people capable of maintaining life in view of the available food supply, Darwin began to see illustrated in his materials a natural tendency towards selection of the individuals that survived. In 1857 he wrote to Asa Gray, the American botanist, outlining his theories. In 1858 he was the recipient of a manuscript from Alfred Russel Wallace that explained Darwin's own theory, independently arrived at by Wallace, then in the Molucca Islands. On the advice of Lyell and Sir Joseph Hooker, Darwin included Wallace's paper with a sketch of his own work in a communication to the Linnean Society (1858) and in 1859 he published his work, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life, in which he propounded his theory of biological evolution, which came to be known as the Darwinian theory. This book, Darwin's most important and most noted work, discusses his theory of selection and variation of species and marshals the evidence from which the theory developed. The book is said to have sold its first edition in one day; factions sprang up for and against the theory, and within the year the book was beginning to bring to bear that influence that it still maintains as perhaps the leading work in natural philosophy in man's history. Darwin also wrote reports on the biological and geological findings of the Beagle expedition, and other books and monographs. The more important of his later works are The Movements and Habits of Climbing Plants (1865), The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication (1868), and The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex (1871). Few men indeed have so greatly influenced human concepts of life and the universe as has Charles Robert Darwin.

Darwin, Erasmus. b. at Elston, Nottinghamshire, England, Dec. 12, 1731; d. of heart disease, at Derby, England, April 18, 1802. English physician, scientist, poet, and political and religious radical; grandfather, by his first wife, of Charles Robert Darwin, some of whose ideas on evolution he anticipated, and, by his second wife, of Francis Galton. He was educated at Chesterfield Grammar School, at Edinburgh University, where he studied medicine, and at St. John's College, Cambridge. As a prose author, he contributed to the Philosophical Transactions, and wrote Zoonomia, or the Laws of Organic Life (1794–96), A Plan for the Conduct of Female Education in Boarding Schools (1797), expressing views then considered liberal, if not radical, and Phytologia, or the Philosophy of Agriculture and Gardening (1799), which expresses many of his scientific speculations. His works in verse (they are hardly considered poetry today) are of the didactic type so popular in the 18th century. They are The Botanic Garden (1781), in two parts; the first part, The Economy of Vegetation, was published in 1792, the second part, The Loves of the Plants, having come out in 1789. Strangely enough, in view of its later, and present, reputation, it was successful at first, and was praised by Walpole, Cowper, and William Hayley. If the poem is not completely forgotten today it is because of Canning's parody of it, "The Loves of the Triangles," which appeared in his periodical, The Anti-Jacobin. Darwin had enough of a sense of humor (not apparent in his own verse) to laugh at the satire, and was honest enough to admit that it was a good one. His poetry also includes On the Death of Frederick, Prince of Wales (1795) and The Temple of Nature, or the Origin of Society (published 1803, a year after his death), a title that speaks for itself. Darwin knew Rousseau, Watt, Josiah Wedgwood, and Maria Edgeworth's father. Johnson he knew and disliked intensely, a feeling that Johnson fully returned, which was natural enough in view of the radicalism of the one and the conservatism of the other.

Darwin, Sir Francis. b. at Down, Kent, England, Aug. 16, 1848; d. at Cambridge, England, Sept. 19, 1925. English botanist; son of Charles Robert Darwin. He was long associated with Trinity Hall at Cambridge University, and conducted important botanical research. His intimate knowledge of his father's work and thought lend authority to his Life and Letters of Charles Darwin (1887) and Foundations of the Origin of Species (1909).

Darwin, Sir George Howard. b. at Down, Kent, England, July 9, 1845; d. at London, Dec. 7, 1912. English physicist and astronomer; son of Charles Robert Darwin. He was (1883–1912) Plumian professor of astronomy and experimental philosophy at Cambridge. The most notable of his works is The Tides and Kindred Phenomena in the Solar System (1898).

Darwin, Leonard. b. 1850; d. in Sussex, England, March 26, 1943. English engineer and economist, an advocate of world eugenic reforms; son of Charles Robert Darwin. He attended the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and served (1885–90) on the staff of the intelligence department of the war office. He was president (1908–11) of the Royal Geographical Society, headed (1911–28) the Eugenics Education Society, and was chairman (1913–20) of Bedford College for Women, University of London. His works include Bimetallism (1898), Municipal Trade (1903), and The Need for Eugenic Reform (1926). The Darwin Mountains in Antarctica were named for him.

Darwin, Mount. [Spanish, Monte Darwin.] One of the chief peaks in Tierra del Fuego, Chile. Elevation, ab. 6,900 ft.

Darwinism (där'win.iz.ẹm). Name given to the particular body of ideas concerning biological evolution set forth in the writings of Charles Robert Darwin. In the mid-19th century, the surmise of evolution, even in the biological realm, was widely accepted, but in the way of its further development stood the concept of the permanence of species. From his observations during a long cruise around the world, and from more than 20 years of study thereafter, Darwin adduced proofs of the mutability of species, and in his epoch-making book On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life (1859), he undertook to show that variations are constantly occurring within species as the result of the struggle for survival, which compels individual members or components of a species to achieve better adaptation to environment, or perish. Proof of the origin of species as a result of such mutations made unnecessary the concept of special creation of each species, and this had profound effects upon late 19th- and early 20th-century philosophical and religious thinking. Popular fancy seized upon the notion that Darwinism meant among other things that men are descended from monkeys, an idea over which religious fundamentalists have waxed indignant. Long since, however, most theologians have conceded that the Scriptural account of the Creation is to be understood metaphorically, that its six "days" can be conceived of as vast periods of time, during which the process of evolution worked out, even to the emergence of man, at some unknown point, from lower forms of life. The theory of evolution, with additions to and modifications of Darwin's outline of it, is now universally accepted by scientists, and has become a background to the concepts of life and the universe held by most of literate mankind. Thus Darwinism may be said to have brought about one of the most profound and most far-reaching revolutions in human thought, in all of recorded history.

Darwin Mountains. Mountains in Antarctica, in the Britannia Range, rising NW of Barne Inlet, on the W side of the Ross Shelf Ice, in ab. 79°50′ S., 157°10′ E. They were discovered by the National Antarctic Expedition (1901–04), under the command of Captain Robert F. Scott, who named these mountains for Leonard Darwin, at that time honorary secretary, later president, of the Royal Geographical Society. Elevation, ab. 6,200 ft.

Darya-i-nur (där'yä.ē.nör'). [Eng. trans., "Sea (or River) of Light."] Largest diamond belonging to the Shah of Iran. It weighs 186 carats and is rectangular in shape.

Daryal Pass (där.yäl'). [Also, Dariel Pass.] Chief pass in the Caucasus Mountains of the U.S.S.R., in the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic, situated in the central part of the chain. It is traversed by a military road, the route between Tiflis (Tbilisi) and Dzaudzhikau (Vladikavkaz). It is probably the ancient Caucasian or Iberian Gates (Caucasiae Pylae). Elevation, ab. 6,000 ft.

Das (däs), Chitta Ranjan. b. at Calcutta, India, Nov. 5, 1870; d. at Darjeeling, India, June 16, 1925. Indian statesman. He gave up a lucrative law practice to become the foremost leader of the Indian nationalist movement after the early failure of the noncoöperation campaign (1918 et seq.). Breaking with Gandhi, he formed the Swaraj Party in 1923 in Bengal to capture legislative seats on behalf of the nationalist movement. Critical of the parliamentary practices and political organization imposed by contact with the West, he urged the establishment of institutions more consistent with Indian tradition, and stressed political freedom for the Indian masses as well as for the middle class. He was president (1922) of the Indian National Congress, and first mayor (1924) of Calcutta.

Dasara or Dussera (du'sạ.rạ). Hindu festival held in September-October which commemorates the victory of Durga, a form of Devi, consort of the god Shiva, over the buffalo-headed demon Mahisha. It also celebrates the victory of Rama, hero of the Ramayana, over Ravana, the demon king of Ceylon. Originally, it was a festival for the Ganges. Hindus worship household gods and sacred books on that day, and martial communities perform rites before their weapons. In general, ritual homage is paid to the means of livelihood. It is an auspicious day on which to begin the education of children. The nine preceding nights are known as Navaratri, "nine nights," during which hymns are read before the image of Durga, and flower offerings are placed there. On the tenth day the image is thrown into the water. The word Dasara is from the term for "ten days."

Dasent (dā'sẹnt), Sir George Webbe. b. on the island of St. Vincent, British West Indies, May 22, 1817; d. near Ascot, Berkshire, England, June 11, 1896. English lawyer and author, best known as a student of Scandinavian literature. While on diplomatic service at Stockholm in 1840, he was interested by Jakob Grimm in Scandinavian literature and began his investigations into Icelandic. He published a translation of The Prose or Younger Edda (1842), Popular Tales from the Norse (1859), Saga of Burnt Njal (1861), The Vikings of the Baltic (1875). From 1845–70 he was one of the assistant editors of the London Times. He was professor (1853) of English literature and modern history at King's College, London.

Dash (däsh), Comtesse. Pseudonym of Saint-Mars, Gabrielle Anne de Cisternes de Courtiras, Marquise de Poilow de.

Dashur (dä.shör'). See Dahshur.

Dashwood (dash'wụd), Elinor and Marianne. Two sisters in Jane Austen's novel Sense and Sensibility. Elinor represents "sense," as opposed to Marianne's "sensibility" or exaggerated sentiment.

Dashwood, Elizabeth Monica. [Pseudonym, E. M. Delafield; maiden name, de la Pasture; full name, Edmée Elizabeth Monica Dashwood.] b. in Sussex, England, 1890; d. at Cullompton, Devonshire, England, Dec. 2, 1943. English novelist, short-story writer, and dramatist; daughter of Lady Clifford, Mrs. Henry de la Pasture (a surname of which her pseudonym is an Anglicized version). She was author of the novels Zella Sees Herself (1917), The Pelicans and The War-Workers (both 1918), Consequences (1919), Tension (1920), Heel of Achilles and Humbug (both 1921), The Optimist (1922), Mrs. Harter (1924), The Chip and the Block (1925), Jill (1926), The Way Things Are (1927), What is Love? (1928; American title, First Love), Diary of a Provincial Lady (1931), Challenge to Clarissa (1931; American title, House Party), The Provincial Lady Goes Further (1932; American title, The Provincial Lady in London), Thank Heaven Fasting (1932; American title, A Good Man's Love), and Gay Life (1933). Her short stories were published in Messalina of the Suburbs (1924), The Entertainment (1927), and Women Are Like That (1929). She also wrote To See Ourselves (1932), The Glass Wall (1933), and The Mulberry Bush (1935), plays; General Impressions (1933), notebooks of sketches, The Provincial Lady in America (1934) and The Provincial Lady in Wartime (1940), travel books, and Straw Without Bricks (1937; American title, I Visit the Soviet).

Dashwood, Francis. [Title, 15th Baron le Despencer.] b. in December, 1708; d. at West Wycombe, England, Dec. 11, 1781. English nobleman notorious for his profligacy. He was expelled from Italy by the Roman Catholic Church, and obtained a minor post in the household of the Prince of Wales. He was also a member of Parliament (1741, 1747, 1754, 1761). He organized (c1755) the "Hell-fire Club" or "Monks of Medmenham Abbey," known after him also as the "Franciscans," whose orgies included obscene parodies of Franciscan rites. They borrowed their motto from Rabelais and carved it over a doorway in their ruined abbey: "Fay ce que voudras" ("do what you will"). Other leaders in the group were John Montagu, Earl of Sandwich (1718–92), John Wilkes (1727–97), and George Bubb Dodington (1691–1762).

Daskam (das'kam), Josephine Dodge. See Bacon, Josephine Dodge.

Dass (däs), Petter. [Called the "Father of Modern Norwegian Poetry."] b. on the island of Nord Herø, Norway, 1647; d. 1707. Norwegian poet. He was the son of a Scot, Peter Dundas, who settled in Norway. From his remote northern birthplace he went to Copenhagen for his higher education, and became an ordained clergyman in 1672. In 1689 he was appointed to a living in northern Norway which assured him of opportunity to indulge his poetic talent. Den norska Dale-Vise (The Norwegian Song of the Valley) was published in 1696, but most of his writings, though widely circulated in manuscript, were never printed during his lifetime. Posthumously, his Andelig Tidsfordriv (Spiritual Pastime) was issued in 1711, but it was not until 1739 that his greatest poem, Nordlands Trompet (The Trumpet of Nordland), saw print. On this rests his enduring fame and his place in the hearts of his countrymen. By virtue of its lively verse, its humor, imagination, and echoes of ancient lore, this rhymed celebration of the province of Nordland, its beauties and its ways of life, remains vivid and vital, and Norwegians of all ranks and classes can quote long passages from it. Dass's collected works in three volumes were published in 1874.

D'Asumar (dä.zü.mär), Count. Character in Alain René Le Sage's Gil Blas.

Daszyński (dä.shin'skē), Ignacy. b. 1860; d. 1936. Polish politician and journalist, a leader of the Polish Socialist Party. He organized the Socialist Party in Galicia and Silesia (1892), was editor in chief of its daily newspaper, Naprzód, at Kraków, and a member of the Austrian parliament (1897–1918). With Pilsudski, whose political adherent he was, he founded a commission of parties which fought (1911–14) for Polish independence and sponsored the creation of secret military formations. During World War I, he was a member of the Polish National Committee at Kraków, which aimed at rebuilding a Polish state in coöperation with Austria. When Poland became independent (1918), he became premier of its first government. Afterwards he was a member of the parliament and its speaker (1928). He published a considerable number of political pamphlets and other works.

Data (dä'tä). Extinct volcano in the Caraballos Occidentales range, in the W central part of Mountain province, Luzon, in the Philippine Islands. 7,364 ft.

Datchery (dach'ėr.i), Dick. Mysterious person with white hair and a military air who appears inexplicably at Cloisterham, in Charles Dickens's Mystery of Edwin Drood.

Date 1601: Conversation, as it Was by the Social Fireside, in the Time of the Tudors. Humorous prose (1880) by Samuel Langhorne Clemens (Mark Twain). One of his minor works, it has been criticized for displaying a lack of good taste.

Dathan (dā'thạn). In Old Testament history, a Reubenite chieftain; son of Eliab, and brother of Abiram. He joined the conspiracy of Korah and was swallowed up by the earth.

Datia (du'ti.ä). [Also, Datiya.] Town in the Bundelkhand region, in Vindhya Pradesh (formerly Central India states), Union of India, ab. 120 mi. SW of Cawnpore: a trading center and major road and rail junction. 24,071 (1941).

Datis (dā'tis). Median general who, with Artaphernes, commanded the army of Darius I which was defeated (490 B.C.) at Marathon by the Athenians.

Dato Iradier (dä'tō ē.rä.ᵺyer'), Eduardo. b. at La Coruña, Spain, 1850; assassinated at Madrid, March 8, 1921. Spanish statesman and jurist. Elected deputy to the Cortes in 1883 he represented conservative interests and held the portfolio of the interior ministry under Maura (1899–1900). He served as minister of justice (1903–06) and was made alcalde of Madrid in 1907. As president of the Cortes and premier in the period 1913–15 and, after a short interval, again in 1915, it fell to his lot to declare Spain neutral in World War I. In 1918 he was minister of foreign affairs and was called back to the premiership in 1920. On March 8, 1921, he was assassinated by an anarchist bomb thrown during the uprisings at Barcelona which accompanied the general elections of that year. His contributions to social legislation were outstanding. In 1900 he proposed the first Spanish legislation for the benefit of labor, including accident insurance and a law protecting women and child workers. In 1920 he revived the Instituto de Reformas Sociales and created a ministry of labor.

Daub (doup), Karl. b. at Kassel, Germany, March 20, 1765; d. at Heidelberg, Germany, Nov. 22, 1836. German Protestant theologian, professor of theology (1795 et seq.) at Heidelberg. His works include Lehrbuch der Katechetik (1801), Theologumena (1806), Die dogmatische Theologie jetziger Zeit (1833), and others.

Daubenton (dō.bäṅ.tôṅ), Louis Jean Marie. b. at Montbar, Côte-d'Or, France, May 29, 1716; d. at Paris, Jan. 1, 1800. French naturalist. He was the collaborator of Buffon, writing the physical descriptions of the animals, in the first part of his Histoire naturelle and author of numerous scientific treatises and monographs.

Daubeny (dô'bẹ.ni, dôb'ni), Charles Giles Bridle. b. at Stratton, Gloucestershire, England, Feb. 11, 1795; d. Dec. 13, 1867. English geologist and chemist. His chief work was Description of Volcanoes (1826).

Dauber (dôb'ėr). Narrative poem of the sea (1913) by John Masefield. The poem, named after its sailor hero, who is also an artist, is partly autobiographical in that it is based on the author's memories and experiences after he left his Shropshire home and ran away to sea. Dauber, who wants to paint the water he sails on, rather than clean the decks of the ship, is not understood by his rough comrades, and he finally dies in a storm.

Daubigny (dō.bē.nyē), Charles François. b. at Paris, Feb. 15, 1817; d. there, Feb. 19, 1878. French landscape painter, a pupil of Paul Delaroche and a member of the Barbizon School. In 1838 he made his debut at the Paris Salon with a view of Notre Dame and the Île St.-Louis, and was continuously represented in the Salons, except those of 1842–46. At the Salon of 1850–51 he exhibited The Washerwomen of the River Oullins, The Vintage, and other works, which created a sensation among artists and connoisseurs by their brilliant technique and emphasis on naturalism. He also painted The Harvest (1851–57), The Lake of Glylieu (1852–53), The Lock of Optevoz (1855), The Graves of Villerville (1859), The Banks of the Oise (1859), and others. He was made (July 15, 1859) chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Daubigny, Karl Pierre. b. 1846; d. 1886. French painter; son of Charles François Daubigny.

Daudet (dō.de), Alphonse. b. at Nîmes, France, May 13, 1840; d. at Paris, Dec. 16, 1897. French humorist and novelist. He went to school at Lyons, and then worked as a tutor for two years. In 1857 he settled at Paris, and published shortly afterward a collection of poems, Les Amoureuses. The Figaro published his account of a tutor's hardships, Les Gueux de province. A series of papers contributed to the same journal came out in book form as Le Chaperon rouge (1861). A second collection of poems, La Double Conversion, was published in 1859. Daudet wrote his Lettres sur Paris to Le Petit Moniteur under the nom de plume of Jehan de l'Isle in 1865. His first real success, Lettres de mon moulin, signed with the name Gaston-Marie, were addressed to L'Événement in 1866. Daudet's early publications include Le Petit Chose (1868), Lettres à un absent (1871), Les Aventures prodigieuses de Tartarin de Tarascon (1872), Les Petits Robinsons des caves (1872), Contes du lundi (1873), Contes et récits (1873), Robert Helmont (1874), Les Femmes d'artistes (1874), and Fromont jeune et Risler aîné (1874), a great success. There followed Jack (1876), Le Nabab (1877), Les Rois en exil (1879), Contes choisis, la fantaisie et l'histoire (1879), Numa Roumestan (1881), Les Cigognes (1883), L'Evangéliste (1883), Sapho (1884), Tartarin sur les Alpes (1885), La Belle Nivernaise (1886), Trente ans de Paris (1887), Souvenirs d'un homme de lettres (1888), L'Immortel (1888), and Port Tarascon (1890). Either unassisted or in collaboration with others he dramatized a number of his works, leaving them with their original titles. In like manner he brought out La Dernière Idole (1862), Les Absents (1863), L'Œillet blanc (1864), Le Frère aîné (1868), L'Arlésienne (1872), Lise Tavernier (1872), and finally La Lutte pour la vie, based on his novel L'Immortel.

Daudet, Julie Rosalie Céleste. [Pseudonym, Karl Steen; maiden name, Julie Rosalie Céleste Allard.] b. at Paris, 1847; d. 1940. French poet and essayist; wife of Alphonse Daudet (1840–97). She was the author of Enfance d'une Parisienne (1883) and of collections of poems including Reflets sur le sable et sur l'eau (1903) and Les Archipels lumineux (1913). She is perhaps most valued today for her memoirs, Souvenirs autour d'un groupe littéraire (1909) and Journal de famille et de guerre (1920).

Daudet, Léon. b. at Paris, Nov. 16, 1867; d. at St.-Rémy-de-Provence, France, July 1, 1942. French journalist and writer; son of Alphonse Daudet (1840–97). He served as editorial writer (1908 et seq.) for the Royalist Action Française. Author of Le Stupide 19 Siècle (1922) and more than 80 other works, including novels, memoirs, and polemic essays, he is remembered less for his writing than as a public figure. Long a moving spirit among antirepublican Royalists, he amused two generations with his vigorous polemics against the government and with his escapades, which included his escape from political imprisonment, first word of which reached the public through a story in his own newspaper. He served as a deputy for Paris (1919–24), but failed to be elected when he ran for the senate in 1926.

Daudet, Louis Marie Ernest. b. at Nîmes, France, May 31, 1837; d. 1921. French journalist, historian, and novelist; brother of Alphonse Daudet. He was the author of Histoire des conspirations royalistes du Midi (1881), Histoire de la restauration (1882), Histoire de l'émigration (1886–89), and others. Among his numerous novels are Thérèse (1859), Fleur de péché (1872), Daniel de Kerfons (1878), Dolorès (1879), Défroqué (1882), and Gisèle Rubens (1887).

Daudin (dō.daṅ), François Marie. b. at Paris, March 25, 1774; d. there, 1804. French naturalist, author of numerous works on the various branches of zoölogy.

Dauferius (dô.fir'i.us) or Daufar (dô'fär). Original name of Pope Victor III.

Daugava (dou'gä.vä). Lettish name of the Dvina, in W U.S.S.R.

Daugavpils (dou'gäf.pēls). [German, Dünaburg; Lithuanian, Daugpilis (douk'pē.lēs); Russian, Dvinsk.] City and former fortress in NW U.S.S.R., in Latvia. It was founded by Livonian knights in the 13th century, and incorporated in Russia in 1772. It was strongly fortified. The modern city is a rail and market center for a farming and lumbering region. 45,000 (1939).

Daugherty (dô'ér.ti), Harry Micajah. b. at Washington Court House, Ohio, Jan. 26, 1860; d. at Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 12, 1941. American lawyer, politician, and one-time (1921–24) U.S. attorney general, notable for his connection with the Teapot Dome scandal. Harding's close friend and a chief figure in securing his nomination, Daugherty resigned his cabinet post under pressure from Coolidge on March 28, 1924, after Harding's death. His exact connection with the bribes allegedly received by Secretary of the Interior A. B. Fall has never been established, but a Senate investigating committee charged Daugherty with dealings in Sinclair oil stock, and Sinclair was a chief beneficiary of Fall's mishandling of public lands. He was tried (1927) for conspiracy to defraud but the case died after jury disagreements. Daugherty's book, The Inside Story of the Harding Tragedy (1932), claims that the Harding administration has been misrepresented and that his own resignation from the cabinet was the result of animosities within Congress.

Daugherty, James Henry. b. at Asheville, N.C., June 1, 1889—. American mural painter, illustrator, lithographer, and writer. He was educated at the Corcoran School of Art at Washington, D.C., and the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts at Philadelphia, and he has exhibited widely in the U.S. He painted murals for the Stamford, Conn., High School, for Loew's Theater at Cleveland, Ohio, and for the Thomas Cook pavilion at the Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial Exposition. Among the books he has illustrated are Carl Sandburg's Abe Lincoln Grows Up, Stephen Vincent Benét's John Brown's Body, and Washington Irving's Knickerbocker's History of New York. He was both author and illustrator of Daniel Boone and Poor Richard.

Daughter, The. Play in verse by J. Sheridan Knowles, produced in 1836.

"Daughter of the Confederacy." See Davis, Varina Anne Jefferson.

Daughter of the Forest. Opera in one act by Arthur Nevin, with a libretto by Randolph Hartley, first performed at the Chicago Auditorium on Jan. 5, 1918.

Daughter of the Middle Border, A. Autobiographical narrative by Hamlin Garland, published in 1921 as a sequel to A Son of the Middle Border (1917). It was awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1922.

Daughter of the Regiment, The. English title of Fille du Régiment, La.

Daughter of the Storage and Other Things in Prose and Verse, The. Volume of short narratives, sketches, and dialogues (1916) by William Dean Howells. The volume also includes Self-Sacrifice: A Farce-Tragedy and The Night Before Christmas: A Morality.

Daughter of the Tenements, A. Novel (1895) of Italian and Jewish life in New York City, by E. W. Townsend.

Daughters of the American Revolution. [Abbreviation, DAR.] Patriotic society organized at Washington, D.C., on Oct. 11, 1890. Any woman is eligible for membership who is descended from a man or woman, of recognized patriotism, who rendered material aid to the cause of independence. It maintains headquarters at Washington and has many local chapters.

Daughters of the Late Colonel, The. Psychological short story by Katherine Mansfield. It is included in her volume of 15 stories, The Garden Party (1922).

Daughters of the Revolution. Patriotic society organized at New York, on Aug. 20, 1891. Membership is restricted to women who are lineal descendants of an ancestor who was in actual military or naval service under any of the 13 colonies or states, or a member of the Continental Congress, or are descendants of one who signed the Declaration of Independence, or of an official who actually assisted in establishing American independence and became liable to conviction of treason against the government of Great Britain.

Daughter To Philip. Novel by Beatrice Kean Seymour, published in 1933.

Daukantas (dou.kän'täs), Simanas. b. at Kalviai, Skuodas township, Lithuania, Oct. 28, 1793; d. at Papilė, Lithuania, Dec. 6, 1864. Lithuanian patriot, author, and student of history.

Daulatabad (dou''lat.ą.bäd'). [Also, Dowlatabad; former names, Deoghir, Deoghur.] Ancient fortress in Hyderabad, Union of India, ab. 165 mi. NE of Bombay: noted for its strong position on an isolated rock.

Daulatshah (dou.lät.shä'). Persian writer of the 15th century, author of a biography of the celebrated poets of Persia.

Daule (dou'lā). City in W Ecuador, in Guayas province. 18,089 (est. 1944).

Daule River. River in W Ecuador. It flows S to the Gulf of Guayaquil.

Daulis (dô'lis). In ancient geography, a city in Phocis, Greece, situated ab. 12 mi. E of Delphi. It is the setting of the myth of Tereus, Philomela, and Procne.

D'Aulnoy or D'Aunoy (dō.nwà), Comtesse (or Madame). See Aulnoy or Aunoy, Marie Catherine Jumel de Berneville, Comtesse d'.

Daumas (dō.mà), Melchior Joseph Eugène. b. Sept. 4, 1803; d. near Bordeaux, France, May 6, 1871. French general and diplomat, and writer on Algeria. He was consul in Algeria (1837–39), and was occupied with important administrative duties during the struggle with Abd-el-Kadir. He wrote Le Sahara algérien (1845) and Les Chevaux du Sahara et les mœurs du desert (5th ed., 1858).

Daumat (dō.mà), Jean. See Domat or Daumat, Jean.

Daumer (dou'mėr), Georg Friedrich. b. at Nuremberg, Germany, March 5, 1800; d. at Würzburg, Germany, Dec. 13, 1875. German poet and philosophical writer.

Daumier (dō.myā), Honoré. b. at Marseilles, France, Feb. 20, 1808; d. at Valmondois, France, Feb. 11, 1879. French painter, lithographer, and caricaturist. His father was a glazier who published a small volume of verses in 1823, and who tried to keep his son from an artistic career. But Honoré learned lithography and joined the staff of the journal La Caricature, where he began his life-long series of satiric works on the bourgeoisie, the law, and government incompetence. In 1832 Honoré was condemned to six months' imprisonment for a lithograph depicting Louis Philippe as Gargantua. He subsequently joined the staff of Charivari, founded by Charles Philipon. He continued his work of bitingly sarcastic plates, picking on the inanities of the middle class and the counterfeit classicism of the times. His paintings, on the other hand, are sober and more traditional, but Daumier's realism, before realism in painting became popular, never received the recognition due it during his lifetime. He became completely blind sometime between 1850 and 1860, but not before he had turned out more than 3,950 lithographs and some 200 canvases.

Daun (doun), Count Leopold (Joseph Maria) von. [Also, Dhaun.] b. at Vienna, Sept. 24, 1705; d. there, Feb. 5, 1766. Austrian field marshal. He was distinguished in the Turkish war (1737–39) and in the Silesian wars (1741–45), defeated Frederick the Great at Kolín in 1757 and at Hochkirch in 1758, captured Finck's army at Maxen in 1759, and was defeated by Frederick at Torgau in 1760.

Daunou (dō.nö), Pierre Claude François. b. at Boulogne, France, Aug. 18, 1761; d. at Paris, June 20, 1840. French historian and politician. He was deputy (1792–95) to the Convention, first president of the Council of Five Hundred in 1795, and a member of the Tribunate (1800–02). His chief work is Cours d'études historiques (1842–49).

Dauphin (dô'fin). Town in the province of Manitoba, Canada, situated on the Vermilion River in the W part of the province. It is connected by rail and road with Portage la Prairie and Winnipeg, and is an agricultural market center specializing in wheat, cattle, and poultry. 6,007 (1951).

Dauphin (dō.faṅ; Anglicized, dô'fin). Title borne (1364 et seq.) by any of several male heirs (there were no female claimants) to the French throne. It originated as the title of the rulers of the old county of Vienne, perhaps as a personal name, and was borne by the Dauphins of the Viennois on their coats of arms as a dolphin. In 1285 the name Dauphiné was first applied to the county ruled by Humbert, Dauphin of Vienne. When Philip VI of Valois, king of France, took possession of the lands, the title was given to his grandson, who was to become Charles V of France, the first to bear the title of Dauphin of France. The eldest sons of the French kings were inheritors of the title; most famous was Monseigneur, Louis de Bourbon, son of Louis XIV and grandfather of Louis XV; the last to bear the title was the eldest son of Charles X, Louis Antoine de Bourbon, Duke of Angoulême, who renounced the throne in 1830. The title was also used by the rulers of the dauphinate of Auvergne from 1155 to 1693.

Dauphiné (dō.fē.nā). [English, Dauphiny (dô'fi.ni); Medieval Latin, Delphinatus.] Region and medieval county of France, bounded by the Rhone River on the W and N, by Savoy on the N, Piedmont on the E, Provence on the S, and Comtat-Venaissin on the SW. Its territory formed the departments Isère, Drôme, and Hautes-Alpes. Its capital was at Grenoble. The surface is generally mountainous. In the early Middle Ages it belonged to the kingdom of Arles.

Dauphine (dô'fin), Sir. In Ben Jonson's comedy Epicoene, or the Silent Woman, the lively and ingenious nephew of Morose. He concocts the plot by which a portion of his uncle's money is given to him and his debts are paid.

Dauphins (dô'finz). See Delphin Classics.

Daurat (dō.rà), Jean. See Dorat or Daurat, Jean.

Dauria (dä.ō'ri.ạ) or Daur (dä.ör'). Name of a district in the former region of Trans-Baikal, Siberia, situated SE of Lake Baikal on the Chinese frontier; now part of the Buryat-Mongol Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic.

Dauthendey (dou'tẹn.dī), Max. b. at Würzburg, Germany, July 25, 1867; d. at Malang, Java, in August, 1918. German lyric poet who wrote at first under the influence of Stefan George and the symbolists but found congenial themes and forms for his later works through contact with the Far East, especially Japan. His prose works include Die acht Gesichter am Biwasee (1911). His poetry is represented in Ausgewählte Lieder (1914). His play Die Spielereien einer Kaiserin (1910) treats of Catherine the Great and her lover Menshikov.

Dautry (dō.trē), Raoul François. b. in France, Sept. 16, 1880; d. Aug. 21, 1951. French railway executive and political leader, general administrator and government representative (1947 et seq.) of the French atomic energy board. He directed (1928–37) the state railway system, was administrative deputy (1937–39) of the Compagnie Générale d'Électricité, was minister of armaments (1939–40), headed (1944) the French charity organization L'Entr'aide Française, and was minister of reconstruction and town planning (1944–46).

Davaive (dä.ʙī'ʙā). See Dabaiba.

Davalos (dä.ʙä'lōs), Gil Ramirez. b. at Baeza, in Castile, Spain, c1505; d. at Riobamba, near Quito, Ecuador, after 1561. Spanish soldier. He went to Peru with the viceroy Mendoza in 1551, was corregidor of Cusco in 1553, and was expelled from the city by Giron and his followers. He took part in the campaign against Giron, and in 1556 was made justicia mayor of Quito, subdued the Cañaris Indians in 1557, and from 1558 to 1561 was governor of the so-called Land of Cinnamon, on the Napo River. He founded there Baeza, Archidona, and other towns.

Davao (dä.vou'). Province of the Philippine Islands, in the SE part of Mindanao island. It is bounded by Agusan on the N, the Pacific Ocean on the E and S, and Cotabato (separated by a mountain range) on the W. The S coast is indented by the Gulf of Davao, in which is situated Samal island, a part of the province. Among the bays on the E coast is Pujada Bay, a safe harbor in all weather. The district is very mountainous. The active volcano Apo (9,690 ft.) is in the range separating Davao from Cotabato. The Butulan Mountains extend from S to N parallel with the E coast. The largest river is the Agusan, which rises among the Butulan Mountains and flows N into Agusan province. Many other rivers water the district. Most of the staples, such as hemp and sugar cane, are produced. Forests of teak, ebony, and other valuable woods cover the mountains. Coal and iron are found near Mati, N of Pujada Bay. Capital, Davao; area, 7,450.5 sq. mi.; pop. 364,854 (1948).

Davao. City in the Philippine Islands, the capital of Davao province, situated on the Gulf of Davao, at the mouth of the Davao River on SE Mindanao island: airport. Hemp is grown in the surrounding area. 111,263 (1948).

Davao, Gulf of. Arm of the Pacific Ocean indenting the S coast of Davao province, Mindanao, Philippine Islands. It is partly occupied by Samal island.

Davao River. River in Mindanao, in the Philippine Islands. It rises in the E part of Cotabato province and flows SE through Davao province into the Gulf of Davao.

Daveiss (dā'vis), Joseph Hamilton. [Also, Daviess.] b. in Bedford County, Va., March 4, 1774; d. near Tippecanoe, Ind., Nov. 8, 1811. American lawyer, mortally wounded at the Battle of Tippecanoe, on Nov. 7, 1811.

Davenant (dav'ẹ.nant), Charles. [Original name, D'Avenant.] b. at London, 1656; d. Nov. 6, 1714. English writer on political economy; son of Sir William D'Avenant. His collected works were published in 1771.

D'Avenant or Davenant (dav'ẹ.nant), Sir William. b. at Oxford, England, in February, 1606; d. at London, April 7, 1668. English poet and dramatist. William Oldys is chiefly responsible for the story that D'Avenant was the son of Shakespeare, which seems to rest mainly on the fact that the latter used the inn of one John Davenant (the father of William), at Oxford on his journeys to and from Warwickshire. D'Avenant became (c1620) page to the Duchess of Richmond, and then to Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke. In 1628, after the murder of Greville, he began to write plays. In 1638 he was made poet laureate, and about this time had a severe illness which resulted in the loss of his nose, a fact frequently adverted to by the witty writers of the time. He was manager of Drury Lane Theatre for a time, but, becoming implicated in the various intrigues of the English Civil War, fled to France. Returning in 1643, he was knighted by the king, Charles I, at the siege of Gloucester. While on an expedition (1650) to colonize Virginia, he was captured in the English Channel by a Parliamentary ship. He was imprisoned for two years in the Tower of London for political offenses and expected to be hanged. According to one of John Milton's biographers, Milton was instrumental in saving D'Avenant's life, and after the Restoration (1660) he in turn saved Milton from punishment. Right after his release, he published Gondibert (1651), an epic poem consisting of 1,500 four-line stanzas. After the Restoration (1660) he was in favor at court, and continued to write till his death. Among his plays are Albovine (1629), The Cruel Brother (1630), The Just Italian (1630), The Platonic Lovers (1636), The Wits (1636), The Unfortunate Lovers (1643), Love and Honor (1649), Law against Lovers (played in 1662), and The Rivals (played in 1664). He produced alterations of The Tempest (with Dryden, 1667), of Macbeth (printed 1674), and of Julius Caesar. D'Avenant was the founder of English opera, his Siege of Rhodes (1656) being produced in the period when plays were banned. It was in this opera that a woman first appeared on the English stage.

Davenport (dav'ẹn.pōrt, -pôrt). City in E Iowa, county seat of Scott County, on the Mississippi River. Manufactures include farm machinery, pearl buttons, lumber products, cement, cigars, beer, pumps, steel wheels, washing machines, men's clothing, wooden sole shoes, meat products, and wool textiles. Together with Rock Island, Moline, and East Moline (all in Illinois), it is informally part of a metropolitan area known as the "Quad Cities." It is the seat of St. Ambrose College and the Palmer School of Chiropractic. Davenport was founded in 1836 by George Davenport. It was the home of Dred Scott and of his master, John Emerson, and of Charles Edward Russell, Harry Hansen, Susan Glaspell, and Floyd Dell. 74,549 (1950).

Davenport, Charles Benedict. b. at Stamford, Conn., June 1, 1866; d. at Huntington, Long Island, N.Y., Feb. 18, 1944. American zoölogist, director of the Carnegie Institution Station for Experimental Evolution at Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y., from 1904. He wrote Experimental Morphology (1897–99), Statistical Methods in Biological Variation (1899), Inheritance of Characteristics of Fowl (1909), Eugenics (1910), Elements of Zoölogy (1911), Race Improvement by Eugenics (1911), and others.

Davenport, Edward Loomis. b. at Boston, Nov. 15, 1815; d. at Canton, Pa., Sept. 1, 1877. American actor. He had nine children, all of whom went on the stage (except two who died young), and of whom the most famous was Fanny Davenport.

Davenport, Fanny Lily Gypsy. b. at London, April 10, 1850; d. at South Duxbury, Mass., Sept. 26, 1898. American actress; daughter of Edward Loomis Davenport (1815–77). After appearing as a child actress with her father's company, she played in Mrs. Drew's and Augustin Daly's companies. She is remembered for her roles as Fédora and La Tosca in Sardou's plays and as Nancy Sykes in Oliver Twist.

Davenport, George. b. in Lincolnshire, England, 1783; murdered by robbers, July 4, 1845. American soldier and fur trader. He came (1804) to New York and joined the U.S. army. Settling (1816) at Rock Island, Ill., he traded independently with the Indians until 1826, when he became an agent for the American Fur Company. With associates he purchased (1835) land in Iowa which became the city of Davenport. Familiar with Indian frontier problems, he assisted in the negotiation of the second Black Hawk purchase (1837) and the 1842 Sac and Fox tribes treaty.

Davenport, Homer Calvin. b. at Silverton, Ore., 1867; d. 1912. American cartoonist. Growing up on a farm, he had no instruction in draftmanship, but, self-taught, was able in 1892 to secure employment as a cartoonist on the San Francisco Examiner, and displayed such ability that in 1895 William Randolph Hearst made him a member of the staff of the New York Evening Journal. Quickly acquiring national fame and political influence, he became one of the most highly paid cartoonists up to that time. He created a well-known caricature of Mark Hanna, dressed in a suit covered with dollar signs, and another representing the trusts, which he used persistently and with great popular effect. His version of Uncle Sam also caught popular fancy, and became part of the symbolism of cartoon art. In 1904, having left the Hearst papers to serve the New York Evening Mail, he drew a picture showing Uncle Sam with his hand affectionately on the shoulder of President Theodore Roosevelt, which, with the caption "He's Good Enough for Me," was circulated in millions of copies. Subsequently he returned to the Hearst papers. Equally notable with his cartoons dealing with the American scene were the drawings he made at Paris of persons concerned with the Dreyfus affair. Davenport was also a competent writer, and in addition to his book entitled Cartoons (1898), he published The Bell of Silverton (1899), Other Stories of Oregon (1900), The Dollar or the Man? (1900), My Quest of the Arab Horse (1909), and The Country Boy (1910).

Davenport, Ira Erastus. b. Sept. 17, 1839; d. at Mayville, N.Y., July 8, 1911. American entertainer and spiritualistic medium; brother and partner of William Henry Harrison Davenport (1841–77). Popular on both European and American stages, they developed a complex system of musical cabinets which were controversially described as sleight-of-hand by their detractors and as spiritual manifestations by their faithful followers.

Davenport, John. b. at Coventry, England, 1597; d. at Boston, in March, 1670. English Puritan clergyman who emigrated to Boston in 1637. He was one of the founders of the New Haven colony in 1638.

Davenport, Marcia. [Maiden name, Gluck.] b. at New York, June 9, 1903—. American music critic and novelist; daughter of Alma Gluck (1884–1938). She has been a staff member (1928–31) of The New Yorker and music critic (1934–39) of The Stage Magazine. Her works include the biography Mozart (1932) and the novels Lena Geyer (1936), The Valley of Decision (1942), and East Side, West Side (1947).

Davenport, Thomas. b. at Williamstown, Vt., July 9, 1802; d. July 6, 1851. American inventor, noted for devising a machine which operated on the principles of the modern electric motor. Beginning as a blacksmith's apprentice, he moved (1823) to Brandon, Vt., establishing a blacksmith shop there. His interest in an electric magnet led him to construct a crude but workable electric motor which he patented in 1837. His attempts to manufacture and market improved models of the machine did not succeed because of financial difficulties. His health broken, he retired to a farm at Salisbury, Vt., where just before his death he was engaged in experimental work on an electromagnetic player piano.

Davenport, William Henry Harrison. b. Feb. 1, 1841; d. in Australia, July 1, 1877. American entertainer and spiritualistic medium; brother and partner of Ira Erastus Davenport (1839–1911).

Daventry (dav'ẹn.tri, dān'tri). Urban district and market town in C England, in Northamptonshire, situated between the rivers Leam and Nen and near the Grand Union Canal (which traverses the Northamptonshire Uplands by the water-gap at Daventry), ab. 12 mi. W of Northampton, ab. 74 mi. NW of London by rail. 4,078 (1951).

Davey (dā'vi), John. b. in Somersetshire, England, June 6, 1846; d. Nov. 8, 1923. American tree surgeon. In the greenhouse and landscape-gardening business at Kent, Ohio, he was an expert on ornamental and shade trees before the publication (1902) of his first book, The Tree Doctor, established him as a campaigner for tree care and culture. His other books are A New Era in Tree Growing (1905), Davey's Primer on Trees and Birds (1905), and Instruction Books on Tree Surgery and Fruit Growing (1914).

David (dā'vid). d. c960 B.C. Second king of Israel, c1000–c960 B.C. He was born at Bethlehem, the seventh and youngest son of Jesse of the tribe of Judah. At about the age of 18, while still shepherd of his father's flocks, he was secretly anointed king of Israel by the prophet Samuel. Later he came into a close personal relationship with Saul the king, perhaps through his friendship with the king's son Jonathan, but incurred his bitter enmity. David played music before the king and was his armor bearer. The Philistine giant Goliath was slain by David in single combat. His successes and the praises accorded to him by the people aroused the suspicion and jealousy of Saul (whose daughter Michal David married), which subsequently turned into deadly hatred, so that David was often in jeopardy of his life. He first sought refuge with Samuel, then with the priests in Nob, which resulted in their massacre by Saul, and was finally driven to seek safety with the enemies of his people, the Philistines. But the slayer of Goliath was recognized, and David fled to the wilderness of Judah, where he built a fort at Adullam. There rallied around him "men who were in distress, in debt, and discontented." At the head of these freebooters or outlaws he undertook many expeditions and fought many skirmishes, which made him increasingly popular with the people. All this time he was pursued by Saul, whose mind became more and more darkened; twice the king came into his power, but because of this awe of the "anointed of the Lord" David did not avail himself of these opportunities (1 Sam. xxiv. 4ff., xxvi. 7ff.). He was compelled to become the vassal of the Philistine king Achish of Gath, who gave him for his support Ziklag on the frontier of Philistia. From here he undertook expeditions against the nomadic tribes of the border, while Achish believed that they were directed against Israel (1 Sam. xxvii.). The Philistines gathered a large army against Israel. In the battle of Gilboa Saul and his host lost their lives. David, who was then about 30 years old, succeeded to the throne. For seven and a half years his reign was limited to Judah, the southern kingdom, with his seat at Hebron, while the other tribes were under the scepter of Ishbosheth, son of Saul, residing at Mahanaim, E of the Jordan. Ishbosheth, however, was murdered, and all the tribes recognized David as king; he reigned over the whole of Israel for 33 years. He removed his residence from Hebron to Jerusalem, which he took from the Jebusites, and there established himself in the "city of David," the oldest quarter of Jerusalem, on Mount Zion. Here also the temporary sanctuary was put up (2 Sam. vi.), which made the city the political and religious center of the nation, and gave to David's reign a genuinely royal character. Through a series of successful wars against the Philistines, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Syrians, Amalekites, and others, and by the introduction of a regular administration and organization of court and army, he became the real founder of the monarchical government of Israel. The constitution of the tribes remained intact, but the military organization was a national one. Each tribe sent a contingent of men (over 20 years of age) to the national army, which stood under one commander in chief, Joab, David's nephew. The bodyguard was formed, it seems, of foreigners, the Cherethites and Pelethites (supposed to be Philistines). The nucleus of the army consisted of the band of heroes (gibborim) who rallied about David while he was still an exile. The king presided over judicial cases, and was surrounded by a regular staff of military and administrative counselors and officers. David was also the actual founder of a sanctifying, divine worship, refining and enriching it by the influence of music and psalmody. The last period of his reign was much darkened by national misfortunes and domestic rebellions, the rebellion of his son Absalom, the uprising of Sheba ben Bishri, a drought and famine lasting three years, and a pestilence induced by the counting of the people. Even in his last days when he was prostrated with the infirmities of age, his son Adonijah attempted to secure the succession to which David had appointed Solomon. Solomon was in the eyes of David's other sons, not the rightful heir; Bathsheba, David's wife, had been acquired sinfully and only her hold on the king pushed Solomon to the fore as David's successor. This rebellion, however, like all the others, was successfully repressed, and David died peacefully at the age of 70. He became in tradition the ideal king of Israel, the pattern and standard by which all succeeding rulers were measured, the prototype of the last perfect ruler, the Messiah, who would be descended from David and is sometimes simply called David. As regards the Psalms, modern criticism denies him the authorship of many psalms bearing in the Biblical Book of Psalms the superscription "of David," but there is no reason for entirely disconnecting David from this kind of Hebrew poetry. The probability is that not only did the psalm poetry develop and flourish under his favor, but also that he himself composed a number of the hymns.

David or Dewi (dā'wi), Saint. b. c495; d. c589. Patron saint of Wales. He was bishop of Menevia (afterward called St. David's), where he founded a monastery. According to an account which has no historical foundation, he was appointed metropolitan archbishop of Wales at a synod held at Brefi. The wearing of a leek by the Welsh on St. David's day (March 1) is said to stem back to a suggestion by this saint just before a battle with the Saxons that the Welsh should wear leeks and thus be able to distinguish friend from foe in the heat of battle.

David. [Welsh, Dafydd ap Gwilym or Gwillum.] b. probably at Bro Gynin, in Llanbadarn Vawr parish, Cardiganshire, Wales, c1340; d. c1400. Welsh 14th-century poet and anticlerical song-writer, contemporary with Edward III. His dates and the places of his birth and death are uncertain. According to some, his life span is the same as that of Chaucer; other sources indicate that he was born in 1300, near Llandaff, Glamorganshire, and that he died in 1368, at the Abbey of Talley, in Carmarthenshire. He knew Latin and Italian and is believed to have lived and studied in Italy. He wrote some 147 poems to Morvid (also variously Morvydd or Morfudd or Morfid) of Anglesey, who loved him and with whom he eloped after she had, against her will, married another; the husband, a wealthy old man, is satirized in David's poetry as "Little Hunchback." Fined and imprisoned for his romantic adventure, David was saved by the men of Glamorgan who paid the fine for him, a favor he returned by celebrating the county in his verse. His collected work, consisting of 262 poems, was published (1789) at London, and English translations were brought out in 1791 and 1834. Much of his poetry, in manuscript form, is in the British Museum.

David (dä.bēᵺH'). Town in SW Panama, capital of Chiriquí province, near the Pacific coast and the frontier of Costa Rica: leather, soap, and alcohol. 14,969 (1950).

David (dā'vid). Colossal statue by Michelangelo, in the Accademia at Florence. The youthful hero stands in a position of repose, holding his sling in his left hand and a pebble in the right. The form is still undeveloped and boyish, but full of power.

David. Statue by Donatello, in the Bargello at Florence. David stands resting, nude, with his shepherd's hat on his head, and his left foot resting on the helmeted head of Goliath, whose sword he still holds.

David. Novel in three parts by Naomi Royde-Smith, published in 1934.

David I (of Scotland). b. 1084; d. at Carlisle, England, May 24, 1153. King of Scotland; son of Malcolm III Canmore and Margaret, sister of Edgar Aetheling. He succeeded his brother Edgar as earl or prince of Cumbria, ruling southern Scotland, in 1107, and ascended the throne of all Scotland on the death of his brother Alexander I in 1124. His marriage (1113) to Matilda of Northumbria made him heir to the earldom of Huntingdon. He refused to recognize Stephen as king of England, and invaded that country in support of the claim of Matilda, who was his niece, to the throne but was defeated at the Battle of the Standard at Cutton Moor, near Northallerton, Aug. 22, 1138.

David II (of Scotland). [Also, David Bruce.] b. at Dunfermline, Scotland, March 5, 1324; d. at Edinburgh, Feb. 22, 1371. King of Scotland; son of Robert I (called Robert the Bruce) whom he succeeded in 1329 under the regency of the earl of Moray. The incompetent earl of Mar having succeeded to the regency on the death of Moray in 1332, the kingdom was invaded by Edward de Baliol, who seized the throne with the assistance of Edward III of England. David took refuge in France in the period 1334–41, until he was restored by the successes of his adherents Sir Alexander Murray of Bothwell, Robert the steward of Scotland, and Sir William the knight of Liddesdale. He invaded England in 1346, was defeated and captured at Neville's Cross, on Oct. 17 of that year, and was detained in captivity until 1357.

David (dä'fēt), Eduard. b. at Ediger, Germany, June 11, 1863; d. at Berlin, Dec. 24, 1930. German politician. Originally a high-school teacher, he was a Social Democratic member (1896–1908) of the diet of Hesse, a member (1903–30) of the Reichstag, president (February, 1919) of the Weimar constitutional assembly, and minister of the interior (1919–20). He was the author of Sozialdemokratie im Weltkriege (1915) and Sozialismus und Landwirtschaft (1922).

David (da.vēd), Félicien César. b. at Cadenet, France, April 13, 1810; d. at St.-Germain-en-Laye, France, Aug. 29, 1876. French composer. He early became a disciple of St. Simon and of Enfantin. In 1833 he went to the Orient. He remained in obscurity till 1844, when he brought out his chief work, a choral symphony, Le Désert. Among his other compositions are the operas La Perle du Brésil (1851), Herculanum (1859), Lalla-Roukh (1862), and Le Saphir (1865).

David (dä'fēt), Ferdinand. b. at Hamburg, Germany, June 19, 1810; d. in Switzerland, July 18, 1873. German violinist, teacher, and composer, leader (1836–73) of the band at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig. Among his pupils were Joachim and Wilhelmj. He published the collection Hohe Schule des Violinspiels.

David (dä'vēt), Gerard (or Gheerardt or Gheeraert). [Also, Davit.] b. at Oudewater, in South Holland, c1460; d. at Bruges, in Flanders, Aug. 13, 1523. Flemish painter. He is mentioned by early writers, but was entirely lost sight of until 1860, when information about him was discovered in the archives of Bruges. He settled at Bruges in 1483 and lived there during the remainder of his life. Well-authenticated works by him are to be found in many European collections. He is one of the most important of the Flemish primitives.

David (dä.vēd), Jacques Louis. b. at Paris, Aug. 30, 1748; d. at Brussels, Dec. 29, 1825. French historical painter, pupil of François Boucher and Joseph Marie Vien, and founder of the French classical school. He was educated at the Collège des Quatre Nations. In 1775 he won the grand prix de Rome after three unsuccessful attempts, and remained at Rome until 1780, when he returned to Paris, and was elected associate member of the French Academy (full member in 1783). The first picture composed under the influence of his classical ideas was Belisarius (1780). He was made court painter to Louis XVI, and in 1784 painted for him the Oath of the Horatii, as well as a number of other paintings on subjects from ancient legend and myth. He entered heartily into the Revolution, was elected to the Convention in 1792, was associated with Robespierre, and voted for the death of the king. After Robespierre's downfall he was imprisoned for seven months. After his release he painted the Rape of the Sabines and Leonidas at Thermopylae. Napoleon made him court painter, and for Napoleon he painted the Coronation and Napoleon on Horseback. With the return of the Bourbons, he was exiled to Brussels, where he painted, again in the classical vein, until his death.

David, Pierre Jean. [Called David d'Angers.] b. at Angers, France, March 12, 1789; d. at Paris, Jan. 5, 1856. French sculptor. He executed works for the Pantheon at Paris.

David (dā'vid), Sir Tannatt William Edgeworth. b. near Cardiff, Wales, Jan. 28, 1858; d. at Sydney, Australia, Aug. 28, 1934. Australian geologist, university professor, and antarctic explorer. He was educated at Oxford (B.A., 1880; D.Sc., 1910). He was an assistant geological surveyor in New South Wales (1882–90) and held the chair of geology and physical geography at the University of Sydney (1890–1924). He accompanied (1907–08) the British explorer Sir Ernest Henry Shackleton to the Antarctic, and journeyed to the magnetic pole. As a geologist with the army in France in World War I, he held the rank of lieutenant colonel. He was working on the geology of Australia at the time of his death. His classic work, New Geological Map of Australia with Explanatory Notes, was published in 1932.

David (dä.vēd), Toussaint Bernard. See Émeric-David, Toussaint Bernard.

David and Bethsabe (dā'vid; beth.sā'bē). Tragedy by George Peele (1556–96) from the Old Testament, almost entirely in blank verse.

David Copperfield (dā'vid kop'ėr.fēld). Novel (1850) by Charles Dickens. It was originally published in serial form in monthly parts from May, 1849 to November, 1850. It does not have one plot, but, like Shakespeare's plays, many, and it has a staggering number of characters, both major and minor, which is typical of Dickens. In general it tells the story of the life, adventures, hardships, failures, and the final success and happiness of its hero. It shows us David as a child ("I Am Born" is the title of chapter one), growing up and going to school, struggling to make a living, as a young man trying to become an author, and, in the end, as a man, still young, who is a happy husband and a successful writer. Some of the characters in the huge portrait gallery are Clara Copperfield, a widow and David's mother; Edward Murdstone, his brutal stepfather; the members of the Peggotty family: Clara Peggotty (usually called by her last name), David's nurse, Dan'l Peggotty, a Yarmouth fisherman, Ham Peggotty, Dan'l's nephew, and Little Em'ly, Ham's cousin and engaged to him; Barkis (remembered for his message "Barkis is willin' "), Peggotty's husband; James Steerforth, David's schoolfellow, a handsome villain who seduces Em'ly and later dies in a shipwreck, although Ham tries to save him: Uriah Heep, an odious villain, a thief and a forger whose name has become a synonym for disgusting hypocrisy; Miss Betsy Trotwood, David's aunt and later his guardian; Mr. Dick, a harmless lunatic who is obsessed by the head of Charles I; Dora Spenlow, a silly creature, David's "child-wife," as he calls her; Agnes Wickfield, as lovely as Dora but more mature, his second wife; Mrs. Gummidge, a complaining widow; Miss Mowcher, a midget; Creakle, a tyrannical teacher; Tommy Traddles, David's friend, a good-natured plodder who finally becomes a barrister; and the immortal Wilkins Micawber, an incurable optimist who is always waiting for "something to turn up." The full title of the novel is The Personal History, Experience and Observation of David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone Rookery, Which He Never Meant to be Published On Any Account. It is in 64 chapters, was illustrated by the famous "Phiz," and was Dickens's seventh novel. Of all his works, it was his favorite. "I like this the best," he tells us in his preface. "It will be easily believed that I am a fond parent to every child of my fancy, and that no one can ever love that family as dearly as I love them. But, like many fond parents, I have in my heart of hearts a favorite child. And his name is DAVID COPPERFIELD." An artist's estimate of his own work rarely coincides with general or popular opinion, but David Copperfield has long been considered one of his best works and one of the great triumphs of English fiction. Dickens's partiality may stem from the fact that the novel is largely autobiographical.

David Daw (dô), Sir. See Daw, Sir David.

Davideis (da.vid'ē.is). Epic poem by Abraham Cowley, on the subject of David, king of the Hebrews, published in 1656. The poem is incomplete.

David Elginbrod (dā'vid el'gin.brod). Novel by George Macdonald, published in 1863.

David Garrick (gar'ik). Play translated by T. W. Robertson from a French play, Sullivan, in 1864.

David Gellatley (gel'at.li). See Gellatley, David.

David Grieve (grēv). Novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, published in 1892.

David Harum (hār'um). Novel by Edward Noyes Westcott, published in 1898. The scene is laid in the central New York town of Homeville. The book won wide popularity through the shrewdness, humor, and homely philosophy displayed by its principal character, an old horse-trading country banker for whom it is named, and sold 400,000 copies in two years.

Davidov (dä.vē'dof), Charles (or Karl). b. at Kuldīga, in Courland (now part of Latvia), March 17, 1838; d. at Moscow, Feb. 25, 1889. Russian cellist. He studied with Schmidt, Schuberth, and Grützmacher, and first appeared at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, Dec. 15, 1859, where he became solo cellist of the orchestra. He also became a teacher in the Conservatory. After several concert tours he settled at St. Petersburg as solo cellist of the imperial orchestra, teacher in the Conservatory (1862), and later its director (1876–87). His compositions include a symphonic poem and an orchestral suite, chamber music, four concertos, and many solo pieces for his instrument. His method for the cello is widely known.

Davidović (dä.vē'dô.vēch), Ljubomir. b. at Vlaška, in Serbia, 1863; d. 1940. Serbian politician, leader of the Democratic Party. He was minister of education (1904–05, 1914–18) and prime minister (1919–20, 1924).

Davids (dā'vidz), Thomas William Rhys. b. at Colchester, England, May 12, 1843; d. Dec. 27, 1922. English lawyer and Orientalist. He studied at the University of Breslau, was appointed writer in the Ceylon civil service in 1866, was admitted to the bar in 1877, and became editor of the journal of the Pali Text Society in 1883, professor of Pali and Buddhist literature in University College, London, in 1882, and professor of comparative religion at Manchester in 1904. He was the author of On the Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon (1874), Buddhism: being a Sketch of the Life and Teachings of Gautama the Buddha (1877), and others.

Davidsbündler (dā'fēts.bün.dlėr). Imaginary group of anti-Philistines, invented by Robert Schumann and introduced into his articles for the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. Mainly represented by the imaginary characters Eusebius and Florestan, the society also included figures from contemporary life such as Clara Schumann, Mendelssohn, Banck, and Wedel.

Davidson (dā'vid.son), Donald (Grady). b. at Campbellsville, Tenn., Aug. 18, 1893—. American writer. He has served as a member (1920 et seq.) of the English department, as professor from 1937, at Vanderbilt University, and was a founder (1922) of the periodical The Fugitive. He supported regionalism and agrarianism in contributions to I'll Take My Stand, Who Owns America?, and Culture in the South, and published the volume of verse An Outland Piper (1924), the blank-verse poem The Tall Men (1927), and Lee in the Mountains (1938). His other books include The Attack on Leviathan (1938) and The Tennessee (1946) in the Rivers of America series.

Davidson, George. b. at Nottingham, England, May 9, 1825; d. 1911. American geographer and astronomer. Brought to the U.S. in childhood, he was reared in Pennsylvania, and attended the Central High School at Philadelphia, where he attracted the notice of Alexander Dallas Bache, its principal. When Bache established the first magnetic observatory in this country, at Girard College, he appointed young Davidson an observer, and when in 1845 Bache became superintendent of the U.S. Coast Survey, he made Davidson his secretary. The association with that branch of the government, thus begun, ended only with his retirement in 1895. In 1850 he was sent to the Pacific coast to supervise the preparation of charts of the coastal waters, and the results of his work were published under the title of The Pacific Coast Pilot. In the period 1860–66 he was engaged in charting the Philadelphia area for military purposes; in 1867 he was employed in the tropics, making a preliminary survey of the Isthmus of Darien (Panama) in connection with plans for a canal in that region, and in the Arctic, investigating the resources of Alaska. He directed the work of the U.S. Coast Survey in the Pacific (1867–87), meanwhile heading expeditions to Japan in 1874 and to New Mexico in 1882 to observe the transit of Venus, building the first Pacific coast observatory in 1879, and conducting surveys of the California mountain ranges. His interest in astronomy continued throughout his life, and whenever a phenomenon such as a solar eclipse or a transit of Mercury occurred, he was among the observers. Among his publications were studies of stars and meteors. Another of his interests was irrigation, which he studied in the West and in the Orient. He served on many official bodies, and for some years was president of the California Academy of Sciences, and also headed the Geographical Society of the Pacific. He was the author of The Tracks and Landfalls of Bering and Chirikof (1901), The Discovery of San Francisco Bay (1907), and Francis Drake on the Northwest Coast (1908).

Davidson, Israel. [Original name, Israel Movshovitz.] b. at Yanova, Lithuania, May 27, 1870; d. at Great Neck, Long Island, N.Y., June 27, 1939. Hebrew scholar. He studied at the yeshivas at Grodno and Slobodka, came to the U.S. in 1888, graduated (1895) from the College of the City of New York, and received the Ph.D. (1902) from Columbia University. He was appointed (1905) instructor at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, where he served (1916–39) as professor of medieval Hebrew literature. He was visiting professor (1926) at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem. He compiled the Otzar Hashirah Vehapiyut (4 vols., 1924–33), a thesaurus of medieval Hebrew poetry, and was the author of The Parody in Jewish Literature (1907).

Davidson, Jo. b. at New York, March 30, 1883; d. at Bercheron, France, Jan. 2, 1952. American sculptor, best known for his portrait busts of international celebrities. He studied at the Art Students League of New York and received his first commission in 1905. He went to Europe (1907) and there became interested in the effect of light on sculpture. He first exhibited at the Paris Salon of 1908, and his work was exhibited at New York in 1910. After that, his work was shown repeatedly at New York, Paris, and London. Many honors were accorded him, including designation as an associate of the National Academy of Design and a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He was considered to be one of the world's foremost sculptors of his time, his work having unique poetic and rhythmic qualities. Some of his better-known works are Earth, Russian Dancer, Eve, Dawn, Night, Beyond, A Study in Repose, and busts of Anatole France, Gertrude Stein, Joseph Conrad, Marshal Foch, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Will Rogers, General Pershing, Lloyd George, Clemenceau, Paderewski, Masaryk, and many others. He wrote the autobiography Between Sittings (1951).

Davidson, John. b. at Barrhead, Scotland, April 11, 1857; d. by suicide at Penzance, Cornwall, England, March 23, 1909. English poet, dramatist, novelist, and essayist. He was educated at Greenock Academy, and attended (1876–77) Edinburgh University. He engaged in teaching (1877–89) before going (1890) to London, where he made a living as a ghost writer and by translating French novels. He enjoyed a brief period (1906 et seq.) of improved personal circumstances as a result of a government pension of 100 pounds a year. He was the author of books of verse, including The North Wall (1885), In a Music Hall (1891), Fleet Street Eclogues (1893; 2nd series, 1896), Ballads and Songs (1894), St. George's Day (1895), New Ballads (1897), The Last Ballad (1899), Holiday (1906), and Fleet Street and Other Poems (1909). He also wrote the plays Bruce (1886), Smith (1888), An Unhistorical Pastoral, A Romantic Farce, and Scaramouch in Naxos (all 1889), Godfrida (1898), and The Knight of the Maypole (1903); the novels Perfervid (1890), Laura Ruthven's Widowhood (1892), Baptist Lake (1894), Wonderful Mission of Earl Lavender (1895), and Miss Armstrong's and Other Circumstances (1896); The Triumph of Mammon (1907) and Mammon and His Message (1909), philosophical works; and a series of five Testaments in which he expounded his philosophy of life, The Testament of a Vivisector and The Testament of a Man Forbid (both 1901), The Testament of an Empire-Builder (1902), The Testament of a Prime Minister (1904), and The Testament of John Davidson (1908). He translated François Coppée's For the Crown (1890). Among his poems are A Ballad of Hell, Ballad of a Nun, Imagination, The Outcast, and The Unknown.

Davidson, Lucretia Maria. b. at Plattsburg, N.Y., Sept. 27, 1808; d. there, Aug. 27, 1825. American poet; sister of Margaret Miller Davidson. She was the author of Amir Khan and other poems (1829).

Davidson, Margaret Miller. b. at Plattsburg, N.Y., March 26, 1823; d. at Saratoga, N.Y., Nov. 25, 1838. American poet; sister of Lucretia Maria Davidson. The works of the two sisters were published in 1850.

Davidson, Mount. Highest summit of the Prince Albert Mountains in Antarctica, lying NW of Granite Harbor, Victoria Land, in ab. 76°46′ S., 162°08′ E. Elevation, ab. 8,100 ft.

Davidson, Randall Thomas. [Title, 1st Baron Davidson.] b. April 7, 1848; d. May 25, 1930. English prelate. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Oxford, and was chaplain and private secretary to archbishop Tait (1877–82) and to archbishop Benson (1882–83), dean of Windsor and domestic chaplain to Queen Victoria (1883–91), bishop of Rochester (1891–95) and of Winchester (1895–1903), and consecrated archbishop of Canterbury in 1903. Among his publications are Life of Archbishop Tait (1891; with W. Behman) and The Christian Opportunity (1904).

Davidson, Samuel. b. near Ballymena, Ireland, 1807; d. April 1, 1898. English Biblical scholar, author of Introduction to the New Testament (1848–51).

Davidson, Thomas. b. at Edinburgh, May 17, 1817; d. 1885. English paleontologist. He was educated in France, Italy, and Switzerland and also studied painting for use in illustrating his monograph on British fossil brachiopods (1850–70) and later supplements.

Davidson, Thomas. b. in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, Oct. 25, 1840; d. at New York, Sept. 14, 1900. Scottish-American philosopher, teacher, and historian of education. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, winning high honors in classics, and taught school at Aberdeen, Tunbridge Wells, Wimbledon, in Canada, at Boston, St. Louis (where he was editor of the Western Educational Review), and New York, where he finally settled and founded the Breadwinners' College for men and women. He traveled (1878–84) in Greece and Italy. During his stay in Canada he founded, after a series of conferences at London in 1883, the Fellowship of the New Life, which later gave rise to the Fabian Society. He was the author of The Parthenon Frieze and Other Essays (1882), The Place of Art in Education (1886), Aristotle and the Ancient Educational Ideals (1892), The Education of the Greek People and Its Influence on Civilization (1894), Rousseau and Education According to Nature (1898), A History of Education (1900), and The Education of the Wage-Earner (1905).

Davidson, William Lee. b. in Lancaster County, Pa., 1746; killed at Cowan's Ford, Mecklenburg County, N.C., Feb. 1, 1781. American brigadier general in the Revolutionary War. He was detached by General Greene to interrupt the passage of Cornwallis across the Catawba, on Jan. 31, 1781, and fell in the engagement on the following day.

Davie (dā'vi), William Richardson. b. at Egremont, Cumberland, England, June 20, 1756; d. Nov. 29, 1820. American Revolutionary soldier, lawyer, and governor (1798–99) of North Carolina. After service in the war, from which he emerged a colonel, he rode the circuits of North Carolina as a lawyer (1782 et seq.) and served (1786–98) in the state legislature, where he was influential in the revision and codification of the laws, the sending of representatives to the Annapolis and Philadelphia constitutional conventions, the cession of Tennessee to the Union, and the fixing of state boundaries. One of the chief founders of the University of North Carolina, he was also appointed brigadier general during hostilities with the French, peace commissioner (1799) to France, and negotiator of the Tuscarora treaty (1802).

Davies (dā'vēz), Arthur Bowen. b. at Utica, N.Y., Sept. 26, 1862; d. at Florence, Italy, Oct. 24, 1928. American painter, noted for his dreamlike landscapes with figures. He studied at the Art Institute of Chicago, the Gotham Art Students, and the Art Students League of New York, and was a contributor of illustrations (c1888–91) to Saint Nicholas. Aided by the art dealer William Macbeth, he established (c1894) a New York studio. With the help of the merchant and art collector Benjamin Altman he went to Europe, where he produced his first characteristic work. Later, in canvases drawing upon mythological themes, he produced such paintings as The Girdle of Ares and Leda and the Dioscuri. As president of the Society of Independent Artists, he participated in conducting the famous Armory Show (1913) at New York. He also executed murals, tapestry designs, and small sculpture. He is represented in many private collections.

Davies (dā'vēz, -vis), Ben. [Full name, Benjamin Grey Davies.] b. at Pontardawe, Glamorganshire, Wales, Jan. 6, 1858; d. at Bath, England, March 28, 1943. Welsh operatic and concert tenor. He attended (1878–80) the Royal Academy of Music, sang (1893) at the Chicago World's Fair on his first visit to the U.S., and participated (1926) in the Handel Festival in England.

Davies (dā'vēz), Charles. b. at Washington, Litchfield, County, Conn., Jan. 22, 1798; d. at Fishkill Landing (now part of Beacon), N.Y., Sept. 18, 1876. American mathematician, author of a series of mathematical textbooks. He was professor at Columbia College from 1857 to 1865.

Davies (dā'vēz, -vis), David. [Title, 1st Baron Davies of Llandinam.] b. at Llandinam, Wales, 1880; d. there, 1944. Welsh coal-mine operator, politician, and author. Educated at Cambridge, he was a member of Parliament (1906–29) from Montgomeryshire, an officer (1914–16) in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers during World War I, and private secretary (1916–29) to Lloyd George. He founded the New Commonwealth Society for the establishment of a world police force, was president of the National Library of Wales and of University College at Aberystwyth, and was active in the field of public health. He was the author of The Problem of the Twentieth Century (1932), Suicide or Sanity (1932), and Nearing the Abyss (1936).

Davies, Sir Henry Walford. b. at Oswestry, Shropshire, England, Sept. 6, 1869; d. near Bristol, England, March 11, 1941. English organist and composer. He was appointed (1917) musical director to the Royal Air Force, and served as chairman (1923 et seq.) of the National Council of Music; he was knighted in 1922. He was also organist (1927 et seq.) at Saint George's Chapel, Windsor, and succeeded (1934) Sir Edward Elgar as master of the king's music. His works include The Temple (1902), Peter Pan Suite (1909), Festal Overture (1910), Heaven's Gate (1916), and Memorial Suite (1923).

Davies, Hubert Henry. b. 1876; d. 1917. English dramatist.

Davies, Ivor Novello. Original name of Novello, Ivor.

Davies of Hereford (her'ē.ford), John. b. at Hereford, England, c1565; d. at London, 1618. English writing-master and poet. He was said to be an accomplished penman, and some specimens of his work are preserved in The Writing Schoolemaster or the Anatomy of Faire Writing (published c1631 after his death). Among his works are Mirum in Modum (1602), Microcosmos (1603), The Wittes Pilgrimage (1605), The Scourge of Folly (1610 or 1611), and Wit's Bedlam (1617).

Davies, Sir John. b. at Tisbury, Wiltshire, England, in April, 1569; d. Dec. 8, 1626. English jurist and poet. He was called to the bar in 1595, disbarred in 1598, and readmitted in 1601. In that year he was returned to Parliament for Corfe Castle. In 1603 he was made solicitor general for Ireland, and in 1606 succeeded to the position of attorney general for Ireland. In 1614, and again in 1621, he was member of Parliament for Newcastle-under-Lyme. For the last ten years of his life he was a sergeant-at-law in England. He was made chief justice in 1626, but died before taking possession of the office. Among his works are Orchestra (on dancing, 1596), and Hymns to Astraea (1599), acrostics to Queen Elizabeth. A number of his epigrams, printed in the same volume as Christopher Marlowe's translation of Ovid's Elegies, were ordered burned in 1599 during the censorship campaign of John Whitgift, archbishop of Canterbury. Nosce Teipsum (1599), a series of rhyming decasyllabic quatrains, on the soul and its immortal nature, was a great success and remains one of the best didactic poetical works in English.

Davies (dā'vēz), Joseph Edward. b. at Watertown, Wis., Nov. 29, 1876—. American lawyer and diplomat. He was U.S. commissioner of corporations (1913–15), chairman (1915–16) and vice-chairman (1916–18) of the Federal Trade Commission. He served as U.S. ambassador to Russia (1936–38) and Belgium (1938–39), and as U.S. minister (1938–39) to Luxembourg. He acted as special adviser at the Berlin (Potsdam) Conference (1945). His book Mission to Moscow (1941) helped overcome some of the U.S. feeling of strangeness at being allied with the U.S.S.R. in World War II.

Davies (dā'vēz, -vis), Julia Augusta. See Webster, Augusta.

Davies, Sir Louis Henry. b. at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada, May 4, 1845; d. at Ottawa, May 1, 1924. Canadian statesman and jurist. After holding office as prime minister and attorney general of Prince Edward Island (1876–79), he sat in the Dominion House of Commons (1882–1901) as a member of the Liberal Party, and under the premiership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was minister of marine and fisheries (1896–1901). He was knighted in 1897. In 1901 he was named a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, and in 1918 became chief justice of that tribunal.

Davies, Mary. b. at London, Feb. 17, 1855; d. at Hampstead, London, June 22, 1930. Welsh mezzo-soprano. She studied at the Royal Academy of Music and was president of the Welsh Folk Musical Society.

Leading soprano at London ballad concerts for many years, she received (1916) an honorary degree of doctor of music from the University of Wales.

Davies, Peter. Young clerk in a second-hand London bookshop, in Gilbert Cannan's autobiographical novel Peter Homunculus (1909).

Davies, Richard. b. at Plas y Person, Wales, c1505; d. in Wales, Nov. 7, 1581. Welsh clergyman, translator of the New Testament into Welsh. He was vicar of Burnham in 1550 and in 1555 fled to Frankfort to join the Protestants there. Returning when Elizabeth came to the throne, he was later (1561) made bishop of St. David's, was adviser to Archbishop Parker and to Cecil on Welsh affairs, and was a friend of the earl of Essex, with whom he founded Carmarthen grammar school (1576). With William Salisbury, or Salesbury, he translated the New Testament into Welsh (1567); he was responsible for Deuteronomy and 2 Samuel in the revision of the "Great Bible" known as the "Bishops' Bible" (1568).

Davies (dā'vēz), Samuel. b. in New Castle County, Del., Nov. 3, 1723; d. at Princeton, N.J., Feb. 4, 1761. American Presbyterian clergyman, president of the College of New Jersey (later Princeton University) from 1759 to 1761.

Davies (dā'vēz, -vis), Sarah Emily. b. at Southampton, England, April 22, 1830; d. at Hampstead, London, July 13, 1921. English feminist, educator, and author of works on education. She went in 1860 to London, where she founded (1866) the London Schools Inistresses' Association. She was also active in founding (1869) a college for women at Hitchin, which later became (1873) Girton College, Cambridge, of which she was mistress (1873–75) and secretary (1882–1904). She was instrumental in gaining the admission of Elizabeth Garrett Anderson to medical school, and in drawing up a petition for women's suffrage which John Stuart Mill presented to Parliament on June 7, 1866. Her works include Application of Funds to the Education of Girls (1865), Higher Education of Women (1866), and Thoughts on Some Questions Relating to Women: 1860–1908 (1910).

Davies, Thomas. b. c1712; d. at London, May 5, 1785. English bookseller. He tried acting from time to time, but without success. In 1763 he introduced Boswell to Samuel Johnson. He republished a number of old authors, including William Browne, Sir John Davies, Lillo, and Massinger. In 1785 he published his Dramatic Miscellanies.

Davies, William Henry. b. at Newport, Monmouthshire, England, April 20, 1871; d. at Nailsworth, Gloucestershire, England, Sept. 26, 1940. English tramp, peddler, poet, novelist, dramatist, and anthologist. After losing his right leg while stealing a ride on a train in Canada, he decided to return to England and to take up literature as an occupation. He was the author of a considerable body of work in both prose and poetry; among his writings are The Soul's Destroyer (1907), Nature Poems (1908), Songs of Joy (1911), Foliage (1913), Raptures (1918), Song of Life (1920), Hour of Magic (1922), Secrets (1924), Poet's Alphabet (1925), Song of Love (1926), Poet's Calendar (1927), and 49 Poems (1928), books of poetry; A Weak Woman (1911), Adventures of Johnny Walker, Tramp (1926), and Dancing Mad (1927), prose fiction; Autobiography of a Supertramp (1908), Beggars (1909), Nature (1913), Later Days (1925), My Birds and My Garden (both 1933), autobiography and essays; and A Tramp's Opera in Three Acts (1923). In 1922 and 1930 he edited two poetry anthologies, Shorter Lyrics of the 20th Century and Jewels of Song. Some of his best poems are Days Too Short, The Moon, The Two Stars, Jenny Wren, The Hermit, When Yon Full Moon, and Sheep.

Daviess (dā'vis), Joseph Hamilton. See Daveiss, Joseph Hamilton.

Dávila (dä'vēlä), Alonzo. See Ávila, Alonzo de.

Dávila, Carlos Guillermo. [Full name, Carlos Guillermo Dávila Espinoza.] b. at Los Ángeles, Bío-Bío, Chile, Sept. 15, 1887—. Chilean newspaper editor and politician. Employed (1912–16) on the staff of El Mercurio, he was afterward editor (1917–27) of La Nación and editor (1931–32) of Hoy. He served from 1927 to 1931 as ambassador to the U.S. He was a member of the revolutionary junta which deposed (1932) President Montero and was provisional president (June-September, 1932) of Chile. He favored socialism, and was author of the "Dávila Plan" creating the Inter-American Development Commission.

Davila (dä'vēlä), Enrico Caterino. b. near Padua, Italy, Oct. 30, 1576; killed near Verona, Italy, Aug. 8, 1631. Italian soldier and historian. His ancestors, from 1464, bore the title of Constable of Cyprus, and from this island his father was driven when it was captured by the Turks. Davila, when seven years of age, was taken to France, became a page of Catherine de Médicis, and later fought in the civil wars until the peace of 1598. He was appointed governor of Crema, in Lombardy, in 1598, and on his way to that place in 1631 was assassinated by a man with whom he had had a dispute about post horses. His chief work is Storia delle guerre civili di Francia (1630; Eng. trans., History of the French Civil Wars, 1647).

Dávila (dä'vēlä), Gil González. See González Dávila, Gil.

Dávila, Pedrarias. See Pedrarias.

Dávila y Padilla (ē pä.ᵺē'lyä), Agustín. [Called "Chronicler of the Indies."] b. at Mexico City, 1562; d. at Santo Domingo (now Ciudad Trujillo), 1604. Mexican prelate and historian. He was prior of the Dominican convent at Puebla de los Angeles, Mexico, and a celebrated lecturer on theology. From 1599 until his death he was bishop of Santo Domingo. His principal work, Historia de la fondación de la provincia de Santiago de Méjico de la Orden de Predicadores, is a history of his order in Mexico and Florida, with much of general interest. First published at Madrid in 1596, it was republished at Valladolid in 1634 with the title Varia historia de la Nueva España y Florida.

Davin (dä.vaṅ), Félix. Pseudonym used by Balzac in the introduction to the Études philosophiques.

da Vinci (dä vēn'chē), Leonardo (or Lionardo). See Vinci, Leonardo (or Lionardo) da.

Davis (dā'vis). City in N central California, in Yolo County, near Sacramento; seat of a branch of the University of California College of Agriculture. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 1,672 (1940), 3,554 (1950).

Davis, Alexander Jackson. b. at New York, July 24, 1803; d. at Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N.J., Jan. 14, 1892. American architect. His drawings and lithographs of outstanding buildings in New York and in New England led to a partnership with Ithiel Town of New Haven, Conn., who at that time established an office at New York. Town and Davis designed many much-admired buildings, including the Customs House (later the Subtreasury) at New York, the Patent Office at Washington, and the state capitols of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. In collaboration with another architect, Davis also had a hand in designing the state capitol of North Carolina. After 1843 Davis practiced individually, and it is probably true that, as he asserted late in life, he was the designer of more structures (public edifices, commercial buildings, churches, and homes) than any other American architect up to that time. Although he was a great exponent of the classic style, and also skilled in Gothic design, he was forward-looking, an early experimenter with structural iron, and he left drawings of a planned structure, which was never built, calling for use of glass and metal in a manner that would have been considered modernistic 50 years later.

Davis, Benjamin Oliver. b. at Washington, D.C., July 1, 1877—. American cavalry officer who was the first Negro general officer in the U.S. army. He served (1898–99) as lieutenant of volunteers, enlisted (1899) in a regular army cavalry unit as a private, was commissioned (1901) a lieutenant in the cavalry, and was military attaché (1911–12) at Monrovia, Liberia. He also served (1905–09, 1915–17, 1929–30, 1937–38) as professor of military science at Wilberforce University and as professor of military science and tactics (1920–24, 1931–37) at Tuskegee Institute. He was appointed colonel (1930) and brigadier general (1940), assistant (1941) to the inspector general of the army, adviser (1942) to the commanding general of the European theater of operations on problems involving Negro military personnel, special assistant (1944) to the commanding general of the communications zone of the European theater, and special assistant to the secretary of the army. In 1945 he was awarded the Distinguished Service medal, and in 1948 he retired from active military service.

Davis, Bette. [Full name, Ruth Elizabeth Davis.] b. at Lowell, Mass., April 5, 1908—. American actress. After a career on the stage beginning in 1925, she went to Hollywood to make motion pictures. Her first great success was in the role of Mildred in Of Human Bondage (1934), playing opposite Leslie Howard. Winner of two "Oscars" presented by the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences (for Dangerous, 1935, and Jezebel, 1938), Miss Davis has starred in many pictures, among them The Petrified Forest, The Sisters, Dark Victory, Juarez, The Old Maid, The Little Foxes, All This and Heaven Too, The Letter, Watch on the Rhine, and All About Eve. She returned to Broadway in 1952 to star in the revue Two's Company.

Davis, Charles Harold. b. at Amesbury, Mass., Jan. 7, 1856; d. Aug. 5, 1933. American landscape painter. He began his art studies at Boston, and afterward lived and studied in France and exhibited at the Paris Salon annually from 1880 through 1890. After returning to the U.S. he became a celebrant in color of the rich beauties of American landscape, especially of the eastern mountains and the blue skies and white clouds over them. Examples of his work are to be seen in the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Union League Club at New York, the Museum of Fine Arts at Boston, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts at Philadelphia, the Corcoran Gallery and the National Gallery at Washington, and in galleries and museums at Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Worcester, Providence, and other American cities.

Davis, Charles Henry. b. at Boston, Jan. 16, 1807; d. at Washington, D.C., Feb. 18, 1877. American naval officer. He entered the navy in 1823, obtained the rank of commander in 1854, and served as chief of staff and captain of the fleet in the expedition under Dupont which captured Port Royal, S.C., in 1861. Having in the meantime been placed in command of the Mississippi gunboat flotilla, he gained a victory over a Confederate fleet off Fort Pillow (May 10, 1862) and another (June 6, 1862) before Memphis, whose surrounder he received on the same day. He was promoted to the rank of rear admiral on Feb. 7, 1863. He wrote The Coast Survey of the United States (1849) and Narrative of the North Polar Expedition of the U.S.S. Polaris (1876).

Davis, Charles Henry. b. at Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 28, 1845; d. Dec. 27, 1921. American naval officer, appointed rear admiral in 1904; son of Charles Henry Davis (1807–77). He was graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1864, attained the rank of captain in 1898, was superintendent of the naval observatory from 1897 to 1902 (except April–Sept., 1898), and commanded the auxiliary cruiser Dixie during the Spanish-American War (1898). He served as division commander of the battleship squadron in 1904, 1905, and 1906, and was a member of the international commission which investigated, at Paris (1904–05), the attack of the Russian squadron under Rozhestvensky upon the British fishing fleet in the North Sea. He retired in August, 1907.

Davis, Chester Charles. b. near Linden, Dallas County, Iowa, Nov. 17, 1887—. American agricultural and financial administrator. A graduate (B.A., 1911) of Grinnell, he began his career as a journalist (1911–17) in South Dakota and Montana, editor and manager (1917–21) of the Montana Farmer, and an executive (1925–33) in agricultural organizations. He served as administrator (December, 1933–June, 1936) in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, president (April, 1941–March, 1943) of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank, and U.S. Department of Agriculture administrator of food production and distribution (March–June, 1943).

Davis, Clyde Brion. b. at Unadilla, Neb., May 22, 1894—. American journalist and novelist. He served in the U.S. army in World War I, and between 1919 and 1937 was a reporter for various U.S. newspapers, including the San Francisco Examiner (1921–22), the Denver News (1922–29), and the Buffalo Times (1930–37). His novels include The Anointed (1937), "The Great American Novel—" (1938), Nebraska Coast (1939), Sullivan (1940), Follow the Leader (1942), The Stars Incline (1946), Jeremy Bell (1947), Temper the Wind (1948), Playtime Is Over (1949), and The Age of Indiscretion (1950). He is also the author of The Arkansas (1940), in the Rivers of America series.

Davis, Cushman Kellogg. b. at Henderson, N.Y., June 16, 1838; d. at St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 27, 1900. American Republican politician. He was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1857, was admitted to the bar in 1859, and served in the Union army (1861–64) in the Civil War, rising to the rank of assistant adjutant general. He was elected to the Minnesota legislature in 1867, served as district attorney for Minnesota (1868–73) and as governor of Minnesota (1874–75), and was elected U.S. senator in 1887, in 1893, and in 1899. In August, 1898, he was appointed a member of the Spanish-American Peace Commission. He published The Law in Shakespeare (1884).

Davis, David. b. in Cecil County, Md., March 9, 1815; d. at Bloomington, Ill., June 26, 1886. American statesman and jurist. He was associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1862–77), U.S. senator from Illinois (1877–83), and acting vice-president (1881–83).

Davis, Dwight Filley. b. at St. Louis, Mo., July 5, 1879; d. at Washington, D.C., Nov. 28, 1945. American public official who served (1925–29) as U.S. secretary of war. He was educated at Harvard and at Washington University and served in World War I, being appointed captain (May, 1917), major (November, 1917), and lieutenant colonel (October, 1918) and awarded (1923) the Distinguished Service Cross for bravery under fire. After the war he was director (1921–23) of the War Finance Corporation and governor general (1929–32) of the Philippines. In 1942 he was appointed director general of the U.S. Army Specialist Corps, and served in World War II in an advisory capacity with the Army Service Forces. He is also known as a national tennis doubles champion (1899, 1900, 1901), with Holcombe Ward, and as the donor (1900) of the Davis Cup, the international lawn tennis trophy which now denotes world match-play championship.

Davis, Edwin Hamilton. b. in Ross County, Ohio, Jan. 22, 1811; d. at New York, May 15, 1888. American physician and archaeologist. His works include Monuments of the Mississippi Valley (in Smithsonian Contributions to Knowledge, 1858), and others.

Davis, Elmer (Holmes). b. at Aurora, Ind., Jan. 13, 1890—. American journalist, writer, and radio commentator. He was a Rhodes scholar (1912–14) at Oxford, and has been a staff member (1914–24) of the New York Times, news analyst for the Columbia Broadcasting System (1939–42) and American Broadcasting Company (1945 et seq.), and director (1942–45) of the U.S. Office of War Information. He is the author of History of the New York Times (1921), Times Have Changed (1923), Not to Mention the War (1940), and other books.

Davis, Garret. b. at Mount Stirling, Ky., Sept. 10, 1801; d. at Paris, Ky., Sept. 22, 1872. American politician, U.S. senator from Kentucky from 1861 to 1872.

Davis, George Breckinridge. b. at Ware, Mass., Feb. 13, 1847; d. at Washington, D.C., Dec. 15, 1914. American soldier and jurist, judge advocate general of the U.S. army (1901–11). He published several works upon international and military law.

Davis, George Whitefield. b. at Thompson, Conn., July 26, 1839; d. July 12, 1918. American engineer, army officer, and administrator. After service in the Union army during the Civil War, he was commissioned captain (1867) in the regular army. He served in the Spanish-American War, was military governor (1899–1900) of Puerto Rico and commander (1902–03) of the Philippine division, and retired (1903) as a major general. Appointed (1904) a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, he served as governor (1904–05) of the Canal Zone, organizing the new government. As chief of the planning board of engineers, he recommended the building of the sea-level canal.

Davis, Harold Lenoir. b. at Yoncalla, Ore., Oct. 18, 1896—. American writer. He worked as a typesetter, sheep and cattle rancher, deputy sheriff, deputy assessor, surveyor, newspaper editor, and radio singer, and served in World War I. In 1919, he received the Levison poetry prize from Poetry Magazine. He was (1932) recipient of a Guggenheim fellowship to write in Mexico. He was awarded a Pulitzer prize for his novel Honey in the Horn (1935), also a Harper prize winner. His other books include the collection of verse Proud Riders (1942), and the novels Harp of a Thousand Strings (1947) and Winds of Morning (1952).

Davis, Henry. b. at East Hampton, N.Y., Sept. 15, 1771; d. at Clinton, N.Y., March 8, 1852. American clergyman and educator, president of Middlebury College from 1809 to 1817 and of Hamilton College from 1817 to 1833.

Davis, Henry Gassaway. b. at Woodstock, Md., Nov. 16, 1823; d. at Washington, D.C., March 11, 1916. American businessman and politician. He amassed a fortune from railroads, lumbering, and coal fields in the upper Potomac region. Elected (1871, 1877) senator from West Virginia, he served as chairman of the Appropriations Committee for two years and as a member of a special committee on transportation routes to the seaboard. He was Democratic candidate (1904) for vice-president.

Davis, Henry Gassett. b. at Trenton, Me., Nov. 4, 1807; d. at Everett, Mass., Nov. 18, 1896. American pioneer in orthopedic surgery, founder of the so-called traction school. He was the author of Conservative Surgery, as Exhibited in Remedying some of the Mechanical Causes that Operate Injuriously both in Health and Disease (1867).

Davis, Henry William Banks. b. at Finchley, England, Aug. 26, 1833; d. at Glaslyn, England, 1914. English painter of landscapes and animals whose works were widely reproduced and distributed. He studied at the Royal Academy; between 1853 and 1893 he exhibited there regularly, and in 1877 he became a member. Other exhibitions of his work were held at Vienna and Paris. His paintings are in museums at Bristol, Hamburg, Manchester, Melbourne, and Sheffield. Among his representative works are Spring Ploughing, Picardy Sheep, and Moonrise, Praetorium at Neufchatel.

Davis, Henry William Carless. b. at Ebley, England, Jan. 13, 1874; d. at Edinburgh, June 28, 1928. English historian and editor of the Dictionary of National Biography, one of the most distinguished scholars specializing in the history of the Middle Ages. He acted as director of the Dictionary of National Biography (1902–28), was professor of modern history at the University of Manchester (1921–25), and regius professor of modern history at Oxford (1925–28). He was the author of England Under the Normans and Angevins (1905), Medieval Europe (1911), The Political Thought of Treitschke (1914), and The Age of Grey and Peel (1930). He also served in the World Trade Intelligence Department (1915), the War Trade Advisory Committee (1916), the British delegation to the Paris conference (1918–19), the Unemployment Insurance Committee (1925), and, as acting director, the Department of Overseas Trade (1925). He was curator of the Bodleian Library (1925).

Davis, Henry Winter. b. at Annapolis, Md., Aug. 16, 1817; d. at Baltimore, Md., Dec. 30, 1865. American lawyer and politician, noted for his forthright support of the Union cause in Maryland and for the authorship of the Wade-Davis manifesto (1864). He studied law at the University of Virginia, commenced his law practice at Alexandria, Va., and moved (1849) to Baltimore, where he became active in the Whig party. Going to Congress in 1855, he soon became known as a leading figure in the Know-Nothing Party; in 1860, when he cast the deciding vote for a Republican speaker of the House, he became associated with that party for a time, but shortly afterward took a prominent part in organizing the Bell and Everett (Union) party in Maryland. He later emerged as an ardent supporter of the Union government, in opposition to the Maryland state administration which recognized the right of secession for the Southern states. He failed to be reëlected in 1861, but was chosen for Congress in 1863, becoming chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. He became an opponent of many of Lincoln's policies and an ally of the Radical Republicans, virtually ruling the House together with Thaddeus Stevens. He sponsored a bill on reconstruction that passed both houses of Congress in 1864 but was vetoed by Lincoln. In the noted Wade-Davis manifesto (1864), he attacked Lincoln's plan of reconstruction, favoring a radical and thoroughgoing scheme. However, he supported Lincoln in the campaign of 1864, in which he himself was defeated.

Davis, Herbert John. b. at Long Buckby, Northamptonshire, England, May 24, 1893—. American educator and authority on Jonathan Swift. Appointed (1937) professor of English at Cornell, he served there as department head from 1938 and as Goldwin Smith professor of English literature (1939–40). In 1940 he was named president of Smith College. He is the editor of Complete Prose Works of Jonathan Swift (14 vols., in progress since 1938); his writings include Swift's View of Poetry (1931), Stella, A Gentlewoman of the 18th Century (1942), and The Satire of Jonathan Swift (1945).

Davis, James Cox. b. at Keokuk, Iowa, Sept. 2, 1857; d. Aug. 31, 1937. American lawyer, specialist in railroad litigation. Admitted (1877) to the bar; mayor (1885–87) of Keokuk, Iowa. Appointed general Iowa attorney (1903) and general solicitor (1918) for the Chicago and North Western Railway Company. He was general counsel (1920) for the U.S. Railroad Administration.

Davis, James John. b. at Tredegar, South Wales, Oct. 27, 1873; d. at Tokoma Park, Md., Nov. 22, 1947. American politician. He came to the U.S. in 1881. He served as director general (1906 et seq.) of the Loyal Order of Moose, increasing its membership from 247 to more than 600,000. He was (1921–30) U.S. secretary of labor under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. He was U.S. senator (1930–45) from Pennsylvania.

Davis, Jefferson. b. in SW Kentucky (in what is now Todd County), June 3, 1808; d. at New Orleans, Dec. 6, 1889. American soldier, plantation owner, legislator, and secretary of war; president of the Confederate States of America. When he was three years of age his family moved to Mississippi and settled near Woodville in Wilkinson County. He attended successively a Dominican school, Wilkinson Academy, and Transylvania University, and was graduated (1828) from West Point. He served in frontier garrisons until 1835, taking part in the Black Hawk War (1833) and, according to an apocryphal story, taking Abraham Lincoln's first oath of allegiance to the U.S. when Lincoln led a group of Illinois volunteers into the army. In 1835, he married Sarah Knox Taylor, against the will of her father, Colonel Zachary Taylor, who was later to be president of the U.S. He resigned his commission in the army and returned to Mississippi, where his wife died three months later of fever. From 1835 to 1845 he managed his Mississippi plantation, "Brierfield," was an unsuccessful candidate for the state legislature in 1843, married Varina Howell two years later, and in the same year won a seat in Congress. He commanded the volunteer "Mississippi Rifles" in the Mexican War, fighting under General Taylor his father-in-law, and won fame in battles at Monterey and Buena Vista. In the summer of 1847 he accepted an appointment to the U.S. Senate, and was later (1850) elected to that body, where he became a leader of the Southern nationalists, an exponent of state sovereignty and the legal rights of slaveowners. After reluctantly voting for the Compromise of 1850, he resigned (1851) his seat to run for the governorship of Mississippi, but was defeated by Henry S. Foote. Davis became secretary of war in Pierce's cabinet and for four years served with a distinction that made him the guiding force of the administration. From 1857 to 1861 he represented the Southern point of view in the Senate, urged free trade policies and the development of world markets, and opposed the territorial policies of Stephen Douglas. Davis was not an ardent secessionist after the election of Abraham Lincoln, for he feared a resulting war and desired to exhaust every means of peaceable settlement before using the final resort of state sovereignty. On Jan. 21, 1861, after Mississippi had seceded, he gave his farewell address in the Senate and resigned his seat. Against his will (his preference was for a military command), he was chosen as provisional president of the Confederacy and was inaugurated as such on Feb. 18, 1861, at Montgomery, Ala.; elected in October, 1861, under the Confederate constitution, he was inaugurated on Feb. 22, 1862, at Richmond, Va., as president of the Confederacy. As a war president he accomplished much in leading the South against the powerful North. Yet his sensitiveness, his ill health, and his failure to credit enemies with any patriotic motives handicapped him as a leader. As the chief executive he became embroiled with governors and legislators on the issue of the respective powers of state and Confederate governments. With every Southern defeat, his popularity waned. The vitriolic criticism of the Richmond Examiner and of congressmen stung him to the quick. As the Confederate congress became increasingly hostile, he was forced into many compromises, but his control was sufficient to prevent passage of any act over his veto. Until the collapse of the Confederacy, he worked always for Southern independence; his acts, wise or inept, were sincere efforts toward this goal. He fled south when the Confederate lines at Petersburg, Va., were breached, ostensibly attempting to reach the trans-Mississippi territory and establish a government in Texas. Actually his laggardly journey evidenced a preference for capture, which was accomplished by Union troops on May 10, 1865, at Irwinville, Ga. For two years he was imprisoned in Fortress Monroe, part of the time in shackles, which rewon for him the sympathy of the Southern people. He was released without trial, although he had been indicted for treason, and for more than 30 years engaged in a number of business ventures. As a speaker and writer he defended the Confederacy and his administration against the thrusts of enemies North and South. His Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government (2 vols., 1881) was a philosophic, factual, and somewhat disappointing account. Davis reached the apex of his statesmanship as secretary of war, and his many years and many controversies after 1867 added little to his stature See Jefferson Davis: The Unreal and the Real, by Robert McElroy (2 vols., 1937).

Davis, Jefferson Columbus. b. in Clarke County, Ind., March 2, 1828; d. Nov. 30, 1879. Union general in the American Civil War. He served (1846–47) in the Mexican War. He was at Fort Sumter when it was bombarded by the Confederates (April 12–13, 1861). He commanded a division at Pea Ridge (March 7–8, 1862), at Stone River (Dec. 31, 1862–Jan. 3, 1863), and at Chickamauga (Sept. 19–20, 1863), and led a corps in Sherman's march to the sea in 1864.

Davis, John. See also Davys, John.

Davis, John. b. at Plymouth, Mass., Jan. 25, 1761; d. at Boston, Jan. 14, 1847. American jurist. He was appointed comptroller of the U.S. treasury in 1795, and in 1801 became judge of the U.S. district court in Massachusetts. He was the youngest member in the convention of 1789 which adopted the federal constitution, and survived all the other members.

Davis, John. [Called "Honest John."] b. at Northboro, Mass., Jan. 13, 1787; d. at Worcester, Mass., April 19, 1854. American lawyer and politician. He served as Congressman (1824–32), governor of Massachusetts (1833–35, 1840–41), and U.S. senator (1835–40, 1845–53).

Davis, John Chandler Bancroft. b. at Worcester, Mass., Dec. 29, 1822; d. at Washington, D.C., Dec. 27, 1907. American jurist and diplomat. He was agent of the U.S. at the Geneva tribunal (1871–72) and minister to Germany (1874–77).

Davis, Sir John Francis. b. at London, 1795; d. near Bristol, England, Nov. 13, 1890. English diplomat and writer on China. He was the author of The Chinese (1836), and others.

Davis, John William. b. at Clarksburg, W.Va., April 13, 1873—. American lawyer and politician. He received a B.A. (1892) and an LL.B. (1895) from Washington and Lee, and practiced law (1897 et seq.) at Clarksburg, W.Va. He served as congressman (1911–13) from West Virginia, and as U.S. solicitor general (1913–18). From 1918 to 1921 he was U.S. ambassador to Great Britain. After the dramatic deadlock at the 1924 Democratic national convention between the forces supporting Alfred E. Smith and William G. McAdoo failed to resolve itself, Davis was chosen as compromise candidate for president, but was defeated easily by Coolidge.

Davis, Kenneth S. b. at Salina, Kan., Sept. 29, 1912—. American journalist and author. He was graduated from Kansas State University and the University of Wisconsin, was a reporter on the Topeka (Kan.) Daily Capital, an information specialist with the U.S. Soil Conservation Service, and a World War II newspaper correspondent in the European theater. Among his novels are In the Forests of the Night (1942) and The Years of the Pilgrimage (1948). He is also the author of Soldier of Democracy (1945), a biography of General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Davis, Mount. Summit in SW Pennsylvania, in Somerset County, on Negro Mountain ab. 8 mi. W of Meyersdale, Pa. It is the highest point in the state, and there is a state park here. Elevation, ab. 3,213 ft.

Davis, Nathan Smith. [Called the "Father of the American Medical Association."] b. at Greene, N.Y., Jan. 9, 1817; d. June 16, 1904. American physician and medical writer, one of the founders of the American Medical Association. He practiced at Binghamton, N.Y. (1838–47) and at New York City (1847–49), and was professor (1849–59) at Rush Medical College at Chicago, where he advocated a sewage system, an adequate water supply, and a public hospital. He was one of the founders (1859) of the medical department of Lind University (now the medical department of Northwestern University), in which he was professor of the principles and practice of medicine and dean of the faculty. His works include A Text Book on Agriculture (1848), History of Medical Education and Institutions in the United States (1851), History of the American Medical Association (1855), Clinical Lectures on Various Important Diseases (1873), Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Medicine (1884), and History of Medicine, with the Code of Medical Ethics (1903).

Davis, Norman H(ezekiah). b. in Tennessee, Aug. 9, 1878; d. at Hot Springs, Va., July 2, 1944. American financier and diplomat. He went (1902) to Cuba, where he organized (1905) and headed (1905–17) the Trust Company of Cuba. He served as finance adviser (1918) to the U.S. secretary of the treasury, and was appointed (1919) U.S. finance commissioner in Europe. He was assistant secretary of the treasury (1919–20) and undersecretary of state (1920–21). He was a member (1931–37) of the League of Nations financial committee. He was appointed (1932) U.S. delegate to the disarmament conference at Geneva, member (1933) of the International Economic Conference, head (1935) of the U.S. delegation at the five-power naval conference at London, and chairman (1937) of the U.S. delegation at the international sugar conference. He served as chairman (1938 et seq.) of the American Red Cross.

Davis, Owen. b. at Portland, Me., June 29, 1874—. American playwright. He attended the University of Tennessee and Harvard University. He is the author of comedies and melodramas including Through the Breakers and Nellie: The Beautiful Cloak Model, and also of Icebound (1923), which won the Pulitzer prize, The Detour (1923), The Nervous Wreck (1923), Lazybones (1924), Easy Come, Easy Go (1925), and Beware of Widows (1925). He also made stage adaptations of The Great Gatsby, by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and Ethan Frome, by Edith Wharton. His autobiography is entitled Like To Do It Again (1931).

Davis, Rebecca Blaine. [Maiden name, Harding.] b. at Washington, Pa., June 24, 1831; d. at Mt. Kisco, N.Y., Sept. 29, 1910. American novelist, short-story writer, and journalist; mother of Richard Harding Davis. She educated herself at home, chiefly by reading widely, and combined writing with raising a large family. Her works include Dallas Galbraith and Waiting for the Verdict (both 1868), Berrytown (1872), John Andross (1874), A Law Unto Herself (1878), Natasqua (1886), Silhouettes of American Life and Kent Hampden (both 1892), and Dr. Warrick's Daughters (1896).

Davis, Richard Harding. b. at Philadelphia, April 18, 1864; d. at Mount Kisco, N.Y., April 11, 1916. American journalist and author, noted as a war correspondent; son of Rebecca Blaine Harding Davis. He attended Lehigh University and the Johns Hopkins University and entered journalism in 1886, working for the Record, Press, and Telegraph, all at Philadelphia. He served (1889–90) on the staff of the New York Sun, and in 1890 became managing editor of Harper's Weekly, later going abroad for that magazine and writing a series of letters published in book form as The Rulers of the Mediterranean (1894). His other journeys at this time were described in Our English Cousins (1894) and About Paris (1895). Meanwhile, he had achieved success as a writer of popular fiction, publishing the favorably received Gallegher, and Other Stories (1891), and following it with Van Bibber and Others (1892), The Exiles and Other Stories (1892), and

The Lion and the Unicorn (1899). Investigating conditions in areas near the Canal Zone, he recorded his experiences in Three Gringos in Venezuela and Central America (1896). As a newspaper correspondent, he covered, in addition to minor wars in the Balkans and in Latin America, six wars: the Spanish War in Cuba, the Greco-Turkish, the Spanish-American, the Boer War, the Russo-Japanese, and World War I, producing, as the result of his experiences, Cuba in War Time (1897), A Year from a Reporter's Note Book (1898), The Cuban and Porto Rican Campaigns (1898), With Both Armies in South Africa (1900), Notes of a War Correspondent (1910), With the Allies (1914), and With the French in France and Salonika (1916). He also wrote The Congo and the Coasts of Africa (1907). As a foreign and war correspondent, he established a tradition of the venturesome, the daring and picturesque; his name still identifies a special type of sensational reporting. A prolific author, he wrote such popular novels as Soldiers of Fortune (1897), The King's Jackal (1898), Captain Macklin (1902), The Bar Sinister (1903), Vera the Medium (1908), and The White Mice (1909). His other collections of short stories include Ranson's Folly (1902), The Scarlet Car (1907), Once Upon a Time (1910), The Man Who Could Not Lose (1911), The Red Cross Girl (1912), The Lost Road (1913), and The Boy Scout (1917). He was also the author of 25 plays, among them The Dictator (produced 1904), Miss Civilization (1906), and The Seventh Daughter (1910).

Davis, Stuart. b. at Philadelphia, Dec. 7, 1894—. American painter and illustrator. A pupil of Robert Henri, he went along, from his student days, with the currents of modern art, and at the age of 19 saw his work hung in the renowned Armory Show in 1913. At that time he was a cartoonist for Harper's Weekly. His paintings include murals in the Radio City Music Hall, Rockefeller Center, New York, and in the studios of radio station WNYC in the same city. Other examples of his work are included in the permanent exhibitions of the Museum of Modern Art and the Whitney Museum at New York, the Phillips Memorial Gallery at Washington, the Museum of the Pennsylvania Academy, the Albright Art Gallery at Buffalo, and elsewhere. A comprehensive retrospective exhibition of his work was presented by the Museum of Modern Art in 1946.

Davis, Thomas Osborne. b. at Mallow, County Cork, Ireland, Oct. 14, 1814; d. at Dublin, Sept. 16, 1845. Irish poet and politician. He graduated at Trinity College in 1836, was admitted to the bar in 1838, became joint editor with John Blake Dillon of the Dublin Morning Register in 1841, and founded, with Charles Gavan Duffy and Dillon, the Nation in 1842. He joined in 1839 the Repeal Association, within which organization he founded the party of Young Ireland in opposition to O'Connell's leadership. His poems, collected after his death, form a volume of Duffy's Library of Ireland for 1846.

Davis, Varina. [Maiden name, Howell.] b. near Natchez, Miss., May 7, 1826; d. Oct. 16, 1906. First lady of the Confederacy; wife of Jefferson Davis (1808–89). She was her husband's amanuensis while he wrote The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy (1881), and after his death she wrote Jefferson Davis, Ex-President of the Confederate States of America: A Memoir (2 vols., 1890).

Davis, Varina Anne Jefferson. [Known as the "Daughter of the Confederacy."] b. at Richmond, Va., June 27, 1864; d. at Narragansett Pier, R.I., Sept. 18, 1898. American novelist; daughter of Jefferson Davis, president of the Southern Confederacy. She was the author of An Irish Knight of the Nineteenth Century: Sketch of the Life of Robert Emmet (1888), The Veiled Doctor; A Novel (1895), and A Romance of Summer Seas; A Novel (1899).

Davis, William Augustine. b. in Barren County, Ky., Sept. 21, 1809; d. at St. Joseph, Mo., Jan. 15, 1875. American postal employee, said to have been the inventor of the railroad-car mail-sorting system. He served in the Richmond, Va., post office (1830–55), as postmaster (1855–61) at St. Joseph, Mo., and thereafter as U.S. postmaster's assistant. In 1862 he suggested the plan of sorting mail in railroad cars to speed overland mail distribution at railroad-stagecoach junctions. Credit for the scheme is, however, given by some historians to George B. Armstrong, another post-office employee.

Davis, William Morris. b. at Philadelphia, Feb. 12, 1850; d. at Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 5, 1934. American geologist, professor of geology in Harvard University from 1899. He was graduated from the Lawrence Scientific School (Harvard) in 1869, was assistant in the Argentine National Observatory at Córdoba (1870–73), and was assistant professor (1885–90) and professor (1890–99) of physical geography at Harvard. In 1903 he acted as physiographer of the Pumpelly (Carnegie Institution) expedition to Turkestan, and in 1905 accompanied the British Association to South Africa. He was exchange professor at the University of Berlin in 1908–09, headed (1912) the American Geographical Society's transcontinental expedition, and served during World War I on the National Research Council as chairman of the geographic and geologic division. Among his works are Elementary Meteorology (1894), Physical Geography (1899), and The Coral Reef Problem (1928).

Davis, William Stearns. b. at Amherst, Mass., April 30, 1877; d. Feb. 15, 1930. American writer and teacher, professor (1909–27) of history at the University of Minnesota. He was the author of A Friend of Caesar (1900), God Wills It (1901), Belshazzar (1902), The Friar of Wittenberg (1912), A Day in Old Athens (1914), The Roots of the War (1918), Life on a Mediaeval Barony (1923), The White Queen (1925), Europe Since Waterloo (1926), and Gilman of Redford (1927).

Davis Mountains. Mountain area in W Texas, ab. 175 mi. SE of El Paso. The E part of the range is much dissected by canyons, and is very rough. There are many prominent peaks in the W Davis Mountains, of which Mount Livermore or Baldy Peak (8,382 ft.) is the highest. The McDonald Observatory, with its 82-inch reflecting telescope, is atop Mount Locke (6,791 ft.).

Davison (dā'vi.sŏn), Henry Pomeroy. b. at Troy, Pa., June 13, 1867; d. May 6, 1922. American banker. He was chairman (1917–19) of the Red Cross War Council and for many years a partner in J. P. Morgan and Company. As president (1899 et seq.) of the Liberty National Bank, he conceived the plan for a national bank and insurance company depository which was realized as the Bankers' Trust Company. He also served as a member (1908) of the Monetary Commission to study the European system of national currency and as chairman (1910) of the Six-Power Chinese Loan Conference at Paris. His Red Cross activities included the raising and administration (1917–19) of 285 million dollars.

Davison, William. d. in December, 1608. British diplomat. As a secretary of state he procured Elizabeth's signature to the death warrant of Mary, Queen of Scots in 1587.

Davis Peninsula (dā'vis). Elongated, snow and ice covered peninsula in Antarctica, on the Queen Mary Coast, in ab. 66°35′ S., 98°45′ E. Elevation, ab. 600 ft.; width, ab. 5 mi.

Davisson (dā'vi.sŏn), Clinton Joseph. b. at Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 22, 1881—. American physicist, known for research in electricity, magnetism, and radiant energy. Associated (1917–46) with Bell Telephone laboratories (later with the engineering department of Western Electric Company), he discovered (1927) with L. H. Germer the diffraction of electrons by crystals, and for this shared (1937) the Nobel prize in physics with the English physicist George Paget Thomson, who had independently discovered, by another method, the same phenomenon.

Davis Strait (dā'vis). Sea passage connecting the Atlantic Ocean and Baffin Bay, and separating Greenland from Baffin Island and the rest of the islands of the Arctic Archipelago. It was named for its discoverer, the English navigator John Davys. Width in the narrowest part, ab. 200 mi.

Davit (dā'vĕt), Gerard (or Gheerardt or Gheeraert). See David, Gerard (or Gheerardt or Gheeraert).

Davitt (dav'it), Michael. b. at Straide, County Mayo, Ireland, March 25, 1846; d. at Dublin, May 31, 1906. Irish journalist and political leader. His parents were evicted and when he was ten years of age he was sent to work in a Lancashire cotton mill. He lost his right arm as the result of a factory accident in 1857, and became a newsboy. He joined the Fenian brotherhood in 1865, and in 1870 was arrested for attempting to send arms into Ireland, was sentenced to 15 years, and served seven years, being released on ticket of leave (paroled). He went to the U.S. to make contact with the Fenians and, returning to Ireland, founded, with C. S. Parnell and others, the Irish Land League in 1879 in an attempt to further the cause of Irish independence by enlisting the dissatisfied farm people. He was soon arrested for seditious speeches and imprisoned for two years; again, in 1883, he served three months on a new charge of seditious utterances. He was first elected to Parliament for County Meath, in 1882, but was disqualified by a special vote of the House of Commons for nonexpiration of the sentence in 1870 for treason-felony. He was elected Nationalist member for Meath, North, in 1892, but was unseated on petition, and sat for Cork, Northeast, in 1893 and as anti-Parnellite member for Kerry, East (1895–96) and Mayo, South (1895–99). He published Leaves from a Prison Diary (1884), Defence of the Land League (1891), Life and Progress in Australasia (1898), The Boer Fight for Freedom (1902), Within the Pale (1903), and The Fall of Feudalism in Ireland: Story of the Land League Revolution (1904).

D'Avolos (dav'ọ.los). In John Ford's Love's Sacrifice, the duke's secretary (modeled on Shakespeare's Iago), a spy and "pander to the bad passions of others."

Davos (dä.vōs'). Health resort in SE Switzerland, comprising the adjoining villages of Davos-Platz and Davos-Dorf, situated in the highest part of the Alpine valley of Davos: famous as a resort for consumptives. The Swiss Research Institute for Alpine Physiology and Tuberculosis was founded here in 1923. Davos is the scene of Thomas Mann's novel The Magic Mountain. There are many hotels and fashionable shops. 9,259 (1941).

Davos Valley. Alpine valley in SE Switzerland, in the canton of Graubünden, SE of the city of Chur. Its chief place is Davos (the adjoining villages of Davos-Platz and Davos-Dorf), a noted health resort at an elevation of 5,115 ft. The Lake of Davos, now important for hydroelectric power, is in the valley.

Davout (dä.vō), Louis Nicolas. [Titles: Duc d'Auerstädt, Prince d'Eckmühl.] b. at Annoux, Yonne, France, May 10, 1770; d. at Paris, June 1, 1823. French marshal. He was a lieutenant in a cavalry regiment in 1788, served (1792–93) as chief of battalion under Dumouriez, was brigadier general in the army of the Moselle, fought under Pichegru and Moreau in the army of the Rhine, and went to Egypt on Napoleon's expedition there and fought with distinction, especially at Abukir. He was made general of division in 1800 and marshal in 1804, and fought at Austerlitz (1805), Auerstedt (1806), where with one corps he beat the Prussian army, Eggmühl (Eckmühl) and Wagram (1809), and in the Russian campaign (1812). He was minister of war during the Hundred Days in 1815. He became Duke of Auerstädt in 1808, and Prince of Eckmühl in 1809.

Davus (dā'vus). Conventional name for a slave in Latin comedies.

Davy (dā'vi), Sir Humphry. b. at Penzance, Cornwall, England, Dec. 17, 1778; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, May 29, 1829. English scientist. The son of a woodcarver, he grew up in Cornwall, receiving his elementary education at Truro, and becoming in 1795 an apprentice to an apothecary at Penzance. This was a fortunate beginning of his career, in that it confirmed his interest in chemistry, and as early as 1799 he discovered the effects of inhaling nitrous oxide (laughing gas) and experimented with inhalation of other gases. In 1801 he became a lecturer in, and from 1802 to 1813 was a professor of, chemistry at the Royal Institute, London. During this period he first isolated several of the elements by electrolysis. He is noted for his demonstration that the diamond is a carbon, and even more as the inventor of a safety lamp for use in mines, which was of importance in the extension of coal mining in Great Britain and other countries. He was also an early student of agricultural chemistry. He was knighted in 1812 and made a baronet in 1818. In 1820 he was elected president of the Royal Society. Among his important books were On Some Chemical Agencies of Electricity (1807) and Elements of Agricultural Chemistry (1813). His collected works were published (1839–40) in nine volumes.

Davy Jones. In nautical folklore, a personification of the sea, whence "Davy Jones's Locker" means the bottom of the sea, especially as the grave of the drowned. These terms, first current among sailors, are now parts of common speech, and universally understood among English-speaking peoples, but their origin is unknown. There is no legend of a real or mythical Davy Jones. A connection has been surmised between the name Jones and the prophet Jonah who is reported in the Bible to have been swallowed by a whale. The two names ("Davy" and "Jones") together strongly suggest that this modern mythological immortal may have been born in the imagination of Welsh mariners.

Davys (dā'vis), John. [Also, Davis.] b. at Sandridge, Devonshire, England, c1550; killed in the Strait of Malacca, Dec. 29, 1605. English navigator. He commanded expeditions in search of the Northwest Passage in 1585, 1586, and 1587, on the first of which he discovered Davis Strait. He discovered the Falkland Islands in 1592. He sailed with Raleigh on the raiding voyage to Cádiz and the Azores in 1596. He took service in 1604 as pilot in the Tiger, under Captain Sir Edward Michelborne, destined for a voyage to the East Indies, on which he was killed by Japanese pirates.

Daw (dô), Marjorie. See Marjorie Daw.

Daw, Sir David. Foolish baronet in Richard Cumberland's Wheel of Fortune.

Daw, Sir John. In Ben Jonson's comedy Epicoene, or The Silent Woman, a cowardly, foolish coxcomb.

Dawes (dôz), Charles Gates. b. at Marietta, Ohio, Aug. 27, 1865; d. at Chicago, April 23, 1951. American lawyer, financier, and politician who served (1925–29) as Vice-president of the United States. He graduated from Marietta College (1884) and from Cincinnati Law School (1886). After serving (1897–1902) as U.S. comptroller of currency, he organized (1902) and was president (1902–21) and chairman of the board of directors (1921–25) of the Central Trust Company at Chicago, and chairman of the board (1932 et seq.) of the City National Bank and Trust Company at Chicago. He served in World War I, being appointed brigadier general and chief of supply procurement for the American Expeditionary Forces in France. He was the first director (1921) of the U.S. Bureau of the Budget. In 1923 he was president of the International Commission on German reparations which produced a reparations payment scheme known as the Dawes Plan (in effect Sept. 1, 1924). He was U.S. ambassador (1929–32) to Great Britain, and president (1932) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He shared (1925) the Nobel peace prize with Sir Austen Chamberlain of England. Among his books are A Journal of the Great War (1921), Notes as Vice-President (1935), and A Journal of Reparations (1939).

Dawes, Henry Laurens. b. at Cummington, Mass., Oct. 30, 1816; d. at Pittsfield, Mass., Feb. 5, 1903. American politician, member of Congress from Massachusetts (1857–75) and Republican U.S. senator (1875–93).

Dawes, Sophie. See Feuchères, Baronne de.

Dawes, William. b. at Boston, April 6, 1745; d. Feb. 25, 1799. American patriot who rode (April 18, 1775) with Paul Revere from Lexington toward Concord, rousing the countryside to prepare for the British advance. Though Revere was stopped by the British, either Dawes or Samuel Prescott, the third rider on the mission, alerted the patriots at Concord.

Dawes, William Rutter. b. at London, March 19, 1799; d. at Haddenham, Buckinghamshire, England, Feb. 15, 1868. English astronomer. He was educated at the Charter House school (1811–13), settled as a surgeon at Liverpool in 1825, and was for a time pastor of an independent congregation at Ormskirk, Lancashire. He had charge (1839–44) of the observatory at South Villa, Regent's Park, London, belonging to George Bishop, fitted up an observatory at Camden Lodge, near Cranbrook, Kent, in 1845, and discovered 15 new double stars in the period 1840–59.

Dawes Commission. [Also known as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.] Commission appointed by President Cleveland in 1893 for the purpose of negotiating with the Indian tribes of the Seminole, Creek, Choctaw, Cherokee, and Chickasaw in order to bring them under the terms of the Dawes General Allotment Act of 1887. It succeeded in securing the tribal agreements and was dissolved in 1905.

Dawes General Allotment Act. [Called the "Emancipation Act of the Indians."] Law passed (1887) by the U.S. Congress providing for the reallotment of Indian reservation lands. Tribal ownership could, with presidential approval, be supplanted by individual ownership of 160-acre tracts for family heads and 80-acre tracts for unmarried Indians. Once ownership was established by patent, the occupants became U.S. citizens. Mortgage or sale of the land was forbidden for 25 years, after which time title was to be conferred. The government could purchase the land remaining in the reservation after allotment to resident Indians, and the acreage was opened to white ownership.

Dawes Plan. International scheme (announced April 9, 1924) which provided for changing the schedule of German reparations payments established after World War I. The plan took its name from Charles G. Dawes, who served as head of a commission of experts from the U.S., Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium, which devised the scheme. The Dawes Plan, superseded by the Young Plan on May 17, 1930, was based upon German capacity to pay. It called for a measure of foreign control over the German economy in return for a loan to Germany, which was intended to stabilize the German economy, dangerously near collapse as the result of the precipitous fall of the mark, and for evacuation of the Ruhr by the French, who had occupied that industrial area after Germany failed to observe the original reparations schedule. The commission reported the plan on April 9, 1924; it was accepted by the Germans on April 16, concurred in by a conference at London in August, and went into effect the following month.

Dawison (dä'vē.sôn), Bogumił. b. at Warsaw, Poland, May 15, 1818; d. near Dresden, Germany, Feb. 1, 1872. Polish actor. He first appeared in America in 1866. He at one time played Othello to Edwin Booth's Iago. He played both tragic and comic parts.

Dawkins (dô'kinz), John. Young pickpocket in the employ of Fagin, in Charles Dickens's Oliver Twist; called the "Artful Dodger" from his expertness at his trade.

Dawkins, Sir William Boyd. b. at Buttington, Welshpool, Montgomeryshire, Wales, Dec. 26, 1838; d. Jan. 15, 1929. English geologist and paleontologist, author of Cave-Hunting (1874), Early Man in Britain (1880), and others.

Dawley (dô'li). [Called locally Little Dawley.] Urban district in W England, in Shropshire, situated on the Shrewsbury Canal, ab. 4 mi. SE of Wellington, ab. 156 mi. NW of London by rail. 8,369 (1951).

Dawlish (dô'lish). Urban district and seaside resort in SW England, in Devonshire, situated on the English Channel ab. 10 mi. S of Exeter, ab. 186 mi. SW of London by rail. 7,512 (1951).

Dawn. Autobiographical work (1931) by Theodore Dreiser. Along with his other works of the same nature, A Traveler at Forty (1913), A Hoosier Holiday (1916), and A Book About Myself (1922; published in 1931 as Newspaper Days), it gives a frank picture of his thoughts and feelings as a man and of his development as a writer.

Dawn's Left Hand. Novel by Dorothy M. Richardson, published in 1931. It is the tenth section of Pilgrimage (1938), a novel sequence in 12 parts employing the stream-of-consciousness technique.

Daws (dôz), Sophie. See Feuchères, Baronne de.

Dawson (dô'sən). City in SW Georgia, county seat of Terrell County, in a farming region. 4,411 (1950).

Dawson. Mining city and the capital of the Yukon Territory, Canada, situated on the Yukon River, near the Klondike gold fields and just W of the Alaska boundary. 783 (1951).

Dawson, A. J. [Full name, Alec John Dawson.] b. at London, Aug. 25, 1872—. English novelist. He served (1914–19) in World War I as a major. His books include Middle Greyness, God's Foundling, Bismillah, Hidden Manna, The Message, Finn the Wolfhound, Jan: Son of Finn, A Temporary Gentleman in France, Peter of Monkslease: his Mortal Tenement (1924), The Emergence of Marie (1926), and The Case Books of X 37 (1930).

Dawson, Bertrand Edward. See Dawson of Penn, 1st Viscount.

Dawson, Bully. fl. in the 17th century. Notorious London sharper, a contemporary of Sir George Etherege.

Dawson, Coningsby William. b. at High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, England, Feb. 26, 1883—. American writer. He came to the U.S. in 1905, and served (1916–18) with the Canadian 1st Division in World War I. He afterward lectured (1919–20) throughout the U.S. on postwar reconstruction problems and reported to Herbert Hoover on reconstruction problems of central and eastern Europe. His works include The Worker and Other Poems (1906), The House of the Weeping Woman (1908), Murder Point (1910), The Garden Without Walls (1913), Living Bayonets (1919), Pilgrims of the Impossible (1928), and Inspirational Valley (1935).

Dawson, Geoffrey. [Original surname, Robinson; full name, George Geoffrey Dawson.] b. at Skipton-in-Craven, Yorkshire, England, 1874; d. at London, Nov. 7, 1944. English journalist, editor, and civil servant. Educated at Eton and at Magdalen College, Oxford, he was a fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, held a post in the Colonial Office, and served (1901–05) as Lord Milner's private secretary in South Africa. There he became a correspondent for the London Times and editor (1905–10) of the Johannesburg Star. Returning to England in 1910, he served from August, 1912 to February, 1919 as editor of the Times, resigning (1919) because he did not agree with Lord Northcliffe's policies; he returned (1923) to the editorship after Northcliffe's death and retired in 1941. He changed his name to Dawson in 1917. He was estates bursar (1919–23) of All Souls and secretary (1921–22) of the Rhodes Trust. On Jan. 7, 1927, as editor of the London Times, he participated in the first transatlantic telephone conversation in history when he spoke to Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times.

Dawson, George Mercer. b. at Pictou, Nova Scotia, Canada, Aug. 1, 1849; d. at Ottawa, March 2, 1901. Canadian geologist and explorer; son of Sir John William Dawson. He was appointed geologist and botanist to the Northwest Boundary Commission in 1873 and in 1875 joined the geological survey of Canada, of which he became assistant director in 1883 and director in 1895. In 1891 and 1892 he served on the Bering Sea Commission. His publications include Report of the Geology and Resources of the Region in the Vicinity of the Forty-ninth Parallel (1875), Descriptive Sketch of the Physical Geography and Geology of Canada (1884, with A. R. Selwyn), a preliminary report on the physical and geological features of a portion of the Rocky Mountains (1886), and many monographs.

Dawson, James. b. c1717; d. at Kensington Green, London, 1746. Young volunteer officer, of good family, in the service of Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender. He was hanged, drawn, and quartered, and his heart burned, on July 30, 1746, for treason. His betrothed was present, and, when all was over, she died in the arms of a friend. William Shenstone made this the subject of a ballad, Jemmy Dawson.

Dawson, Sir John William. b. at Pictou, Nova Scotia, Canada, in October, 1820; d. at Montreal, Nov. 19, 1899. Canadian geologist and naturalist. He was principal of McGill College and University from 1855 to 1893. His works include Acadian Geology (1855), and others.

Dawson, Thomas Cleland. b. at Hudson, Wis., July 30, 1865; d. at Washington, D.C., May 1, 1912. American diplomat. He was assistant attorney general of Iowa (1891–94), took part in the work of the Republican national committee in 1900, was secretary of the U.S. legation to Brazil (1897–1904), minister resident and consul general in the Dominican Republic (1904–07), and minister to Colombia (1907–09), to Chile (1909), and to Panama (1910). In 1909 he was made chief of the division of Latin-American affairs in the department of state. He was the author of South American Republics (1903–04).

Dawson, William Harbutt. b. July 27, 1860—. English publicist, chiefly known as the author of numerous books and articles interpreting German culture to English readers.

Dawson, William James. b. at Towcester, Northamptonshire, England, Nov. 21, 1854; d. 1928. American Wesleyan clergyman, noted for his writings. He was ordained in 1875 and became (1892) pastor of the Highbury Quadrant Congregational Church at London. In 1905 he moved to the U.S., where he was pastor of the First Church at Newark, N.J. His writings include the novel

Robert Shenstone (1917), verse such as A Vision of Souls (1884), and the miscellaneous writings The Threshold of Manhood (1889), Makers of English Poetry (1890), Makers of English Prose (1899), Makers of English Fiction (1905), The Empire of Love (1907), The Book of Courage (1911), and The Autobiography of a Mind (1925).

Dawson Creek. Town in E central British Columbia, situated a few miles S of the Peace River near the Alberta boundary. It is the northern terminus of the railroad line from Edmonton to the Peace River country and is the actual starting point of the Alaska Highway. It has a number of grain elevators. Ab. 54 mi. N of Dawson Creek is Fort St. John, the site of a large strategically located airfield. 3,589 (1951).

Dawson of Penn, 1st Viscount. [Title of Bertrand Edward Dawson.] b. at Duppas Hill, Croydon, Surrey, England, March 9, 1864; d. at London, March 7, 1945. English physician who served as physician in ordinary (1907–45) to Edward VII, George V, Edward VIII, and George VI, kings of England. He saw service during World War I as major general in charge of medical service, and was president (1931–38) of the Royal College of Physicians.

Dax (dăks). [Also: Ax; Latin, Aquae Tarbellicae, Aquae Augustae.] Town in SW France, in the department of Landes, situated on the Adour River, between Bordeaux and Bayonne. It is a winter resort, and has thermal baths patronized by many persons suffering from rheumatism. During the Middle Ages the town underwent many invasions by the Goths, Franks, Saracens, Normans, and English. 14,113 (1946).

Day (dā), Benjamin. b. 1838; d. 1916. American printer; son of Benjamin Harry Day. He invented a process for shading the plates used in printing illustrations and maps. This Ben Day, or Benday, process is a standard technique in printing and is very widely used. To this day printers speak of "Bendaying" an illustration, or "giving it a Benday."

Day, Benjamin Harry. b. at West Springfield, Mass., April 10, 1810; d. at New York, Dec. 21, 1889. American printer, journalist, and founder of the New York Sun; father of Benjamin Day (1838–1916) and grandfather of Clarence Day (1874–1935). His father was Henry Day, and his mother, Mary (Ely), traced her descent to William Brewster, who signed the Mayflower Compact in 1620. He began his newspaper career when he was 14, as an apprentice to Samuel Bowles, who had just founded the Springfield Republican. In 1830, a year before he married, he went to New York, where he worked for the Evening Post, the Commercial Advertiser, and the Journal of Commerce. In 1833, a year made memorable in the city by a depression, bank failures, and cholera, he founded the New York Sun, a penny newspaper. The first issue came out on Tuesday, Sept. 3, being printed in a small room at 222 William Street. It contained four pages, and its announced aim was "to lay before the public, at a price within the means of everyone, all the news of the day." Within four months the paper's circulation was 4,000 copies, and by April, 1834, it had reached 8,000 copies daily, both large figures for that time. In 1835 Day claimed that his 19,360 copies daily had passed the 17,000 figure of the London Times. Three years later, he sold the Sun to Moses Yale Beach, his brother-in-law, for the sum of 40,000 dollars. In 1883, in an interview published in the Sun on its 50th anniversary, he declared that "the silliest thing I ever did in my life was to sell that paper." In 1840 he founded another penny daily, the True Sun, but got rid of it in a few months. In 1842 he founded, with James Wilson, a monthly (it later became a weekly), Brother Jonathan, which made a feature of reprinting popular English novels. The Civil War, which caused a paper shortage, hurt his business, and he retired in 1862, to spend the rest of his life in ease and comfort. He was a man of strong character, was a hard worker, had his own opinions, could give and take in a battle, and had no objection to attacking, or being attacked by, his professional rivals.

Day, Clarence. [Original full name, Clarence Shepard Day.] b. at New York, Nov. 18, 1874; d. there, of pneumonia, Dec. 28, 1935. American humorist, essayist, Yale historian, and illustrator. He was the eldest son of Clarence Shepard Day, who was one of the governors of the New York Stock Exchange, and Lavinia ("Vinnie") Stockwell, and his grandfather was the founder of the New York Sun, Benjamin Harry Day. He was educated at St. Paul's School, at Concord, N.H., and at Yale University, graduating with the class of 1896. He is not famous for his first three books, but he is known and loved by Yale men for them: The Decennial Record (1907), A Record of the Quindecennial Reunion of the Class of 1896 (1912), and The '96 Half-Way Book (1915). To a larger and more general public he is known for his humorous prose essays, sketches, and narratives. This Simian World (1920), unscientific reflections on evolution, The Crow's Nest (1921; later revised as After All, 1936), In the Green Mountain Country (1934), a tribute to Calvin Coolidge, and the books that have established his reputation, God and My Father (1932), Life with Father (1935), and Life with Mother (published 1937, and edited by his wife, Katharine Briggs Dodge, whom he married in 1928). His Life with Father is a humorous portrait of the senior Day, a most explosive character, thoroughly in love with, but exceedingly trying to, his wife and children. It was a huge success as a book, selling over 114,000 copies, was translated into German (1936) by Hans Fallada, and as a stage and screen play gave Howard Lindsay and William Powell, respectively, each one of his best roles. Apart from being a writer, Day was a clever artist with pen and pencil. He illustrated his own Thoughts without Words (1935) and Scenes from the Mesozoic, and Other Drawings (1936), as well as making 20 full-page drawings for Charles A. A. Bennett's At a Venture (1924) and illustrations for The Delicatessen Husband (1926) by Florence Seabury. He also wrote another work of limited interest, The Story of the Yale University Press (1920) and edited The Colby Essays (1926), a two-volume collection of essays by Frank Moore Colby. From 1898, when he was discharged from the U.S. navy (in which he had enlisted when the Spanish-American War broke out), until his death, he was a sufferer, but a brave and cheerful one, as his works show, from arthritis. He made the best of a bad condition, never lost his spirit, joked about himself, not only smiled but laughed, and made thousands laugh with him and at his humorous outlook. He dropped his middle name, always writing as Clarence Day.

Day, Clive. b. at Hartford, Conn., Feb. 11, 1871; d. at Greensboro, Vt., July 27, 1951. American political economist. He served at Yale as Knox professor of political economy from 1907 to 1936. He was the author of Policy and Administration of the Dutch in Java (1904), History of Commerce (1907), History of Commerce of the U.S. (1925), and Economic Development in Modern Europe (1933).

Day, Edmund Ezra. b. at Manchester, N.H., Dec. 7, 1883; d. March 23, 1951. American educator. He was professor of economics (1910–23) at Harvard, professor of economics (1923–27) and first dean (1924–27) of the business administration school (which he organized) at Michigan, director for social sciences (1928–37) with the Rockefeller Foundation, president (1937–49), chancellor (1949–50), and president emeritus (1950 et seq.) of Cornell. He was author of Index of Physical Production (1920), Statistical Analysis (1925), The Defense of Freedom (1941), and other books.

Day, Frank Miles. b. at Philadelphia, April 5, 1861; d. 1918. American architect. He was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1883 and studied architecture at that university and in Europe. He was a fellow of the American Institute of Architects and was elected its president in 1906. He was also a trustee of the American Academy at Rome. He designed various college buildings, among others.

Day, Henry Noble. b. at Washington, Conn., Aug. 4, 1808; d. at New Haven, Conn., Jan. 12, 1890. American educator and philosophical writer; nephew of Jeremiah Day. He became professor of sacred rhetoric at Western Reserve College in 1840, and president of the Ohio Female College in 1854, and moved to New Haven in 1864. His works include Logic (1867), Ethics (1876), Ontology (1878), and others.

Day, Holman Francis. b. at Vassalboro, Me., Nov. 6, 1865; d. at Mill Valley, Calif., Feb. 19, 1935. American writer and editor. He was managing editor of the Union Publishing Company (1889–90) at Bangor, Me., and thereafter of the Lewiston (Me.) Daily Sun. His books include Up in Maine (1900), Pine Tree Ballads (1902), Kin O'Klaadn (1904), Squire Phin (1905), Along Came Ruth (1914, a play), When Egypt Went Broke (1920), The Loving are the Daring (1923), Leadbetter's Luck (1923), When the Fight Begins (1926), Starwagons (1928), and Ships of Joy (1932).

Day, James Roscoe. b. at Whitneyville, Me., Oct. 17, 1845; d. at Atlantic City, N.J., March 13, 1923. American Methodist clergyman and educator. He served as a pastor from 1872 to 1894 and left the active ministry to become chancellor (1894) of Syracuse University. Between that time and his retirement (1922), the enrollment at Syracuse expanded from 750 students to more than 5,000. He was the author of The Raid on Prosperity (1907) and My Neighbor the Workingman (1920).

Day, Jeremiah. b. at New Preston, Conn., Aug. 3, 1773; d. at New Haven, Conn., Aug. 22, 1867. American mathematician, president of Yale College from 1817 to 1846. He published an Algebra (1814), Navigation and Surveying (1817), and other works.

Day, John. b. c1574; d. 1640. English dramatist and poet. He was educated at Cambridge, and collaborated (1598 et seq.) with William Haughton, Henry Chettle, Thomas Dekker, and others in numerous plays, all of which remained unprinted except The Blind Beggar of Bednal Green. He was the author of The Blind Beggar of Bednal Green (1600, with Chettle), Isle of Gulls (1606), Law Tricks (1608), and Humour Out of Breath (1608). His chief work is the poemlike masque or pageant The Parliament of Bees (c1607).

Day, John Godfrey Fitzmaurice. b. 1874; d. at Dublin, Sept. 26, 1938. Irish clergyman and Protestant primate of all Ireland. He was a member (1902–09) of the Cambridge mission to Delhi, India, vicar (1912–20) of Saint Ann's Church at Dublin, canon (1914–20) of Christ Church Cathedral at Dublin, professor (1917–20) of pastoral theology at the University of Dublin, and was appointed bishop of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin (1920) and archbishop of Armagh (1938).

Day, Mr. In Sir Robert Howard's play The Committee, the chairman of the committee, a kind of Tartuffe, under the thumb of his wife.

Day, Stephen. See Daye, Stephen.

Day, Thomas. b. at London, June 22, 1748; d. at Wargrave, Berkshire, England, Sept. 28, 1789. English follower of Rousseau's theories, educator, essayist, poet, and philanthropist. He was educated at the famous Charterhouse School (where Thackeray spent six years) and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He was a friend of Sir William Jones, of R. L. Edgeworth, Maria's father, and of Erasmus Darwin. As a child, he was in the habit of giving his pocket money to poor people, and was noted for his kindness to animals. In later life, he refused to obey Jones's request, "kill that spider," remarking that he had no more right to do so than he would have to kill Jones if some powerful person said "kill that lawyer." When he married a lady of means, in 1778, he made her take all necessary steps to make it impossible for him to touch her fortune. His theory that animals will always respond to kindness he carried to such an extreme that it caused his death. On a visit to his wife and mother he was thrown on his head by an unbroken colt, the animal becoming frightened and shying as they neared Wargrave. Day died within an hour, and his wife, who never recovered from the shock, died of a broken heart two years later. Day wrote The Dying Negro (1773), a poem, The Desolation of America (1777), Reflections on the Present State of England and the Independence of America (1782), Letters of Marius, or Reflections upon the Peace, the East India Bill, and the Present Crisis, and Fragments of Original Letters on the Slavery of the Negroes (both 1784), Dialogue between a Justice of the Peace and a Farmer (1785), and the History of Little Jack (which was published in the Children's Miscellany, and separately in 1788), some pamphlets and a few poems. He is remembered, however, as the author of a moral and didactic romance, The History of Sanford and Merton (3 vols., 1783, 1787, 1789), in which he sets forth his ideals of right character and conduct.

Day, William Rufus. b. at Ravenna, Ohio, April 17, 1849; d. July 9, 1923. American jurist. He was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1870 and was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1872. He succeeded John Sherman as U.S. secretary of state in April, 1898, but resigned in September to become chairman of the U.S. peace commission at Paris; judge of the federal circuit court, sixth circuit (1899–1903); appointed associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court in 1903, serving until 1922.

Dayak (dī'ak). See Dyak.

Daye (dā), Stephen. [Also, Day.] b. at London, c1594; d. at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 22, 1668. First printer in the Anglo-American colonies, in the English-American colonies, or in British America (as he is variously called). He was a locksmith at Cambridge, England (not a printer, and there is no evidence that he studied or knew anything about printing) when he married a baker's widow, Rebecca Bordman, in 1618. Twenty years later, he came to America with her, his two sons, and her son, sailing from London on the John. He was under a two-year contract to work for the Reverend Jesse (or Josse, or José) Glover, a dissenting clergyman, who was bringing with him paper, type, and a printing press, with which Daye was to set up a shop at Cambridge, Mass. Glover died before the ship reached America, but his wife, carrying out the intended plans of her husband, bought a dwelling for the Daye family at Cambridge (on what later became Holyoke Street), and Daye began his printing business. About six months later, in January, 1639, he issued a broadside, the Oath of a Freeman, the first piece of printed matter in what is now the U.S. Other works that he printed are An Almanack, Calculated for New England, by Mr. William Pierce, Mariner (1639), ten annual almanacs, a speller (1643), The Book of General the Lawes and Libertyes (1648), Norris's Cathechism, in the same year, and a series of Harvard College broadsides. The first book that he printed, and the first English book printed in the American colonies (not counting the almanacs and broadsides as such) was The Bay Psalm Book (1640). He also brought out Winthrop's A Declaration of Former Passages and Proceedings betwixt the English and the Narrogansetts, with their Confederates, Wherein the Grounds and Justice of the Ensuing Warre are Opened and Cleared (1645). On Dec. 10, 1641, the Cambridge General Court gave him 300 acres of land in recognition of the fact that he was "the first that sett upon printing." In or after 1643, Daye seems to have turned over the management of the press to his son Matthew, who, it is believed, had learned printing in England. The 1647 edition of the Almanack carries Matthew's name on the title page.

Day is Done, The. Poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. It was written in 1844 and published in 1845 in a volume called The Waif. It is one of Longfellow's most popular pieces, and its opening lines,

> The day is done and the darkness
> Falls from the wings of Night, are familiar to thousands, to children who read and hear it, and to adults who recall it as a part of their childhood.

Day-Lewis (-lö'is), Cecil. See Lewis, Cecil Day.

Day of Atonement. See Atonement, Day of.

Day of Doom, The. [Subtitle, A Poetical Description of the Great and Last Judgment.] The logical poem by Michael Wigglesworth, published in 1662. The popularity of the poem was attested by the fact that it sold one copy for every 20 persons in the New England colonies, and has gone through at least 18 editions, seven before 1701. The poem describes the condemnation and punishment on Judgment Day of such persons as sinners and infants who died without being baptized.

Day of Dupes. See Dupes, Day of.

Day of the Rabblement (rab'l.ment), The. Essay in pamphlet form by James Joyce, published in 1901, bitterly attacking the Irish National Theatre movement.

Days. Poem in blank verse by Ralph Waldo Emerson, published in 1857.

Days of the Barricades. See Barricades, Days of the.

Days Without End. Play (1934) by Eugene O'Neill. It deals with the theme of Catholic belief.

Dayton (dā'ton). City in N Kentucky, in Campbell County, on the Ohio River opposite Cincinnati and adjoining Newport. 8,977 (1950).

Dayton. City in SW Ohio, county seat of Montgomery County, on the Miami River, ab. 48 mi. NE of Cincinnati. Manufactures include refrigerators, computing machines, cash registers, lighting systems, and auto and airplane parts. It was settled in 1796 and incorporated in 1805. It is the seat of the University of Dayton and the Dayton Art Institute, and was the home of the Wright brothers and of the poet Paul Laurence Dunbar. One of the chief U.S. aviation centers, it has Wright, Patterson, Fairfield, and other airfields. 243,872 (1950).

Dayton. City in E Tennessee, county seat of Rhea County. Manufactures include hosiery, underwear, and canned foods. It achieved fame as the scene of the Scopes "Monkey Trial" in 1925, a test case of the Tennessee statute prohibiting the teaching of theories denying divine creation. William Jennings Bryan died here soon after the Scopes trial, in which he had served for the prosecution. It is the seat of a university named for him. 3,191 (1950).

Dayton. City in SE Washington, county seat of Columbia County: processing and shipping center for cattle, peas, apples, lumber, and boxes. It was made county seat in 1875. Pop. 2,979 (1950).

Dayton, Elias. b. at Elizabethtown, N.J., May 1, 1737; d. there, Oct. 22, 1807. American Revolutionary officer. He served throughout the Revolution, and participated in the battles of Springfield, Monmouth, Brandywine, and Yorktown. After the war he was made major general of militia in New Jersey, and was a member (1787–88) of the Continental Congress.

Dayton, Jonathan. b. at Elizabethtown, N.J., Oct. 16, 1760; d. there, Oct. 9, 1824. American politician; son of Elias Dayton. He was speaker of the national House of Representatives (1795–99) and U.S. senator from New Jersey (1799–1805).

Dayton, William Lewis. b. at Baskingridge, N.J., Feb. 17, 1807; d. at Paris, Dec. 1, 1864. American jurist and politician; nephew of Jonathan Dayton. He was associate judge of the supreme court of New Jersey (1838–42), U.S. senator from New Jersey (1842–51), Republican candidate for vice-president in 1856, and minister to France (1861–64).

Daytona Beach (dā.tō'na). City in E Florida, in Volusia County, SE of Jacksonville on the Atlantic Ocean: vacation resort. The 23-mi. ocean beach is frequently the scene of automobile speed trials. It is the seat of Bethune-Cookman College. 30,187 (1950).

Dayton-Goose Creek Railway Co. v. United States, 263 U.S. 456 (1924). Unanimous decision of the U.S. Supreme Court upholding the recapture provisions of the Transportation Act of 1920, by which a railroad having an income greater than what the Interstate Commerce Commission had established as a fair return had to maintain the excess in a special fund, half reverting to the government. The opinion delivered by Chief Justice William H. Taft stressed the principle of public interest and was notable for its articulation of broad national powers.

Daza (dä'sä), Hilarión. [Original name, Hilarión Daza Grosolé (or Grossoli).] b. at Sucre, Bolivia, 1840; killed by a mob, March 1, 1894. Bolivian general and politician. From 1858 he took part in various revolutionary disturbances until May, 1876, when he was proclaimed president of Bolivia. Following the seizure of Atacama he declared war on Chile, on March 1, 1879, and in April joined the Peruvian forces at Tacna; but his incompetence and cowardice led to a mutiny of the troops (Dec. 27, 1879), and this was quickly followed by a revolution at La Paz, by which he was overthrown.

Dazey (dā'zi), Charles Turner. b. at Lima, Ill., Aug. 13, 1855; d. Feb. 9, 1938. American writer of stage and screen plays, best known for In Old Kentucky, a popular melodrama. His other plays include An American King, That Girl from Texas, The Suburban Home Folks, The Stranger, and When Fran Came Home; for the screen he wrote the scenarios Wolf Lowry, Redemption of Dave Parcey, Behind the Mask, and Shifting Sands.

Dazzle (daz'l). Man who lives by his wits and cleverly contrives to be an invited guest at Oak Hall, the home of Squire Harkaway, in the comedy London Assurance by Dion Boucicault, produced in 1841.

D-Day. June 6, 1944: the day of the Allied invasion of western Europe in World War II. On that day the invasion armada, carrying American, British, and Canadian troops, and using landing craft, gliders, paratroops, and supporting air forces and naval vessels, made landings on four main points over ab. 60 mi. of beaches on the Normandy coast. Although the term D-Day is most often used in connection with this particular operation, its origin and meaning within the armed forces is more generic: "D" stands for "Day," i.e., the day of an invasion or the beginning of any major military operation. In this sense, there were, of course, many D-Days in World War II.

De (dā). [Also, Dey.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting W Liberia in the neighborhood of Monrovia. They are closely related to the Bassa in language and in culture. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal crops are dry rice and cassava. Their houses are circular, with mud walls and with palm-leaf thatch.

De Aar (dē är'). Town in S Africa, an important rail junction in Cape of Good Hope province, Union of South Africa, situated in the middle of the province W of the Orange Free State border. It is the junction of the railroad lines from Port Elizabeth (339 mi.) and Capetown (500 mi.), and is the point at which the line to South-West Africa starts. It is also the site of large livestock fairs. 9,137 (1946).

Deacon (dē'kon), Thomas. b. in 1697; d. at Manchester, England, Feb. 10, 1753. English physician and nonjuring bishop. He became a priest in 1716, settled at Manchester as a physician in 1719 or 1720, and c1733 was consecrated a nonjuring bishop by Bishop Archibald Campbell. He published The Doctrine of the Church of Rome concerning Purgatory proved to be contrary to Catholic Tradition (1718), A Full, True, and Comprehensive View of Christianity (1747), and others.

Deacon's Masterpiece; or, The Wonderful "One-Hoss Shay," The. Poem by Oliver Wendell Holmes, published in The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table (1858). It originally appeared in the Atlantic Monthly in 1858. A perfectionist deacon, desiring to build an unbreakable carriage, constructed the vehicle with all parts having the same strength as each other. A century after its creation, the carriage suddenly collapsed, going "to pieces all at once." The poem is an allegory on Calvinism.

Dead, The. Sonnet (1839) by Jones Very, an American mystic, friend of Emerson, and author of sonnets thought by Bryant to be "among the finest in the language." The thought of the sonnet, which is in the Shakespearian, or English, form is that the living, who have ceased to know the Living God, are the dead ones, not those in the ground for whom they shed tears.

Dead, The. Two sonnets, out of the 1914 group of five, by Rupert Brooke. The same title is given to the third sonnet ("Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!") and to the fourth ("These hearts were woven of human joys and cares"). The fifth one in the group is the famous one with which the poet's name is perhaps chiefly associated, The Soldier ("If I should die, think only this of me").

Dead, The. Short story (1914) in a collection, Dubliners, by James Joyce. The main characters are a middle-aged Irish schoolteacher and book reviewer, Gabriel Conroy, his wife, Gretta, and Michael Furey, who is dead before the story opens, who loved her. Gretta, who has not been thinking of him, tells her husband that a song they have just heard at a party has brought Michael back to her mind. The confession makes Conroy unhappy as he feels that his wife has closed a door on him and that the dead lover has an advantage over him. The story has been praised for its descriptive as well as its narrative power, and was discussed, 20 years later, by T. S. Eliot in his book of criticism After Strange Gods. Dublin is the setting of all the stories, and The Dead is the fifteenth, and last, story.

Dead End. Play by Sidney Kingsley, produced in 1935 and published in 1936. Tommy, Dippy, T.B., Angel, and Spit are five embittered children from the slums who live at the dead end of a New York street on the periphery of a fashionable district. The plot involves the difficulties of the children and the contrast between their squalid existence and the lives of the neighboring rich.

Dea Dia (dē'ạ dī'ạ). One of the most primitive deities of Italian mythology. Nothing is known of the rites associated with her cult until after the reorganization of religious ceremonies by Augustus; from these later ceremonies much may be inferred concerning the earlier rites. The worship of this goddess was entrusted to the Arval Brothers, from which it is thought that she may be in fact Acca Larentia, the mother of the original 12 Arval Brothers. There was a grove dedicated to her at Rome, and a temple in it, where professional priests assisted the 12 members of the brotherhood, who after Augustus always included the emperor, in rites which included the sacrifice of animals, prayer to wine jars, the wearing of wheat-ears as crowns, and ceremonious banquets. It is quite clear, especially as the chief ceremonies in her honor occurred in December and in May, that this was a goddess of the fields and the harvest; moreover, since Dea Dia is not a proper name but a descriptive term, it is certain that she was one of the very ancient deities whose names it was considered impious and dangerous to pronounce.

Deadlock. Novel by Dorothy M. Richardson, published in 1921. It is the sixth section of Pilgrimage (1938), a novel sequence in 12 parts employing the stream-of-consciousness technique.

Dead Sea. [Arabic, Bahr Lut; Latin, Lacus Asphaltites, Mare Mortuum.] Salt lake in Palestine, ab. 16 mi. SE of Jerusalem in the ancient "Vale of Siddim": the Sea of the Plain or of the Arabah, Salt Sea, or East Sea of the Bible. Its waters are intensely salt, and of very high specific gravity. Its principal tributary is the Jordan, but it has no outlet, and its surface is ab. 1,290 ft. below the level of the Mediterranean. Length, ab. 47 mi.; width, 6 to 9½ mi.; depth varies from 1,300 ft. to 3 or 4 ft. in the shallowest section.

Dead Souls. Novel by Nikolai V. Gogol, which appeared in 1842. He began to write it in 1837, and left it unfinished, destroying the concluding portions in a fit of religious mania. An English translation, entitled Tchitchikoff's Journeys, or Dead Souls, by Isabel F. Hapgood, was published (1886) at New York. At the time of serfdom a Russian proprietor's fortune was not valued according to the extent of his lands, but according to the number of male serfs who were held upon them. These serfs were called "souls." Chichikov, or Tchitchikoff, the hero of the book, an ambitious rascal, attempts to gain wealth by traveling about buying "dead souls" (serfs who had died but had not yet been listed as dead by the census), and using them to obtain possession of certain lands the government was offering to those who could prove they had the manpower to develop them. The importance of the book is in its realistic pictures of Russia before the liberation of the serfs, and in the stimulation it gave in the development of the Russian realistic novel of the 19th century. The book is a humorous satire based on a very serious attack on the principle of serfdom and on the idiocies of Russian officialdom.

Deadwood (ded'wŭd). City in W South Dakota, county seat of Lawrence County, in the Black Hills: one of the principal mining and smelting centers in the state; notable for gold mining since 1876. In the Mt. Moriah (or "Boot Hill") Cemetery here are the graves of James Butler ("Wild Bill") Hickok and Martha Jane ("Calamity Jane") Burke. Black Hills National Forest is nearby. 3,288 (1950).

Deadwood Dick (ded'wŭd dik'). [Original name, Richard W. Clarke.] b. at Hansborough, England, Dec. 15, 1845; d. at Deadwood, S.D., May 5, 1930. American frontiersman. Arrived in the U.S. at the age of 16, he traveled (c1874) to the Black Hills, S.D., probably as a scout for General Custer. He worked in the region thereafter as a Pony Express rider, Indian fighter, and guide to U.S. marshals.

Deae Matres (dē'ē mā'trēz). [Also, Deae Matronae (mā.trō'nē).] Fertility deities worshipped in ancient times in Belgic Gaul, and among the Teutons. Altars and inscriptions to these or similar deities have been found in those areas. Representations on altars and other monuments depict the Deae Matres as three seated women with baskets or bowls of fruit.

Deák (dā'äk), Ferencz. b. at Söjtör, Zala, Hungary, Oct. 17, 1803; d. at Budapest, Jan. 29, 1876. Hungarian statesman. He entered the Hungarian diet in 1832, and was minister of justice in 1848. When the Hungarians under Kossuth revolted against Austrian overlordship, Deák refused to join in what he considered an illegitimate procedure. After the suppression of Hungarian independence in 1849, he remained in retirement. When Lombardy was lost to Austria in 1859, attempts were begun to forestall comparable Hungarian moves. After Austria's defeat by Prussia in 1866 and Austria's ejection from the German union, Deák, Count Julius Andrássy, and Count Friedrich von Beust organized the Ausgleich (1867) in which Hungary became, alongside Austria, a separate kingdom, but jointly ruled by the Austrian emperor.

Deakin (dē'kin), Alfred. b. at Melbourne, Australia, Aug. 3, 1856; d. there, Oct. 7, 1919. Australian lawyer and political leader, three times prime minister of Australia. He was educated at Melbourne University, was admitted to the bar in 1877, added keen journalistic interests, and moved from there to politics, entering the lower house at Victoria in 1880. He won ministerial office first in 1883. He was identified with promoting irrigation in the state of Victoria. In 1887 he came to the notice of the Imperial authorities for outspokenness on colonial grievances; his reputation was enhanced at the Imperial Conference (1907). He was an early proponent of Australian federation, and played a large role in converting Victoria to the doctrine. He was sent to the federal house of representatives from 1901 to 1913, served as attorney general in Sir Edmund Barton's cabinet, and succeeded Barton as prime minister in 1902, serving until 1904. His second ministry lasted from 1905 to 1908, and his final term of office extended from 1909 to 1910. He retired in 1913 because of failing mental powers and did no public work after 1915. He left a vast legend concerning his powers as an orator, astute politician, and middle-class leader.

Deal (dēl). Municipal borough, market town, seaport; and seaside resort in SE England, in Kent, situated on the North Downs ab. 8 mi. NE of Dover, ab. 87 mi. SE of London by rail. It was formerly one of the Cinque Ports, and contains Deal Castle. The Justices of the Cinque Ports still sit here. Near here Julius Caesar is supposed to have made his first landing in Britain in 55 B.C. 24,276 (1951).

Dealey (dē'li), James Quayle. b. at Manchester, England, Aug. 13, 1861; d. Jan. 22, 1937. American political scientist. He came to America as a young man, and was instructor (1893–95) of Latin and professor (1895–1928) of political science at Brown University and editor (1929 et seq.) of the Dallas (Tex.) News. He was the author of The Development of the State (1909), The Family in its Sociological Aspects (1912), Growth of State Constitutions (1915), Sociology—Its Development and Application (1921), State and Government (1921), Foreign Policies of the United States (1927), and Political Situations in Rhode Island (1928), and coauthor with Lester F. Ward of Textbook of Sociology (1905).

Deal Island (dēl). [Former name, Devil's Island.] Island in SE Maryland, in Chesapeake Bay ab. 25 mi. SW of Salisbury, Md. The island is noted for its oyster and crab fisheries and for muskrat trapping. There are several packing plants and a large fleet of small vessels. Length, ab. 2½ mi.; pop. 957 (1950).

De Amicis (dā ä.mē'chēs), Edmondo. b. at Oneglia, Italy, Oct. 21, 1846; d. at Bordighera, Italy, March 11, 1908. Italian writer of travels. He was in the Italian army (1865–70), and fought at the battle of Custozza in 1866. His early works include Ricordi di Londra (1874), L'Olanda (1874), Marocco (1875), Constantinople (1877), Pagine sparse (1877), Ricordi di Parigi, and his most popular book, Cuore (1886), a series of essays and sketches ostensibly written by a schoolboy. Among his later works are Poesie (1880), Ritratti letterarii (1881), Gli amici (1882), Alle porte d'Italia (1886), La Carrozza di tutti (1898), Speranze e gloria (1900), Memorie (1900), Ricordi d'infanzia e di scuola (1901), Capo d'anno (1902), and Giardino della follia (1902).

De Amicitia (dē am.i.sish'i.a). [Eng. trans., "On Friendship"; also called Laelius.] Treatise by Cicero, in the form of a conversation between Laelius and his sons-in-law, C. Fannius and Q. Mucius Scaevola, devoted to the praise of friendship.

Dean (dēn), Amos. b. at Barnard, Vt., Jan. 16, 1803; d. at Albany, N.Y., Jan. 26, 1868. American jurist. He became chancellor and professor of history in the University of Iowa in 1855. He published Medical Jurispru- dence (1854), Bryant and Stratton's Commercial Law (1861), and others.

Dean, Bashford. b. at New York, Oct. 28, 1867; d. at Battle Creek, Mich., Dec. 6, 1928. American zoölogist, professor of vertebrate zoölogy at Columbia University from 1904. He studied at the College of the City of New York and afterward at Columbia, Munich, Naples, and Misaki (Japan). In 1889–92 and 1900–01 he was engaged in biological work for the U.S. Fish Commission, and was curator of fishes at the American Museum of Natural History at New York from 1903 to 1910 and after 1911. He was the author of numerous works on the anatomy and embryology of fishes. He was also curator of arms and armor in the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York, from 1903.

Dean, Forest of. Forest in Gloucestershire, England, situated between the lower Wye and the Severn, SW of Gloucester. It has been noted for its production of coal and iron. Its chief trees are oaks and beeches.

Dean, Jay Hanna. [Sometimes Jerome Herman Dean; called Dizzy Dean.] b. at Lucas, Ark., 1911—. American baseball pitcher, and radio and television broadcaster. He has at different times given different accounts of his age, his birthplace, and his given names (whether seriously or as a prank is not definitely known, although many suspect the latter). He was long known as Jerome Herman Dean, but later explained that he had called himself Jerome Herman to console the mother of a boyhood friend, of that name, who had died in his youth. His family were sharecroppers, and from childhood he picked cotton at 50 cents an hour until he joined the U.S. army at the age of 16. In the army it was discovered that he was a pitcher of considerable ability, and after his discharge he found employment in professional baseball, quickly becoming one of the most valued major league players, and one of the most popular by virtue of a personality which lent itself to exploitation by publicity men and sports writers, who, probably with reference both to the dazzling speed of his fast ball, and to his flamboyant and unpredictable ways, gave him the nickname "Dizzy." For several years (1932–38) the star pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals of the National League, he was traded to the Chicago Cubs, but an injury to his pitching arm in 1937 had permanently impaired his efficiency, and in 1940 he was waived to a minor league team. But this, a common fate of major league players, did not suit "Dizzy," who in 1941 began to broadcast radio accounts of baseball games from a St. Louis station, with instant and spectacular success, due at least partly to his use of weird and amusing words and phrases, ostensibly derived from Arkansas hill-billy speech. On one occasion a delegation of high-school teachers of English protested to the radio station whose facilities he used that his broadcasts were corrupting the speech habits of their students. In 1950 he became a television commentator, broadcasting from a New York station.

Dean, Julia. b. July 22, 1830; d. at New York, March 6, 1868. American actress. She first appeared at the Bowery Theater as Julia in The Hunchback. She was the original Norma in Epes Sargent's Priestess, and also the original Leonor in Boker's tragedy Leonor de Guzman.

Dean, William F. b. at Carlyle, Ill., Aug. 1, 1899—. American soldier. In World War II, he served (1943–44) as chief of the requirements section at Army Ground Forces headquarters before taking command of the 44th infantry division, which he led in fighting in Germany and Austria. He was military governor (1947–48) of the U.S.-occupied areas in Korea, and, with the outbreak of the Korean War, assumed command (July 2, 1950) of all U.S. forces in Korea, serving until superseded (July 13, 1950) by Walton H. Walker. He led the 24th division in the action at Taejon, but in the retreat from the burning city disappeared and was reported missing in action July 22, 1950; he was later found to be a prisoner of the North Koreans, who released him in September, 1953.

Deane (dēn), Charles. b. at Biddeford, Me., Nov. 10, 1813; d. at Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 13, 1889. American historian. He was a merchant at Boston, for many years, and retired from business in 1864, settling at Cambridge, Mass. He collected a valuable library of books relating to early New England history, and edited Bradford's History of Plymouth Plantation (1856), Wingfield's Discourse of Virginia (1860), and other historical documents.

Deane, Henry. d. at Lambeth (now part of London), Feb. 15, 1503. Archbishop of Canterbury. He was chief of the English commissioners who concluded the treaty leading to the marriage between Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII of England, and James IV of Scotland, in 1503.

Deane, Lucy. In George Eliot's novel The Mill on the Floss, a pretty, amiable girl, the cousin and rival of Maggie Tulliver.

Deane, Richard. b. at Guyting, Gloucestershire, England, 1610; d. in battle off North Foreland, June 3, 1653. English admiral, and one of the signers of Charles I's death warrant. He volunteered for the Parliamentary artillery and fought (1644) under Essex in Cornwall. At Naseby (1645) he was in command of the artillery and thereafter was one of Cromwell's principal aides. He had an important part, after 1649, in the establishment of the Parliamentary fleet, acting as one of the three commissioners, with the title of general-at-sea. He fought with the army at Worcester (1651) and in Scotland (1652).

Deane, Silas. b. at Groton, Conn., Dec. 24, 1737; d. aboard ship near Deal, England, Sept. 23, 1789. American Revolutionary patriot and diplomat, noted as the first foreign emissary of the American colonies. He was graduated (1758) from Yale, where he also took his M.A. (1763). Admitted to the bar (1761), he established his practice at Wethersfield, Conn., in 1762 and by a well-connected marriage received a mercantile business. In 1769 he was chairman of a Wethersfield committee to enforce a nonconsumption agreement, became a member of the General Assembly three years later, and was secretary (1773) of the legislative committee of correspondence. He was a member (1774–75) of the Continental Congress, serving on several committees responsible for naval preparations. He was chosen (March, 1776) to go to France as the first American representing the interests of the colonies overseas. He had a dual function: to handle commercial transactions, and to purchase arms and supplies for the American forces. He succeeded in his mission, and in September, 1776, was joined by Benjamin Franklin and Arthur Lee. Deane also commissioned and dispatched foreign officers, among them Lafayette, De Kalb, Pulaski, and Steuben, who aided the Revolutionary cause. He also sent over some poorly selected soldiers of fortune; this, combined with unfavorable reports submitted by Arthur Lee, resulted in his recall (1778). The advances he had made to the Revolutionary cause while abroad had not been covered by proper audits, and Deane later failed to secure an authorized statement. His faith in the Revolutionary government declined, and, while abroad attempting to obtain evidence that his accounts were legitimate, he wrote (1781) a number of letters to American friends counseling reconciliation with England. They were picked up by the British and published (1781) by the Loyalist press at New York; thereafter, Deane was regarded as a traitor to the government he had served. He died a bankrupt, on his way back to the U.S. Congress later (1842) made partial restitution to his heirs. See Silas Deane, by G. L. Clark (1913).

Deán Funes (dā.än' fō'nās). City in C Argentina, in Córdoba province: resort in the Sierras, frequented by hunters. 13,840 (1947).

Deán Funes, El. See Funes, Gregorio.

De Angelis (dē an'je.lis), (Thomas) Jefferson. b. at San Francisco, Nov. 30, 1859; d. March 20, 1933. American comedian and singer, said by some sources to have appeared for the first time on the professional stage at the age of 10. Whether this is true or not, he is known to have been in vaudeville by 1874, and later (1880–84) to have headed his own company on a tour of Australia, South Africa, and China. He was leading comedian (1890–93) at the Casino at New York, and starred in Fantana, The Great White Way, Revelry, School for Scandal, The Royal Family, and Apron Strings, besides appearing in more than a hundred operas. He took the part of Ko-Ko in 12 productions of Gilbert and Sullivan's The Mikado.

Deans (dēnz), Douce Davie. Cow-feeder in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Heart of Midlothian. He is the father of Jeanie and Effie, and is distracted between his religious principles as an ardent Cameronian and his desire to save his daughter Effie's life.

Deans, Effie or Euphemia. In Sir Walter Scott's The Heart of Midlothian, a beautiful and erring girl, the younger half sister of Jeanie Deans.

Deans, Jeanie. Heroine of Sir Walter Scott's novel The Heart of Midlothian, the half sister of Effie Deans. In her devotion to her sister she walks all the way to London to obtain pardon for Effie from the queen. Her good sense, calm heroism, and disinterestedness move the Duke of Argyle to procure her the desired interview, which is successful.

Dearborn (dir'bôrn, -born). City in S Lower Michigan, in Wayne County, adjoining Detroit: home of the Ford Motor Company and allied Ford industries. The River Rouge plant of the Ford Company, one of the largest mass-production automobile factories in the world, is nearby. Dearborn was the birthplace of Henry Ford, founder of the Ford Company, who established Greenfield Village and the Edison Institute of Technology here. 94,994 (1950).

Dearborn, Fort. Fort established (1804) by the U.S. government, which became the nucleus of Chicago.

Dearborn, George Van Ness. b. at Nashua, N.H., Aug. 15, 1869; d. Dec. 12, 1938. American psychiatrist and physiologist. He was professor of physiology and director (1900–16) of the physiological laboratory at Tufts College, professor (1906–21) of psychology and education at the Sargent Normal School at Cambridge, Mass., surgeon (1921 et seq.) in the neuropsychiatric section of the U.S. Public Health Service, and medical officer expert (1924) of the U.S. Veterans' Bureau. His books include The Emotion of Joy (1899), A Textbook of Human Physiology (1908), Moto-Sensory Development (1910), Relations of Mind and Body (1914), The Influence of Joy (1916), How to Learn Easily (1916), The Physiology of Exercise (1918), and The Psychology of Clothing (1918).

Dearborn, Henry. b. at Hampton, N.H., Feb. 23, 1751; d. June 6, 1829. American soldier, legislator, and secretary of war (1801–09) under Jefferson. He studied medicine privately, establishing (1772) his practice at Nottingham Square, N.H. A captain of militia before the outbreak of the Revolution, he participated in the battle of Bunker Hill and in Arnold's expedition to Quebec, being taken prisoner during the American attack on the city. He was exchanged (1777) in time to take an active part in the campaign against Burgoyne. He was at Valley Forge (1777–78), participated in the battle of Monmouth (where his regiment's behavior earned a commendation from Washington), in General Sullivan's expedition against the Six Nations, and at Yorktown. The journal which he kept during almost the entire period of the war constitutes one of the very few eyewitness accounts of the American side of the Revolution. He left the army in 1783, became (1790) U.S. marshal for the District of Maine, and was its Republican representative (1793–97) in Congress. He was secretary of war in Jefferson's administration (1801–09). In 1803 he issued from Washington the order for the establishment of a fort at "Chikago." The important part which this post, Fort Dearborn, played in the early history of Chicago has given his name a lasting association with that city. He became collector for the port of Boston in 1809, and in 1812 was appointed by Madison as "Senior Major-General" in the U.S. army and assigned to the command of the area from the New England coast to the Niagara River. He prepared an extensive plan of campaign, calling for simultaneous attacks at strategic points along the border, but he lacked the vigor and ability to carry it out, thus contributing to the defeat of William Hull at Detroit through failure to provide a diversion. For his continued incompetence, he was relieved of his command in July, 1813, and assigned to that of New York City. He received his honorable discharge in 1815. He served as minister to Portugal from 1822 to 1824. His last years were spent in retirement.

Dearborn, Henry Alexander Scammell. b. at Exeter, N.H., March 3, 1783; d. at Roxbury, Mass., July 29, 1851. American politician; son of Henry Dearborn. He was collector of the port of Boston (1812–29), was elected to the Massachusetts legislature in 1829, became a state senator in 1830, was in 1831 elected to Congress, where he served one term, and was made adjutant general of Massachusetts in 1835, from which post he was removed in 1843 for having furnished arms to Rhode Island during Dorr's rebellion. He was mayor of Roxbury from 1847 until his death. He wrote Internal Improvements and Commerce of the West (1809).

Dear Judas (jō'dəs). Narrative poem by Robinson Jeffers, title piece of a volume published in 1929.

Dearman (dir'mən). Original name of Irvington, N.Y.

Dearmer (dir'mėr), Percy. b. at London, Feb. 27, 1867; d. at Westminster, London, May 29, 1936. English clergyman and authority on ecclesiastical art and music. He was chaplain (1915) to the British Red Cross in Serbia, professor (1919–36) of ecclesiastical art at King's College, London, and canon (1931–36) of Westminster. His books include Highways and Byways in Normandy (1900), The English Liturgy (1903), False Gods (1914), Our National Church (1934), and Christianity as a New Religion (1935).

Dearne (dėrn). Urban district in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 171 mi. N of London by rail. It comprises parts of the former urban districts of Bolton-upon-Dearne and Thurnscoe. It has manufactures of woolens, and was formerly a coal-mining center. 24,253 (1951).

Dearth (dėrth), Henry Golden. b. at Bristol, R.I., 1864; d. at New York, March 27, 1918. American landscape painter. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris, later exhibiting at Paris as well as in the U.S. Several medals were awarded him, and he was made an associate of the National Academy of Design in 1902 and an academician in 1906. His works hang in the Metropolitan Museum and the Brooklyn Museum at New York, the National Gallery at Washington, D.C., the Detroit Museum, the Art Institute of Chicago, and the Carnegie Institute. His paintings include Cornelia, Road and Canal, Gardenias, An Old Church at Montreuil, Dreamland, Virgin and Child, and The Three-Master.

Déat (dā.à), Marcel. b. at Guérigny, Nièvre, France, March 7, 1894—. French politician and newspaper editor. Quitting the Socialist Party in 1933, he served as a deputy (1926–29, 1932–36, 1939–40), as air minister (1936), and as labor minister (1944) under Pétain. Sentenced to death in absentia (June, 1945), he was subsequently reported in hiding in Italy and France. He wrote a famous editorial, Why Die for Danzig?, shortly before the outbreak of World War II.

Death and Transfiguration. English title of Tod und Verklärung.

Death Comes for the Archbishop. Historical novel (1927) by Willa Cather. It concerns the French bishop Jean Latour and his vicar Father Joseph Vaillant, who are aided by Kit Carson and Indian guides in winning the friendship of the Hopis and Navahos. The two missionaries overcome the hostility of the Spanish clergy and establish their religion in the inhospitable territories of Colorado and New Mexico. The scholarly bishop, whose character contrasts sharply with that of his good friend, the practical-minded and affable Father Vaillant, becomes archbishop of Santa Fe, and after his death is universally mourned.

Death in the Afternoon. Discursive narrative by Ernest Hemingway, published in 1932. It contains much specific and oftentimes fairly technical information about bullfighters and their techniques (Hemingway has long been interested in the subject, as evidenced by the importance of the bullfighter in the plot of his early novel The Sun Also Rises, and has a very respectable knowledge of it). However, the book is not simply an English-language guide to bullfighting; it might perhaps better be described as Hemingway's chief nonfictional attempt to express his attitude toward life and death. The bull may be viewed as the symbol of that which faces inevitable, but far from ignoble, destruction, and the bullfight itself becomes, in its final meaning, a highly formalized expression of several things in which Hemingway deeply believes: that death is not the supreme tragedy, that courage is very close to being the supreme virtue, and that, even though one of the two contestants may be foredoomed, a mortal struggle may lend dignity and nobility to those engaged in it (it is essential to this, of course, that the contestants should not lack respect for each other, and hence the bullfighter is in Hemingway's eyes no mere butcher, but a brave man fully cognizant of his role as a participant in a drama filled with symbolism).

Death in the School-Room. Short story (1841) by Walt Whitman. It was popular in its day and was published in several newspapers. It is the story of a brutal schoolmaster who flogs one of his students, a widow's son, until he dies. It seems to have been published at least once in the Brooklyn Eagle and belongs to what has been called Whitman's "newspaper period" (1838–44).

Death of a Hero. Satirical novel, a product of experiences in World War I, by Richard Aldington, published in 1929.

Death of a Salesman. Tragedy (1949) by Arthur Miller. The play, in two acts, tells the story of Willy Loman, a middle-aged salesman who is beginning to lose his grip on life and himself and who is afraid to face the truth. The action takes place in different rooms in Willy's house, inside and out, in various offices he visits at New York and Boston, and in his disordered mind, which is gradually breaking. By means of an interesting technique, which has aroused some discussion, although spectators sometimes found it confusing, the past and the present were blended, and past events, such as an old and long-forgotten affair with a woman in a cheap hotel, were presented as though they were taking place at the moment (as they were in Willy's mind). The play opened at the Morosco Theater at New York, on Feb. 10, 1949, and enjoyed a long run. Lee J. Cobb, Thomas Mitchell, Gene Lockhart (and others in road companies) all scored successes in their varied interpretations of the salesman. On the screen, Frederic March played the title role, and in both versions Mildred Dunnock won praise for her performance of Linda, Willy's faithful wife.

Death of Caesar (sē'ząr). Painting (1867) by Gérôme. Caesar's body lies at the foot of Pompey's statue; the conspirators, still holding their daggers, are grouped in the background, and all the senators but one have fled from their seats.

Death of Cuchulain (kō.ċhō'lin), The. Poem (1893) by William Butler Yeats. It tells the story of the great Irish hero, Cuchulain, who unknowingly kills his own son in battle (just as Rustum kills his son, Sohrab, in Arnold's poem). The story has been told in many forms by many Irish authors, and Yeats himself told it later (1904) in his play On Baile's Strand.

Death of Eve, The. Dramatic fragment (1912) by William Vaughn Moody. It is the third and last part of a trilogy of dramas in verse, the first being The Fire Bringer (1904), dealing with a Greek theme, Prometheus, and the second, The Masque of Judgment (1900), dealing with the medieval theme of man's relationship with God, and presenting the angel Raphael as the chief character. The Death of Eve, which was never finished, dealing with a Hebrew theme, shows how God and man are brought together through Eve's agency.

Death of General Montgomery (mǫnt.gum'ėr.i), The. Tragedy in blank verse by Hugh Henry Brackenridge, written in 1777.

Death of General Wolfe (wůlf), The. Painting by Sir Benjamin West (1771), in the Grosvenor Gallery, London. The general lies on the ground supported and surrounded by soldiers, one of whom holds the Union Jack. In the distance a soldier runs toward the group, bearing a captured French flag.

Death of Little Boys. Poem by Allen Tate. It is included in his volume Mr. Pope and Other Poems (1928), and is to be found also in several anthologies. Short as the poem is (20 lines) it has been praised for its humanity, and its timeless and placeless quality.

Death of Marlowe (mär'lō), The. Tragedy by R. H. Horne, published in 1837.

Death of Slavery, The. Poem by William Cullen Bryant. It expresses his happiness at the abolition of Negro slavery, and was written in the same year (1865) as his The Death of Lincoln.

Death of Society, The. Novel by Romer Wilson (Mrs. Edward J. O'Brien), published in 1921. It was awarded the Hawthornden prize.

Death of the Flowers, The. Lamentation by William Cullen Bryant on the death of his sister, published in 1825.

Death of the Hired Man, The. Narrative in blank verse by Robert Frost, published in his North of Boston (1914). It describes the character and death of Silas, an old New England farmhand whose former pride and independence have given way to a pathetic need for a final "home."

Death of the Moth, and Other Essays, The. Volume of critical essays (1942) by Virginia Woolf. It expresses her views on various phases of the culture of her time, and was published a year after her death.

Death of Wallenstein (wol'ęn.stīn; German, väl'ęn.shtīn), The. Historical tragedy (1799) in three parts by Schiller, dealing with the Bohemian general and politician Albrecht Wenzel Eusebius von Wallenstein. It was translated into English (1798–99, published 1800) by Coleridge, who used manuscript versions, not a printed text, a fact which is used to explain or excuse what some German critics have pointed to as mistranslations. Schiller's trilogy consists of Wallenstein's Lager, Die Piccolomini, and Wallenstein's Tod.

Death's Head Corps. See Black Brunswickers.

Death's Jest Book, or The Fool's Tragedy. Tragedy by T. L. Beddoes, published in 1850. It is the true story of the stabbing of a duke in the 13th century by his court fool.

Death Song. Poem of five lines by Bede. It is the only poem by Bede that has survived, and that because it is quoted in a letter by Saint Cuthbert. Like Beowulf, it shows the great store that men set by an honorable name after death.

Death Valley. [Also, Amargosa Desert.] Desert region in Inyo county, E California, and in S Nevada, lying, at its lowest part, 280 ft. below sea level: made a U.S. National Monument in 1933. Area, 1,850,565 acres.

Deauville (dō.vēl). Town in NW France, in the department of Calvados, adjoining the town of Trouville-sur-Mer, situated on the English channel at the mouth of the Touques River, N of Lisieux. It is one of the chief resorts and bathing beaches on the Normandy coast; many fashionable sports events are held here. The resort was founded by the duke of Morny during the Second Empire. It suffered considerable damage (1944) during the Normandy invasion in World War II. 4,663 (1946).

Dea Vocontiorum (dē'ą vō.kon.ti.ō'rum). Ancient name of Die.

De Bardeleben (dę bär'dę.lā.bęn), Henry Fairchild. [Called the "King of the Southern Iron World."] b. in Alabama, July 22, 1840; d. Dec. 6, 1910. American industrialist who developed the coal and pig-iron industries in Alabama. As ward (and later son-in-law) of Daniel Pratt, a wealthy industrialist, he inherited large mine holdings in Alabama. He was cofounder (1886) of the De Bardeleben Coal and Iron Company which, with the Pinckard and De Bardeleben Land Company, formed the town of Bessemer, near Birmingham, Ala. His interests were reorganized (1887) into one company and taken over (1891) by the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company.

De Bary (dę bä.rē'), Heinrich Anton. b. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, Jan. 26, 1831; d. at Strasbourg, Jan. 19, 1888. German physician and botanist, noted especially for his researches in cryptogamic botany. He became professor of botany at Freiburg in 1855, at Halle in 1867, and at Strasbourg in 1872.

Debatable Land. Region on the border of England and Scotland, between the Esk and Sark, formerly claimed by both kingdoms.

Debbitch (deb'ich), Deborah. In Sir Walter Scott's novel Peveril of the Peak, the governess of Alice Bridgenorth. She was coquettish and deceitful.

Debbora (deb'ō.rą). See Deborah.

Debeney (dę.bę.nā), Marie Eugène. b. at Bourg-en-Bresse, Ain, France, Jan. 5, 1864; d. there, Nov. 9, 1943, from injuries reportedly sustained in a bombing attack. French army officer, army commander during World War I. He commanded the 5th Army in the victory of Didier (1918), was named (1919) head of the École de Guerre and later (1924) chief of the general staff, and served as a member of the supreme war council until 1934. He supported the Pétain regime after the fall of France.

De Beringhen (dę ber'ing.ęn). See Beringhen, De.

Debidour (dę.bē.dōr), Élie Louis Marc Marie Antoine. [Called Antonin Debidour.] b. at Nontron, France, Jan. 31, 1847; d. at Paris, Feb. 21, 1917. French historian. He served as professor (1880 et seq.) at Nancy and Paris. His works include L'Église catholique et l'état sous la troisième république (The Catholic Church and the State under the Third Republic, 1906–09), and Vers la grande guerre (Toward the Great War, 1917).

Debierne (dẹ.byern), André Louis. b. 1874—. French physicist. He discovered the element actinium (1899), and later assisted Marie Curie in the isolation of elemental radium (1910). He was professor of heat at the Municipal School of Chemistry and Physics, Paris.

Debije (dẹ.bī′). See Debye, Peter Joseph Willem.

De Bilt (dẹ bilt′). [Also: De Bildt, de Bildt.] Town in C Netherlands, in the province of Utrecht. It is an eastern suburb of the city of Utrecht and seat of a meteorological institute. 14,561 (1939).

Dęblin (dem′blēn). [Russian, Ivangorod.] Fortress town in S central Poland, at the confluence of the Vistula and the Wieprz rivers, ab. 72 mi. by rail SE of Warsaw. From the early 19th century there was a fortress here established by the Russians, which was later expanded to a fortified perimeter of ab. 14 mi., forming one of the key bastions for the defense of Russian Poland. In World War I the first battle in October, 1914 resulted in the withdrawal of German forces. A second attack in 1915 resulted in the capture of the fortress by the Germans on Aug. 4, 1915. The fortifications were destroyed in these battles.

Debonair. Novel by G. B. Stern, published in 1928 and dramatized in 1930.

Débonnaire (dā.bo.ner), Louis le. See Louis I (of the Holy Roman Empire).

De Bono (dā bô′nō), Emilio. b. at Cassano d'Adda, Italy, 1866; d. at Verona, Italy, Jan. 11, 1944. Italian general. An early Fascist, he was one of the quadrumvirate leading the March on Rome (October, 1922). He was named (1925) governor of Tripolitania and appointed (1925) senator, and served as minister (1929) of the colonies and high commissioner (1935) in Italian Africa. Having royalist leanings and being not in complete agreement with Mussolini, he voted (1943) against the Duce in the grand council; for this the Fascists condemned him to death as a traitor.

Deborah (deb′ō.rą). [Also, Debbora.] In the Bible, a prophetess and judge of Israel. She lived on Mount Ephraim, between Ramah and Bethel. She summoned Barak to deliver the tribes under her jurisdiction from the tyranny of Jabin, prophesied success for him, and sang a famous song of triumph after his victory over the Canaanites (Judges, v.). This song is considered by critics to be one of the most ancient pieces in the Old Testament.

Deborah. German drama by S. H. Mosenthal, the original of Leah.

Deborah Debbitch (deb′ich). See Debbitch, Deborah.

De Bow (dē bō′), James Dunwoody Brownson. b. at Charleston, S.C., July 10, 1820; d. at Elizabeth, N.J., Feb. 27, 1867. American editor, journalist, and statistician.

Debra Markos (deb′ra mär′kōs). Town in E Africa, in Ethiopia, in Salale province, midway between Addis Ababa and Lake Tana. It is on one of the main roads from the capital to Gondar, and is a local market and trade center. Pop. ab. 5,000.

Debrecen (de′bre.tsen). [Also: Debreczen (de′bre.tsen), Debreczin (-tsēn).] City in E Hungary, near the Rumanian border, ab. 120 mi. E of Budapest. It is one of the chief cities of Hungary, famous for the nearby Hortobágy Puszta, a wide area of dry, steppelike grazing land, and is a major commercial center, with annual fairs and horse markets. There are railroad repair shops, flour mills, and metallurgical and other industries. The city is the center of Magyar Calvinism, has a large Reformed Church and a Reformed college, founded in 1588, now succeeded by the Tisza István University. There is a museum and a large library; the first Hungarian printing establishment was founded in Debrecen in 1561. In this city, on April 14, 1849, the independence of Hungary from the Hapsburg crown and the existence of a republic were proclaimed under the leadership of Kossuth. 119,570 (1948).

Debrett (dẹ.bret′), John. b. c1752; d. at London, Nov 15, 1822. English publisher. In 1781 he purchased the Piccadilly business of John Almon, bookseller and political journalist. He compiled and published Peerage of England, Scotland, and Ireland, Containing an Account of all the Peers (2 vols., May, 1802), which ran through 14 editions during his lifetime, and Baronetage of England, Containing their Descent and Present State (1808). Both works, bearing Debrett's name, are still published annually. He retired from business in 1814.

Debrosses (dẹ.bros), Charles. See Brosses, Charles de.

Debs (debz), Eugene Victor. b. at Terre Haute, Ind., Nov. 5, 1855; d. at Elmhurst, Ill., Oct. 20, 1926. American labor organizer and Socialist leader. At the age of 15 he went to work in a railroad shop, before long became a fireman, in 1875 helped organize, and became secretary of, a lodge of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and in 1880 was made national secretary-treasurer of that Brotherhood and editor of its magazine. Meanwhile in 1879 he had been elected city clerk of Terre Haute, holding that office into 1883, after which by election in 1884 he served some years in the legislature of Indiana. In 1892 he tried to resign from his offices in the Brotherhood, but was unanimously reëlected. He had already concluded that craft unionism was an ineffective form of labor organization, and that it should be superseded by industrial unionism. In 1893 he was therefore the prime mover in the formation of the American Railway Union, which was open to all railroad workers. This pioneer industrial union, of which Debs was chosen president, won several strikes. In 1894, when the employees of the Pullman Palace Car Company struck, the American Railway Union directed its members to refuse to move Pullman cars. Debs, though he thought this decision unwise, in the prevailing circumstances, vigorously directed its implementation. President Grover Cleveland, on the ground that movement of the mails was being interrupted, sent federal troops into Chicago over the protest of John P. Altgeld, governor of Illinois, who pointed out that the labor struggle was accompanied by no disorders. A federal court issued an injunction against the American Railway Union's tactics, a federal grand jury indicted Debs and three others for conspiracy to obstruct the mails, and they were arrested; shortly afterward Debs and six others were arrested for violating the injunction. The conspiracy case ended in a mistrial, but on the contempt charge Debs and the others were sent to jail for six months. The most notable result of this sentence was perhaps that during his imprisonment Debs's reading and study led him to become a socialist, and in 1897 he organized the Social Democratic Party, which together with a faction of the Socialist Labor Party, nominated him for President of the United States in 1900, when he was credited with 96,000 votes. In 1901 the Social Democrats and seceding Socialist Laborites formed the Socialist Party; Debs was its presidential candidate in 1904, 1908, and 1912, rolling up votes of 402,000, 420,000, and 901,000. During these years he was an associate editor of the weekly newspaper Appeal to Reason, for which he went on lecture tours. In 1905 he helped establish the Industrial Workers of the World. Before long he withdrew from this group, but when some of its leaders were charged with murder he campaigned tirelessly in their defense. He approved the Socialist Party's stand against American participation in World War I, and his speech at the Ohio convention of the party in 1918 led to a sentence of ten years in prison for violation of the Espionage Act. While a prisoner in 1920 he received 919,000 votes for the presidency. On Christmas, 1921, he was freed by President Harding. He hailed the Russian Revolution, but protested to Lenin against the execution of dissident socialists. In 1924 he backed the Progressive Party candidate, Robert M. LaFollette. Failing health sent him twice to a sanitarium, where his death finally occurred.

Debs, In re, 158 U.S. 564 (1895). Case arising out of the Pullman railroad strike of 1894, in which the defendants, who had been found guilty of contempt and sentenced to jail for violating an injunction to abstain from interfering with trains in interstate commerce or those carrying mails, were denied a writ of habeas corpus by the U.S. Supreme Court. Justice David J. Brewer, speaking for a united court, declared: "The entire strength of the nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights entrusted by the Constitution to its care. . . .

If the emergency arises, the army of the nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the nation to compel obedience to its laws."

Debt Funding Commission. Body created by an act of the U.S. Congress in February, 1922, for the purpose of making funding agreements with European debtor nations, including Great Britain, France, and Italy, which had received U.S. loans during World War I. The commission fixed sums, interest rates, and annuities. It was terminated in 1927.

Deburau or Debureau (dę.bü.rō), Jean Gaspard. [Original Czech name, Jan Kaspar Dvořák.] b. in Bohemia, 1796; d. 1846. French pantomimist. Reviving the figure of Pierrot, he gave it a character of wistful, pathetic charm, so that ever since his time all Pierrots, in pantomime and ballet, have reflected the Deburau Pierrot. His biography by Francis Kozik is entitled The Great Debureau, and he is the central figure of the play Deburau, by Sacha Guitry.

Debus (dā'bůs), Heinrich. b. at Wolfhagen, Germany, 1824; d. at Kassel, Germany, 1916. Early German organic chemist. He investigated the oxidation of alcohols, glycols, and glycerine, glyoxalic acid, madder-root chemistry, gunpowder chemistry, and other fields. He was professor at the Marine Academy, Greenwich, England, from 1873 to 1888.

Debussy (dę.bū'si; French, dę.bü.sē), Claude Achille. b. at St.-Germain-en-Laye, France, Aug. 22, 1862; d. at Paris, March 26, 1918. French composer, representative of the extreme left wing of the early 20th-century French school in finding new methods of expression and in harmonic combinations. He studied (1874–84) at the Paris Conservatory, made trips to Russia and Italy, and spent his life composing at Paris. His compositions include an opera, Pelléas et Mélisande (1902); cantatas, Printemps (1882), L'Enfant prodigue (1884), and La Demoiselle élue (1888); a string quartet; Prélude à l'Après-midi d'une faune (1894), Nocturnes (1893–99), La Mer (1903–05), Rapsodie 1905), Images (1906–12), and other pieces for) orchestra; (piano pieces, such as Deux arabesques (1888, Rêverie (c1890), Children's Corner suite (1908), preludes, and études; and such songs as Clair de Lune (1884) and Pierrot (1884).

Debye (dę.bī'), Peter Joseph Willem. [Dutch, Debije.] b. at Maastricht, Netherlands, March 24, 1884—. Dutch physicist. He studied at Aachen, Germany, where he received an engineering diploma with a silver medal, and taught at Munich (1910), Zürich (1911), Utrecht (1912 et seq.), Leipzig (1927 et seq.), and Berlin (1935 et seq.). He was recipient of the Rumford medal (1931), the Faraday medal (1933), and the Lorentz medal of the Royal Dutch Academy of Science (1935). He was appointed (1935) director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Physics at Berlin. In 1936 he was awarded the Nobel prize in chemistry for studies in molecular structure through investigations on dipole moments and on diffraction of x-rays and electrons in gases. He is largely responsible for the Debye equation, which connects dielectric constant, dipole moment, and temperature for gases. Other fundamental work includes a good theory of the dependence of ferromagnetic susceptibility upon temperature, and a recent important equation for light scattering by colloids. He came to the U.S. in 1940, and has been (1940 et seq.) head of the physics department of Cornell University. He is the author of Quantentheorie und Chemie (1928), Polar Molecules (1929), Dipolmomente und chemische Struktur (1929), and Molekulstruktur (1931).

Decadents. Literary term used to refer to a group of writers of the 19th century, chiefly French, although poets, novelists, dramatists, and artists of other countries may exhibit in their work or express sympathy with the tendencies associated with the French originators and leaders of the movement. In France, the outstanding names are Verlaine, Rimbaud, Baudelaire, Mallarmé, Francis Jammes, J. K. Huysmans, Villiers de l'Isle Adam, Régnier, and Pierre Louys, author of Aphrodite. The decadents rejected the ordinary and conventional modes of thought and conduct, and violated, both publicly and privately, the accepted rules of social, moral, and sexual behavior. They tend to show a preference for the morbid and the abnormal, as those terms are ordinarily used and understood, and they were either oversensitive to a degree, or they cultivated oversensitiveness. The pomp and pageantry of the medieval period appealed to many of them artistically and emotionally. The terms "vice," "virtue," "evil," "morality," and "immorality," which mean so much and play so large a part in ordinary life and work and play, either mean little to them, or carry a meaning that is radically different from the one generally accepted. With them, content, what the artist says, is inferior to form, which emphasizes how it is said. In England, those influenced by the movement are Arthur Symons, who translated Baudelaire and Louys, Ernest Dowson, who wrote the poem Cynara, Aubrey Beardsley, of the Yellow Book, and Frank Harris, biographer of Wilde and author of My Life and Loves, which no one has yet criticized for its reticence. A Spanish follower of decadence is Rubén Darío. In America, with some modifications, Poe, who was translated by Baudelaire and Mallarmé, and Whitman may be included as members of the group. Another American, of a later period, Edgar Saltus, wrote two works whose titles express decadent tendencies, The Philosophy of Disenchantment and The Anatomy of Negation. The term, which signifies decaying, dying, in Latin, probably refers to the disintegration of the old Roman Empire. It is used generally, if not always, in a derogatory sense, although, as frequently happens in such cases, the term is taken up by those against whom it is hurled as a mark or sign of distinction and honor. The French Decadents, certainly, did not object to the term or regard it as a handicap.

Decalogue (dek'ą.lôg, -log). See Ten Commandments.

Decameron (dę.kam'ę.ron). [Italian, Il Decamerone; Principe Galeotto.] Collection of 100 tales, by Giovanni Boccaccio, written probably not long after 1348. The tales are enclosed by a framework device giving a fictional account of how they came to be told: in the year 1348, in order to escape from the plague-ridden city of Florence, a gay company of seven young ladies and three young gentlemen retire to villas and pleasant gardens above the city where through the hot afternoon hours of ten summer days they pass the time by telling stories, one each on each day, under some general heading or subject matter proclaimed by the one who is elected king or queen for the day. The Decameron is a masterpiece of prose style and narrative art. It became a model for Italian prose for centuries after, and enjoyed great popularity throughout Europe. Not even the major part of the stories contained in it were invented by Boccaccio, but all are cast in a manner quite his own. Included are the tales of the day from the French fabliaux, from incidents of actual life, or from whatever source was open to the author. The collection has had, through the years, the reputation of being overly licentious, but the tales reflect the mid-14th century in its moral as well as its immoral aspects. They present a kind of "human comedy," rich in the variety of characters that people it, a "natural" world quite untouched by any sense of otherworldliness as might be expected in a work written less than half a century after Dante's Divine Comedy. Both the proem of the work with its dedication to the "idle ladies" (as its ideal public), and the framework where the author speaks out in his own person in defense of a serene and objective art free from allegory, moralism, and didacticism, give ample evidence that Boccaccio was aware that this "new" art might well be attacked by those who demand that literature should do more than entertain, a fear which history has shown to be not without some ground. The collection of tales is also entitled Principe Galeotto, an appellation which the deputies appointed for correction of the Decameron considered as derived from the 5th canto of Dante's Inferno, Galeotto being the name of the book which was read by Paolo and Francesca. Few works have had an equal influence on literature. From it Chaucer adopted the idea of the framework of his tales, and the general manner of his stories, while in some instances, he merely versified the novels of the Italian. In 1566, William Paynter printed many of Boccaccio's stories in English, in his work called The Palace of Pleasure. This first translation, containing 60 novels, was soon followed by another volume, comprising 34 additional tales. Shakespeare made considerable use of the tales as he found them in Paynter.

De Camp (dē kamp'), Joseph Rodefer. b. at Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 5, 1858; d. at Boca Grande, Fla., Feb. 11, 1923. American painter. He was a pupil of Frank Duveneck in this country and was one of a group who went to Europe with Duveneck for further study in France, Italy, and Germany. De Camp was for some time a student at the Royal Academy at Munich. Upon returning to the U.S., he settled at Boston, where he executed portraits and figure pictures, and was a teacher at the school of the Museum of Fine Arts. He was an Associate of the National Academy of Design, and a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Examples of his very accomplished work are included in the collections of the Cincinnati Art Museum, the Corcoran Gallery at Washington, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, at Philadelphia, and other principal repositories of art in the U.S.

Decamps (dẹ.käṅ), Alexandre Gabriel. b. at Paris, March 3, 1803; d. (as the result of an accident) at Fontainebleau, France, Aug. 22, 1860. French painter, a pupil of Abel de Pujol. He visited Greece and the coast of Asia in 1827, and all his later work exhibits his preference for Oriental subjects.

Decapolis (dẹ.kap'ọ.lis). [Eng. trans., "Ten Cities."] Name of an ancient confederation of cities W and E of the Jordan, inhabited for the most part by a non-Jewish population which probably enjoyed certain privileges and franchises. Pompey put them under the immediate jurisdiction of the governor of Syria. Among the cities belonging to this confederacy were Scythopolis (modern Beisan), on the W of the Jordan; on the E, Damascus, Hippos on the Sea of Galilee, Pella, Gadara, Philadelphia (modern Amman), Canatha (or Kanatha), and Gerasa (modern Jerash).

De Casseres (dẹ kas'ẽr.ẹs), Benjamin. b. at Philadelphia, 1873; d. at New York, Dec. 6, 1945. American journalist and author. He was a staff member (1903–06, 1907–19) of the New York Herald, drama critic (1922–33) of Arts and Decoration, and editor and writer of the columns "On the Nail" and "March of Events" for the New York American and other Hearst newspapers (1934 et seq.). He wrote The Shadow-Eater (1915), Anathema (1928), Black Suns (1936), and other books of poetry; his prose writings include Mirrors of New York (1925), Broken Images (1936), Sir Galahad (1938), and Don Marquis (1938).

Decatur (dẹ.kā'tẽr). City in N Alabama, county seat of Morgan County, ab. 75 mi. N of Birmingham, on the Tennessee River: cotton mills, brickyards, and lumber mills. It is a river port and manufactures steel barges. 19,974 (1950).

Decatur. City in NW Georgia, county seat of DeKalb County: suburb of Atlanta. It is the seat of Agnes Scott College; the Columbia Theological Seminary is nearby. 21,635 (1950).

Decatur. City in C Illinois, county seat of Macon County, on the Sangamon River, ab. 38 mi. E of Springfield, in a farming area: important as a railroad center and for railroad repair shops. It is the seat of James Millikin University. 66,269 (1950).

Decatur. City in E Indiana, county seat of Adams County: processing center for soybeans and beet sugar. 7,271 (1950).

Decatur. City in C Texas, county seat of Wise County, NW of Dallas: shipping center for agricultural and dairy products. It is the seat of Decatur Baptist College. 2,922 (1950).

Decatur, Stephen. b. at Newport, R.I., 1752; d. at Frankford, near Philadelphia, Nov. 14, 1808. American naval officer; father of Stephen Decatur (1779–1820). He was placed in command of the Delaware in 1798, and afterward commanded a squadron on the Guadeloupe station. He was retired in 1801.

Decatur, Stephen. b. at Sinepuxent, Md., Jan. 5, 1779; d. at Bladensburg, Md., March 22, 1820. American naval officer, noted for his exploits in the Tripolitan War and in the War of 1812. He became (1798) a midshipman, went on sea duty in the West Indies during the naval war with France, and became a lieutenant in 1801. He achieved his first fame in the Tripolitan War, when he seized the ketch Mastico (renamed Intrepid) which, at his suggestion, was used in the daring and successful destruction (Feb. 16, 1804) of the frigate Philadelphia, which had been stranded and then taken by the enemy. He was promoted to captain and commanded a division in the successive bombardments of Tripoli. He became (1808) commander of the naval forces on the southeastern coast; in the War of 1812 he is best remembered for his command of the President, which captured (Oct. 25, 1812) the British Macedonian and, on Jan. 14, 1815, alone was pursued by four British blockaders. The President defeated the Endymion, but was forced to surrender by the three other ships. Decatur was wounded in the engagement and taken prisoner, but was paroled and returned to the U.S. in the following month to be acclaimed a hero. Later in 1815, he was instrumental in forcing the dey of Algiers to come to terms with the U.S. government; feted upon his return to America, he delivered his famous words at a dinner at Norfolk given in his honor: "Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong." He served (1815 et seq.) on the Board of Navy Commissioners, and was killed in a duel over service matters with the suspended Captain James Barron, former captain of the Chesapeake, at whose court-martial Decatur had been a judge.

Decauville (dẹ.kō.vēl), Paul. b. at Petit-Bourg, Seine-et-Oise, France, 1846; d. at Neuilly, Seine, France, 1922. French inventor and manufacturer, known for the development of a narrow-gauge railway system with portable trackage, adapted especially for use in agriculture. He served (1891 et seq.) as a member of the French senate.

Decazes (dẹ.käz), Élie, Duc. b. at St.-Martin-de-Laye, Gironde, France, Sept. 28, 1780; d. at Decazeville, France, Oct. 24, 1860. French jurist and statesman. He became minister of police on Sept. 24, 1815, and premier and minister of the interior in 1818. He resigned in 1820, and became ambassador at London. He was raised to a hereditary dukedom in the same year, and founded (c1827) Decazeville.

Decazes, Louis Charles Élie. [Title, Duc de Glücksberg.] b. at Paris, May 9, 1819; d. at his Château La Grave, Gironde, France, Sept. 16, 1886. French statesman; eldest son of Élie Decazes (1780–1860). He was minister of foreign affairs (1873–77).

Decazeville (dẹ.käz.vēl). Town in S France, in the department of Aveyron, NW of the town of Rodez. It is the center of the Aveyron coal fields and has blast furnaces, iron foundries, wood industries, and various manufactures. 12,138 (1946).

Deccan (dek'ạn). [Also: Dekhan, Dekkan.] Nonofficial designation for the peninsular portion of India lying S of the Narbada River, between the Bay of Bengal on the E and the Arabian Sea on the W; in a restricted sense, the country between the Narbada on the N and the Kistna on the S.

Decebalus (dẹ.seb'ạ.lus). Title of honor among the Dacians, meaning "chief" or "king," and borne by several of their kings; especially by a king, d. c106 A.D., who was at war with the Romans in the reigns of Domitian and Trajan. He committed suicide after his defeat by Trajan, and Dacia became a Roman province.

Deceleia (des.ẹ.lē'ạ). In ancient geography, a city and strategic point in Attica, Greece, situated ab. 14 mi. NE of Athens. It was occupied (413–404 B.C.) by the Spartans (Lacedaemonians) during the Peloponnesian War.

Decelean War (des.ẹ.lē'ạn). Name frequently given to the third or final stage of the Peloponnesian War, on account of the occupation of Deceleia by the Spartans (Lacedaemonians).

December (dẹ.sem'bẽr). Twelfth month of the year, containing 31 days. During this month the sun touches the tropic of Capricorn at the winter solstice. In the early Roman calendar it was counted as the tenth and last month.

Decembrist Conspiracy (dẹ.sem'brist). First revolutionary movement (1825) in modern Russia. When Czar Alexander I died, having failed to redeem his promises to institute a more modern and enlightened political and social order, it was expected that he would be succeeded by Constantine, the elder of his two brothers. But Constantine, upon marrying a Polish woman, had in 1823 secretly renounced his right of succession in favor of the youngest brother, Nicholas, who was especially unpopular with the members of certain secret societies which had parliamentary government as their aim. At the time of the coronation of Nicholas I, these secret societies, whose membership included grand dukes and high army officers, offered to support a dictatorship to be headed by Prince Trubetzkoy, but he rejected the role. Nevertheless on Dec. 14, 1825, the conspirators, supported by some groups of the army, refused the oath of allegiance to Nicholas and resorted to open rebellion. The movement was crushed, and several of the leaders were hanged. This first challenge to the autocratic rule of the czar on the one hand led to a heightened use of police terrorism, and on the other hand, to the dissemination of the concept of revolution among the intellectuals of Russia.

Decemvirate (dē.sem'vi.rāt). In Roman history, the commission of ten, presided over by Appius Claudius, sent c450 B.C. to Greece to study Greek law and codify the Roman law. It was renewed the next year, and drew up the Twelve Tables. During its existence it superseded provisionally the regular machinery of government, and was overthrown on account of its tyranny by a popular insurrection after Appius Claudius had attempted to make a slave of Virginia, daughter of Virginius, who became tribune after the decemvirs were deposed.

Deception Island. Volcanic island in the South Shetland group, S of Cape Horn. Its harbor is Port Foster.

De Cespedes (dā chās'pā.dās), Alba. b. at Rome, 1911—. Italian novelist. De Cespedes, whose father came from a famous Cuban family and whose mother was Italian, was educated in Italy and early tried her hand at writing, often contributing to the famous third page of Italian newspapers. She became an Italian citizen through her marriage to an Italian. Her first novel, Nessuno torna indietro (1938; Eng. trans., There's No Turning Back) met with great success. Her most recent (1949) novel, Dalla parte di lei, treats of the fundamental barrier that exists between men and women, a favorite theme of this author.

Decetia (dē.sē'shi.ą, -shą). Latin name of Decize.

Dechamps (dę.shäñ), Adolphe. b. at Melle, Belgium, June 17, 1807; d. near Manage, near Brussels, July 19, 1875. Belgian Catholic statesman; brother of Victor Auguste Dechamps. He became a member of the second chamber in 1834, governor of the province of Luxembourg in 1841, and minister of public works in 1843, and was minister of foreign affairs from 1845 to 1846.

Dechamps, Victor Auguste. b. at Melle, Belgium, Dec. 6, 1810; d. at Mechelen (Malines), Belgium, Sept. 28, 1883. Belgian Redemptorist and Ultramontane leader; brother of Adolphe Dechamps. He became bishop of Namur in 1865, archbishop of Mechelen in 1867, and cardinal in 1875.

De Charms or De Charmes (dę shärmz'), Richard. b. at Philadelphia, Oct. 17, 1796; d. there, March 20, 1864. American Swedenborgian clergyman and author.

Déchelette (dāsh.let), Joseph. b. at Roanne, France, Jan. 8, 1862; killed in action during World War I at Aisne, France, Oct. 4, 1914. French archaeologist, one of the foremost scholars in the field of prehistoric archaeology. His main work was Manuel d'archéologie préhistorique, celtique et gallo-romaine (Textbook of Prehistoric Celtic and Gallo-Roman Archaeology, 1908–14).

Dechen (deċh'ęn), Heinrich von. b. at Berlin, March 25, 1800; d. at Bonn, Germany, Feb. 15, 1889. German geologist and mining engineer, for many years director of mines at Bonn. With Karsten he edited the Archiv für Mineralogie, Geognosie, Bergbau, und Hüttenkunde (1838–55).

Decimus Junius Juvenalis (des'i.mus jön'yus jö.vę.nā'lis). Full Latin name of Juvenal.

Decimus Tite Barnacle (des'i.mus tīt' bär'ną.kl), Lord. See Barnacle, Lord Decimus Tite.

Děčín (dye'chēn). See Děčín-Podmokly.

Décines-Charpieu (dā.sēn.shȧr.pyė). Town in SE France, in the department of Isère, situated at the NE corner of the department, between Villeurbane and Meyzieux, E of Lyons. It is an industrial town belonging to the metropolitan region of Lyons. 6,078 (1946).

Děčín-Podmokly (dye'chēn.pôd'mô.kli). [German, Tetschen-Bodenbach.] Twin cities in NW Czechoslovakia, in N Bohemia, situated on opposite banks of the Labe (Elbe) River, immediately S (ab. 6 mi.) of the East German border: a railroad station and junction point on the line from Prague to Dresden, with a customs administration. The cities are connected by a bridge. There are textile, metal, and chemical industries, flour mills, and breweries. Děčín is a river port and has a 17th century castle on a rock dominating the S entrance to the strategic Elbe valley route through the mountains. The area is a tourist center for the Saxon-Bohemian "Switzerland," a picturesque hilly and wooded region stretching on both sides of the river. The population declined with the Sudeten German exodus after 1945. Pop., including suburbs, 30,753 (1947).

Decius (dē'shus, desh'us). [Full name, Gaius Messius Quintus Trajanus Decius.] b. at Budalia, in Pannonia, 201 A.D.; killed in battle with the Goths, near the Danube, 251 A.D. Emperor of Rome (249–251). Having been sent by the emperor Philip the Arabian to restore subordination in the revolted army of Moesia, he was compelled by the army to assume the purple and march against Philip, who fell in battle near Verona in 249. He was defeated and slain in 251, near Abricium (in what is now Dobruja, Rumania), by the Goths, who had invaded his dominions. During his reign a bloody persecution of the Christians took place.

Decius Mus (mus), Publius. Killed at the battle of Vesuvius, 340 B.C. Roman plebeian consul, distinguished in the first Samnite and Latin wars.

Decius Mus, Publius. Killed at the battle of Sentinum (modern Sassoferrato, Italy), 295 B.C. Roman consul; son of Decius Mus (d. 340 B.C.).

Decius Mus, Publius. Killed in battle at Asculum Apulum (modern Ascoli Satriano, Italy), 279 B.C. Roman consul; son of Decius Mus (d. 295 B.C.).

De civitate Dei (dē siv.i.tā'tē dē'ī). [Eng. trans., "Of the City of God."] Celebrated treatise (c413–c426 A.D.) by Saint Augustine. Its theme is the permanence of the City of God, "which abideth forever," a thought made doubly impressive by the overthrow of Rome, the "eternal city," by Alaric.

Decize (dę.sēz). [Latin, Decetia.] Town in C France, in the department of Nièvre, situated on an island in the Loire River at the point where the river is joined by the Aron River and the Canal du Nivernais, ab. 18 mi. SE of Nevers. The ruined castle of the counts of Nevers and the coal mines of La Machine are nearby. 4,765 (1946).

Decken (dek'ęn), Karl Klaus von der. b. at Kotzen, Brandenburg, Germany, Aug. 8, 1833; d. 1865. German explorer of Africa. He was in the military service until 1860. In that year he sailed from Hamburg to East Africa, and gave the rest of his life and means to the exploration of what later became British East Africa. His first attempt at exploration was fruitless. On his second expedition (1861–62) he explored the region around Mount Kilimanjaro. In 1864 he led a great expedition to the exploration of the Sabaki, Tana, and Juba rivers, in what is now Kenya and Somaliland. He and almost all his companions were killed by the Somalis. His material was published in K. K. v. der Decken's Reisen in Ost-Afrika (1869–79). His collections were given to the National Museum at Berlin.

Deckendorf (dek'ęn.dôrf). See Deggendorf.

Decker (dek'ėr), Frank. Original name of Duveneck, Frank.

Decker, Jeremias de. See Dekker, Jeremias de.

Decker, Thomas. See Dekker, Thomas.

Declaration of Independence. Document, or public act, proclaimed and adopted by the 13 original states of the Union in which they declared that they were cutting off all their ties with the mother country, Great Britain. It was proclaimed by the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776, a significant date in American history, and the Declaration itself is certainly one of the most important statements of belief and action in world history. It opens with the famous sentence, "When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation." This introductory sentence is then followed by one of the most quoted statements ever made: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." It closes with the assertion that "these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATES. . . . And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor." The main body of the Declaration is devoted to a long recital of the tyranny and despotism of George III, who is called "the present King of Great Britain," and is then simply referred to, 18 times, in phrases beginning "He has" or "He is." The document was signed by 56 members, the first signer being John Hancock of Massachusetts, whose name has thereby become symbolic for a signature in general, and the last, Matthew Thornton of New Hampshire. The eighteenth signer was Jefferson, who is believed to be responsible, in lesser or greater degree, for the actual wording of the Declaration. The ideas in the document derive partly from the English philosopher John Locke, and partly from the doctrines of 18th-century French radical philosophers. The Declaration has had an exciting history since it was penned. It was almost destroyed by fire at least twice, and it was twice almost captured by the British, in the Revolutionary War and in the War of 1812. It is now in the Library of Congress, at Washington, where it has been since 1921, and where, one may presume, it will remain. Its formal, but never-used, name is "The Unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America."

Declaration of Indulgence. See Indulgence, Declaration of.

Declaration of London. See London, Declaration of.

Declaration of Panama. See Panama, Declaration of.

Declaration of Right. Affirmation of the ancient constitutional rights of the English nation, prepared by the convention of the Commons, assented to by the Lords, and by William III and Mary II (who thereupon were declared king and queen, February 13), in February, 1689. It was confirmed by Parliament as the Bill of Rights in December, 1689.

Declaration of Rights. Resolution adopted (Oct. 14, 1774) at Philadelphia by the First Continental Congress (at which all of the colonies were represented, except Georgia). The declaration, consisting of 11 resolutions, invoked the colonists' rights as Englishmen in making a protest against the passage and enforcement of the Intolerable Acts, but also asserted colonial loyalty to the crown. The chief purpose of the declaration was to secure a fair hearing for a redress of colonial grievances.

Declaration of St.-Ouen (saⁿ.twaⁿ′). See St.-Ouen, Declaration of.

Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen. Formulation (1789) of the French Revolutionary principles of liberty, equality, and fraternity. Proposed by Lafayette and drafted by him and by Sieyès, this manifesto, drawn in part from the ideas of Jean Jacques Rousseau and in part from the American Declaration of Independence, and designed to be placed at the head of the contemplated new French constitution, was adopted by the Constituent Assembly on Aug. 26, 1789, accepted by Louis XVI on October 5, and incorporated as a preamble in the constitution of 1791. The Declaration sets forth the inherent rights of the individual to liberty, security, and property, and calls for freedom of religion, of speech, and of the press. It asserts the sovereignty of the people, and enumerates restrictions necessary to be imposed on the individual for social considerations. The Declaration of the Rights of Man was a dynamic influence in the French Revolution, and a source of inspiration for European liberals who during the earlier decades of the 19th century carried on the struggle against the reactionary regimes which were set up after the fall of Napoleon.

Declaratory Act. Act of the British Parliament (March 18, 1766) which accompanied the repeal of the Stamp Act and was intended as a formal assertion of the power of the crown and Parliament over the American colonies. Parliamentary legislation, it stated, was binding upon the colonies and people of America "in all cases whatsoever," and it denied all power on the part of the colonies to reject or disobey such authority. The colonists, in their joy over the repeal of the Stamp Act, did not take more than superficial notice of the Declaratory Act, but the subsequent assertion of parliamentary power over the colonies illuminated its significance.

Dècle (dekl), Lionel. b. in May, 1859; d. March 1, 1907. French traveler and ethnological collector. He started in July, 1891, from Mafeking, Bechuanaland, and visited Palapye, failed to enter the Barotse country (in what is now Northern Rhodesia), returned to Matebeleland and Mashonaland (Southern Rhodesia), where he explored the subterranean lakes of Sinoia, and again reached the Zambesi River on his way to Nyasaland, in 1892. Thence he proceeded up the Shire River to Lakes Nyasa and Tanganyika (1893), and came out by way of Zanzibar (1894).

Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, The. Celebrated history by Edward Gibbon, published in six volumes (1776–88). It is regarded as one of the classical works of historical literature in the English language. Gibbon's panoramic sweep embraces three periods covering a total of some 13 centuries: from the rule of Trajan and the Antonines to the decay of the Western Empire; from the era of Justinian in the East to the founding of the German Empire of the West under Charlemagne; and from the restoration of the Western Empire to the capture (1453) of Constantinople by the Turks. Gibbon's point of view is suggested by his observation that history is a record of "little more than the crimes, follies, and misfortunes of mankind." He relies on fact and incident to carry his story, but he expresses a love for the classical and a dislike for Christianity despite his attempted "outside view."

Decline of the Roman People, The. Historical essay (1834) by George Bancroft, perhaps best known for his six-volume History of the United States. In this essay Bancroft explains how oligarchy leads to tyranny and despotism, and how the evils of irresponsible government are responsible for the latter.

De consolatione philosophiae (dē kon.sō.lā.shi.ō′nē fil-ō.sō′fi.ē). [Eng. trans., "On the Consolation of Philosophy."] Latin work in prose and verse, written by Boethius c525 A.D., while he was imprisoned and awaiting execution. It was translated into Old English by Alfred the Great. Chaucer translated it into English prose before 1382. Caxton published it in 1480.

de Coppet (dẹ kō.pā′), Edward J. b. May 28, 1855; d. April 30, 1916. American banker and music patron, founder of the stock-brokerage firm of De Coppet and Doremus. He was the organizer (1904) and chief supporter (although not himself a member) of the Flonzaley string quartet, considered for over 25 years one of the finest ensembles of its kind.

Decorah (dẹ.kō′rạ). City in NE Iowa, county seat of Winneshiek County, on the Upper Iowa River. Settled by Norwegians, it is the seat of Luther College, which includes a Norwegian-American historical museum; a Norwegian language newspaper is published here. 6,060 (1950).

Decoration Day. See Memorial Day.

De Corona (dē kọ.rō′nạ). See Crown, Oration on the.

De Coster (dẹ kos′tėr), Charles Théodore Henri. b. at Munich, 1827; d. 1879. Belgian author.

Decoto (dē.kō′tō). Unincorporated community in W California, in Alameda County S of Oakland. 2,830 (1950).

Decoud (dẹ.kö′), Martin. Latin American journalist and patriot in Joseph Conrad's novel Nostromo (1904).

Decoux (dẹ.kö), Jean. b. May 5, 1884—. French naval officer, governor general of French Indochina (1940–45). He continued as the French representative there after the Japanese occupation (July, 1941), was arrested by the Japanese in March, 1945, and in February, 1949, was cleared of charges of treason.

Decree of the Trianon (trē′ạ.non). See Trianon, Decree of the.

Decretals of the Pseudo-Isidore (sū′dọ.iz′i.dôr). See False Decretals.

Decumates Agri (dek.ū.mā'tēz ag'rī). Name given by the Romans to the lands E of the Rhine and N of the Danube. About the beginning of the 2nd century A.D. they were incorporated in the Roman Empire as a part of Rhaetia. They paid the Romans a tithe of a tenth of their produce.

Dedalus (ded'ạ.lus, dē'dạ-), May. Wife of Simon, and mother of Stephen and Dilly, in James Joyce's autobiographical novel Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1916). A devout Roman Catholic who is stunned when her son leaves the Church, she is believed to be a portrait of the author's own mother. In Ulysses, part of Stephen's day-long thought complex is concerned with her death.

Dedalus, Simon. Stephen's father and May's husband in James Joyce's autobiographical novel Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1916). A careless, happy-go-lucky character, more interested in pleasure than responsibility, he is regarded as a partial portrait of the author's father. He appears in several scenes in Ulysses.

Dedalus, Stephen. Protagonist of A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1916) and one of the chief characters in Ulysses (1922), two novels by James Joyce. Believed to be a portrait of the author, Stephen is a sensitive artist type whose rich imagination helps him rise above his drab background. In the Portrait he is shown in revolt against his Roman Catholic and national cultural heritage as he strives toward an articulated esthetic; in Ulysses he is employed as a counterpart of Telemachus in the Odyssey in his quest for a father symbol.

Dedan (dē'dạn). In the Bible, a son of Raamah, son of Cush, son of Ham (Gen. x. 7); also, his descendants, the Dedanim.

Dedan. In the Bible, a son of Jokshan, grandson of Abraham and Keturah (Gen. xxv. 3). In the Prophets the Dedanites are referred to as being settled now in Edom (Idumea), now on the Persian Gulf. Some scholars (Gesenius, Winer) infer that the Cushite Dedanites and those from Keturah were in some way amalgamated by intermarriage, and formed a widely spread trading tribe There are still ruins of a city in the N Hejaz, Arabia bearing the name of Dedan.

Dede Agach (de'de ä.gäch'). Turkish name of Alexandroúpolis.

Dedekind (dā'dẹ.kint), Friedrich. b. at Neustadt ar der Leine, Germany, c1525; d. 1598. German poet and pastor, remembered for his satirical Latin poem Grobianus (1549), directed at gluttony and drunkenness. The idea was derived from the chapter on "Grobe Narren" in Sebastian Brant's Narrenschiff (1494). Dedekind's mock epic, which fixed the word "Grobian" in the German language, was translated in 1551, with emendations by Kaspar Scheidt, into German. An English translation appeared in 1605.

Dedekind, Julius Wilhelm Richard. b. at Brunswick, Germany, Oct. 6, 1831; d. there, Feb. 12, 1916. German mathematician who contributed to analysis and the theory of functions, best known for the so-called Dedekind cut in the definition of real numbers. He is remembered also for his definition of infinite classes, on which he corresponded extensively with Georg F. L. P. Cantor. His chief works include Stetigkeit und irrationale Zahlen (1872), Was sind und was sollen die Zahlen? (1888), and Über die Theorie der ganzen algebraischen Zahlen (1894). The first two of these books appeared in numerous editions. His Gesammelte mathematische Werke appeared in three volumes in 1930–32.

Dedham (ded'ạm). Town in E Massachusetts, county seat of Norfolk County, ab. 10 mi. SW of Boston. Settled in 1635, it is now a residential suburb of Boston. It was the scene (1921) of the Sacco-Vanzetti trial. 18,487 (1950).

Dedlock (ded'lok), Lady. Wife of Sir Leicester Dedlock in Charles Dickens's novel Bleak House: a haughty woman of fashion, secretly consumed with terror, shame, and remorse. She has an illegitimate child, Esther Summerson, but marries Sir Leicester, who is ignorant of her history. Her secret becomes known to Mr. Tulkinghorn, her husband's legal adviser, who tells her of his design to reveal it to her husband. She leaves home and dies from exposure and remorse at the gate of the graveyard where Captain Hawdon, the father of her child, is buried.

Dedlock, Sir Leicester. Extremely ceremonious and stately old baronet in Charles Dickens's novel Bleak House. He is perfectly honorable, but prejudiced to the most unreasonable degree, with a genuine affection and admiration for Lady Dedlock.

Dee (dē). River in N central and E Scotland, in Kincardineshire and Aberdeenshire. It rises in the Cairngorm Mountains, near the Aberdeenshire-Banffshire-Inverness-shire boundary, and flows E across the S portion of Aberdeenshire, crossing ab. 9 mi. of the N part of Kincardineshire before continuing ab. 14 mi. along the Aberdeenshire-Kincardineshire boundary to the North Sea at Aberdeen. It is the chief water supply of the city of Aberdeen. Length, ab. 87 mi.

Dee. River in SW Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire. It rises in Loch Dee, ab. 10 mi. N of Kirkcudbright, and flows S to the Solway Firth at Kirkcudbright Bay. Above Loch Dee, the river (known as the Water of Ken), traverses Loch Ken, emptying immediately into Loch Dee. Total length of both rivers, ab. 50 mi.; length of river Dee proper, ab. 12 mi.

Dee. [Latin, Deva.] River in N Wales and W England, rising in Lake Bala, in Merionethshire, Wales, flowing through Denbighshire, Wales, and Cheshire, England, through Chester to its estuary on the Irish Sea. Length, ab. 70 mi. (including the estuary).

Dee, John. b. at London, July 13, 1527; d. at Mortlake-Surrey, England, in December, 1608. English mathema, tician and astrologer. He took the degree of B.A. at Cambridge in 1545, was appointed one of the foundation fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1546, and lectured (c1550) on the Elements of Euclid at Paris. He returned to England in 1551 and became astrologer to the queen, Mary Tudor, was prosecuted before the Star Chamber on the charge of magic but was released c1555, practiced the various arts of astrology and horoscopy at the court of Elizabeth, gave exhibitions of magic at the courts of various princes in Poland and Bohemia (1583–88), and was appointed warden of Christ's College, Manchester, in 1595. He was patronized by Queen Elizabeth, who received instruction from him in astrology in 1564. According to the Athenae Cantabrigienses he wrote 79 works, most of which have never been printed. His most notable work is Monas Hieroglyphica (1564). Dee's reputation was primarily that of a magician, and his experiments in crystal-gazing and the evocation of spirits show his interest in magic, but he was also a sober mathematician who advocated the adoption of the Gregorian calendar and who did geographical descriptions of the new lands in America.

Deeg (dēg). See Dig.

Deems (dēmz), Charles Force. b. at Baltimore, Dec. 4, 1820; d. at New York, Nov. 18, 1893. American clergyman and writer, pastor of the Church of the Strangers at New York. He founded the American Institute of Christian Philosophy in 1881.

Deep (dēp). River of North Carolina which unites with the Haw to form the Cape Fear River ab. 26 mi. SW of Raleigh. Length, over 120 mi.

Deep Are the Roots. Play in three acts (1945) by Arnaud d'Usseau and James Gow. It deals with race prejudice, its victim being a Negro soldier-hero in World War II, Brett Charles, who finds that he is just a Negro, not a hero, when he returns in May, 1945, to his home, "a small town in the Deep South," where the action takes place.

Deepening Stream, The. Novel by Dorothy Canfield Fisher, published in 1930.

Deephaven (dēp'hā.vẹn). Volume of local-color sketches by Sarah Orne Jewett, published in 1877. They are set against the background of Deephaven, a Maine seaport.

Deeping (dēp'ing), Warwick. [Full name, George Warwick Deeping.] b. at Southend, Essex, England, May 28, 1877; d. at Weybridge, England, April 20, 1950. English novelist. He studied medicine but abandoned it, after a year of practice, in favor of writing. During World War I he was on active service in Gallipoli, Egypt, and France. His books include Uther and Igraine (1903; rev. ed., 1927), Bess of the Woods (1906), Bertrand of Brittany (1908), The Red Saint (1909), The Lame Englishman (1910), Joan of the Tower (1911), The House of Spies (1913), The King Behind the King (1914), Unrest (1916), Martin Valliant (1917), Valour (1918), Lantern Lane (1921), Orchards (1922), Apples of Gold (1923), Sorrell and Son (1925), Doomsday (1926), Kitty (1927), Old Pybus (1928), Roper's Row (1929), Exile (1930), Old Wine and New (1932), Blind Man's Year (1937), The Man Who Went Back (1940), Mr. Gurney and Mr. Slade (1944), Repriev (1945), and The Impudence of Youth (1946).

Deep Mrs. Sykes, The. Play (1945) by George Kelly, American actor and author of one-act sketches, who later turned his talents to full-length plays. It is a psychological portrait of a masterful woman, who must dominate everything and everybody, a theme that, 20 years earlier, won Kelly the Pulitzer prize for his Craig's Wife, still regarded as his best play.

Deep River. See Deep, and see under Chalk River.

Deep South. Name applied to the states of the U.S. South situated between, and including, South Carolina and Texas. The region is predominantly agricultural, and its chief crop is cotton. Before the Civil War it was characterized by slavery and the plantation economy; at present its agricultural system includes the use of many sharecroppers and tenant farmers.

Deer (dir), Book of. [Also, Book of Deir.] Ancient manuscript of the Gospels in Latin, with marginal notes and interlineations in Gaelic, found in the abbey of Deer or Deir, in the parish of Old Deer, Aberdeenshire, Scotland. These glosses, probably written in the 12th century or earlier, are in the oldest form of Gaelic found in any existing Scottish book, and are of interest to scholars as showing the uniformity of Gaelic in Ireland and in Scotland at that time. The manuscript is in the Cambridge University Library.

Deer, Old. Civil parish in E Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, ab. 10 mi. W of Peterhead. The ruins of Saint Mary's Abbey of Deer (or Deir), a Cistercian monastery established c1218, are here. Old Deer is the scene of the defeat of the Comyns by Edward Bruce. The town is noted for an ancient manuscript (Book of Deer) containing Saint John's gospel and parts of the other three, belonging formerly to the old abbey, and now in the Cambridge University library. 3,380 (1931).

Deere (dir), John. b. at Rutland, Vt., Feb. 7, 1804; d. May 17, 1886. American manufacturer of agricultural implements, noted for his improvements on the plow. He was apprenticed to a blacksmith at Middlebury, Vt., but in 1837 emigrated to the West, subsequently settling at Grand Detour, Ill., where he continued his trade and formed a partnership with Major Andrus. His experience in devising agricultural tool-parts for the farmers of the area aroused his interest in the need for a new plow suitable for working prairie land. Together with his partner, he constructed three improved plows with a steel moldboard; with continued experimentation, the business developed. To secure a better location, Deere sold (c1846) his share of the business to Andrus and founded a firm at Moline, Ill., where his need for the proper type of steel plate finally led to the manufacture of the first plow steel in the U.S., rolled (c1846) at the steel works of Jones and Quigg. By 1857, Deere's company was producing as many as 10,000 plows a year, later adding cultivators and other tools.

Deerfield (dir'fēld). Village in NE Illinois, in Lake County NW of Chicago. 3,288 (1950).

Deerfield. Town in N Massachusetts, in Franklin County, near the junction of the Deerfield River with the Connecticut River, ab. 32 mi. N of Springfield; seat of Deerfield Academy. Settled c1670, it was sacked and burned by French and Indians in 1704, and the village of South Deerfield (pop. 1,418, 1950) was the scene of the Bloody Brook massacre in 1675. Pop. 3,086 (1950).

Deerfield River. Small river in N Massachusetts, a western tributary of the Connecticut River, which it joins near Deerfield, in Franklin County. It rises in S Vermont.

Deering (dir'ing), Charles. b. at Paris, Me., 1852; d. Feb. 5, 1927. American manufacturer; son of William Deering (1826–1913). After serving in the U.S. navy, he became (1881) secretary of his father's company and was named (1902) chairman of the board of the International Harvester Company upon the merger of the two companies.

Deering, William. b. at South Paris, Me., April 25, 1826; d. at Cocoanut Grove, Fla., Dec. 9, 1913. American manufacturer of agricultural machinery, noted as the maker of a grain harvester with a device for automatic binding. Abandoning the study of medicine, he joined his father's woolen-manufacturing business and in 1856 established a dry-goods store at South Paris, which later became (1865) Deering, Milliken and Company, with central offices at Portland, Me., and a branch at New York. He left the wholesale dry-goods business to become the partner of Elijah H. Gammon (who had bought the rights to the Marsh harvester and established a plant at Plano, Ill.). Foreseeing the wide need for the harvester, Deering bought Gammon's interest in 1879 and moved to Chicago, where he was instrumental in adding improvements that eventually led to the harvester with automatic binding. His factory grew to become the largest agricultural machinery plant in the world. In 1883 it was incorporated as William Deering and Company; later called the Deering Manufacturing Company, it was absorbed (1902) by the International Harvester Company of Chicago. Deering retired in 1901. His gifts to institutions included those to Northwestern University, the Garrett Biblical Institute, and Wesley Hospital.

Deer Island. Island in S Maine, on the E side of the entrance to Penobscot Bay. It was once noted as the home of many old-time sea captains; today it is a resort and farming area. Length, ab. 9 mi.

Deer Lodge. City in W Montana, county seat of Powell County, ab. 28 mi. NW of Butte. It was a gold-mining town in the 1860's. 3,779 (1950).

Deer Park. Village in SW Ohio, in Hamilton County near Cincinnati. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 3,510 (1940), 7,241 (1950).

Deerslayer (dir'slā.ėr), The. Novel of frontier life (1841) by James Fenimore Cooper. It is one of the series of five stories known as "the Leather-Stocking Tales." The hero of the novel is Natty Bumpo, a young hunter living with the Delaware Indians and fighting the Hurons. The setting is the northern section of New York state, and the time is 1740–45. Other characters are a trapper, Henry March, known as "Hurry Harry," Tom Hutter, a settler, Judith Hutter, who loves Natty, her sister Hetty, who loves March, Chingachgook, a Delaware chief, Natty's friend, and Wahtawah, an Indian maid. Although it was published last, The Deerslayer should be read first. The other volumes in the series, in chronological reading order, are The Last of the Mohicans, The Pathfinder, The Pioneers, and The Prairie.

Dées (dā'ăsh). See Dej.

Defarge (dę.färzh'), Thérèse. In Charles Dickens's Tale of Two Cities, the wife of the keeper of a wineshop. A type of the remorseless women of the St.-Antoine quarter of Paris during the French Revolution, she takes her seat daily in front of the guillotine and knits while the executions take place.

Defauw (dę.fō'), Désiré. b. at Ghent, Belgium, Sept. 5, 1885—. Belgian violinist and conductor. During World War I he formed, with Lionel Tertis, Woodhouse, and Doehard, the Allied Quartet. He was appointed professor at the Antwerp Conservatory. He founded and was conductor of the Defauw Concerts at Brussels, was musical director of Belgium's national radio institute, and became director of concerts of the Brussels Conservatory in 1925. He was guest conductor (1939) in the U.S., and conductor (1943) of the Chicago Symphony. He has conducted orchestras throughout Europe (especially Italy), and at Montreal.

Defence of Cony-Catching, The. Pamphlet (1592) written as an answer to two pamphlets by Robert Greene, one of which was entitled A Notable Discovery of Cozenage Now Daily Practised by Sundry Lewd Persons, Called Cony-Catchers and Crossbiters (1591). In Elizabethan English, a "cony-catcher" was a thief, a cheat, sharper, trickster, swindler, a criminal of any kind, male or female, and "cony-catching" was stealing, cheating, or swindling in the manner of a cony-catcher. The unknown author of the Defence signed himself "Cuthbert Cony-Catcher" and offered his work as "a confutation of those two injurious pamphlets published by R. G."

Defence of Cosmetics, A. Essay (1922) by Sir Max Beerbohm, English novelist, parodist, and humorist. It was written at Oxford, where he was a student at Merton College, and was later called The Pervasion of Rouge. It justifies, with a blending of humor and seriousness, the place of artificiality and some forms of trickery or craftiness in modern civilization.

Defence of Guinevere, and Other Poems, The. Volume (1858) by William Morris. As the title suggests, it gives a more favorable view and a more sympathetic and subtle portrait of Arthur's wife than is found in the older Arthurian romances. Several of the poems in this volume, which has been called "that extraordinary book of verse," were originally published in The Oxford and Cambridge Magazine. Critics have pointed out that it shows both the defects and the qualities of his age (Morris was 24 at the time) but they have praised the title poem and "King Arthur's Tomb" for their passion and fire and energy.

Defence of Poesie, The. Title given to Sir Philip Sidney's essay on poetry, written c1579 and printed by Ponsonby in 1595; another version of the essay, printed by Olney the same year, is called An Apologie for Poetrie. It is a reply to the School of Abuse (1579) by the Puritan Stephen Gosson, in which all secular literature is attacked.

Defence of Poetry. Volume in verse by Isaac D'Israeli (the father of Benjamin Disraeli), published in 1790. It was his first work.

Defence of Poetry, The. Literary essay (1821) by Percy Bysshe Shelley, probably his best-known prose work. Published the year before his death, it is an answer to The Four Ages of Poetry, by his friend Thomas Love Peacock, and a strong plea for imagination and love in poetry. Its thesis (that the poet is a social and moral force, and that the poet must be a teacher, as well as a singer) is expressed poetically in Shelley's Ode to the West Wind and To a Skylark. The essay naturally invites a comparison with Sidney's piece of literary criticism (written over 200 years earlier) An Apologie for Poetrie, or, as it was called in another edition, The Defence of Poesie.

Defence of Rime, A. Critical essay (1603) by Samuel Daniel, "the well-languaged" Daniel, in which he makes a plea for the use of English verse forms. It was written in reply to Campion's Observations (1602), advocating the use of Latin meters in English poetry.

Defender of the Faith. Title (in Latin, Fidei Defensor) conferred (Oct. 11, 1521) by Pope Leo X upon Henry VIII of England, in recognition of the latter's treatise Assertio septem sacramentorum (1521) against Luther. Pope Paul III retracted the title after Henry's break with the Roman Catholic Church, but in 1544 it was granted the king by Parliament and has been retained by succeeding English sovereigns.

Defense, Department of. Department (established 1949) of the executive branch of the U.S. government. Until 1947, responsibility for the national defense of the U.S. was divided between the War Department, the Navy Department, and, for a short time after World War II, the Air Force. The secretaries of war and of the navy sat in the president's cabinet, and the president was commander in chief, but there was no machinery for overall coördination of the defense establishments. New conditions and requirements of warfare revealed during and after World War II, especially the enhanced importance of the air arm, created a necessity for unified control of the army, navy, and air force; moreoever the vastly increased demand for weapons, munitions, planes, and all sorts of military materiel, led to competition between the different defense establishments in the market, causing sharp increases in prices and laying a heavy burden on the budget. These considerations led to the creation in 1947 of the Department of Defense (at that time called the National Military Establishment), headed by a secretary of defense, the first incumbent being James V. Forrestal, who as secretary of the navy had taken a leading part in urging unification of the services. Within this new framework it was hoped that it might be possible to coördinate the activities of the War and Navy departments, the Air Force, the joint chiefs of staff, the National Security Council, the National Security Resources Board, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Munitions Board, the Research and Development Board, and the War Council. By the terms of the National Security Act of 1949, the National Military Establishment was transformed into the Department of Defense, headed by a secretary of defense, who took his place in the cabinet, and to whom the secretaries of war, of the navy, and of the air force were made subordinate. The first secretary of defense was Louis Arthur Johnson.

Defense Plant Corporation. Federal corporation established under the U.S. government by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) in 1940 for the purpose of acquiring and allocating strategic raw materials and critical industrial equipment in a move to further production for national defense.

Deffand (de.fäṅ), Marquise du. [Title of Marie de Vichy-Chamrond.] b. at the Château de Chamrond, France, 1697; d. at Paris, Sept. 24, 1780. French leader in Parisian literary and philosophical circles, noted for her wit and cynicism. She was married to the marquis du Deffand in 1718, but soon separated from him. In 1753, she became blind. She is noted for her correspondence with Voltaire, Hénault, Montesquieu, Horace Walpole, and other great men of her time.

Defiance (dē.fī'ạns). City in NW Ohio, county seat of Defiance County, on the Maumee River ab. 50 mi. SW of Toledo, in an agricultural area. Manufactures include machinery, radio and auto parts, steel, and dairy products. It is the seat of Defiance College. Fort Defiance, on the same site, was the scene of a battle between the Indians and the forces of "Mad" Anthony Wayne on Aug. 6, 1794. Pop. 11,265 (1950).

Defile of Stradella (strä.del'lä). See Stradella, Defile of.

De finibus (dē fin'i.bus). [Full title, De finibus bonorum et malorum, meaning "Of the Boundaries of Good and Evil."] Treatise in five books by Cicero, in the form of a dialogue, consisting in a presentation of the doctrines of the Greek schools concerning good and evil. It was written in 45 B.C.

De Flores (dē flō'rēz). In Thomas Middleton's play The Changeling, an ill-favored, broken gentleman in the service of Vermandero, the father of Beatrice-Joanna. He loves Beatrice, who loathes him. Trusting in his devotion and poverty, she induces him to murder Alonzo de Pivacquo, to whom her father has betrothed her though she loves Alsemero. In a powerful scene he declares to her that she shall never marry Alsemero unless she first yields to him. He never relents, and after killing Beatrice dies triumphant, by his own hand, when the double discovery of the liaison and murder is made.

Defoe (dē.fō'), Daniel. [Also, De Foe.] b. at London, 1660; d. there, April 26, 1731. English novelist and political journalist; son of a tallow-chandler and butcher who became a Dissenter after the Act of Uniformity (1662). Daniel's surname (originally Foe or De Foe, variously spelled) was usually written De Foe after 1703 (modern editors, however, universally spell it Defoe). He studied for the Presbyterian ministry at Morton's academy at Stoke Newington, and his first poems (in manuscript, 1681) were religious meditations; but he became a merchant. He traveled widely in Great Britain and on the Continent, and was once captured and held by Algerian pirates between Harwich and Holland. In 1684 he married Mary Tuffley, by whom he had seven children. After failing for 17,000 pounds through rashness and wartime difficulties (1692) he satisfied his creditors, but debts were often revived for political persecution and he died in hiding because of an old claim. He joined the rising under the Duke of Monmouth in 1685, entered London in triumph with William of Orange (William III) in 1688, and with few intervals from 1689 to 1731 served four sovereigns as a pamphleteer. He held minor offices under William III and became his trusted confidant, suggesting plans for peace and war. He defended the Dutch in The True-Born Englishman (1701), a poem ridiculing racial superiority. After William's death his ironical tract The Shortest Way with the Dissenters (1702) gave an excuse for his prosecution by Tories before alderman judges (partly Whigs) whom he had satirized. He was sentenced (July, 1703) to stand three times in the pillory, pay a heavy fine, give sureties for seven years, and remain in prison till all was performed. His business as a pantile manufacturer failed before Robert Harley procured his release (November, 1703) from Newgate Prison to serve the government. His Review (1704–13) was best known of many journalistic undertakings. He promoted the union with Scotland (1707), urged peace with France (1713), and supported the Hanoverian succession (1714). In 1713 he was imprisoned for a short time when Whigs professed that his ironical tracts against the Pretender were treasonable. Although a Whig and a Dissenter, he put national interests first, writing to make the government's policies intelligible and acceptable to the public, and his opponents usually welcomed his services when they got into office; but he never supported Jacobitism or intolerance. In 1719 he began the works of fiction for which he is best known: The Life and Strange Surprizing Adventures of Robinson Crusoe, of York, Mariner (1719), The Memoirs of a Cavalier (1720), The Life, Adventures, and Piracies of the Famous Captain Singleton (1720), The Fortunes and Misfortunes of the Famous Moll Flanders (1722), A Journal of the Plague Year (1722), The History and Remarkable Life of Colonel Jacque, Commonly call'd Colonel Jack (1722), and Roxana, or The Fortunate Mistress (1724). Among his later writings are A Tour thro' the whole Island of Great Britain (1724–27), A General History of the Pirates (1724–28), The Compleat English Tradesman (1725–27), The Memoirs of Captain Carleton (1728), and Robert Drury's Journal (1729). He wrote considerably more than 400 books and tracts, on most subjects of public interest, nearly all issued without his name. He developed a prose style remarkable for simplicity and directness. As a journalist and novelist he had an extraordinary ability to capture details of speech and incident, and in Robinson Crusoe and Moll Flanders he created two memorable characters. As a historical writer he was notable for visualizing and interpreting events; all historians who deal with his period stand (often unconsciously) in his debt. Benjamin Franklin acknowledged his obligation to An Essay upon Projects (1697). In his writings on public affairs Defoe expressed many of the best ideas of his age; his own proposals often anticipated the thought of today.

De Forest (dē for'ĕst), John William. b. May 31, 1826; d. July 17, 1906. American novelist and soldier. He served through the Civil War from 1861 to 1865, in the Southwest and with Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley. He received the brevet rank of major. From 1865 to 1868 he was adjutant general of the veteran reserve corps. Among his works are History of the Indians of Connecticut (1853), Oriental Acquaintance (1856), Seacliff (1859), Miss Ravenel's Conversion from Secession to Loyalty (1867), The Oddest of Courtships (1881), and A Lover's Revolt (1898). A Volunteer's Adventures (1946), a collection of his letters and articles, recounts some of his Civil War experiences.

De Forest, Lee. [Sometimes called "the Father of Radio."] b. at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 26, 1873—. American inventor. Throughout his career he has been concerned chiefly with devising and improving means for the transmission of sound. His early work in wireless telegraphy contributed greatly to the successful development of radio, and others of his inventions have been of the greatest importance in extending the range of telephony, both by wire and by air. For the U.S. government he designed and supervised construction of its first high-powered naval radio stations. The patents granted to Lee De Forest have numbered more than 300.

De Forest, Robert Weeks. b. at New York, April 25, 1848; d. May 6, 1931. American lawyer and social reformer. He was educated at Yale and Columbia universities, and was admitted to the bar in 1871. He was a director of many commercial enterprises, served as trustee (from 1889), secretary (from 1904), and vice-president (from 1910) of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and was president (1888 et seq.) of the Charity Organization Society of the city of New York.

Deformed; or, Woman's Trial, The. Drama in verse by Richard Penn Smith, produced and published in 1830.

Deformed Transformed, The. Drama by Byron, published in 1824. It was partly founded on Goethe's Faust.

Defregger (dā'freg.ĕr), Franz von. b. at Stronach, Tyrol, Austria, April 30, 1835; d. 1921. Austrian genre and portrait painter whose popular scenes met with great success. He studied in the Academy at Munich, after a trip to the U.S.; later he went to Paris. He established his reputation fairly early in life, obtained high prices for his work, and was awarded several prizes. Among his more important works are Young Tyrolian Peasant, Council of War, 1809, The Last Levee, 1809, The Dance, Wandering Italian Singers, and Portrait of the Crown Prince and Princess.

De Funiak Springs (dē fū'ni.ak). Town in NW Florida, county seat of Walton County, W of Jacksonville. The springs for which it is named feed a small lake, 80 ft. deep, which is a swimming resort. It is the site of the first Confederate monument in Florida (1871). 3,077 (1950).

De Garmo (dē gär'mō), Charles. b. at Mukwonago, Wis., Jan. 7, 1849; d. 1934. American educator, professor of the science and art of education at Cornell University from 1898. He was professor of psychology and education at the University of Illinois (1890–91), and president of Swarthmore College (1891–98). His publications relate chiefly to the principles and methods of secondary education.

Degas (dę.gä), Hilaire Germain Edgar. b. at Paris, July 19, 1834; d. 1917. French painter. He belonged to the group of Impressionists and was early associated with Manet, Monet, Renoir, and Fantin-Latour. His first successes were made with pictures representing racecourses, but his subjects were later usually taken from the theater, and he depicted life behind the scenes, especially of ballet dancers, with great appreciation; remarkable are also his studies of women in everyday poses. He visited America and painted a noted picture of Negroes loading cotton at New Orleans.

De Gasperi (dā gäs'pe.rē), Alcide. b. at Pieve Tesino, Italy, April 3, 1881—. Italian statesman. He was a supporter (1903) of the Irredentist movement in the Trentino region. He served before World War I in the Austrian chamber and was elected (1921) to the Italian chamber of deputies. In 1926 he was arrested by the Fascists for having led the Popularist Party; after the fall of Fascism he became minister of foreign affairs (1944), serving in the cabinets of Bonomi and Parri, and premier (1945).

de Gaulle (dę gōl), Charles André Joseph Marie. b. at Lille, France, Nov. 22, 1890—. French political leader and army officer, leader of the Free French movement during World War II. Graduated (1911) from the Saint-Cyr military academy with the rank of second lieutenant, he first saw World War I duty in the 33rd infantry regiment, commanded by (then) Colonel Philippe Pétain. Twice wounded (1914, 1915), he was again wounded while fighting at the defense of Verdun (1916). Captured by the Germans, he made five attempts to escape before the armistice (1918) brought release from captivity. During the Polish-Soviet war (1920–21), he served on the staff of General Maxime Weygand, the French military adviser to the Polish government. A tour of duty as professor of military history (1921–24) at Saint-Cyr was followed by studies at the École de Guerre and service as aide-de-camp (1924–27) to Marshal Pétain. He served (1927–29) in the army of occupation at Trier, Germany, as commander of the 19th Infantry Battalion, was sent on a mission (1929–32) to the Near East for the French government, and returned to France to serve as secretary-general (1932–36) of the supreme defense council, without effectively convincing that body of his doctrine of the role of tanks and motorized forces in modern warfare. He spent the following year (1936–37) at the center for high military studies, was in command (1937–39) of the 507th Tank Regiment, and was commander (1939–40) of the 5th Army Tank Brigade. Placed (May, 1940) at the head of the 4th Armored Division, he was given a field promotion to brigadier general on June 2, 1940. Four days later he was ordered to Paris, where he became undersecretary of state for national defense in the Reynaud cabinet. He was sent to London by Reynaud to coördinate British and French activity, and then returned to France. He went back to London after the formation of the Pétain government, and responded to Pétain's signature of the armistice with Germany by a broadcast over the London radio calling for continued resistance and the creation of Free French armed forces. The British recognized him as the Free French leader on June 27, 1940. He was condemned to death in absentia by a Vichy court, and established (Oct. 27, 1940) at Brazzaville, in French Equatorial Africa, a council for the defense of the empire which was subsequently recognized by the British as the authority in areas placing themselves under the council's control. A French national committee, with de Gaulle as president, was formed at London on Sept. 24, 1941, and received British recognition as representative of all Free French forces. He was accepted as Free French leader by certain Resistance groups in France in June, 1942, and later (November, 1942) by French trade-union forces in Great Britain. He took part in the Casablanca Conference (January, 1943) with Franklin D. Roosevelt and Winston Churchill. Following the Allied liberation of North Africa, he combined forces with General Henri Giraud, with whom he created a French committee of national liberation, of which he became president. Shortly after the Allied invasion of Normandy, he returned (June 14, 1944) to French soil, entered Paris (August, 1944), was named (November, 1945) head of the provisional government by the Constituent Assembly, and resigned this post on Jan. 21, 1946. He then withdrew from public political activity until the formation (April 1, 1947) of the Rassemblement du Peuple Français by his supporters. He thereafter urged strengthening of the French state and strongly criticized the constitution of the Fourth Republic. His published works are La Discorde chez l'ennemi (1924), Au Fil de l'épée (1932), Vers l'armée de métier (1933), and La France et son armée (1939).

Degée (dẹ.zhā), Olivier. Original name of Tousseul, Jean.

Degeer (dẹ.yār'), Baron Karl. See Geer, Baron Karl de.

Degener (dā'gẹ.nėr), Frederik Schmidt-. See Schmidt-Degener, Frederik.

Degeneration. Title of the English translation of Entartung (1893), by Max Nordau.

Deggendorf (deg'ẹn.dôrf). [Also, Deckendorf.] Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Lower Bavaria-Upper Palatinate, situated on the Danube River ab. 30 mi. NW of Passau. It has cement works, sawmills, chemical and textile industries, and markets for cattle, grain, and lumber. It is a center for excursions in the region of the Bavarian Forest, and its Church of the Holy Sepulchre (begun in 1337) has long been known as a place of pilgrimage. After the conclusion of World War II it contained one of the largest camps for displaced persons in Bavaria. 16,328 (1950).

Degkwitz (dek'vits), Rudolf. b. at Ronneburg, Thuringia, Germany, Jan. 19, 1889—. German pediatrician. He became privatdocent of pediatrics (1925) and full professor (1935) at the University of Greifswald. He is known for his studies on the prophylaxis of measles and rickets and the physical chemistry of the fat cells. Author of Die Masernprophylaxe und ihre Technik (1923), Milch (1931), and Lipoide und Ionen; eine biologische und ärztliche Studie über die physiologische Bedeutung der Zell-Lipoiden (1933); coeditor of Lehrbuch der Kinderheilkunde (1933) and Immunität, Allergie und Infektionskrankheiten (1935).

Degoutte (dẹ.göt), Jean Marie Joseph. b. at Charnay, Rhône, France, April 18, 1866; d. there, Oct. 31, 1938. French army officer, commander (1923–25) of the French forces of occupation in the Ruhr district of Germany. In 1918 he commanded the French 4th Army, with which three American divisions served as reinforcements, and was placed on a mission with King Albert of the Belgians. He became (1920) a member of the superior war council, and was commander in chief (1920–25) of the Allied army of occupation in the Rhineland.

Degrelle (dẹ.grel), Léon (Marie Joseph Ignace). b. 1906—. Belgian politician. He was graduated (LL.D.) from the University of Louvain, practiced law, and founded (1932) the journal Rex (for Christus Rex) as the organ of a movement to reanimate and inspire Christian life. The movement later became political, and followers of Degrelle became known as Rexists; the political philosophy of the party was pro-fascist. Degrelle was defeated (1937) by Van Zeeland in a contest for a seat in parliament. He was arrested (1940) when the German armies invaded Belgium, but was released after the armistice of June, 1940, joined the German army, and served on the eastern front. In 1945 he fled to Spain. Request for his extradition was at first refused; later Spain announced he had disappeared; in October, 1946, the Belgian government on this account filed a complaint against Spain before the United Nations.

De Haas (dẹ häs'), Maurice Frederick Hendrick. b. at Rotterdam, Netherlands, Dec. 12, 1832; d. Nov. 23, 1895. American marine painter. He studied in his native city and at The Hague before coming to the U.S. in 1858. He established his studio at New York and was successful from the beginning. He was accepted into the National Academy of Design in 1867, and he helped organize the American Water Color Society. His painting of Farragut Passing the Forts at New Orleans is perhaps the best-known among his works, examples of which are found in many public and private collections.

Dehan (dē'han), Richard. Pseudonym of Graves, Clotilde Inez Mary.

De Haven (dẹ hā'vẹn), Edwin Jesse. b. at Philadelphia, May 7, 1816; d. May 1, 1865. American antarctic and arctic explorer. He became a midshipman in the U.S. navy in 1829, and ten years later, with the rank of acting master, sailed with the Wilkes expedition, which spent three years exploring the Pacific and Antarctica. He won a citation for bravery in the rescue of men imperiled when one of the ships of the expedition was wrecked, and in 1841 was given the rank of lieutenant. He saw service in the Mexican War. In 1850 he was chosen leader of an expedition, arranged and financed by Henry Grinnell with the support of the U.S. government, having for its object to find and rescue Sir John Franklin, the English explorer, and his party, which had disappeared in the arctic regions. De Haven's ships were caught in the ice and drifted a thousand miles. He did not find Franklin's party, but did discover a new arctic territory which became known as Grinnell Land. Later De Haven made deep-sea soundings for the Coast Survey (1853–57), but because of failing health spent his last years ashore.

de Havilland (dẹ hav'i.lạnd), Sir Geoffrey. b. 1885—. British aeronautical engineer and airplane designer (1908 et seq.); manufacturer of De Havilland aircraft. He was awarded (1946) honorary membership in the U.S. Institute of Aeronautical Sciences.

De Helder (dẹ hel'dėr). See Den Helder.

Dehli (de'lē). See Delhi, India.

Dehmel (dā'mẹl), Richard. b. at Wendisch-Helmsdorf, Germany, Nov. 11, 1863; d. at Berlin, Feb. 8, 1920. German poet; close friend of Detlev von Liliencron. He took a doctor's degree in economics, and served for years as secretary of an insurance association. At 51 years of age he entered World War I as a volunteer. His Kriegsbuch appeared in 1919. He wrote some dramatic works (Der Mitmensch, 1895; Lucifer, 1899; Die Menschenfreunde, 1917), but he was essentially a lyricist, whose poems are concerned largely with love (Aber die Liebe, 1893; Weib und Welt, 1896; Die Verwandlungen der Venus, 1907).

Dehn (dān), Adolf Arthur. b. at Waterville, Minn., Nov. 22, 1895—. American etcher, lithographer, painter, water-colorist, and writer, best known for his lithographs and black-and-white drawings. He studied at the Minneapolis Art School and the Art Students League of New York, then traveled (1918–29) in Europe, staying for the most part at Vienna. He did mostly lithographs, drawings, and etchings until 1937, when he began to produce water colors and oil paintings. His work is represented in the Metropolitan Museum, Whitney Museum, and Brooklyn Museum at New York, the Albertina at Vienna, the Library of Congress at Washington, D.C., the Boston Museum, Honolulu Museum, British Museum, and elsewhere. He has contributed articles to The Arts, Time, Art News, Coronet, and other periodicals, and illustrations to Fortune, The New Yorker, Dial, Vogue, Masses, and others.

Dehn, Siegfried Wilhelm. b. at Altona, Germany, Feb. 25, 1799; d. at Berlin, April 12, 1858. German musicologist, librarian (1842–48) of the musical works in the royal library at Berlin; author of Theoretisch-praktische Harmonielehre (1840) and Lehre vom Kontrapunkt (1859).

De Hondt (dẹ hônt'), Pieter. Original name of Canisius, Saint Petrus.

Dehr (dār). See El Dirr.

Dehra Dun (dā'rạ dön). [Also, Dehra.] Town in the Meerut division of Uttar Pradesh (United Provinces), Union of India, NE of the city of Delhi. The surrounding region produces sugar, wheat, rice, and barley. The town is the seat of a forestry institute (founded 1914) and of a national defense academy (founded 1949). It is known for its Hindu temple, said to have been built in 1699 by Ram Rai.

Deianira (dē.yạ.nī'rạ) or Dejaneira (dej.ạ.nī'rạ). In Greek mythology, daughter of Oeneus and Althaea, sister of Meleager, and wife of Hercules. She inadvertently caused Hercules's death by giving him the blood-steeped shirt of the centaur Nessus to wear, after the latter, dying and seeking revenge on Hercules, who had shot him, had told her that she could compel the love of any one wearing it. It burned him mortally, and she killed herself for sorrow.

De imitatione Christi (dē im.i.tā.shi.ō'nē kris'tī). [Eng. trans., "Imitation of Christ."] Religious treatise commonly ascribed to Thomas à Kempis, but about which there has been much controversy. It places the rule of life in seclusion and renunciation. Other candidates have been put forward as its author, among them John Gerson, the famous chancellor of the University of Paris, and an unidentified John Gersen, abbot of Vercelli (supported by the Benedictines), whose name appears as that of the author in one manuscript. For Gerson are brought forward a number of early manuscripts and editions in France and Italy. The name of Thomas à Kempis appears on many early editions, including one c1471 which appears to be the first. A general tradition from his own times, extending over most of Europe, has led a great majority (including the Sorbonne itself) to determine the cause in his favor. It is also said that a manuscript of the treatise De imitatione bears these words at the conclusion: "Finitus et completus per manum Thomae de Kempis, 1441" and that many erasures and alterations in this manuscript give it the appearance of his original autograph.

Deimling (dīm'ling), Berthold von. b. at Karlsruhe, Germany, March 21, 1853; d. 1944. German general and politician. He crushed the uprising of the natives in the German colony of South-West Africa (1906–07), and served in World War I until 1917. After the war he became active in the Democratic Party and in pacifist movements, and was expelled from the organization of German officers. In 1924 he was one of the cofounders of the political organization Reichsbanner Schwarz-Rot-Gold, established to protect the Weimar constitution against extremists on the left and on the right.

Deimos (dī'mos). A satellite of Mars, revolving about its primary in 30 hours and 18 minutes at a distance of 14,600 miles. Its estimated diameter of five miles makes it the smallest known satellite in the solar system. It, along with Phobos, Mars's other satellite, was discovered by Professor Asaph Hall, of the U.S. Naval Observatory at Washington, in August, 1877.

Deinocrates (dī.nok'rạ.tēz). See Dinocrates.

Deïoces (dē'yō.sēz). According to Herodotus, the founder (reigned c709–656 B.C.) of the Median dynasty, and the builder of Ecbatana. In fact, he was probably a local chieftain named Dayukku whose grandson Cyaxares founded the Median empire in 625 B.C. and whose name was included in the list of Median kings as a matter of policy.

Deïotarus (dē.yot'ạ.rus). d. c40 B.C. Tetrarch and king of Galatia, and an ally of the Romans. He was defended before Caesar by Cicero in 45 B.C. on a charge of plotting to assassinate Caesar. Throughout the Roman struggle for power he kept his throne, siding successively with Pompey, Caesar, Brutus, and the triumvirate of Augustus, Antony, and Lepidus.

Deïphobus (dē.if'ō.bus). In Greek legend, a Trojan warrior, son of Priam and Hecuba. He appears in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Deipnosophists (dīp.nos'ō.fists). Set of imaginary dialogues by Athenaeus, in which 29 dinner guests spend several days recounting tales and anecdotes. In this way the author manages to present many stories and quotations from Greek literature. Among the imaginary guests are included some of the most eminent men of the day, for example Masurius Sabinus, Ulpian, and Galen.

Deir (dir), Book of. See Deer, Book of.

Deira (dē'i.rạ). In the 6th century A.D., an Anglian kingdom in what is now Yorkshire, England, extending from the Humber to the Tees. It was united (c600) with Bernicia to form the kingdom of Northumbria, and was later created an earldom.

Deirdre (dir'drę, der'drā). Heroine of the greatest love story of old Irish legendry. She was the daughter of Felim, in some versions of the story called a harper, in others a story-teller to Conchobar, king of Ulster about the beginning of the Christian era. By some accounts it was while Conchobar was feasting at Felim's house that a girl-baby was born to Felim's wife, of whom the druid Cathbad prophesied that she would be the most beautiful of the women of Eire but would cause bloodshed and death. Conchobar said that he would avert that doom by marrying Deirdre when she should be of age for it, and she was entrusted to the nurse Lavarcham who brought her up in a house in a secluded woods, where she saw no one but a few servants. One day when she was in her fifteenth year she saw a raven drinking the blood of a calf that had been slain on the snow, and she told Lavarcham that the man she would love would not be an old man like Conchobar, but one who had skin like the snow, cheeks like the blood, and hair like the raven. The nurse said there was such a man, Naoise, son of Usnach, and she yielded to Deirdre's pleas to bring him to her. Others tell the story differently to this point, but all agree that in the end Naoise and his brothers Ainle and Ardan took Deirdre to Alba, or Scotland, where they lived for some years, until Conchobar persuaded the famous warrior Fergus to go to Alba and invite the fugitives to return, with a promise of the king's friendship. Deirdre foresaw tragedy, but the three brothers trusted Fergus and the king. When they came to Eire, Fergus was detained by a ruse of Conchobar's while the three sons of Usnach, with Deirdre, went to the Ulster capital. There Conchobar set his minions upon the three brothers, who after an epic battle were slain. Some say that Deirdre died at that time after lamenting the deaths of Naoise, Ainle, and Ardan; another story is that she had to live with Conchobar for a year but then killed herself. Fergus and many others deserted Conchobar because of his treachery, and by joining Queen Medb of Connacht in the war of the Tain Bo Cuailgne, ensured the fulfillment of the druid Cathbad's prophecy that because of this crime, Emain Macha (the capital of Ulster) would be destroyed and no son of Conchobar would ever rule in Ulster.

Deirdre. Adaptation by James Stephens of the tragic story of Deirdre, the lovely heroine of old Irish legends, published in 1923.

Deirdre of the Sorrows. Tragedy by John Millington Synge, published in 1910, a year after his death. It is one of the many retellings by other authors, both Irish and non-Irish, of the story of the beautiful but tragic maid of Irish legend. Although left in an unfinished state, the play is regarded as Synge's greatest work.

Deir-el-Bahri (dār.el.bä'rē). [Also: Deir-el-Bahari, Der-el-Bahri.] Locality W of Thebes, Egypt, near the W bank of the Nile, famous for its ruins. Among the ruins is a temple built by Hatshepsut, sister of Thutmose II and III (c1500 B.C.). The enclosure is preceded by a passage 1,600 ft. long between lines of sphinxes, at the end of which rose two obelisks. The inner court is entered by a fine granite pylon, and behind it is the temple itself. The plan is peculiar, as the buildings extend up the slope of the mountain in stages connected by flights of steps. The masonry is of a beautiful fine limestone, and the sculptures are of great importance, representing especially sacrificial scenes, military triumphs and captives, and payment of tribute. A number of the inner chambers and passages are covered with pseudovaulting of stones corbeled out from the walls. Here, in 1881, Maspero made a remarkable archaeological discovery of a number of mummies of the Pharaohs, including those of some of the most famous of Egyptian kings, among them Thutmose II and Thutmose III, the conqueror of Assyria, Seti I, and the great Rameses II, the "Pharaoh of the Oppression." These mummies are in remarkable preservation, and supply a not inadequate picture of the features of the sovereigns in life. The discovery was made through a quarrel of some Arabs, who had found a pit near the Sheikh Abd-el-Gournah hill, and were surreptitiously removing the contents. The mummies had evidently been brought from the royal tombs, which lie at no great distance, and placed in this pit for safety during some threatened danger. They are now preserved in the Gizeh Museum, Cairo. A second important discovery of concealed mummies was made in 1891.

Deism, "Bible" of. See under Tindal, Matthew.

Deity, The. Short poem (1825) by John Greenleaf Whittier. His first work, it was published in the Newburyport (Mass.) Free Press, edited by William Lloyd Garrison. A religious poem, as the title indicates, it belongs in tone and spirit with his Laus Deo! and The Eternal Goodness. In editions of the Complete Works, it is grouped, usually at the end of the volume, with "Early and Uncollected Verses."

Deitzler (dēts'lėr), George Washington. b. at Pine Grove, Pa., Nov. 30, 1826; d. in Arizona, April 10, 1884. American antislavery leader. He emigrated (1855) to Lawrence, Kan., where he joined the free-state movement, being imprisoned for treason at Lecompton after the so-called Wakarusa war (1855). Freed in 1856, he was a member (1857–58) of the free-state territorial legislature, a member of the Kansas senate under the Topeka constitution, mayor (1860) of Lawrence, and treasurer (1866) of the University of Kansas. During the Civil War, he took part in the battle of Wilson's Creek (1861) as a colonel and in Price's Raid (1864) as a major general.

Dej (dāzh). [Also: Dées, Dés.] Town in NW Rumania, in the province of Transylvania, situated on the Someş River, ab. 32 mi. NE of Cluj: railroad junction. The salt mine of Ocna Dejului is in the vicinity. 14,681 (1948).

Dejaneira (dej.ạ.nī'rạ). See Deianira.

Déjazet (dā.zhà.ze), Pauline Virginie. b. at Paris, Aug. 30, 1798; d. there, Dec. 1, 1875. French actress. She went on the stage in early childhood, and was known as a comedienne. She appeared for the last time on Oct. 2, 1875.

Dejean (dẹ.zhäṅ), Pierre François Aimé Auguste, Comte. b. at Amiens, France, Aug. 10, 1780; d. at Paris, March 18, 1845. French soldier and entomologist. He served with distinction at Ligny and Waterloo, and was appointed general in 1810, aide-de-camp to Napoleon in 1813, and general of division in 1814. He was the author of a catalogue of his collection of insects (1821–33) and Histoire générale des coléoptères (1825–39).

Dejection: An Ode. Poem (1802) by Samuel Taylor Coleridge. It was published in The Morning Post on Wordsworth's wedding day (Oct. 4, 1802) and was, for some strange reason which is still unknown, written for and given to Wordsworth as a wedding present. In its original version, the poet is several times addressed by name, "William." Later, after the two poets had a misunderstanding, Coleridge changed "William" to "Edmund," to "Otway," and to "Lady" and "Dear Lady." Although the poem is regarded as one of his two "noble odes" (France being the other), critics also regard it as the beginning of the end of his supreme poetic mastery. Coleridge himself, at the end of the second stanza, expresses regret that now he can merely "see" beauty, but not "feel" it.

Déjerine (dāzh.rēn), Augusta. [Maiden name, Klumpke.] b. at San Francisco, Oct. 15, 1859; d. at Paris, Nov. 5, 1927. French specialist in nerve pathology; wife of Joseph Jules Déjerine. She studied at Lausanne and Paris as a pupil of E. F. A. Vulpian. She described lead palsies, paralysis of the brachial plexus (1885), named Klumpke's paralysis, and made studies of the pathological anatomy of the nervous system. She was a coworker of her husband for 30 years and after his death founded a neurological laboratory and a museum at the medical faculty of the University of Paris. Author of Des polynévrites en général et des paralysies et atrophies saturnines en particulier (1889), and, with her husband, of Anatomie des centres nerveux (1895–1901).

Déjerine, Joseph Jules. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Aug. 3, 1849; d. at Paris, Feb. 26, 1917. French neurologist; husband of Augusta Déjerine. A pupil of E. F. A. Vulpian, he became (1879) chef de clinique at the Charité at Paris, and three years later was named médecin des hôpitaux. After heading the clinic at the Bicêtre, he became (1901) professor of clinical medicine at the University of Paris, and director (1911) of the clinic at the Salpêtrière. He made studies of tabes and hereditary muscular atrophy (1903), described (with Jules Sottas, 1893) progressive hypertrophic interstitial neuropathy, described (with G. Roussy, 1906) thalamic hyperesthetic anesthesia (called the Déjerine-Roussy syndrome), and described (with L. T. J. Landouzy, 1886) facioscapulohumeral atrophy (called Landouzy-Déjerine atrophy or type). He wrote on spinal radiculitis, interstitial neuritis (1890), lesions on the pons and medulla, on aphasia, encephalitis, poliomyelitis, and syringomyelia. Author of Recherches sur les lésions du système nerveux dans la paralysie ascendante aiguë (1879), L'Héré dans les maladies du système nerveux (1886), Sur l'atrophie musculaire des ataxiques (1889), Anatomie des centres nerveux (in collaboration with his wife, 1895–1901), Cahier de feuilles d'autopsies pour l'étude des lésions du névraxe (1895; Eng. trans., 1911), L'Aphasie motrice et sa localisation corticale (1907), Clinique des maladies du système nerveux (1911), The Psychoneuroses and their Treatment by Psychotherapy (1913), and Sémiologie des affections du système nerveux (1914).

De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353 (1937) (dẹ jong'; or'ẹ.gon). Unanimous decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which declared unconstitutional a conviction under the Oregon criminal syndicalist law on the ground that it violated the due process clause of the 14th Amendment. The offense charged against the appellant was based upon his attendance at a Communist Party meeting. Speaking for the court, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes asserted that "mere participation in a peaceable assembly and a lawful public discussion" could not be made "the basis for a criminal charge."

De Kaap (dẹ käp'). See under Barberton, Union of South Africa.

De Kalb (dẹ kalb'). City in N Illinois, in De Kalb County, ab. 58 mi. W of Chicago: a center for the manufacture of barbed wire. It is the seat of the Northern Illinois State Teachers College. 11,708 (1950).

De Kay (dẹ kā'), Charles. b. at Washington, D.C., July 25, 1848; d. May 23, 1935. American author, poet, and critic. He was graduated from Yale in 1868, was literary and art critic of the New York Times, and was U.S. consul general at Berlin (1894–97). He was the originator and one of the founders of the National Sculpture Society (1892) and of the National Arts Club (1898). Among his publications in book form are Hesperus, and other Poems (1880), The Vision of Nimrod (1881), The Vision of Esther (1882), The Love Poems of Louis Barnaval (1883), and Bird Gods (1898).

Dekhan or Dekkan (dek'ạn). See Deccan.

Dekker (dek'ėr), Eduard Douwes. [Pseudonym, Multatuli.] b. at Amsterdam, March 2, 1820; d. at Nieder-Ingelheim, Netherlands, Feb. 19, 1887. Dutch writer and colonial reformer. His best-known work is his autobiographical novel Max Havelaar (1860), which dramatically recounted his unsuccessful efforts as assistant resident in West Java to protect the people under his care against the extortions of Javanese and European officials, and against the harsh exactions of the Culture System, a method applied to force the production of coffee and other export crops. This book, amplified by others, became a propaganda instrument of liberal reformers in the Netherlands and, in translation, still serves anti-imperialist agitation in different parts of the world.

Dekker, Jeremias de. [Also, Decker.] b. at Dordrecht, Netherlands, c1610; d. at Amsterdam, 1666. Dutch poet, author of the satire Lof der Geldzucht (Praise of Avarice). His collected works were published in 1726.

Dekker, Thomas. [Also, Decker.] b. at London, c1572; d. probably at London, after 1632. English dramatist, at various times a collaborator of Middleton, Webster, Massinger, Rowley, and others. Little is definitely known of his life. He is first noticed in Henslowe's diary in 1598; in February of that year he was imprisoned in the Counter. Between 1598 and 1602 he wrote eight plays alone and many others in collaboration. In 1601 he wrote Satiromastix, or the Untrussing of the Humorous Poet (published 1602), a satirical dramatic attack on Ben Jonson, with whom a quarrel had broken out before 1600 when Jonson reflected upon him in Every Man out of his Humour and Cynthia's Revels. In 1601 Jonson attacked Dekker and Marston vigorously in The Poetaster. Satiromastix was Dekker's retort, parodying and ridiculing Jonson's style. From 1613 to 1619 he seems to have been imprisoned in the King's Bench prison. He wrote many pamphlets ridiculing the follies of the times, and in the plays written with others he excelled in good sheep scenes and those laid in inns, taverns, and suburban pleasure-houses. He also had a poetical and luxuriant fancy. He wrote alone The Gentle Croft (produced in 1599; published anonymously in 1600 as The Shoemaker's Holiday, or the Gentle Craft), Bear a Brain (1599), Old Fortunatus (1600); and, with Chettle, Troilus and Cressida, Agamemnon, and The Stepmother's Tragedy (1599); with Chettle and Haughton, Patient Grissel (1603); with Day and Haughton, The Spanish Moor's Tragedy (1600). With Webster and others he joined in 1602 in a play in two parts on Lady Jane Grey, which probably appeared as The Famous History of Sir Thomas Wyat in 1607. In 1603 he published an account of the plague at London, The Wonderful Year. The first part of The Honest Whore he wrote in 1604, perhaps with Middleton. The earliest edition known of the second part is dated 1630, and there is nothing to show that Middleton was concerned in it. The Seven Deadly Sins of London, a pamphlet, he published in 1606, and News from Hell, a moralizing tract, in the same year. He also wrote Westward Ho! (before 1605) and Northward Ho! (1607), both with Webster, The Bellman of London (1608, a pamphlet on crimes and criminals), Lanthorne and Candlelight (the second part of The Bellman, 1608), The Gull's Hornbook (1609, a pamphlet on how not to behave), The Roaring Girl, with Middleton (1611), If it be not Good the Devil is in it (1612), The Virgin Martyr, with Massinger (c1620), and Match Me in London (published 1631). The Sun's Darling, with John Ford, was published in 1656 (the lyrical portions are thought to be Dekker's); The Witch of Edmonton, with Ford and Rowley, probably written in c1621, published in 1658; and in 1637 Dekker republished Lanthorne and Candlelight as English Villainies, the last of his numerous works; it is thought that he died shortly after its publication.

De Koven (dē kō′vən), (Henry Louis) Reginald. b. at Middleton, Conn., April 3, 1859; d. at Chicago, Jan. 16, 1920. American composer of songs and of light and grand operas, music critic, and conductor. He was taken to England as a boy, and was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, receiving his degree in 1879. He received his musical education in Germany, Italy, Paris, and Vienna. His light operas are The Begum (1887), Don Quixote (1889), Robin Hood (1890), first produced at Chicago by the Bostonians, a company that sang it with success thousands of times for over 20 years, The Fencing Master (1892), The Algerian (1893), The Tzigane (1895), The Mandarin (1896), The Paris Doll and The Highwayman (both 1897), The Three Dragoons (1899), Red Feather (1903), Happy Land (1905), The Student King (1906), The Golden Butterfly (1907), The Beauty Spot (1909), The Wedding Trip (1911), and Her Little Highness (1913). For his two grand operas he went to English and American themes, writing The Canterbury Tales (1917) in Switzerland, during the first year of World War I, and Rip Van Winkle (1920), in both cases the book being written by Percy Mackaye. The great success of his last opera was marred, unfortunately, by its association with his sudden death. Rip Van Winkle was first performed at Chicago, at the Civic Opera House, on Jan. 2; on Jan. 16, for its third performance, the house was completely sold out, and a supper party was being given in De Koven's honor; at that party he was stricken with apoplexy and died in ten minutes. He wrote over 120 songs, of which "O Promise Me," from Robin Hood, and his setting for Kipling's Recessional are his best known, and several pieces for piano. In 1902 he founded, and for three seasons conducted, the Washington (D.C.) Philharmonic Orchestra. His critical standards are reflected by his contributions to the Chicago Evening Post, the New York World (from 1892–97, and 1907–12), and the New York Journal.

de Kruif (dē krīf′), Paul. b. at Zeeland, Mich., March 2, 1890—. American bacteriologist and writer. He has been bacteriologist at Michigan (1912–17) and at the Rockefeller Institute (1920–22), reporter (1925 et seq.) for the Curtis Publishing Company, and a contributing editor to the Reader's Digest. Among his books are Our Medicine Men (1922), Microbe Hunters (1926), Hunger Fighters (1928), Seven Iron Men (1929), Men Against Death (1932), Why Keep Them Alive? (1936), The Fight for Life (1939), Health is Wealth (1940), Kaiser Wakes the Doctors (1943), The Male Hormone (1945), and Life Among the Doctors (1949); he worked with Sinclair Lewis on Arrowsmith (1925).

De La Beche (del.ạ.besh′, del′ạ.besh), Sir Henry Thomas. See Beche, Sir Henry Thomas de la.

Delaborde (dẹ.lȧ.bôrd), Henri Vicomte. b. at Rennes, France, May 2, 1811; d. at Paris, May 18, 1899. French painter and writer on the history of art. He was a pupil of Paul Delaroche. His principal works in painting are La Conversion de Saint-Augustine and La Mort de Sainte Monique (1838). As a historian he published numerous and notable works, especially on the Renaissance. He was collaborator with Charles Blanc on the Histoire des peintres de toutes les écoles. He wrote also La Gravure (1882), La Gravure en Italie (1883), and L'Académie des Beaux-Arts . . . (1891).

Delacroix (dẹ.lȧ.krwä), Ferdinand Victor Eugène. b. at Charenton-St.-Maurice, near Paris, April 26, 1799; d. at Paris, Aug. 13, 1863. French painter, a leader of the romantic school, known for his brilliant draftsmanship and dramatic compositions, chiefly on historical subjects. Among his works are Dante et Virgile (1822), Massacre de Chios (1824), Femmes d'Alger (1834), and Prise de Constantinople (1841).

de Lacy (dẹ lā′si). See Lacy.

Delafield (del′ạ.fēld), Edward. b. May 7, 1794; d. Feb. 13, 1875. American ophthalmologist and surgeon. He received his M.D. (1816) from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at New York, did clinical work (1817) abroad, and returned to New York, where he worked in obstetrics and general surgery, also devoting himself to eye diseases. One of the first ophthamologists in the U.S., he established (1820) the New York Eye Infirmary, was cofounder and first president (1864) of the American Ophthamological Society, and served as professor of obstetrics and diseases of women and children (1825–38) and as president (1858–75) of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. He was the author of An Inaugural Dissertation on Pulmonary Consumption (1816) and editor of an American edition (1825) of Benjamin Travers's Synopsis of the Diseases of the Eye and Their Treatment.

Delafield, E. M. Pseudonym of Dashwood, Elizabeth Monica.

Delage (dẹ.lȧzh), Yves. b. at Avignon, France, May 13, 1854; d. at Paris, Oct. 8, 1920. French zoölogist. He was appointed (1866) professor of zoölogy at the Sorbonne and became (1901) director of the marine biology laboratory at Roscoff, Finistère. One of the pioneers in the scientific investigation of reproduction, hybridism, and heredity, he wrote studies of parthenogenesis, sponge culture, evolution, and the commercial utilization of seaweeds. His books include L'Hérédité et les grands problèmes de la biologie générale (1895) and La Structure du protoplasme (1895).

Delagoa Bay (del.ạ.gō′ạ). [Portuguese, Bahia Delagoa.] Inlet of the Indian Ocean, on the SE coast of Africa, in Mozambique. It was discovered by the Portuguese toward the end of the 15th century. In 1823 the natives ceded it to the English Captain W. F. W. Owen, who raised the British flag there; but by arbitration of President MacMahon of France it was awarded (1875) to Portugal. It is the terminus of a railway connecting the Transvaal, Union of South Africa, with the seaboard. The important port of Lourenço Marques is situated at the head of the inlet.

Delagoa Bay Railway. Railroad in S Africa, connecting Komatipoort on the Transvaal frontier with the port of Lourenço Marques, Mozambique. At Komatipoort the line connects with the South Africa railways system, and direct contact is made with Pretoria (347 mi.) and Johannesburg (365 mi.). It was built in the 1890's and has been the instrument in making Lourenço Marques the port that it is today. Length of line from sea to Transvaal frontier, 55 mi.

Delagrange (dẹ.lȧ.grängzh), Léon. b. at Orléans, France, March 13, 1872; d. at Pau, France, Jan. 4, 1910. French sculptor and aviator. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris, and executed works of sculpture of recognized merit, including The Florentine Page, A Templar, Love and Youth, Misere're, and A Huguenot. Becoming interested in aviation, he made many notable flights (1907–09) in France, Italy, and England, establishing a record of 124 miles at the rate of 49 miles per hour in a Blériot monoplane at Juvisy, France, on Dec. 30, 1909. He was killed as the result of an accident to his monoplane during experiments at Pau.

Delaharpe (dẹ.lȧ.ärp), Jean François. Original name of Laharpe or La Harpe, Jean François de.

Delaherche (dẹ.lȧ.ersh), Félix Auguste. b. 1857—. French ceramist. A creative artist-craftsman in the old tradition, he works without assistants or employees, firing his kiln in the village of La Chapelle-aux-Pots only once a year, and preserving only those pieces which completely satisfy him. Considered by many to be the greatest French potter of his time, he is an officer of the Legion of Honor.

De la Mare (dẹ lȧ mãr', del'ą.mãr), Walter (John). b. at Charlton, Kent, England, April 25, 1873—. English poet, novelist, short-story writer, and dramatist; son of James Edward Delamare, a Huguenot church warden. Through his mother, Lucy Sophia Browning, he is related to the Victorian poet. He was educated at Saint Paul's Cathedral Choir School, at London (founded by John Colet), but he did not go to college. From 1890 to 1908 he was a bookkeeper in the London office of an oil company, dealing with facts and figures, a strange occupation for one with his poetic fancy. In the latter year, at the suggestion of Sir Henry Newbolt, he was awarded a small grant and an annual pension by the Asquith ministry of a hundred pounds on the Civil List. He began his writing career with contributions to the Sketch and the Cornhill Magazine. In his early days he used "Walter Ramal," an inversion of his own name, as a pseudonym. His works are Songs of Childhood (1902), The Return (1910), The Listeners and A Child's Day (both 1912), Peacock Pie (1913), Motley (1918), Flora (1919), The Veil (1921), Down-adown-Derry (1922), Ding Dong Bell (1924), Stuff and Nonsense (1927), The Fleeting (1933), A Forward Child (1934), Early One Morning (1935), The Wind Blows Over (1936), This Year, Next Year (1937), all poetry, and various volumes called Poems (1906) and Collected Poems (1920, 1935, 1941). He has also edited two anthologies of English poetry, Come Hither (1923) and Behold, This Dreamer! (1939). His prose includes Henry Brocken (1904), a novel, Memoirs of a Midget (1921), also a novel, which won the highly-valued James Tait Black memorial prize, several collections of short stories, The Riddle (1923), Broomsticks (1925), The Connoisseur (1926), On the Edge (1930), and The Lord Fish (1933). For children, he has written Told Again (1927), new versions of old fairy tales, and Stories from the Bible. Desert Islands and Robinson Crusoe (1930) is an essay in symbolism, and Crossings (1921) is a play. His own poetry is represented in anthologies by The Listeners, An Epitaph, The Truants, Old Susan, The Old Men, Some One ("Some one came knocking"), At the Keyhole, The Mocking Fairy, Sam, Berries, All But Blind, Summer Evening, There Blooms No Bud in May, The Scarecrow, The Ghost, Silver, Nod, Shadow, Unregarding, Remembrance, The Three Cherry Trees, Miss Loo, Sam's Three Wishes, or Life's Little Whirligig, The Song of Shadows, The Dreamer, The Scribe ("What lovely things Thy hand hath made"), The Veil, The Quiet Enemy, The Holly, and Lucy, and by many other selections.

Delamater (dẹ.lam'ą.tẹr), Cornelius Henry. b. at Rhinebeck, N.Y., Aug. 30, 1821; d. Feb. 7, 1889. American mechanical engineer. He was co-owner of the Phoenix Foundry (after 1856 known as the Delamater Iron Works), which built, from designs by John Eriesson, America's first iron boats and steam fire engines and the engines for the Union government's ironclad Monitor (1862). The foundry was also notable for its production of propeller steamers, air compressors, the 36-inch cast-iron pipe for the Croton Aqueduct, and 30 gunboats (1869) for the Spanish government, and for the construction (1881) of John P. Holland's first successful submarine torpedo-boat.

Delambre (dẹ.länbr), Jean Baptiste Joseph. b. at Amiens, France, Sept. 19, 1749; d. at Paris, Aug. 19, 1822. French astronomer, appointed permanent secretary of the French Institute in 1803, and professor at the Collège de France in 1807. His works include Méthodes analytiques pour la détermination d'un arc du méridien (1799), Base du système métrique décimal, ou mesure de l'arc du méridien compris entre les parallèles de Dunkerque et Barcelone, executée en 1792 et années suivantes par MM. Méchain et Delambre (1806–10), and Histoire de l'astronomie (1817–27).

Delamere (del'ą.mir) or de la Mer (del'ą.mär), 1st Baron. Title of Booth, George.

Delamere or de la Mer, 2nd Baron. A title of Booth, Henry.

De Lancey (dẹ lan'si), Étienne (or Stephen). b. at Caen, France, 1663; d. 1741. Merchant at New York in colonial times. A Huguenot who fled from France following the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, he became a successful merchant at New York, and one of that rising city's wealthiest men. He married into the influential Van Cortlandt family, and served for many years in the colonial assembly. His wealth and standing in the community were evidenced by the town house he built, which later became, and still is, known as Fraunce's Tavern, and is one of the most noted of colonial structures still standing in the metropolis.

De Lancey, James. b. Nov. 27, 1703; d. July 30, 1760. English colonial politician in America, chief justice and lieutenant governor of New York; brother of Oliver De Lancey. He attended Corpus Christi College, read law at the Inner Temple, was admitted to the bar after his return to New York in 1725, and became (1729) a member of the Council. He was appointed (1731) second judge of the supreme court, was promoted (1733) to chief justice, and in that capacity sat at the trial of Peter Zenger. In 1753 he became lieutenant governor of the province of New York, continuing while in that position to maintain and build his already formidable political power. He presided over the Albany Convention (1754) and was present at the conference of governors (1755) with General Braddock at Alexandria, Va.

De Lancey, James. b. at New York, 1732; d. at Bath, England, 1800. Colonial politician, sportsman, and Loyalist; son of James De Lancey (1703–60). He attended Eton and Cambridge, served in the French and Indian Wars and, upon the death of his father in 1760, inherited the elder De Lancey's landowning and political responsibilities. In 1761 he lost his political influence to the Livingston party, but regained it in 1768 and 1769, emerging as a conservative opponent of British colonial policies. But he was opposed to a revolutionary program, casting his vote against the Assembly resolution which sought to approve the proceedings of the Continental Congress. As a member of the provincial aristocracy educated in England, he established soon after his return to the colonies one of the finest stables of running horses in America. His stud stable produced most of the leading American race horses up to the mid-19th century, and from it also came the horse from which the Morgan breed is descended. He sold out his stable holdings in 1775 and went to England. A Loyalist, he was named in the Confiscation Act of 1777 and in the Act of Attainder of 1779. After the Revolution he received somewhat more than half of the 284,000 dollars claimed by him as compensation, although the sale of his forfeited estates, on the site of the present-day lower East Side in New York, brought 234,000 dollars.

De Lancey, James. b. at New York, 1746; d. in Nova Scotia, May 2, 1804. Colonial politician at New York and Loyalist leader during the American Revolution; grandson of Étienne (or Stephen) De Lancey (1663–1746), and cousin of James De Lancey (1732–1800). He was a leader of the faction sometimes called "the De Lancey Party" in the politics of the colony of New York, and represented the borough of Westchester in the colonial Assembly from 1750 to 1768. During the Revolutionary War he commanded, under Governor Tryon's commission, a band of men whose depredations against patriots of the "Neutral Ground" north of Manhattan Island, being largely of the nature of cattle-stealing, won them the name of "cowboys," while De Lancey was sometimes called "the Outlaw of the Bronx." He was proscribed by an act of the New York state legislature in 1779, and fled to Nova Scotia in 1782. There he became a member of the Nova Scotia Assembly, and in 1794 was appointed to the Council.

De Lancey, Oliver. b. at New York, Sept. 16, 1718; d. at Beverley, England, Oct. 27, 1785. Politician in colonial New York, Loyalist leader during the American Revolution, and British army officer; son of Étienne (or Stephen) De Lancey (1663–1741), brother of James De Lancey (1703–60), and uncle of James De Lancey (1746–1804). A successful merchant and a leader of the De Lancey faction in the politics of the colony, Oliver De Lancey often acted arbitrarily and spoke violently, and persons whom he affronted or imposed upon were at a disadvantage because, his brother being chief justice of the colony, lawyers were reluctant to take cases against him. He served as an alderman of the city and as a member of the colonial Assembly, and early in the Revolutionary War he organized a force of approximately 1,500 Loyalists, some of whom operated on Long Island while others joined the British army in the South. Popular feeling toward him was evidenced by the sacking of his mansion in one of the rural districts of Manhattan Island, in 1777, and in 1779 he was attainted by the state legislature, and his property was confiscated. He fled to England, where he passed the rest of his life.

De Land (dē land'). City in Florida, county seat of Volusia County, SE of Jacksonville in a citrus-producing region. It is the seat of John B. Stetson University. 8,652 (1950).

Deland (dē.land'), Margaret. [Full name, Margaretta Wade Deland; maiden name, Campbell.] b. at Allegheny, Pa., Feb. 23, 1857; d. Jan. 13, 1945. American writer. Among her works are The Old Garden and other Verses (1886), John Ward, Preacher (1888), Mr. Tommy Dove (1893), Philip and his Wife (1894), Old Chester Tales (1898), Dr. Lavender's People (1903), The Common Way (1904), The Awakening of Helena Richie (1906), R. J.'s Mother and Some Other People (1908), The Iron Woman (1911), Around Old Chester (1915), The Rising Tide (1916), The Vehement Flame (1922), New Friends in Old Chester (1924), If This Be I (1935), and Golden Yesterdays (1941).

Delane (dē.lān'), John Thadeus. b. at London, Oct. 11, 1817; d. Nov. 22, 1879. English journalist; son of William Frederick Augustus Delane (1793–1857). He was editor (1841–77) of the London Times.

Delane, William Frederick Augustus. b. c1793; d. July 29, 1857. English journalist; manager of the London Times.

Delano (del'ą.nō). City in S California, in Kern County, NW of Bakersfield, in a farm and orchard region. 8,717 (1950).

Delano, Columbus. b. at Shoreham, Vt., June 5, 1809; d. Oct. 23, 1896. American congressman (1845–47, 1865–69) from Ohio and U.S. secretary of the interior (1870–75); at various times lawyer, banker, and sheep raiser. He was appointed (1869) U.S. commissioner of internal revenue. During his service as secretary of the interior, charges of fraud were made against the Bureau of Indian Affairs; although an investigating committee found evidence of incompetence, no charges were made against the major officials, but Delano resigned (1875).

Delano, Jane Arminda. b. at Townsend, N.Y., March 12, 1862; d. April 15, 1919. American nurse. She was director (1902–06) of the Bellevue Hospital School of Nursing at New York (from which she had graduated in 1884), chairman (1909 et seq.) of the National Committee of Red Cross nurses, superintendent (1909–11) of the Army Nurse Corps, president (1909–12) of the American Nurses' Association, and director (1918–19) of the Department of Nursing, American Red Cross. Author, with Isabel McIsaacs, of American Red Cross Textbook on Elementary Hygiene and Home Care of the Sick (1913).

Delany (dē.lā'ni), Martin Robinson. b. at Charles Town, Va. (now in W.Va.), May 6, 1812; d. at Xenia, Ohio, Jan. 24, 1885. American Negro leader, physician, and army officer. He was the son of free Negroes, but persecution caused the family to move to Pennsylvania in 1822, and he received his education at a Negro school at Pittsburgh. In 1836 he charted his course to become a physician, but was unable to continue his medical studies at that time, and only in 1849 was admitted to Harvard as a medical student, after being rejected by educational institutions in Pennsylvania and in New York. Meanwhile he turned journalist, beginning in 1843 the publication of a paper called Mystery, which attracted favorable attention, and in 1847 becoming associated with Frederick Douglass in issuing the North Star. He was active in work for the betterment of the lot of the Negro people, and in 1852 published his thoughtful book, Condition, Elevation, Emigration, and Destiny of the Colored People of the United States, Politically Considered. In this he emphasized practical problems of employment and living, and he also became an advocate of a return of the Negroes to Africa. In the same year (1854) in which he displayed heroism serving the victims of a cholera outbreak at Pittsburgh, he was instrumental in bringing about the first National Emigration Convention, as a result of which he was appointed to lead an expedition to the Niger valley of Africa, to explore the possibilities of such a movement. During the Civil War he was a physician with the Union army, and was given the rank of major, being the first Negro to rise so high in the U.S. army. In the Reconstruction years he was attached to the Freedman's Bureau, served as a judge in Charleston, S.C., fought vigorously against political corruption, but was defeated when he stood for election as lieutenant governor of that state.

Delany, Mary. [Maiden name, Granville.] b. at Coulston, Wiltshire, England, May 14, 1700; d. at Windsor, England, April 15, 1788. English author, friend and correspondent of Swift and patron of Fanny Burney; wife of Patrick Delany. She was the friend of the duchess of Portland, and was called his "dearest Mrs. Delany" by George III. He gave her a house in Windsor, and a pension of 300 pounds a year. She presented to the queen some of the "paper mosaic" for which she was famous, and became a great favorite with the royal family. She left six volumes of autobiography and letters, which contain much interesting gossip of the society of the time.

Delany, Patrick. b. in Ireland, c1685; d. at Bath, England, May 6, 1768. Irish preacher, dean of Down, in Ireland; husband of Mary Delany. He is noted as having been the intimate friend of Swift. In 1757 he began to publish a paper called the Humanist, advocating the prevention of cruelty to animals. He wrote Reflections on Polygamy (1738), The Life and Reign of David, King of Israel (1740–42), A Humble Apology for Christian Orthodozy (1761), and others.

de la Pasture (dē.lap'ą.tėr), Mrs. Henry. See Lady Clifford.

de la Pole (del.ą.pōl'), William. See Pole, William de la.

Delaporte (dē.là.pôrt), Louis Joseph. b. at St.-Hilaire-du-Harcouet, France, 1874—. French Orientalist. He served as professor (1921 et seq.) at the Institut Catholique de Paris, and was the author of La Mésopotamie, les civilisations Babylonienne et Assyrienne (Mesopotamia, and the Babylonian and Assyrian Civilizations, 1923).

De La Rey (dē là rī'), Jacobus Hercules. [Also: Delarey; called Oom Koos.] b. in the Orange Free State, South Africa, Oct. 22, 1847; d. Sept. 14, 1914. Boer general of French Huguenot descent. In 1893 he was elected member for the Lichtenburg district of the Transvaal in the Volksraad, and was a strong adherent of Joubert. He was one of the few members opposed to a rupture with England and favored a policy of conciliation, but at the outbreak of hostilities in 1899 advocated an aggressive military policy. He was elected to the command of the Lichtenburg burghers, who became part of Cronje's western column, and secured the first victory of the war at Kraaipan (Oct. 12–13, 1899). In 1902 he succeeded in capturing Lord Methuen, together with a number of British troops. He was a member of the Boer commission which arranged the terms of submission, and afterward one of a deputation which visited Europe and the U.S. to raise funds for the assistance of their countrymen.

de la Roche (dē là rôsh'), Mazo. b. at Toronto, 1885—. Canadian novelist. She is the author of a series of books revolving around the mythical Whiteoak family, including Jalna (1927) which was awarded the 10,000-dollar Atlantic Monthly prize, Whiteoaks of Jalna (1929), which was dramatized in 1936, The Master of Jalna (1933), Young Renny (1935), and Whiteoak Harvest (1936), and the volumes of short stories The Sacred Bullock (1939), Whiteoak Heritage (1940), The Building of Jalna (1944), and Renny's Daughter (1951); and of Explorers of the Dawn (1922), Possession (1923), Portrait of a Dog (1930), Growth of a Man (1938), and A History of the Port of Quebec (1944).

Delaroche (dē.là.rosh), Paul. [Full name, Hippolyte, Paul Delaroche.] b. at Paris, July 17, 1797; d. there, Nov. 4, 1856. French historical and portrait painter. He began by studying landscape under Watelet, which he gave up for history after entering the studio of Baron Gros. He first attracted attention by his picture Joash Saved from Death by Jehoshabeth (1822). He received the gold medal in 1824, became knight of the Legion of Honor in 1828, officer in 1834, member of the French Institute in 1832, and professor at the French Academy in 1833. The following year he went to Italy, and on his return painted the famous hemicycle of the École des Beaux-Arts. At the time of his second visit in July, 1844, he was made a member of the Academy of St. Luke.

Delarue (dẹ.lȧ.rü), Gervais. b. at Caen, France, 1751; d. 1835. French historian and antiquary, professor at the University of Caen. He was the author of Essais historiques sur les bardes, les jongleurs et les trouvères normands et anglo-normands (1834).

De la Rue (del'ạ.rō', del.ạ.rō'), Warren. b. in Guernsey, Channel Islands, Jan. 18, 1815; d. at London, April 19, 1889. English astronomer and physicist, best known for the application of photography to astronomy. He was the collaborator of Balfour Stewart and Loewy in Researches on Solar Physics.

Delattre (dẹ.lȧtr), Roland. Original name of Lassus, Orlandus.

de Lattre de Tassigny (dẹ tȧ.sẽ.nyē), Jean Joseph Marie Gabriel. b. at Mouilleron-en-Pareds, Vendée, France, Feb. 2, 1889; d. near Paris, Jan. 11, 1952. French soldier. A graduate (1913) of St. Cyr, he fought in the dragoons and in the infantry in World War I, being wounded five times. He fought in Morocco against the Riffs in 1925, and by 1939 had risen to the rank of general. After the occupation of France by the Germans in World War II, he organized resistance against German occupation of the entire country, for which he was tried by the Vichy government and sentenced (1942) to ten years' imprisonment. He escaped in 1943 and fled to England. He took part in the invasion of southern France in 1944, fought through Alsace, across the Rhine, and into Austria. He was the signer for France of the official German capitulation (May 9, 1945). He became chief (1945) of the French general staff and was placed in charge of the ground troops of the Western Union after the war. In 1950 he was made high commissioner and put in direct command of the French troops in Indo-China and succeeded in reorganizing them to stop the rebel (Ho Chi Minh) troops' advance. He was made a marshal of France posthumously.

Delaunay (dẹ.lō.nā), Charles Eugène. b. at Lusigny, Aube, France, April 9, 1816; drowned near Cherbourg, France, Aug. 5, 1872. French astronomer, author of Théorie de la lune (1860–67).

de La Vallée Poussin (dẹ lȧ vȧ.lā pō.saṅ), Baron Charles. b. at Louvain, Belgium, Aug. 14, 1866—. Belgian mathematician and civil and mining engineer. He received (1891) his doctoral degree in physical and mathematical sciences, became (1893) professor of mathematical analysis at Louvain, and was a visiting professor or lecturer at Harvard, Paris, Geneva, Strasbourg, and Madrid. He has been president (1920) of the International Mathematical Union and has been made doctor (honoris causa) at the universities of Toronto, Strasbourg, Oslo, and Paris, member of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences (1936), and corresponding member of the French Academy of Sciences. His works include Cours d'analyse infinitesimale and numerous articles in mathematical and scientific journals.

Delavan (del'ạ.vạn). City in SE Wisconsin, in Walworth County: manufactures of bathing suits and knitted goods. 4,007 (1950).

Delavigne (dẹ.lȧ.vēny'), (Jean François) Casimir. b at Le Havre, France, April 4, 1793; d. at Lyons, France, Dec. 11, 1843. French dramatist and poet. He began his studies in his native city, and completed them at Paris. As early as 1811 he attracted the attention of Napoleon by his Dithyrambe sur la naissance du roi de Rome. The events connected with Napoleon's downfall led Delavigne to write three elegies, Les Messéniennes. Two of these, Waterloo and La Dévastation du musée, were subsequently published with an article Sur le besoin de s'unir après le départ des étrangers, and in this form they widely attracted attention and favor. La Vie et la mort de Jeanne d'Arc, Tyrtée, Le Voyageur, À Napoléon, and Lord Byron were well received in 1824. The following year was spent in Italy, where Delavigne wrote the Nouvelles Messéniennes. After the stormy days of the revolution of July, 1830, he composed La Parisienne, set to music by Auber; also the Dies irae de Kosciusko and La Varsovienne. In 1843, in collaboration with his brother, Germain, he wrote the libretto to Halévy's opera Charles VI. His contributions to the stage include the Vêpres siciliennes (1819), Les Comédiens (1820), Le Paria (1821), L'École des vieillards (1823), La Princesse Aurélie (1828), Marino Faliero (1829), Louis XI (1832), Les Enfants d'Édouard (1833), Don Juan d'Autriche (1835), Une Famille au temps de Luther (1836), La Popularité (1838), La Fille du Cid (1839), and Le Conseiller rapporteur (1840). He was elected to the French Academy on Feb. 24, 1825. His works were edited in full by his brother in 1845, 1855, and 1863. A separate reprint of his poems and plays was also made in 1863.

Delavignette (dẹ.lȧ.vē.nyet), Robert. b. at Ste.-Colombe-sur-Seine, Côte-d'Or, France, March 29, 1897—. French colonial administrator, director (1947 et seq.) of political affairs of the French colonial ministry. He was governor general (1946–47) of Cameroun.

Delaville (dẹ.lȧ.vēl), Bernard Germain Étienne. See Lacépède, Bernard Germain Étienne de la Ville (or Delaville), Comte de.

Delaware (del'ạ.wār). [Also: Lenape, Leni-Lenape.] Confederation of North American Indian tribes, formerly inhabiting the Delaware River valley, Pennsylvania, and large parts of New Jersey and Delaware. Remnants of the group are now settled in Oklahoma. They spoke an Algonquian language.

Delaware. [Called the "First State"; also the "Diamond State" and the "Blue Hen State."] State of the E United States, bounded by Pennsylvania on the N and NW, Delaware River and Bay (separating it from New Jersey) and the Atlantic Ocean on the E, and Maryland on the S and W: a Middle Atlantic State and one of the 13 original states.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. Delaware is divided for administrative purposes into three counties. The state sends one representative to Congress and has three electoral votes. Wilmington and Dover are the principal cities. Capital, Dover; area, 1,961.7 sq. mi. (2,399.2 sq. mi., including water); pop. 318,085 (1950), an increase of 19.4 percent over the figure for 1940. The state ranks 47th in area, and 47th (on the basis of the 1950 census) in population.

Terrain and Climate. Delaware consists mostly of low, flat land, but has moderately rolling, hilly land in the N, the highest point in the state being at Centerville (ab. 440 ft.). There is much marshland, particularly along Delaware Bay. Small streams, fresh-water lakes, Delaware Bay, and the Atlantic Ocean provide an abundance of fish. The climate is temperate.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Fruit growing (especially apples and peaches) and poultry raising (broilers) are the principal agricultural pursuits. Milk, eggs, truck crops, wheat, and corn are produced. Fishing and canning of fruit are important. E. I. duPont deNemours Company, the nation's largest producer of chemicals, has its headquarters and research laboratories at Wilmington, although its factories are dotted throughout the country. Many other large American corporations have their headquarters at Wilmington also, attracted to the state by the liberality of its tax laws. The state itself is not highly industrial, and Wilmington is the leading manufacturing center, producing textiles, machinery, and hardware, among other items. The city is the site of important shipyards, the world's largest braided-rubber hose plant, and its largest cotton-dyeing plant; it is an international center for the manufacture of morocco leather, glazed kid, and vulcanized fiber. The state's chief port, it is served by the Delaware River. Clay, stone, sand, gravel, bog iron ore, and phosphate rock are found in the state. The annual income in Delaware from agriculture ranges as high as 87 million dollars; from manufacturing, as high as 339,126,434 dollars; from mineral output, as high as 131,000 dollars.

History. Delaware was first explored (1609) by Henry Hudson; and although a settlement, Swanendael, was made (1631) near the site of what is now Lewes by the Dutch West India Company, the first permanent settlement. Fort Christina (now Wilmington) was made (1638) by Swedes led by Peter Minuit, who designated as New Sweden the entire territory from the Delaware River to the mouth of the Schuylkill. The region was captured (1655) by the Dutch under Peter Stuyvesant and was under Dutch rule until 1664, when it went to the English. It became united (1682) with Pennsylvania as part of a grant made to William Penn and was granted (1703) a separate legislature but had a governor in common with Pennsylvania until the American Revolution (1776). The regiment furnished by Delaware in the Revolutionary War was, on account of its fighting qualities, known as the "Game Cock Regiment." One of its officers, Captain Caldwell, who was noted as a fancier of gamecocks, maintained that a true gamecock must of necessity be the progeny of a blue hen. Hence the origin of the name "Blue Hen State," sometimes applied to Delaware. The first state to ratify the Constitution of the United States, Delaware adopted its own first constitution in 1776 and its present constitution in 1897. Although a slave state, it sided with the Union cause in the Civil War. The whipping post is still maintained in Delaware under provision of a law dating from 1771.

Culture. Delaware's population is fairly evenly balanced between urban and rural, the urban being slightly greater (62.6 percent in 1950). The state motto is "Liberty and Independence." The state flower is the peach blossom.

Delaware. City in C Ohio, county seat of Delaware County, on the Olentangy River, ab. 23 mi. N of Columbus; trading center for an agricultural and livestock area. It was platted in 1804. It is the seat of Ohio Wesleyan University, and was the birthplace of President Rutherford B. Hayes. 11,804 (1950).

Delaware Bay. Arm of the Atlantic Ocean and estuary of the Delaware River, which separates Delaware from New Jersey. Its entrance to the Atlantic, between Capes May and Henlopen, is ab. 13 mi. wide. Length, ab. 55 mi.; greatest width, ab. 25 mi.

Delaware River. River in the E U.S. which rises in S New York, in Delaware County, and separates Pennsylvania and Delaware on the W from New York and New Jersey on the E. It expands into Delaware Bay ab. 40 mi. below Philadelphia. On its banks are Trenton, Easton, Philadelphia, Camden, Chester, and Wilmington. Its chief tributaries are the Lehigh and Schuylkill, on the W. Length, ab. 300 mi.; navigable for ocean steamships to Philadelphia; tidal as far as Trenton.

Delaware Water Gap. Gorge on the Delaware River, between Pennsylvania and New Jersey, ab. 65 mi. NW of New York, by which the river passes through the Kittatinny Mountains between walls ab. 1,400 ft. in height.

De La Warr (del'a.wär), Baron. [Called Lord Delaware; title of Thomas West.] b. probably at Wherwell, Hampshire, England, July 9, 1577; d. at sea, June 7, 1618. First governor and captain-general of the colony of Virginia. He attended Queen's College, Oxford, and went to Parliament in 1597. He served with the army in the Low Countries and in 1599 was in Ireland with his cousin, Robert Devereux, 2d Earl of Essex, by whom he was knighted in the same year. He was imprisoned and fined for his part in the Essex rebellion (1600–01). Upon his father's death he was raised to the peerage and became a member of the Privy Council. Designated a grantee in the second charter to the Virginia Company of London, he was a member of its council in 1609, and in February, 1610, was appointed first governor and captain-general for life of the Colony of Virginia. He left England (April, 1610) with 150 colonists, arriving in Virginia just as the colony was about to be given up. After sending for supplies and aid, and ordering the construction of three forts, he appointed a deputy and departed for the West Indies to recover from the illness brought on by the Virginia heat. He returned (June, 1611) to England, and in the same year published The Relation of the Right Honourable the Lord De-la-Warre, Lord Governour and Captaine Generall of the Colonie, planted in Virginea. He devoted himself to securing support for the settlement and left England in March, 1618, at the head of 200 men bound for Virginia. He stopped at Terceira in the Azores where, it is thought, he was poisoned.

Delbœuf (del.bëf), Joseph. b. at Liége, Belgium, Sept. 30, 1831; d. at Bonn, Germany, Aug. 13, 1896. Belgian philosophical writer and psychologist, professor of classical philology at the University of Liége (1866–96). Among his works are La Psychologie comme science naturelle (1876), Questions de philosophie et de science (1883), Examen critique de la loi psychophysique (1883), and La Matière brute et la matière vivante (1887).

Delbos (del.bō), Yvon. b. at Thonac, Dordogne, France, May 7, 1885—. French political leader and journalist, foreign minister from 1936 to 1938 and a leader of the Radical-Socialist Party. Founder of the newspaper L'Ere Nouvelle (1919) and editor in chief of the newspaper Dépêche de Toulouse, he served (1924–36) in the Chamber of Deputies, of which he was vice-president (1932–36). He subsequently held the posts of minister of justice (1936), foreign affairs (1936–38), and national education (1939–40). Active in the Resistance after the fall of France, he was deported to Germany. He was liberated (1945), and became a deputy to the Constituent Assemblies and to the National Assembly. He became minister of state in 1947, minister for overseas France in 1948, and minister of education in 1949.

Delbridge Islands (del'brij). See Dellbridge Islands.

Delbrück (del'brük), Clemens von. b. at Halle, Germany, Jan. 19, 1856; d. at Jena, Germany, Dec. 18, 1921. German politician. He was mayor of Danzig (1896), became Prussian minister of commerce (1905), was named (1909) a state secretary in the Reich ministry of the interior, and in 1914 rose to the vice-presidency of the Prussian council of ministers. The principal aide of Reichschancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, he became, under the chancellorship of Prince Max of Baden, chief of the privy council. He was a German National People's Party member of the Weimar constitutional assembly, and of the Reichstag (1920).

Delbrück, Hans. b. at Bergen, Germany, Nov. 11, 1848; d. at Berlin, July 14, 1929. German historian, notable in the field of military history, also as a politician. He served as professor (1885 et seq.) at the University of Berlin. His works include Geschichte der Kriegskunst im Rahmen der politischen Geschichte (History of the Art of Warfare in the Framework of Political History, 1900–01, 1920–27), Bismarcks Erbe (The Heritage of Bismarck, 1915), and Weltgeschichte (World History, 1924–28). For some time he edited (1883–1919), with Treitschke, the periodical Preussische Jahrbücher (Prussian Annals).

Delbrück, (Martin Friedrich) Rudolf von. b. at Berlin, April 16, 1817; d. there, Feb. 1, 1903. Prussian statesman. He entered the ministry of commerce (1848) and was president of the chancery of the North German Confederation (1867–70) and of the imperial chancery (1871–76).

del Campo (del kām'pō), Estanislao. [Pseudonym, Anastasio el Pollo.] b. at Buenos Aires, 1834; d. 1880. Argentine poet. His epic Fausto (1866) is, after Hernández's Martín Fierro, the most famous gaucho poem. In it, a gaucho describes to his friend a performance of Gounod's opera.

Delcassé (del.kä.sā), Théophile. b. at Pamiers, Ariège, France, March 1, 1852; d. at Nice, France, Feb. 22, 1923. French political leader and diplomat, best known for his contribution to the Entente Cordiale with Britain. Entering the Chamber of Deputies in 1889, he served (1893–95) as minister of colonies. During the crucial years (1898–1905) when France rebuilt her diplomatic system, he held the foreign ministry uninterruptedly. After having brought the English-French clash in the Sudan in the Fashoda incident (1898–99) to a peaceful conclusion, he achieved a reorientation in Anglo-French relations marked by the colonial agreement of July 7, 1904. His policy of sharp opposition to Germany brought claims of "encirclement" from Berlin; his intransigence during the Moroccan crisis caused him to lose support within the French cabinet and brought his resignation (June, 1905). In 1909, he forced Clémenceau's resignation on a naval question. He was naval minister (1911–13), served at St. Petersburg as ambassador (1913–14), and was foreign minister (1914–15) in the ministry of national defense during World War I, resigning when Bulgaria, a country he had courted for the Allies, entered the war on the side of the Central Powers.

Del City (del). Town in C Oklahoma, in Oklahoma County near Oklahoma City. 2,504 (1950).

Delectable History of Forbonius and Prisceria (fôr-bō'ni.us; pri.sē'ri.a). See Forbonius and Prisceria, Delectable History of.

Delectable Mountains. Range of mountains in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, from which a view of the Celestial City is to be had. They are "Emmanuel's Land," and the sheep that feed on them are those for whom Christ died. Isa. xxxiii. 16, 17.

Deledda (dā.lād'dä), Grazia. b. at Nuoro, Sardinia, 1875; d. 1936. Italian novelist. She won the Nobel prize in 1926. Her best works are usually considered to be Il Vecchio della montagna (1900), Elias Portoliu (1903), Cenere (1904), L'Edera (1904), Nostalgie (1905), L'Incendio nell'oliveto (1918), and La Madre (1920; Eng. trans., The Woman and the Priest, 1922, and The Mother, 1923).

De l'éducation (dę lā.dü.kā.syôn). See Émile.

De Lee (dę lē'), Joseph Bolivar. b. at Cold Spring, N.Y., Oct. 28, 1869; d. April 2, 1942. American obstetrician and gynecologist. After studying at Vienna, Berlin, and Paris, he established his practice at Chicago, and was instrumental in the founding of the Lying-in Hospital and Dispensary there in 1895. He held professorial chairs at Northwestern University (1897–1929) and at the University of Chicago (1929–36). His published works include Obstetrics for Nurses (1904) and Principles and Practice of Obstetrics (1913).

Delehaye (dę.lę.e), Hippolyte. b. at Antwerp, Belgium, 1859; d. 1941. Belgian Jesuit priest and mathematician. He was president of the Collège des Bollandistes at Brussels, edited sections of the Bollandist Acta sanctorum, was a contributor to Analecta Bollandiana, and wrote chiefly on ecclesiastical subjects. His best-known book is Work of the Bollandists through the Centuries.

Delémont (dę.lā.môn). [German, Delsberg.] Small town in W Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, situated on the Sorne River, S of the French (Alsatian) border, between Basel and Biel. It has watch and cement factories. 6,625 (1941).

De Leon (dē lē'on), Daniel. b. on the island of Curaçao, Dec. 14, 1852; d. at New York, May 11, 1914. American Socialist leader and writer. He was educated at Hildesheim, Germany, and at Amsterdam, arriving (c1874) in the U.S. and settling at New York, where he became active in journalism. He received (1878) the degree of LL.B. at Columbia, where he won (1883) a prize lectureship in Latin-American diplomacy which he held for two three-year terms. Interested in reform and labor movements, he joined (1890) the Socialist Labor Party, became (1891) its national lecturer, and in the same year was its gubernatorial candidate for New York. He was editor (c1892 et seq.) of the Socialist journal, The People. An advocate of Socialist industrial trade unions, he led (1895) a group out of the Knights of Labor, which he had joined in 1888, and organized the Socialist Trade and Labor Alliance. Dissatisfaction with his allegedly dictatorial methods caused the withdrawal (1899) from the Alliance of a wing which later became the Socialist Party of America. In 1905 he participated in the founding of the Industrial Workers of the World, merging the Alliance with it, and upon being excluded from the IWW convention in 1908 lent his support to the Workers' International Industrial Union. His ideas were later praised by Lenin, who said the Soviet structure was presaged by De Leon's writings. Among his works are What Means This Strike? (1898), Two Pages from Roman History (1903), Socialist Reconstruction of Society (1905), and translations of Karl Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Napoleon and the major part of Eugène Sue's Mysteries of the People; or History of a Proletarian Family Across the Ages.

Delescluze (dę.lā.klüz), Louis Charles. b. at Dreux, France, Oct. 20, 1809; killed on the barricades at Paris, May 28, 1871. French journalist and political agitator, leader of the Paris Commune (March–May, 1871).

de Lesseps (dę les'eps; French, dę le.seps), Ferdinand Marie, Vicomte. See Lesseps, Ferdinand Marie, Vicomte de.

Delessert (dę.le.ser), Baron (Jules Paul) Benjamin. b. at Lyons, France, Feb. 14, 1773; d. at Paris, March 1, 1847. French naturalist and philanthropist. He was a member (1817–38) of the Chamber of Deputies, and contributed much to the introduction of savings banks in France. He was a collaborator of De Candolle in the publication of Icones selectae plantarum (1820–46).

Delft (delft). City in W Netherlands, in the province of South Holland, situated on the Schie Canal, ab. 5 mi. SE of The Hague. It has important cattle, butter, cheese, and vegetable markets, and also construction works, metallurgical and instrument industries, and chemical, glass, and tobacco manufactures. The famous pottery and faience manufacture of Delft, which flourished in the 17th and 18th centuries, has been revived. The inner town, one of the most typical in the Netherlands, contains interesting buildings, such as the Oude Kerk (Old Church), which dates from the 13th–16th centuries; the Nieuwe Kerk (New Church), built in the 14th and 15th centuries, with the tomb of William I of Orange by Hendryk de Keyser, other tombs of the Nassau-Orange family, and the tomb of the jurist Hugo Grotius, who was born here; the Stadhuis (city hall); the Gemeenlandhuis. The Prinsenhof, where William I (William the Silent) of Orange was assassinated on July 10, 1584, contains municipal collections; art collections are in the house of Lambert van Meerten. There is an old arsenal and a warehouse of the East India Company. Delft was occupied by the Germans in May, 1940, in World War II. 66,067 (est. 1951).

Delhi (del'i). [Also: Dehli, Dilli.] State of the Union of India, between Uttar Pradesh (United Provinces) and the state of Punjab on the W bank of the Jumna River. It includes New Delhi, the former capital of British India and the capital of the Union of India. Area, 574 sq. mi.; pop. 1,743,992 (1951).

Delhi. [Also: Dehli, Dilli.] City in the state of Delhi, Union of India, on the Jumna River: officially separate from New Delhi, the capital of British India and of the Union of India. Pop., including New Delhi and suburbs, 521,849 (1941).

History. The city of Indraprastha is said (in the Mahabharata) to have been built near the site of Delhi, in the 15th century B.C. Delhi was captured by Mohammed of Ghor in 1193 A.D., and a few years later became the capital of a Mohammedan monarchy. It was sacked by Tamerlane in 1398, and captured by Baber in 1526. Delhi became the capital of the Mogul Empire, and was rebuilt by Shah Jehan in the period 1638–58. It was sacked by Nadir Shah in 1739, and occupied by the British under Lake in 1803, although it continued to be the residence of the titular Grand Mogul down to 1857. It was captured by the Sepoy mutineers on May 11, 1857, and was besieged in June by the British and retaken on Sept. 20, 1857.

Architecture. Among the notable structures in Delhi, are the tomb of Humayun Shah, and the palace and Great Mosque of Shah Jehan. The tomb of Humayun, Shah was completed by his successor Akbar in the second half of the 16th century. The plan is about square; the tomb chamber is octagonal, with great canopied portals on four of its sides and small octagonal chambers on the four others. The central space is covered by a graceful dome. The decoration is much simpler than that of the later Mogul architecture, consisting chiefly of keeled arcades of different sizes framed in rectangular panels. The palace was built by Shah Jehan in the middle of the 17th century. It has been called the most splendid of Oriental palaces. The massive towered wall encloses an area of ab. 1,600 by 3,200 ft. The main entrance opens on a noble vaulted hall 375 ft. long, from which are reached in succession two spacious courts. On the second of these faces the hall of public audience, an open arcaded structure with scalloped arches and coupled columns in the exterior range. On another court, toward the river, is the hall of private audience (Dewan-i-Khas), similar to the first, but with square piers to its arches and beautiful inlaying in colored stones. On the river side stands also the Rung Mehal, or Painted Hall, an admirable structure, which includes a bath. The Jami Musjid, or Great Mosque, was built by Shah Jehan in the middle of the 17th century. It is very large, and the grouping of the three lofty monumental gates and the kiosked angle towers of its court with the lofty minarets, the great entrance arch, and the three fine bulbous domes of the sanctuary produces an unusually impressive architectural effect. The court is raised on a high basement, and is surrounded by graceful open arcades. The minarets rise from the ends of the façade of the mosque proper, and between them and the central arch there are on each side five fine arcades surmounted by paneling in red sandstone and white marble. Above the cornice are placed a range of close-set, round-headed battlements.

Delhi (del'hī). Town (in New York the equivalent of township in many other states) and village in C New York, county seat of Delaware County. It is the seat of a state school of agriculture. Pop. of town, 3,311 (1950); of village, 2,233 (1950).

Delhi Sultanate (del'ī). Former Moslem state in NW and N India, which extended S to include all of C India in the 14th century. In the period from 1173 to 1202 A.D. the vast extent of N India was conquered by the Afghanistanian Turks under Mohammed of Ghor. When he was assassinated in 1206, Kutbuddin Aibak assumed the title of sultan of Delhi and established a dynasty which lasted until 1414, with 26 rulers. It was organized as an autocratic kingdom, with a royal army, under which were provincial governors, each having a provincial army. During the 13th century the great threat of the Mongols on the NW kept the forces of the Delhi Sultanate concentrated in the N, but in the 14th century Malwa and Gujarat were annexed, incorporating most of India. This large and unwieldy state suffered numerous local revolts, and was in the process of breaking up when the Mongols under Tamerlane poured into the Indus valley and ravaged N India, capturing and sacking Delhi in December, 1398. The central power of the sultanate was thus finally destroyed, and the state disintegrated, although the last sultan ruled a small territory around Delhi until his death in 1414.

Delia (dē'li.ạ). Name given in ancient Greek myth and religion to Artemis, from the island of Delos, her birthplace. Similarly Apollo, the sun god, was called Delius.

Delia. Shepherdess in Vergil's Eclogues.

Delia. Sonnet sequence (1592) by "the well-languaged" Samuel Daniel. A collection of 50 sonnets, they are addressed to his patroness, the Countess of Pembroke, whose household he called "my best school." Twenty-eight of the sonnets had been published in 1591. Some of those that are considered the best and that appear most frequently in anthologies are numbers 11 ("Tears, vows, and prayers win the hardest heart"), 18 ("Restore thy tresses to the golden ore"), 25 ("False Hope prolongs my ever certain grief"), 30 ("My cares draw on mine everlasting night"), 31, or 39 in some editions ("Look, Delia, how we esteem the half-blown rose"), 41 ("When men shall find thy flower, thy glory pass"), 42 ("Beauty, sweet love, is like the morning dew"), 45, or sometimes 49 or 54 ("Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night"), perhaps the best known, and 46, or 55 ("Let others sing of knights and paladins"). Daniel has been charged with not knowing when to stop, and the last line of his last sonnet, "I say no more; I fear I said too much," has been used against him, half-humorously, half-seriously, as a good piece of self-criticism that he should have accepted long before. His work, however, is usually regarded as being worthy to rank among the five outstanding Elizabethan amatory sequences, with Sidney's Astrophel and Stella, Drayton's Idea, Spenser's Amoretti, and Shakespeare's Sonnets.

Delian League (dē'li.ạn). [Also, Confederacy of Delos.] A Hellenic league, formed probably c477 B.C., with its political center at Athens and its treasury at Delos (removed later to Athens). The term is sometimes applied also to a similar league of 378–338 B.C. The great danger of conquest by the Persians compelled the Ionian Greek states, jealous of their independence, but mostly located on islands, and individually indefensible against Persian power, to find some means of collaboration. Beginning in 478 B.C. such maritime states as Aegina, Megara, Naxos, Thasos, Lesbos, Chios, Samos, and others accepted the plan of a league with a treasury and a council on the island of Delos, the assessments for the treasury to be set by Athens, and the council to be under Athenian presidency. The League accomplished its purpose of nullifying the Persian peril, but when, after the death of Xerxes, Naxos and Thasos attempted to withdraw from it, their secession was prevented by Athens. By diplomacy and by their greater power, the Athenians were able to hold the confederacy together and to increase its adherents, which eventually numbered well over 200 states. In 457 B.C. Sparta was deterred from a threatened attack, and Thebes was subdued. But in 454 B.C., when under the pretext of new danger from the Persian quarter, the treasury was removed to Athens, the League became in fact an Athenian empire, which lasted for a troubled half century but came to an end with the close of the Peloponnesian War, disastrously for Athens, in 404 B.C. Subsequent restoration of Athenian sea power led in 378 to the formation of a new league, Athenian-dominated, but its course was also a troubled one, and in 338 B.C. it was extinguished by the power of Macedon. The story of the Delian League is the story of the fatal unwillingness of the small Greek states to coalesce into a nation, and of the inability of Athens to enforce unity. It was the high point of the hope for such an eventuation, and its failure made inevitable first the Macedonian hegemony and eventually the conquest by Rome.

Delibes (dẹ.lēb), Clément Philibert Léo. b. at St.-Germain-du-Val, France, Feb. 21, 1836; d. at Paris, Jan. 16, 1891. French composer. He was a chorus conductor at the Paris Opéra, and in 1881 was appointed professor of composition at the Paris Conservatoire. His music consisted chiefly of ballets such as Coppélia (1870) and Sylvia (1876), and operas including Le Roi l'a Dit (1873), Jean de Nivelle (1880), and Lakmé (1883).

Delicate Situation, The. Novel by Naomi Royde-Smith, published in 1931.

Delijannis (ᵺe.lē.yän'ēs), Théodore. See Delyannis or Delijannis, Théodore.

Delilah (dẹ.lī'lạ). In the Bible, a Philistine woman of the valley of Sorek, mistress of Samson. She discovered that Samson's long hair represented the secret of his strength; she cut it off and betrayed him to the Philistines, who were then able to capture him. Judges, xvi.

Delille (dẹ.lēl), Jacques. [Also, Delisle.] b. at Aigueperse, Puy-de-Dôme, France, June 22, 1738; d. at Paris, May 1, 1813. French didactic poet and translator. His works include Les Jardins (1782), La Pitié (1803), and a translation of Vergil's Georgics (1769).

Delineator, The. Monthly magazine published at New York from 1873 to 1937. It featured fashions, fiction, and comment on the contemporary scene. Before merging (1937) with the Pictorial Review, the magazine attained a circulation of more than two million. Its editors included Theodore Dreiser and Honoré Morrow.

Deliniers-Brémont (dẹ.lē.nyā.brā.môṅ), Jacques Antoine Marie. Original French name of Liniers y Bremont (or Liniers), Santiago Antonio María de.

Deliro (dẹ.lē'rō). Character in Ben Jonson's comedy Every Man Out of His Humour: a good, doting citizen, a fellow sincerely in love with his own wife, and so taken by an idealization of her perfections that he simply holds himself unworthy of her.

Delisle (dẹ.lēl; Anglicized, dẹ.līl'), Guillaume. b. at Paris, Feb. 28, 1675; d. there, Jan. 25, 1726. French scientist, one of the founders of modern geography; brother of Joseph Nicolas Delisle.

Delisle, Joseph Nicolas. b. at Paris, April 4, 1688; d. there, Sept. 11, 1768. French astronomer; brother of Guillaume Delisle. His works include Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire et au progrès de l'astronomie (1738) and Mémoire sur les nouvelles découvertes au nord de la Mer du Sud (1752).

Delisle, Léopold Victor. b. at Valognes, Manche, France, Oct. 24, 1826; d. at Paris, July 22, 1910. French historian, bibliographer, and paleographer. In 1852 he was appointed assistant in the manuscript department of the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, of which he later became conservator and was administrator general (1874–1905). He was made chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1857, officer in 1877, and commander in 1883. He wrote many important papers on the history of France, particularly that of Normandy, and on paleography and bibliography.

Delitzsch (dā'lich). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the Lōbber River, ab. 12 mi. N of Leipzig. Before World War II it had shoe, cigar, and chocolate factories, flour mills, and a sugar refinery, as well as vocational schools and a local museum. Herman Schulze-Delitzsch, the founder of the producers' coöperative movement in Germany, was born here. The population, mostly Protestant, increased 39.6 percent between 1939 and 1946, largely because of the influx of East German refugees. 25,148 (1946).

Delitzsch, Franz. b. at Leipzig, Germany, Feb. 23, 1813; d. there, March 4, 1890. German exegete and Hebraist. He became professor of theology at Rostock in 1846, at Erlangen in 1850, and at Leipzig in 1867. He represented strict Lutheranism. His numerous works include commentaries on the Old Testament books of Habakkuk (1843), Genesis (1852), Hebrews (1857), Psalms (1859–60), and Job (1864); also Sakrament des wahren Leibes und Blutes Jesu Christi (1844) and System der biblischen Psychologie (1855).

Delitzsch, Friedrich. b. at Erlangen, Bavaria, Germany, Sept. 3, 1850; d. Dec. 19, 1922. German Assyriologist; son of Franz Delitzsch. He was appointed professor of Assyriology at Leipzig in 1877, at Breslau in 1893, and at Berlin in 1899. His works include Wo lag das Paradies? (1881), Assyrisches Wörterbuch (1887), Assyrisches Handwörterbuch (1894–96), and Babel und Bibel (1903).

Delium (dē'li.um). In ancient geography, a place in Boeotia, Greece, situated on the coast ab. 24 mi. N of Athens. Here during the Peloponnesian War the Boeotians defeated (424 B.C.) the Athenians.

Delius (dē'li.us). Surname of Apollo, from his birthplace in Delos.

Delius (dē'li.us, dēl'yus), Frederick. b. at Bradford, Yorkshire, England, Jan. 29, 1862; d. at Grez-sur-Loing, Seine-et-Marne, France, June 10, 1934. English composer. He lived as an orange planter in Florida, and at Leipzig and Paris. His works include an opera, Koanga (1895–97); the music dramas A Village Romeo and Juliet (1900–01) and Margot la Rouge (1902); several symphonic works, including Florida (1887), Paris: The Song of a Great City (1899), Brigg Fair (1907), In a Summer Garden (1908), On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring (1912), North Country Sketches (1913–14), and Eventyr (1917); choral works, such as Appalachia (1902), Sea Drift (1903), A Mass of Life (1904–05), and Songs of Farewell (1930); he also composed songs, concertos, and chamber music.

Delius (dā'lē.ŭs), Nikolaus. b. at Bremen, Germany, Sept. 19, 1813; d. at Bonn, Germany, Nov. 18, 1888. German philologist and Shakespearian scholar, professor of Sanskrit, Provençal, and English literature at Bonn (1855–80). He was the author of a critical edition of Shakespeare (1854–61 and 1882), and other works.

Deliverance, The. Novel of Southern life and character (1904) by Ellen Glasgow. Its theme, and the theme of much of her work, is the conflict between the codes and ideals of the Virginia aristocracy and of the old South, before its defeat in the Civil War, and the political democracy that followed the freedom of the slaves.

Dell (del), Ethel M. [Full name, Ethel May Dell; married name, Savage.] d. at London, Sept. 17, 1939. English popular novelist and short-story writer. A prolific writer, she published at least one book a year between 1911 and 1939. She was the author of novels including The Way of an Eagle (1912), Knave of Diamonds (1913), Keeper of the Door (1915), Bars of Iron (1916), Greatheart (1918), Lamp in the Desert (1919), Top of the World and The Hundredth Chance (both 1920), The Obstacle Race (1921), Charles Rex (1922), Unknown Quantity (1924), A Man Under Authority (1926), The Black Knight (1927), The Gate Marked "Private" (1928), The Prison Wall and The Silver Bride (both 1932), Dona Celestis (1933), The Electric Torch (1934), Desire of His Life and Where Three Roads Meet (both 1935), Juice of the Pomegranate and Serpent in the Garden (both 1938), and Sown Among Stars (1939). Among her collections of stories are The Swindler (1914), The Safety Curtain (1917), The Tidal Wave (1920), The Odds (1922), and The Passer-By (1925).

Dell, Floyd. b. at Barry, Ill., June 28, 1887—. American novelist, dramatist, essayist, and editor. From 1905 to 1908 he was a reporter on Davenport (Iowa) and Chicago papers, after having worked as a factory hand and a laborer. His formal education ended at 16 when the poverty of the Dell family compelled him to leave high school before his graduation. From 1911 to 1913 he was literary editor of the Chicago Evening Post, and he was on the editorial staff of two radical papers, the Masses (1914–17), and the Liberator (1918–24), which succeeded it. When the former publication was accused of violating the Espionage Act, he was a defendant. His novels are Moon-Calf (1920), its sequel The Briary-Bush (1921), Janet March (1923), Runaway and This Mad Ideal (both 1925), An Old Man's Folly (1926), dealing with pacifists in World War I, An Unmarried Father (1927), Souvenir (1929), Love Without Money (1931), Diana Stair (1932), and The Golden Spike (1934). His nonfiction includes Women as World-Builders (1913), Were You Ever a Child? (1919), a study in child psychology, Looking at Life (1924), Intellectual Vagabondage, an Apology for the Intelligentsia (1926), Upton Sinclair, a Study in Social Protest and The Outline of Marriage (both 1927), and Love in the Machine Age (1930). As a dramatist he has written The Angel Intrudes (1918), Sweet-and-Twenty (1921), King Arthur's Socks (1922), one-act plays, and Little Accident (1928; a dramatization of his Unmarried Father) and Cloudy with Showers (1931), both in three acts and both with the actor Thomas Mitchell in a leading part. Love in Greenwich Village (1926), is a collection of short stories and verse, and Homecoming (1933) is his autobiography.

della Bella (del.lä bel'lä), Stefano. See Bella, Stefano della.

Della Crusca (del''ą krus'ką). Pseudonym of Merry, Robert.

Della Cruscans (del''ą krus'kąnz). Small clique of English poets of both sexes who originally met (c1785) at Florence. Their productions, which were affected and sentimental, were published in England in the World and the Oracle. They were attacked by William Gifford (1791–96) in The Baviad and The Mæviad. Robert Merry adopted the pseudonym "Della Crusca," Mrs. Hannah Cowley "Anna Matilda," and Edward Jerningham "The Bard." These, with Edward Topham, Charles Este, James Boswell, Mrs. Piozzi, and others, formed the group. They took their name from the Florentine Accademia della Crusca, of which Merry was a member.

della Paglia (del.lä pä'lyä), Antonio. See Paleario, Aonio.

della Robbia (del.lä rōb'byä; Anglicized, del''ą rob'i.ą). See under Robbia.

Dellbridge Islands (del'brij). [Also, Delbridge Islands.] Group of four islets of volcanic origin in Antarctica, lying in McMurdo Sound S of Cape Evans on Ross Island, in ab. 77°40′ S., 166°25′ E.

Dellenbaugh (del'ęn.bô), Frederick Samuel. b. at McConnelsville, Ohio, Sept. 13, 1853; d. at New York, Jan. 29, 1935. American explorer and writer, librarian of the American Geographical Society (1909–11). He accompanied Major Powell on his second journey of exploration through the Grand Canyon of the Colorado (1871–73), and went with the Harriman expedition to Alaska in 1899. His works include The North Americans of Yesterday (1900), The Romance of the Colorado River (1903), Breaking the Wilderness (1905), and A Canyon Voyage (1908).

Dellinger (del'in.jėr), John Howard. b. at Cleveland, Ohio, July 3, 1886—. American radio engineer. He has been a physicist (1907 et seq.) with the U.S. Bureau of Standards, serving as chief of its radio section (1918–46) and also as chief of research in the radio section (1926–34) of the Department of Commerce aeronautics branch, chief engineer (1928–29) with the Federal Radio Commission, and chairman of the radio propagation section (1942–46) of the National Defense Research Committee. He is the author of the government publication Radio Instruments and Measurements (1918), as well as many articles on radio and electricity.

Dellinger (del'ing.ėr), Rudolf. b. 1857; d. 1910. German composer. His works include the operettas Don Cesar (1885), Lorraine (1889), Saint Cyr (1891), Die Chansonette (1895), Jadwiga (1901), and Der letzte Jonas (1910).

Dellys (de.lēs'). Small seaport in Algiers department, Algeria, in NW Africa, ab. 50 mi. E of Algiers, on the Mediterranean coast. The area about the town has been little colonized by Europeans and the port is of minor importance. 4,038 (1936).

Delmar (del'mär). Unincorporated community in E New York, in Albany County. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 2,992 (1940).

Del Mar (del'mär), Alexander. b. at New York, Aug. 6, 1836; d. at Little Falls, N.J., July 1, 1926. American political economist, statistician, and mining engineer. He was the founder of the Social Science Review and its editor from 1864 to 1866. In 1867 he was director of the Bureau of Statistics, and in the same year president of the Washington Statistical Society. His works include Gold Money and Paper Money (1862), Essays on Political Economy (1865), What is Free Trade? (1868), The Resources . . . of Egypt (1874), History of the Precious Metals (1880), and A History of Money . . . (1885).

Delmar (del'mär), Viña. [Maiden name, Croter.] b. at New York, Jan. 20, 1905—. American writer. She is the author of somewhat sensational but realistic popular novels, including Bad Girl (1928), Loose Ladies (1929), Kept Woman (1929), Women Live Too Long (1932), The Marriage Racket (1933), and The Marcaboth Women (1951).

Delmenhorst (del'men.hôrst). Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the free state of Oldenburg, situated on the Delme River, ab. 9 mi. W of Bremen. Formerly the center of large linoleum works, it is now known for its woolen textile, garment, furniture, tool, and felt manufactures; there are also dairies and agricultural markets. The population, mostly Protestant, increased 35.9 percent between 1939 and 1946, largely because of the influx of East German refugees. 48,742 (1946), 57,273 (1950).

Delmonico (del.mon'i.kō), Lorenzo. b. at Marengo, Switzerland, March 13, 1813; d. Sept. 3, 1881. American restaurateur, noted for his part in introducing European gastronomy into the U.S. He left Switzerland at the age of 19 to join his two uncles in the catering and confectionery business at New York. At his suggestion the company, in which he became a partner, opened a restaurant on William Street, where Delmonico embarked on the skillful combination of European cuisine and American abundance and variety that subsequently drew the admiration of both natives and foreigners. Succeeding restaurants were opened on Broad Street, at Beaver and William streets, at Broadway and Chambers Street, at 14th Street and Fifth Avenue, and at Broadway and 26th Street. His restaurants became world-famous, and in New York, where he pioneered the eating establishment offering an elaborate menu, the restaurant became an accepted institution and was adopted in a similar fashion in other cities.

Delmonte y Tejada (del.mōn'tā ē tā.hä'ŦHä), Antonio. b. at Santiago de los Caballeros, Dominican Republic, Sept. 29, 1783; d. at Havana, Cuba, Nov. 19, 1861. Spanish-American historian. Driven from his country in 1804 by the revolutionists, he resided at Havana after 1806, practicing law and occupying several government positions. The first volume only of his Historia de Santo Domingo was published at Havana in 1853.

Delna (del.nä), Marie. [Original name, Marie Ledan.] b. at Paris, Aug. 3, 1875; d. 1932. French contralto singer. She sang at the Paris Opéra, the Opéra-Comique, and the Gaîté Lyrique. Her principal roles were Orphée, Dido in Berlioz's Les Troyens, Charlotte in Werther, Mistress Quickly in Falstaff, Marceline in L'Attaque du Moulin, Fides in Le Prophète, Delilah, and Carmen. She was a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company (1909–10), and was heard at New York in Orphée and L'Attaque du Moulin.

Delolme (dẹ.lolm), Jean Louis. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, 1740; d. in Switzerland, July 16, 1806. Swiss constitutional writer. Having offended the Genevan government by the publication of a pamphlet entitled Examen des trois points des droits, he emigrated to England, where he lived many years. He returned to Switzerland in 1775. His works include Constitution de l'Angleterre (1771), of which an English translation, prepared by himself, appeared (1775) as The Constitution of England.

De Lôme Letter (dẹ.lōm'), The. Letter written by Dupuy de Lôme, Spanish minister to the U.S., and published (Feb. 9, 1898) by the Hearst press. The letter, which was in the nature of private correspondence to a Cuban friend, had been stolen, and its contents revealed de Lôme's impression of President McKinley as a weak and wavering politician. The American public at that time was already hostile toward Spain because of the alleged atrocities committed by her military forces in Cuba. The indiscretion of the Spanish minister heightened the growing hysteria. De Lôme resigned immediately, and although the incident was officially closed, it is generally regarded as one of the series of events, culminating in the sinking of the Maine, which precipitated the Spanish-American War.

Deloncle (dẹ.lôṅkl), Eugène. b. c1892; d. at Paris, 1944. French engineer, and fascist leader best known as the organizer of the Cagoulards (1935–37). He supported the Pétain regime, but reportedly was imprisoned briefly (December, 1942) and thereafter left active political life.

Deloney or Delone (dẹ.lō'ni), Thomas. b. probably at London, c1543; d. c1607. English weaver, balladist, pamphleteer, and realistic prose fictionist. Author of more than 50 ballads, all written before 1596, he is best known for his contribution to English fiction in the form of three very popular narratives written after 1596 and before 1600, Thomas of Reading, or The Six Worthy Yeomen of the West, Jack of Newbury, and The Gentle Craft, glorifying, respectively, weavers, clothiers, and shoemakers. The importance of the last, apart from its own merits, is that Deloney's story of Simon Eyre, a shoemaker who became lord mayor of London, served as the basis of Thomas Dekker's The Shoemaker's Holiday (1599). The secondary title of Dekker's work is the same one used by Deloney.

De Long (dẹ lông'), George Washington. b. at New York, Aug. 22, 1844; d. in Siberia, Oct. 30, 1881. American arctic explorer. He was graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1865, obtained the rank of lieutenant in 1869, and of lieutenant commander in 1879. He accompanied Captain D. L. Braine on his arctic expedition in 1873. Having been appointed to the command of the Jeannette, fitted out by James Gordon Bennett, Jr., for a three-year voyage of exploration in arctic waters, and placed under the authority of the U.S. government, he sailed from San Francisco on July 8, 1879, and proceeded to the coast of Siberia, whence he steamed northward until trapped by ice in about 71°35′ N., 175° W., on Sept. 5, 1879. The vessel drifted to the northwest, and was crushed in 77°15′ N., 155° E., on June 13, 1881. With 14 others he reached the mouth of the Lena River, Siberia, where the whole party perished of cold and starvation, except two men sent forward to obtain relief. His body and those of his companions were discovered on March 23, 1882, by Chief Engineer George W. Melville, who with nine companions had been detached and had succeeded in reaching a small village on the Lena.

Deloraine (del.ọ.rān'), William of. In Sir Walter Scott's poem Lay of the Last Minstrel, a borderer and trusty vassal of the Buccleuch family. He is sent by the Ladye of Branksome to fetch the magic book from the tomb of Michael Scott, the wizard.

Delord (dẹ.lôr), Taxile. b. at Avignon, France, Nov. 25, 1815; d. at Paris, May 16, 1877. French journalist, historian, and politician. His chief work is Histoire du second empire (1868–75).

Delorme (dẹ.lôrm), Marion. [Also, de Lorme.] b. near Châlons-sur-Marne, France, Oct. 3, 1613; said to have died at Paris, July 2, 1650. French courtesan, mistress of the marquis de Cinq-Mars. After his death (1642), she is supposed by some to have had several highly placed lovers, including George Villiers, 2nd Duke of Buckingham, Cardinal Richelieu, and Louis XIV. In 1650 she was ordered to be arrested by Mazarin for her complicity in the Fronde disorders, and was found dead by the officers. This, however, is thought to have been a ruse. She is even said to have lived to the age of 137, living a life crowded with incident. She was the friend of Ninon de l'Enclos. Victor Hugo wrote a novel with her name as title, and Bulwer-Lytton introduces her in his play Richelieu; she was also a principal character of the drama Cinq-Mars (1826), by Alfred de Vigny.

Delorme or de l'Orme (dẹ lôrm), Philibert. b. at Lyons, France, c1510; d. at Paris, Jan. 8, 1570. French architect. He was court architect under Francis I and Henry II of France. He and Jean Brillant were commissioned by Charles IX's mother, Catherine de Médicis, to erect the Tuileries. His best work is the Château d'Anet, which he built (1552–59) for Diane de Poitiers, Henry II's mistress; his tomb of Francis I and work at several famous chateaux is also of the first order.

Delos (dē'los). [Also: Mikra Dilos; ancient names, Asteria, Ortygia.] Smallest island of the Cyclades, in the nomos (department) of Cyclades, Greece, situated in the narrow passage between the islands of Mykonos and Rhenea. According to Greek myth it was originally a floating island, and was the birthplace of Apollo and Artemis. It was the seat of a great sanctuary in honor of Apollo, one of the most famous religious foundations of antiquity. From the time of Solon, Athens sent an annual embassy to the Delian festival. Delos was the center of the Delian League, formed to resist Persian aggression in 478 B.C. In 454 B.C. the sacred treasure of Delos was removed to the Athenian Acropolis. The island was an Athenian dependency down to the Macedonian period, when it became semi-independent, and in the 2nd century B.C. it again became subject to Athens. The city of Delos was made a free port by the Romans and developed into a great commercial mart. It was raided in 87 B.C. by the forces of Mithridates VI and soon fell to the status of an almost uninhabited place. The sanctuary of Apollo was excavated by the French School at Athens, beginning in 1873. The work ranks as one of the chief achievements of its kind. The buildings disclosed lie for the most part within the enclosure or temenos of Apollo, which is of trapeziform shape, and ab. 650 ft. to a side. In addition to the interesting finds of architecture and sculpture, epigraphical discoveries of the highest importance were made, bearing upon history and particularly upon the ceremonial and administration of the sanctuary. Area of the island, 2 sq. mi.

Delos, Confederacy of. See Delian League.

Delpech (del.pesh), Jacques Mathieu. b. at Toulouse, France, c1775; murdered at Montpellier, France, Oct. 29, 1832. French surgeon, author of Traité de l'orthomorphie (1828–29).

Delphi (del'fī). [Also, Delphoi (ᴛʜel.fē').] In ancient geography, a town in Phocis, Greece, situated ab. 6 mi. from the Corinthian Gulf, at the foot of Mount Parnassus: the seat of the world-renowned oracle of Pythian Apollo, the most famous oracle of antiquity. The temple had been won by Apollo from an earth spirit, presumably a snake, who inhabited the spot. Within the sacred precinct was a stone, the Omphalos, believed to mark the center of the earth, and a chasm leading to the center of the earth from which vapors emerged (this chasm has not been found by excavators). The oracle, known as the Pythia or Pythoness, putting herself in a trancelike state, would answer the question asked and this answer, explained or interpreted by the priests of the temple, was returned as being given from Apollo. Myth and legend emphasize the importance of the oracle. In later times the cult of Dionysus obtained a foothold here and Dionysus was believed to be the oracular god at certain times of the year. The oracle dated from prehistoric times, and was still respected when silenced by the Christian emperor Theodosius at the end of the 4th century A.D. Through the gifts of states and individuals who sought or had obtained the aid of the oracle, the Delphic sanctuary became enormously rich, not only in architecture and works of art, but in the precious metals. Its treasures of metals were plundered in antiquity, and Nero and other emperors robbed it of an astonishing number of statues and other art works. French official excavators began work there in 1892. Little exploration had before been possible, because the village of Kastri covered the site of the sanctuary. The village was removed, preparatory to the French exploration. Besides the splendid temple of Apollo, the enclosure of the sanctuary contained a theater, the council house, the Lesche, the Portico of the Athenians, a number of treasuries belonging to different states, and countless statues and other votive offerings. Buildings only second in importance were ranged outside of the enclosure.

Delphi. Town in N central Indiana, county seat of Carroll County, on the Wabash River ab. 60 mi. NW of Indianapolis. 2,530 (1950).

Delphinatus (del.fi.nā'tus). Medieval Latin name of Dauphiné.

Delphin Classics (del'fin). Edition of the Latin classics prepared by order of Louis XIV for the use of the Dauphin, Louis de Bourbon ("In usum Delphini," meaning "for the use of the Dauphin"). The first works were published in 1674 under the direction of Bossuet and Huet. They are sometimes called "dauphins."

Delphine (del.fēn'), Madame. See Madame Delphine.

Delphinus (del.fī'nus). One of the northern constellations, figured by the ancients as representing a dolphin. It is situated E of Aquila.

Delphos (del'fos). City in W Ohio, in Allen and Van Wert counties, ab. 14 mi. NW of Lima: canneries, truck-assembly plant, and manufactures of paper. It was platted in 1845, and was an important center along the route of the Miami and Erie Canal. 6,220 (1950).

Delpit (del.pē), Albert. b. at New Orleans, Jan. 30, 1849; d. at Paris, Jan. 4, 1893. French dramatist, journalist, and poet. Among his plays are Les Chevaliers de la patrie (1873) and Jean Nu-Pieds (1875). He afterward published a novel, Le Fils de Coralie (which was successful and was dramatized in 1879).

Delray Beach (del'rā). City in E Florida, in Palm Beach County, on the Atlantic Ocean N of Miami: vacation resort. It is the center for a truck-gardening region. 6,312 (1950).

Del Rio (del rē'ō). City in W Texas, county seat of Val Verde County, SE of Lubbock on the Rio Grande: shipping center for wool, mohair, and wine grapes. The San Felipe Springs, used for irrigation, are nearby. 14,211 (1950).

Delsarte (del.sȧrt), François Alexandre Nicolas Chéri. b. Dec. 19, 1811; d. July 19, 1871. French musician and teacher, noted for his studies of the art of oratorical, musical, and dramatic expression. He had sung with the Opéra-Comique when he turned to teaching (1839 et seq.) his applied aesthetics, coördinating body movements with the spoken or sung word. The system he developed was used by several famous actors and actresses and, expanded to include more of the calisthenic exercise, was brought to the U.S. in 1872 by James Morrison Steele MacKaye.

Delsberg (dels'berk). German name of Delémont.

Delta (del'tą). City in W Colorado, county seat of Delta County, on the Gunnison River: shipping center for apples, cherries, peaches, and other fruits. 4,097 (1950).

Delta. Pseudonym of Moir, David Macbeth.

Delta Amacuro (del'tä ä.mä.kö'rō). [Official name, Territorio Federal (or T. F.) Delta Amacuro; also, Territorio Delta Amacuro.] Territory in E Venezuela, bordering on British Guiana and the Atlantic Ocean. Oil is the principal product. Capital, Tucupita; area, 15,521 sq. mi.; pop. 30,957 (1950).

Delta Wedding. Novel (1946) by Eudora Welty. A regional novel, it exhibits her ability to handle descriptive and psychological details, as well as her narrative skill, and her personal knowledge (a result of her Southern birth, training, and education) of the psychology of the old South. Before appearing in book form, the novel was serialized in the Atlantic Monthly.

Delteil (del.tey'), Joseph. b. 1894—. French novelist and poet. He is the author of Les Cinq Sens (1925), Les Poilus (1926), Le Vert galant (1931), and other novels, as well as the fictionalized biography Jeanne d'Arc (1926), and of poems including Le Cœur grec (1918). Regarded at the beginning of his career as a novelist of importance, he has failed to hold public attention.

Deluc (dę.lük), Guillaume Antoine. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, 1729; d. there, Jan. 26, 1812. Swiss naturalist; brother of Jean André Deluc.

Deluc, Jean André. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 8, 1727; d. at Windsor, England, Nov. 7, 1817. Swiss geologist and physicist. His works include Recherches sur les modifications de l'atmosphère (1772), Lettres physiques et morales sur l'histoire de la terre (1778–80), and Traité élémentaire de géologie (1809).

De Luca (dā lö'kä), Giuseppe. b. at Rome, Dec. 29, 1876; d. Aug. 26, 1950. Italian operatic baritone. He made his debut (1897) and sang for eight years at La Scala, Milan, creating the role of Sharpless in the first performance (1904) of Madame Butterfly. In 1915 he joined the Metropolitan Opera Company at New York, making his debut there as Figaro in Il Barbiere di Siviglia.

He has played leading roles in Rigoletto, Don Giovanni, Otello, Damnation of Faust, Tannhäuser, Parsifal, Pagliacci, and Eugen Onegin.

Deluge (del'ūj). See the Flood.

Delyannis or Delijannis (del.i.an'is; Greek, ᴛʜᴇ.lē.än'ēs), Théodore. b. 1826; d. June 13, 1905. Greek statesman. From 1863 he was frequently in office as minister of foreign affairs, finance, or the interior. He represented Greece at the Congress of Berlin, and obtained an extension of Greek territory on the Thessalian frontier. He was five times premier (1885–86, 1890–92, 1895–April, 1897, 1902–03, and 1904–05). He was assassinated.

Dema (dā'mä). [Also: Badema, Wadema.] Bantu-speaking people of SE Africa, inhabiting W Mozambique, and closely related to the Nyanja in language and culture.

Demaratus (dem.a.rā'tus). fl. c510–480 B.C. Spartan king of the Eurypontid line, who reigned from c510 to 491 B.C. He shared with his colleague Cleomenes the command of the army sent in 510 to assist the Athenians in expelling Hippias. In 506 he prevented Cleomenes from restoring Hippias. He was deposed in 491 by Cleomenes, who elevated Leotychides to his place, after bribing the Delphic oracle to state that Leotychides and not Demaratus was the son of Ariston, the previous king. The last years of his life were spent at the court of Xerxes, whom he accompanied on the expedition against Greece in 481–480.

Demarçay (dę.mär.sā), Eugène Anatole. b. at Paris, 1852; d. 1904. French chemist. He discovered (1901) the rare-earth element europium. He read "a . . . spectrum . . . like an open book. Everyone who thought he had found a new . . . element took it to Demarçay and was immediately enlightened." He worked in his own private laboratory.

Demas (dē'mas). See also Dismas.

Demas. In the Bible, a companion, for a time, of Saint Paul. 2 Tim. iv. 10, 11.

Demavend (dem'a.vend). [Also, Damavand.] Extinct volcano in N Iran, the highest mountain of the Elburz range, situated ab. 50 mi. NE of Tehran. 18,600 ft.

Dembea (dem'bē.a), Lake. See Tana, Lake.

Dembiński (dem.bēn'skē), Bronisław. b. at Mala Komora, Poland, Aug. 14, 1858; d. 1940. Polish historian who served as professor at Lemberg (Lvov), Warsaw, and Posen (Poznań). He was the author (in Polish) of Russia and the French Revolution (1896) and Poland at the Critical Point (1913).

Dembiński, Henryk. b. at or near Kraków, Poland, May 3, 1791; d. at Paris, June 13, 1864. Polish general. He served in the Polish revolution of 1830–31, conducted (1831) a celebrated retreat through Lithuania, was commander of the Hungarians in 1849, and lost (1849) the battles of Kápolna and Temesvár (Timişoara).

Demchukdonrob (dem.chök.dôn.rōb'). Mongol name of Prince Te.

Demelli (dā.mel'lē), Francesco Ezechiele Ermenegildo Cavaliere Suppé. See Suppé, Franz von.

Demerara (dem.ę.rär'a, -rä'ra). County in N British Guiana, formerly a separate colony. Capital, Georgetown; area, 4,420 sq. mi.; pop. 185,184 (1931).

Demerara River. [Also, Demerary.] River in N British Guiana which flows N into the Atlantic Ocean at Georgetown. Length, ab. 200 mi.; navigable ab. 70 mi.

Demerdjis (ᴛʜᴇ.mer.jēs') or Demerdzis (ᴛʜᴇ.mer.dzēs'), Constantine. b. at Athens, Greece, 1876; d. 1936. Greek lawyer and statesman. He studied law at the University of Athens (1892–96) and at Munich (1896–1900), practiced law at Athens, and acted as instructor of Roman law at Athens University (1901–02). He served in the government as deputy from Attica-Boeotia (1910–36), member of the constitutional convention of 1910, and minister of navy (1913–14, 1917), and helped found and was head of the Progressive (Union) Party (1924). As prime minister (1935–36), he was the last parliamentary premier of Greece until 1946. Author of Necessary Succession in Roman and Modern Law, Liability of Government for Illegal Acts of Officials, Government Finances, and others.

Demeter (dē.mē'tėr). In ancient Greek mythology, daughter of Cronus and Rhea; the goddess of vegetation and of useful fruits, protectress of social order and of marriage; one of the great Olympian deities. She is usually associated, and even confounded, in legend and in cult, with her daughter Persephone (Proserpine) or Kore the Maiden, whose rape by Hades (Pluto) symbolizes some of the most profound phases of Hellenic mysticism. She was a principal character at the celebration of the Thesmophoria, a women's festival memorializing Demeter's establishment of the laws of civilization, and in the Eleusinian mysteries, where her withdrawal from the earth, the consequent failure of crops, the rebirth of the grain, and the whole cycle of the yearly change as symbolized in the Persephone myth, were enacted, presumably, since nothing definite is known of the Eleusinian ritual. The Romans of the end of the republic and of the empire assimilated to the Hellenic conception of Demeter the primitive Italic chthonian divinity Ceres.

Demeter. Poetic play (1905) by Robert Bridges. The nature of the work and its method are indicated by the subtitle, A Masque. Like his Prometheus, Bacchus, Ulysses, and Achilles, it illustrates the author's classical tastes and interests.

Demeter and Other Poems. Volume of 28 poems (1889) by Tennyson. It includes "On the Jubilee of Queen Victoria," "To Professor Jebb," "Vastness," "The Ring," dedicated to James Russell Lowell, "To Ulysses," "Merlin and the Gleam," "Romney's Remorse," a poem about the English painter, "By an Evolutionist," "The Snowdrop," "The Throstle," and "The Oak." The thin volume (of 175 pages) opens with "To the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava" and closes (in accordance with Tennyson's frequently expressed wish) with "Crossing the Bar." The title poem is the fourth one in the collection.

Demeter of Cnidus (nī'dus). Greek statue (c4th century B.C.) of the school of Scopas, now in the British Museum at London. The figure is seated, fully draped, and although damaged, gives a feeling of profound grief.

Demetrius (dę.mē'tri.us). For Russian rulers, see Dmitri.

Demetrius. In Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus, a son of Tamora, queen of the Goths.

Demetrius. In Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, a Grecian gentleman, in love with Hermia.

Demetrius. In Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, a friend of Antony.

Demetrius. Son of the king in John Fletcher's Humorous Lieutenant, in love with Celia.

Demetrius I (of Macedonia). [Surnamed Poliorcetes, meaning "Taker of Cities" or "Besieger."] b. c336 B.C.; d. at Apamea, in ancient Syria, 283 B.C. King of Macedonia (294–288); son of Antigonus I, who was called Antigonus Cyclops. He liberated Athens and Megara in 307, defeated Ptolemy I in 306, unsuccessfully besieged Rhodes (305–304), and was defeated at Ipsus in 301. He was chosen king by the army in 294, gained control (293–289) of Greece, and invaded Asia, which Antigonus had held, with an inferior force in 287. He surrendered to Seleucus I in 285 and drank himself to death.

Demetrius II (of Macedonia). b. c276 B.C.; d. 229 B.C. King of Macedonia; son of Antigonus II Gonatas, whom he succeeded c239. During his reign the Macedonians fought to preserve their territory; the Demetrian War, so called, was fought against the Aetolian League and the Achaeans, but Demetrius was defeated in the north. Philip V of Macedon was his son by his second wife Phthia (or Chryseis).

Demetrius I (of Syria). [Surnamed Soter, meaning "Savior."] b. 187 B.C.; killed 150 B.C. King of Syria from 162 B.C.; grandson of Antiochus the Great. After living as a captive in Rome while his uncle, Antiochus IV, and his cousin, Antiochus V, sat on the throne, he escaped (162 B.C.), killed his cousin, and became king himself. He suppressed the revolt of Timarchus in Babylon and put down the Maccabee uprising in Palestine. But Alexander Balas, a pretender, claimed the throne, and, with the help of the Maccabees, Egyptians, and others, overthrew Demetrius.

Demetrius II (of Syria). [Surnamed Nicator.] b. c161 B.C.; d. near Tyre, c125 B.C. King of Syria (147–141 and 129–126 B.C.); son of Demetrius I. He overthrew Alexander Balas, the usurper, with the aid of Ptolemy VI (Ptolemy Philometor), obtaining both the throne and Ptolemy's daughter, Cleopatra Thea, wife of Alexander Balas. He defeated the attempt (145–142 B.C.) to place Antiochus VI, son of Alexander Balas, on the throne. In 141 he was captured by the Parthians and remained their prisoner for about ten years, his brother Antiochus VII occupying the throne in his absence and marrying Cleopatra, Demetrius's wife. Demetrius regained the throne in 129 but was soon after killed in a civil war. He was succeeded by his sons Seleucus V and Antiochus VIII.

Demetrius III (of Syria). [Surnamed Euergetes and Philometor.] King of Syria c94–88 B.C.; son of Antiochus VIII Grypus. He struggled for the throne with his cousin Antiochus X and his brother Philip; he was defeated, captured, and held prisoner until his death by the Parthians.

Demetrius Doboobie (dō.bō'bi), Dr. See Alasco.

Demetrius Fannius (fan'i.us). In Ben Jonson's play The Poetaster, a shifty "dresser of plays about the town here." The character was intended to humiliate Thomas Dekker, with whom Jonson had had a quarrel; Dekker answered with his burlesque of Jonson's style in Satiromastix.

Demetrius Phalereus (fạ.lē'rōs, fạ.lir'ē.us). b. at Phalerus, in Attica, 345 B.C.; d. in Upper Egypt, 283 B.C. Athenian orator and politician. He entered public life c325 as a supporter of Phocion, and in 317 was placed by Phocion's successor, Cassander, at the head of the administration of Athens. Expelled from Athens in 307 by Demetrius I of Macedonia (Demetrius Poliorcetes), he retired to the court of Ptolemy Lagi at Alexandria, where he devoted himself wholly to literary pursuits. He was exiled by Ptolemy's successor to Upper Egypt, where he is said to have died of the bite of a snake.

Demidov (di.mē'dọf), Akinfi Nikitich. d. c1740. Russian manufacturer; son of Nikita Demidov.

Demidov, Prince Anatoli Nikolayevich. b. at Moscow, 1812; d. at Paris, April 29, 1870. Russian noble and philanthropist; son of Nikolai Nikitich Demidov.

Demidov, Nikita. b. c1665; d. after 1720. Russian manufacturer, founder of the family of Demidov. The son of a serf, he rose into favor under Peter the Great by his skill in the manufacture of arms. He established the first iron foundry in Siberia in 1699, and received a patent of nobility in 1720.

Demidov, Count Nikolai Nikitich. b. at St. Petersburg, c1773; d. at Florence, 1828. Russian capitalist; nephew of Paul Grigoryevich Demidov.

Demidov, Paul Grigoryevich. b. at Reval, Russia, 1738; d. at Moscow, 1781. Russian scholar and patron of science; nephew of Akinfi Nikitich Demidov.

De Mille (dẹ mil', dē), Agnes. b. at New York, c1905—. American dancer and choreographer; daughter of William Churchill De Mille and granddaughter of Henry George. Having studied ballet dancing and choreography under skilled teachers, she won acclaim at her debut in 1928. In the following year she directed the dancing in a revival of The Black Crook, a famous 19th-century musical show; in 1933 she was choreographer for a production of the noted London impresario Thomas B. Cochran, and in 1936 for a motion-picture version of Romeo and Juliet. Her subsequent work with the Ballet Theatre, the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo (for which she composed and danced in the ballet Rodeo), the Theatre Guild, and other groups, especially in connection with the choreography of successful musical comedies such as Oklahoma!, Bloomer Girl, Allegro, Brigadoon, and Carousel, doubtless spread appreciation of the ballet more widely than ever before in the U.S. Both as a dancer and as a choreographer she proved herself a master of humor and of pathos alike. Her autobiographical book Dance to the Piper was serialized in the Atlantic Monthly and published in 1952.

De Mille, Cecil Blount. b. at Ashfield, Mass., Aug. 12, 1881—. American motion-picture producer; son of Henry Churchill De Mille. He was the organizer and president (1918–23) of the Mercury Aviation Company at Hollywood, Calif., first commercial company to book passengers for regular flights, president (1921 et seq.) of Cecil B. De Mille Productions, Inc., and producer (1936–45) of the Lux Radio Theatre of the Air. His film productions, which began in 1915 (director since 1913), include Carmen, Male and Female, Feet of Clay, Ten Commandments, The King of Kings, The Volga Boatman, The Sign of the Cross, Cleopatra, The Crusades, The Plainsman, The Buccaneer, Union Pacific, and Reap the Wild Wind. De Mille popularized not only the spectacle motion picture but the type of the director, wearing open-collar shirt and puttees and speaking through a megaphone.

De Mille, Henry Churchill. b. at Washington, N.C., Sept. 17, 1853; d. at Pompton, N.J., Feb. 10, 1893. American playwright, sometime partner of David Belasco; father of William Churchill De Mille and Cecil Blount De Mille. A graduate (1875) of Columbia College, he soon became associated with the theater, as an actor for a short time and then as a producer. His first original play, John Delmer's Daughters or Duty, was produced in 1883. After The Main Line or Rawson's Y, written (1886) with Charles Barnard, followed his Belasco productions, The Wife (1887), Lord Chumley (1888), The Charity Ball (1889), and Men and Women (1890). His last play was The Lost Paradise, an English version of Ludwig Fulda's Das Verlorene Paradies.

De Mille, William Churchill. b. at Washington, N.C., July 25, 1878—. American playwright; son of Henry Churchill De Mille and brother of Cecil Blount De Mille. Author of Strongheart, The Warrens of Virginia, The Land of the Free, The Woman, and Hollywood Saga; coauthor of The Royal Mounted, Classmates, The Genius, and other plays.

Deming (dem'ing). Village in SW New Mexico, county seat of Luna County, in a fruit, livestock, and mineral producing area. 5,672 (1950).

Demiri (de.mē'rē), al-. See Damiri, al-.

Demme (dem'ẹ), Hermann Christoph Gottfried. [Pseudonym, Karl Stille.] b. at Mühlhausen, Thuringia, Germany, Sept. 7, 1760; d. at Altenburg, Germany, Dec. 26, 1822. German poet and novelist, author of Pächter Martin und sein Vater (1792–93) and others.

Demme, Wilhelm Ludwig. b. at Mühlhausen, Thuringia, Germany, March 20, 1801; d. at Würzburg, Bavaria, Germany, March 26, 1878. German jurist; son of H. C. G. Demme. He wrote Buch der Verbrechen (1851) and others.

Demmin (de.mēn'). Town in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Mecklenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Pomerania, Prussia, situated on the Peene River, ab. 73 mi. NW of Stettin. Before World War II it was a port for coastwise shipping and had a sugar refinery, brewery, and agricultural markets. The medieval town walls are preserved. One of the oldest Slavic settlements in Pomerania, it was besieged (1148) in vain by German crusaders; taken (1164) by Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony; became (1283) a member of the Hanseatic League; fell to Sweden in 1648 and to Prussia in 1720. Pop. 18,006 (1946).

Democedes (dem.ọ.sē'dēz). b. at Crotona, Magna Graecia (now Crotone, Calabria, Italy); fl. in the second half of the 6th century B.C. Greek physician. He practiced at the courts of Polycrates of Samos and of Darius the Great (Darius I), but returned to practice in Greece.

Democharès (dẹ.mok'ạ.rēz). fl. 322–280 B.C. Athenian orator; nephew of Demosthenes. He came forward in 322 B.C. as an orator of the anti-Macedonian party, and after the restoration of democracy by Demetrius I of Macedonia (Demetrius Poliorcetes) in 307 became the leader of the popular party. He was several times expelled by the antidemocratic party, returning the last time in 287 or 286. He was sent as ambassador to Lysimachus c282, and disappears from view in 280.

Democracy. Poem (1841) by John Greenleaf Whittier. In 18 four-line stanzas, it is included in the group called Songs of Labor and Reform. The poet hails democracy as "Bearer of Freedom's holy light," "Breaker of Slavery's chain and rod," and as "the foe of all which pains the sight Or wounds the generous ear of God."

Democracy. Address (1884) by James Russell Lowell. It was delivered as an inaugural address, on Oct. 6, 1884, when he became president of the Birmingham and Midland Institute, in England. It was published in 1887 in Democracy and Other Addresses. It opens with a striking sentence: "He must be a born leader or misleader of men, or must have been sent into the world unfurnished with that modulating and restraining balance-wheel which we call a sense of humor, who, in old age, has as strong a confidence in his opinions and in the necessity of bringing the universe into conformity with them as he had in youth."

Democracy: An American Novel. Novel by Henry Adams, published (anonymously) in 1880, a vehicle for discussion of intrigue for power in late 19th-century Washington, D.C. Madeleine Lee uses her admirer, John Carrington, to become acquainted with a political boss, Senator Ratcliffe, whose suit she rejects when his lack of scruples is ultimately brought to her attention. Disillusioned by his defection, Madeleine leaves Washington. Some critics feel that President Hayes is represented in the character of "Old Granite," an unsophisticated president from the Middle West who permits himself to be victimized by the astute and ambitious Ratcliffe.

Democracy and Education. Work on educational philosophy (1916) by John Dewey. It is the best known of his many works, was successful on its appearance, has been so ever since, and is now accepted as an educational classic. It is used as a standard text in many colleges, and in schools of education, and is studied along with the writings of Pestalozzi, Herbart, Froebel, Spencer, Huxley, and William James, as "an introduction to the philosophy of education," which is its subtitle. In its 26 chapters, Dewey discusses education as a necessity of life, as a social function, as direction and growth, as conservative and progressive, and such topics as aims and thinking in education, work and play, labor and leisure, geography, history, and science, practical studies, humanism, the individual and the world, and moral and educational values.

Democratic Group (of Luxembourg). [Former name, Radical Liberal Party.] Luxembourg political party which supports labor legislation and the progressive development of lay institutions.

Democratic League. Name adopted (1944) by the middle-of-the-road Chinese Federation of Democratic Parties, which was originally established (1941) jointly by the National Socialist Party, the China Youth Party, the Rural Reconstructionists, the Vocational Educational Association, the Third Party, and individual members of the National Salvation Association. After Japan's surrender (1945) the first two broke with the League and joined the Kuomintang-led government which (1947) outlawed the League. The League subsequently participated in the Communist-led government established (1949) at Peiping.

Democratic Party. In U.S. history, a political party which arose c1792. It was called first the Republican, later the Democratic-Republican, and afterward (c1828) simply the Democratic Party. Until the administration of Woodrow Wilson, it generally opposed a strong central government, and generally favored a strict construction of the Constitution. It has controlled the executive or the national government under the administrations of the following presidents: Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Van Buren, Polk, Pierce, Buchanan, Cleveland, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Harry S. Truman. Its principal founder was Jefferson. It may be regarded as the successor of the Anti-Federalist (opponents of Hamilton's Federalists) and Democratic-Republican parties. Intraparty conflict has been frequent; the split between the Northern faction headed by Stephen Douglas and the Southern faction headed by J. C. Breckenridge helped establish the Republican Party as the strong power in politics both before and after the Civil War; the Southern states' rights wing has battled the Northern industrial labor group recurrently ever since the close of the Civil War. Unity within the party has been achieved most often under the rise of a reform president or candidate in time of crisis: Bryan in 1896, Wilson in 1912, Roosevelt in 1932. Traditionally the Democratic Party wins the electoral votes of the "Solid South," broken only seldom by Republican candidates.

Democratic People's Party (of the Netherlands). Dutch political party formed in October, 1947, as a result of a split in the Labor Party between those favoring the maintenance of private ownership in some fields and exponents of progressive state ownership of the means of production.

Democratic Union. Alliance of the Argentine Radical Party with other anti-Conservative groups to oppose Juan Domingo Perón, the government candidate for president. Its dissolution was announced on April 16, 1946, less than two months after Perón's victory at the polls.

Democratic Vistas. Prose work by Walt Whitman, published in 1871 and included in Two Rivulets (1876). It deals with the themes of democracy, individualism, and materialism.

Democritus (dē.mok'ri.tus). [Called "the Abderite" and "the Laughing Philosopher."] b. at Abdera, in Thrace, c460 B.C.; d. c357 B.C. Greek philosopher. He inherited an ample fortune, which enabled him to visit the chief countries of Asia and Africa in pursuit of knowledge. He adopted and expanded the atomistic theory of Leucippus, which he expounded in a number of works, fragments only of which are extant. He is said to have been of a cheerful disposition, which prompted him to laugh at the follies of men (hence the epithet "the Laughing Philosopher"). According to tradition he put out his eyes in order to be less disturbed by outward things in his philosophical speculations. He distinguished between the things belonging to a substance by convention (heat, hardness) and in reality (atoms). Even the soul was a manifestation of the real existence of the body and it perished with the body. His mechanistic philosophy extended to the gods, mortal to Democritus, though composed of finer atomic stuff than man was. His ethical system was based on pleasure as an end; pleasure was, however, to be tempered by avoidance of excess.

Democritus Junior. Pseudonym of Burton, Robert.

Demodocus (dē.mod'ō.kus). In the Odyssey, a famous blind bard who, during the stay of Ulysses at the court of Alcinous, delighted the guests by recounting the feats of the Greeks at Troy and singing the amours of Ares and Aphrodite.

Demogeot (dẹ.mo.zhō), Jacques Claude. b. at Paris, July 5, 1808; d. there, Jan. 9, 1894. French literary historian and writer, professor at the Sorbonne. He was the author of Histoire de la littérature français (1851).

De Moivre (dẹ mwä'vrẹ), Abraham. See Moivre, Abraham de.

Demolins (dẹ.mo.laṅ), Edmond. b. at Marseilles, France, 1852; d. at Roches, France, July 22, 1907. French historian and sociologist. In 1886 he founded, with others, La Science Sociale, a journal devoted to the study of social economics along then new lines following the methods of Le Play, of whom he was a pupil. Among the best known of his publications are A quoi tient la supériorité des Anglo-Saxons (1897), Les Français d'aujourd'hui (1898), L'Éducation nouvelle (1898), Les Grandes Routes des peuples (1904), and Classification sociale (1905).

Demon, The. [Italian title, Il Demonio (ēl dā.mō'nyō).] Opera in three acts by Anton Rubinstein. It was produced at St. Petersburg on Jan. 25, 1875, and at London on June 21, 1881.

De Montfort (dẹ mont'fọrt). Tragedy by Joanna Baillie, produced in 1800.

Demopolis (dẹ.mop'ō.lis). City in W Alabama, in Marengo County, ab. 125 mi. N of Mobile at the confluence of the Tombigbee and Black Warrior rivers, in a cotton-producing region. The first white settlement here was made in 1818 by a group of refugees from France after the fall of Napoleon. 5,004 (1950).

De Morgan (dẹ môr'gạn), Augustus. b. at Madura, Madras, India, June 27, 1806; d. at London, March 18, 1871. English mathematician and logician. He was educated at Cambridge and at Lincoln's Inn, and was professor of mathematics at London University (1828–31) and at University College, London (1836–66). He was the author of Elements of Arithmetic (1831), Elements of Algebra (1835), Elements of Trigonometry (1837), Essay on Probabilities (1838), Differential and Integral Calculus (1842), Formal Logic (1847), and Budget of Paradoxes (1872).

De Morgan, William (Frend). b. at London, Nov. 16, 1839; d. at London, Jan. 13, 1917. English novelist, potter, stained-glass designer, and inventor. He was the son of the mathematician Augustus De Morgan, "the wisest and best man I have ever known," and he derived his middle name from his grandfather, William Frend, scientist and economic reformer. He was educated in London at the University College School and at the College, where his father had been a professor. At the Royal Academy school, which he entered in 1859, he met, and came to know as lifelong friends, Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, and William Morris. Until 1905, when he retired, he was engaged in the manufacture of pottery and stained glass, both in his own factories and with partners. This phase of his life, of much longer duration than his writing activity, produced a paper on pottery which he read in 1892 before the Society of Arts (published in the 40th volume of its Journal), and a Report on the Feasibility of a Manufacture of Glazed Pottery in Egypt (1894), written in 1893 when he visited Egypt by special invitation. Always of a scientific turn of mind, an inheritance from his father and grandfather, he invented a mill for grinding clay, several tools and articles connected with pottery, and was working on various mechanisms associated with national defense, both air and submarine, at the time of his death. His first novel, generally considered his best, Joseph Vance: An Ill-Written Autobiography (1906), was published in his sixty-seventh year. It created a sensation and was enthusiastically praised by readers and critics. It is a story of low life in London, centering around the adventures of a gutter boy, and Lossie Thorpe, a lovable heroine, who finally marries him after both have had previous mates. His second novel was Alice-for-Short (1907), the story of Alicia Kavanagh, a London girl, and Charles Heath, an artist in whom, says De Morgan, "I put much of myself." It was followed in 1908 by Somehow Good, dealing with the problem of loss of memory as a result of shock. It Never Can Happen Again (1909) and When Ghost Meets Ghost (1914) are regarded as examples of Victorian fiction. An Affair of Dishonor (1910), a historical romance, and A Likely Story (1911), which is something less than a full-length novel, are considered inferior efforts. The Old Madhouse (1919) and The Old Man's Youth (1921), both left unfinished at his death, were completed by his wife, Evelyn Mary Pickering, 18 years his junior, whom he married in 1887. De Morgan has been compared to Dickens, whom he resembles in many respects, and he is regarded as a belated example of the Victorian type of novelist.

Demos and Dionysus (dē′mos; dī.ō.nī′sus). Dialogue in blank verse by Edwin Arlington Robinson, published in Dionysus in Doubt (1925). The forces of reason and equality exemplified in Demos are contrasted with those of passion and individualism symbolized by Dionysus.

Demosthenes (dē.mos′thē.nēz). d. at Syracuse, 413 B.C. Athenian general in the Peloponnesian War. In 425 he defended Pylos against the Spartans, and made the dispositions by which the enemy was forced to capitulate, although the glory of the exploit (the unheard-of capture of Spartan soldiery) was claimed by Cleon, who relieved him in the command. He commanded under Nicias in the unsuccessful expedition against Syracuse in 413. Having been captured in the retreat, he was put to death by order of the Syracusan assembly.

Demosthenes. b. at Paeania, in Attica, 384 or 383 B.C.; d. on the island of Calauria, in the Saronic Gulf, 322 B.C. Greatest of Greek orators. He is said to have been the pupil of the orator Isaeus, and entered public life as a speaker in the popular assembly in 355. In 351 he delivered the first of a splendid series of orations directed against the encroachment of Philip II of Macedon, three of which are specifically denominated Philippics. In 346 he served as a member of the embassy which concluded with Philip the so-called peace of Philocrates. As Philip immediately after broke this treaty, Demosthenes came forward as the leader of the patriotic party, in opposition to the Macedonian party which was headed by Aeschines. In 340 he caused a fleet to be sent to the relief of Byzantium, which was besieged by Philip. On the outbreak of the Amphictyonic War, he persuaded the Athenians to form an alliance with Thebes against Philip, who defeated the allies at Chaeronea in 338, and usurped the hegemony of Greece. He was one of the leaders of the unsuccessful rising which took place on the death of Philip in 336, was exiled by the Macedonian party in 324, was recalled by the patriotic party on the outbreak of a fresh rising at the death of Alexander in 323, and on the capture of Athens by Antipater and Craterus in 322 fled to Calauria, near Argolis, where he took poison in the temple of Poseidon to avoid capture. His chief orations are three Philippics (351, 344, 341), three Olynthiacs (349, 349, 348), On the Peace (346), On the Embassy (343), On the Affairs of the Chersonese (341), On the Crown (330). This last-named speech, the most famous of Demosthenes's orations, was in answer to Aeschines, who objected when Ctesiphon moved that a crown be given to Demosthenes for his services to the state. Demosthenes was the great opponent of the Macedonian conquest of Greece, holding that Athens, traditionally and actually, was the heart of any Greek nation, and that it was necessary that the spark be rekindled that had died during the Peloponnesian War. Many legendary stories are told of how he obtained his oratorical power: a stammerer, he taught himself to speak slowly by putting pebbles in his mouth; he went to the seashore and declaimed to the waves so that the noise of an audience would not disturb him; he would run uphill while orating in order to strengthen his weak voice; he shut himself in a cave and copied Thucydides's history eight times in order to attain to a fine style. He seems actually to have had a speech defect; his style in oratory is not complex, but simple and pithy, and effective. The first printed collective edition of his orations is that published by Aldus Manutius at Venice in 1504.

Demotika or Demotica (ᵺhē.mô′tē.kä). See Didymoteikhon.

Demotike (ᵺhē.mô.tē.kē′). [English, Demotic.] One of the two forms of written modern Greek (the other is Katharevousa). The word means "popular" and the ideal of the proponents of this movement was the formation of an acceptable standard literary language based on the common spoken dialects of Greece. It was first systematized by Jean Psichari in 1888, though a similar style had been used occasionally since 1800, and popular dialects had been used in verse for several centuries before that. Since Psichari it had gradually been modified in the direction of the Katharevousa, chiefly by dropping some dialect words and forms and some foreign loanwords, and by adopting some words from the Katharevousa. At various times, notably in 1902 and 1903, there have been riots directed against its use, particularly for translations from the Scriptures and from ancient Greek literature, but it is now the generally preferred form for fiction and poetry. Its use for other purposes is to some extent political: the further left politically, the more extreme the form of the Demotike used in journalism and serious writing. Its chief marks are (1) an inflection in basic agreement with that of educated speakers, the most obvious sign being the absence of final -n from many forms where it had been present in ancient Greek, and (2) a vocabulary of mixed origin, including a basis of spoken Greek with many borrowings from the Katharevousa and from other languages, but few new coinages.

Dempsey (demp′si, dem′si), Jack. [Original name, William Harrison Dempsey; called the "Manassa Mauler."] b. at Manassa, Colo., June 24, 1895—. American heavyweight fighter. He engaged in his first regulation fight in 1915. Dempsey knocked out Fred Fulton in 14 seconds (1918), and went on to knock out Jess Willard in the third round at Toledo, Ohio (July 4, 1919) to win the world's heavyweight championship. He defended his title against Georges Carpentier (1921), Tom Gibbons (1923), and Luis Firpo (1923), but lost it to James Joseph (Gene) Tunney at Philadelphia (Sept. 23, 1926). He failed to regain the title from Tunney at Chicago (Sept. 22, 1927), and retired from boxing after losing a decision to King Levinsky (Feb. 19, 1932). His fights were always colorful. He beat Willard (who was taller by a head) so badly that the champion was unable to leave his corner. The Firpo fight saw Dempsey come back to knock out the Argentine fighter after the latter had knocked Dempsey out of the ring. The second Tunney fight contained the "long count" incident: Dempsey knocked Tunney down and did not, as the rules required, go to a neutral corner, thus permitting Tunney to stay down for 14 seconds when he might have been counted out in ten. A controversial figure in World War I because he worked in a shipyard and was not in uniform, Dempsey was a physical training officer in the Coast Guard in World War II.

Dempster (demp′stėr), Janet. Woman in George Eliot's novel Janet's Repentance who is rescued from a passion for drink by her friend and pastor.

Dempster, John. b. at Florida, Fulton County, N.Y., Jan. 2, 1794; d. at Evanston, Ill., Nov. 28, 1863. American Methodist clergyman, founder of Biblical institutes at Concord, N.H., and Evanston, Ill.

Dempster, Thomas. b. at Cliftbog, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, Aug. 23, 1579; d. near Bologna, Italy, Sept. 6, 1625. Scottish scholar. He was educated at the Jesuit seminary at Douai and at the University of Paris, and c1619 was appointed professor of humanities at the University of Bologna. He was the author of Historia ecclesiastica gentis Scotorum (1627).

Demter (dem'tėr). See Deventer.

Demuth (dẹ.möth'), Charles. b. at Lancaster, Pa., 1883; d. there, Oct. 23, 1935. American painter, chiefly of water colors. His best-known works are precise studies of flowers and vegetables and of architectural subjects, combining a cubistic analysis of planes and shapes with an effect of delicacy and translucency. He studied at Drexel Institute, Philadelphia (1901), at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts (1903) under Anschutz and Chase, and at Paris (1907–08, 1912–14). On his return from Paris he did a series of illustrations for works by Zola, Poe, Balzac, and Henry James. Among his paintings are Acrobats, Corn (c1925), Poppies (c1930), In the Key of Blue, My Egypt (1925; a picture of grain elevators), and others. He is represented in the Whitney Museum of American Art at New York, the Duncan Phillips Memorial Gallery at Washington, and elsewhere.

Demuth (dā'möt), Fritz. b. at Berlin, Jan. 11, 1876—. German industrialist. He served (1918–20) with the treasury department, and has been a member of the Reichstag and of the Berlin chamber of commerce.

Dena (dā'nạ). See Elmina.

Denain (dẹ.nañ). Town in N France, in the department of Nord, situated at the junction of the Selle and Escaut rivers, ab. 7 mi. SW of Valenciennes. It is one of the most important steel centers in France. Coal is mined in the vicinity. Here Marshal Villars defeated (1712) the Imperial army under Prince Eugene of Savoy. 24,908 (1946).

Denali (dẹ̄.nä'lē). See McKinley, Mount.

De natura deorum (dē nạ.tū'rạ dē.ō'rum). [Eng. trans., "On the Nature of the Gods."] Dialogues by Cicero, in three books, treating of the existence, nature, and providence of the gods.

Denbigh (den'bi). Municipal borough and market town in N Wales, in Denbighshire, situated on the river Clwyd, ab. 11 mi. W of Mold, ab. 209 mi. NW of London by rail. It is the county seat of Denbighshire. Denbigh has a ruined castle, which was taken by the Parliamentarians in 1645. Pop. 8,127 (1951).

Denbighshire (den'bi.shir) or Denbigh. Maritime county in N Wales. It is bounded on the N by the North Sea, on the NE by Flintshire, on the E by Cheshire (England), the detached portion of Flintshire, and Shropshire (England), on the S by Montgomeryshire and Merionethshire, and on the W by Caernarvonshire. The surface is mountainous in the S and W portions, hilly in the E part, and level to undulating in the N. The county is situated on the North Wales coal field and coal mining is an important activity. Iron, lead, and slate are also produced. County seat, Denbigh; area of administrative county, ab. 669 sq. mi.; pop. of administrative county, 170,699 (1951).

den Bosch (dẹn bôs'). See 's Hertogenbosch.

Denby (den'bi), Charles. b. in Botetourt County, Va., June 16, 1830; d. at Jamestown, N.Y., Jan. 13, 1904. American diplomat. He was educated at Georgetown University and at the Virginia Military Institute, and was admitted to the Indiana bar in 1855. He served in the Union army during the Civil War, rising to the rank of colonel, and was U.S. minister to China from 1885 to 1898. In 1898 he was appointed by the president a member of the commission for the investigation of the war with Spain, and in 1899 a member of the civil commission for the investigation of affairs in the Philippines.

Denby, Edwin. b. at Evansville, Ind., Feb. 18, 1870; d. at Detroit, Mich., Feb. 8, 1929. American politician, secretary of the navy under Harding, remembered for his association with the "Teapot Dome" scandal. He was graduated (LL.B., 1896) from the University of Michigan, served with the navy in the Spanish-American War, established his law practice at Detroit, was in the Michigan legislature (1903), and was a member of Congress (1905 et seq.). In World War I he enlisted as a private in the U.S. Marine Corps, was engaged in home duty, and was discharged as a major. His administration of the Navy Department was marred by a scandal concerning the transfer of naval oil reserves from public title to lease by private oil interests. Although there was no evidence that he was bribed, his signature appeared on the leases made out to the oil companies represented by Harry Sinclair and Edward L. Doheny. The lands were later restored to the government by legal proceedings following the revelation of the contracts. In February, 1924, a Senate resolution requested the dismissal of Denby, which Harding's successor, Coolidge, refused to carry out on the grounds that the leases had been authorized under law. Denby submitted his resignation on February 18, 1924, and it became effective on March 10. Later investigations of the scandal cleared Denby's name; he practiced law at Detroit until his death.

Denby Dale. Urban district in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Dearne, ab. 8 mi. SE of Huddersfield, ab. 214 mi. N of London by rail. 9,651 (1951).

Dendera (den'dėr.ạ). [Also: Denderah; ancient Greek, Tentyra, Tentyris.] Town in Upper Egypt, situated on the Nile. It is celebrated for its temple of the cow-goddess Hathor, which, notwithstanding its late date, begun by Ptolemy XI (Ptolemy Auletes), and the great pronaos (columned hall outside the temple proper) added as late as the time of Tiberius, is one of the most interesting buildings in Egypt, owing to its almost perfect preservation, even to the roof. The imposing hexastyle pronaos has four ranges of Hathoric columns; on its ceiling is a noted sculptured zodiac, combining Egyptian and classical elements. Next to the pronaos is a hypostyle hall (ceiling supported on columns) of six columns, from which three chambers open on each side, and beyond this is a vestibule before a large hall in which stands an isolated cella. This hall is surrounded by a series of chambers, one of which in the middle of the back wall contained the emblematic sistrum of the goddess. The whole interior surface is sculptured, the art, however, being inferior. On the roof there is a small six-chambered temple to the local divinity Osiris-An.

Dendermonde (den.dėr.mōn'dẹ). Flemish name of Termonde.

Dendi (dān'dē). Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting the Niger valley in N Dahomey and SW French Niger territory. Like their northwestern neighbors, the Djerma, they speak a dialect of Songhai. Their population is estimated at ab. 20,000 (by Y. Urvoy, Petit atlas ethno-demographique du Soudan, 1942). The Dendi are completely Mohammedanized.

Dendin (dañ.dañ), Perrin. Ignorant peasant, applied to as a judge, in François Rabelais's Pantagruel. His method was to let people fight till they were tired of it: a satire on lawyers who prefer the ruin of their client to the slightest concession. He loved eating and drinking, and settled the disputes of his neighbors while indulging these tastes.

Deneb (den'eb). Word meaning "tail," from Arabic, used as the name of several stars, in reference to their situation in the constellation to which they respectively belong. The principal are the following: 1. Deneb Algedi (al'jẹ̄.dē), the third-magnitude star δ Capricorni. 2. Deneb Algenubi (al.jẹ̄.nū'bē), the third-magnitude star η Ceti, at the root of the whale-monster's tail. 3. Deneb-al-okab (al.ō.kôb'), the third-magnitude star ζ Aquilae. The name is also applied to ε Aquilae, close by. 4. Deneb al-shemali (al-she.mä'lē), the fourth-magnitude star ι Ceti, at the tip of the northern fluke of the monster's tail. 5. Deneb Cygni (sig'nī), the first-magnitude star α Cygni, otherwise known as Arided. 6. Deneb Kaitos (kī'tos), the third-magnitude star β Ceti, at the tip of the southern fluke of the tail, otherwise called Diphda. When used alone, Deneb commonly refers to Deneb Cygni.

Denebola (dẹ̄.neb'ō.lạ). The second-magnitude star β Leonis, also sometimes called Dafirah and Serpha.

Denfeld (den'feld), Louis Emil. b. at Westboro, Mass., April 13, 1891—. American naval officer. He was commissioned ensign in 1912 and served on the destroyers Ammen and Lamberton on escort duty during World War

I. In World War II he was assistant chief (1942–45) and chief (1945–47) of naval personnel. Promoted (1947) to admiral, he was commander in chief (1947) of the Pacific fleet, and served (1947–49) as chief of naval operations, retiring after a bitter quarrel with Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson about the navy's place in the defense establishment.

Dengis (den.gēs′). See Balkhash.

Den Haag (dėn hăch′). A Dutch name of Hague, The.

Denham (den′ăm), Dixon. b. at London, Jan. 1, 1786; d. in Sierra Leone, West Africa, May 8, 1828. African explorer. As a British officer he took part in the continental wars against Napoleon I. In 1821 he was sent to Africa with Oudney and Clapperton. From Tripoli they went over Murzuk and Fezzan to Lake Chad, and stayed some time at Kuka, the capital of the native kingdom of Bornu, in what is now Nigeria. In a war with the conquering Fulbe, Denham was taken prisoner, but contrived to escape. After exploring the south end of Lake Chad, he accompanied Clapperton to Sokoto, and returned in 1824. He died in 1828 as lieutenant governor of Sierra Leone.

Denham, Sir John. b. at Dublin, 1615; d. at London, in March, 1669. English poet. He took up arms for the king when the English Civil War began, and was made governor of Farnham Castle, from which he was driven and sent a prisoner to London. His fortunes varied, but revived at the Restoration. He was falsely accused in 1667 of murdering his wife by a poisoned cup of chocolate. He was the author of a tragedy, The Sophy (1642), a descriptive poem, Cooper's Hill (1642), and Cato Major (1648), adapted from Cicero.

Denhardt (den′härt), Gustav. b. at Zeitz, Germany, June 13, 1856; d. at Leipzig, Germany, July 19, 1917. German explorer; brother of Klemens Denhardt. An explorer of Africa and colonial pioneer, he acquired territory for Germany by friendly negotiations in East Africa; the territory was later ceded (1890) to England in exchange for Helgoland.

Denhardt, Klemens. b. at Zeitz, Germany, Aug. 3, 1852; d. at Sulza, Germany, June 7, 1929. German explorer of Africa; brother of Gustav Denhardt. He acquired territories in East Africa from the sultan of Witu, in what is now Kenya, and placed them under German sovereignty.

Den Helder (dėn hel′dėr). [Also: De Helder; English, The Helder.] Town in W Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, situated on the Mars Diep, an outlet from the Wadden Sea into the North Sea, ab. 40 mi. N of Amsterdam. It occupies the northernmost tip of the mainland of North Holland. It is separated from the island of Texel by a narrow body of water, and is connected with the seaside resort of Huisduinen. Den Helder is the chief naval station of the Netherlands, with shipyards, docks, arsenal, marine school, meteorological institute, and a zoölogical and hydrographic station; it is also a port for fishing fleets. The Dutch under Ruyter and Tromp defeated the British here in 1673. New fortifications were erected by Napoleon I in 1811. Heavy damage was done to the harbor works and naval installations during World War II. 36,209 (est. 1951).

Denia (dā′nyä). [Ancient name, Dianum.] Town in E Spain, in the province of Alicante, situated on the Mediterranean Sea, ab. 45 mi. NE of Alicante. It is a seaport, exporting the excellent raisins which are grown in the vicinity. Notable buildings include a Moorish castle and remnants of Roman and other Moorish structures. 12,323 (1940).

De Nicola (dā nē.kô′lä), Enrico. b. at Naples, Italy, Nov. 9, 1877—. Italian statesman. He was elected (1909) to the chamber of deputies, of which he served (1920–23) as head, and was named (1929) to the senate. In 1946 he was elected as temporary head of the new Italian republic and in 1948 was named president of the republic; upon his retirement (May 11, 1948) life senatorship was conferred on him.

Denifle (den′ē.fle), Heinrich Seuse. [Original name, Joseph Denifle.] b. at Imst, in the Austrian Tyrol, Jan. 16, 1844; d. at Munich, June 10, 1905. Church historian. Educated at the seminary of Brixen (then part of Austria, now Bressanone, Italy), he became a Dominican in 1861. He subsequently studied at Graz, Marseilles, and Rome. He taught philosophy at Graz (1870–80) and became known in Austria as a preacher. In 1880 he was summoned to Rome and began collecting manuscripts for a critical edition of Thomas Aquinas. In 1883 he was made subarchivist of the Vatican. He is known for his editing of the Chartularium, or records of the University of Paris, which became a basis of research on medieval universities. He also wrote on medieval university life, the German mystics, the Hundred Years' War, clerical profligacy in the early 16th century, and on the genesis of Luther's theological ideas.

Denijn (dę.nīn′), Jef. See Denyn, Jef.

Deniker (dę.nē.ker), Joseph. b. at Astrakhan, Russia, March 6, 1852; d. at Paris, March 18, 1918. French anthropologist, who served (1888 et seq.) as librarian at the Museum of Natural History at Paris. He was the author of Les Races de l'Europe (The Races of Europe, 1908), and Les Races et les peuples de la terre (The Races and the Peoples of the Earth, 2nd ed. 1926).

Denikin (di.nyē′kin), Anton Ivanovich. b. Dec. 4, 1872; d. in the U.S., 1947. Russian general. The son of a former serf, he accomplished the unusual feat of rising from the ranks to high command in the czarist army. In the Russo-Japanese War he was a colonel, and in World War I a general in command of the southwestern theater of war. He opposed the Bolshevist revolution in 1917, was imprisoned, but escaped and joined with General Kornilov and others in setting up a counterrevolutionary regime and assembling an army in the Don country. Upon Kornilov's death in March, 1918, Denikin became commander of this army, and in September assumed the role of commander in chief of the White Russian forces in the south. He won a number of victories and by the end of the year was in control of Kharkov, Kiev, and Odessa, and had established liaison with the counterrevolutionary forces under Kolchak. In November, however, a Red army under Budenny inflicted decisive defeats on Denikin's force which, low in morale, thereafter became more and more demoralized and ineffective, until, early in 1920, Denikin retreated to the Crimea, resigned his command in favor of General Wrangel, and fled to England. Later he lived in France, but came to the U.S. in 1946.

Denina (dā.nē′nä), Carlo Giovanni Maria. b. at Revello, near Saluzzo, Italy, Feb. 28, 1731; d. at Paris, Dec. 5, 1813. Italian historian. He was professor at Turin and later at Berlin, became university librarian at Turin in 1800, and was imperial librarian at Paris after 1804. He wrote Istoria delle rivoluzioni d'Italia (1769–72), and others.

Denis or Denys (den′is; French, dę.nē), Saint. b. in Italy, date unknown. Apostle to the Gauls, and patron saint of France, beheaded, according to the legends, at Paris c250, under Decius. He was confounded, at an early date, with Dionysius the Areopagite.

Denis (dę.nē), Jean Ferdinand. b. at Paris, Aug. 13, 1798; d. there, Aug. 2, 1890. French author. He traveled in America from 1816 to 1821, and subsequently in Spain and Portugal, with the object of studying the literature of those countries. After 1838 he was prominently connected with the libraries of Paris, especially the Sainte Geneviève, of which he became conservator in 1841 and administrator in 1865. He wrote numerous works, historical and descriptive, on Brazil, the Platine States (Argentina, Uruguay, and Paraguay), Guiana, and Portugal, and on the literature of Portugal and Spain; also a great number of biographical and historical articles for various encyclopedic works, and a series of historical novels.

Denis, Louise. [Maiden name, Mignot.] b. c1710; d. 1790. Niece and companion of Voltaire. Her husband, whom she had married in 1738, died in 1744, and in 1754 she returned to Voltaire's house, which she kept for him until his death in 1778. In 1779, when in her 70th year, she married a Sieur du Vivier, who was about 60. She wrote several works and a play, La Coquette punie.

Denis, Maurice. b. at Granville, France, Nov. 25, 1870—. French neotraditionalist and symbolist painter and illustrator. He was the leader of the Nabis, a group which included P. Bonnard, E. Vuillard, and P. Sérusier, and was an important influence on G. Rouault. He studied at the Julian Academy and later at the École des Beaux-Arts, both at Paris. He traveled to Italy, where he found the religious painting of the Renaissance to be an inspiration. Poussin and Ingres were also important influences on him. In 1910 he was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor and societaire of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts. His work hangs in most of the important galleries in Europe. Among the most noteworthy of his paintings are Descent from the Cross, Homage to Cézanne, Virgin and Child, Promenade, Head of a Woman, and illustrations for books by André Gide (The Voyage of Urien), Verlaine (Wisdom), P. Claudel, Alfred de Vigny, Dante, and others.

Denis Duval (den'is dū.val'). Unfinished novel by Thackeray, published in 1864, after his death.

Denison (den'i.sọn). City in W Iowa, county seat of Crawford County, in an agricultural area. 4,554 (1950).

Denison. City in C Texas, in Grayson County, N of Dallas: railroad and shipping center for the Red River Valley. Denison Dam, the world's largest rolled earth-fill dam, is ab. 4 mi. NW of the city. 17,504 (1950).

Denison, Cape. Rocky cape in Antarctica, in the center of the S shore of Commonwealth Bay, on the George V Coast, in 67°00′ S. 142°40′ E.

Denison, Henry Willard. b. at Guildhall, Vt., May 11, 1846; d. July 3, 1914. American jurist. He was the legal adviser of the Japanese during the negotiation of the peace with Russia at Portsmouth, N.H., in 1905, and was a delegate to the second peace conference in 1907. In 1880 he was named legal adviser to the Japanese department of foreign affairs.

Denison Dam. Large dam on the Red River, in N Texas and S Oklahoma, ab. 4 mi. N of Denison, Tex. The immense earth-fill flood-control and power dam was built by the U.S. army, supervised by the Corps of Engineers, and was completed in 1944. The first 35,000-kilowatt power unit began operation in 1945, and a second was added in 1949. A third is projected. The large reservoir formed by the dam is ab. 40 mi. long, and is named Lake Texoma. Length of dam, ab. 15,200 ft.; height, ab. 165 ft.

Denizli (de.nēz.lē'). [Also, Denisli.] Il (province or vilayet) in SW Turkey, NW of Antalya: a rich farming area where cotton, cattle, wheat, sheep, and olives are the chief products. Capital, Denizli; area, 4,304 sq. mi.; pop. 340,010 (1950).

Denizli. [Also, Denisli.] Town in SW Turkey, near the Menderes River, ab. 110 mi. E of its mouth: cotton, opium, and grapes; several spinning mills. Pop. ab. 17,000.

Denkmäler Deutscher Tonkunst (dengk'mā.lẽr doi'chẽr tōn'künst). Series of publications (1892 et seq.) of notable music from the past. The original committee in charge of the project included Brahms, Spitta, Helmholtz, Joachim, and Chrysander. The German government financed the undertaking.

Denkyira (dān.kyē'rä). One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting S Gold Coast.

Denman (den'mạn), Thomas. [Title, 1st Baron Denman.] b. at London, Feb. 23, 1779; d. at Stoke Albany, Northamptonshire, England, Sept. 22, 1854. English jurist. He defended Queen Caroline in 1820, and was attorney general (1830–32) and lord chief justice of the King's Bench (1832–50).

Denman, Thomas. [Title, 3rd Baron Denman.] b. Nov. 16, 1874—. English official, appointed governor general of Australia in 1911; great-grandson of Thomas Denman, 1st Baron Denman (1779–1854). He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and in 1900 served in the South African war as captain of a squadron of the Imperial Yeomanry. He has been deputy speaker of the House of Lords.

Denmark (den'märk). [Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish, Danmark; German, Dänemark; official Danish name, Kongeriget Danmark.] Country in N Europe, bounded by West Germany on the S, by the North Sea and the Skagerrak on the W and NW, by the Kattegat and the Øresund (the Sound) on the NE and E, and by the Baltic Sea on the SE; the island of Bornholm lies in the Baltic Sea far to the east. Capital, Copenhagen; area, 16,576 sq. mi.; pop. 4,281,275 (1950).

Terrain and Climate. The country falls into two parts: the Jutland (Jylland) peninsula, geographically a part of North Germany, and a number of islands between Jutland and Sweden, the largest of which is Zealand (Sjælland), on which Copenhagen is situated. The fact that the capital city is located on the easternmost rim of the national territory points to the fact that formerly S Sweden was also part of the Danish domain; Denmark is then seen in its true role as a bridge between Germany and the Scandinavian North. Denmark has natural frontiers except toward Germany. It has no high elevations and no large rivers. Soils, except in the heath districts of central Jutland, are good. The climate is oceanic and mild.

Agriculture, Industry, Commerce. Denmark is one of the most highly developed agricultural countries in Europe. Grain culture was relegated to a minimum in the course of the 19th century and livestock raising was substituted, based in part on local food crops and pasture lands, in part on the import of grain, oilseeds, and various other fodder materials. Denmark had in 1948 (est.) 23,816,000 hens, 2,831,000 head of cattle, and 1,462,000 pigs. Dairying is Denmark's leading industry; dairy and farm products, particularly butter, eggs, and meats, are exported in large quantities to Great Britain, in somewhat smaller quantities to Germany and to other countries. There are also a number of sugar refineries, breweries, and distilleries. Fishery products, chiefly herring, are likewise exported. There are few woodlands. The amount of minerals found in Denmark and the available water power are inconsiderable; there are, however, shipyards, metallurgical industries, and manufactures of textiles, gloves, and porcelain. Denmark's commercial fleet, her highways and railroads are excellent; noteworthy are the railroad ferries connecting Denmark with Sweden and Germany and also the various Danish islands among themselves.

History. Some of the pagan Danish nobles were converted to Christianity in the 10th century, but the cult of Odin retained its power in the rural districts for a long time. In the 11th and 12th centuries, Danes were feared in northern Europe; their warriors conquered England and Norway, and the country itself was rent by civil unrest. Waldemar I established unity in 1157; under his successors the coastal rimlands of the Baltic Sea were made tributary; new internal strife ensued, aggravated by controversy with the Hanseatic League and by the continued struggle for the domination of Schleswig and Holstein, with their partly German, partly Danish inhabitants. In the 14th century, unity was reëstablished by Waldemar IV Atterdag; under Queen Margaret the Union of Kalmar was concluded (1397) by which Norway and Sweden were joined to Denmark. However, the jump from the precariously achieved unity of Denmark to the wider unity of the entire far-flung North was beyond the strength, technically and politically, which could be mustered at the time. Unity by domination failed; numerous armed conflicts with Sweden fill most of Denmark's subsequent history. The Union of Kalmar crumbled after 1471 when the Swedes under Sten Sture defeated the Danes. After a series of further unsuccessful campaigns Denmark ceded, in the peace of Brömsebro (1645), Jämtland and Herjedalen and the islands of Öel (Saaremaa) and Gotland to Sweden. King Christian III had introduced the Lutheran Reformation (1536); Christian IV, as a prince of the German Empire (for Holstein), entered the Thirty Years' War, but was attacked by Sweden at the same time. In the peace of Roskilde (1658) Denmark ceded Skåne, Halland, Blekinge, Trondheim, and Bohus to Sweden. From then on, Denmark's energies were turned to internal organization, in the 17th century in terms of the absolute power of the king, in the 18th century in terms of enlightened absolutism, leading to the curtailment of the privileges of the aristocracy, to the emancipation of the peasantry (1788), and to the establishment of a system of universal elementary instruction; commercial activities were furthered at the same time. The Napoleonic period saw Denmark's sea power attacked by England. The successful naval battle before Copenhagen of April 2, 1801, was followed by the bombardment of the city by an English naval squadron in 1807, after which the Danish navy was to be delivered into English hands. In the peace of Kiel (1814), Denmark ceded Helgoland to England, and Norway to Sweden. The 19th century saw, apart from continued internal development, the struggle between Denmark and the autonomist, later the German nationalist, movement in Schleswig-Holstein. Fighting occurred in the period 1848–50, confirming Danish sovereignty but hardening Danish rule; the two duchies were ceded to Austria and Prussia as the executors of the German Bund, after an unsuccessful war, in the peace of Vienna (1864). North Schleswig, that is, the part of the entire territory which was ethnically most clearly Danish in character, was returned to Denmark through a plebiscite after World War I. There remained some Danish propaganda in favor of the inclusion of the southern parts of the long embattled territory, some German propaganda aiming at regaining the northern districts; for the vast majority of both peoples the question of Schleswig-Holstein is settled. The Danish possessions in the West Indies (Virgin Islands) were ceded to the U.S. in 1917. A democratic constitution was introduced in Denmark in 1849; a new constitution was adopted in 1915. The leading party is the Social Democratic Party. During World War II, Denmark was invaded by the Germans in 1940 and served as springboard for the invasion of Norway. Iceland became an independent republic in 1944.

Government. Denmark is a constitutional monarchy; the ruling king is Frederick IX, who succeeded his father, Christian X, on April 20, 1947. The constitution is based on the charter of June 5, 1915, which supplanted the constitution of June 5, 1849, and was amended on Sept. 10, 1920. The legislative power is jointly exercised by the king and the diet (Rigsdag). The executive power is exercised by the cabinet ministers on behalf of the king; the cabinet is responsible to the diet, which consists of a lower and a higher house. All permanent residents of Danish nationality who are over 25 years of age have the vote. The king has the power to dissolve the lower house. The members of the cabinet can appear before both houses of the diet, but can vote only in the house of which they are members.

Culture. The Lutheran religion has been the established church of Denmark since 1536; there are nine bishops. There are equal rights for citizens of all faiths; the Roman Catholic, Jewish, and other minorities are small. Elementary education was made compulsory in 1814. For higher instruction there exist two universities (Aarhus and Copenhagen), veterinary, dental, pharmaceutical, and technical institutes, and a royal academy of arts Denmark passed four Social Reform acts in 1933, dealing with public assistance, labor exchanges and employment insurance, accident insurance, and sickness, invalid, and old-age insurance. Denmark, like her sister countries in Scandinavia, is renowned for her progressive educational and social security institutions; they are based on the realized ideal of an educated peasantry. Accordingly, Denmark, along with Sweden and Norway, has contributed far more than her share to European literature. Andersen, Jacobsen, Nexø, Bang, Brandes, and others are writers of more than local significance.

Denmark. Town in S central South Carolina, in Bamberg County ab. 50 mi. S of Columbia, in a farming region. It is a railroad junction and manufacturing town. 2,814 (1950).

Denmark, Prince of. See under Hamlet.

Denner (den'ėr), Johann Christoph. b. at Leipzig, Germany, Aug. 13, 1655; d. at Nuremberg, Germany, April 20, 1707. German maker of woodwind instruments who invented (c1700) the clarinet.

Dennery (den.rē), Adolphe Philippe. Original name of Ennery, Adolphe Philippe d'.

Dennett (den'ėt), Richard Edward. b. at Valparaíso, Chile, 1857; d. May 28, 1921. English trader and official in Africa, and author of books on African subjects. Educated (1869–74) at Marlborough College, he was employed (1875–79) by Thomas Wilson, Sons, and Company, an English firm trading in Africa. He edited the Congo Mirror, a manuscript newspaper in which he boldly attacked murders and atrocities committed by Congo officials, his protests leading to the organization of the Congo Reform Association; and called attention in numerous letters in the African Mail to the injustices of French rule. He served as a member (1902–18) of the Nigerian forest service, retiring on a pension. Among his books are Seven Years Experience Among the Fjort, Being an English Trader's Experience in the Congo (1887), Notes on the Folk-Lore of the Fjort (French Congo) (1898), At the Back of the Black Man's Mind (1906), Nigerian Studies, or the Religious and Political System of the Yoruba (1910), Notes on West African Categories (1911), and a language book, My Yoruba Alphabet (1916).

Dennett, Tyler. b. at Spencer, Wis., June 13, 1883; d. at Geneva, N.Y., Dec. 29, 1949. American historian and educator. He was chief (1924–29) of the publications division of the U.S. state department, professor of international relations (1931–34) at Princeton, and president (1934–37) of Williams College. His works include The Democratic Movement in Asia (1918), Americans in Eastern Asia (1923), Roosevelt and the Russo-Japanese War (1924), Lincoln and the Civil War—Hay Diaries (1939); his Biography of John Hay (1933) won a Pulitzer prize.

Dennewitz (den'ę.vits). Village in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Brandenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Brandenburg, Prussia, ab. 40 mi. SW of Berlin. Here the Prussians under Bülow, with the aid of Russians and Swedes under Bernadotte, defeated the French army under Ney, on Sept. 6, 1813. Pop. 618 (1946).

Dennewitz, Count von. See under Bülow, Baron Friedrich Wilhelm von.

Dennie (den'i), Joseph. [Called the "American Addison."] b. at Boston, Aug. 30, 1768; d. at Philadelphia, Jan. 7, 1812. American editor and essayist. He was educated at Harvard, became associated with the literary supporters of Federalism, and was editor (1796–98) of the Farmer's Weekly Museum, in which his "Lay Preacher" essays appeared. He edited (1801–09) The Port Folio at Philadelphia. His essays were published in 1796 and 1816.

Dennis (den'is). Servant to Oliver in Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Dennis. Hangman in Charles Dickens's novel Barnaby Rudge.

Dennis, Geoffrey Pomeroy. b. at Barnstaple, Devonshire, England, Jan. 20, 1892—. English writer. He served (1920–37) on the League of Nations staff, becoming chief editor and head of the document services, and as chief of the Italian section of the European service of the British Broadcasting Corporation. He is the author of Mary Lee (1922), Harvest in Poland (1925), The End of the World (1930; awarded the Hawthornden prize), Sale by Auction (1932), Bloody Mary's (1934), and Coronation Commentary (1937).

Dennis, John. b. at London, 1657; d. Jan. 6, 1734. English critic. His writings annoyed Pope, who ridiculed him in the Dunciad. He also wrote indifferently successful plays.

Dennis Brulgruddery (brul.grud'ėr.i). See Brulgruddery, Dennis.

Dennison (den'i.sọn). Village in E Ohio, in Tuscarawas County, in a clay-producing area. It was established in 1864 and was formerly important for its railway division shops. Manufactures include sewer pipe and other clay products. 4,432 (1950).

Dennison, Aaron Lufkin. [Called the "Father of American Watchmaking."] b. at Freeport, Me., March 6, 1812; d. Jan. 9, 1895. American watch manufacturer, designer of the world's first factory-made watches. He was interested in the application of the interchangeable parts production method as a means of lowering the cost and increasing the accuracy of American watches. With associates he formed at Roxbury, Mass., the American Horologue Company. After being sold in bankruptcy the company was moved to Waltham, Mass., and finally became known as the American Waltham Watch Company.

Dennison, William. b. at Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 23, 1815; d. at Columbus, Ohio, June 15, 1882. American lawyer, elected (1859) governor of Ohio. He served (1848 et seq.) as a state senator in Ohio, and was an early member (1856) of the newly formed Republican Party. From 1864 to 1866 he was U.S. postmaster general.

Denny (den'i), George Hutcheson. b. in Hanover County, Va., Dec. 3, 1870—. American educator. He has been professor of Latin and German (1896–99) at Hampden-Sydney College, professor of Latin (1899–1911) and president (1902–11) of Washington and Lee University, and president (1912–37, 1942) and chancellor (1937–41, 1942 et seq.) of the University of Alabama. He is the author of The Subjunctive Sequence after Adjective and Substantive Predicates and Phrases (1896).

Denny and Dunipace (dun'i.pās). Police burgh in C Scotland, in Stirlingshire, ab. 7 mi. S of Stirling. 6,550 (est. 1948).

Denon (dę.nôṅ), Baron Dominique Vivant. b. at Châlon-sur-Saône, France, Jan. 4, 1747; d. at Paris, April 27, 1825. French artist, archaeologist, diplomat, and administrator. He was the author of Voyage dans la Basse et la Haute-Égypte (1802) and Monuments des arts du dessin (1829).

Den Pasar (den' pä.sär'). Airfield on the island of Bali, Indonesia, occupation of which by Japanese forces in February, 1942, cut the communication between Java and Australia.

Denry the Audacious (den'ri). American title of a novel (1911) by Arnold Bennett, published in England as The Card. It is one of the so-called "Five Towns" novels and is concerned more with character than with plot. It is a humorous, but sympathetic, portrait of a young man whose chief quality is suggested by the title, a quality which, rather than real ability, enables him to achieve what he considers to be success in his career.

Dent (dent), Hugh Railton. b. 1874; d. at Elmstead, West Wittering, Sussex, England, Nov. 20, 1938. English publisher; son of J. M. Dent (1849–1926). He entered his father's bookbinding firm in 1888, when it became a publishing business, and remained with it until his death; author of additional chapters in The House of Dent, 1888-1938 (1938).

Dent, J. M. [Full name, Joseph Malaby Dent.] b. at Darlington, Durham, England, Aug. 30, 1849; d. at Croydon, Surrey, England, May 9, 1926. English publisher and author, founder of the publishing house of J. M. Dent and Sons. After having served his apprenticeship, he began (1872) his own bookbinding business at Hoxton, a North London suburb. In 1888 he published Lamb's Essays of Elia, Last Essays, and Goldsmith's Essays, Poems and Plays as the first volumes in the Temple Library, so named because both authors had lived in the Temple; in 1890 he began the Medieval Towns series, following it with the Temple Shakespeare (40 vols., 1893–96) edited by Israel Gollancz, distinguished Shakespearian scholar; in 1896 he brought out the first volumes of the Temple Classics. He also published (1898) the Haddon Hall Library and, in 1899, the Waverley novels (40 vols.). In 1904 he began his most ambitious project, the Everyman's Library, securing as general editor Ernest Rhys, who had suggested the name. He also published a series of English novelists from Henry Fielding to Jane Austen, and translations of Balzac with introductions by George Saintsbury. He was the author of essays on various phases of making and printing books, introductions to several Everyman's Library volumes, and Memoirs (1928).

Dentatus (den.tā'tus), Manius Curius. fl. in the first part of the 3rd century B.C. Roman tribune, consul, praetor, and censor, celebrated as a model of the early Roman virtues of simplicity, frugality, and patriotism. He defeated Pyrrhus in 275, and the Samnites and Lucanians in 274.

Dent Blanche (däṅ blaṅsh). Mountain in the Alps of Valais, Switzerland, situated N of the Matterhorn. 14,318 ft.

Dent de Jaman (däṅ dę zhä.mäṅ). Mountain in Vaud, Switzerland, situated E of the Lake of Geneva. 6,165 ft.

Dent de Vaulion (däṅ dę vō.lyôṅ). Peak of the Jura Mountains, in Switzerland, ab. 18 mi. NW of Lausanne. 4,880 ft.

Dent du Midi (däṅ dü mē.dē). Mountain in the canton of Valais, Switzerland, situated NW of Martigny. Elevation, ab. 10,700 ft.

Denton (den'tọn). Urban district in NW England, in Lancashire, ab. 7 mi. SE of Manchester, ab. 181 mi. NW of London by rail. It has manufactures of hats. 25,612 (1951).

Denton. City in C Texas, county seat of Denton County, NW of Dallas: seat of the North Texas State Teachers College and the Texas State College for Women. 21,372 (1950).

D'Entrecasteaux Channel (däṅ.trę.kàs.tō'). Strait between Tasmania and Bruny Island to the S.

D'Entrecasteaux Islands. Group of small islands lying E of the island of New Guinea, belonging to Australia as part of the Territory of Papua. Area, ab. 1,200 sq. mi.

D'Entrecasteaux Point. Cape at the SW extremity of Australia.

Dentz (däṅts), Henri. b. at Roanne, Loire, France, 1881; d. at Paris, Dec. 13, 1945. French army officer who resisted the occupation (June, 1941) of Syria by British and Free French forces while Vichy high commissioner for Syria. As military governor of Paris, he surrendered (June, 1940) the French capital to the Germans. Condemned to death as a traitor (April, 1945) his sentence was commuted by General Charles de Gaulle.

Denver (den'vėr). City in C Colorado, capital of Colorado and county seat of Denver County, on the South Platte River in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. It is an important railway center, a major center for finance, commerce, and meat packing in the West, and the leading Western market for livestock and agricultural produce; seat of the University of Denver, Regis College, and a U.S. mint. It was first settled in 1858–59, named for James William Denver, was both gold-mining and silver-mining boom town in the 19th century, and has become noted for its scenery and its dry climate. Elevation, 5,280 ft.; pop. 322,412 (1940), 415,786 (1950).

Denver, James William. b. at Winchester, Va., Oct. 23, 1817; d. at Washington, D.C., Aug. 9, 1892. American government official for whom Denver, Colo., was named. He was state senator (1852–53) of California, secretary of state (1853) in California, and U.S. congressman (1855–57) active in the promotion of the transcontinental railroad. He also served as federal commissioner of Indian affairs (1857, 1858–59). As secretary (1857–58) and governor (1858) of the Kansas Territory, he firmly established the territorial government during its critical period. In the Civil War, he served (1861–63) as a brigadier general in command of Kansas volunteers.

Denyn (dę.nīn'), Jef. [Also, Denijn.] b. at Mechelen (Malines), Belgium, 1862; d. 1941. Belgian carilloneur. He enjoyed a universal reputation in the art form he had done so much to re-create, and was a composer and author of books on the artistry and technique of the carillon. He was honorary carilloneur of the town of Mechelen and director of the school for carilloneurs.

Denys (den'is; French, dę.nē), Saint. See Saint Denis or Denys.

Denza (den'tsä), Luigi. b. at Castellammare di Stabia, Italy, Feb. 24, 1846; d. at London, Jan. 26, 1922. Italian musician. He lived at London after 1879, and was professor of singing (1898 et seq.) at the Royal Academy of Music. Among the most popular of his some 600 songs is Funiculì Funiculà, written for the opening (1880) of the funicular railway at Naples; he also composed the opera Wallenstein (1876).

Denzil (den'zil), Guy. In Sir Walter Scott's poem Rokeby, the chief of a marauding band made up from both Cavaliers and Roundheads.

Deoband (dē'ō.bund, dā'-). Town in the Saharanpur district, Uttar Pradesh (United Provinces), Union of India, ab. 75 mi. NE of Delhi: trading center. 22,126 (1941).

Déodat de Sévérac (dā.o.dà dę sā.vā.rak), Joseph Marie. See Sévérac, Joseph Marie Déodat de.

De Officiis (dē ō.fish'i.is). [Eng. trans., "Of Duties."] Treatise in three books, by Cicero, on moral obligations, written c44 B.C.

Deoghir or Deoghur (dē'ọ.ġėr, dā'-). Former name of Daulatabad.

Deoprag (dā'ō.präg). See Devaprayaga.

De Oratore (dē or.ą.tō'rē). [Eng. trans., "Of the Orator."] Rhetorical work by Cicero, in three books, written (55 B.C.) in the form of a dialogue, the principal characters being L. Crassus and M. Antoninus. Its style and varied contents make it one of Cicero's most polished works.

Deorham (de.ōr'häm). Place (identified with Dereham, Gloucestershire, England) where Ceawlin, king of the West Saxons, defeated (577) the Britons.

Deor's Lament (dā'ôrz). English poem (9th or 10th century) named after its reputed author, a gleeman who in the last section of the poem tells of his own misfortune. Most commentators believe that this gleeman is only a fiction, used by the true author for mouthpiece. The poem falls into seven sections of varying length. All but the sixth conform to one pattern: the gleeman cites a story, taken from Germanic legend, in which a victim or victims of misfortune outlive their trouble. Each of these sections ends with the same consolatory line: "That now is gone; this too will go." The sixth section deals with earthly misfortune in general, and adds words of consolation correspondingly generalized.

Departmental Ditties. Volume of poetry (1886) by Rudyard Kipling. The poems, which originally appeared singly in various issues of the Lahore Gazette, gave a picture of Anglo-Indian life, something new in literature at the time, and were welcomed accordingly. In Plain Tales from the Hills (1888) Kipling accomplished somewhat the same end in prose.

DePauw (dē.pô'), Washington Charles. b. at Salem, Ind., Jan. 4, 1822; d. May 5, 1887. American banker and manufacturer. He started (1853) a small bank, becoming a leading Indiana banker, and with earnings from Civil War securities invested profitably in manufacture. He was a trustee of Indiana Asbury University (founded 1837), which he endowed heavily. Its name was changed (1884) to DePauw University.

Depazzi (dā.pät'sē). Character in Shirley's play The Humorous Courtier.

Dependencias Federales (dā.pen.den'syäs fā.ŦHā.rä'lās). [English, Federal Dependencies.] Group of islands in the Caribbean Sea under the jurisdiction of Venezuela. Area, 46 sq. mi.; pop. 779 (1950).

De Pere (dē pir'). City in E Wisconsin, in Brown County: manufactures include boats, cattle feed, glassine paper, butcher paper, and medicines. It is the seat of St. Norbert College. The city occupies the site of the first permanent Jesuit mission established (1671) on the Fox River by Father Claude Allouez. 8,146 (1950).

Depew (dē.pū'). Village in W New York, in Erie County near Buffalo: railroad center; manufactures include storage batteries, food products, steel castings, and mattresses. 7,217 (1950).

Depew, Chauncey Mitchell. b. at Peekskill, N.Y., April 23, 1834; d. at New York, April 5, 1928. American lawyer, legislator, railway president, and orator. He was graduated (1856) from Yale and studied law at Peekskill, where he established his practice after being admitted to the bar in 1858. He entered politics as a Republican, served (1862–63) in the state legislature, and was (1863 et seq.) secretary of state for New York. He was appointed (1866) by President Johnson as the first U.S. minister to Japan, but resigned even before going to his post in favor of employment as counsel for Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt's Hudson River and Harlem railroad lines. He became (1874) a director in the Vanderbilt railway system, and in 1875 became its general counsel. In 1882 he became second vice-president of the New York Central and Hudson River line, and in 1885 its president. Elected (1899) U.S. senator from New York, he left the presidency of the New York Central Railroad and became chairman of its board of directors. He was widely known as a wit and after-dinner speaker.

De Peyster (dē pīs'tėr), Abraham. b. at New Amsterdam (New York), July 8, 1658; d. at New York, Aug. 10, 1728. American merchant and official; son of Johannes De Peyster (1600–c1685). He was mayor of New York (1691–95) and later became chief justice of the province and president of the king's council. By virtue of the latter post he was acting governor in 1701.

De Peyster, Arent Schuyler. b. at New York, June 27, 1736; d. at Dumfries, Scotland, in November, 1832. Royalist officer; grandson of Abraham De Peyster. He commanded at Detroit, Mackinac, and various places in Upper Canada during the Revolutionary War, and by his tact and conciliatory measures succeeded in detaching the Indians of the Northwest from the colonists and allying them with the British.

De Peyster, Johannes. b. at Haarlem, Holland, 1600; d. at New York, c1685. Dutch colonist (1640 et seq.) at New Amsterdam (New York); father of Abraham De Peyster (1658–1728).

De Peyster, John Watts. b. at New York, March 9, 1821; d. there, May 4, 1907. American military and historical writer. His works include History of the Life of Leonard Torstenson (1855), History of Carausius, the Dutch Augustus and Emperor of Britain (1858), and The Thirty-Years' War: With Special Reference to the Military Operations and Influence of the Swedes (1884).

Dépit amoureux (dā.pē à.mö.rė), Le. [Eng. trans., "The Loving Spite."] Comedy by Molière, produced at Montpellier in 1654, and at Paris in 1658. It was not printed until 1663. Many authors have adapted and rearranged it. The subject is partly borrowed from L'Intéressé of Nicolo Secchi.

Deposition from the Cross. See also under Descent from the Cross, 4.

Deposition from the Cross. Painting (with the Virgin, the Magdalen, Saint John, Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus) by Perugino, in the Academy of Fine Arts at Florence. The expression and differentiation of character in the group of mourners is considered masterly, and the painting among Perugino's best.

Depot Island (dē'pō). Small, glaciated, granite island in Antarctica, lying ab. 2 mi. NW of Cape Ross, off the coast of Victoria Land, in ab. 76°43′ S., 163°00′ E.

Depping (dep'ing), Georges Bernard. b. at Münster, Germany, May 11, 1784; d. at Paris, Sept. 5, 1853. French historian, of German parentage. He wrote Histoire générale de l'Espagne (1811), Histoire du commerce entre le Levant et l'Europe (1832), and Histoire de la Normandie (1835).

Depretis (dā.prā'tēs), Agostino. b. at Mezzana-Corte-Bottaroni, near Stradella, Italy, Jan. 31, 1813; d. there, July 29, 1887. Italian statesman. He was four times premier (1876–77, 1877–78, 1878–79, 1881–87).

Deprez (dę.prā), Marcel. b. at Châtillon-sur-Loing, France, Dec. 19, 1843; d. 1918. French engineer and pioneer electrician. As early as 1872 he made experiments in the transmission of electrical power; he is credited with demonstrating (1882) the first successful long-distance transmission of electrical power by wires (over a distance of some 35 miles between Munich and Miesbach). He served (1890 et seq.) as professor of industrial electricity at the Conservatoire des Arts at Métiers. He also invented a self-compensating brake for testing motors.

De Prie (dę prē'), Jaques. Supposed beggar in Ben Jonson's comedy The Case is Altered. He is a miser, and is in reality Melun, steward to the old Chamont. He somewhat resembles Shylock, loving both his ducats and his daughter.

Deptford (det'fȯrd). Metropolitan borough in SE London, in the County of London, situated on the S bank of the river Thames, ab. 5 mi. SE of Charing Cross station, London, and immediately W of Greenwich. Its industries include sawmills, soap works, sugar refineries, and chemical works. It was long noted for its dockyard, which was closed in 1869. Deptford was on the route of Watling Street, an old Roman road which ran from the Strait of Dover through London to Chester. 75,694 (1951).

Deptford (dep'fȯrd). Burial Mound I culture (c700–900 A.D.) of Georgia and NW Florida, of which simple- and check-stamped pottery is characteristic.

Deputy Was King, A. Novel by G. B. Stern, published in 1926. It is the second panel in her trilogy of Jewish life, The Rakonitz Chronicles (1932).

De Queen (dē kwēn'). City in SW Arkansas, county seat of Sevier County: rail center. 3,015 (1950).

De Quincey (dē kwin'si, -zi), Thomas. b. at Manchester, England, Aug. 15, 1785; d. at Edinburgh, Dec. 8, 1859. English essayist and miscellaneous writer, famous for his Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (in book form, 1822). He was the son of Thomas Quincey, a wealthy wholesale merchant who died in 1793. His guardians entered him in the Manchester Grammar School in 1800, from which he ran away in 1802. After a tour on foot of Wales, Thomas lived for some months in direst poverty at London. Becoming reconciled with his guardians, he entered Oxford late in 1803. Here, a year later, he first began his use of opium, which he continued, in widely varying amounts, for the rest of his life. He left Oxford without taking a degree in 1808. Making the acquaintance of Lamb, Coleridge, and Wordsworth, he moved to Grasmere, where he married Margaret Simpson in 1817. By this time his use of opium had increased to the amount of 8,000 drops of laudanum (about seven wineglasses) a day. Financial difficulties forced him to go to London in 1821 in search of literary work. His Confessions of an English Opium-Eater, published anonymously that fall in The London Magazine and in book form the following year, established his reputation. His only other books were Klosterheim (1832), an unduly neglected Gothic novel, and The Logic of Political Economy (1844). He wrote for the Westmoreland Gazette, Hogg's Weekly Instructor, Blackwood's, Tait's Edinburgh, and other magazines nearly 200 articles on biographical, literary, philosophical, historical, classical, and miscellaneous subjects. Like Coleridge, De Quincey was extraordinarily well read, had an amazingly retentive memory, and was a brilliant conversationalist. At its worst, his work is prolix, wandering, pedantic, poorly organized, and often grossly inaccurate, even as to easily checked quotations and factual details. At its frequent best, for example in The Revolt of the Tartars, On Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts, The English Mail-Coach, On the Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth, The Spanish Military Nun, and Joan of Arc, his style is highly polished, stately, musical, and imaginative, often humorous. His autobiographic writings rank with Rousseau's and Cellini's. His essays on his contemporaries, Lamb, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Hazlett, and others, are honest, charming, and intimate. He is placed by most critics among the great masters of English prose. His works were first collected and published by Ticknor and Fields (Boston, 1850–59, 24 vols.), with De Quincey's consent and remuneration, followed by Hogg's Selections Grave and Gay (Edinburgh, 1853–60, 14 vols.), and David Masson's definitive Collected Writings (Edinburgh, 1889–90, 14 vols.). The best biographical and critical works on De Quincey are by Horace Ainsworth Eaton (New York, 1936), and Edward Sackville West (New Haven, 1936).

De Quincy (dē kwin'si). Town in S Louisiana, in Calcasieu Parish. It has railroad shops and produces turpentine and other pine products and tung oil. In the surrounding region are truck farms, orchards, poultry farms, and livestock ranches. 3,837 (1950).

Dera Ghazi Khan (der'ạ gä'zē kän'). District in the Multan division, Punjab province. Pakistan, W of the Indus River: wheat and cotton growing and sheep raising. Chief town, Dera Ghazi Khan; area, 9,364 sq. mi.; pop. 581,350 (1941).

Dera Ghazi Khan. Chief town of Dera Ghazi Khan district, in Punjab, Pakistan, on the Indus River ab. 50 mi. W of Multan. It is an important trading center and is the terminus of two trails over the Sulaiman Mountains. 35,909 (1951).

Derain (de.raṅ), André. b. at Chatou, France, June 10, 1880—. French painter and sculptor who was an original member of the Fauve group. He studied with Eugène Carrière, and worked with Maurice de Vlaminck at Chatou. At Paris, he and Vlaminck met Matisse, and the three men formed the nucleus of the Fauve movement; his work after 1913 was not purely Fauve, since many influences such as African sculpture and cubism helped him develop a distinctive style. The art of Gauguin, Van Gogh, and Seurat also influenced him. He exhibited in the first Fauve exhibition of 1905, at Paris, and has continued to be shown in almost every important exhibition of modern art since then. Among the many books he has illustrated are Guillaume Apollinaire's L'Enchanteur Pourrissant, V. Muselli's La Cassette de plomb, and G. Gabory's Le Nez de Cleopatra. He has also done settings for the Ballet Russe, and his more important paintings include The Bridge at Chatou, Portrait of Chevalier X, Portrait of Kisling, Saturday, Nude in a Landscape, Banks of the Seine, Woman with Hat, Still Life, and Nude (panel).

Dera Ismail Khan (der'ạ is.mä.ēl' kän'). District in the S part of the North-West Frontier Province, Pakistan. Chief town, Dera Ismail Khan; area, 4,216 sq. mi.; pop. 298,131 (1941).

Dera Ismail Khan. Chief town of Dera Ismail Khan district, Pakistan, near the Indus River ab. 200 mi. W of Lahore. It is an important trading center and the terminus of a caravan route across the mountains to Afghanistan. 41,613 (1951).

Derajat (der.ạ.jät'). Plain in NW Pakistan, between the Indus River and the Sulaiman Mountains, in the Punjab and the North-West Frontier provinces: a wheat, cotton, and jute growing area.

Derayeh (de.rä'ye) or Deraiyeh (de.rī'ye). Ruined town in Nejd, Arabia. It was the capital of the Wahabis until its destruction in 1818.

Derbe (dėr'bē). In ancient geography, a town in Lycaonia, Asia Minor, near the border of Cilicia, and on the highway from Cilicia to Iconium.

Derbent (der.bent'). [Also, Derbend.] Seaport in the U.S.S.R., in the Dagestan Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Caspian Sea at the foot of the Caucasus Mountains. It produces raw materials for the ceramic industry and is a food-processing center. The surrounding region was a country known to the ancients as Albania, and the narrow pass between sea and mountains at this point was called the Albanian, or Caucasian, Gates. Near here commences the Derbent Wall ("Caucasian Wall" or "Alexander's Wall"), an ancient fortification built by the Persians in the 6th century. The town was founded by the Persians, captured (728) and developed by the Arabs, taken by the Mongols c1220 and by the Russians in 1722 and 1796, and was formally incorporated with Russia in 1813. Pop. 11,535 (1939).

Derby (dėr'bi). Unincorporated community in N central Colorado, in Adams County: a northern suburb of Denver. 2,840 (1950).

Derby. City in SW Connecticut, in New Haven County, at the confluence of the Naugatuck and Housatonic rivers, ab. 9 mi. W of New Haven: important for the production of sponge rubber and metal products; formerly important for shipbuilding (1657–1868). It comprises the former towns of Derby and Birmingham. 10,259 (1950).

Derby (där'bi, dėr'bi). [Old Danish, Deora-by.] County borough and manufacturing town in N central England, in Derbyshire, situated on the river Derwent, ab. 42 mi. NE of Birmingham, ab. 129 mi. NW of London by rail. It is the county seat of Derbyshire. Its industries include aircraft-engine manufacture, a motorcar industry, locomotive building and repair shops, steelworks, electrical shops, and a cotton and silk textile industry. It anciently belonged to Peveril, an alleged son of William I, and was one of the Five Boroughs taken from the Danes by the West Saxons in the 10th century. It was the southernmost point reached by the Young Pretender in 1745, and was the birthplace of Samuel Richardson. 141,264 (1951).

Derby (där'bi; in the U.S. often dėr'bi). Annual English horse-racing event. It is named for one of the earls of Derby, who instituted it in 1780, and is run at Epsom Downs, a racecourse in the municipal borough of Epsom and Ewell, within the area of Greater London, on the Wednesday of the week after Trinity Sunday, which is variously the last Wednesday in May or the first Wednesday in June. The course measures 29 yards more than a mile-and-a-half, and the race is open only to three-year-old colts and fillies, colts being required to carry a minimum of 126 pounds, and fillies not less than 121 pounds. The prize money is not great by modern standards, but the race has acquired great prestige and horses, carefully trained for it, are entered not only by English breeders but by Eastern potentates and American politicians and industrial magnates. The British Parliament adjourns for Derby Day, and hundreds of thousands of people crowd Epsom Downs to see the race if possible, to gaze on royalty and the aristocracy, and to admire the latest women's fashions. The name Derby has come to be applied to other sporting events of real or asserted superior character or importance. Thus a race held annually since 1875 at Churchill Downs near Lexington, Ky., is known as the Kentucky Derby, and roller-skating "Derbies" are featured in various American cities.

Derby, Countess of. Title of Farren, Elizabeth (or Eliza).

Derby, Earl of. A title of Henry of Lancaster (c1299–1361).

Derby, Earl of. A title of Thomas of Lancaster.

Derby (dėr'bi), Elias Hasket. b. at Salem, Mass., Aug. 16, 1739; d. there, Sept. 8, 1799. American merchant in the India and China trade, prominent in the equipment of privateers during the Revolutionary War.

Derby, Elias Hasket. b. at Salem, Mass., Jan. 10, 1766; d. at Londonderry, N.H., Sept. 16, 1826. American merchant; son of Elias Hasket Derby (1739–99). He is said to have introduced merino sheep into the U.S.

Derby, Elias Hasket. b. at Salem, Mass., Sept. 24, 1803; d. at Boston, March 31, 1880. American lawyer and writer; son of Elias Hasket Derby (1766–1826).

Derby, George Horatio. [Pseudonyms, John Phoenix and "Squibob."] b. at Dedham, Mass., April 3, 1823; d. at New York, May 15, 1861. American soldier and humorist. He was a graduate of West Point and served in the Mexican War. He later held various positions in the topographical bureau at Washington, finally becoming a captain of engineers, and was in charge of lighthouse construction on the Southern coast. He was the author of Phœnixiana (1855) and The Squibob Papers (1859).

Derby, Orville Adelbert. b. at Kelloggsville, N.Y., July 23, 1851; d. 1915. American geologist. He was graduated from Cornell University, and was instructor there from 1873 to 1875. He made short visits to Brazil in 1870 and 1871, and in 1875 took a place on the Brazilian geological commission. From that time he engaged in geological and geographical work in Brazil, acting on various commissions, and for some years as curator of the geological department of the national museum. He was chief of the geographical and geological survey of São Paulo (1886–1904) and from 1907 was chief of the geological survey of Brazil.

Derbyshire (där'bi.shir, dėr'-). [Also, Derby.] County in N central England, bounded on the N by Yorkshire, on the E by Nottinghamshire, on the SE by Leicestershire, on the S by Warwickshire, on the SW by Staffordshire, on the W by Staffordshire and Cheshire, and on the NW by Cheshire. South Derbyshire is generally flat or undulating; the Peak District, in the NW portion, is mountainous, and the remainder of the county is generally hilly. Derbyshire is an important coal-producing county, and it has important limestone and marble quarries. Many minerals are found, among them lead, zinc, manganese, fluorspar, feldspar, and gypsum. It was an important source of lead in Roman times, and was the chief lead-mining center in the 12th and 13th centuries. Lead mining continued up to a quite recent date, but has now been abandoned as no longer economical. There are lead smelters near Matlock, now using imported ores. Other industries include a quite extensive iron and steel industry, cotton textiles, lace and hosiery, silk, and clothing manufactures. The Vale of Trent, in the S part, is very fertile. The county has dairying, mostly in the south. County seat, Derby; area of administrative county, ab. 993 sq. mi.; pop. of administrative county, 685,072 (1951).

Dercetas (dėr'sę.tąs). Friend of Antony in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Derceto (dėr'sē.tō). [Also, Derketo.] Principal Philistine female deity, worshiped especially in Ashkelon (Ascalon). She was represented in the form of a woman terminating in a fish, and is considered the female counterpart of Dagon. She was a nature goddess, the principle of generation and fertility, and corresponds in her attributes and the mode of her worship to Ashtoreth (Astarte) of the Canaanites and Syrians (the Assyro-Babylonian Ishtar), and to Atargatis of the Hittites. She was the mother of Semiramis, who, though human, was the counterpart of the goddess.

Dercum (dėr'kum), Francis Xavier. b. at Philadelphia, Aug. 10, 1856; d. April 23, 1931. American neurologist from whose description (1892) of adiposis dolorosa the ailment became known as Dercum's disease. He started (1877) medical practice at Philadelphia, and was professor (1892–1925) of nervous and mental diseases at Jefferson Medical College. Among his books are A Clinical Manual of Mental Diseases (1913, 1917), Hysteria and Accident Compensation (1916), The Biology of the Internal Secretions (1924), and The Physiology of Mind (1925).

Dercyllis (dėr.sil'is). See Dinias and Dercyllis.

Dereham (dir'ąm). See under Deorham and under East Dereham.

Der-el-Bahri (der.el.bä'rē). See Deir-el-Bahri.

Derème (dę.rem), Tristan. [Pseudonym of Philippe Huc.] b. at Marmande, France, 1889; d. at Oloron, France, 1941. French poet. Author of Petits poèmes (1910), La Flute fleurie (1913), Le poème de la pipe et de l'escargot (1920), Le Livre de Clymène (1928), and others. Regarded as a superior technician but prone to write on inconsequential subjects, he is generally classified as a continuer of the "bohemian" tradition of Verlaine.

Derenbourg (dę.räṅ.bör), Hartwig. b. at Paris, June 17, 1844; d. there, 1908. French Orientalist; son of Joseph Derenbourg. He studied at Göttingen and Leipzig, Germany, assisted in editing the catalogue of Arabic manuscripts at the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, in 1875 became teacher and in 1879 professor of Arabic at the École Spéciale des Langues Orientales Vivantes, and in 1886 professor at the École Pratique des Hautes Études. Among his published works are Le Dîwân de Nâbiqa Dhobyânî (1869), Chrestomathie élémentaire de l'arabe littéraire (1885), and Oumâra du Yémen (1897).

Derenbourg, Joseph (Naftali). b. at Mayence, France (now Mainz, Germany), 1811; d. at Ems, Germany, July 29, 1895. French Orientalist. He supervised the government's printing of various Oriental works. After 1877 he was professor of Hebrew language and literature at the École Pratique des Hautes Études. In 1871 he became a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Derenbourg was one of the leaders of the Jewish community in France, especially interesting himself in Jewish education. He was the author of Essai sur l'histoire et la géographie de la Palestine d'après les Talmuds et les autres sources rabbiniques (1867), Deux versions hébraïques du livre de Kalîlâh et Dimnâh, editions of Lokman and Hariri, and other works, and with his son Hartwig edited a volume of the Corpus Inscriptionem Semiticarum (1889–92).

Derennes (dę.ren), Charles. b. at Villeneuve-sur-Lot, France, 1882; d. 1930. French poet and novelist. He was the author of numerous light novels, such as Les Caprices de Nouché (1909) and Gaby mon amour (1925), as well as several volumes of verse. His notoriety stems from his study of gambling, La Fortune et le jeu (1926), and his volume on famous cuckolds, Les Cocus célèbres (1927).

De Republica (dē rę.pub'li.kạ). [Eng. trans., "Of the Republic."] Philosophical political treatise in six books, by Cicero, in the form of a dialogue between Africanus the younger (in whose gardens the scene is laid), C. Laelius, and others. The theme is the best form of government and the duty of the citizen. It was written c54–51 B.C. About one third of it has survived.

De rerum natura (dē rē'rum nạ.tū'rạ). [Eng. trans., "Of the Nature of Things."] Didactic poem by Lucretius. Written just before Lucretius's death in 55 B.C., the poem is one of the monuments of Roman literature, an exposition of things as they are in the world as viewed by an Epicurean. Lucretius discusses superstition, the nature of matter and of the universe, atoms, the mind, mortality, the senses, dreams, sex, the earth, man and society, and the phenomena of nature in the sky and on earth. It is in six books.

Derfflinger (der'fling.ėr), Georg von. b. at Neuhofen, Upper Austria, March 10, 1606; d. at Gusow, near Küstrin, Prussia, Feb. 4, 1695. Brandenburg general in the Thirty Years' War. He served at the battles of Warsaw (1656) and Fehrbellin (1675) and in the campaign against the Swedes (1678–79).

Derg (dėrg), Lough. Lake (formed by an expansion of the river Shannon) partially separating Connacht province from Munster province, in the Irish Republic. It forms part of the County Galway-County Tipperary and County Clare-County Tipperary boundaries. Length, ab. 24 mi.; greatest width, ab. 4 mi.

Derg, Lough. Lake in Ulster province, Irish Republic, in County Donegal ab. 8 mi. E of Donegal. It contains a shrine, Saint Patrick's Purgatory, situated at first on Saint's Island, but now on Station Island. Length, ab. 3 mi.; width, ab. 3 mi.

Derham (dėr'ąm), William. b. at Stoulton, near Worcester, England, Nov. 26, 1657; d. at Upminster, near London, April 5, 1735. English divine and natural philosopher. His chief works are Physico-Theology (1713), Astro-Theology (1715), and Christo-Theology (1730).

De Ridder (dę rid'ėr). City in S Louisiana, parish seat of Beauregard Parish: center of a grain and citrus-fruit farming region. Turpentine and resin are also produced. 5,799 (1950).

Derketo (dėr'kę.tō). See Derceto.

d'Erlanger (der.läṅ.zhā), Frédéric. See Erlanger, Frédéric d'.

Derleth (dėr'lęth), August William. b. at Sauk City, Wis., Feb. 24, 1909—. American writer and editor.

Among his books are Murder Stalks the Wakely Family (1934), Place of Hawks (1935), Wind Over Wisconsin (1938), Atmosphere of Houses (1940), The Milwaukee Road (1947), and others; editor of H. P. Lovecraft's Beyond the Wall of Sleep (1943), 20 Masterpieces of Horror for the Connoisseur (1944), and other books.

Dermody (dėr'mo̤.di), Thomas. b. at Ennis, County Clare, Ireland, in January, 1775; d. at Sydenham (now part of London), July 15, 1802. Irish poet. He published Poems (1792), Poems, Moral and Descriptive (1800), and Poems on Various Subjects (1802). His works were published as The Harp of Erin in 1807.

Dermot (dėr'mo̤t), Jessie. Original name of Elliott, Maxine.

Dermott (dėr'mo̤t). City in SE Arkansas, in Chicot County: rail shipping point; sawmills. 3,601 (1950).

Dern (dėrn), George Henry. b. at Hooper, Neb., Sept. 8, 1872; d. at Washington, D.C., Aug. 27, 1936. American politician and inventor, U.S. secretary of war from 1933 to 1936. He attended Nebraska State University, leaving school in 1895 to migrate to Utah, where he joined the Mercur Gold Mining and Milling Company, of which he later served as general manager (1901–13). Together with Theodore P. Holt, he invented the Holt-Dern ore roaster for the treatment of low-grade silver ores, and also took part in the development of a vacuum slime-filtration process evolved by George Moore. He helped place both of these on a commercial basis. He became (1915) a member of the Utah legislature, where he sponsored liberal labor legislation and an act for the regulation of public utilities. He was elected (1924) governor of Utah, thus becoming the second non-Mormon to hold that office. He was reëlected in 1928 and in 1933 was appointed secretary of war by President F. D. Roosevelt. He held the post until his death.

Derna (der'nạ). [Also, Derne.] Coastal town in Libya, N Africa, in the territory of Cyrenaica, formerly the capital of Derna province in the old Italian colony of Libya. It is situated on the Mediterranean shore W of Tobruk and E of Bengasi, and is connected with both of these points by the coast highway. It was the scene of bitter fighting between the Germans and the British in World War II. 21,547 (1938).

Dernburg (dern'bůrk), Bernhard. b. at Darmstadt, Germany, July 17, 1865; d. 1937. German economist and politician. He belonged to a distinguished German-Jewish family (the French branch changed the spelling of the name to Derenbourg). He began his career as banker, and served as director (1906–10) of the colonial department of the foreign office; a vigorous defender of the government's colonial policies. He was a leading member (1919 et seq.) of the Democratic Party, and was minister of finance from April to June, 1919.

Dernier Chouan (der.nyā shwäń), Le. Original title of Chouans, Les.

Deronda (dẹ.ron'dạ), Daniel. The hero of George Eliot's novel Daniel Deronda. He is Jewish, and when he discovers his parentage he resolves to devote his whole life to restoring the Jewish nation to its lost political position.

De Rongé Island (dẹ rôń.zhā'). [Also, Rouge Island.] High, rugged island in Antarctica, largest island of the group which forms the W side of Errera Channel along the Danco Coast, in ab. 64°42′ S., 62°36′ W. Length, ab. 5 mi.; width, ab. 2½ mi.

Déroulède (dā.rö.led), Paul. b. at Paris, Sept. 2, 1846; d. at Mont-Boron, near Nice, France, Jan. 30, 1914. French writer and politician, best known for his vigorous opposition to the third French republic. He was exiled (1900) for ten years for plotting against the safety of the state, but was granted amnesty in 1905. A founder of the League of Patriots, an ultra-nationalist group of which he was president (1886–1908), he campaigned (1887) for Boulanger, was a deputy (1889–92, 1898–1900), and unsuccessfully tried to organize a military putsch (1899). A playwright and poet, he defended the idea of revenge against Germany in his Chants du soldat (1872). His play La Moabite (1882) was banned. Among his other works are Marches et sonneries (1881), Chants patriotiques (1882), Le Désarmament (1891), Chants du paysan (1894), and the plays Messire du Guesclin (1895) and La mort de Hoche (1897).

Deroy (dẹ.rwȧ), Henri. b. at Paris, June 12, 1900—. French banker, governor of the Crédit Foncier de France, leading French land bank. He was a member of the general council of the Bank of France, president of the board of the Compagnie Internationale des Wagons-Lits et des Grands Express Européens, and director-general of the Caisse des Dépôts et Consignations. He served (1923–35) in the finance ministry.

Derpt (derpt). A former Russian name of Tartu.

Derr (der). See El Dirr.

Derry (der'ī). See also Londonderry.

Derry. Town in SE New Hampshire, in Rockingham County, ab. 10 mi. SE of Manchester: manufactures of shoes, textiles, and clothing. 5,826 (1950).

Derry. Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Westmoreland County near Johnstown. 3,752 (1950).

Dertona (dėr.tō'nạ). Latin name of Tortona, Italy.

Dertosa (dėr.tō'sạ). Latin name of Tortosa, Spain.

Derwent (dėr'wẹnt). Name of several rivers in England, as follows: 1. River in NW England, in Cumberland, which flows into Solway Firth on the Irish Sea, ab. 7 mi. N of Whitehaven. Length, ab. 33 mi. 2. River in N central England, in Derbyshire, which joins the Trent ab. 7 mi. SE of Derby. It is noted for its scenery. Length, ab. 60 mi. 3. River in NE England, in Northumberland and Durham, which flows NE to the Tyne ab. 3 mi. W of Gateshead. Length, ab. 30 mi. 4. River in NE England, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, rising ab. 6 mi. S of Whitby and flowing S to the Ouse, ab. 15 mi. SE of York. Length, ab. 57 mi.

Derwent. River in Tasmania at the mouth of which is situated the capital city of Hobart. The river empties into Storm Bay. Length, ab. 130 mi.

Derwentwater or Derwent Water (dėr'wẹnt.wô.tėr, -wot.ėr). One of the chief lakes in the Lake District in NW England, in Cumberland, lying directly S of Keswick. It is an expansion of the river Derwent. Length, 3 mi.; width, ab. 1 mi.; elevation, ab. 244 ft.

Derwentwater, 3rd Earl of. Title of Radcliffe or Radclyffe, Sir James.

Derzhavin (dir.zhä'vin), Gavriil Romanovich. b. at Kazan, Russia, July 14, 1743; d. at Svanka, near Novgorod, Russia, July 21, 1816. Russian lyric poet. His best-known poem outside Russia is Ode to God (1784), besides which he wrote Felicia, Monody on Prince Mestcherski, The Nobleman, The Taking of Ismail, The Taking of Warsaw, and others. His works were published 1810–15.

Dés (dāsh). See Dej.

Desaguadero (des''ä.gwä.ᴛʜā'rō). River in W Bolivia, the outlet of Lake Titicaca, which flows into Lake Poopó. Length, ab. 160 mi.

Desaguadero Basin. See Titicaca Basin.

Desaix de Veygoux (dẹ.ze dẹ vā.gö), Louis Charles Antoine. b. at St.-Hilaire-d'Ayat, near Riom, Puy-de-Dôme, France, Aug. 17, 1768; killed at Marengo, Italy, June 14, 1800. French general. He served in the battle of the Pyramids (1798), conquered Upper Egypt (1798–99), and decided the victory at Marengo.

De Sanctis (dā sängk'tēs), Francesco. b. at Morra Irpina, Avellino province, Italy, 1817; d. 1883. Italian literary historian, critic, educator, and patriot. From 1838 to 1848 he conducted a private school of literary studies, rejecting the aloof and romantic tendencies of those times, and insisting that students and teachers of literature must take account of contemporaneous life and its problems. He led his pupils in support of the 1848 revolution at Naples, and after its failure was imprisoned by the Bourbon regime for more than two years without trial, being finally released in the expectation that he would go into exile in America; but he made his way to Turin, where he became one of the circle of liberals who were planning national unification. Accepting a professorship of literature at Zurich, Switzerland, in 1856, he won a large following with his lectures. When the hour for action in Italy came, he resigned his professorial chair and proceeded to Naples, where Garibaldi appointed him governor of his native province of Avellino, in 1860. In the following year he entered Cavour's cabinet as minister of education, holding office at that time for one year only, but accepting the same post on two later occasions (1878 and 1879–81). During the years preceding complete unification of Italy, he called tirelessly for the extension of education and preached the responsibility of citizens to be worthy of the new nation. From 1871 to 1878 he was professor of comparative literature at the University of Naples. Apart from his political writings and career, De Sanctis is widely considered one of the greatest of Italian literary critics, and indeed one of the foremost critics of modern times regardless of country or nationality. He had the faculty of perceiving greatness in a work of literary art and of arousing others to share his perceptions. His most influential works are Saggi critici (Critical Essays, 1866), Storia della letteratura italiana (History of Italian Literature, 1871), and Nuovi Saggi critici (New Critical Essays, 1872).

Desargues (dẹ.zärg), Gérard. b. at Lyons, France, 1593; d. there, 1662. French army officer, engineer, and architect, one of the earliest mathematicians to develop the theory of conic sections from the point of view of projective geometry. His classic treatise, Brouillon project d'une atteinte aux événements des rencontres d'un cône avec un plan, appeared in 1639, but it was long overlooked. His Œuvres were published in two volumes in 1864.

Désaugiers (dā.zō.zhyā), Marc Antoine. b. at Fréjus, 1742; d. at Paris, Sept. 10, 1793. French composer of light operas. He also wrote the cantata Hiérodrama in celebration of the fall of the Bastille, and composed a requiem (1786).

Désaugiers, Marc Antoine Madeleine. b. at Fréjus, France, Nov. 17, 1772; d. at Paris, Aug. 9, 1827. French song writer and author of vaudevilles; son of Marc Antoine Désaugiers.

Desault (dẹ.zō), Pierre Joseph. b. at Magny-Vernois, Haute-Saône, France, Feb. 6, 1744; d. at Paris, June 1, 1795. French surgeon and anatomist.

Desbarres (dā.bär′), Joseph Frederick Walsh (or Wallet). [Also, Des Barres.] b. 1722; d. at Halifax, Nova Scotia, Oct. 24, 1824. English officer and hydrographer. He published Atlantic Neptune (1777), and others.

Desbordes-Valmore (dā.bôrd.vàl.môr), Marceline Félicité Josèphe. [Maiden name, Desbordes.] b. at Douai, France, June 20, 1786; d. July 23, 1859. French poet and singer; wife (married 1817) of the actor François Prosper Lanchantin, who was called Valmore. Her poetry is distinguished for sweetness and pathos, without affectation. She was the author of Élégies et romances (1818) and Élégies et poésies nouvelles (1824).

Desborough (dez′bėr.ō), Colonel. "Brutally ignorant" brother-in-law of Cromwell in Sir Walter Scott's novel Woodstock.

Desborough or Desborow (dez′bėr.ō, -brō) or Disbrowe (diz′brō), John. b. 1608; d. at Hackney (now part of London), 1680. English military officer. He served as major during the battles of Langport (July 10, 1645), Hambleton Hill (Aug. 4, 1645), and the storming of Bristol (Sept. 10, 1645), where he commanded the regiment of horse. He was made colonel in 1648 and major general at Worcester (1651), and was chosen (1653) one of four generals of the fleet. In 1657 he was a member of Cromwell's privy council. He was imprisoned (1660) in the Tower of London on suspicion of having plotted to kill Charles II and Queen Henrietta Maria.

Desbruères (dā.brü.er), Henri. b. at St.-Hilaire-en-Morvan, Nièvre, France, April 15, 1907—. French airline executive, general manager of the Compagnie Nationale Air-France. He was graduated from the École Polytechnique and served (1932 et seq.) as a French air-force engineer.

Descabezado Grande (des.kä.bā.sä′ᴛʜō grän′dā). Inactive volcano in C Chile. Elevation, ab. 12,750 ft.

Descartes (dā.kärt′; French, dā.kârt), René. b. at La Haye, France, March 31, 1596; d. at Stockholm, Feb. 11, 1650. French philosopher and mathematician. He graduated at the age of 17 from the Jesuit college of La Flèche and later studied at the University of Poitiers, saw some brief military service, lived for a time at Paris, and spent several years in travel, visiting Germany, Italy, Holland, and Poland, studying and seeking knowledge. In 1628 he was at the siege of La Rochelle as a volunteer, but the following year he took up residence in Holland, where he lived a retired life, busily engaged, however, in elaborating and defending his philosophy and formulating his mathematical system, until 1649 when upon the invitation of Queen Christina of Sweden he went to Stockholm, only to die there of pneumonia five months later. He had been marked as a modern philosopher to be reckoned with since the publication in 1637 of his brief treatise entitled Discours de la méthode. The theories there set forth he supported in three essays, La Dioptrique, Les Météores, and La Géométrie. Others of his works published during his lifetime were Meditationes de prima philosophia (1641), Principia philosophiae (1644), Traité des passions de l'âme (1649), as well as a polemical pamphlet (1643) entitled Epistola Renati Descartes ad Gisbertum Voëtium. After his death his friends published his De l'homme, Traité de la formation du fœtus, Le Monde ou traité de la lumière de Descartes (all of the forgoing appearing in 1664), and a collection of his letters, issued between 1657 and 1667. In 1701 appeared, finally, Opuscula posthuma, physica et mathematica. Descartes was one of the great mathematicians of all times, adding much to the theories of algebra and geometry. His philosophical methodology was an attempt to extend the mathematical approach to all fields of human thought and investigation. His name still looms large in the history of philosophy, and his influence remains great. Rejecting scholasticism, he based his speculations upon pure reason, his point of basic approach being derived from his famous axiom, Cogito, ergo sum ("I think, therefore I am."). Willing to take nothing for granted (the point of the axiom cited above is, of course, that it enabled Descartes safely to assume his own existence), he proceeds to proof of the existence of God, and from that to a demonstration of the reality of the material world. Between the material world and the mind or soul he posits a complete gulf, which can be bridged only by the direct intervention of God. Writing at a time when speculation could take its stand upon pure reason (still within the framework of Roman Catholic theology) his system inevitably diminished in authority with the rise, beginning a century or so after his death, of the natural sciences as they have since come to be understood.

Descaves (dā.kàv), Lucien. b. at Paris, March 18, 1861; d. Sept. 6, 1949. French journalist, novelist, and dramatist of the naturalist school. He was the author of the novel Sous-Offs (1889) and other satires of military life, Les Emmurés (1894), La Colonne (1902), Barabbas (1914), and L'Imagier d'Épinal (1919). His dramas, almost invariably written in collaboration and less successful than his fiction, include La Pelote (1889), Les Chapons (1890), Le Cœur ébloui (1926), and Les Fruits de l'amour (1928). Originally a declared naturalist, he revolted against Zola with the other signers of La Manifeste des Cinq; his later writings evolve toward a much milder manner than that of his early work. He became literary editor of Le Journal in 1892; later served L'Intransigeant in the same capacity; was elected to the Goncourt Academy in 1900 and became its president in 1944.

Descent from the Cross. Subject of many religious paintings in the Renaissance and subsequent periods in the history of art. The traditional content of these pictures, with figures lifting down the dead body of Christ and mourners grouped at the foot of the Cross, gave painters scope for great variety and force in their compositions. Because paintings in these periods were most often designed for the walls or altarpieces of churches they were not marked with specific titles and the same work is sometimes known by several names. Most art historians agree, however, in designating a given picture of the actual removal of Christ's body as a Descent, or Deposition, from the Cross, while a portrayal of the mourners grouped on the ground around the dead Christ, while sometimes known by one of these titles, is more often called a Pietà, from the Italian word for "pity." Among the best-known Descents are: 1. Painting (1504) by Sodoma (Giovanni Antonio Bazzi), in the Academy at Siena, Italy. The group of mourning women is especially admired for the beauty of its conception and execution. 2. Painting by Paolo Cavazzola, in the Pinacoteca at Verona. It unites the naturalism of the 15th century with the freedom of the following period. With its companion pieces, the Bearing of the Cross and the Agony in the Garden, it has been called the painter's masterpiece 3. Painting by Correggio, in the Pinacoteca at Parma, Italy. 4. [Also, Deposition from the Cross.] Painting by Rubens (1614), by some critics considered his masterpiece, in Antwerp cathedral, Belgium. The body has been detached and is being lowered by men on ladders; it is received below by Saint John, beside whom kneel Mary Salome and the Magdalen. The Virgin stands behind.

Descent into the Maelström, A. Story by Edgar Allan Poe, published (1841) in Graham's Magazine and included in the Prose Tales of Edgar A. Poe (1843).

Descent of Man, The. Scientific work (1871) by Charles Darwin. It is a further exposition of the theory of evolution, previously presented and explained by Darwin in his Origin of Species (1859), which caused a scientific and intellectual revolution when it appeared. The Descent is as important, as scientific, and as careful a work as the earlier one, but a dozen years makes a difference, and the work aroused nothing like the anger and excitement and resentment that greeted the Origin of Species.

Deschamps (dā.shäṅ), Émile. [Full name, Émile Deschamps de Saint Amand.] b. at Bourges, France, Feb. 20, 1791; d. at Versailles, France, in April, 1871. French poet.

Deschamps, Eustache. [Called Morel Deschamps.] b. at Vertus, in Champagne (now in Marne department), France, in the first part of the 14th century; d. early in the 15th century. French poet and author of ballades (1,175 in number), rondeaux (171), virelais (80), a long poem, the Miroir de mariage, and L'Art de dictier et de fere chancons, balades, virelais et rondeaulx (a treatise on French rhetoric and prosody).

Deschamps, Gaston. [Full name, Charles Pierre Gaston Napoléon Deschamps.] b. at Melle, France, Jan. 5, 1861; d. 1931. French journalist and literary critic of marked conservative tendencies. His best criticism is preserved in La Vie et les livres (6 vols., 1894–1904).

Deschanel (dā.shā.nel), Émile Auguste Étienne Martin. b. Nov. 14, 1819; d. Jan. 26, 1904. French writer and journalist. He was appointed (1842) professor of rhetoric at Bourges, and shortly after occupied the same chair at Paris. He entered journalism as a liberal, and was imprisoned and exiled in 1851. He returned to Paris in 1859, and became one of the editors of the Journal des Débats. In 1876 he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies as a republican, and in 1881 was elected a senator for life. He published a number of anthologies with comments, Les Courtisanes grecques, Le Mal qu'on a dit des femmes, Le Bien qu'on a dit des femmes (1855–58), La Vie des comédiens (1860), Études sur Aristophane (1867), Le Peuple et la bourgeoisie (1881), and Benjamin Franklin (1882). From 1882 to 1886 he published his lectures at the Collège de France, called Le Romantisme des classiques, much enlarged and revised.

Deschanel, Paul Eugène Louis. b. at Brussels, Belgium, Feb. 13, 1856; d. at Paris, April 28, 1922. French statesman and author, tenth president of the third French republic; son of Émile Auguste Étienne Martin Deschanel. He was secretary (1876–77) to two ministers of the interior, de Marcère and Simon, and after filling various minor offices was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1885, of which he was president (1898–1902, 1912 et seq.). He was elected to the presidency of the republic in 1920. He resigned because of ill health (September, 1920), was elected (1921) to the senate, and died from injuries caused in a fall from a railroad car. He was named a member of the French Academy in 1899 and of the Academy of Moral Sciences in 1918. His published work includes La Question du Tonkin (1883), La Politique français en Océanie (1884), Les Intérêts française dans le Pacifique (1885), Orateurs et hommes d'état (1888; crowned by the French Academy), Figures de femmes (1889; also crowned), Figures littéraires (1889), Questions actuelles, a collection of his principal speeches (1891), La Décentralisation (1895), La Question sociale (1898), Quatre ans de présidence (1902), Politique intérieure et étrangère (1906), and À l'institut (1907).

Deschapelles (dā.shā.pel), Louis Honoré Lebreton. b. 1780; d. 1847. French whist and chess player. He was considered the strongest chess master of his time, giving odds to all players and beating them. It is said that when one of his pupils grew strong enough to play him at an even game, Deschapelles retired (c1821) from chess and took up whist instead. The Deschapelles coup, the lead of a high card to lose it so that partner's cards may win tricks, is named for him. He published a treatise on whist in 1839.

Deschutes (dā.shöt'). River in C and N Oregon, rising in the Cascade Range and flowing generally N to join the Columbia River ab. 15 mi. E of The Dalles, Ore. The lower course of the Deschutes, descending from the lava plateau to the Columbia valley, flows in a deep gorge, and has many falls and rapids. Length, ab. 320 mi.

Desclée (dā.klā), Aimée Olympe. b. Nov. 18, 1836; d. at Paris, March 9, 1874. French actress. She excelled in the dramas Frou-Frou, Diane de Lys, and other plays popular in her day.

Description of New England, A. Narrative of colonial settlement and exploration by Captain John Smith (1580–1631), published in 1616.

Desdemona (dez.dē.mō'na). In Shakespeare's tragedy Othello, the wife of Othello the Moor, and the daughter of Brabantio, a Venetian senator. Othello smothers her in an outburst of rage produced by a belief in her unfaithfulness, carefully instilled by Iago.

Desdén con el desdén (dez.dān' kōn el dez.dān'), El. [Eng. trans., "Disdain Met with Disdain."] Play by Augustín Moreto y Cavaña (1618–69), adapted from episodes in the plays of Lope de Vega. It is not known when it was first produced, but it is still played, and is one of the four classical pieces of the older Spanish drama. Under the title of Donna Diana it is familiar in Germany, and in 1864 John Westland Marston produced it under the same name in England, his version being a translation of that of Schreyvogel. Molière's version, La Princesse d'Élide, was a failure. Count Carlo Gozzi produced it in Italian as La Principessa Filosofa o il Contraveleno (The Philosophical Princess or the Antidote).

Desdichado (des.di.chä'dō). In Sir Walter Scott's novel Ivanhoe, the device, meaning "The Disinherited," assumed by Ivanhoe in the tournament at Ashby.

Deseada (dā.sā.ä'dä). See Désirade.

De senectute (dē sen.ek.tū'tē). [Eng. trans., "On Old Age"; also, Cato Major.] Short treatise by Cicero, in the form of a conversation, devoted to the praise (in the person of Cato the censor) of old age. It was written in 45 or 44 B.C.

Desenzano del Garda (dā.sen.tsä'nō del gär'dä). [Also, Desenzano.] Town and commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lombardy, in the province of Brescia, situated at the S end of Lake Garda, ab. 16 mi. SE of Brescia. It is a station on the railroad line from Verona to Milan. Buildings of interest to tourists, including the medieval castle, were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 10,360 (1936); of town, 5,058 (1936).

Deseret (dez.ėr.et'). See under Utah.

Desertas (dā.ser'täs). [Also, Las Desertas.] Group of small islands in the Atlantic, lying SE of Madeira.

Deserted Village, The. Poem by Oliver Goldsmith, begun in 1768 and published in 1770. It is a version in rhymed couplets of the popular declamation of the time against luxury and the depopulation of the countryside as the result of the siren call of industrial wages.

Desert of Zin (zin). See Zin, Desert of.

Desert Places. Short nature poem by Robert Frost. It appears in A Further Range (1936), in which volume it is the second poem in the grouping "Taken Singly." It is also to be found in his Collected Poems (1949), and in various anthologies. Its opening line is "Snow falling and night falling fast, oh, fast."

de Seversky (dē sē.ver'ski), Alexander Procofieff. b. at Tiflis, Russia, June 7, 1894—. American aviator and aeronautical engineer. He came to the U.S. in 1918 and became a naturalized citizen in 1927. He was founder (1931) and president (1931–39) of the Seversky Aircraft Corporation, pursuit plane manufacturers, and the inventor of various airplane devices, including a fully automatic bombsight which was bought by the U.S. His designs include the single-seater, low-winged fighter plane (1936) which was accepted as the U.S. army standard. In 1935 he broke the world's speed record for amphibious aircraft. He has served as personal representative of the U.S. secretary of war at the Bikini atom bomb tests (1946) and as a columnist (1943–44) on air power for the McNaught Syndicate, and is the author of Victory

Through Air Power (1942) and Air Power; Key to Survival (1950).

Desfontaines (dā.fôn.ten), René Louiche. b. at Tremblay, Ille-et-Vilaine, France, Feb. 14, 1750; d. at Paris, Nov. 16, 1833. French botanist. His chief work is Flora Atlantica (1798–1800).

Desful (des.fül'). See Dizful.

Desgraviers (dā.grȧ.vyā), François Marceau-. See Marceau, François Séverin des Graviers.

Deshayes (dā.ā), Gérard Paul. b. at Nancy, France, May 13, 1795; d. at Boiran, Oise, France, June 9, 1875. French naturalist, especially known as a paleontologist. Among his works are Description des coquillages fossiles des environs de Paris (1824–37), Traité élémentaire de conchyliologie (1839–58), and Description des animaux sans vertèbres découverts dans le bassin de Paris (1857–65).

De-shima (de.shē.mā). See under Nagasaki.

Deshoulières (dā.zö.lyer), Antoinette du Ligier de la Garde. b. at Paris, Jan. 1, 1638; d. there, Feb. 17, 1694. French poet. She was the author of verse, for the most part of the occasional order (idyls, odes, elegiacs, and songs) and of two unsuccessful tragedies.

Desiderio da Settignano (dā.sē.dā'ryō dä sät.tē.nyä'nō). b. at Settignano, near Florence, Italy, c1428; d. 1464. Florentine sculptor. He was accepted as a member of the stonecutters' guild of Florence in 1453, and in 1455 executed the tomb of Carlo Marsuppini in the Church of Santa Croce at that city. This is perhaps his greatest achievement, but his tabernacle in the Florentine Church of San Lorenzo is also accounted a masterpiece. In his brief career he mastered an unsurpassed delicacy, displayed in his busts and reliefs of women and children and in the decorative details of his monumental works, so that he is considered one of the great sculptors of the Renaissance. He was strongly influenced by Donatello. Examples of Desiderio's art are to be seen in the National Gallery of Art at Washington, and in the Institute of Art at Detroit.

Desiderius (des.i.dir'i.us). Last king of the Lombards; reigned 756–774. He was Duke of Tuscany when he was chosen to be king. Pepin the Short, his backer in the succession to the throne, married Desiderius's daughter to his son Charles, who came to the Frankish throne in 771. Charles, later to be known as Charlemagne, was appealed to by Pope Adrian I when Desiderius attempted to extend the Lombard domains to include papal lands. Charles sent his daughter back to Desiderius and, when Desiderius also refused to recognize Charles's dominion over the Franks, supporting his brother Carloman's children, Charles crossed (773) the Alps, captured Ticinum (now Pavia) after a siege in 774, and sent Desiderius off to spend the rest of his life in a French monastery.

Desiderius, Abbot. See Pope Victor III.

Desiderius, Father. Religious name of Lenz, Peter.

Desierto (dā.syer'tō). Spanish word for "desert": for places including this word in their names, see the specific elements of the names.

Design for Living. Comedy (1933) by Noel Coward. The main characters are three Bohemians (in spirit, not in nationality), and the three acts take place in Otto's Paris studio, in Leo's London flat, a year and a half later, and in Ernest's New York apartment, two years later. The feminine interest is supplied by Gilda, who finds that she cannot live without Otto and Leo, just as they in their turn find that they cannot live without her, or each other.

Desima (de.shē.mā). See under Nagasaki.

Desio (de'zyō). Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lombardy, in the province of Milano, N of Milan. It is an important industrial center, with a number of silk and woolen textile establishments, shoe factories, and others. Pop. of commune, 13,499 (1936); of town, 11,788 (1936).

Désir (dā.zēr), Le. French title of Trauerwalzer.

Désirade (dā.zē.rȧd). [Also: Deseada, La Désirade.] Island in the Caribbean Sea, ab. 9 mi. E of Guadeloupe: a French colony. The production of cotton and henequen, and the raising of sheep are the major industries. It has an important leprosarium. Area, ab. 10 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 2,000.

Desire Under the Elms. Play by Eugene O'Neill, produced and published in 1924. The 75-year-old Ephraim Cabot, living complacently under an inflexible Puritanical code, marries a third wife, Abbie Putnam. In order to have an heir to Ephraim's money, Abbie seduces his stepson, Eben. Abbie develops a genuine attachment to her lover but, when Eben discovers her greedy purpose, he rejects her. The enraged and remorseful Abbie murders their child. Eben tells the police of Abbie's crime but, in the end, his love for her reawakened, he willingly surrenders himself with Abbie.

Desjardins (dā.zhȧr.dań), Marie Catherine Hortense. [Pseudonym, Madame de Villedieu.] b. near Fougères, France, 1631; d. there, in November, 1683. French writer and author of numerous works, among which are Les Désordres de l'amour, Amours des grands hommes, Mémoires du serail, and Le Récit en prose et en vers des précieuses.

Desjardins, Paul. b. at Paris, 1859; d. 1940. French essayist and critic, founder (1910) of the internationally famous intellectual conferences at Pontigny, France. He was the author of Le Devoir présent (1891; Eng. trans., The Present Duty, 1893) and other essays. His written work is less important than his initiation of what is now called "Moral Rearmament." He founded (1892) the Ligue pour l'Action Morale and influenced two generations in France by his constant affirmation of the necessity of spiritual values among men of good will.

Des Knaben Wunderhorn (dęs knä'bęn vůn'dêr.hôrn). See Wunderhorn.

Desmarets or Desmaretz (dā.mȧ.rā), Jean. [Title, Sieur de Saint-Sorlin.] b. at Paris, 1595; d. there, Oct. 28, 1676. French dramatist and poet. In the 1630's he became one of the coterie who gathered around Valentin Conrart, and with others of that circle he was a founder of the French Academy, and was its first chancellor. Richelieu became his patron, and it was at the great cardinal's request that he turned to the writing of plays. The comedy Les Visionnaires (1637) is considered his masterwork, but his tragedies Érigone and Scipione were admired in their time. In the controversies between the literary factions known as the Ancients and the Moderns, Desmarets energetically enlisted with the latter, for which he was censured by Boileau. In his later years he wrote religious poetry, and published a polemic against the Jansenists.

Desmarets, Nicolas. [Title, Marquis de Maillebois]. b. at Paris, Sept. 10, 1648; d. 1721. French statesman; nephew of Jean Baptiste Colbert (1619–83). He rose to high rank in the financial administration under Colbert's patronage, but was dismissed after the latter's death, only to be recalled to office in 1686. Time and again in memoranda prepared for various controllers-general he analyzed the rapidly degenerating economic position of the country, and when he became controller-general in 1708 he attempted to save the situation by a scheme of income taxes similar to proposals made by Vauban, but the privileged classes and the tax-farmers were able virtually to nullify this attempt. After the death of Louis XIV, Desmarets was removed from his post, and retired from public affairs.

Desmas (dez'mąs). See Dismas.

De Smet (dę smet'), Pierre Jean. [Called "Black-robe."] b. at Termonde, Belgium, Jan. 30, 1801; d. May 23, 1873. Jesuit missionary in America. He arrived in the U.S. in 1821 and between 1821 and 1827 trained at Jesuit novitiates at Whitemarsh, Md., and Florissant, Mo. Ordained in 1827, he became a missionary to the Indians, serving (1838–40) at St. Joseph, Mo. He traveled widely in the U.S. and abroad to survey missionary possibilities and solicit support. Considered an effective mediator with the Indians, he attended (1851) the great council near Fort Laramie and mediated in the Mormon and Yakima Indian wars. He visited (1868) the hostile chief Sitting Bull, making peace eventually possible.

Des Moines (dę moin'). City in C Iowa, capital of Iowa and county seat of Polk County, on the Des Moines River: largest city in the state. Its industries produce meat products, cement, flour, tile, bricks, clothing, hosiery, wool textiles, cosmetics, leather, and grain and dairy products. Settled in 1843 as a military post and two years later as a town, it became the capital in 1858. It is the seat of Drake University. 177,965 (1950).

Des Moines River. River in Iowa which rises in SW Minnesota, and joins the Mississippi at the SE extremity of Iowa, ab. 4 mi. below Keokuk. Length, from the union of the east and west forks (in Humboldt County, Iowa), ab. 300 mi.; total length, ab. 500 mi.; navigable to the city of Des Moines.

Desmond (dez'mond). Ancient kingdom in SW Ireland, comprising the region now included in County Cork and County Kerry, Irish Republic. It was created c200 A.D. by the division of Munster, but was merely a loose federation of local chiefs under a ruler. In the 12th century, the MacCarthys became kings of Desmond, and ruled until the 16th century. The earldom of Desmond was created in 1329, and went out of existence in 1583, as a political unit.

"Desmond." See MacCarthy, Denis Florence.

Desmond, Shaw. b. in County Waterford, Ireland, Jan. 19, 1877—. Irish novelist and poet, founder (1934) of the International Institute for Psychical Research. He is the author of The Soul of Denmark (1918), Democracy (1919), Passion (1920), The Drama of Sinn Fein (1923), The Isle of Ghosts (1925), Ragnarok (1926), Windjammer: the Book of the Horn (1932), We Do Not Die (1934), World Birth (1937), Reincarnation for Everyman (1939), How you live when you Die (1942), The Story of Adam Verity (1947), and The Edwardian Story (1950).

Desmoulins (dā.mö.laṅ), Camille. [Full name, Lucie Simplice Camille Benoît Desmoulins; called Procureur de la lanterne.] b. at Guise in Picardy (now in the department of Aisne), France, March 2, 1760; guillotined at Paris, April 5, 1794. French revolutionist, prominent as a pamphleteer and journalist. In July, 1789 his impassioned harangues contributed powerfully to the popular excitement which culminated in the storming of the Bastille. He was a deputy to the Convention in 1792. He earned his nickname by virtue of his pamphlet directed against the aristocracy, Le Discours de la lanterne aux Parisiens. He published the weekly Les Révolutions de France et de Brabant from 1789 to 1791, and other pamphlets and papers, attacking the moderate position of the Girondins, but in 1793, in the Vieux Cordelier, he supported Danton's softer policy. He was arrested with Danton, given a farcical trial, and was third of the group of 15 to be executed with Danton.

Desmukh (des.mök'), Sir Chintaman Dwarkanath. b. 1896—. Indian official, prominent in world economic conferences. Delegate to the world monetary conference (1944) and Indian governor (1946) of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank, he also served as delegate (1931) to the Round Table Conference, was revenue and financial secretary (1932–39) of the Central Provinces and Berar, secretary (1939–41) to the central board of the Reserve Bank of India, and deputy governor (1941–43) of the bank.

Desna (dyis.nä'). River in W U.S.S.R., in W Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic and N Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, rising in the Smolensk Hills and flowing generally S to join the Dnieper ab. 4 mi. above Kiev. The river is navigable for river steamers to Novgorod-Severskii, ab. 337 mi. from its mouth, and, in times of high water, to Bryansk, ab. 512 mi. from its mouth. It has a considerable traffic in timber and wood from the forest regions of the upper river S to the steppe region of the Ukraine. Length, ab. 733 mi.

Desnoyers (dā.nwȧ.yā), Auguste Gaspard Louis Boucher, Baron. [Called Boucher-Desnoyers.] b. at Paris, Dec. 20, 1779; d. there, in February, 1857. French engraver. His best-known works are copies after Raphael (La Belle Jardinière and the Transfiguration, and others).

Desolación (dā"sō.lä.syōn'). [English, Desolation, Desolation Land.] Island in the Pacific Ocean, off the coast of S Chile, E of Punta Arenas. It has belonged to Chile since 1881. Length, ab. 70 mi.

Desolation Island. See Kerguelen.

Desor (dā.zôr'), Eduard. b. at Friedrichsdorf, near Homburg, Prussia, Feb. 11, 1811; d. at Nice, France, Feb. 23, 1882. Swiss geologist, zoölogist, and archaeologist.

De Soto (dē sō'tō). City in E Missouri, in Jefferson County: shipping point for lead; railroad shops and hat and shoe factories. 5,357 (1950).

de Soto (dē sō'tō; Spanish, dā sō'tō), Hernando. b. at Barcarrota, Spain, c1500; d. somewhere along the Mississippi River, May 21, 1542. Spanish explorer, noted for his discovery of the Mississippi River. He made his first voyage to Central America at about the age of 19, and later participated (1532 et seq.) in the conquest of Peru under Francisco Pizarro and Diego de Almagro. His achievements as a conquistador drew the attention of Charles V of Spain, who gave him (1537) a contract to conquer Florida and made him governor of Cuba, which de Soto reached in 1538. Preparing his expedition of some 1,000 men there, he departed from Havana in 1539, reaching the Florida coast in the vicinity of Charlotte Bay on May 30. Fighting Indians almost all of the way, he led his expedition through what are now the states of Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, seeking gold and other riches. In April, 1541, he discovered the Mississippi River, probably crossing it below what is now Memphis, Tenn. The expedition penetrated as far west as Oklahoma, and then gave up hope of finding treasure and turned back. De Soto died on the west bank of the Mississippi, to whose waters his followers delivered his remains. The survivors of the company reached Mexico on the Gulf Coast in 1543. See Narratives of the Career of Hernando de Soto by E. G. Bourne (2 vols., 1904).

Despair, Giant. Giant in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress who takes Christian and Hopeful while they are asleep and imprisons them in his dungeons in Doubting Castle. Christian, after three days without food or drink and after being cudgeled regularly, opens the dungeon lock with the key "Promise," and he and Hopeful escape.

Despard (des'pärd, -pȧrd), Edward Marcus. b. in Queen's County (now County Laoighis), Ireland, 1751; d. Feb. 21, 1803. Irish conspirator. He entered the army in 1766, obtained the rank of captain c1780, and in 1784 was appointed superintendent of his majesty's affairs in the Spanish peninsula of Yucatán. Having been dismissed from this office on a frivolous charge, he organized a conspiracy against the government, in consequence of which he was arrested on Nov. 16, 1802, and hanged at London.

Despencer (des'pen'sėr), 15th Baron le. Title of Dashwood, Francis.

Despenser (des.pen'sėr), Edward le. d. 1375. British knight; grandson of Hugh le Despenser the younger (d. 1326). He fought at Poitiers and in other French campaigns of Edward III of England, and under Pope Urban V. He was a Knight of the Garter and a patron of Jean Froissart, the chronicler.

Despenser, Henry le. [Also, Spencer.] b. c1341; d. Aug. 23, 1406. British bishop and soldier, bishop of Norwich (1370). He defeated the Norfolk peasants at North Walsham during the Peasants' Revolt (1381). He led the campaign of Pope Urban VI in Flanders against the antipope Clement VII and won a victory at Dunkerque (1383) and raised the siege of Ypres (1383). He was denounced by Wycliffe for being a soldier and a bishop at the same time. He aided Richard II of England during the French invasion (1385). He suppressed the Lollards. Imprisoned (1399) by Henry IV, for his loyalty to Richard, he later was reconciled (1401) to the new king.

Despenser, Hugh le. d. Aug. 4, 1265. Justiciar of England. He first appears in 1256, when he was entrusted with Harestan Castle, in Derbyshire. The first mention of him as justiciar is found in the Fine Rolls in 1261. He joined the baronial party at the outbreak of the war with Henry III in 1263, and fell in the battle of Evesham.

Despenser, Hugh le. [Called "the Elder"; title, Earl of Winchester.] b. c1262; d. at Bristol, England, Oct. 27, 1326. English court favorite; son of the justiciar Hugh le Despenser, who fell (1265) in the baronial ranks at Evesham. He was with the king in Gascony in 1294, was present at the battle of Dunbar in 1296, accompanied the expedition to Flanders in 1297, was sent on a mission to Pope Clement V at Lyons in 1305, and was created Earl of Winchester in 1322. On the death of King Edward II's favorite Piers Gaveston in 1312, he became the leader of the court party in opposition to the baronial, and together with his son Hugh le Despenser obtained a complete ascendancy over the king. The unscrupulous manner in which the favorites used their power to further schemes of self-aggrandizement caused them to be banished (1321–22), and brought about a rising of the barons under Queen Isabella in 1326, which ended in the deposition of the king and the execution of the favorites. The elder Despenser was captured at the surrender of Bristol, where he was tried and executed on the charge of treason.

Despenser, Hugh le. [Called "the Younger."] d. at Hereford, England, Nov. 24, 1326. English court favorite; son of Hugh le Despenser, Earl of Winchester. He was appointed chamberlain to Edward II in 1313. Originally an adherent of the baronial party, he joined (c1317) his father in the support of the king, and obtained in an especial degree the royal favor. He was banished with his father in 1321, returning with him in 1322. On the rising of the barons under Queen Isabella in 1326, caused by his insolence and self-seeking to a greater degree than even his father's, he fled with Edward from London, on Oct. 2, 1326, but was captured at Llantrisant on Nov. 16, 1326, and was tried and executed at Hereford on the charge of treason.

Despenser, Thomas le. [Title, Earl of Gloucester.] b. 1373; beheaded at Bristol, England, 1400. British soldier; son of Edward le Despenser. He was created Earl of Gloucester (1397) for supporting Richard II against Thomas of Woodstock, Earl of Gloucester, Richard Fitzalan, 4th Earl of Arundel, and Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. He led the rear guard in Richard's Irish expedition (1399), but lost the earldom (1399) for his part in the death of the duke of Gloucester. He was in conspiracy against Henry IV, but was betrayed (1400) and beheaded at the demand of the people of Bristol (1400).

Desperate Lovers, The. Three-act comedy (1926) by Alfred Sutro.

Despiau (des.pyō), Charles. b. at Mont-de-Marsan, Landes, France, Nov. 24, 1874; d. at Paris, Oct. 30, 1946. French sculptor, known for his portrait busts and allegorical groups. After Aristide Maillol, he was one of the most individual of modern French sculptors. Discovered by Rodin, whose assistant he became, he executed his most characteristic work in bronze. At the time of his death he left uncompleted the figure of Apollo destined for the Museum of Modern Art at Paris.

D'Espine (des.pēn), Adolphe. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 20, 1846; d. at Cologny, Switzerland, July 5, 1930. Swiss pediatrician. He became professor of pathology (1876) and of pediatrics (1908) at the University of Geneva. He described a sign for tracheobronchial adenitis or mediastinal tumor (1907) in which whispered voice sounds are heard over the upper thoracic vertebrae (called the D'Espine sign). His works include Manuel des maladies de l'enfance (1877), La Cure marine de la scrofule à l'asile Dollfus de Cannes (1904), and Le Diagnostic précoce de la tuberculose des ganglions bronchiques chez les enfants (1907).

Des Plaines (dẹs plānz'). City in NE Illinois, in Cook County, near Chicago: residential and industrial community. 14,994 (1950).

Des Plaines River. [Also, Aux Plaines River.] River in SE Wisconsin and NE Illinois, which unites with the Kankakee to form the Illinois ab. 40 mi. SW of Chicago. It is part of the canal system serving Chicago. Length, ab. 150 mi.

Despoblado (des.pō.blä'ŦHŌ). [Also, Puna.] Name given in the Andean regions of South America to any barren plateau which is so high and cold as to be practically uninhabitable. Specifically it is applied in S Peru to the region between the central and western cordilleras, an undulating tract from 14,000 to 18,000 ft. high, with a general breadth of ab. 150 mi., narrowing N and extending S on the borders of Chile and Bolivia.

Desportes (dā.pôrt), Alexandre François. b. at Champigneul, France, 1661; d. at Paris, 1743. French painter. He received some instruction from a Flemish painter resident at Paris, but in the main was self-taught, achieving proficiency by natural talent. His work, running largely to hunting scenes and landscapes with animals, pleased Louis XIV, who employed him in decorating the palaces of Versailles and Fontainebleau, and made him royal painter. In 1699 he became a member of the Academy at Paris. He accompanied one of the French ambassadors to England and did some painting there. His work is very well represented in the Louvre at Paris.

Desportes, Philippe. b. at Chartres, France, 1546; d. Oct. 5, 1606. French poet, clergyman, and diplomat. A disciple of Ronsard, he was called by his contemporaries "the French Tibullus."

Despoto Dagh (des'pō.tō däg). See Rhodope Mountains.

Despoto Planina (des'pō.tō plä.nē.nä'). Bulgarian name of the Rhodope Mountains.

Després (dā.prā), Suzanne. b. 1875—. French actress. She distinguished herself first at the Théâtre Antoine (1897) and became a leading actress at the Comédie Française after 1902. She made tours to other European countries and left a particular impression on the Bulgarian theater.

Dessaix (dā.se), Joseph Marie, Comte. b. at Thonon, Haute-Savoie, France, Sept. 24, 1764; d. Oct. 26, 1834. French general in the Napoleonic wars. Napoleon called him "L'Intrépide" after the battle of Wagram (1809).

Dessalines (dā.sȧ.lēn), Jean Jacques. b. at Grande Rivière, Haiti, 1758; assassinated near Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Oct. 17, 1806. Negro revolutionist, emperor (1805–06) of Haiti. He was a slave, joined the insurrection of 1791, rose to be second in command under Toussaint L'Ouverture, and fought against the mulattoes. He was notorious for savage courage and cruelty. In 1802 he resisted Leclerc's army in the west, but finally submitted. After Toussaint had been carried to France he headed another revolt, and, aided by the English, drove out the French (1803). On Jan. 1, 1804, he was proclaimed governor general for life of Haiti, and on Oct. 8, 1804, emperor, as Jean Jacques I. His despotism incited hatred, and he was eventually waylaid and killed.

Dessau (des'ou). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly the capital of Anhalt, situated on the Mulde River near its junction with the Elbe River, ab. 71 mi. SW of Berlin: river port. Before World War II it had important machine industries, and manufactured railroad cars, gas apparatus, paper, textiles, and carpets (rugs); there were also distilleries, breweries, and sugar refineries. The large Junkers aircraft factories were frequently bombed during World War II. From 1925 to 1933 Dessau was the seat of the Bauhaus, a school of arts and crafts which pioneered in modern artistic expression; some of its outstanding members fled to the U.S. in 1933. The city has beautiful parks and a number of art galleries and museums. The Church of Mary (1506–12) contains paintings by Lucas Cranach. The former ducal castle and the Prince Frederic Palais date from the 18th century, the Prince George Palais from 1820, the Rathaus (city hall) from 1900. A Slavic settlement in the 7th century, Dessau is mentioned as a German town in the 13th century. The Austrian general Wallenstein defeated the Protestants under Count Peter Ernst von Mansfeld here in 1626. From 1603 the capital of Anhalt, Dessau was a cultural center in the reign of Duke Leopold III (1751–1817). The philosopher Moses Mendelssohn was born here. Allied troops occupied the city on April 21, 1945, in World War II. War damage was extensive. The population, almost entirely Protestant, declined 24.8 percent between 1939 and 1946, to 88,139 (1946).

Dessauer (des'ou.ėr), Friedrich. b. at Aschaffenburg, Germany, July 19, 1881—. German politician and scientist. He worked particularly on x-ray treatments as professor (1920 et seq.) at the University of Frankfort on the Main. He was a Centrist Party member of the Reichstag (1924–33), wrote political, scientific, and philosophical works, and developed an optimistic philosophy of technology. Dismissed by the Nazis, he emigrated to Switzerland and became a member of the faculty at the University of Fribourg. Among his numerous books are Wissen und Bekenntnis (1944) and Philosophie der Technik (3rd ed., 1945).

Dessauer, Joseph. b. at Prague, in May, 1798; d. at Mödling, Austria, July 8, 1876. Bohemian (Czech) composer of songs and operas, chamber music, piano works, and overtures.

Dessie (des'yā). [Also, Dessye.] Town in E Africa, in Ethiopia, in the highlands N of Addis Ababa and E of Lake Tana. It is a road junction on the roads from Gondar, Assab, and Asmara to Addis Ababa, and is also a local commercial center.

Dessolles or Dessole (de.sol'), Jean Joseph Paul Augustin, Marquis. b. at Auch, Gers, France, Oct. 3, 1767; d.

at Paris, Nov. 4, 1828. French general and politician. He served with distinction under Moreau in Italy in 1799, in Germany in 1800, and was minister of foreign affairs (1818–19).

De Stefani (dā ste'fä.nē), Alberto. b. at Verona, Italy, Oct. 6, 1879—. Italian economist, who served as professor (1916 et seq.) at Padua, Venice, and Rome; also as Mussolini's minister of finance (1922 et seq.). He is the author of La Restaurazione financiaria (The Financial Reconstruction, 1926), and La Legislazione economica della guerra (The Economic Legislation of War, 1927).

Destêrro (dĕsh.tār'rö). A former name of Florianópolis.

Destinn (des'tin), Emmy. [Original surname, Kittl.] b. at Prague, Feb. 26, 1878; d. 1930. Czech opera singer. She is said to have taken her stage name from that of Marie Loewe-Destinn, with whom she studied singing at Prague. She sang (1898–1908) at the New Royal Opera House, Berlin, and also performed at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, at Covent Garden, London, and elsewhere. Among her principal roles were Mignon, Santuzza in Cavalleria Rusticana, Elizabeth in Tannhäuser, Salome, and Carmen. In 1910 she appeared in Puccini's The Girl of the Golden West.

Destiny. Novel by Susan E. Ferrier, dedicated to Sir Walter Scott, and published anonymously in 1831.

Destouches (dā.tösh), André Cardinal. b. at Paris, c1672; d. there, Feb. 8, 1749. French operatic composer. He was director (1728–31) of the Opéra; his operas include Amadis de Grèce (1699), Omphale (1701), Sémiramis (1718), and Les Éléments (1721).

Destouches, Franz Seraph von. b. 1772; d. 1844. German composer, notably of dramatic works. His other compositions include chamber music, orchestral pieces, and concertos.

Destouches, Louis Fuch. [Pseudonym, Louis-Ferdinand Céline.] b. at Paris, 1894—. French novelist and physician. He is the author of Voyage au bout de la nuit (1932; Eng. trans., Journey to the End of Night, 1934), Mort à credit (1936; Eng. trans., Death on the Installment Plan, 1938), and Bagatelles pour un massacre and École des Cadavres (both 1938). All his work is fiercely nihilistic in tone and has been frequently condemned for its relentless obscenity. Accused of collaboration with the Germans, he was non grata in France and lived in exile in Denmark until he was amnestied in 1951.

Destouches, Philippe. [Original surname, Néricault.] b.at Tours, France, in April, 1680; d. near Melun, France, July 4, 1754. French dramatist. Among his 17 comedies are Le Curieux impertinent (1710), Le Philosophe marié (1727), and Le Glorieux (1732).

Destrée (des.trā), Jules. b. at Marcinelle, Belgium, 1863—. Belgian lawyer, publicist, and politician. With his brother he took part in the lively controversies in the provocative Jeune Belgique; also collaborated with Emile Vandervelde in writing Le Socialisme en Belgique. His esthetic interest is reflected in a number of works on painters. He served as minister of sciences and arts.

"Destroyer Deal." Term sometimes applied to an exchange made through executive agreement by President Franklin D. Roosevelt with Great Britain on Sept. 3, 1940, by which the U.S. obtained on 99-year leases a chain of bases running from Newfoundland to Trinidad in return for 50 overage destroyers. Bases on Newfoundland and Bermuda were granted outright as gifts to the U.S.; those in the West Indies, Antigua, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Bahamas, Trinidad, and British Guiana, by lease.

Destructive Element, The. Critical work by Stephen Spender, published in 1935.

Destutt de Tracy (des.tüt dę trā.sē), Alexandre César Victor Charles, Comte. b. at Paris, Sept. 9, 1781; d. at Paray-le-Frésil, Allier, France, March 13, 1864. French officer, politician, and writer; son of Antoine Destutt de Tracy (1754–1836).

Destutt de Tracy, Antoine Louis Claude, Comte. b. at Paris, July 20, 1754; d. March 10, 1836. French philosopher, deputy to the Constituent Assembly in 1789. His chief works are Éléments d'idéologie (1801–15) and Commentaire sur l'esprit des lois (1811, 1819).

Desvalières (dā.vä.lyer), Georges Olivier. b. at Paris, March 14, 1861—. French landscape, religious, portrait, and genre painter, and pastel artist. His work, which approaches expressionism, can be considered the link between the religious art of Moreau and Rouault. He studied under Moreau and others, at Paris, in the École des Beaux-Arts, and first exhibited in the Paris Salon of 1883, and regularly thereafter. He was awarded many prizes, including the silver medal at the Exposition Universelle of 1900. He has done murals in churches and private homes, and illustrated Rolla, and other books. Among his best-known works are The Kiss of Christ, Portrait of Mme. D., Ball Players, and decorations for the chapel of Saint Privat, and the church at Pawtucket.

Desvres (devr). Town in N France, in the department of Pas-de-Calais, ab. 12 mi. E of Boulogne. It is an industrial town; the outstanding products are cement and pottery. 5,515 (1946).

Detaille (dę.tây'), Jean Baptiste Édouard. b. at Paris, Oct. 5, 1848; d. 1912. French painter of battle scenes. During the Franco-Prussian War he was the secretary of General Pajol, and later of General Appert. Many of his pictures show the result of his studies from life at this period. Among them are En Retraite (1873), Charge du 9ème cuirassiers à Morsbronn (1874), Le Régiment qui passe (1875), Salut aux blessés (1877), Le Rêve (1888), Charge du 1er hussards (bought for the Luxembourg in 1891). Besides some minor illustrations he furnished designs in the period 1885–88 for a book containing all the types and uniforms of the French army.

de Tassigny (dę tä. sē.nyē), Jean Joseph Marie Gabriel de Lattre. See de Lattre de Tassigny, Jean Joseph Marie Gabriel.

Deterding (dā'tèr.ding), Sir Henri. [Original name, Hendrik Wilhelm August Deterding.] b. at Amsterdam, April 19, 1866; d. Feb. 4, 1939. International oil magnate. The son of a poor seaman, he found employment in a bank at the age of 16, six years later went to the Dutch East Indies as an employee of the Netherlands Trading Society, before long transferred his services to the Royal Dutch Company for the Working of Petroleum Wells in the Dutch East Indies, and by 1900, at the age of 34, was managing director of this concern. Convinced of the vast future of the oil industry and of its profit-making possibilities, he set himself to curb waste and inefficiency in the industry by integrating production and sales and by promoting agreements among oil companies to keep prices up. In 1903 such an agreement was reached between Royal Dutch and certain companies under British and French control, the chief among which was the Shell Transport and Trading Company; Royal Dutch and Shell were later merged into one great corporation. These combined interests proved strong enough to hold their own against the largest American oil group. Properties were acquired in many parts of the world including the Far East, Russia, Venezuela, Mexico, and even in the U.S. After the Russian Revolution Deterding, who had a very large stake in the Baku oilfields, backed the White Russian General Denikin in the hope of preventing the extension of the revolution to that region, but in April, 1920, the Bolsheviks secured control of Baku and its oil wells and refineries. Thenceforth it became one of Deterding's chief aims, pursued ever more doggedly, to recover the Baku properties. As this was obviously impossible without the overthrow of the Soviet regime, he became one of the principal non-German subsidizers of Adolf Hitler, in the expectation that a Nazi Germany might probably attack and defeat the U.S.S.R. In his later days Sir Henri Deterding was considered by many to be the most powerful man in the world. Lord Fisher of the Royal Navy, who brought about the substitution of oil for coal in that navy, said that Deterding was "Napoleonic in his audacity and Cromwellian in his thoroughness."

Detmold (det'mōld; German, -molt). City in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly the capital of Lippe, situated on the Werre River ab. 46 mi. SW of Hanover. It has metallurgical, electrical, textile, shoe, and leather factories, and also manufactures wooden articles and costume jewelry; marble and gypsum quarries are in the vicinity. Detmold has vocational schools, a school of painting, a music conservatory, a theater, library, museum of antiquities, and local museum. The former residential castle dates from the 16th century; the new Palais, in the midst of a large park, from the 17th century. The city is a center for excursions and a summer resort. Charlemagne defeated the pagan Saxons here in 783. Throughout the medieval and modern period (until 1918) it remained the capital of the principality of Lippe. Damage in World War II was light. The population is predominantly Protestant; the increase in population between 1939 and 1946 was 30.3 percent. 26,807 (1946), 30,178 (1950).

Detmold, Johann Hermann. b. at Hanover, Germany, July 24, 1807; d. there, March 17, 1856. German politician and satirical writer. He was elected to the national assembly in 1848, and in 1849 was for a short time minister of justice and of the interior. He wrote Anleitung zur Kunstkennerschaft (1833), Randzeichnungen (1843), and Taten und Meinungen des Herrn Piepmeier (1849).

Detour, The. Play by Owen Davis, produced in 1921 and published in 1922.

Detroit (dẹ.troit'). City in S Lower Michigan, county seat of Wayne County, on the Detroit River: fifth largest city in the U.S., noted as a great automobile-manufacturing center, with the General Motors, Fisher, Packard, Chrysler, and other company plants established here. Other large industries include manufactures of stoves, rubber, pharmaceutical and biological products, and adding machines. It is the seat of the Detroit Institute of Arts, Wayne University, Marygrove College, Detroit Institute of Technology, and the University of Detroit. A tunnel connects the city with Windsor, Canada. It was first settled by the French in 1701 and was taken by the British in 1760. Ceded to the U.S. in 1783, it was not occupied until 1796. It was surrendered by Hull to the British in 1812 and recovered by the U.S. in 1813. From 1837 to 1847 it was the state capital. 1,623,452 (1940), 1,849,568 (1950).

Detroit (dẹ.trwä'), Karl. Original name of Mehemet Ali Pasha.

Detroit Conservatory of Music (dẹ.troit'). Music school founded (1874) at Detroit, Mich., offering courses in all branches of the field.

Detroit Lakes. City in W Minnesota, county seat of Becker County, in a resort region of nearly 500 lakes. 5,787 (1950).

Detroit River. River which flows from Lake St. Clair into Lake Erie, and separates Michigan from the province of Ontario, Canada. Length, ab. 25 mi.

Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Ensemble established (1914) by Weston Gales, who conducted it from 1914 to 1918. Its next conductor (until 1935) was Ossip Gabrilovitch; among the conductors who followed were Victor Kolar and Karl Krueger.

Dett (det), Robert Nathaniel. b. at Drummondville, Quebec, Canada, Oct. 11, 1882; d. at Battle Creek, Mich., Oct. 2, 1943. American Negro conductor and composer, the first American to use Negro folk music for classical themes. He received the Mus.B. degree (1908) from Oberlin Conservatory, and was director (1913–35) of music at the Hampton Institute, where he was conductor of the choir which toured Canada, the U.S., and Europe. His compositions include America the Beautiful, The Ordering of Moses, an oratorio, and the symphony An American Sampler. He published Religious Folksongs of the Negro and the Dett Collection of Negro Spirituals (four books, 1937).

Dettifoss (det'ti.fôs). Waterfall in NE Iceland, in the Jökulsá River ab. 47 mi. E of Akureyri. It is the greatest falls in Iceland, formed where the river plunges into a narrow gorge eroded in the volcanic rock for a length of ab. 15 mi. Height of falls, ab. 352 ft.

Dettingen (det'ing.ẹn). Village in Lower Franconia, Bavaria, situated on the Main River, ab. 16 mi. SE of Frankfort on the Main. Here, on June 27, 1743, the Anglo-German army under George II of England defeated the French under Marshal Adrien Maurice de Noailles.

Dettmann (det'män), Ludwig. b. at Adelbye, Germany, July 25, 1865—. German landscape, genre, and battle painter, who was director of the art academy at Königsberg. He studied at the Berlin Academy under E. F. P. Bracht and F. A. de Werner (1884–90) and then traveled throughout Germany, to France and England. He was awarded a silver medal at the Exposition Universelle of 1900 at Paris. Among his works are Fisherman's Cemetery, The Last Supper, and View of a Village.

Dettweiler (det'vī.lėr), Peter. b. at Winterstein, Rhenish Hesse, Germany, Aug. 4, 1837; d. at Cronberg, Germany, Jan. 12, 1904. German physician, founder of a sanatarium for tuberculous patients at Falkenstein (Taunus). He became (1876) director of this institute, introducing rest cures on deck-chairs on porches or in the open air, and recommended spitting vials for tuberculous patients. He was the author of Die Behandlung der Lungenschwindsucht in geschlossenen Heilanstalten (1880), "Ernährungstherapie bei Lungenkrankheiten" (in Handbuch der Ernährungstherapie by E. von Leiden, 1898), and Die hygienisch-diätetische Anstaltsbehandlung der Lungentuberkulose (1899).

Deucalion (dū.kā'li.ọn). In Greek legend, king of Phthia in Thessaly; son of Prometheus and Clymene, who with his wife Pyrrha was saved from a deluge sent by Zeus. On the advice either of his father or of Prometheus, he built a wooden chest in which he and his wife were saved. After floating for nine days he landed on Mount Parnassus and sacrificed to Zeus. To renew the human race, destroyed by the deluge, he and Pyrrha were directed to veil their faces and throw behind them the bones of their mother. Understanding this to mean their mother the earth they threw stones, and those thrown by Deucalion became men and those thrown by Pyrrha women; and with these Deucalion founded a kingdom in Locris.

Deucher (doi'ċhėr), Adolf. b. 1831; d. 1912. Swiss statesman. Trained as a physician, he became (1855) a member of the Thurgau canton council and took part in drafting (1868) a new constitution for that canton. He served (1869–73) on the Swiss National Council and was elected (1887, 1897, 1903) president of the Swiss Confederacy.

Deuil (dėy'). Town in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, between the towns of St.-Denis and Pontoise. It belongs to the metropolitan region of Paris. It has chemical factories. The town suffered damage in World War II. 9,125 (1946).

Deurne (dėr'nẹ). Town in N Belgium, in the province of Antwerp, E of Antwerp, of which it is a suburb. It has carpet manufactures and canneries, and a large airport. 56,853 (1947).

Deurne. Town in S Netherlands, in the province of North Brabant, E of Eindhoven. It is an agricultural market center and has textile manufactures. 12,531 (1939).

Deus (dā'ösh), Gaspar da Madre de. See Madre de Deus, Gaspar da.

Deus, João de. [Full name, João de Deus Ramos.] b. at San Bartolomeu de Messines, Portugal, March 8, 1830; d. at Lisbon, Portugal, Jan. 11, 1896. Portuguese poet who has been praised by many as the purest lyric poet of Portugal since Camoens. His poems are to be found in Flores do campo (1868), Fôlhas sôltas (1876), and Campo de flores, a collection of his complete poetical production, compiled by Teófilo Braga (1893) and enlarged in the 1896 edition. As an educator, he wrote Cartilha maternal (1876), which was officially adopted in Portuguese schools in 1888. His prose writings were published posthumously with the title Prosas (1898).

Deusdedit (dē'us.ded.it), Saint. [Called Adeodatus I.] b. at Rome; d. Nov. 8, 618. Pope from 615 to 618. Remembered for his devotion to the people during a year of pestilence, he authorized celebration of more than one mass on Sunday in churches unable otherwise to accommodate their parishioners, and was supposedly the first Pope to use the leaden seal (Bulla), whence the name for papal bulls is derived.

Deussen (doi'sẹn), Paul. b. at Oberdreis, Germany, Jan. 7, 1845; d. at Kiel, Germany, July 6, 1919. German philosopher and Sanskrit scholar, remembered for his work in the field of Indian philosophy, about which he wrote many books such as Das System der Vedanta (1883) and Die Geheimlehre des Veda (1907 et seq.). He served (1889 et seq.) as professor at the University of Kiel. He wrote also Elemente der Metaphysik (1877) and Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie (1894 et seq.).

Deutekom (dė'tẹ.kôm). See Doetinchem.

Deutero-Malay (dū'tėr.ọ.mạ.lā', -mā'lā) or Deutero-Malaysian (-mạ.lā'zhạn, -shạn). [Also, Malay, Malayan, Malay-Mongoloid.] An individual belonging to a subdivision of the Southern Mongoloid race characterized, in contrast to the Proto-Malay subdivision, by greater stature, lighter skin, rounder head, narrower nose, straighter hair, and a greater incidence of the Mongoloid fold. The Deutero-Malay type is found among the Burmans, Siamese, Shan, Khmer, Malays, Japanese, and throughout the Malay Archipelago.

Deuteronomy (dū.tėr.on'ọ.mi). Fifth and last book of the Pentateuch, containing the last discourses of Moses, delivered in the plain of Moab. It begins with a recapitulation of the events of the last month of the 40 years' wandering of the Israelites in the desert (i.-iv. 40); then follows the main body of the book, setting forth the laws which were to regulate the Israelites when they should become settled in the promised land; while chapters xxvi-xxxiii contain the farewell speeches of Moses. Deuteronomy is a manual of religion and social ethics. Compared with the other books of the Pentateuch it is distinguished by a warm, oratorical tone. The laws of the preceding books are modified, and their presentation is more spiritual and ethical. On account of these differences Deuteronomy is now assigned by many critics to a different author and date from the rest of the Pentateuch. Owing to the fact that the so-called reformation of King Josiah appears to carry out the principles of Deuteronomy, it is concluded that "the book of the law" discovered by the priest Hilkiah in the temple in 621 B.C., which began the reformation of Josiah, was Deuteronomy. But its composition must certainly have originated at an earlier date. This is put by many critics in the reign of Manasseh, c698–c643 B.C.

Deutsch (doich), Babette. b. at New York, Sept. 22, 1895—. American poet and novelist; wife of Avrahm Yarmolinsky (1890—). She is the author of Banners (1919), Honey Out of the Rock (1925), Fire for the Night (1930), Epistle to Prometheus (1930), One Part Love (1939), Take Them, Stranger (1944), and other collections of verse; her novels include Mask of Silenus (1933) and Rogue's Legacy (1942). She has also published a book of criticism, This Modern Poetry (1935).

Deutsch, Emanuel, Oscar Menahem. b. at Neisse, Prussia, Oct. 28, 1829; d. at Alexandria, Egypt, May 12, 1873. German Orientalist, for many years an assistant in the British Museum library.

Deutsch, Ernst. b. at Prague, Sept. 16, 1890—. Austrian actor. He first appeared as an actor of unusual vocal power at Vienna and Dresden, winning attention in the last-mentioned city with his terse and forceful style in the early expressionist drama, Reinhard Sorge's Der Bettler (1912). Subsequently he acted for Reinhardt in Berlin and became a leading actor of the Staatstheater. After 1924 he also appeared in German films.

Deutsch Brod (doich' brōt'). German name of Havlíčkův Brod.

Deutsch de la Meurthe (dėch dẹ lȧ mėrt), Henri. [Original name, Henri Deutsch.] b. at Paris, Sept. 25, 1846; d. at the Château Romainville-les-Mureaux, Seine-et-Oise, France, Nov. 24, 1919. French industrialist and philanthropist, organizer of the first petroleum refineries in France. He sponsored various prizes for development of the automobile and aviation, and was founder of the Cité Universitaire at Paris.

Deutsche Chronik (doi'chẹ krō'nik). [Later name, Vaterländische Chronik.] German semiweekly journal of radical views in politics and literature, founded in 1774 by Christian Friedrich Daniel Schubart (1739–91), and continued after 1777 (while Schubart was confined in the fortress prison of Hohenasperg) by Johann Martin Miller (1750–1814). It changed names repeatedly. After Schubart's release (1787) it became the Vaterländische Chronik.

Deutscher Bund (doi'chėr bụnt). German name of the German Confederation.

Deutsche Rundschau (doi'chẹ rụnt'shou). German literary and critical magazine published at Berlin. It was founded in 1874 and edited for many years by Julius Rodenberg. It was never the organ of a special group, but sought general excellence and as wide an audience as possible.

Deutsches Meer (doi'chẹs mār). A German name of the North Sea.

Deutsches Theater (doi'chẹs tā.ä'tėr). Most important theater of Berlin, notable for its uninterrupted and progressive production of modern drama. It was founded in 1883 by Adolf L'Arronge, who carried on the classical-historical tradition of the Meinigen Company. From 1894 to 1905, Otto Brahm gave this theater a naturalistic style. In 1905, Max Reinhardt brought with him a baroque approach and produced all styles of drama, romantic and symbolist as well as realistic. The theater collapsed during World War I, but it was revitalized for a short time by Heinz Hilpert in 1933.

Deutsch-Eylau (doich'ī'lou). German name of Iława.

Deutsch-Krone (doich'krō'nẹ). German name of Wałcz.

Deutschland (doich'länt) or Deutsches Reich (doi'chẹs rīch). German names of Germany.

Deutschland, Deutschland über alles (doich'länt, doich'länt ü'bėr äl'ẹs). German patriotic hymn, at one time a German national anthem. It was written in 1841 by Hoffman von Fallersleben, then a political fugitive on Helgoland (at that time British territory). The inspiration and some of the phraseology came from a song by Walther von der Vogelweide. It was adapted to a melody by Haydn (1797) which had previously been used for the Austrian national anthem. It came into vogue in Germany during the last quarter of the 19th century.

Deutsch-Südwestafrika (doich'züt.vest.äf'rē.kä). German name of German Southwest Africa.

Deutsch-Wagram (doich'vä'gräm). See Wagram, Austria.

Deutz (doits). [Latin, Divitia; medieval name, Tuitium.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the E bank of the Rhine River, opposite Cologne. It is incorporated into the city of Cologne.

Deux Amis (dė.zȧ.mē), Les. [Eng. trans., "The Two Friends."] Play by Beaumarchais, produced in 1770.

Deux Journées (dė zhör.nā), Les. [English title, The Water Carrier.] Opera in three acts by Cherubini, with a libretto by Bouilly, first performed at the Théâtre Feydeau on Jan. 16, 1800. Based on an actual incident, the work deals with Count Armand who, in order to escape Mazarin, is taken from Paris in a water barrel.

Deux-Ponts (dė.pôn). French name of Zweibrücken.

Deux-Sèvres (dė.sevr). Department of France, in the W part, bounded by the department of Maine-et-Loire on the N, the department of Vienne on the E, the departments of Charente and Charente-Maritime on the S, and the department of Vendée on the W. The department was formed chiefly from parts of the old provinces of Poitou, Aunis, and Saintonge. It suffered in the religious wars and again during the insurrection of the Vendée at the time of the French Revolution. The department is known for its green pastures, its flower gardens, its canals, and its historic monuments dating from the medieval and Renaissance periods. Its economy is essentially agricultural; grain, vegetables, fruits, and wines are produced. Horses, mules, cattle, goats, hogs, and poultry are raised. Eggs and dairy products are exported in considerable quantities. It has active trade in lumber and in agricultural products, and a number of small industries. Capital, Niort; area, 2,337 sq. mi.; pop. 312,756 (1946).

Deva (dā'vȧ). [Also: Déva; German, Diemrich.] Town in NW Rumania, in the province of Transylvania, situated on the Mureş River, ab. 80 mi. SE of Arad: manufactures include canned foods and candies. The town is known for its beautiful castle. Here, in 1849, was fought a battle between the Austrians and the Hungarian insurgents. 12,959 (1948).

Deva (dā'vạ). In Hindu and Buddhist belief, a deity. The Hindu Devas are reckoned as 33; this number includes 12 Adityas, eight Vasus, 11 Rudras, and two Ashvins. In Zoroastrian belief, the Devas are evil spirits, created by Ahriman, lord of darkness.

Deva (dē'vạ) or Devana Castra (dẹ.vā'nạ kas'trạ). A Latin name of Chester, England.

Deva. Latin name of the river Dee, in N Wales.

De Valera (dev.ạ.lār'ạ), Eamon. b. at New York, Oct. 14, 1882—. Irish political leader and statesman; son of an Irish mother and Spanish father. He studied at Blackrock College and the Royal University at Dublin. At the time of its organization he became (1913) a member of the Irish Volunteers. He was commandant (1916) in the Irish national insurrection, and was condemned to life imprisonment but was released (1917) by a general amnesty. Arrested again in 1918 in a general clean-up of revolutionary elements, he was imprisoned, but in an escape organized by Michael Collins, De Valera fled (1919) to the U.S. He traveled (1919–20) in America to raise funds for an Irish republican government to whose leadership he had been elected (1919). He was president of the Irish Volunteers (1917–21) and of the Sinn Fein (1917–26). As a member (1917 et seq.) of the legislature, he headed (December, 1921–January, 1922) in the Dáil Éireann the opposition to the Anglo-Irish treaty establishing the Irish Free State as a dominion, which had been signed by his colleagues Michael Collins and Arthur Griffith; this led to his resignation (January, 1922) of the presidency and his formation of a militant group to oppose the treaty. He was founder and president (1924) of the Fianna Fáil, a group of extreme republicans. In 1926 he resigned as head of Sinn Fein and, after swearing allegiance to the king, the very oath he and his followers had fought against so bitterly for ten years, he brought (August, 1927) the Fianna Fáil into the Free State parliament. He served as president of the executive council and minister (1932–37) of external affairs and prime minister (1937–48) of the Irish government under the new constitution, which ignored the whole matter of Irish allegiance to the British crown. During World War II he insisted on Ireland's neutrality, maintaining it even in the face of the obvious endangering of the Normandy invasion by the activities in Ireland of Axis official representations. Out of power from 1948 to 1951, when a coalition made J. A. Costello premier, he again became prime minister in 1951 when the Fianna Fáil carried the election.

Devambez (dẹ.väñ.bā), André Victor Édouard. b. at Paris, 1867; d. 1944. French landscape, figure, historical, and genre painter and illustrator, especially noted for his small, realistic portrayals of genre scenes. He was schooled at Paris under Benjamin Constant and J. Lefèbvre, and obtained a Prix de Rome in 1900. In 1889 he was made a member of the Société des Artistes Français and exhibited in their Salons regularly, where he also won two prizes. A list of his works includes The Manifestation, Gulliver Received by the Lilliputians, and A Première in a Montmarte Theater.

Devaprayaga (dā″vạ.prä.yä′gạ). [Also, Deoprag.] Sacred city of the Hindus, in Tehri-Garhwal, Uttar Pradesh (United Provinces), Union of India, ab. 150 mi. NE of Delhi, where the Alaknanda and Bhagirath rivers unite to form the Ganges.

Devar Malai (dā′vär mā.lī′). See under Cardamom Hills.

Devarshis (dā.vär′shēz). In Hindu belief, rishis, or sages, who have attained perfection upon earth, and have been exalted as demigods to heaven.

Dévaványa (dā′vô.vä′nyô). Town in E Hungary, N of the Kőrös River and E of the city of Mezőtúr. The population is predominantly Protestant. 15,653 (1948).

De Vecchi di Val Cismon (dā vek′kē dē väl′ chēz.mōn′), Count Cesare Maria. b. at Casale Monferrato, Italy, Nov. 14, 1884—. Italian government official. An early Fascist, he founded the Piedmontese group, was elected (1921) to the chamber of deputies, and headed (1921–22) the Fascists in the senate. He took part in the March on Rome, subsequently serving as finance minister (1923), governor (1923–28) of Italian Somaliland, minister (1928) of state, ambassador (1929–34) to the Vatican, minister (1935–36) of education, and governor (1936–40) of the Italian possessions in the Aegean. He was named senator (1924) and given (1925) the title of count. He voted (July 24–25, 1943) against Mussolini in the Grand Fascist Council and for this was condemned (1944) to death by the Fascists; he was later condemned (1947) to five years' imprisonment by the Italian republicans for his previous activities. Both trials, however, took place in absentia, as he had moved to Argentina.

Devens (dev′ẹnz), Charles. b. at Charlestown, Mass., April 4, 1820; d. at Boston, Jan. 7, 1891. American jurist and Civil War general. He served with distinction in the Army of the Potomac (1861–65), and was attorney general of the U.S. from 1877 to 1881.

Deventer (dā′vẹn.tėr). [Also, Demter.] Town in E Netherlands, in the province of Overijssel, situated on the Ijssel River ab. 22 mi. NE of Arnhem, and connected by canals with Zwolle and Almelo. It has chemical, machine, and cigar factories, and canneries; biscuits, called Deventer Koek, are a specialty; there are also large meat markets. The town has preserved its medieval appearance, and contains numerous old churches, towers, municipal buildings, and patrician houses. It has a municipal museum and various educational institutions. The Stadhuis has a painting by Ter Borch; the Landhuis dates from 1632. An ancient commercial settlement, the town was plundered by the Saxons in 778 and by the Normans in 883. It came later under the bishopric of Utrecht, fell in 1528 to Charles V of Spain, and in 1571 to William I of Orange (William the Silent). The college or brotherhood of Deventer, known as the Brethren of the Life in Common or the Good Brethren and Sisters, planned by Gerard Groot, became known in the Low Countries and in Germany after 1400 and exerted considerable influence because of the strict community life, devotion to manual labor, and mystical tendencies of its members. 47,195 (est. 1951).

Deventer, Sir Jacob Louis van. b. in Orange Free State, South Africa, 1874; d. 1922. South African soldier.

de Vere (dẹ vir′). See also under Vere, de.

de Vere, Sir Aubrey. b. at Curragh Chase, County Limerick, Ireland, Aug. 28, 1788; d. there, July 5, 1846. Irish poet. He published Julian the Apostate (1822), The Duke of Mercia, The Song of Faith (1842), Mary Tudor (1847: posthumously published), and others.

de Vere, Aubrey Thomas. b. at Curragh Chase, County Limerick, Ireland, Jan. 10, 1814; d. there, Jan. 20, 1902. Irish poet, critic, and essayist; friend of Cardinal Newman, Wordsworth, Tennyson, and Carlyle; son of Sir Aubrey de Vere. He was educated by tutors and at Trinity College, Dublin, and traveled frequently in England and Italy. He entered (1851) the Roman Catholic Church. Among his works are volumes of verse including Waldenses (1842), The Search After Proserpine (1844), A Year of Sorrow (1847), Poems: Sacred and Miscellaneous (1854), May Carols (1857), Legends of St. Patrick (1872), Alexander the Great (1874), St. Thomas of Canterbury (1876), Antar and Zara and The Fall of Rora (both 1877), Poetical Works (3 vols., 1884–89), Legends and Records of the Church and Empire (1887), St. Peter's Chains (1888), and Medieval Records and Sonnets (1893). He also wrote English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds (1848), Picturesque Sketches of Greece and Turkey (1850), The Church Settlement of Ireland (1866), Ireland's Church Property and Pleas for Secularization (both 1867), Legends of the Saxon Saints (1879), Constitutional and Unconstitutional Political Action (1882), Ireland and Representation (1885), Critical Essays (3 vols., 1887–89), and Recollections (1897).

De Vere, Maximilian Schele. See Schele De Vere, Maximilian.

Devereux (dev′ėr.ö, -öks). Novel by Edward Bulwer-Lytton, published in 1829.

Devereux, Penelope. [Married name, Rich; called Stella by Sidney.] Lady loved by Sir Philip Sidney, and celebrated by him in his group of sonnets entitled Astrophel and Stella. She was the daughter of Walter Devereux (1541–76), whose plan it was for her to marry Sidney. However, she actually married Robert Rich, 3rd Baron Rich, but did not therefore repudiate Sidney's devoted attentions (literary and otherwise).

Devereux, Robert. [Title, 2nd Earl of Essex.] b. at Netherwood, Herefordshire, England, Nov. 19, 1566; beheaded at London, Feb. 25, 1601. English nobleman; son of Walter Devereux, 1st Earl of Essex of the Devereux line; a favorite of Queen Elizabeth. He was appointed in 1585 general of the horse to the expedition sent under Robert Dudley, 1st Earl of Leicester, his stepfather, to the aid of the States-General in the Netherlands. In 1587 he attended the court of Queen Elizabeth, who at this time began to show him unmistakable signs of attention, emphatically so after the death (1588) of Leicester. He secretly married (1590) the widow of Sir Philip Sidney, Frances Walsingham, daughter of Elizabeth's secretary of state. Despite Elizabeth's great anger when she heard of the marriage, he made his peace with her and became a privy councilor in 1593. He commanded the land forces in the successful raiding expedition against Cádiz in 1596 but failed to win a complete victory or to capture the Spanish treasure ships and was reprimanded by the queen. In 1597 he led an expedition against the Azores, again failing to accomplish a real victory, permitting the Argentine ships to escape and almost falling into a trap. But Elizabeth made peace with him and he was appointed earl marshal of England in 1597. He became chancellor of Cambridge University in 1598. In 1599 he was appointed lord lieutenant of Ireland, in which post he aroused the queen's anger by the failure of his operations against the Irish rebels, and by his inability to follow orders from the queen. He made a truce with Hugh O'Neill, the Earl of Tyrone, leader of the Ulster rebels, and, leaving his post without authorization, returned (September, 1599) to England to lay his defense before the queen in person. Failing to regain his standing at court, and after a trial as the result of which he was stripped of his offices, he formed a conspiracy with Charles Blount, Baron Mountjoy, and Henry Wriothesley, 3rd Earl of Southampton, to compel her by force of arms to dismiss his enemies in the council, who were and had been the Cecil faction. On Feb. 8, 1601, he led a group of his retainers through the streets of London, trying to arouse the citizenry to join him; but this half-formed uprising was met with apathy and he returned to his palace, Essex House, where he was captured. He was tried for treason; Francis Bacon, who had consistently attempted to mediate between Essex and Elizabeth, prosecuted the charge virulently; and Essex was found guilty and executed on the charge of treason.

Devereux, Robert. [Title, 3rd Earl of Essex.] b. at London, 1591; d. Sept. 14, 1646. English general; son of Robert Devereux, 2nd Earl of Essex of the Devereux line. He was appointed general of the Parliamentary army on the outbreak of the English Civil War in 1642, fought the Royalist forces in the drawn battle of Edgehill in 1642, captured Reading, relieved Gloucester, and gained the first battle of Newbury in 1643. He lost his army in the unsuccessful campaign in Cornwall in 1644, and resigned (1645) his command on the passage of the Self-Denying Ordinance, which denied public office to members of Parliament.

Devereux, Walter. [Titles: 1st Viscount of Hereford, 3rd Baron Ferrers.] b. before 1490; d. Sept. 27, 1558. English soldier and courtier; grandfather of Walter Devereux (c1541–1576). He succeeded (1501) his father as 3rd Baron Ferrers. He engaged (1512–13, 1523) in military campaigns under Admiral Thomas Howard, 3rd Duke of Norfolk, and Charles Brandon, 1st Duke of Suffolk, against France, was created (1523) Knight of the Garter, and became (1550) Viscount Hereford. He was appointed (1525) steward of the household of Princess Mary of Wales (later Queen Mary Tudor) and chief justice of South Wales. In 1526 he was named chamberlain.

Devereux, Walter. [Titles: 1st Earl of Essex, 2nd Viscount of Hereford.] b. in Carmarthenshire, Wales, probably in 1541; d. at Dublin, Sept. 22, 1576. English nobleman. He raised in 1569 a troop of soldiers to assist in suppressing the northern rebellion under the earls of Northumbria and Westmorland, for which service he was created Earl of Essex, the first of the Devereux line, in 1572. He made an unsuccessful attempt (1573–76) to subdue and colonize Ulster.

Deveron (dev'ėr.ọn). River in E Scotland, in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire. It rises in Banffshire, near the Aberdeenshire-Banffshire boundary, ab. 37 mi. W of Aberdeen, and flows NE across a portion of Aberdeenshire, reëntering Banffshire and flowing N to enter the North Sea ab. 1 mi. E of Banff. Length, ab. 61 mi.

Devers (dev'ėrz), Jacob Loucks. b. at York, Pa., Sept. 8, 1887—. American field-artillery officer. Graduate (1909) of U.S. Military Academy; executive officer of field artillery school in World War I; instructor of military tactics at West Point; specialist in mechanized warfare. Chief of staff (1939–40) of Panama department, supervised mechanization of Panama Canal defenses; placed in command (1940) of Fort Bragg; given command (1941) of armored forces; promoted to major general (1940) and lieutenant general (1942); appointed (1943) chief of U.S. forces in Europe; promoted (1945) to general; commanding general (1945–49) of army ground forces.

Devi (dā'vē). See Mahadevi; see also Parvati.

Devil, The. Tavern in Fleet street, London, near Temple Bar. The Apollo Club was held here. It was presided over by Ben Jonson, Shakespeare, Beaumont, and Fletcher, and other celebrities frequented it. The tavern was absorbed by Child's Bank, one of the oldest banks in London, which occupied the next house.

Devil and Daniel Webster, The. Short story (1937) by Stephen Vincent Benét. Now recognized as an American classic, it shows how the great American statesman defeated Satan and won a case for his client, Jabez Stone. It has enjoyed popularity in several forms, in its original one as a short story, as a one-act opera, as a play, and as a motion picture, in which Edward Arnold and Walter Huston scored great successes. It was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post, and in a volume of short stories, Thirteen O'Clock (1937).

Devil Is an Ass, The. Comedy by Ben Jonson, first acted in 1616. Jonson evidently had in mind the title of Dekker's play (published 1612) If it be not Good the Devil is in it. The devil in Jonson's play is an ass in comparison to the characters who buffet and completely overreach him.

Deville (dẹ.vēl), Charles Sainte-Claire. See Sainte-Claire Deville, Charles.

Déville-lès-Rouen (dā.vēl.le.rwäṅ). Town in NW France, in the department of Seine-Inférieure, ab. 4 mi. NW of Rouen. It has metallurgical and textile industries. 7,567 (1946).

Devil Postpile National Monument. National monument in E central California, in the Sierra Nevada mountains ab. 70 mi. NE of Fresno. It is a mass of hexagonal volcanic rocks (basaltic lava) standing in vertical columns, and was established as a national monument in 1911. Area, ab. 1¼ sq. mi.

Devil's Bridge. Stone bridge over the Reuss River, in the canton of Uri, Switzerland, on the St. Gotthard Pass near Andermatt. It was partly destroyed by the French in 1799. A new bridge (near the original one) was built 1828–30.

Devil's Bridge. [Also, Pont-y-Mynach.] Bridge over the gorge of the Mynach, near Aberystwith, in Wales.

Devil's Dictionary, The. Collection of newspaper squibs by Ambrose Bierce, published (1906) as The Cynic's Word Book and reissued under the present title in 1911. Its "definitions" reflect the biting wit and wry pessimism so characteristic of Bierce's work.

Devil's Disciple, The. Comedy (1897) of the American Revolution by George Bernard Shaw, who calls it a melodrama. It is one of his "Three Plays for Puritans," the others being Caesar and Cleopatra, a history, and Captain Brassbound's Conversion, an adventure. The time of the play is the winter of 1777, and the scene of action is New Hampshire, in the Dudgeon and Anderson homes, and in the town hall, council chamber, and market place. The main characters are Dick Dudgeon, the "disciple," a radical; his mother, a thoroughly disagreeable woman, whose husband has just died; his brother, Christie, Anthony Anderson, a Presbyterian minister; his lovely wife, Judith; Essie, a frightened 17-year-old girl who is never allowed to forget her irregular birth; other characters who are brought in for satirical and comic purposes; and the historical personages, General ("Gentleman Johnny") Burgoyne, and Brudenell, a chaplain. The play, with its satire on British slowness and stupidity, its sly digs at Puritanism, religion, respectability, and conventional morality, and its cynical treatment of love and romance, has always been popular on the stage and has had many revivals, in both England and America. In the attractive role of dashing Dick Dudgeon, Richard Mansfield and Maurice Evans scored great successes.

Devil's Dyke. Ancient earthwork, 18 ft. high, of prehistoric origin, in Cambridgeshire, England, extending from Reach to Wood-Ditton. There is another natural "Devil's Dyke" near Brighton, England.

Devil's Hole. See Peak Cavern.

Devil's Island. [French, Île du Diable.] Island in the Atlantic Ocean, off the coast of French Guiana, formerly used as a penal colony by France. Alfred Dreyfus was imprisoned (1895–99) here.

Devil's Island. Former name of Deal Island.

Devils Lake. Salt lake in the NE part of North Dakota. Length, ab. 30 mi.

Devils Lake. City in NE North Dakota, county seat of Ramsey County, near Devils Lake ab. 85 mi. NW of Grand Forks. It was founded in 1883 on the shore of the lake, which since that date has receded, the level of the water (salt) having dropped more than 25 ft. 6,427 (1951).

Devil's Law-Case, The. Tragicomedy by John Webster, printed in 1623.

Devil's Parliament. Nickname given to the English Parliament which met at Coventry, England, in 1459. It attainted the leading Yorkists.

Devil's Thoughts, The. Short poem by Coleridge and Southey, sometimes known as The Devil's Walk.

Devils Tower National Monument. National monument in NE Wyoming, ab. 70 mi. NW of the Black Hills, S.D. The Devils Tower is a straight-sided vertical mass of gray volcanic rock formed as an erosion remnant of igneous rock which once filled the neck of a volcanic cone. Its sheer walls have been climbed by a few persons, including at least one woman. It was the first U.S. national monument, established in 1906. Height of tower, ab. 720 ft.; elevation of top, ab. 5,117 ft.

Devil's Wall. Popular name for the S portion of the Roman fortification called the Pfahlgraben, near Regensburg, Germany.

Devil upon Two Sticks, The. Comedy by Samuel Foote, first played on May 30, 1768, and printed in 1778. Foote took it from Alain René Le Sage's Le Diable boiteux, and himself played the part of the devil.

Devine (dẹ.vīn'), Edward Thomas. b. at Union, Hardin County, Iowa, May 6, 1867; d. 1948. American sociologist, general secretary of the Charity Organization Society of the city of New York, and professor of social economy in Columbia University. He was graduated from Cornell College, Iowa, in 1887, studied in Germany (1890–91), took his Ph.D. (1893) at the University of Pennsylvania, and spent several years in teaching. His publications include Economics (1898), The Practice of Charity (1901), The Principles of Relief (1904), Efficiency and Relief (1906), Misery and its Causes (1909), and others. He was the editor (1897–1912) of The Survey.

De Vinne (dẹ vin'i), Theodore Low. b. at Stamford, Conn., Dec. 25, 1828; d. Feb. 16, 1914. American printer, noted for his excellent craftsmanship, notably in wood engravings and half-tone plates. He became (c1842) a printer's apprentice with the Newburgh Gazette, moved (1848) to New York, and in 1858 became a junior partner in the firm of Francis Hart, on whose death (1877) De Vinne became sole owner. An expert in the history and craft of printing, he performed outstanding work on the Century Magazine, Scribner's Monthly, and St. Nicholas. He was instrumental in securing the invention of coated paper for work with fine wood engravings and plates. Among his outstanding productions are the Century Dictionary, the Book of Common Prayer, the "Jade" book, and the early books of the Grolier Club, of which he was a founder and president. His firm, which became Theo. L. De Vinne and Company in 1877, was incorporated (1908) as The De Vinne Press. He was one of the founders of the Typothetae of the City of New York and of the United Typothetae of America. His wide learning in the craft, which enabled him to raise printing to a new eminence in the U.S., is apparent in his writings, which include The Printers' Price List (1869), The Invention of Printing (1876), Historic Printing Types (1886), The Practice of Typography (4 vols., 1900–02, 1904), Title-Pages as Seen by a Printer (1901), and Notable Printers of Italy During the Fifteenth Century (1910).

Devious Ways. Novel by Gilbert Cannan, published in 1910.

Devizes (dẹ.vī'zẹz). Municipal borough and market town in S England, in Wiltshire, situated on the river Kennet and the Avon Canal ab. 27 mi. SE of Bristol, ab. 86 mi. W of London. It has a trade in grain and was formerly a textile center. There is a rather remarkable "staircase" of 29 locks on one canal at Devizes. 7,892 (1951).

Devlin (dev'lin), Joseph. b. at Belfast, Ireland, 1872; d. there, Jan. 18, 1934. Irish politician, an advocate of Irish home rule and of union with the Irish Free State. He served as a member of Parliament (1902–22, 1929–34) and as member of the parliament of Northern Ireland (1921–29), was owner of the Irish News, and headed six missions to the U.S. and one to Australia on behalf of the Nationalist Party.

Devolution (dev.ọ.lö'shọn), War of. War (1667–68) that derived its name from an ancient law of Brabant, the droit de dévolution. This provided that upon the death of one of a married couple, the survivor enjoyed only the use of a property, but title passed to children. When Marie Thérèse, daughter of Philip IV of Spain, became the wife of Louis XIV of France, he agreed to her relinquishment of her rights of inheritance in consideration of the promise of a rich dowry. After Philip's death, Louis, alleging that the dowry had not been paid, claimed the Spanish Netherlands, including Brabant, in his wife's right, since they were a personal estate of the Spanish royal family, and should devolve upon Marie Thérèse as the daughter of Philip's first wife, whereas Philip's successor to the Spanish throne, Charles II, was the child of a later marriage. French armies overran not only a large area of the Spanish Netherlands, but also Franche-Comté, then a Spanish possession, but when Holland, England, and Sweden formed an alliance against him in January, 1668, Louis came to terms which restored Franche-Comté to the Spanish crown, but left him in possession of 12 strategically important towns on the borders of the Spanish Netherlands.

Devon (dev'ọn). See also Devonshire.

Devon. Unincorporated community in SW Connecticut, in New Haven County near the Housatonic River: residential suburb. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted along with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 6,726 (1940).

Devonian Period (dẹ.vō'ni.an). Period in the Paleozoic Era when fish were the dominant life form. See table at end of Vol. III.

Devon Island (dev'ọn). [Former name, North Devon.] Island of the Arctic Archipelago, N of Baffin Island, S of Ellesmere Island, and W of Greenland. Area, 20,484 sq. mi.; pop. 11 (1941).

Devonport (dev'ọn.pōrt). Former county borough, now a civil parish, in SW England, in Devonshire, situated on the Hamoaze (the estuary of the river Tamar), ab. 227 mi. SW of London by rail. It is now part of Plymouth, and was called Plymouth Dock until 1824, when it was renamed. It has an important naval arsenal, and is noted for its dockyards specializing in the building of warships. 84,690 (1931).

Devonshire (dev'ọn.sbir) or Devon. [Old English, Defena scīr.] Maritime county in SW England, lying between Bristol Channel on the W and N, Somersetshire and Dorsetshire on the NE and E, the English Channel on the SE and S, and Cornwall on the W. It is the largest administrative county in England. It has manufactures of coarse woolens, lace, linens, gloves, shoes, and paper. Devonshire also has important fisheries, especially of pilchard and mackerel. Many minerals and kinds of stone are found in the county, and it was formerly an important producer of copper and tin, but foreign competition has now largely eliminated this industry; china clay and pipe clay are mined, however. The county is noted for its Devonshire cattle, a breed with long, straight horns and a red coat, and for its dairy products and cider, largely exported. The Island of Lundy, in Bristol Channel, belongs to Devonshire. Dartmoor, the Vale of Exeter, and the western part of Exmoor are noted natural features. Exeter is the county seat; area, ab. 2,582 sq. mi.; pop. 798,283 (1951).

Devonshire, Duke of. Title held by various members of the Cavendish family, in Great Britain.

Devonshire, Earl of. A title of Blount, Charles (1563–1606); also of Courtenay, Henry.

Devonshire, 1st Earl of. Title of Cavendish, William (d. 1626).

Devonshire Club. Liberal club at London, established in 1875.

Devonshire House. House in Piccadilly, London, near Berkeley Street, the residence of the duke of Devonshire, and for more than a century one of the headquarters of the leaders of the Whig Party. It was built in the second half of the 17th century and at first called Berkeley House. In the period following World War I the original structure was dismantled.

De Voto (dẹ vō'tō), Bernard Augustine. b. at Ogden, Utah, Jan. 11, 1897—. American writer and editor. He has been a member (1929–36) of the English department at Harvard, editor (1935 et seq.) of "The Easy Chair" in Harper's Magazine, and editor (1936–38) of The Saturday Review of Literature. His works include The Crooked Mile (1924), The Chariot of Fire (1926), The House of Sun-Goes-Down (1928), Mark Twain's America (1932), Forays and Rebuttals (1936), Minority Report (1940), Mark Twain at Work (1942), The Year of Decision: 1846 (1943), Mountain Time (1947), Across the Wide Missouri (1947), The World of Fiction (1950), and The Course of Empire (1952).

Devoy (dẹ.voi'), John. b. near Kill, County Kildare, Ireland, Sept. 3, 1842; d. at Atlantic City, N.J., Sept. 30, 1928. Irish Fenian and American journalist, long a leader of the revolutionary Irish nationalist movement in the U.S. In 1861 he joined the Irish Republican Brotherhood, known also as the Fenians, and also enlisted in the French Foreign Legion to acquire military experience. Returning to Ireland in 1862, he became active in spreading Fenianism, and in October, 1865, was put in charge of the task of winning Irish soldiers in the British army to the patriot cause. For this he was apprehended in 1866, convicted and sentenced to 15 years in prison, but in 1871 he was released upon condition that he go into exile and never again set foot in Ireland. On February 9 of that year Devoy and four other Irish exiles were welcomed to New York by a great military and civil parade. He found employment on the New York Herald, became its foreign editor, but was discharged because of his views of Irish matters. Devoy established and edited a newspaper, the Irish Nation, organized the rescue of Irish political prisoners in Australia by the American ship Catalpa, reorganized the Fenian movement in the U.S. under the secret name of the United Brotherhood and the public name Clan-na-Gael (which might be translated either as Irish People or Irish Nation), successfully opposed factionists who, employing violence, sought to use the organization for political purposes, supported the agrarian program of the Land League, and in 1878 inaugurated the New Departure policy of coöperation with the Irish party in the British House of Commons, under the leadership of Charles Stewart Parnell, on condition that Parnell should support the land agitation and leave the door open for future realization of Irish independence. In the 1890's and early 1900's the organized Irish nationalists in the U.S. under Devoy's leadership, with the aid of Senator Matthew Stanley Quay and others, were able on three occasions to cause the rejection by the U.S. Senate of treaties with Great Britain which they considered to be concealed alliances and inimical to American interests. In 1903 Devoy founded the Gaelic American, a weekly newspaper which he edited until his death. Anticipating from the early 1900's a war between Great Britain and Germany, he took steps to rebuild the Fenian organization (Irish Republican Brotherhood) in Ireland, and with the outbreak of World War I he established contact with the German government which led to the German mission of Roger Casement and to the unsuccessful effort to land arms and munitions from Germany in Ireland. Under his leadership the Clan-na-Gael supplied most of the funds which made the Easter Week Rebellion (1916) possible, and subsequently established the Friends of Irish Freedom, which grew to a membership of many hundreds of thousands. The Clan and the Friends were mainly instrumental in selling millions of dollars' worth of Irish Republic Bond Certificates after the arrival of Eamon De Valera in the United States, but De Valera in his enmity toward certain of Devoy's associates did not hesitate to attack "the Old Man" and to split the unprecedently united and powerful Irish forces in this country. Nevertheless Devoy and his associates were able to influence leaders of the Republican Party to prevent American adherence to the League of Nations, which they believed dangerous to America and to Ireland. In 1924 John Devoy, once exiled by the British government with orders never to return to Ireland, was officially welcomed at Cobh by the government of the Irish Free State, and by vast multitudes who agreed with Padraic Pearse that he was "the greatest of the Fenians."

Devrient (dẹ.vrēnt', dẹ.vrē.aṅ'), Gustav Emil. b. at Berlin, Sept. 4, 1803; d. at Dresden, Germany, Aug. 7, 1872. German actor; brother of Karl August Devrient and Philipp Eduard Devrient, and nephew of Ludwig Devrient. His playing of Hamlet at Dresden was his most notable role.

Devrient, Karl August. b. at Berlin, April 5, 1797; d. at Lauterberg, in the Harz, Germany, Aug. 3, 1872. German actor; brother of Gustav Emil Devrient and Philipp Eduard Devrient, and nephew of Ludwig Devrient. He was noted for his Shakespearian roles, especially King Lear.

Devrient, Ludwig. b. at Berlin, Dec. 15, 1784; d. there, Dec. 30, 1832. German actor notable in his day for Shakespearian roles, both tragic and comic. He was an intimate friend of Ernst Theodor Wilhelm Hoffman.

Devrient, Max. b. 1857; d. 1929. German actor, last of the Devrient family in the German theater; son of Gustav Emil Devrient.

Devrient, Otto. b. at Berlin, Oct. 3, 1838; d. June 23, 1894. German actor, theatrical manager, and dramatist; son of Philipp Eduard Devrient (1801–77). As an actor he made his first bow to the public at Karlsruhe in 1856. In 1873 he became manager of the theater at Weimar, and after serving in the same capacity at Mannheim, Frankfort on the Main, and other cities, he was appointed director of the court theater of Berlin in 1889, but resigned in the following year. In collaboration with his father he translated and edited some of the works of Shakespeare in German. His own dramatic works include Zwei Könige (1867), Tiberius Gracchus (1871), Kaiser Rotbart (1873), and Luther (1883).

Devrient, Philipp Eduard. b. at Berlin, Aug. 11, 1801; d. at Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany, Oct. 4, 1877. German actor, dramatic writer, and playwright; brother of Karl August Devrient and Gustav Emil Devrient, and nephew of Ludwig Devrient. He was director of the court theaters at Dresden and Karlsruhe. His chief work is a Geschichte der deutschen Schauspielkunst (5 vols., 1848–74; reprinted in 2 vols., 1905).

De Vries (dẹ vrēs'), David Pietersen. b. at La Rochelle, France, c1592; d. c1655. Dutch merchant skipper and colonist in America. He was a partner (c1631) in the Dutch West India Company colony founded in Delaware but soon destroyed by Indians. On his last voyage (1638–44) he founded a colony on Staten Island and one near Tappan, N.Y., both destroyed by the Indians in 1643. He recounts his travels in Korte Historiael, ende Journaels aenteyckeninge Van verscheyden Voyagiens in de vrier deelen des Wereldts-Ronde, als Europa, Africa, Asia, ende Amerika gedaen (1655).

De Vries, Hendrik de. b. 1896—. Dutch poet and painter. His magical and haunted poetry reflects the same nightmarish dream world as that portrayed in his paintings. His poetical works include Lofzangen (Songs of Praise, 1923), Stormfakkels (Storm Torches, 1932), Nergal (1937), Atlantische Balladen (1937), and Robijnen (Rubies, 1944). He also did translations of Spanish folksongs in Copla's (1935).

De Vries, Hugo de. b. at Haarlem, the Netherlands, Feb. 16, 1848; d. at Lunteren, The Netherlands, May 21, 1935. Dutch botanist, professor of plant anatomy and physiology at the University of Würzburg. He was noted for his contributions to the theory of evolution and especially for his researches on mutation in plants. He studied at the universities of Leiden, Heidelberg, and Würzburg, and became professor of botany at the University of Amsterdam in 1878, and at the University of Würzburg in 1897. He published various works on botanical subjects, among them Eine Methode zur Analyse der Turgorkraft (1884), Plasmolytische Studien über die Wand der Vaculoen (1885), Leerboek der Plantenphysiologie (1885), Intracellulare Pangenesis (1889), Monographie der Zwangsdrehungen (1892), Die Mutationstheorie (1900–03), Plant Breeding (1907), and Die Mutationem in der Erblichkeitslehre (1912).

De Walden (dẹ wôl'dẹn), T. B. fl. second half of the 19th century. American dramatist, whose plays were highly successful throughout the U.S. during the 1860's and 70's, and later. He wrote Sam (1865), British Neutrality (1869), an exciting war play, Kit, the Arkansas Traveler (1870, first produced in that year, on Feb. 14, at the Boston Theater), and The Baroness (1872), which was a hit at the New York Fifth Avenue Theater. His best-known drama, Kit, the Arkansas Traveler, was long popular, the character of Kit Redding being one of the most successful roles of Francis S. Chanfrau, American actor of French birth, who acted it for 12 successive seasons from 1872 until his death in 1884, and of his son, Henry Chanfrau, who played it as late as 1894.

Dewangiri (dā.wän.gē'rē). [Also, Diwangiri.] Place on the boundary of the Kamrup district, Assam, Union of India, ab. 360 mi. NE of Calcutta: scene of engagements between the Bhutias and English troops in 1865.

Dewar (dū'ąr), Sir James. b. at Kincardine-on-Forth, Perthshire, Scotland, Sept. 20, 1842; d. March 27, 1923. British physicist and chemist, professor of experimental philosophy at Cambridge and of chemistry at the Royal Institution, London. He was best known for his investigations of the properties of matter at the lowest temperatures and for the invention of the Dewar flask, a container designed to prevent heat radiation (a flask with a silvered outer surface is placed within another with a silvered inner surface so that a vacuum exists between the two), the prototype of the familiar thermos bottle. With Sir Frederick Abel he invented cordite. He was knighted in 1904.

Dewar, John. d. Jan. 22, 1880. British whiskey distiller and merchant. Established successful whiskey-distilling business at Perth, Scotland; founder of John Dewar and Sons; succeeded after death by two sons, Thomas and John Dewar.

Dewer Rides (dū'ėr). Novel by L. A. G. Strong, published in 1929.

D'Ewes (dūz), Sir Simonds. b. at Coxden, Dorsetshire, England, Dec. 18, 1602; d. at Stow Langtoft Hall, Suffolk, England, April 8, 1650. English antiquary and chronicler. He collected journals of all the Parliaments during the reign of Queen Elizabeth (published 1682). His manuscripts were sold, after his death, to Sir Robert Harley (afterward Earl of Oxford), and are now in the British Museum.

De Wet (dę vet'), Christiaan Rudolf. b. in the Orange Free State, South Africa, Oct. 7, 1854; d. at Bloemfontein, Orange Free State, Feb. 3, 1922. Boer general. He was a member (1889–97) of the Volksraad, at the outbreak of the South African war in 1899 was appointed vice-commandant in Natal, and in December of the same year was made general on the western frontier under the command of General Cronje. He was most successful in guerrilla warfare, and was distinguished as a leader and strategist. After the close of the war he was a member of the committee for raising funds for the distressed Boers. In 1902 he published Three Years' War. In 1907 he was made minister for agriculture of the Orange River Colony (now Orange Free State). He was imprisoned (1914–15) as a result of his rebellion against the South African state during World War I.

De Wette (dę vet'ę), Wilhelm Martin Leberecht. b. at Ulla, near Weimar, Germany, Jan. 12, 1780; d. at Basel, Switzerland, June 16, 1849. German Protestant theologian and Biblical critic, professor at Heidelberg (1807–10), at Berlin (1810–19), and at Basel (1822–49). His chief works are Beiträge zur Einleitung in das Alte Testament (1806–07), Kommentar über die Psalmen (1811), Lehrbuch der hebraïsch-jüdischen Archäologie (1814), Über Religion und Theologie (1815), Lehrbuch der Christlichen Dogmatik (1813–16), and others.

Dewey (dū'i). City in NE Oklahoma, in Washington County ab. 45 mi. N of Tulsa. Laid out in 1898, it was named for the Spanish-American War admiral George Dewey. Cement is manufactured and an annual rodeo is held here. 2,513 (1950).

Dewey, Charles Melville. b. at Lowville, N.Y., July 16, 1849; d. Jan. 17, 1937. American painter. He was a pupil of Carolus Duran at Paris (1876–77). His work is composed of landscapes which usually represent the subdued light of morning or evening, with masses of dark trees against the sky. He won silver medals at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo in 1901, and at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis in 1904, and was elected associate of the National Academy of Design in 1903 and member in 1907.

Dewey, Chester. b. at Sheffield, Mass., Oct. 25, 1784; d. at Rochester, N.Y., Dec. 15, 1867. American clergyman and botanist.

Dewey, Davis Rich. b. at Burlington, Vt., April 7, 1858; d. at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 13, 1942. American economist; elder brother of John Dewey (1859–1952).

Dewey, George. b. at Montpelier, Vt., Dec. 26, 1837; d. at Washington, D.C., Jan. 16, 1917. American naval officer, noted for his defeat of the Spanish squadron in Manila Bay during the Spanish-American War. He graduated (1858) from Annapolis, was commissioned lieutenant (1861), and as executive officer of the Mississippi took part under Farragut in the naval operations against New Orleans and Port Hudson during the Civil War. He was again under Farragut as executive officer of the flagship Monongahela on the lower Mississippi River. The post-war years were filled with various tours of duty, leading up to his appointment (1889) as chief of the bureau of equipment in the Navy Department, his designation (1895) as president of the Board of Inspection and Survey, and his assignment (1897) to the command of the Asiatic squadron. He reinforced his already impressive knowledge of the Philippines, and upon his arrival in the Far East prepared a base at Mirs Bay, at Hong Kong, on the Chinese mainland, also taking other measures to bring his fleet up to battle fitness. When war with Spain broke out, Dewey faced in the Far East a Spanish squadron which many believed to be superior to the American. However, the epic battle of Manila Bay (May 1, 1898) demonstrated Dewey's superior seamanship. Within the space of less than seven hours, his U.S. squadron virtually destroyed the Spanish ships and shore batteries, and at noon the American battle vessels were anchored off Manila. The Spanish lost all of their ships and suffered 381 casualties; the American loss was damage to four ships and eight wounded. The battle restored America's confidence in her navy, made the U.S. a power in the Far East, and brought Dewey the laurels of a popular hero. Congress gave him the rank of admiral of the navy and the people made him a gift of a home at Washington. His last service with the navy was as president (1900–17) of the general board of the Navy Department. See Autobiography of George Dewey (1913).

Dewey, John. b. at Burlington, Vt., Oct. 20, 1859; d. at New York, June 1, 1952. American philosopher, teacher, and author. He was educated at local schools, at the University of Vermont, and at the Johns Hopkins University. In addition to the B.A. and Ph.D., he held honorary degrees from Wisconsin, Peking National University, Oslo, the University of Paris, and Vermont and Johns Hopkins. In 1886, on July 28, he married one of his Michigan students, Alice Chipman (who died in 1927). His daughter Evelyn collaborated with him on Schools of To-Morrow (1915), one of his best-known books. As a professor of philosophy, Dewey served successively at three large American universities: the University of Michigan (1884–88, and 1889–94, spending the year in between at the University of Minnesota), the University of Chicago (1894–1904), to which he was called by its first president, William Rainey Harper, and, as a direct result of the name he made for himself there, Columbia University, from 1904 until he retired in 1930. A prolific writer, some of his works are Psychology (1886), Leibnitz (1888), Critical Theory of Ethics and Study of Ethics (both 1894), School and Society (1899), Studies in Logical Theory (1903), How We Think (1909), Influence of Darwin on Philosophy and Other Essays (1910), Interest and Effort in Education (1913), Democracy and Education (1916), Human Nature and Conduct (1922), Experience and Nature (1925), The Public and Its Problems (1927), The Quest for Certainty: A Study of the Relation of Knowledge and Action and Impressions of Soviet Russia and the Revolutionary World (both 1929), Philosophy and Civilization (1931), Art as Experience (1934), Liberalism and Social Action (1935), Logic (1938), Freedom and Culture (1939), Education Today (1940), and Problems of Man (1946). Dewey traveled very widely, visiting China, Japan, Constantinople, Russia, and England, studying their educational systems and their ways of living and thinking. What he found out and what conclusions he reached he expressed in Reconstruction in Philosophy (1920), in his Impressions, and in the Gifford Lectures that he delivered in 1929 at Edinburgh. Although primarily a philosopher, and thought of as a man most at home in the field of the abstract, he was interested during his life in practical political, social, and economic problems. He believed in action as well as thought, and was not averse to serving on committees.

Dewey, Melvil. [Original name, Melville Louis Kossuth Dewey.] b. at Adams Center, N.Y., Dec. 10, 1851; d. in Florida, Dec. 26, 1931. American librarian, advocate of reformed spelling, and founder of the "Dewey Decimal System" of cataloguing books. He was educated at the local Hungerford Collegiate Institute and Oneida Seminary, both of which he attended for very short periods, and at Amherst College, from which he received his B.A. in 1874. In 1876 he published A Classification and Subject Index for Cataloguing and Arranging the Books and Pamphlets of a Library (13th ed., 1932), which later developed into the system which is his chief contribution to furthering knowledge. From 1883 to 1888 he was chief librarian at Columbia University and professor of library economy. He served as director (1889–1906) of the (Albany) New York State Library and for practically the same period was director of the New York State Library School, which he founded in 1887. He was editor of the Library Journal (1876–81) and Library Notes (1886–98), both of which he founded. He was also interested in English spelling and in 1876 he organized the Spelling Reform Association, of which he served as secretary for many years. At Columbia, in 1887, he opened a School of Library Economy for women students, but he was suspended by the board of trustees on Nov. 5, 1888 because of some of the items on a questionnaire he required the students to fill out. He resigned, on Dec. 20, after the suspension had been terminated, and his resignation was accepted on Jan. 7, 1889. The school transferred to Albany the next year, and Dewey went with it. His first wife, Annie Roberts Godfrey, whom he married on Oct. 19, 1878, was a librarian at Wellesley College; she died Aug. 3, 1922, at Lake Placid, N.Y., where Dewey was president of the Lake Placid Club, founded by him and his wife in 1893. Dewey's full given name was Melville Louis Kossuth, but he dropped his middle names in his early twenties, and the le from his first name.

Dewey, Orville. b. at Sheffield, Mass., March 28, 1794; d. there, March 21, 1882. American Unitarian clergyman and writer. His works include Human Nature, Human Life, Unitarian Belief, and others.

Dewey, Thomas Edmund. b. at Owosso, Mich., March 24, 1902—. American lawyer and politician. A graduate of Michigan (B.A., 1923) and of Columbia (LL.B., 1925), he served (1933) as U.S. attorney for the southern district of New York, and as special prosecutor (1935–37) to investigate organized crime in New York City. In this position and as district attorney (1937–38) for New York County Dewey rose to national recognition as an able prosecutor who smashed several of the rackets plaguing the city. Governor (1942 et seq.) of New York, he was the Republican candidate (1944, 1948) for president, losing a wartime election to F. D. Roosevelt and a surprising postwar contest to Harry S. Truman. He is the author of The Case Against the New Deal (1940).

Dewi (dā'wi), Saint. See Saint David or Dewi.

de Windsor (dẹ win'zẹr), Alice. See Perrers, Alice.

De Windt (dẹ wint'), Harry. b. at Paris, in April, 1850; d. Nov. 30, 1933. English traveler and explorer. He was educated at Cambridge, was aide-de-camp (1876–78) to Raja Brooke of Sarawak, his brother-in-law, traveled from Peiping to France by land in 1887, rode from Russia to India through Persia in 1889, and attempted to travel from New York to Paris by way of Alaska, but nearly lost his life in Bering Strait, where he was rescued by a whaler. In 1901–02 he made the trip by land from Paris to New York. He traveled through the Balkan states in 1905 and crossed Lapland in the winter of 1908. He published a number of books of travel, including From Paris to New York by Land (1903), Through Savage Europe (1905), Moles and their Meaning (1908), and Notes of a Restless Life (1908).

Dewing (dū'ing), Francis. fl. late 17th–early 18th centuries. American engraver. Born in England, his arrival at Boston was noted in a newspaper of that city late in July, 1716, with the information that he was prepared to engrave coats of arms and other designs on copper or on silver plates, and also to execute woodcuts for the printing of textiles. His best-known surviving work is a large map of Boston which he engraved and published in 1722.

Dewing, Maria Richards Oakey. b. at New York City, 1845; d. 1927. American painter; wife of Thomas Wilmer Dewing. She studied at the National Academy of Design in New York and under John LaFarge and others. She painted especially flowers, figure compositions, and portraits.

Dewing, Thomas Wilmer. b. at Boston, May 4, 1851; d. Nov. 6, 1938. American painter. He studied art (1876–79) under Jules Lefebvre at Paris, was elected associate of the National Academy of Design in 1887 and academician in 1888, and won the Clarke prize at the Academy in 1887. His work includes figure pictures and interiors admired for their delicacy and refinement.

De Wint (dẹ wint'), Peter. b. at Stone, Staffordshire, England, 1784; d. at London, 1849. English painter, especially in water colors. He rejected a career in medicine to study painting, first under private teachers and later in classes of the Royal Academy. He did not entirely neglect oil painting, but by far the greater part of his work was done in water colors. He became a member of the Royal Water-Colour Society in 1812, and exhibited chiefly at that Society's shows. His subjects were chiefly landscapes depicting the Staffordshire and Lincolnshire countryside. Some of his oils, and many of his water colors, are in the collections of the South Kensington Museum and the National Gallery, at London.

De Winter (dẹ win'tẹr), Jan Willem. b. on the island of Texel, Netherlands, 1750; d. at Paris, June 2, 1812. Dutch admiral, commander at the battle of Camperdown (Oct. 11, 1797).

De Witt (dẹ wit'). City in SE Arkansas, county seat of Arkansas County, ab. 60 mi. SE of Little Rock. It has cotton gins and rice mills and ships livestock and lumber. 2,843 (1950).

De Witt. City in E Iowa, in Clinton County, ab. 60 mi. SE of Cedar Rapids. It was named for De Witt Clinton. 2,644 (1950).

De Witt (dẹ wit'), Cornelius. b. at Dordrecht, Netherlands, 1623; murdered at The Hague, Aug. 20, 1672. Dutch politician and naval officer; brother of Jan De Witt.

De Witt, Jan. b. at Dordrecht, Netherlands, Dec. 25, 1625; murdered at The Hague, Aug. 20, 1672. Dutch stateman. He became grand pensionary of Holland in 1653 and terminated the war with England (which had broken out in 1652) by a treaty with Cromwell in 1654. He carried on a war with England (1665–67) after the Restoration had put the Stuart James II on the throne of England. In 1668 he procured the passage of the Perpetual Edict (directed against the house of Orange) and in the same year negotiated with England and Sweden the Triple Alliance, which frustrated the design of Louis XIV to annex the Spanish Netherlands. He was overthrown by the Orange party in 1672 when Louis XIV invaded the Netherlands, and with his brother Cornelius was torn to pieces at The Hague by an infuriated mob.

Dewsbury (dūz'bẹr.i). County borough, market town, and manufacturing center in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Calder, ab. 8 mi. SW of Leeds, ab. 182 mi. N of London by rail. It is a center of the shoddy manufacture, and also has some carpet manufactures. 53,476 (1951).

Dexileus (dek.sil'ẹ.us), Monument of. Monument on the Street of Tombs at Athens. It is a beautiful stele bearing in relief a youthful horseman who has ridden down an enemy. Dexileus fell before Corinth in 394 or 393 B.C.

Dexippus (dek.sip'us), Publius Herennius. b. c210 A.D.; d. c280 A.D. Greek historian. He commanded a band of patriots in 262 against the Goths or Scythians who invaded Greece and captured Athens. He wrote an account of this invasion, entitled Skythika, fragments of which are extant.

Dexter (deks'tẹr). Town (in Maine the equivalent of township in many other states) and unincorporated village in C Maine, in Penobscot County: woolen textiles. Pop. of town, 4,126 (1950); of village, 2,809 (1950).

Dexter. City in SE Missouri, in Stoddard County: processing point for poultry products, cotton, and flour. 4,624 (1950).

Dexter, Henry Martyn. b. at Plympton, Mass., Aug. 13, 1821; d. at New Bedford, Mass., Nov. 13, 1890. American Congregational clergyman and historian, editor of the Congregationalist (at Boston) 1851–66 and from 1867. His works include The Voice of the Bible (1858), Congregationalism (1865), Church Policy of the Puritans (1870), The Congregationalism of the last Three Hundred Years (1880; including a bibliography of over 7,000 titles), and Common Sense as to Woman Suffrage (1885). A Bibliography of the Church Struggle in England during the Sixteenth Century and A History of the Old Plymouth Colony were in preparation at his death.

Dexter, Samuel. b. at Boston, May 14, 1761; d. at Athens, N.Y., May 4, 1816. American jurist and politician. He served as secretary of war in 1800 and secretary of the treasury in 1801.

Dexter, Timothy. [Called "Lord Timothy Dexter."] b. at Malden, Mass., Jan. 22, 1747; d. at Newburyport, Mass., Oct. 23, 1806. American merchant and eccentric. He settled (1769) at Newburyport, Mass., after serving his apprenticeship on a farm and at dressing skins, and entered business as a leather dresser. He made his fortune by buying up depreciated Continental currency whose value was stabilized in 1791. Thereafter he engaged in a variety of mercantile undertakings and speculations, amassing riches which enabled him to buy some stately homes at Newburyport. His eccentricity (he gratuitously added the title of "Lord" to his name) converted his High Street mansion into a bizarre showplace. A ship-carver was commissioned to make more than 40 life-sized and colored statues, among them representations of Saint Paul, Saint John, Saint Peter, Adam and Eve, Lord Nelson, Washington, Jefferson, and Louis XIV. A statue of himself, arranged like the others to public view, bore an inscription that read, in part: "I am first in the East." Later in his life he conducted a mock funeral before his own coffin, beating his wife when she did not cry. Having written a book, Pickle for the Knowing Ones (1802), which was criticized because it had no punctuation at all, he issued a second edition with a page-full of commas and periods, asking his readers to use them as they pleased. He bequeathed gifts to several church and charitable institutions. See Lord Timothy Dexter, by John P. Marquand (1925).

Dey (dā). See De.

Dey, Frederick Van Rensselaer. See Carter, Nick.

de Young (dę yung'), Michel Harry. b. at St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 30, 1849; d. Feb. 15, 1925. American newspaper editor, cofounder (1865) of the San Francisco Daily Dramatic Chronicle (now the San Francisco Chronicle). Brought to California in childhood, he and his brother, Charles de Young (1847–80), made the Chronicle the West's most influential paper, successfully attacking (1872) land monopoly and agitating (1879) for a new state constitution. Its sole owner and editor in chief (1880 et seq.), he was also director for 25 years of the Associated Press.

Deyssel (dī'sęl), Lodewijk van. [Pseudonym of Karel J. L. Alberdingk Thijm.] b. 1864—. Dutch essayist and novelist, leading critic of the "Movement of 1880," credited with reviving the Dutch art of prose writing. At first he was a passionate partisan of naturalism and l'art pour l'art tendencies; later, he turned to symbolism in such works as De Dood van het Naturalisme (Death of Naturalism, 1891) and Van Zola tot Maeterlinck (1895). Author of In de zwemschool (In the Swimming School), Menschen en Bergen (Men and Mountains, 1891), Jeugd (Youth, 1892), Kindleven (Child Life, 1904), Vebeeldingen (Imaginations, 1908). His novels include Een Liefde (Love, 1887) and De kleine republiek (The Small Republic, 1888). His Collected Works (8 vols.) were published 1922–24. English translations of his works are found in Harvest of the Lowlands, by J. Greshoff.

Dezhnev (dyezh'nif) or Dezhneva (dyezh'ni.vą), Cape. See East Cape, U.S.S.R.

Dezhneva (dyezh'ni.vą), Mys. Russian name of East Cape, U.S.S.R.

Dhahran (dä.rän'). [Former name, Qatif or El Qatif.] City in Saudi Arabia, on the E coast, on the Persian Gulf, near the island of Bahrein: site of one of the largest oil fields in Arabia, controlled by American companies. A large refinery has been located at nearby Ras Tannura. The largest American population in the Middle East is found in this completely modern city.

Dhaka (dä'kä). See Dacca.

Dhalim (тнä'lim). The third-magnitude star β Eridani. It is more often called Cursa.

Dhamar (dä.mär'). [Also, Damar.] Town in S central Yemen, Arabia, ab. 65 mi. S of San'a, on the caravan route between San'a and Aden. The town is the chief center of a mountain valley basin on the E slope of the Yemen highlands. The region is an important cereal-growing area. Elevation, ab. 7,650 ft.; pop. ab. 40,000 (1945).

Dhammapada (däm.ą.pä'dą). Portion of the Buddhist Scriptures, the second division of the Khuddakanikaya or Collection of Short Treatises. It contains 423 stanzas in 26 chapters, and is a manual of ethics.

Dhar (där). One of the former states of Central India, now (since 1948) merged with Madhya Bharat, Union of India, NE of Bombay: cotton, wheat, cattle, and millet. Capital, Dhar; pop. 253,210 (1941).

Dhar. Town in Madhya Bharat, Union of India, former capital of Dhar state, ab. 300 mi. NE of the city of Bombay: trading center. Pop. ab. 20,000.

Dhar Adrar (där' ä.drär'). See Adrar.

Dharmashastra (där.mą.shäs'trą). Body of Hindu law; more especially, the laws ascribed to Manu, Yajnavalkya, and other sages believed to have been given divine inspiration. These works are generally in three parts: (1) achara, rules of conduct; (2) vyavahara, judicature; (3) prayashchitta, penance. The inspired lawgivers are spoken of as 18 but 42 are mentioned. Manu and Yajnavalkya stand at their head. A general collection of the Dharmashastras has been printed at Calcutta by Jivananda under the title of Dharmashastrasangraha.

Dharwar (där.wär'). [Also: Darwar, Dharwad (-wäd').] District in Bombay state, Union of India, E of Goa. It produces cotton, wheat, tobacco, and spices. Chief town, Dharwar; pop. 1,201,016 (1941).

Dharwar. [Also: Darwar, Dharwad.] Chief town of Dharwar district, Bombay state, Union of India, ab. 80 mi. E of Goa: trading center, served by a railroad and three major roads. It was taken by Hyder Ali in 1778, and retaken by the Mahrattas in 1791. Pop. 41,671 (1941).

Dhaulagiri (dou.lą.gir'i). [Also: Dhawalagiri, Dhwalagiri.] Peak in the Himalayas, in Nepal, ab. 80 mi. NW of Patan. It was once supposed to be the highest mountain in the world, but now takes fifth position. Elevation, ab. 26,492 ft.

Dhaun (doun), Count Leopold Joseph Maria von. See Daun, Count Leopold (Joseph Maria) von.

Dhawalagiri (dou.lą.gir'i). See Dhaulagiri.

Dhegiha (dā'gē.hä). Division of the Siouan North American Indian language family, embracing the Ponca, Omaha, Kansa, Osage, and Quapaw tribes.

d'Hérelle (dā.rel), Félix Hubert. b. at Montreal, April 25, 1873—. Canadian bacteriologist, noted for the discovery (1917) of bacteriophage. Bacteriologist (1902–06) to the government of Guatemala; director (1907–08) of the government bacteriological laboratory at Mérida, Mexico; assistant (1908–14) and chief (1914–21) at the Pasteur Institute at Paris; head (1921–23) of the laboratory at the University of Leiden, Netherlands; professor (1928–33) of bacteriology at Yale; professor (1934 et seq.) at the University of Tiflis in Russia. Author of Le Coco-bacille des Sauterelles (1914), Le Bactériophage, son rôle dans l'immunité (1921; Eng. trans., 1922), Bacterial Mutations (1934), Le Phénomène de la Guérison (1938), and Étude d'une maladie, le Choléra (1946).

Dhiban (тнē.bän', dē-). [Ancient name, Dibon.] Town in Jordan, ab. 37 mi. S of Amman and ab. 14 mi. E of the Dead Sea. It is a trading center in the midst of some of the best agricultural land in Jordan. A Moabite stone found here in 1868 carried a lengthy Hebrew inscription from c850 B.C. The ancient city of Dibon was fortified by the Gadites (Num. xxxii. 3,34), but allotted to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. xiii. 9,17). The stone discovered there is thought to be the stele of the Moabite king Mesha (2 Kings, iii. 4).

Dhipotamo (тнē.pô'tä.mô). See Pamisos.

Dhoire (dur'ę). Irish name of Londonderry city.

Dhoire, Conndae. Irish name of County Londonderry.

Dholpur (dōl′pör). Former native state in the Rajputana region, N Union of India, since 1949 merged with Rajasthan Union, ab. 150 mi. S of Delhi: wheat, cotton, barley, and millet. Area, 1,197 sq. mi.; pop. 286,901 (1941).

Dhritarashtra (dri.tą.räsh′trą). In Hindu legend, the eldest son of Vichitravirya or Vyasa, and brother of Pandu. He had by Gandhari a hundred sons, of whom the eldest was Duryodhana. Dhritarashtra was blind, and Pandu was affected with a disease supposed from his name, "the pale," to have been leprosy. The two brothers renounced the throne, and the great war recorded in the Mahabharata was fought between their sons, one party being called Kauravas after an ancestor named Kuru, the other Pandavas after their father Pandu.

Dhu-l-Hijja (dö͞ol.hēj′jä). [Also, Dulheggia.] Moslem month, twelfth of the calendar, having 29 days in regular years and 30 days in intercalary years.

Dhu-l-Kada (dö͞ol.kä′dä). [Also, Dulkaada.] Moslem month, eleventh in the year, having 30 days.

Dhwalagiri (dwä.lą.gir′ī). See Dhaulagiri.

Dhyani Buddha (dyä′nē bu͝d′ą, bö͞d′dą). In Buddhist theology, one of the Buddhas evolved from the Adi-Buddha, and producing, by wisdom and contemplation, the Bodhisattva. The earlier Buddhism teaches that above the worlds of the gods there are 16 Brahmalokas ("worlds of Brahma"), one above another. Those who attain on earth to the first, second, or third dhyanas, or states of "mystic meditation," are reborn in the lower of these worlds, three being assigned to each stage or dhyana. Those who attain the fourth enter the tenth and eleventh Brahmalokas. The remaining five are assigned to those who attain to the third path on earth, and who will reach Nirvana in the new existence, the third path being that of those who will never return to this world, in whose hearts, the last remnants of sensuality and malevolence being destroyed, not the least low desire for oneself, or wrong feeling toward others, can arise. To each of these five groups of worlds the Great Vehicle, the northern school of Buddhism, assigns a special Buddha, called Dhyani Buddha. These five Buddhas correspond to the last four Buddhas, including Gautama, and the future Buddha, Maitreya. Each of these human Buddhas has his corresponding Bodhisattva and Dhyani Buddha, the latter being his pure and glorious counterpart in the mystic world, free from the debasing conditions of the material life. The material Buddha is only the emanation of a Dhyani Buddha living in the ethereal mansions of mystic trance.

Diabe (dē.ä′bā). [Also: Askikaso, Sikasso.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Anyi peoples of W Africa, inhabiting SE Ivory Coast between the Bonda and Ndenie peoples.

Diabelli (dē.ä.bel′ē), Antonio. b. at Mattsee, Austria, in September, 1781; d. at Vienna, April 7, 1858. Austrian composer and founder (1824) of the music-publishing firm of Diabelli and Company. He composed an operetta, masses, songs, and piano works; one of his waltzes served as the theme for Beethoven's 33 Variations (Opus 120).

Diable (dyȧbl), Île du. French name of Devil's Island.

Diable boiteux (dyȧbl bwȧ.tė), Le. [Eng. trans., "The Lame Devil."] Satirical romance by Alain René Le Sage, published in 1707. It was an imitation of a Spanish work entitled El Diablo cojuelo, written by Luis Vélez de Guevara, and first printed in 1641, and of other satires (by Cervantes and others) long current. The whole work is in dialogue form. Samuel Foote took from it his play The Devil on Two Sticks. The title Le Diable boiteux has been given to a number of other publications.

Diablerets (dyȧ.blę.re). Group of mountains in Switzerland, on the borders of Vaud, Valais, and Bern cantons, NE of St. Maurice. Highest point, ab. 10,650 ft.

Diablintes (dī.ą.blin′tēz) or Diablindi (-blin′dī). Tribe of NW Gaul, allies of the Veneti against Caesar in 56 B.C. The Diablintes are thought to have lived near Le Mans. They were one of four tribes forming a group known as the Aulerci. The other three members of this group were the Cenomani, the Eburovici, and the Brannovici.

Diablo Dam (dī.ab′lō). Power dam in NW Washington, in the Skagit River ab. 58 mi. E of Bellingham, Wash. It was built in 1927–30 by the city of Seattle as a municipal power plant. Length of dam, ab. 1,180 ft.; height, ab. 389 ft.; installed capacity of the two power stations, ab. 196,000 kw.

Diabouba (dē.ä.bö͞′bą). See Dan.

Diaconus (dī.ak′ō.nus), Paulus. See Paulus Diaconus.

Diadochi (dī.ad′ō.kī). The Macedonian generals of Alexander the Great who, after his death in 323 B.C., divided his empire. Literally, the name means "successors." The several empires that were established were the Seleucid in Syria and Asia Minor, the Ptolemid in Egypt, the Attalid in Pergamum, and the Antigonid in Macedonia.

Diadumenos (dī.ą.dū′mę.nos). Athlete binding his brow with a fillet, a good Roman reproduction of a famous statue by Polyclitus, found at Vaison, France, and acquired by the British Museum.

Diafoba (dē.ä.fō′bą). See Dan.

Diafoirus (dē.ȧ.fwȧ.rüs). Name of the physician in Molière's Malade imaginaire to whose son Thomas Argan wishes to betroth his daughter Angélique. The father is very comical, and the son, full of folly and erudition, no less so.

Diaghilev (dyä′gē.lif), Sergei Pavlovich. b. at Perm, Novgorod, Russia, March 19, 1872; d. at Venice, Aug. 19, 1929. Russian ballet producer. He founded (1899) Mir Iksusstra, an art review at St. Petersburg which was widely influential in the Russian art of the period, began (1907) producing Russian ballets and operas, and organized (1909) the Ballet Russe, which performed at Paris, London, Berlin, and other cities in Europe and the U.S. He was associated with such artists as Nijinsky, Pavlova, Massine, Karsavina, Fokine, Lifar, Stravinsky, and Bakst.

Diagoras (dī.ag′ō.rąs). [Surnamed "the Atheist."] b. on the island of Melos, in the Aegean Sea; fl. last half of the 5th century B.C. Greek philosopher, accused by the Athenians of impiety because of his attacks on the Eleusinian mysteries.

Diaguita (dyä.gē′tä). Loosely organized group of Indian peoples divided into subgroups, each made up of a variable number of tribes, who lived originally in NW Argentina. Sometime before the Spanish conquest they also expanded into parts of N Chile, where their culture was submerged by that of the Incas. One of the chief subgroups, the Calchaqui, became so famous for their fierce resistance to the Spanish that their name has sometimes been applied to the Diaguita group as a whole. Their culture was of a simplified Andean type with an agriculture based on maize. Stone architecture was used for the villages and fortresses. There was an emphasis on hunting, and the herding of llamas and alpacas was of importance. Many subgroups fiercely resisted the Spaniards, and the latter were finally forced to deport them piecemeal into various parts of Spanish territory.

Diaguitan (dyä.gē′tąn). Independent linguistic stock of the Diaguita, comprised of a number of languages and dialects.

Dial, The. American literary quarterly and organ of the Transcendentalists published at Boston and edited (1840–42) by Margaret Fuller, assisted by George Ripley, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and others. It was edited (1842–44) by Emerson.

Dial, The. Monthly journal of literary criticism, published from 1880 to 1929. Under the editorship (1916 et seq.) of Conrad Aiken, Randolph Bourne, and Van Wyck Brooks the publication lost its conservative tone, publishing contributions by writers including Dewey, Veblen, and Laski. After Scofield Thayer became its editor in 1920, The Dial served as a leading American organ for new developments in art and literature.

Dialogue of Death. Book by William Bullein, published 1564–65. The whole title is A Dialogue bothe pleasaunte and pietifull, wherein is a goodly regimente against the fever Pestilence, with a consolacion and comfort against death.

Dialogues in Limbo. Ten philosophical discourses by George Santayana, published in 1926. The shades of Democritus, Alcibiades, Aristippus the Cyrenaic, Dionysius the Younger, Socrates, Avicenna, and the spirit of an anonymous figure still living on earth discuss esthetics, ethics, politics, and the nature of the universe.

Dialonke (dyä.lōn′kā). [Also, Yalunka.] Mande-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting W French Guinea and NW Sierra Leone. Their population is estimated at more than 100,000 (based on Y. Urvoy, Petit Atlas ethno- demographique du Soudan, 1942, and T. N. Goddard, The Handbook of Sierra Leone, 1925). They are becoming Mohammedanized.

Diamand (dyä'mänt), Herman. b. 1860; d. 1931. Polish socialist, one of the founders (1891) of the Polish Social-Democratic Party under the Austrian regime. He was a member of the Second International, representing (1904 et seq.) Polish socialists from all parts of the then partitioned country, a member (1906–18) of the Austrian parliament, and a member (1918–35) of the Polish parliament. As an expert on economic matters, he conducted negotiations (1924–28) with Germany. His published works deal mostly with statistical matters.

Diamante (dyä.män'tā). Town in E Argentina, in Entre Ríos province. 13,600 (1947).

Diamante River. See Neuquén River.

Diamantina (dē"ą.mun.tē'ną). [Former name, Tejuco.] City in E Brazil, in the state of Minas Gerais: the center of the Brazilian diamond industry. It was settled c1728. Pop. 10,177 (1950).

Diamantino (dē"ą.mun.tē'nō). Town in the state of Mato Grosso, Brazil, near the headwaters of the Paraguay River: the center of an abandoned diamond district. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Diamants de la Couronne (dyą.mäñ dę lą kō.ron), Les. [Eng. trans., "The Crown Diamonds."] Opera in three acts by Auber, with a libretto by Scribe and St. George, first performed at the Opéra-Comique at Paris on March 6, 1841. The work deals with the comic adventures of Don Enriquez, culminating in his happy marriage to the Queen of Portugal.

Diamond or Dyamond (dī'ą.mǫnd). One of three brothers, sons of the fairy Agape, in Spenser's Faerie Queene. When he is slain by Cambell, his strength passes into his surviving brothers.

Diamond Head. Volcanic crater on the coast of SE Oahu, Hawaii, ab. 5 mi. SE of Honolulu. It is a noted landmark on the eastern sea approach to Honolulu. The crater is about 7/10 of a mile in diameter. Peak elevation, 761 ft.

Diamond Lens, The. Story by Fitz-James O'Brien, originally published in the Atlantic Monthly (January, 1858), and included in his volume Poems and Stories (1881).

Diamond Mountains. [Korean, Kumgang-San; Japanese, Kongo-San.] Mountain group in SE North Korea, ab. 45 mi. SE of Wonsan (Genzan). The mountains are extremely rugged and picturesque, with thick forests of pines and maples, topped by jagged, bare rock peaks. There are numerous old Buddhist temples and monasteries here, some of them having great images. Peak elevation, ab. 5,373 ft.

Diamond Necklace Affair, The. In French history, a celebrated episode which discredited the court on the eve of the French Revolution. A necklace (valued at about 300,000 dollars), originally ordered for Madame du Barry, was negotiated for (1783–84) by Cardinal de Rohan through an intermediary, the adventuress Countess de Lamotte. The cardinal had probably been duped by forged notes into thinking that Marie Antoinette, with whom he was infatuated, wanted him to get the necklace for her. Despite the charges of her contemporaries, the queen was probably innocent of complicity.

"Diamond State." A nickname of Delaware.

Diamond Wedding, The. Poem (1859) by Edmund Clarence Stedman.

Dian (dē.än'). Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting E Ivory Coast, N of the Lobi people. Their number is estimated at ab. 10,000 (by H. Labouret, Les Tribus du Rameau Lobi, 1931). They have exogamous patrilineal clans, and chiefs were lacking before the establishment of French rule. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal food is millet. About 80 percent have adopted Mohammedanism. They should not be (but sometimes are) confused with the Dan of the W Ivory Coast and C Liberia.

Diana (dī.an'ą). Ancient Italian divinity, goddess of the moon, protectress of the female sex, later identified with the Greek Artemis. Like Artemis she was goddess of the hunt and the woods, protectress of chastity, and patroness of childbirth. Her famous shrine in the grove at Aricia was the scene of the custom investigated by Sir J. G. Frazer in the Golden Bough. Her companion, Virbius or Hippolytus, was worshiped there with her. Her priest, who came to his office by killing his predecessor in single combat, likewise might be killed by one in similar straits (specifically, a runaway slave).

Diana. Sonnet sequence (1592) by Henty Constable. The first edition contained 23 poems, which was increased to 76 in the second edition of 1594. Eight of these are known to be by Sidney, but it has not been proved that Constable is not the author of the remaining sonnets. Some of those included in anthologies are those whose first lines are "Mine eye with all the deadly sins is fraught," "Dear to my soul, then leave me not forsaken!" "To live in hell and heaven to behold," "Fair grace of graces, muse of muses all," and one called To Sir Philip Sidney's Soul ("Give pardon, blessed soul, to my bold cries"). The full title of the sequence is Certaine sweete sonnets in the praise of his mistress, Diana.

Diana. In Shakespeare's All's Well that Ends Well, the daughter of the Florentine widow with whom Helena lodges. She reconciles Bertram and Helena by a stratagem.

Diana. Character in Honoré d'Urfé's Astrée, taken from the Diana Enamorada of Jorge de Montemayor.

Diana and Actaeon (ak.tē'ǫn). Painting by Titian (1559), in the Bridgewater collection, London. The hunter and his dogs come suddenly upon the startled goddess and her nymphs at the bath. Diana looks angrily at the intruder, but has not yet taken action. It was painted for Philip II of Spain.

Diana and Callisto (ką.lis'tō). Painting (1559) by Titian, in the Bridgewater collection, London. The goddess sits on a bank beside a stream, and at her command, several of her nymphs hold the offending Callisto, forcibly, while another tears away her drapery. It was painted for Philip II of Spain.

Diana Enamorada (dyä'nä e.nä.mō.rä'ᴛʜä). [Eng. trans., "Diana Enamored."] Chief work of Jorge de Montemayor. An important pastoral romance, it was the most popular one published in Spain after Amadis of Gaul. It was first printed at Valencia in 1542. It was left unfinished, but in 1564 Antonio Pérez of Salamanca wrote a second part. In the same year Gaspar Gil Polo of Valencia wrote another continuation. There were many other imitations. Sir Philip Sidney translated some of the short poems. The original work was modeled to a degree on Jacopo Sannazaro's Arcadia (1504).

Diana of the Crossways (dī.an'ą). Novel by George Meredith, published in 1885. It deals with the romantic complications in the life of Diana Merion. She leaves her husband, Warwick, has an affair with the young politician Percy Dacier, and finally marries Thomas Redworth after Warwick's death. The character of Diana was popularly connected with Caroline Norton, Richard Brinsley Sheridan's granddaughter.

Diana of Versailles (vėr.sālz', ver.sī'). [Also, Diana the Huntress.] Greek statue in the Louvre, Paris, commonly regarded as a companion piece to the Apollo Belvedere, though inferior in execution. The goddess is advancing, clad in the short Dorian tunic and himation girded at her waist; she looks toward the right, as with raised arm she takes an arrow from her quiver.

Diana (or Di) Vernon (dī vėr'nǫn). See Vernon, Diana (or Di).

Diana with her Nymphs. Painting by Domenichino, in the Palazzo Borghese, Rome.

Diane de France (dyän dę fräñs). [English, Diana of France; title, Duchesse de Montmorency et d'Angoulême.] b. in Piedmont, Italy, 1538; d. Jan. 3, 1619. Illegitimate daughter of Henry II of France, who played an influential part in French politics during the reigns of Henry III and Henry IV. Her mother was a Piedmontese.

Diane de Poitiers (dę pwȧ.tyā). [English, Diana of Poitiers; titles, Comtesse de Brézé, Duchesse de Valentinois.] b. Sept. 3, 1499; d. at Anet, in Orléanais, France, April 22, 1566. Mistress of Henry II of France, noted for her influence at the French court. She was a member of a noble family of Dauphiné, and married (1512) Louis de Brézé, grand seneschal of Normandy, who died in 1533.

Dianora and Gilberto (dyä.nō'rä; jēl.ber'tō). One of Boccaccio's tales, the fifth novel of the tenth day of the Decameron. Chaucer took his Franklyn's Tale from this story.

Dianum (dī.ā'num) or Dianium (dī.ā'ni.um). Ancient name of Denia.

Diaphanous Silkworm, Sir. See Silkworm, Sir Diaphanous.

Diarbekir (dē.är.be.kēr') or Diarbekr (-bek'ėr). See Diyarbakir.

Diary of an Ennuyée. Diary by Mrs. Anna Brownell Jameson (Anna Murphy), published in 1826.

Diary of C. Jeames de la Pluche. Short story by Thackeray. It was originally published in the humorous weekly Punch (November, 1845–February, 1846) and was reprinted in Thackeray's Miscellanies (1856). The story tells the adventures of James Plush, a footman who becomes wealthy through buying railway shares, changes his ordinary name to a more aristocratic form, and takes a bachelor apartment in the aristocratic London Albany (where Byron, Macaulay, "Monk" Lewis, and Bulwer-Lytton once lived). He becomes engaged to the daughter of Lord Bareacres, Lady Angelina (who runs away with another suitor), loses his fortune, as quickly as he made it, in a market crash, settles down as a public-house keeper, and marries Mary Ann Hoggins.

Dias (dē'ąs), Antônio Gonçalves. b. on a farm near Caxias, Maranhão, Brazil, Aug. 10, 1823; d. in the shipwreck of the Ville de Boulogne, off the coast of Maranhão, Nov. 3, 1864. Brazilian poet, ethnographer, and scholar. The creator of Indianism in Brazilian poetry, he is generally called Brazil's national poet. He was educated at Coimbra, Portugal, was a college professor at Rio de Janeiro, and traveled in the north of the country and in Europe on government missions. His books of poetry include Primeiros cantos (1846), Segundos cantos (1848), Últimos cantos (1851), and Os timbiras (1857). He also published historical and ethnological papers, some dramas, and a dictionary of the Tupí language (1858).

Dias (dē'ąsh), Bartolomeu. [Also, Díaz.] b. c1450; d. in May, 1500. Portuguese navigator. He was a gentleman of the royal household, and in 1487 was made commander of one of two small vessels (João Iffante commanding the other) meant to explore further the coast of Africa. They passed the farthest point attained by Diogo Cam, followed the coast to the present-day Diaz Point, and thence sailed south in the open sea for 13 days in wind and storm, suffering greatly from cold. They turned eastward in search of land, and, not finding it, bore to the north, striking the coast at Mossel Bay, east of the Cape of Good Hope, and following the coast to a point beyond Algoa Bay. The sailors refused to go farther; and, after taking possession of the land for Portugal, they returned (1488) around the cape, named by him or by King John II of Portugal Cabo da Boa Esperanza (Cape of Good Hope), and reached home in safety. Some accounts say that Dias was driven beyond the cape by a storm without observing it; in any case, he and his companions were the first to double the south end of Africa. In 1497 Dias sailed with the expedition of Vasco da Gama, but remained trading on the West African coast. In 1500 he commanded a ship in the fleet commanded by Pedro Álvares Cabral that discovered Brazil; Dias was lost in a storm after leaving the Brazilian coast probably off the Cape of Good Hope.

Dias (dē'ąs), Henrique. b. at Pernambuco (now Recife), Brazil, c1600; d. c1650. Brazilian Negro soldier, in whose honor Brazil still maintains a regiment under Negro command. A freed Negro, he fought against Dutch domination of Brazil and became (1639) supreme commander of Negro troops in the Brazilian army.

Díaz (dē'äs), Alberto Cabero. See Cabero Díaz, Alberto.

Díaz (dē'äts), Armando. [Title, Duca della Vittoria.] b. at Naples, Italy, Dec. 5, 1861; d. at Rome, Feb. 29, 1928. Italian general and statesman. After serving (1912) in the Libyan campaign he was secretary (1913) to the chief of staff and assisted (1914) Cadorna with the reorganization of the army. He was commanding officer of the 49th division (1916–17) and the XXI army corps (May, 1917); replaced (November,1917) Cadorna as army chief and his defense (June, 1918) at the Grappa-Piave line saved the army; conducted (October–November, 1918) the successful Vittorio-Veneto campaign. Served (1922–24) as minister of war in Mussolini's cabinet and was named (1924) marshal of Italy; bad health forced him to retire in the same year.

Díaz (dē'ąsh), Bartholomeu. See Dias, Bartolomeu.

Díaz (dē'äth), Carlos Jiménez. See Jiménez Díaz, Carlos.

Díaz, Eduardo Acevedo. See Acevedo Díaz, Eduardo.

Díaz, Melchior. d. cJan. 1, 1541. Spanish captain in Mexico. From c1536 to 1539 he commanded Culiacán. In November, 1539, he was sent by the viceroy Mendoza to verify the tale of Fray Marcos as to wealthy cities in the north. Going as far as "Chichilticalli," he was forced back by cold. He rejoined Coronado at Chiametla, sending a report to the viceroy. This was not favorable to Marcos, but secrecy was preserved by his superiors and the expedition proceeded. Later he escorted the discredited friar back. Executing, then, orders to explore northwest from Corazones, he crossed with 25 men NW Mexico and SW Arizona (the first to do this) to the Colorado River, which he reached (1540) ab. 80 mi. above its mouth, soon after Alarçon, the first to ascend, had passed on his return. Crossing the river, which he called Río del Tizon, he went west four days. Throwing a spear at an unruly dog, Díaz was accidentally so injured that he died. He was one of the most judicious and trusted officers of the period.

Díaz (dē'äs), Porfirio. [Full name, José de la Cruz Porfirio Díaz.] b. in Oaxaca, Mexico, Sept. 15, 1830; d. at Paris, July 2, 1915. Mexican general and statesman, president (1877–80,1884–1911) of Mexico. He served as a soldier in the war with the U.S. in 1847, led a battalion against Santa Anna in 1854, and adhered (1858) to Juárez and the liberal party in the War of the Reform. In 1861 he was a deputy, but soon took the field. During the French invasion he was one of the leaders of the defense, was captured at Puebla, in May, 1863, but escaped and headed the army of resistance in Oaxaca. Forced to surrender (February, 1865), he again escaped and raised new forces. After the withdrawal of the French army he rapidly gained ground against Maximilian's generals, taking Puebla (April 2, 1867), and finally entering Mexico City (June 21, 1867). Soon after, he was a candidate (1867) for the presidency, but Juárez was elected. General Díaz kept up a continual opposition to Juárez and his successor, Sebastián Lerdo de Tejada, and headed several revolts. In 1876 he finally drove Lerdo out, served (1876–77) as provisional president, and in May, 1877, became president of Mexico. He quickly restored order and started an era of prosperity for the country. Not being by the constitution eligible to immediate reëlection, he was succeeded by his friend, General González, in December, 1880. He was again elected in 1884, and reëlected in 1888, 1892, 1896, 1900, 1904, and 1910, the constitution having been amended to permit this. His dictatorial regime brought foreign capital to Mexico but small benefit to the average Mexican. He resigned on May 25, 1911, faced with the revolt under Francisco Madero, Pancho Villa, and Emiliano Zapata, and died in exile.

Díaz de Armendaris (dē'äth dā är.men.dä'rēs), Lope. [Title, Marquis of Cadereita.] b. in Quito (now Ecuador), c1575; d. probably at Badajoz, Spain, after 1641. Spanish naval officer and administrator. He commanded various fleets from 1603 to 1623. He was ambassador to Germany and Spain, major-domo to Queen Isabel de Borbon, and viceroy of Mexico (1635–40). Subsequently he was bishop of Badajoz.

Díaz de Bivar (dā bē.bär'), Rodrigo (or Ruy). Original name of Cid, the.

Díaz de Guzmán (dē'äs dā gös.män'), Ruy. See Guzmán, Ruy Díaz de.

Diaz de la Peña (dyäz dę lä pā.nyä), Eugène Émile. b. at Paris, Feb. 27, 1837; d. at Coleville, Sept. 12, 1901. French composer; son of Narcisse Virgile Diaz de la Peña (c1807–1876). Among his compositions are the operas Le Roi Candaule (1865), La Coupe du Roi de Thulé (1867), and Benvenuto Cellini (1890), as well as songs.

Diaz de la Peña, Narcisse Virgile. b. at Bordeaux, France, Aug. 20, 1807; d. at Menton, France, Nov. 19, 1876. French landscape and genre painter of the Fontainebleau school. He made his debut at the Paris Salon in 1831. In 1844 he obtained a medal of the third class, in 1846 one of the second class, and in 1848 one of the first class. He became a chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1851.

Díaz del Castillo (dē'äth del käs.tē'lyō), Bernal. b. at Medina del Campo, Spain, c1492; d. in Guatemala, c1581. Spanish soldier and author. He went, as a common soldier, to Darien with Pedrarias (Pedro Arias de Ávila) in 1514, thence crossed to Cuba, was with Francisco Fernández de Córdoba in the discovery of Yucatán in 1517, and with Juan de Grijalva in Mexico in 1518. He subsequently joined Cortés, and served through the conquest of Mexico (1519–21). He settled at Coatzacoalcos, and in 1524 rejoined Cortés in the Honduras campaign. Díaz settled in Guatemala, at Santiago de los Caballeros de Guatemala, where he began writing (c1556) his three-volume Historia verdadera de la conquista de Nueva España, which covers the period 1514–68 and includes his first-hand report of the conquest of Mexico, contradicting in many ways that of Cortés's chaplain, Francisco López de Gómara. It was first published at Madrid in 1632 by Friar Alonzo Remón. The original was preserved in the archives of Guatemala and was published by Garcia in 1904.

Díaz de Mendoza (dā men.dō'thä), Fernando. See Mendoza, Fernando Díaz de Mendoza.

Díaz Mirón (dē'äs mē.rōn'), Salvador. b. 1853; d. 1928. Mexican poet, notable for his influence on Darío and Chocano as well as for his own strongly individual and flawlessly constructed verse. Poesías (1886) and Lascas (1901) are collections of his poems, of which A Gloria is perhaps best known.

Díaz Rodríguez (rō.ᴛʜrē'ges), Manuel. b. 1868; d. 1927. Venezuelan novelist, the most famous adherent in his country of the modernist movement. He was the author of Cuentos de color (c1898), Idolos rotos (1901), Sangre patricia (1902), the book-length essay Camino de perfección (1907), and others.

Dibang (dē.bäng') or Dibong (dē.bông'). One of the chief tributaries of the Brahmaputra River. It rises in the Kangri Karpo Pass in Assam, India, and flows S until it joins the Brahmaputra E of Sadiya in Assam. Length, ab. 120 mi.

Dibdin (dib'din), Charles. b. at Southampton, England, March 4, 1745; d. at London, July 25, 1814. English song writer and composer, especially noted for his songs of the sea. He went on the stage as a "singing actor" when about 15 years old, and soon began to write operas and other dramatic pieces, for which he sometimes wrote the words as well as the music, and in which he also played. In 1789 he began his series of "table entertainments," which he wrote, acted, sang, and accompanied. Nearly all his best songs (The Flowing Can, Ben Backstay, Tom Bowling, and others) were written by him for these entertainments, which were called The Whim of the Moment, Oddities, The Wags, and The Quizzes, among others. He wrote several novels and The History of the Stage (c1800), his own Professional Life (1803), poems, and about 70 operas and musical dramas.

Dibdin, Charles Isaac Mungo. b. 1768; d. 1833. English dramatist and song writer; son of Charles Dibdin. He managed and wrote plays and spectacles for the Sadler's Wells Theatre.

Dibdin, Thomas Frognall. b. at Calcutta, India, 1776; d. at Kensington, London, Nov. 18, 1847. English bibliographer; nephew of Charles Dibdin (1745–1814). He published Bibliomania (1809–11), Typographical Antiquities of Great Britain (1810–19), and others.

Dibdin, Thomas John. b. at London, March 21, 1771; d. there, Sept. 16, 1841. English song writer and dramatist; son of Charles Dibdin (1745–1814).

Dibelius (dē.bā'lē.ůs), Martin. b. at Dresden, Germany, Sept. 14, 1883—. German theologian. He was educated at the universities of Neuchâtel, Leipzig, Tübingen, and Berlin, lectured (1910–15) at the University of Berlin, and became (1915) professor of New Testament theology at the University of Heidelberg. He is an advocate of the so-called Formgeschichte school of church historians. His works include Die Lade Jahwes (1906), Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus (1909), Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (1919), Jesus (1939), and The Sermon on the Mount (1940).

Dibër (dē'bėr). [Italian, Dibra.] One of the ten prefectures of Albania, in the NE part. Capital, Peshkopijë; pop. 86,992 (1930).

Dibich-Zabalkanski (dē'bich.zä.bäl.kän'ski), Count Ivan Ivanovich. [Also: Diebitsch Sabalkanski; original name, Hans Karl Friedrich Anton von Diebitsch und Narden.] b. at Grossleippe, near Breslau, May 13, 1785; d. at Kleczewo, near Pultusk, Poland, June 10, 1831. Russian general, of German parentage. He served with distinction at Leipzig in 1813, took Varna in 1828 and Silistria in 1829, crossed the Balkans in 1829 (hence surnamed Zabalkanski, meaning "Balkan-crosser"), and commanded against the Poles at Grochów and Ostrołęka in 1831.

Dibio (dib'i.ō). A Latin name of Dijon.

Dibon (dī'bon). Place in S Judea, toward Edom (Neh. xi. 25), probably identical with Dimonah of Josh. xv. 22.

Dibon. Ancient name of Dhiban.

Dibong (dē.bông'). See Dibang.

Dibra (dē'brä). Italian name of Dibër.

Dibse (dib'sę). See Thapsacus.

Dibutades (dī.bū'tą.dēz). Greek sculptor of Sicyon, the reputed inventor of relief sculpture.

Dicaearchus (dī.sē.är'kus). fl. c320 B.C. Greek geographer, historian, and philosopher of the Peripatetic school; a disciple of Aristotle. Fragments of his Life of Hellas (an account of the geography and political and social life of Greece) have been preserved.

Dicaeopolis (dī.sē.op'ō.lis). See under Segeste.

Dice (dī'sē) or Dike (dī'kē). In Greek mythology, one of the Horae, the personification of justice; daughter of Zeus and Themis (law), and sister of Irene (peace) and Eunomia (order).

Dicenta (dē.then'tä), Joaquín. b. 1863; d. 1917. Leading Spanish proletarian dramatist. His play Juan José (1895) was one of the most successful of the late 19th century, and remains even today the most popular among the Spanish working class.

Dicey (dī'si), Albert Venn. b. 1835; d. April 7, 1922. English jurist; brother of Edward Dicey. He was graduated at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1858, was called to the bar in 1863, and was professor of English law at Oxford from 1882 to 1909. He published Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Law of the Constitution (1886).

Dicey, Edward. b. at Claybrook Hall, Leicestershire, England, in May, 1832; d. at London, July 7, 1911. English journalist and historian; brother of Albert Venn Dicey. He was graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1854, was called to the bar at Gray's Inn in 1875, and was editor (1870–89) of the London Observer. He wrote Rome in 1860 (1861), Cavour: a Memoir (1861), Six Months in the Federal States (1863), The Schleswig-Holstein War (1864), The Battle-Fields of 1866 (1866), England and Egypt (1881), and The Egypt of the Future (1907).

Dichterbund (diċh'tėr.bůnt), Göttinger. See Hainbund.

Dichtung und Wahrheit (diċh'tůng ůnt vär'hīt). [Eng. trans., "Poetry and Truth."] Autobiographical history of Goethe's life, from his birth till his settlement at Weimar. The first five books appeared in 1811, the next five in 1812, and the third instalment in 1814; the conclusion appeared posthumously in 1833. The original title was Aus meinem Leben Dichtung und Wahrheit. Reiner wanted Goethe to change it to Wahrheit und Dichtung and this form was often used, but has now fallen into disuse.

Dick (dik), George Frederick. b. at Fort Wayne, Ind., July 21, 1881—. American physician; husband (married 1914) of Gladys Dick, with whom he is related the germ of scarlet fever, originated a serum, and devised the Dick test to determine susceptibility. He was professor and head of the medical department at Rush Medical College (until 1933) and at Chicago (1933 et seq.).

Dick, Gladys. [Maiden name, Henry.] b. at Pawnee City, Neb., Dec. 18, 1881—. American physician; wife (married 1914) of George Frederick Dick. She received the B.S. from the University of Nebraska (1900) and an M.D. from the Johns Hopkins University (1907), and served on the staff (1914–c1936) of the McCormick Institute for Infectious Diseases. In 1933 she received with her husband the Cameron prize of the University of Edinburgh in recognition of their work on the etiology and treatment of scarlet fever.

Dick, Mr. Mildly demented gentleman, whose real name is Richard Babley, in Charles Dickens's David Copperfield. Aunt Betsey Trotwood thinks he is a genius, but he has trouble constantly with an intrusive vision of King Charles's head.

Dick, Thomas. b. near Dundee, Scotland, Nov. 24, 1774; d. at Broughty Ferry, near Dundee, July, 1857. Scottish writer on astronomical and religious subjects. He published The Christian Philosopher (1823).

Dick Amlet (am'let). See Amlet, Dick (or Richard).

Dickason (dik'ą.sǫn), Mount. Mountain in Antarctica, lying W by SW of Mount Melbourne, in ab. 74°35′ S., 163°52′ E. Elevation, ab. 7,000 ft.

Dick Datchery (dach'ėr.i). See Datchery, Dick.

Dick Distich (dis'tik). See Distich, Dick.

Dickens (dik'ęnz), Charles. [Pseudonym, Boz; full name, Charles John Huffam Dickens.] b. at Landport, near Portsmouth, England, Feb. 7, 1812; d. at Gadshill, near Rochester, England, June 9, 1870. English novelist, after Scott undoubtedly the most influential of all British fiction writers. He was the son of John Dickens, who served as a clerk in the navy pay office and afterward became a newspaper reporter. Young Charles received an elementary education in private schools, served for a time as an attorney's clerk, and in 1835 through his shorthand skill became a reporter for the London Morning Chronicle, having already been employed as a reporter in the House of Commons by the True Sun and the Mirror of Parliament. In 1833 he published in the Monthly Magazine his first story, entitled "A Dinner at Poplar Walk," which proved to be the beginning of a series of papers printed collectively as Sketches by Boz in 1836. He married Catherine, daughter of George Hogarth, one of the leading figures on the Morning Chronicle, in 1836. They separated in 1858. In 1836 and 1837 he published the Pickwick Papers, by which his literary reputation was established. He was the first editor (January-February, 1846) of the London Daily News, but he did much more important editorial work upon his own family-magazines, Household Words (established 1850) and its successor All the Year Round (established 1859), in which he published not only his own work but that of Wilkie Collins, Mrs. Gaskell, and many lesser writers who shared his literary ideals. He visited America in 1842 and again in 1867–68, when he read from his own works with overwhelming success. His chief works are Pickwick Papers (1836–37), Oliver Twist (1837–39), Nicholas Nickleby (1836–39), Master Humphrey's Clock (including The Old Curiosity Shop and Barnaby Rudge, 1840–41), American Notes (1842), A Christmas Carol (1843), Martin Chuzzlewit (1843–44), The Chimes (1844), The Cricket on the Hearth (1845), Dombey and Son (1846–48), David Copperfield (1849–50), Bleak House (1852–53), Hard Times (1854), Little Dorrit (1855–57), A Tale of Two Cities (1859), The Uncommercial Traveler (1860), Great Expectations (1860–61), Our Mutual Friend (1864–65), and Mystery of Edwin Drood (1870, unfinished). His Life of Our Lord, which he had conceived of originally as a tale for his children, was published during the 1930's in Great Britain and the U.S. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. Most of his novels were first published in monthly parts. His writing was matched by a very able group of illustrators: George Cruikshank, Phiz (Hablot Knight Browne), Marcus Stone, John Leech, and Robert Seymour, illustrator of the first sections of Pickwick Papers. Dickens was importantly influenced by the picaresque novels of Tobias Smollett, with their eccentric character-types. His characteristic note is a romantic treatment of realistic materials. Though essentially a humorist, he was often led toward didacticism by his idealism and moral earnestness. As he grew older, he worked away from both the high spirits and the semi-fantastic method of The Pickwick Papers; and some of his later novels, such as Hard Times (which attacks political economy of the Manchester school) and Little Dorrit (which involves imprisonment for debt), are very sombre and sociological. His friend Wilkie Collins was simultaneously exercising an influence in the direction of a more highly organized plot: see Bleak House, where the Chancery suit is all-pervasive, A Tale of Two Cities, and The Mystery of Edwin Drood. Like Scott, Dickens had the power to create scores of characters who talk themselves alive. Many of these have been called "caricatures," but they were not created under the inspiration of modern naturalistic ideals, and there is no denying their tremendous vitality. Even the inanimate often comes alive in Dickens; there survives in his pages much of the folklore quality known to primitive man. At the same time, his technique is often astonishingly forward-looking: see, for example, the short story "George Silverman's Explanation," where he makes use of what would now be called "stream-of-consciousness." Though Dickens's death-bed scenes, and the like, often seem very sentimental to 20th-century readers, he was, judged by Victorian standards, a daring crusader against prudery and hypocrisy. He was always the most passionately loved of Victorian novelists, and his critical reputation now seems to have recovered completely from the attacks made upon him, as a part of the anti-Victorian reaction of about a generation ago. The authorized Life by John Forster (1872–74) was brought up to date by J. W. T. Ley (1928). Dickens's Letters (first collected, 1880–82) have now been greatly enlarged in volumes 21–23 of "The Nonesuch Dickens" (1937–38). Una Pope-Hennessy's Charles Dickens (1945) is an excellent modern biography, except for its uncritical acceptance of the unverified legend of Dickens's liaison with Ellen Ternan, for which see Edward Wagenknecht, "Dickens and the Scandal-Mongers," College English, April, 1950. The latter author's The Man Charles Dickens (1929) is an elaborate study of Dickens's personality. There is excellent criticism in George Gissing, Charles Dickens (1898); G. K. Chesterton, Charles Dickens (1906); Walter C. Phillips, Dickens, Reade, and Collins, Sensation Novelists (1919); George Santayana, Soliloquies in England (1922); J. B. Van Amerongen, The Actor in Dickens (1927); George Orwell, Dickens, Dali, and Others (1946).

Dickens, Charles. b. at Holborn, London, Jan. 6, 1837; d. at West Kensington, London, June 20, 1896. English compiler and publisher of a series of dictionary guides; eldest son of Charles Dickens (1812–70). He published Dictionary to London (1879), which was followed by similar works on the Thames (1880), Continental railways (1880), Paris (1882), and Oxford and Cambridge (both 1884), and edited (1892–93) a new edition of his father's works for Macmillan, by whom he was employed as a publisher's reader.

Dickens, Sir Henry Fielding. b. at London, Jan. 16, 1849; d. Dec. 21, 1933. English lawyer and author; sixth son of Charles Dickens (1812–70). Educated at the old Wimbledon school and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, he studied law, and was called to the bar in 1873, engaging in practice at London. He was recorder for Deal, and recorder (1892–1918) for Maidstone; appointed king's counsel in 1892 and knighted in 1922. Author of Memories of My Father (1929), originally published (1928) in the London Times, and Recollections (1934).

Dickens, Monica Enid. b. at London, May 10, 1915—. English writer; great-granddaughter of Charles Dickens (1812–70). Her books One Pair of Hands (1939) and One Pair of Feet (1942) are both autobiographical; she is the author also of Mariana (1940), The Fancy (1943), Thursday Afternoons (1945), and The Happy Prisoner (1946).

Dickerson (dik'ėr.sǫn), Mahlon. b. at Hanover Neck, N.J., April 17, 1770; d. Oct. 5, 1853. American lawyer, manufacturer, and senator (1817–33). He served as member (1811–12) of the New Jersey Assembly from Morris County, justice of the state supreme court, governor (1815–17) of New Jersey, U.S. senator (1817–33), and secretary of the navy (1834–38). Owner of the Succasunna (N.J.) ironworks, he was an ardent protectionist.

Dickins (dik'inz), John. b. at London, cAug. 24, 1747; d. Sept. 27, 1798. American Methodist Episcopal clergyman, prominent in establishing that church in America. He was associated in the founding of Cokesbury College and of the Methodist Book Concern, and was publisher of the Arminian Magazine (1789–90) and the Methodist Magazine (1797–98).

Dickinson (dik'in.sǫn). [Former name, Pleasant Valley Siding.] City in SW North Dakota, county seat of Stark County, near Heart River: shipping point for grain and cattle; manufactures of bricks and pottery. It is the seat of a state teachers college. 7,469 (1950).

Dickinson. Unincorporated community in SE Texas, in Galveston County near Galveston. 2,704 (1950).

Dickinson, Anna Elizabeth. b. at Philadelphia, Oct. 28, 1842; d. Oct. 22, 1932. American lecturer and advocate of woman suffrage, labor reform, and stringent reconstruction measures for the South. She lectured during the Civil War on war issues, and afterward generally on political subjects. In 1876 she went on the stage, but did not meet with success. She wrote a play, An American Girl (1880), and What Answer? (a novel, 1868), A Paying Investment (1876), and A Ragged Register of People, Places, and Opinions (1879).

Dickinson, Charles Monroe. b. near Lowville, N.Y., Nov. 15, 1842; d. at Binghamton, N.Y., July 3, 1924. American newspaperman, diplomat, and writer, now chiefly remembered as one of the principal organizers of the Associated Press. Acquiring (1878) a controlling interest in the Binghamton Republican, he was its manager until 1911. He was appointed (1897) consul general to Turkey by President McKinley, and served as diplomatic agent (1901) to Bulgaria and consul general at large (1906) for the entire Middle East.

Dickinson, Clarence. b. at Lafayette, Ind., May 7, 1873—. American organist and composer, founder of the Music Art Society. He has served as organist (1909 et seq.) at the Brick Presbyterian Church and at Temple Beth-El, New York, and professor of music (1912 et seq.) at the Union Theological Seminary, New York. His works include vocal solos and choruses as well as anthems. He is the editor of Sacred Choruses and of the Historical Recital Series for Organ; author with his wife of Excursions in Musical History.

Dickinson, Donald McDonald. b. at Port Ontario, N.Y., Jan. 17, 1846; d. at Trenton, Mich., Oct. 15, 1917. American lawyer, politician, and cabinet member. A graduate (1867) of Michigan Law School, he served as a defender of the homesteaders before the U.S. Supreme Court, senior consul (1896) for the U.S. before the international high commission on the Bering Sea claims, and U.S. member (1902) of the arbitration court during the U.S.-El Salvador dispute. He was also secretary (1872 et seq.) and chairman (1876 et seq.) of the Democratic central committee of Michigan, and a member (1880–85) of the Democratic national committee. He was U.S. postmaster general from 1888 to 1889.

Dickinson, Emily (Elizabeth). b. at Amherst, Mass., Dec. 10, 1830; d. there, May 15, 1886. American poet. Her father, Edward Dickinson, a lawyer, a Congressman, and treasurer of Amherst College, has been compared in his character and personality, in his relation to his daughter, and in his attempt to dominate her, to Elizabeth Browning's father. Her mother, Emily Norcross, who seems to have had no influence on her daughter, and who appears to have been a colorless individual, is generally not even mentioned in accounts of her daughter's life. Emily Dickinson was educated at the local schools, at Amherst Academy, and at the South Hadley Female Seminary (which later became Mt. Holyoke College). At the Academy she met Leonard Humphrey, the principal, whose chief distinction (he died at 26) is perhaps that he encouraged her to write. At the Seminary she met Helen (Fiske) Hunt Jackson, author of Ramona, who became her closest friend. In 1854 she went, with her mother, and her younger sister, Lavinia, to Washington, where her father was (Congress being in session), and on the way back she paid a brief visit to a Philadelphia school friend. In 1864 she went to Boston to see an eye specialist, and once again, in 1865, for the same reason. The years before, in between, and after, until her death, she spent at Amherst. Her outward life was as uneventful as, or even more so than, that of Jane Austen. What she thought and felt in her own heart and mind she put on paper, and she did it secretly. She wrote upwards of 1,500 short, intense, passionate, ecstatic poems, which would have been destroyed if Lavinia had carried out her sister's request. Of these poems, only two were published during her lifetime, one in the Springfield Republican (Feb. 14, 1866), edited by Samuel Bowles, a family friend, and the other, without her name, in G. P. Lathrop's A Masque of Poets (1878), and these two without her consent or knowledge. The great body of the work by which she is known and which has brought her recognition as one of America's great and original poets was published after her death in a series of volumes: Poems (1890, 1891, 1896), Further Poems (1929), Unpublished Poems (1936), Poems: Centenary Edition (1930), The Single Hound (1914), and Bolts of Melody (1945). Like Jane Austen, she never married, but love is not absent from her poetry. She is supposed to have loved, and to have been loved by, a young minister, whom she gave up when she found that he was not free, legally or morally, to marry her, and it is also claimed, without evidence, that she was in love with Captain Edward Bissell Hunt, the first husband of her friend, who returned her feeling. In a letter to Thomas Wentworth Higginson, she has given a pleasing self-portrait: "I am small, like a wren, and my hair is bold, like the chestnut burr, and my eyes, like the sherry in the glass that the guest leaves." She is the heroine of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel Mercy Philbrick's Choice (1876) and of Susan Glaspell's play Alison's House (1930). A revised and enlarged edition of her Letters (1894) appeared in 1931.

Dickinson, Goldsworthy Lowes. b. Aug. 6, 1862; d. Aug. 3, 1932. English author. He was educated at the Charterhouse and at King's College, Cambridge, was a fellow and lecturer of King's College, Cambridge, and a lecturer at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He delivered the Ingersoll lecture at Harvard in 1909. He published The Development of Parliament in the Nineteenth Century (1895), The Greek View of Life (1896), Letters from a Chinese Official (1903), Justice and Liberty (1908), Religion and Immortality (1911), The European Anarchy (1916), War: its Nature, Cause, and Cure (1923), and After Two Thousand Years (1930).

Dickinson, John. b. at Crosia, Talbot County, Md., Nov. 8, 1732; d. at Wilmington, Del., Feb. 14, 1808. American statesman; brother of Philemon Dickinson. He was a member of the Colonial Congress of 1765, and founder of Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa.

Dickinson, Jonathan. b. at Hatfield, Mass., April 22, 1688; d. Oct. 7, 1747. American Presbyterian clergyman, first president (May–October, 1747) of the College of New Jersey (later Princeton University). He championed Presbyterian revivalism in the 1730's and, recognizing the need of the Middle Colonies for an institution of higher learning, he obtained (1746), after an unsuccessful try, the charter for the College of New Jersey.

Dickinson, Philemon. b. April 5, 1739; d. Feb. 4, 1809. American Revolutionary soldier and congressman; brother of John Dickinson (1732–1808). As a major general and commander in chief of New Jersey state militia, he is remembered for his participation in the Staten Island landing (1777), for delaying the British retreat, under Clinton, from Philadelphia toward New York and thus contributing to Washington's victory at the battle of Monmouth (1778), and for his attack at the battle of Springfield (1780). Member (1776) of the New Jersey provincial congress; elected (1782) to the Continental Congress from Delaware; member (1785) of commission to select the federal capital site; U.S. senator (1790–93) from New Jersey.

Dickinson, Sidney Edward. b. at Wallingford, Conn., Nov. 28, 1890—. American portrait painter, teacher at the Art Students League of New York and the National Academy of Design art schools. He was a pupil of Charles Bridgman, Douglas Volk, and W. M. Chase, exhibited extensively in the U.S., and won several medals and prizes. In 1927 he was made an academician of the National Academy of Design. The Art Institute of Chicago, Corcoran Gallery at Washington, D.C., City Art Museum at St. Louis, and other large galleries have collected his works, among which are Self-Portrait, Unrest, The Young Painter, The Black Cape, and Mary.

Dickman (dik'man), Joseph Theodore. b. at Dayton, Ohio, Oct. 6, 1857; d. at Washington, D.C., Oct. 23, 1927. American army officer. Graduated (1881) from the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, he served in the West against the Indians, and in the Spanish-American War (in the Santiago and Panay campaigns). He was subsequently chief of staff of U.S. forces in China, and was appointed (1917) a brigadier general in the regular army. In France during World War I, as a major general, he commanded the 3rd division on the south bank of the Marne River during the last German offensive, the 4th corps (August–October, 1918), and the 1st corps (October November, 1918), participating in the St.-Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne operations. Given command (1918–19) of the 3rd army, he organized it for the occupation of Germany. He retired (1921) and wrote The Great Crusade (1927).

Dick's Coffee House. Old coffee house, formerly No. 8 Fleet Street (on the south side, near Temple Bar), London, originally "Richard's." It was named for Richard Torner, or Turner, to whom the house was let in 1680. The coffee room long retained its old paneling, and the staircase its original balusters. Richard's, as it was then called, was frequented by William Cowper when he lived in the Temple.

Dicksee (dik'sē), Sir Francis Bernard. b. at London, Nov. 27, 1853; d. 1928. English painter of figure subjects, portraits, and landscapes who was one of the leaders of the conservative school. He was educated at the Royal Academy Schools, where he received gold and silver medals; from 1872 on, he exhibited regularly at the Academy; in 1891 he was elected a member. Besides his membership in numerous organizations of artists, he was also a trustee of the British Museum and of the National Portrait Gallery. His principal works include: Harmony (Tate Gallery), Landscape of Surrey (Cardiff), and The Foolish Virgins (Leicester).

Dickson (dik'sọn). Town in W Tennessee, in Dickson County: manufactures include cigars, raincoats, and shuttles. 3,348 (1950).

Dickson, Leonard Eugene. b. at Independence, Iowa, Jan. 22, 1874—. American mathematician, author of many papers and books, especially on aspects of algebra, including the theory of numbers, the theory of equations, and the theory of groups. He received his doctorate at the University of Chicago in 1896 and taught there from 1900 to 1941. He received numerous awards and honorary degrees. Besides many unusually successful elementary textbooks on the theory of equations and the theory of numbers, his books include Linear Groups (1901), Linear Algebras (1914), Algebraic Invariants (1914), History of the Theory of Numbers (3 vols., 1920–23), Algebras and Their Arithmetics, Modern Algebraic Theories (1926), and Researches on Waring's Problem (1935).

Dickson, Samuel Henry. b. at Charleston, S.C., Sept. 20, 1798; d. at Philadelphia, March 31, 1872. American physician. He received an M.D. (1819) from the University of Pennsylvania, was a founder (1833) and professor of institutes and practice of medicine (1833–47; 1850–58) of the Medical College of South Carolina, and a professor (1847–50) at the University of the City of New York and (1858–72) at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He was the author of Manual of Pathology and Practice (1839), Essays on Pathology and Therapeutics (2 vols., 1845), Essays on Life, Sleep, Pain, Intellection, and Hygiene (1852), Elements of Medicine (1855), and Studies in Pathology and Therapeutics (1867).

Dickson City. Borough in NE Pennsylvania, in Lackawanna County, ab. 3 mi. NE of Scranton: coal mining. 8,948 (1950).

Dick Swiveller (swiv'el.ėr). See Swiveller, Dick.

Dick Tinto (tin'tō). See Tinto, Dick.

Dick Turpin (tėr'pin). See Turpin, Richard.

Dicquemare (dēk.mâr), Abbé Jacques François. b. at Le Havre, France, March 7, 1733; d. March 29, 1789. French naturalist and astronomer, professor of experimental physics at Le Havre. He invented several instruments used in astronomy and navigation.

Dictator, The. Play by Richard Harding Davis, produced in 1904.

Dictionary of American Biography. Reference work containing biographies of leading Americans published in 20 volumes (1928–36) and one supplement (1944). Sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies, it was financed to a large extent by the New York Times. The first seven volumes were edited by Allen Johnson, the remainder by Dumas Malone, and the first supplement by Harris E. Starr. The total work includes individual biographical sketches of 14,285 persons.

Dictionary of American English, A. Reference work (1936–44) in four volumes compiled at the University of Chicago and edited by Sir William Craigie and James R. Hulbert.

Dictionary of American History. Reference work compiled under the direction of James Truslow Adams, published in 1940 in six volumes (including an index). A second and revised edition was issued in 1946.

Dictionary of Americanisms, A. Reference work in two volumes, edited by Mitford M. Mathews, published in 1951. It lists and defines, with quotations from original sources and with etymologies, those words and expressions which have come into the English language in the U.S., whether they be original coinages, borrowings from other languages such as Spanish, or new meanings of older English words. The work was in preparation 1944–50.

Dictionary of National Biography. Reference work in 63 volumes and three supplementary volumes, listing and giving brief to rather extensive memoirs of persons prominent in English life since the beginning of English history. The series was founded in 1882 by George Smith, London publisher, and the volumes, edited by Leslie Stephen and subsequently by Sidney Lee, appeared quarterly from 1885 to 1900. The supplementary volumes were published under Lee's editorship in 1901, covering mainly biographies of those who had died since publication had been begun in 1885. In 1912 appeared the first volume of a series supplementary to the main work and intended to include one volume for each decade of the century. Additional volumes have appeared at intervals since. The editors of this series have been Lee, H. W. C. Davis and J. R. H. Warren, and L. G. Wickham Legg.

Dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, des arts et des métiers (dēk.syo.ner re.zo.nā dā syäns, dā zâr ā dā mā.tyā). Full title of the Encyclopédie.

Dicts and Sayings of the Philosophers, The. Prose work (1477) translated from the French of Guillaume de Tignonville by Anthony Wydeville. Printed in November, 1477, on Caxton's famous Westminster press, established the year before, it is historically important as the first book printed on English soil, and the first book printed in England with a date. A passage on women, by Socrates, which Rivers left out, was added by Caxton. The French title of the work is Les Ditz moraulx des philosophes.

Dictum of Kenilworth (ken'il.wėrth). Decision forced from Henry III of England by the Commons in 1266 during the siege of Kenilworth. It reëstablished Henry's authority, proclaimed amnesty, annulled the provisions of Oxford (forced on the king in 1258 and providing for a regulating council of barons), and provided that the king should keep the charter to which he had sworn.

Dictys Cretensis (dik'tis krē.ten'sis). Reputed author, a native of Cnossus, Crete, of a narrative of the Trojan War, entitled (in the pretended Latin translation of Q. Septimius) Ephemeris Belli Trojani, the introduction to which represents him as a follower of Idomeneus in the Trojan War. This narrative, with De excido Trojae of Dares Phrygius, was one of the chief sources from which the heroic legends of Greece passed into the literature of the Middle Ages. It was probably composed by Septimius c300 A.D.

Didapper (dī'dap.ėr), Beau. In Henry Fielding's Joseph Andrews, a rich, weak-minded fop.

Diderot (dē.drō), Denis. b. at Langres, Haute-Marne, France, Oct. 5, 1713; d. at Paris, July 31, 1784. French philosopher, encyclopedist, and man of letters. After his formal schooling at Paris he spurned the professions, pursued against his father's wishes the study of Latin, mathematics, science, Italian, and English, and married secretly in 1743. His first literary labors were as a publishers' aid. He translated into French Temple Stanyan's Histoire de la Grèce (1743), Shaftesbury's Essai sur le mérite et la vertu (1745), and, with three collaborators, Robert James's Dictionnaire universel de médicine, de chimie, de botanique (6 vols., 1746–48). The publishers of this work, impressed with his knowledge and skill, soon associated him with Jean le Rond d'Alembert and made him general editor of L'Encyclopédie, the greatest publishing venture of the 18th century. In the face of severe censorship and repeated suppressions, and with a final resort to secret printing, Diderot was responsible for the publication of the first 28 volumes (17 of text, 11 of plates) over a period of more than 20 years (1751–72). Five volumes of addenda and two of tables brought the total to 35 by 1780. Diderot's interest in medical and biological sciences led him to write Lettre sur les aveugles (1749), Lettre sur les sourds et muets (1751), Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature (1753), and Le Rêve de d'Alembert (1769, published in 1830). These works show a thorough understanding of the physiological arguments for evolutionary transformism and a naturalistic philosophy of science applied to problems of ethics and esthetics. His Salons, written for the foreign subscribers to the Correspondance littéraire, reveal Diderot's superior talents and prophetic insight as critic of literature and the fine arts. Two plays, Le Fils naturel (1757) and Le Père de famille (1758), were produced, without great success, and published during his lifetime, accompanied by interesting and revolutionary essays on dramatic art. The third and best, Est-il bon, est-il méchant?, and the justly praised Paradoxe sur le comédien (1830) were left in manuscript for posterity. The same destiny attended his narrative fiction, except for the only occasionally interesting Bijoux indiscrets (1748) and two short stories. Posthumously published were La Religieuse (1796), Le Neveu de Rameau (1823), believed by many to be his masterpiece, Jacques le fataliste (1796), and a number of short stories, among the best of which is Ceci n'est pas un conte. His Supplément au voyage de Bougainville, written in 1772, first printed in 1796, shows (even by 20th-century standards) ultramodern views concerning religion, sex, and politics. Diderot received financial support from Catherine II of Russia, who bought his valuable library, but left him the use of it during his lifetime. He went to St. Petersburg in 1773–74 to express his gratitude, wrote a Projet d'une université pour la Russie, and left in manuscript very frank and critical Observations on Catherine's Instructions to her legists for a code of laws based on the principles of Montesquieu and other writers of the French enlightenment. Diderot's Lettres à Sophie Volland reveal the extraordinary character of the writer and the man, and justify his growing reputation as the great seminal mind of his century. A noteworthy collection of Diderot manuscripts has recently been rescued from oblivion by Herbert Dieckmann, author of "Bibliographical Data on Diderot" (in Studies in Honor of Frederick W. Shipley, 1942). Available works on Diderot in English are scarce, but include Diderot and the Encyclopaedists, by John Morley (1878), The Censoring of Diderot's Encyclopédie, by Douglas H. Gordon and Norman L. Torrey (1947), and Diderot, Interpreter of Nature (with translations of Le Rêve de d'Alembert, Le Neveu de Rameau, and others), by Jonathan Kemp and Jean Stewart (1938). In French, see L'Humanisme de Diderot, by Jean Thomas (1936), and Diderot, by A. Billy (1932).

Didinga (di.ding'gä). [Also, Dodinga.] African people of SE Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and N Uganda, in E Africa, occupying a range called the Didinga Hills near the borders of these two countries and that of Kenya. Their language is related to the Nilotic and Nilo-Hamitic linguistic groups. Their population is estimated at more than 25,000 (by J. H. Driberg, 1922). Political authority is divided among the chiefs of eight independent districts, grouped in two large divisions. The Bokorora, Lakorechoke, and Lomongole form the eastern Didinga, and the Patalado, Thuguro, Kademakuch, Lokorechoke, and Lomongole form the western Didinga. Raiding occurred between the E and W divisions, but not within them. They have exogamous patrilineal clans and age grades. They practice agriculture with wooden hoes, and herding, with the cattle complex. Their principal crops are sorghum and millet.

Didius Julianus (did'i.us jö.li.ā'nus). [Full name, Marcus Didius Salvius Julianus; later called Marcus Didius Commodus Severus Julianus.] d. at Rome, June 1, 193 A.D. Emperor of Rome (March–June, 193). He served with distinction in the army, and twice held the consulship, the last time in 179. On the murder of the emperor Pertinax by the praetorian guards in 193, the guards sold the imperial dignity to Didius, who had as his competitor Sulpicianus, the father-in-law of Pertinax. His elevation was not recognized by Septimius Severus, who marched with an army against Rome, whereupon the praetorian guards hastened to purchase the favor of Severus by putting the emperor to death.

Dido (dī'dō). Surname of the Phoenician goddess of the moon (Astarte), who was worshiped as the protecting deity of the citadel of Carthage. Her name was in later time appropriated by the Tyrian Elissa, founder of Carthage, who was the mistress of Aeneas in Vergil's Aeneid and killed herself when he left her.

Dido and Aeneas (ē.nē'as). Opera in three acts by Henry Purcell, with a libretto by Nahum Tate, first performed (c1688) at Chelsea. Dealing with Aeneas's sojourn at Carthage, the opera contains the duet Our plot has took, the queen's forsook and the aria When I am laid in Earth.

Dido Building Carthage. Large painting by J. M. W. Turner, in the National Gallery, London. The scene is on a river bank, with classical buildings in course of erection. Dido and her attendants are seen on the left.

Didon (dē.dôn), Henri Gabriel. b. at Touvet, France, March 17, 1840; d. at Toulouse, France, March 13, 1900. French Dominican priest, preacher, writer, and educator. After entering the Dominican order at the age of 18, studying at Rome, and teaching for some years, he began his career as a preacher in 1868. It was in Paris that he first displayed that natural eloquence which, heightened by oratorical art, so well served his ardent purpose of spreading the faith. Certain of his sermons on the indissolubility of marriage caused such controversy in the secular press that he discontinued them at the request of the archbishop of Paris, but they were subsequently published. This was in 1879, and in 1880, as a result of criticism of the stand he took in conferences on problems of the relation of the church to modern society, his superior sent him to Corsica. There he spent seven years (broken by visits to Palestine and to Germany) writing a Life of Christ which was published in 1890 and was widely circulated, and translated into several other languages. In 1892 he resumed preaching in Paris, but his later years were devoted to the education of youth. He was a progressive in education, as he was in his social ideas and in his support of the French Republic. Among his books, which had a considerable following in his day, are Les Allemands (1884), Lettres à Mlle. Th. V. (1900), Lettres à un ami (1902), and Lettres à Mère Samuel (1907–08).

Didone Abbandonata (dē.dō'nā äb.bän.dō.nä'tä). [Eng. trans., "Dido Forsaken."] Tragedy by Metastasio, produced at Naples in 1724; his first dramatic work. It had great success, and is probably the best play written on the subject in comparatively modern times. It has been set to music by more than 40 composers.

Dido, Queen of Carthage (dī'dō), The Tragedy of. Tragedy by Marlowe, published in 1594. Nashe is said to have finished it after Marlowe's death. Dido has been the subject of many plays in English and in French, notably by Jodelle in 1552, La Grange in 1576, Hardy in 1603, Scudéry in 1636, and Franc de Pompignan in 1734.

Didot (dē.dō), Ambroise Firmin. b. at Paris, Dec. 7, 1790; d. there, Feb. 22, 1876. French publisher; son of Firmin Didot (1764–1836). He published with his brother Hyacinthe many important works, including Bibliothèque des auteurs grecs, L'Univers pittoresque, and Nouvelle biographie générale.

Didot, Firmin. b. at Paris, April 14, 1764; d. April 24, 1836. French publisher, printer, type founder, and author; son of François Ambroise Didot and brother of Pierre Didot (1760–1853).

Didot, François. b. at Paris, 1689; d. Nov. 2, 1757. French printer and bookseller, founder of the firm of Didot at Paris in 1713.

Didot, François Ambroise. b. at Paris, Jan. 7, 1730; d. July 10, 1804. French printer and publisher; son of François Didot. He was noted for his improvements in type founding and printing.

Didot, Henri. b. 1765; d. 1852. French type founder; son of Pierre François Didot (1732–95). He published editions in microscopic types.

Didot, Hyacinthe Firmin. b. at Paris, March 11, 1794; d. at Dandon, Orne, France, Aug. 7, 1880. French publisher; son of Firmin Didot, brother of Ambroise Firmin-Didot, and the latter's business associate after 1827.

Didot, Pierre. b. Jan. 25, 1760; d. Dec. 31, 1853. French publisher and printer; eldest son of François Ambroise Didot (1730–1804). He published Virgil (1798), Horace (1799), Racine (1801–05), and other classics.

Didot, Pierre François. b. at Paris, July 9, 1732; d. Dec. 7, 1795. French printer, publisher, and paper manufacturer; son of François Didot and brother of François Ambroise Didot (1730–1804).

Didrikson (did'rik.sən), Babe. [Full original name, Mildred Babe Didrikson; married name, Zaharias.] b. at Port Arthur, Tex., June 26, 1913—. American athlete, generally known as Babe (not a nickname, but one of her given names). She began playing basketball at high school at the age of 14, and at 16 was employed by an insurance company so that she might join its girl employees' basketball team. During the next two years she was twice named as All-American women's basketball forward; as captain of the company's women's track team she secured it second place in national ranking, winning most of its points herself; she set eight new Southern and three new national track and field records, won 92 medals, and helped win 17 cups. By 1932 she held the record for the Southern Amateur Athletic Union in every track and field sport in which she participated. In that year she became internationally famous when in the Olympic Games at Los Angeles she broke four women's world records, and there was wide agreement with a sports writer who called her "the athletic phenomenon of all time, man or woman." In 1932 also she turned professional, and toured with the Babe Didrikson All-American Basketball team, all members but herself being men. She also went on the vaudeville circuit, and signed a series of syndicated newspaper articles on sports. Having saved a considerable sum of money, she spent three years learning to play golf, winning her first championship, in the Texas Women's Golf Association tournament, in 1935. The U.S. Golf Association barred her from further amateur play, but after turning professional she won numerous titles and tournaments; and her amateur standing having been restored, she continued her triumphs, taking among others the U.S. national amateur title in 1946 and the British amateur title in 1947. She was married in 1938 to George Zaharias, a businessman and former wrestler.

Didron (dē.drôṅ), Adolphe Napoléon. b. at Hautviller, Marne, France, March 13, 1806; d. at Paris, Nov. 13, 1867. French archaeologist, author of Manuel d'iconographie chrétienne (1845).

Didyme (did'i.mē). Ancient name of Salina.

Didymoteikhon (ᴛʜē.ᴛʜē.mô'tē.ċhôn). [Also: Demotika, Demotica, Dimotika.] Town in NE Greece, on the Maritsa River ab. 23 mi. S of Edirne. Pop. ab. 9,500.

Didymus (did'i.mus). [Surnamed Chalcenterus.] fl. in the second half of the 1st century B.C. Alexandrian grammarian and critic. He was a follower of the school of Aristarchus, and a contemporary of Cicero and the emperor Augustus. His works, consisting chiefly of compilations, covered a great variety of subjects, and were estimated by Seneca at four thousand; none of them is extant.

Didymus. [Often called Didymus of Alexandria; surnamed "the Blind."] b. 308, 309, or 314 A.D.; d. 394, 395, or 399 A.D. Alexandrian scholar and theologian. He lost his sight in childhood, but nevertheless became one of the most learned men of his time. He was a teacher in the catechetical school of Alexandria upward of 50 years, and numbered among his pupils Jerome, Palladius, Ambrose of Alexandria, Evagrius, and Isidore of Pelusium. He opposed the Arians with great spirit, but supported Origen. His extant works include a treatise on the Trinity, translated into Latin by Jerome.

Didymus. Greek name of the apostle Thomas.

Die (dē). [Ancient name, Dea Vocontiorum.] Town in SE France, in the department of Drôme, situated on the Drôme River ab. 27 mi. SE of Valence. The Porte de St. Marcel is a relic of the ancient town.

Diebitsch Sabalkanski (dē'bich zä.bäl.kän'ski). See Dibich-Zabalkanski, Count Ivan Ivanovich.

Diebitsch und Narden (dē'bich ụnt när'dẹn), Hans Karl Friedrich Anton von. Original name of Dibich-Zabalkanski, Count Ivan Ivanovich.

Dieckhoff (dēk'hof), Hans Heinrich. b. at Strasbourg (then in Germany), Dec. 23, 1884—. German diplomat. He became a member of the foreign service in 1912, was appointed (1930) chief of the Anglo-American department of the German foreign office, became (1936) head of the political department and was subsequently state secretary for foreign affairs, and served (1937–41) as German ambassador to the U.S.

Diedenhofen (dē'dẹn.hō.fẹn). German name of Thionville.

Diederichs (dē'dẹ.riks), Helene Voigt-. See Voigt-Diederichs, Helene.

Die erste Walpurgisnacht (dē ers'tẹ väl.pụr'gis.näċht). German title of Walpurgis Night.

Diefenbach (dē'fẹn.bäċh), Lorenz. b. at Ostheim, Hesse, Germany, July 29, 1806; d. at Darmstadt, Germany, March 28, 1883. German philologist, ethnologist, and novelist, librarian at Frankfort on the Main (1865–76). His works include Celtica (1839–42), Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der gothischen Sprache (1846–52), the novel Ein Pilger und seine Genossen (1851), Origines Europaeae (1861), Vorschule der Völkerkunde (1864), and others.

Dieffenbach (dē'fẹn.bäċh), Johann Friedrich. b. at Königsberg, in East Prussia, Feb. 1, 1795; d. at Berlin, Nov. 11, 1847. German surgeon, appointed (1832) professor at Berlin. He wrote Die operative Chirurgie (1844–48).

Diego (dē.ā'gō). Waggish sexton in Fletcher and Massinger's Spanish Curate. He longs for a less healthy parish and more funerals.

Diego Garcia (dē.ā'gō gär.sē'ä). Largest and most important island of the Chagos Archipelago (Oil Islands), in the Indian Ocean, ab. 1,100 mi. SW of Cape Comorin, India. Exports include coconut oil, coconuts, copra, guano, and salted fish. Length, ab. 12 mi.; width, ab. 6 mi.; area, 75 sq. mi.; pop. 501 (1944).

Diégo-Suarez (dē.ā'gō.swä'rās). [Also, Antsirane.] Port at the N end of the island of Madagascar, off SE Africa. From 1885, when it was surrendered to the French, until 1896 when it became a part of Madagascar colony, Diégo-Suarez was a separate colony. Its harbor is one of the finest in the world. The port was captured by British forces in World War II. 14,375 (1946).

Diegueños (dē.ā.gā'nyōs). Collective term for the North American Indian tribes which once inhabited the region near what is now San Diego, Calif. All spoke languages of the Yuman family.

Diehl (dēl), Karl. b. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, March 27, 1864; d. at Freiburg im Breisgau, Germany, May 12, 1943. German economist. He was professor at the Universities of Halle, Rostock, and Freiburg (1908 et seq.). Author of P. J. Proudhon, seine Lehre und sein Leben (3 parts, 1886–96) and Theoret. Nationalökonomie (3 vols., 1916–27). With P. Mombert he edited Lesestücke zum Studium der polit. Ökonomie (16 vols., 1910 et seq.).

Diekirch (dē'kirċh). Town in Luxembourg, situated on the Sure (Sauer) River, N of the city of Luxembourg: agricultural trade center. The parish church dates back to the 10th century. Toward the end of World War II, on Dec. 16, 1944, the Germans launched their last offensive from here, striking in the direction of Bastogne; the Americans crossed the Sure River between Dec. 29 and Dec. 31, 1944; the final assault on the Siegfried Line was started on Feb. 13, 1945. About 90 percent of the town's buildings were damaged. 3,809 (1948).

Diel du Parquet (dyel dü pär.ke), Jacques. b. in France, c1600; d. at St.-Pierre, Martinique, Jan. 3, 1658. French soldier and administrator. He was governor of Martinique (1638 et seq.).

Dielman (dēl'mạn), Frederick. b. at Hanover, Germany, Dec. 25, 1847; d. Aug. 15, 1935. American figure painter. He was president of the National Academy of Design (1889–1909), and professor of descriptive geometry and drawing in the College of the City of New York (1903–18).

Diels (dēls), Otto. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Jan. 23, 1876—. German chemist, cowinner of the 1950 Nobel prize in chemistry. He taught (1904–16) at the University of Berlin, and was professor (1916 et seq.) of chemistry and chemical technology at the University of Kiel, acting also as director of the chemical institute there. He did important research on cholesterol, but it was for his work in diene synthesis, performed with his former student and fellow prize-winner Kurt Adler, that he won the Nobel prize; the synthesis is of major importance in the analysis and development of plastic compounds.

Diemen (dē'mẹn), Anton van. b. 1593; d. at Batavia, Dutch East Indies, April 19, 1645. Dutch admiral and colonial administrator. In 1636 he was made governor general of the Dutch East India Company's settlements. He ruled capably, seized the Portuguese colonies in Ceylon and Malacca, established trade with Tonkin, China, and Japan, and in general greatly extended Dutch commerce and influence in the East Indies. The navigator Abel Tasman, sailing under van Diemen's orders, gave to a large island he discovered in 1642 the name of Van Diemen's Land. Later, in honor of the discoverer, the name was changed to Tasmania.

Diemrich (dēm'riċh). German name of Deva, Rumania.

Dieng Plateau (dēng). High plateau in the N part of Central Java, ab. 5,980 ft. long and 2,700 ft. wide, covered with ruins of Shivaistic stone temples. Once a great religious center, the plateau has been called "the Benares of Java." Only eight temples are standing today, but 40 groups of temples were described at the beginning of the 19th century. Among the buildings are the oldest monuments of Hindu-Indonesian art, dating possibly from the end of the 7th century A.D. (earliest dated Dieng inscription is 809 A.D.; the latest, 1210), yet it is a mature art, the product of centuries of esthetic evolution and artistic tradition.

Diepenbeeck (dē'pẹn.bāk), Abraham van. b. at Bois-le-duc ('s Hertogenbosch), Netherlands, 1599; d. at Antwerp, Belgium, 1675. Flemish painter and designer. He went to Antwerp c1629, and studied with Rubens. His earlier achievements were in the field of stained glass, and his windows in the cathedral of Antwerp have long been admired, but after returning to Antwerp following a period of study in Italy, he devoted himself to oil painting and to executing designs for books. During a visit to England he made many designs for the duke of Newcastle. Some of his oils have been rated with the work of Van Dyck. He is represented in the Antwerp Museum, the Berlin Gallery, the Brussels Museum, the Bordeaux Museum, the Dresden Gallery, the Frankfort Städel, the Munich Gallery, the Vienna Gallery, and the Louvre at Paris.

Dieppe (di.ep'; French, dyep). Town in NW France, in the department of Seine-Inférieure, situated on the English Channel, at the mouth of the Arques River, NE of Le Havre, and surrounded by high chalk cliffs. It is a resort and has a beautiful bathing beach. It is the seat of various industries, particularly the lace, food, and machine industries, and naval construction works. It has an excellent port, which specializes in fisheries, the import of bananas, and passenger service between England and France. The Church of Saint Jacques, damaged in World War II, is in pure Gothic style; the castle dates mainly from the 15th century. The town contains also an art museum and a casino. Dieppe began to be of importance in the late Middle Ages. It was bombarded by an Anglo-Dutch fleet in 1694. The harbor, improved during World War I, suffered heavy damage during World War II. It was the scene of the Dieppe Raid of Aug. 19, 1942. Pop. 21,770 (1946).

Dieppe Raid. Amphibious raid on the French coastal town of Dieppe in World War II. It was spearheaded by Canadians, and included British Commandos, American Rangers, and Free French units. Carried out during the early morning hours of Aug. 19, 1942, it probed German defenses, destroyed some radio installations, and captured some prisoners for questioning. About one half of the force of 7,500 attackers was lost, and considerable criticism was made of the raid, which had been given air cover and destroyer escort.

Diersheim (dērs'hīm). Village in Baden, SW Germany, situated near the Rhine River, ab. 8 mi. NE of Strasbourg. Here, on April 20, 1797, the French under Jean Victor Moreau defeated the Austrians.

Dierx (dyerks), Léon. b. on the island of Réunion, in the Indian Ocean, 1838; d. at Paris, June 11, 1912. French poet of the Parnassian school. Author of Aspirations (1858), Poèmes et poésies (1864), Les Lèvres closes (1867), and others. His complete works were published in 1888–89.

Dies (dīz), Martin. b. at Colorado, Tex., Nov. 5, 1901—. American lawyer and politician. He attended the University of Texas, received the LL.B. from National University at Washington, D.C., and began (1920) his law practice at Marshall, Tex. He served (1931–45) in the U.S. House of Representatives, being designated (1938) chairman of a special House committee (popularly called the Dies Committee) for the investigation of un-American activities. In 1945 he resumed law practice at Lufkin, Tex.

Dies Committee. Special committee of the U.S. House of Representatives headed originally by Democratic Representative Martin Dies of Texas which was established in 1938 for the investigation of un-American activities. While it received ready financial support from Congress, the committee met with criticism of its methods, particularly in connection with charging public officials with Communism. After Dies's retirement from the House of Representatives in 1945, the committee was established as a permanent body and designated as the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Diesel (dē'zẹl), Rudolf. b. at Paris, March 18, 1858; d. Sept. 29 or 30, 1913. German mechanical engineer, noted as the inventor of a type of internal-combustion engine later called the Diesel engine. He was educated at the Munich Polytechnic School. In 1893 he published The Theory and Construction of a Rational Heat Motor, a work embodying his investigations of an engine which he patented in 1893; the engine, which he developed between 1893 and 1897, had its first public exhibition (1898) at Munich. He established (1899) a plant at Augsburg for the manufacture of the engine. He died by drowning after falling overboard from an English Channel steamer. The full development of the Diesel engine came only after his death; the main features of the engine are its operation on cheap crude oil, its water-cooling system, and auto-ignition.

Dies Irae (dē'ās ē'rā, dī'ēz ī'rē). [Eng. trans., "Day of Wrath."] Sequence appointed in the Roman missal to be sung between the Epistle and the Gospel in masses for the dead; named from its first words. The text was written probably by Thomas de Celano, the friend of Saint Francis of Assisi, and is a hymn in triple-rhymed stanzas. Its subject is the day of judgment. The transition from the terror of the day of wrath (dies irae) to hope in salvation is used as a natural preparation to the concluding prayer for eternal rest. Sir Walter Scott's translation in The Lay of the Last Minstrel, beginning "O day of wrath, O dreadful day," is well known. There have been numerous versions and translations. The author of the old ecclesiastical melody to which it is sung is not known, but it was adapted to the words at the time they were written. It has been a popular subject with many modern composers, notably Colonna, Bassani, Cherubini, Berlioz, Verdi, and Gounod in Mors et Vita. It is also introduced with magnificent effect in Mozart's Requiem.

Dieskau (dēs'kou), Baron Ludwig August. b. in Saxony, 1701; d. near Paris, Sept. 8, 1767. German general in the French service. He became brigadier general of infantry and commander of Brest in 1748, and in 1755 was sent to Canada with the rank of major general to conduct the French campaign against the English. With 1,200 Indians and Canadians and 200 regulars he undertook an expedition against Fort Edward in 1755. He was opposed by William Johnson, with 2,200 men, encamped on Lake George. Having ambushed and routed a detachment of 1,000 men under Colonel Ephraim Williams, he was himself defeated and captured in the ensuing attack on the British camp.

Diest (dēst). Town in C Belgium, in the province of Brabant, situated on the Demer River, ab. 32 mi. NE of Brussels. It has textile manufactures, breweries, and cattle markets. The Church of Saint Sulpice is in the late Gothic style; there are other medieval buildings. 8,576 (1946).

Diesterweg (dē'stėr.vāk), Friedrich Adolf Wilhelm. b. at Siegen, Westphalia, Prussia, Oct. 29, 1790; d. at Berlin, July 7, 1866. German educator and writer on pedagogics. He was a teacher in various institutions at Worms, Frankfort on the Main, Elberfeld, Mörs, and Berlin.

Dieterici (dē.tẹ.rē'tsē), Friedrich Heinrich. b. at Berlin, July 6, 1821; d. there, Aug. 18, 1903. German Orientalist and philosophical writer; son of K. F. W. Dieterici (1790–1859). He published Chrestomathie ottomane (1854), various works on Arabic philosophy and literature, and others.

Dieterici, Karl Friedrich Wilhelm. b. at Berlin, Aug. 23, 1790; d. there, July 29, 1859. German statistician and political economist, director (1844 et seq.) of the Prussian bureau of statistics. His works include Statistische Übersicht der wichtigsten Gegenständ (1838–57), Der Volkswohlstand im preussischen Staate (1846), and others.

Diethelm (dē.telm), André. b. July 3, 1896—. French political leader, an official in the World War II Free French regime of General Charles de Gaulle. After holding a high post in the finance ministry, he left France for London in August, 1941; became (September, 1941) commissioner for interior, labor, and information; assumed (August, 1942) the posts of finances, economy, and merchant navy, and those of production and trade in June, 1943; and became war commissioner in April, 1944.

Dietmar von Aist (dēt'mär fon īst). [Also: Thietmar von Aist (or von Eist).] d. c1171. One of the earliest Middle High German minnesingers. He seems to have been an Austrian. Some of his poems, which are strong in emotional expressiveness, show the beginning influence of troubadour conventions. However, there is in them less pining for the unattainable than delight with triumphs achieved.

Diet of Worms (wėrmz). See Worms, Diet of.

Dietrich (dē'triċh), Albert Hermann. b. at Golk, Germany, Aug. 28, 1829; d. at Berlin, in November, 1908. German composer. He was conductor (1855 et seq.) and head (1859 et seq.) of municipal music at Bonn, and after 1861 was Kapellmeister (choir leader) to the court at Oldenburg. His works include the opera Robin Hood (1879), a symphony, an overture, concertos, piano works, and pieces for choir.

Dietrich or Dietrici or Dietricy (dē.trē'tsē), Christian Wilhelm Ernst. b. at Weimar, Germany, Oct. 30, 1712; d. at Dresden, Germany, April 24 (or 23), 1774. German painter and engraver, noted especially for landscapes.

Dietrich (dē'trik), Marlene. b. at Berlin, Dec. 27, 1904—. American actress. A student of Max Reinhardt, she was on the Berlin stage for several years before turning to motion pictures. In The Blue Angel (1930), a German picture in which she played opposite Emil Jannings, she scored a great success; in addition to considerable acting ability, she displayed a perfect pair of legs, which soon became her "trademark." She came to the U.S. in 1930 and was naturalized as an American citizen in 1937. Among her principal films are Morocco, Shanghai Express, Song of Songs, The Devil Is a Woman, Desire, The Garden of Allah, Destry Rides Again, and Golden Earrings. During World War II she made numerous appearances at army camps.

Dietrichson (dē'trik.sôn), Lorentz Henrik Segelcke. b. at Bergen, Norway, Jan. 1, 1834; d. 1917. Norwegian critic and poet, professor (1875 et seq) of the history of art at the University of Christiania (now Oslo). His works include Omrids af den norske Poesies Historie (Outline of the History of Norwegian Poetry, 1866–69).

Dietrichstein (dē'triċh.shtīn), Count Albert von Mensdorff-Pouilly-. See Mensdorff-Pouilly-Dietrichstein, Count Albert von.

Dietrich von Bern (fon bern'). In medieval Germanic legend, a figure corresponding to Theodoric the Great, historical king (474–526) of the Ostrogoths (East Goths), whose residence was at Verona. His life and adventures are the subject of the Icelandic Thidrekssaga (Saga Thidhreks konungs af Bern), also called the Wilkina Saga, whose material is from German sources, and is an element in various Middle High German poems, among them the Nibelungenlied, Biterolf, the Rosengarten, and Ermenrichs Tod. The South German cycle of Dietrich songs includes Dietrichs Flucht, Alpharts Tod, and the Rabenschlacht, all from the latter part of the 13th century. The Hildebrandslied treats a related theme. The figure of Dietrich appears also in the otherwise unrelated Nibelungenlied. There is no unified German Dietrich epic. His birth and death are mysterious; he is descended from a spirit, and disappears, ultimately, on a black horse. His name is still preserved in popular legends. In the Lausitz, the Wild Huntsman, the being who rides in furious haste across the heavens in violent storms, is called Dietrich von Bern. The name is also given to Knecht Ruprecht, the bringer of gifts or punishment at Christmas. Many large buildings in different parts of Italy, among them the amphitheater at Verona and the Castle of Sant' Angelo at Rome, have been popularly ascribed to him.

Dietz (dēts). See Diez.

Dietz, Feodor. b. at Neunstetten, Baden, Germany, May 29, 1813; d. at Gray, Haute-Saône, France, Dec. 18, 1870. German historical and battle painter. His works include Death of Gustavus Adolphus, Storming of Belgrade, and others.

Dietz, Howard. b. at New York, Sept. 8, 1896—. American writer and librettist. He has been a director (1918–24) and vice-president (1940 et seq.) in charge of publicity and advertising for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which merged (1924) into Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He collaborated with Jerome Kern on Dear Sir (1924), Morris Ryskind on Merry-Go-Round (1927), George S. Kaufman on Bandwagon (1932), and Reuben Mamoulian on Sadie Thompson (1944).

Dietz, Johann Christian. b. at Darmstadt, Germany, 1788; d. in the Netherlands, c1845. German instrument manufacturer, inventor of the claviharpe, the trochleon, and of a type of small piano called by him the melodeon.

Dietzenschmidt (dēt'sen.shmit). [Pseudonym of Anton Franz Schmidt.] b. at Teplitz-Schönau (now Teplice-Šanov, Czechoslovakia), Dec. 21, 1893—. German playwright and story writer. His play about a streetwalker, Kleine Sklavin (1918), created a sensation and helped bring him the Kleist prize a year later. The tales in König Tod (1918) already show the preoccupation with the fantastic and legendary which was to mark his later work. Saints' legends became his chief interest, and he put Saint Christopher and the Christ Child into a play (Christofer, 1920). Other such treatments are Die Sankt Jacobs Fahrt (1920) and Die Nächte des Bruders Vitalis.

Dieudonné d'Artois (dyė.do.nā dàr.twà), Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie. See Chambord, Comte de.

Dieulafoy (dyė.là.fwà), Georges. b. at Toulouse, France, Nov. 18, 1839; d. at Paris, Aug. 16, 1911. French clinician; brother of Marcel Auguste Dieulafoy. He was a pupil of Armand Trousseau and became professor of pathology at the University of Paris. He was a specialist in the treatment of the diseases of the lungs and the nervous system. Among his great contributions to the progress of medicine are his invention (1869) of a pump troicar for the evacuation of pleural effusions and the discovery of the three symptoms of objective evidence of appendicitis (Dieulafoy's triad): excessive hypersensitiveness of the skin, reflex contraction of the muscles, and abnormal sensitiveness to the touch at a specific point. He described also a type of gastric erosion which complicates pneumonia (Dieulafoy's ulcer or erosion). Author of Manuel de pathologie interne (1880–84; Eng. trans., A Textbook of Medicine, 1910), Clinique médicale de l'Hôtel Dieu de Paris (1896–99), De l'aspiration pneumatique souscutanée. Méthode de diagnostic et de traitement (1870; Eng. trans., On Subcutaneous Pneumatic Aspiration, as a Method of Diagnosis and of Treatment, 1870), and Traité de l'aspiration des liquides morbides (1873; Eng. trans., A Treatise on the Traumatic Aspiration of Morbid Fluids, 1873).

Dieulafoy, Jeanne Paule Henriette Rachel. [Maiden name, Magre.] b. at Toulouse, France, July 29, 1851; d. at Paris, 1916. French archaeologist; wife of Marcel Auguste Dieulafoy. She was the author of fiction and of La Perse (Persia, 1886), a description of her stay in that country with her husband.

Dieulafoy, Marcel Auguste. b. at Toulouse, France, Aug. 3, 1844; d. at Paris, Feb. 24, 1920. French archaeologist and engineer of roads and bridges; brother of Georges Dieulafoy. He explored the remains of the palaces of Darius I and Artaxerxes at Susa, Persia. Author of L'Art antique de la Perse (Ancient Persian Art, 1884–89) and L'Acropole de Suse (The Acropolis of Susa, 1890–93).

Diez (dēts). [Also, Dietz.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the province of Hesse-Nassau, Prussia, situated on the Lahn River, ab. 19 mi. E of Koblenz. It has livestock markets, stone quarries, and small industries, and a medieval castle. 7,019 (1946).

Diez, Friedrich Christian. b. at Giessen, Hesse, Germany, March 15, 1794; d. at Bonn, Prussia, Germany, May 29, 1876. German philologist, the founder of scientific Romance philology. He was named (1830) professor at Bonn. Among his works are Grammatik der romanischen Sprachen (1836–42) and Etymologisches Wörterbuch der romanischen Sprachen (1853).

Differdange (dē.fer.dänzh). [German, Differdingen (dif'-ėr.ding.ẹn).] Town in Luxembourg, situated in the "Red Earth" district near the French border, ab. 12 mi. SW of the city of Luxembourg. It is located in the "Minette" iron-ore field, stretching from Lorraine (near Longwy) into Luxembourg, and has iron mines, blast furnaces, and metallurgical industries. 15,243 (1948).

Difficulty, The Hill. Hill, in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, encountered by Christian in his journey to the Celestial Country.

Diff'rent. Play by Eugene O'Neill, produced in 1921.

Dig (dēg). [Also, Deeg.] Fortified place in Rajasthan state, in the Rajputana region, Union of India, ab. 90 mi. S of Delhi. It was captured by the British in 1804. It contains a palace, built by Suraj Mull toward the middle of the 18th century. The portion completed is ab. 700 ft. square, and is traversed by a garden with beautiful architectural adornment. The north pavilion contains a fine audience hall, 77 by 54½ ft., divided by a central range of arches. An adjoining side of the court is occupied by a great hall 108 by 87 ft., open on two sides and including four ranges of columns with arcades edged with sharply cut cusps. The cornices are particularly noteworthy: they are wide-spreading, often double, and supported by very richly sculptured brackets.

Digby (dig'bi). Small seaport in Nova Scotia, Canada, on Annapolis basin, ab. 17 mi. SW of Annapolis. It is the county seat of Digby county and is connected by ferry with St. John, New Brunswick, and by rail with Halifax: center of Nova Scotian herring fishery. 2,047 (1951).

Digby, Sir Everard. b. May 16, 1578; d. Jan. 30, 1606. English conspirator; father of Sir Kenelm Digby. He inherited large estates in Rutlandshire, Leicestershire, and Lincolnshire from his father, Everard Digby of Stoke Dry, Rutland; and in 1603 was knighted by James I. He was one of the leading conspirators in the Gunpowder Plot (1605), being entrusted with the task of preparing for a rising in the midland counties to take place simultaneously with the blowing up and destruction of the Houses of Parliament. He was apprehended after the plot failed, confessed his guilt at his trial, and was hanged, drawn, and quartered at London.

Digby, George. [Title, 2nd Earl of Bristol.] b. at Madrid, October, 1612; d. at London, March 20, 1677. English Royalist soldier and politician; son of John Digby, 1st Earl of Bristol. His career was limited by his conversion (c1657) to Roman Catholicism and by his erratic instability of character. After graduation from Oxford (M.A., 1636), he attacked Roman Catholicism in letters (1638) to his cousin, Sir Kenelm Digby (1603–65). His speech (1641) in the House of Commons against the third reading of the attainder bill (which he had at first supported) concerning the earl of Stratford was burned by the common hangman. He fled to Holland as a result of his raising troops for Charles I, and was impeached for treason by the House of Commons. He joined the Royalist troops in the English Civil War, but resigned his command after a quarrel with Prince Rupert. He was secretary of state and privy councilor (1643), and lieutenant general of Royalist forces north of the Trent (1645). After defeat at Carlisle Sands (1645), he fled to France and became (1651) a lieutenant general in the French army. He fought brilliantly in the Fronde disorders, but was expelled from France for plotting to take Mazarin's place as royal minister. He was secretary of state (1657) to Charles II but lost his position as a result of his conversion to Roman Catholicism. He attempted to impeach Edward Hyde, the Earl of Clarendon, for his opposition to Digby's aim of an Italian marriage for Charles II. He retired from political life until the fall of Clarendon (1667).

Digby, John. [Title, 1st Earl of Bristol.] b. in February, 1580; d. at Paris, Jan. 16, 1653. English diplomat. He conducted negotiations for marriages between Prince Henry (d. 1612), son of James I, and Anne, daughter of Philip III of Spain (1611) and between Prince Charles (later Charles I) and Philip's younger daughter Maria (1614, 1618). He was made privy councilor (1616). In 1621 he was sent to advise on the dispute between Frederick V, elector palatine, son-in-law of James I, and the Holy Roman emperor, Ferdinand II. He returned to Spain (1622) to renew marriage arrangements, but in his attempts to come to agreement with Spain he offended Prince Charles and George Villiers, 1st Duke of Buckingham, and he had difficulty in obtaining a trial to answer charges brought by Charles I (1626). He was restored to the House of Lords (1628) after a period of imprisonment in the Tower of London. He supported Charles in the English Civil War and was one of those ordered by Parliament to be removed from the court in the Oxford peace propositions (1643).

Digby, Sir Kenelm. b. at Gothurst, Buckinghamshire, England, June (or July) 11, 1603; d. at London, June 11, 1665. English philosopher, naval commander, diplomat, and Royalist; son of Sir Everard Digby, who was executed for his participation in the Gunpowder Plot. He was educated at Gloucester Hall (later Worcester College), Oxford. In 1641 he fought a duel at Paris in defense of his royal master, Charles I; in 1644 he was made chancellor to Charles's queen, Henrietta Maria, and in 1645 at Rome (he was a Roman Catholic) he pleaded for Charles with Pope Innocent X. He was twice banished from England, in 1643 and again in 1649. He was visited during his exile by Evelyn, and he came to know Descartes. Some of his many works are A Conference with a Lady about Choice of Religion (Paris, 1638; London, 1654), Observations upon Religio Medici (1643), a criticism of Sir Thomas Browne's work, and often reprinted with it, Observations on the 22nd Stanza in the Ninth Canto of the Second Book of Spenser's "Faery Queene" (1644), A Treatise of the Nature of Bodies (Paris, 1644; London, 1658, 1665, 1669), A Treatise declaring the Operations and Nature of Man's Soul, out of which the Immortality of reasonable Souls is evinced (Paris, 1644; London, 1645, 1657, 1669), Letters Concerning Religion (1651), A Discourse Concerning Infallibility in Religion (1652), A Discourse concerning the Vegetation of Plants (1661), a lecture delivered at Gresham College, Jan. 23, 1661, in which he announced his discovery of the necessity of oxygen for the life of plants. As a philosopher, Digby was a follower of Aristotle and the Schoolmen. As a scientist he is not thought of too highly today, despite the fact that he unquestionably had much genuine scientific curiosity. Evelyn called him "an errant mountebank," after seeing his Paris laboratory, and Lady Fanshawe described him as "a person of excellent parts and a very fine-bred gentleman," apart from his tendency to lie about his experiments. His "sympathetic powder" or "powder of sympathy," for curing wounds, has long since been dismissed as being a quack preparation of no medical value.

Digby, Kenelm Henry. b. at Clonfert, Ireland, 1800; d. at London, March 22, 1880. English antiquary. He graduated, with the degree of B.A., at Cambridge in 1819, and spent most of his subsequent life in literary pursuits at London. His chief works are The Broadstone of Honour, or Rules for the Gentlemen of England (1822, anonymous; enlarged edition, with second title omitted, 1826–27), and Mores Catholici, or Ages of Faith (1831–40).

Digby Grant. See Grant, Digby.

Digby Plays. Collection of four late 15th-century religious plays, which exist in manuscript form in the Oxford Bodleian Library. The first play deals with The Massacre of the Innocents and the Flight into Egypt (also known as The Killing of the Children); the second with the Conversion of Saul (or Saint Paul), in which the unknown author quotes the "byble" as his authority; the third, regarded as the most important, is a Mary Magdalene miracle, the manuscript of which appears to be of the early 16th century, with the Seven Deadly Sins, Tiberius Caesar, and the king of Marseilles as characters; and the fourth, dealing with the burial and resurrection of Christ, is a morality play, named, after its chief characters, Mind, Will, and Understanding, with, of course, Satan, and his familiar "Ho, ho, ho!" In spite of their subjects, these plays have scenes of rough and vulgar humor, degenerating into coarse burlesque, which seem strangely out of place and, according to later notions, in bad taste. The first play is also called Parfre's Candelmas-Day, after its transcriber, Jhon (not John) Parfre, and the last is known as one of the "Macro Moralities," the manuscript once being the property of the 18th-century antiquary Cox Macro.

Digest, The. See Pandects of Justinian.

Digger Indians. See under Paiute.

Diggers. Collective name popularly given to a number of North American Indian tribes of diverse linguistic affiliation who inhabited portions of California, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, and Arizona. It refers to the root-collecting activities of the desert tribes of the area.

Digges (digz), Sir Dudley. b. 1583; d. 1639. English diplomat and parliamentarian; son of Thomas Digges (d. 1595). He was a member of the English Parliament from 1604 to 1629. James I employed him in diplomatic missions to Russia and the Netherlands. After the accession of Charles I he hoped for advancement through the king's favorite, the Duke of Buckingham, but these expectations failing, he took a leading part in the impeachment proceedings against Buckingham, and in opposition to the king, supported the Petition of Right (1628). After 1630, however, he was a supporter of the king's policies. He was a member of the court of high commission, and in 1636 was appointed master of the rolls.

Digges, Leonard. d. c1571. English mathematician. He studied at Oxford (without, however, taking a degree), and inherited a competent fortune, which enabled him to devote himself to scientific pursuits. His chief work is A Booke named Tectonicon, briefly showing the exact measuring and speedie reckoning all manner of land, squares, timber, stone . . . (1556).

Digges, Thomas. d. Aug. 24, 1595. English mathematician; son of Leonard Digges. He graduated, with the degree of B.A., at Cambridge in 1551, became a member of Parliament in 1572; and was muster-master-general of her majesty's forces in the Low Countries (1586–94). His works include A Geometrical Practice, named Pantometria (1571), A Prognostication . . . contayning . . . Rules to judge the Weather by the Sunne, Moone, Stars . . . (1578), and An Arithmeticall Militare Treatise, named Stratioticos (1579).

Digges, Thomas Atwood. b. c1741; d. c1821. American novelist, patriot, traveler, and friend of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and Madison. He is the author, or the generally accepted author, of The Adventures of Alonzo: Containing some Striking Anecdotes of the Present Prime Minister of Portugal (1775). It is an imitation of the picaresque novel, and tells the story of a young Portuguese merchant. It was published as being by "a native of Maryland, some years resident in Lisbon," both details applying to Digges, who is referred to as "a Maryland gentleman," and who is known to have lived at Lisbon during the Revolutionary War. His novel, which has been regarded by some as the first one by an American, is American in that sense only; as the title clearly indicates it does not deal with an American character or background, and it was not written in America.

Diggon (dig'ọn). Shepherd in Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar. He has traveled far and lost all his flock to sharp strangers.

Diggory (dig'ọ.ri). Loutish servant in Oliver Goldsmith's comedy She Stoops to Conquer.

Dighton (dī'tọn). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Bristol County, near the Taunton River: marketing point for agricultural products; formerly important for shipbuilding and fishing. Near it is the Dighton Rock, with an inscription formerly attributed to the Northmen, but now generally believed to be American Indian. 2,950 (1950).

Di Giacomo (dē jä'kō.mō), Salvatore. b. at Naples, Italy, 1860; d. 1934. Italian dialectal poet, novelist, and playwright.

Digna (dig'nạ), Osman. See Osman Digna.

Digne (dēny'). [Ancient name, Dinia.] Town in SE France, the capital of the department of Basses-Alpes, situated in a mountainous region on the Bléone River, NW of Nice. It is a tourist center and health resort with thermal springs considered useful in the treatment of rheumatism, gout, and skin diseases. It produces dried fruits, marmalades, honey, and hides. It is the seat of annual fairs for the sale of perfumes and essences, particularly lavender and mint. The cathedral of Saint Jérôme dates from the 15th century, the church of Notre-Dame-du-Bourg, one of the most majestic Romanesque churches of Provence, from the 12th and 13th centuries. The town suffered damage in World War II. 9,342 (1946).

Dignity and Impudence. Painting by Sir Edwin Landseer, in the National Gallery, London. It is a group consisting of a large, solemn-looking bloodhound and a pert Scotch terrier.

Digo (dē'gō). [Also: Wadigo, Wadigu.] One of nine Bantu-speaking peoples of E Africa known collectively as Nyika. The Digo inhabit Digo district in SE Kenya and Tanga district in NE Tanganyika, and their population is estimated at ab. 30,000 (by I. Schapera, Some Problems of Anthropological Research in Kenya Colony, 1940).

Digoin (dē.gwaṅ). Town in E France, in the department of Saône-et-Loire, situated on the Loire River and the Canal du Centre ab. 16 mi. W of Charolles. It is an industrial town, producing faïence earthenware and pottery. 6,357 (1946).

Dihang (dē.häng') or Dihong (dē.hông'). Name of the Brahmaputra in Assam.

Dijon (dē.zhôṅ). [Latin, Divio, Dibio.] City in E France, the capital of the department of Côte-d'Or, situated at the junction of the Ouche and Suzon rivers. It is a center for the trade in Burgundy wines and has chemical, metallurgical, and wood industries. Specialties of the department are liqueurs, cookies (pain d'épice), and mustards. The city is architecturally interesting because of its churches, its old houses and hotels, and the remarkable town hall in the former palace of the dukes of Burgundy. The cathedral of Saint Bénigne was started as a Romanesque basilica in 1001, but has an entirely Gothic superstructure. The churches of Saint Philibert, Saint Michel and Saint Jean date from the 14th and 15th centuries; Notre Dame, with a famous façade, from the 12th century. Dijon has a university and is the seat of a bishopric. The city flourished as long as it was a chief city (and finally, the capital) of the powerful duchy of Burgundy (1015–1477). Afterward, it was for a long time contested for by the French crown and the Hapsburgs. It was occupied by the Germans in 1870 and in 1940, and suffered damage toward the end of World War II. 100,664 (1946).

Dikaearchia (dī''kē.är.kī'a). Greek name of Pozzuoli.

Dike (dī'kē). See Dice.

Dikranakerd (dē.krä.nä.kerd'). Armenian name of Diyarbakir.

Diksmuide (diks.moi'dę). [Also: Dikmuide; French, Dixmude.] Small town in NW Belgium, in the province of West Flanders, situated on the Yser River, ab. 20 mi. SW of Bruges. It was severely damaged in World War I. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Diktonius (dik.tō'ni.us), Elmer Rafael. b. at Helsingfors (now Helsinki), Finland, 1896—. Finnish poet and prose writer. The son of a printer, he studied music and literature in France, England, and Czechoslovakia, and was one of the founders of the literary magazines Ultra and Quosego. Although he was at first a violent radical in his views and poetic form, Diktonius has slowly come to adopt an attitude expressing greater reconciliation to life. His verse is often an explosion of expressionistic modernism, always tempered, however, by his fine musical sensibility. Nature and man as the child of nature are central themes of his work, which is written in Swedish. English translations of his work may be found in Voices From Finland (1947) and Modern Swedish Poems (1948). His poetical volumes include Min dikt (My Poetry, 1921), Hårda sånger (Hard Songs, 1922), Taggiga lågor (Jagged Flames, 1924), Stark men mörk (Strong But Dark, 1930), Gräs och granit (Grass and Granite, 1936), Jordisk ömhet (Earthly Tenderness, 1938), and Varsel (Omen, 1942).

Dilettanti Society. London society devoted to the encouragement of a taste for the fine arts, founded in 1734.

Dilke (dilk), Charles Wentworth. b. Dec. 8, 1789; d. Aug. 10, 1864. English journalist, editor (1830–46) of the London Athenaeum and (1846–49) of the Daily News. He was the author of essays on the Letters of Junius. He did valuable research on Alexander Pope's life and continued the series of Old Plays begun by Robert Dodsley.

Dilke, Sir Charles Wentworth. b. at London, Feb. 18, 1810; d. at St. Petersburg, May 10, 1869. English politician; son of Charles Wentworth Dilke (1789–1864). He was a promoter of the London exhibition of 1851, commissioner to the New York industrial exhibition of 1853, and one of the royal commissioners for the London exhibition of 1862. He was made a baronet in 1862 and entered Parliament in 1865.

Dilke, Sir Charles Wentworth. b. at Chelsea, London, Sept. 4, 1843; d. at London, Jan. 26, 1911. English Radical Liberal politician and author; son of Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke (1810–69). He graduated at Cambridge in 1866 and was called to the bar in 1866, elected member of Parliament for Chelsea in 1868, appointed undersecretary of state for foreign affairs in 1880, and became president of the Local Government Board with a seat in the cabinet in 1882. He lost his seat in Parliament in 1886 after he had been named correspondent in a divorce case, but again became a member in 1892. He published Greater Britain (1868), Parliamentary Reform (1879), Present Condition of European Politics (1887), The British Army (1888), Problems of Greater Britain (1890), Imperial Defense (with Spenser Wilkinson, 1892), The British Empire (1898), and others. He married twice, his second wife being Emilia Frances Strong, Lady Dilke, noted art critic.

Dilke, Lady Emilia. [Maiden name, Emilia Frances Strong.] b. at Ilfracombe, Devonshire, England, Sept. 2, 1840; d. at Woking, Surrey, England, Oct. 24, 1904. English critic and historian of French art; daughter of Major Henry Strong; wife (married 1861) of Mark Pattison (1813–84) and (married 1885) of Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke (1843–1911). Educated at the South Kensington Art School; interested in social questions, labor unions, and votes for women; one of the founders of the Women's Trades Union League, the annual congresses of which she attended from 1884 to 1904. Contributed writings on art to the Academy, Magazine of Art, and other periodicals. Author of The Renaissance of Art in France (1879), Art in the Modern State (1884), French Painters (1889), French Architects and Sculptors (1900), French Engravers and Draughtsmen (1902), the last three dealing with the 18th century; she also wrote two collections of mystical stories, The Shrine of Death (1886), and The Shrine of Love (1891), and The Book of the Spiritual Life (1905).

Dill (dil), Sir John Greer. b. at Belfast, Ireland, Dec. 25, 1881; d. at Washington, D.C., Nov. 4, 1944. British soldier who served (1941–44) as a member of the joint Anglo-American board of strategy. He entered the army in 1901 and served in the Boer War (1901–02), and in World War I. He was director (1934–36) of military operations and intelligence in the War Office, and commanded British forces in Palestine. He led (1939–40) the First Army Corps in France, was appointed general (1939) and later field marshal. He accompanied (December, 1941) Winston Churchill to Washington. He was chief (1940–41) of the imperial general staff. Dill was responsible for the rebuilding of the British army after the Dunkerque disaster of 1940, when it was all but completely disorganized.

Dill, Ludwig. b. at Gerbsbach, Germany, Feb. 2, 1848; d. 1940. German landscape and marine painter. He studied under K. von Piloty and Seitz in the academy at Munich, and then traveled to Italy, France, and Switzerland, finally returning to Munich. He was awarded a Grand Prix in France at the Exposition Universelle of 1900. His work is in collections in Germany, France, and Argentina. Some of his better-known works are Dutch Canal, Near the River, Canal at Venice, Venetian Fishing Boats, and Seascape.

Dill, Sir Samuel. b. at Hillsborough, Ireland, March 26, 1844; d. at Belfast, Ireland, May 26, 1924. Irish classical scholar, educational administrator, and historian of Roman society in its period of decay and transformation. He was professor of Greek at Queen's College, Belfast (1890–1918), high master of Manchester Grammar School (1877–88), and is best remembered as author of Roman Society in the Last Century of the Western Empire (1898), Roman Society from Nero to Marcus Aurelius (1904), and Roman Society in Gaul in the Merovingian Age (1926).

Dillard (dil'ərd), James Hardy. b. in Nansemond County, Va., Oct. 24, 1856; d. Aug. 2, 1940. American educator. After teaching mathematics at Washington and Lee University, he served as principal of various schools in the South before becoming professor of Latin at Tulane University, a chair he filled from 1891 until he resigned in 1907 to become president of the Jeanes Foundation, which promoted the betterment of education for Negroes in the South. In addition to serving in this capacity until 1931, he was director of the John F. Slater Fund (1910–17) and vice-president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund (1925). In 1928 his work in behalf of Negro education and better race relations won him the gold medal of the Harmon Foundation. He wrote and edited a number of books in the fields of mathematics, classical studies, and poetry, including Fifty Letters of Cicero (1902) and Favorite German Poems (1903). Dillard University at New Orleans is named for him.

Dillard University. Accredited, interdenominational, coeducational, privately controlled college for Negroes, at New Orleans. The outcome of an amalgamation of New Orleans University (Methodist) and Straight College (Congregationalist), it was chartered in 1930, named for James Hardy Dillard in recognition of his services to Negro education in the South, and opened in 1935. It has schools of arts and sciences, nursing, and business, and is affiliated with the Flint-Goodrich Hospital.

Dillenburg (dil'ən.bûrk). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Hessen, American Zone, formerly in the province of Hesse-Nassau, Prussia, ab. 41 mi. NE of Koblenz. It has tool and machine, chemical, and rubber factories and manufactures musical instruments and costume jewelry. Count William I of Nassau (William the Silent) was born here; the ruins of his ancestral castle are preserved. 10,116 (1950).

Dillenius (di.lē'ni.us; German, di.lā'nē.ûs), Johann Jakob. [Also, Dillen (dil'ən).] b. at Darmstadt, Germany, 1687; d. at Oxford, England, April 2, 1747. German botanist, professor at Oxford from 1728. He wrote Catalogus plantarum sponte circa gissam nascentium (1719), Hortus elthamensis (1732), and Historia muscorum (1741).

Dilli (dil'ē). See Delhi, India.

Dillingen (dil'ing.ən). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Swabia, situated on the Danube River, ab. 23 mi. NW of Augsburg. It has cement works, breweries, and machine and textile manufactures. Noteworthy buildings include a number of convents and churches of the baroque period (Jesuit Church and Parish Church, 17th century; Convent Church, 1735), a castle dating from the 13th century, the library, and the college of the Benedictines of Saint Ottilien. The town was the residence of the bishops of Augsburg from 1286 to 1803, and the seat of a university from 1554 to 1804. It became part of Bavaria in 1803. In World War II, Dillingen was occupied by Allied troops on April 27, 1945; war damage was considerable. 8,566 (1946).

Dillinger (dil'in.jər), John. b. at Indianapolis, 1902; d. at Chicago, 1934. American bank robber. His criminal career began early, and he was at liberty on parole after a term in prison for attempted robbery when in 1933 he undertook, at the head of a gang of criminals, a campaign of bank robberies which terrorized the Middle West until in 1934 he was shot in Chicago by operatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Dillingham (dil'ing.ham, -əm), Charles Bancroft. b. at Hartford, Conn., May 30, 1868; d. Aug. 30, 1934. American theater manager and producer, mainly of musical plays. He was manager of the Globe Theatre at New York and was associated with A. L. Erlanger in 20 other theaters, producing (1900 et seq.) some 200 plays.

Dillingham, William Paul. b. at Waterbury, Vt., Dec. 12, 1843; d. at Montpelier, Vt., July 12, 1923. American politician. He was elected governor of Vermont (1888) and U.S. senator (1900), holding the latter post until his death. As chairman (1903–11) of the Committee on Immigration, he is best known for his advocacy of the quota principle of immigration restriction, which formed the basis for the Immigration Law of 1921.

Dillmann (dil'män), (Christian Friedrich) August. b. April 25, 1823; d. July 4, 1894. German Orientalist and Protestant theologian, an authority on the Ethiopian language and literature and Old Testament criticism. He became (1869) professor at Berlin. His works include a grammar (1857) and lexicon (1865) of the Ethiopian language, and commentaries on Job, Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus.

Dillon (dil'ŏn). City in SW Montana, county seat of Beaverhead County, ab. 53 mi. S of Butte: wool-trading center. It is the seat of a state teachers college. 3,268 (1950).

Dillon. Town in NE South Carolina, county seat of Dillon County: shipping point for tobacco, cotton, and wheat; manufactures of textiles. 5,171 (1950).

Dillon, Arthur. b. at Roscommon, Ireland, 1670; d. at St.-Germain, France, 1733. English soldier, a general in the French army. He served as colonel of a Jacobite regiment under Louis XIV in Spain (1693–97), in Germany (1701), and in Italy (1702). Commissioned maréchal-de-camp (1704) and lieutenant general (1707), he was in charge of entrenchments at the siege of Barcelona (1714).

Dillon, Arthur Richard. b. at Braywick, Berkshire, England, 1750; guillotined in France, April 14, 1794. English soldier, a general in the French army; grandson of Arthur Dillon (1670–1733). He became a colonel (1767) under Louis XV; during the American Revolution he served in the West Indies and became governor of St. Kitt's.

Dillon, Charles. b. in England in 1819; d. there, June 27, 1881. English actor. He excelled in romantic drama, in such parts as Belphegor.

Dillon, Emile Joseph. b. at Dublin, Ireland, 1854; d. at Barcelona, Spain, June 9, 1933. English scholar, journalist, traveler, and editor. He traveled widely on the Continent, studying at the universities of Louvain, St. Petersburg, and Kharkov; founded (1885) Le Muséon, a French review, and was foreign editor of the Odessa Messenger; under the pseudonym E. B. Lanin he wrote (1889) articles on "Russian Characteristics" for the Fortnightly Review; became prominent as an expert on foreign affairs writing on France, Spain, China, and other countries for the Contemporary Review and the London Daily Telegraph, for which he covered the Dreyfus case. Author of translations, works on philology, Maxim Gorky (1902), A Scrap of Paper (1914), Why Italy Went to War and Ourselves and Germany (both 1916), The Eclipse of Russia (1918), President Obregón (1923), Russia Today and Yesterday (1929), and Leaves from Life (1932).

Dillon, George. b. at Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 12, 1906—. American poet. Awarded (1932, 1933) Guggenheim fellowship; editor of Poetry—A Magazine of Verse; awarded Pulitzer prize in poetry for The Flowering Stone (1931). Author of Boy in the Wind (1927); translated (1935), with Edna St. Vincent Millay, Baudelaire's Les Fleurs du Mal.

Dillon, Sir James. fl. 1667. Irish soldier, the first of his family to serve European governments. He left Ireland for the Continent as a result of activities in the Leinster revolt (1652). He saw service thereafter as a brigadier general in the armies of Spain and of the Fronde; granted (1662) pension by Charles II for his services to Charles. I.

Dillon, John. b. 1851; d. Aug. 4, 1927. Irish politician, one of the leaders of the Irish National party. He entered Parliament in 1880 and became one of Parnell's supporters. He was imprisoned (1881–82) and again in 1891 for advocating resistance to rent collection and for assisting in the formation of the plan to have tenants pay into a central fund which would support them in case of eviction. Despite his opposition to the British government's policies in Ireland, he supported the crown in World War I. He was chairman (1918) of the Irish National Federation but suffered in its general defeat (1918) by the Sinn Fein.

Dillon, Wentworth. See Roscommon, 4th Earl of.

Dilly (dil'i), Charles. b. at Southill, Bedfordshire, England, May 22, 1739; d. at Ramsgate, Kent, England, May 4, 1807. English bookseller, publisher of Boswell's Life of Johnson. In partnership with his older brother, Edward Dilly (1732–79), he published Boswell's Corsica, Lord Chesterfield's Works, and many other outstanding 18th-century works; alone, he published Boswell's Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides (1780) and the Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D. (1791; 2nd ed., 1793; 3rd ed., 1799). Both brothers were known for the famous dinners they gave to literary lights, and Charles was noted for the liberal terms he extended to his authors. Boswell's Life is full of references to "my worthy booksellers and friends," with Boswell more than once paying tribute to their "hospitable and well-covered table."

Dilmun (dil.mön'). Ancient city situated on an island, or rather peninsula, in the Persian Gulf, now included in the lowlands of the coast. Sargon II, king of Assyria (722–705 B.C.) relates on his monolith, found in Cyprus, that he received gifts and homage from Uperi, king of Dilmun.

Dilthey (dil'tī), Wilhelm. b. at Biebrich, Germany, Nov. 19, 1833; d. at Seis, Austria (now in Italy, near Bolzano), Oct. 3, 1911. German philosopher who did pioneer work for the systematic foundation of mental sciences, as differentiated from the natural sciences. He served as professor at the universities of Basel (1866), Kiel (1868), Breslau (1871), and Berlin (1882). His Systematische Philosophie (1907) reflects a positive idealism resulting from strongly empirical and historical tendencies. Between his Einleitung in die Geisteswissenschaften (1883) and Der Aufbau der geschichtlichen Methode in den Geisteswissenschaften (1910) the transformation of literary historiography from a technique of fact-recording into a vital science of ideas and human values had taken place. In this change Dilthey was largely instrumental, particularly with his essays on Lessing, Goethe, Novalis, Hölderlin, written at various times but published in 1905 under the title of Das Erlebnis und die Dichtung. Dilthey's other works include Das Leben Schleiermachers (1870), Jugendgeschichte Hegels (1905), and Weltanschauung und Analyse des Menschen seit Renaissance und Reformation (2 vols., 1921).

Di Maggio (dē mä'ji.ō), Joseph Paul. b. at Martinez, Calif., 1914—. American baseball player. His competence at bat and in the field led to his purchase in 1935 by the New York Yankees of the American League, and he quickly became one of the most noted and popular professional practitioners of the American national pastime. In 1937 he had a batting average of .347, and in 1941 he was credited with safe hits in 56 consecutive games, a record. He served with the U.S. army in World War II, after which he returned (1946) to the Yankees. He retired from baseball after the 1951 season had been completed. His autobiography, Lucky to be a Yankee, was published in 1946.

Diman (dī'mạn), Jeremiah Lewis. b. at Bristol, R.I., May 1, 1831; d. at Providence, R.I., Feb. 3, 1881. American historical writer and Congregational clergyman, professor of history at Brown University. He wrote Theistic Argument (1879) and Orations and Essays (published 1882).

Dimanche (dē.mänsh), Monsieur. [Eng. trans., "Mr. Sunday."] In Molière's Don Juan or Le Festin de Pierre, a tradesman who tries to collect money due him, but is never allowed even to ask for it, being constantly interrupted.

Dimetian Code (dī.mē'shi.ạn). Custom by which the youngest child received the dwelling house when property was divided by inheritance. It was practiced in Wales before the 10th century, according to the laws of Hywel Dda (Howel the Good), the different editions of which are included in the Dimetian Code for S Wales, in the Venedotian Code for N Wales, and in the Gwentian Code for NE Wales.

Diminuendo. Prose sketch (1896) by Max Beerbohm. Something of its whimsical, facetious nature may be gathered from the fact that it appeared in his first book, The Works of Max Beerbohm, which the author pretends is to be his last, and in which it is the closing selection. "I feel myself a trifle outmoded. I belong to the Beardsley period," and "I stand aside with no regret," Beerbohm tells his reader, in apparent sincerity. The meaning of the title in music (diminishing in loudness) is appropriate to the title of the sketch.

Dimisq (dē.mēsk'). An Arabic name of Damascus.

Dimitriev (dē.mē'trē.ef), Radko. [Also, Dmitriev.] b. at Gradets, Bulgaria, 1859; executed in Russia, 1919. Bulgarian general, who played a prominent role in military and political affairs as a friend of Russia. He participated in the overthrow (1886) of Prince Alexander of Battenberg because of the latter's anti-Russian policy, served as military commander during the Balkan wars (1912–13), as ambassador at St. Petersburg (1913–14), and as general in the Russian army during World War I.

He was executed by the Bolsheviks as a Czarist sympathizer.

Dimitrijević (dē.mē'trē.ye.vich), Dragutin. [Known as "Apis."] b. at Belgrade, Serbia, 1877; executed at Salonika, Greece, 1917. Serbian military and political figure, noted as a participant in conspiracies leading to the assassination of King Alexander I of Serbia in 1903 and of Crown Prince Francis Ferdinand in 1914. He founded (1911) the terrorist organization Union or Death, also known as the Black Hand. He was tried at Salonika by a Serbian military court and executed for treason against the Karageorgević dynasty.

Dimitri Roudine (dē.mē.trē rö.dēn). Name used in the French translation of the novel Rudin, by Ivan Turgenev, for the chief character. Now generally spelled Dmitri Rudin in English translations, the character is nevertheless sometimes entered in older English reference works under this French spelling.

Dimitrov (dē.mē'trúf), Georgi Mihailov. b. at Kovachevtsi, Bulgaria, 1882; d. at Moscow, 1949. Bulgarian Communist leader, noted as secretary general (1935–42) of the Comintern (Communist International), and as first prime minister (1946–49) of the Bulgarian People's Republic. Member of Social Democrat and, after 1919, Communist parties; led abortive uprising (1923) in Bulgaria and went into exile; accused by Nazis of complicity in Reichstag fire, and acquitted at Leipzig trial (1933).

Dimitrov, Georgi Mihov. b. in Thrace (then part of Turkey), 1903—. Bulgarian agrarian leader, secretary general (1947 et seq.) of the International Peasant Union. He began his political career as secretary (1921–23) of the Bulgarian Agrarian Youth League, obtained a degree in medicine (1931), and served as a member of parliament (1931–34), representing the Agrarian National Union. He went into exile in 1941, and returned in 1944 as leader of the Agrarian National Union, but resigned (1945) under Communist pressure and again went into exile.

Dimmesdale (dimz'dāl), Arthur. Puritan clergyman in The Scarlet Letter (1850) by Nathaniel Hawthorne. He has a delicately sensitive nature, unable to bear the strain of the concealment of his sin with Hester Prynne, which he finally confesses publicly.

Dimnet (dēm.ne), Ernest. [Often referred to as Abbé Dimnet.] b. at Trelon, France, 1869—. French abbé, lecturer, writer, and authority on the Brontës. He is the author of La Pensée catholique dans l'Angleterre contemporaine (1905), Figures de moines (1909), Les Sœurs Brontë (1910), L'Art de penser (1928; Eng. trans., The Art of Thinking, 1930), and What We Live By (1932; original publication in English). He achieved popularity as lecturer and writer on self-improvement for American audiences.

Dimonah (di.mō'nạ). See under Dibon, Judea.

Dimotika (dē.mô'ti.kä). See Didymoteikhon.

Dimple Hill. Novel by Dorothy M. Richardson, published in 1938. It is the twelfth section of Pilgrimage (1938), a novel sequence in 12 parts employing the stream-of-consciousness technique.

Dimsdale (dimz'dāl), Thomas. b. in Essex, England, May 6, 1712; d. in Hertfordshire, England, Dec. 30, 1800. English physician, known chiefly as an advocate of inoculation for smallpox. He took up the practice of medicine at Hertford, and in 1767 published The Present Method of Inoculation for the Small Pox, which obtained for him in 1768 an invitation to St. Petersburg to inoculate the empress Catherine and the grand duke Paul.

Dimyat (dim.yät'). Arabic name of Damietta.

Dinagat (dē.nä'gät). Long, narrow island of the Philippines, belonging to Surigao province and lying N of Mindanao and E of Leyte, from which it is separated by Surigao Strait. It is traversed from N to S by mountains, of which Redondo, a peak at the N extremity, is the highest. Cagdayanao, at the SE end of the island, is a good harbor in all weather for large vessels. Area, 309 sq. mi.; pop. 14,606 (1939).

Dinah (dī'nạ). [Also, Dina.] In the Bible, the daughter of Jacob by Leah. She was raped by Shechem; in return her brothers Simeon and Levi destroyed eight of the Amorite cities after causing the men of the land to be disabled. Shechem wanted to marry Dinah, but the brothers insisted that she could not marry one who was a member of an uncircumcised people. Therefore Shechem's father, the king, ordered his male subjects to be circumcised. Gen. xxx, xxxiv.

Dinah, Aunt. In Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy, the aunt of Walter Shandy, who occupies himself with schemes for spending the money she leaves him.

Dinah Morris (mor'is). See Morris, Dinah.

Dinajpur (dē.näj'pör). [Also, Dinagepore.] District in the Rajshahi division, East Bengal, divided in 1947 between Pakistan and the Union of India, NE of the Ganges River. Rice and sugar are the important crops in the area. Capital, Dinajpur; area, 3,946 sq. mi.; pop. 1,926,833 (1941).

Dinajpur. [Also, Dinagepore.] Capital of Dinajpur district, Pakistan, ab. 220 mi. N of the city of Calcutta. It is an important road junction, with roads leading to Bhutan, Nepal, the valley of the Brahmaputra River, and the valley of the Ganges River. 34,271 (1951).

Dinan (dē.näñ). Town in NW France, in the department of Côtes-du-Nord, picturesquely situated on an escarpment above the Rance River, ab. 29 mi. NW of Rennes. It is a tourist center, particularly frequented by British travelers, because of its medieval castle and ramparts, old streets and houses, and interesting environs. The Church of Saint Sauveur shows Romanesque, Gothic, and Renaissance characteristics. The British besieged the town twice (1344 and 1364). It was the meeting place for the estates of Brittany from 1643 to 1717. Pop. 12,737 (1946).

Dinant (dē.näñ, dē.nänt'). Town in S Belgium, in the province of Namur, situated on the Meuse River, ab. 14 mi. S of Namur. It is fortified, and was formerly noted for its copper and brass wares. It was sacked by the Burgundians in 1466, and captured by the French in 1554 and 1675 and by the Germans in 1914. Pop. 7,046 (1947).

Dinant (di.nänt'). In John Fletcher and Philip Massinger's Little French Lawyer, a gentleman who formerly loved and still pretends to love Lamira.

Dinapore (dē'nạ.pōr). [Also, Dinapur (-pör).] Town in the district of Patna, Bihar state, Union of India, on the Ganges River ab. 12 mi. W of Patna. It has been known as an important military station, and was the scene of the start of the mutiny of the Sepoy regiments in the district in July, 1857. Pop. 24,221 (1941).

Dinar (dē.när'). [Ancient name, Celaenae.] Town in W central Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Afyon, ab. 90 mi. N of Antalya. It stands on the site of an ancient city of Phrygia, once of great size and importance. It became a royal residence in the time of Xerxes. Traditionally Apollo flayed Marsyas here after he had beaten the upstart in a musical contest. Celaenae was situated at the source of both the Marsyas and Maeander rivers. Pop. ab. 4,000.

Dinard (dē.när). Town in NW France, in the department of Ille-et-Vilaine, situated at the mouth of the Rance River and on the English Channel, facing St.-Malo and St.-Servan. It is a fashionable seaside resort, famous for its mild climate. The town hall and the church were seriously damaged during the World War II bombardment of August, 1944. Pop. 8,428 (1946).

Dinaric Alps (di.nar'ik alps'). [Serbo-Croatian, Dinara Planina (dē'nä.rä plä'nē.nä).] Name given to those mountain ranges in Yugoslavia which are a continuation of the main Alpine system. They run parallel to the Adriatic Sea coast through Slovenia, Croatia, and Bosnia-Hercegovina. Highest peak, Voljnac (ab. 7,800 ft.).

Dinarzade (dē.när.zä'dę). Sister of Scheherazade in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. She passes the night in the bridal chamber, and daily asks her sister, who is condemned to die each morning unless she can win a stay by telling another story, to relate for the last time one of her "agreeable tales."

Dindigul (din.di.gul'). [Also, Dindigal.] Town in Madras state, Union of India, ab. 120 mi. N of Cape Comorin. It is a major rail and road junction and is a large trading center. 56,275 (1941).

Dindings (din'dingz). [Also, Dinding Isles.] Administrative division of the former British colony of Straits Settlements (now part of the Federation of Malaya), situated on the W side of the Malay Peninsula, ab. 320 mi. NW of Singapore. The division is well known to stamp collectors, as it issued many beautiful series.

Dindorf (din'dôrf), Wilhelm. b. at Leipzig, Germany, Jan. 2, 1802; d. there, Aug. 1, 1883. German classical philologist. He was one of the collaborators in the revision of Stephanus's Thesaurus linguae Graecae (1831–65), and edited Demosthenes (1846–51), Poetae scaenici Graeci (1830), and others.

d'Indy (daṅ.dē), Vincent. See Indy, (Paul Marie Théodore) Vincent d'.

Dindymene (din.di.mē'nē). [Also, the Dindymenian Mother.] Cybele, the Phrygian mother-goddess: so called from Mount Dindymus in Galatia.

Dindymus (din'di.mus). [Also, Dindymum (-mum).] In ancient geography, a mountain in Galatia, sacred to Cybele.

Dinesen (dē'ne.sẹn), Isak. [Pen name of Baroness Karen Blixen (Finecke); maiden name, Dinesen.] b. at Rungsted, Denmark, April 17, 1885—. Danish writer, who won a world circle of readers with her Seven Gothic Tales (1934). These show strong literary influences from 18th-century romantic writers. Her next book, African Farm (1937), was based on 18 years of living in East Africa. She returned to the romantic strain in Winter's Tales (1943) and used the romantic atmosphere to disguise a political message in The Angelic Avengers (1947), which she wrote under the pen name Pierre Andrézel.

Ding (ding). Signature used professionally by the cartoonist Darling, Jay Norwood.

Dingelstedt (ding'ẹl.shtet), Baron Franz von. b. at Halsdorf, Hesse, Germany, June 30, 1814; d. at Vienna, May 15, 1881. German poet and novelist, director of the court theater at Stuttgart (1846–51), Munich (1851–56), and Weimar (1857–67) and of the Vienna Burgtheater (1872–81). He is considered one of the better political poets of the 1840's (Lieder eines kosmopolitischen Nachtwächters, 1841), and his tragedy Das Haus des Barneveldt (1850) was a success. He was the author also of the novels Unter der Erde (1840) and Die Amazone (1868). One of his great achievements was the staging at Weimar of a cycle of Schiller plays, and of Shakespeare's historical dramas in chronological order.

Dingle (ding'gl), Herbert. b. at London, Aug. 2, 1890—. English astronomer and physicist. He was reader and professor (1918–46) of natural philosophy at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, professor (1946 et seq.) of the history and philosophy of science at University College at London, and a member of the British government eclipse expeditions of 1927, 1932, and 1940. His written works include Relativity for All (1922) and Modern Astrophysics (1924).

Dingley (ding'li), Nelson. b. at Durham, Me., Feb. 15, 1832; d. Jan. 13, 1899. American editor, governor and congressman, author of the Dingley Tariff (1897). As editor (1856 et seq.) of the Lewiston (Me.) Evening Journal, he endorsed the newly formed Republican Party. Entering actively into Republican politics, he served (1861 et seq.) in the state legislature, was governor (1874–75) of Maine, and U.S. congressman (1881–99). As chairman (1895 et seq.) of the House Ways and Means Committee, he drafted the Dingley Tariff (passed 1897), the highest to that date.

Dingley Tariff. Act of the U.S. Congress, passed in 1897, which was effective in raising protective duties on imported commodities to a higher level, despite President William McKinley's inaugural statement promising a tariff for revenue purposes. The chief increases in the schedules applied to silks, linens, and chinaware. The 1890 duties on metals were restored and higher duties were reimposed on hides and wool.

Dingras (dēng.gräs'). Town in Ilocos Norte province, in the NW part of Luzon, Philippine Islands. 5,479 (1948).

Dingwall (ding'wôl, -wạl). Royal burgh in N Scotland, in the county of Ross and Cromarty, situated near the head of Cromarty Firth, ab. 8 mi. N of Beauly, ab. 577 mi. N of London by rail. It is the county seat of Ross and Cromarty. 3,363 (est. 1948).

Dinia (dī'ni.ạ). Ancient name of Digne.

Dinias and Dercyllis (din'i.ạs; dėr.sil'is). Chief characters (and usual title) of an old Greek romance. (The work is sometimes also entitled Of the Incredible Things in Thule.) Their love story furnishes the plot. According to Photius it was written soon after the death of Alexander the Great; others, however, believed it had been written by Antonius Diogenes, who was thought to have lived in Syria in the 2nd century B.C.

Diniz (dē.nēsh'). [Also: Dinis; English form, Denis or (sometimes) Dionysius.] b. at Lisbon, Portugal, Oct. 9, 1261; d. at Santarem, Portugal, Jan. 7, 1325. Sixth king (1279–1325) of Portugal. He was the son of Alfonso III of Portugal and Beatriz de Guzman, an illegitimate daughter of Alfonso X of León and Castile. From 1277 to 1279 he was in revolt against his father, and when he succeeded to the throne in 1279 was faced by the revolt of his brother Alfonso. He married (1281) Isabel (often known as Saint Elizabeth of Aragon), daughter of Peter III of Aragon. Diniz earned his epithet, O Rei Lavrador ("the farmer king"), by his agricultural reforms, introducing new methods of farming and establishing agricultural schools. He limited the authority of the feudal rulers of the kingdom and helped to establish centralized authority in the throne. Despite quarrels with the neighboring kingdoms, he stabilized the political situation of Portugal by judicious marriages of his children. He is generally considered the best Portuguese medieval poet. His lyric poems were preserved in the Cancioneiro da Vaticana (Codex Vaticanus 4803) and reproduced in a critical edition (1892) by H. R. Lang. A second edition, with introduction, appeared in 1894. He ordered the translation into Portuguese of two works by his grandfather, King Alfonso X (known as Alfonso the Learned) of León and Castile: Crónica general and Libro de las siete partidas. They became the first literary works in Portuguese prose. Diniz was the founder (1290) of the University of Coimbra.

Diniz, Júlio. [Pseudonym of Joaquim Guilherme Gomes Coelho.] b. at Oporto, Portugal, Nov. 14, 1839; d. there, in September, 1871. Portuguese writer who is credited with having introduced realism and rustic characters in the literature of his country with great success. His most popular rural novels were As pupilas do Sr. Reitor (1867), A morgadinha do canaviais (1868), and Os fidalgos da Casa Mourisca (1871). Uma família inglesa (1868), another well-known novel, deals, however, with city life.

Dinka (ding'kä). [Also, Dyangeh.] Nilotic-speaking people of S Anglo-Egyptian Sudan in NE Africa, occupying the basin of the Bahr-el-Ghazal, SW of Malakal, and a smaller area downstream on the right bank of the White Nile. They call themselves Jieng (singular, Jiang); Dinka is a corruption of their Arabic name, Denkawi. Their population is estimated at ab. 500,000 (by A. N. Tucker, 1935). They comprise a number of independent subgroups, including the Rek, Agar, Ngok, Twij, Malual, Dongjol, Palyoupiny, Twi, Ruweng, Gok, Bor, and Ciec. They are divided into numerous subgroups ruled by local headmen. They have military age grades and exogamous patrilineal clans. They practice hoe agriculture and herding, with the cattle complex, and their principal foods are generally milk and millet.

Dinkard (dēn.kärd'). Largest and most important Pahlavi work in existence, containing a vast amount of information regarding the legends, writings, doctrines, and customs of the Zoroastrian religion. In its present state much of the work consists of a descriptive catalogue of the contents of the original compilation, interspersed with extracts in detail. The date of its latest revision must have been subsequent to the Mohammedan conquest of Persia.

Dinkelsbühl (ding'kẹls.bül). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Middle and Upper Franconia, situated on the Wörnitz River, ab. 44 mi. SW of Nuremberg. It has agricultural markets, and small industries producing baskets, toys, and furniture. It is one of the best preserved medieval towns in S Germany, with walls and gates dating from the 15th century, the German House (1543), and the Church of Saint George, which is a notable example of the late Gothic style. Dinkelsbühl was a free imperial city from 1351 to 1802; it became part of Ansbach in 1804 and of Bavaria in 1806. The Swedes conquered the town in 1632. Pop. 6,928 (1946).

Dinmont (din'mont, -mọnt), Dandie (or Andrew). Border farmer in Sir Walter Scott's novel Guy Mannering. He is the grateful friend of Brown, who had saved his life. Sent by Meg Merrilies, he protects Brown in the Portanferry jail and, after their escape helps him, under the guidance of Meg, to capture Hatteraick. He is the owner of Mustard and Pepper, the progenitors of the Dandie Dinmont terriers.

Dinner at Eight. Play (1932) by George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber.

Dinocrates or Deinocrates (dī.nok'rą.tēz). fl. 4th century B.C. Ablest of the architects of Alexander the Great. He planned the new city of Alexandria, and rebuilt the Artemisium of Ephesus after its destruction by fire. He had a plan, never executed, of making a huge statue of a seated figure of Mount Athos (the mountain, personified, was to have a city in one hand and a basin to catch the rivers in the other).

Dinorah (di.nō'rą). [French title, Le Pardon de Ploërmel.] Opera in three acts by Meyerbeer, with libretto by Carré and Barbier, first produced at Paris, April 4, 1859.

Dinosaur National Monument. Large tract in NE Utah and NW Colorado, extending along the Green River and its tributary, the Yampa River. It includes areas of fossil remains, and the great Lodore Canyon of the Green River, in Colorado, with waterfalls and wild scenery. It was established in 1915. Area, ab. 298 sq. mi.

Dinslaken (dins'lä.kęn). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated near the Rhine River ab. 10 mi. N of Duisburg. It has metallurgical, electrical, machine, shoe, garment, and foodstuff industries, large iron and steel works, sawmills, and brick factories; coal mines are in the vicinity. 31,949 (1950).

Dinsmoor (dinz'mōr, -mör), Robert. [Also, Dinsmore.] b. at Windham, N.H., Oct. 7, 1757; d. March 16, 1836. American poet, known for poems in Scottish dialect. An edition of his poetry (1828) was edited and arranged (1898) as Poems of Robert Dinsmoor, the Rustic Bard. He was encouraged by John Greenleaf Whittier, who wrote an essay about him, "Robert Dinsmore" in Old Portraits and Modern Sketches (1850).

Dinsmore (dinz'mōr), Charles Allen. b. at New York, Aug. 4, 1860; d. at New Haven, Conn., Aug. 14, 1941. American Congregational clergyman and Dante scholar. Ordained (1888); pastor (1905–20) of the First Church at Waterbury, Conn.; professor (1920 et seq.) of the spiritual content of literature at the Yale Divinity School. His studies on Dante were published in The Teachings of Dante (1901), Aids to the Study of Dante (1903), and Life of Dante (1919); author also of Atonement in Literature and Life (1906), The New Light on the Old Truth (1912), Religious Certitude in an Age of Science (1924), The English Bible as Literature (1931), and The Great Poets and the Meaning of Life (1937).

Dinsmore, Elsie. Heroine of the 26 "Elsie Books" (1868–1905) by Martha F. Finley. Elsie is assiduously dedicated to virtue and to the resistance of all temptations, however minor, even when proffered by her father and friends. In the series she progresses from childhood to grandmotherhood, maintaining her remarkable virtue and immunity to temptation throughout.

Dinsmore, Robert. See Dinsmoor, Robert.

Dinter (din'tėr), Gustav Friedrich. b. at Borna, in Saxony, Feb. 29, 1760; d. at Königsberg, in East Prussia, May 29, 1831. German writer on pedagogics, professor of theology at Königsberg from 1822. His chief work is the Schullehrerbibel (1825–28).

Dinuba (di.nū'bą). City in C California, in Tulare County, NW of Los Angeles in a fruit-raising region. 4,971 (1950).

Dinwiddie (din'wid.i), Robert. b. at Germiston, near Glasgow, Scotland, 1693; d. at Clifton, Bristol, England, July 27, 1770. British colonial official in America. He was important in at least three respects: for his role in the French and Indian Wars, for his promotion of the westward movement, and for his influence on young George Washington. Placed by the British government in positions of increasing responsibility, he was assigned (1721 et seq.) to the island of Bermuda in charge of admiralty affairs, served (1727 et seq.) as collector of customs for Bermuda, and was promoted (1738) to surveyor-general (and in 1743 to the additional office of inspector-general) of customs for the southern part of America. In 1741 he became a member of the governor's council in Virginia, where finally in 1751 he was elevated to the position of lieutenant governor. With the approval of the Board of Trade, he led the colonial governors in opposing French domination of North America, and thereby greatly affected the course of American history. He promoted, in part to checkmate the French, the interests of the land venture known as the Ohio Company. In 1753 he dispatched 21-year-old George Washington to the French in the Lake Erie region, warning them to withdraw from that area. When the French continued their penetration into the Ohio valley, Dinwiddie in 1754 sent Washington against them with a small contingent, which the French forced to capitulate at Fort Necessity. Throughout the French and Indian Wars, his interest in military affairs was unflagging. He urged coöperation on the part of the colonies, was the first to place Washington in a position of military responsibility, and, for the most part, supported him even in defeat. In spite of occasional misunderstandings with Washington and with the burgesses, there was mutual confidence and respect. Contrary to popular belief he was not recalled, but left Virginia voluntarily in 1758 because of ill health.

Dio (dē'ō). Portuguese name of Diu.

Diocaesarea (dī.ō.sē.zą.rē'ą). Latin name of Sepphoris.

Dio (or Dion) Cassius (dī'ō, dī'on; kash'us, kash'i.us, kas'i.us). [Surnamed Cocceianus.] b. at Nicaea, in Bithynia, c155 A.D.; d. there, after 230 A.D. Historian of Rome. He was consul c220 and 229, and wrote in Greek a history of Rome in 80 books, covering the period from Aeneas to his own. Books 36–60 are extant.

Diocles (dī'ō.klēz). fl. 5th century B.C. Syracusan popular leader, the reputed (chief) author of a code of laws named for him.

Diocles Carystius (ką.ris'ti.us). b. at Carystus, in Euboea; fl. 4th century B.C. Greek physician.

Diocletian (dī.ō.klē'shąn). [Full Latin name, Gaius (or Caius) Aurelius Valerius Diocletianus; surnamed Jovius.] b. at Dioclea (whence his name), near Salona, in Dalmatia, 245 A.D.; d. near Salona, in Dalmatia, 313 A.D. Emperor of Rome. He entered the army at an early age, and, although of obscure origin, rose to important commands under Probus, Aurelian, and Carus. On the death of Numerianus, joint emperor with Carinus, he was proclaimed emperor by the army at Chalcedon in 284, and advanced against Carinus who was killed by one of his own officers. In 286 he adopted Maximian as his colleague in the government, dividing the empire into eastern and western parts for greater efficiency in government. In 292 the joint emperors appointed Galerius and Constantius Chlorus as their associates, and intending them as their successors. Diocletian and Maximian retained the title of Augusti, while Galerius and Constantius were denominated Caesars. Each of the rulers was independent in the local administration of his province, but the three junior rulers acknowledged Diocletian as the head of the empire. The empire was divided among them as follows: Diocletian received Thrace, Egypt, Syria, and Asia, with Nicomedia (modern Izmit, Turkey) as his capital; Maximian, Italy, Africa, Sicily, and the islands of the Tyrrhenian Sea, with Mediolanum (modern Milan) as his capital; Galerius, Illyricum and the countries of the Danube with Sirmium (near modern Sremska Mitrovica, Yugoslavia) as his capital; and Constantius, Britain, Gaul, and Spain, with Augusta Trevirorum (modern Trier or Treves, Germany) as his capital. Diocletian subdued a revolt in Egypt in 296, Constantius restored the allegiance of Britain in the same year, and Galerius forced the Persians to sue for peace in 297. Under Diocletian, the Roman Empire became more tranquil and prospered greatly. Republican forms of government finally disappeared during his reign; the monarchy became absolute. His economic measures were generally sound, but his attempt in 301 to fix prices and wages, during an economic crisis caused by speculation and bad crops, was a disastrous failure, causing an upheaval in food distribution and ruining many commercial enterprises. In 303 Diocletian, persuaded, it is said, by the false accusations of Galerius, ordered a general persecution of the Christians throughout the empire. He abdicated in 305, compelling Maximian to do the same, and retired to Salona in Dalmatia (near modern Split, Yugoslavia), where he spent his remaining years in the cultivation of his gardens. Diocletian and Maximian were succeeded as Augusti by Galerius and Constantius, who in turn appointed Severus and Maximinus Caesars.

Diodati (dē.ō.dä′tē), Charles. b. c1608; d. 1638. English physician and scholar of the classics, famous for being a close friend of Milton; son of Theodore Diodati. He became friend to Milton at St. Paul's School. He received an M.A. from Oxford (1628) and an M.A. from Cambridge (1629), and practiced medicine near Chester. To him Milton addressed his first and sixth Latin elegies and an Italian sonnet. His death while Milton was abroad was lamented in Epitaphium Damonis (1640), considered by many to be the greatest of Milton's Latin poems.

Diodati, Domenico. b. at Naples, Italy, 1736; d. there, 1801. Italian archaeologist. His works include De Christo graece loquente exercitatio (1767), and others.

Diodati, Giovanni. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, June 6, 1576; d. there, Oct. 3, 1649. Swiss Protestant theologian, professor of Hebrew and later of theology at Geneva. He translated (1607) the Bible into Italian, revised an earlier French translation of the Bible, and translated into French Paolo Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent.

Diodati, Theodore. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, c1574; d. at London, 1651. English physician; father of Charles Diodati. His family emigrated to England, where he was educated as a doctor; he had Prince Henry and Princess Elizabeth as patients; he took his M.D. (1615) at Leiden. Florio, in his dedication of his translation of Montaigne's Essays, acknowledged Diodati's aid.

Diodorus (dī.ō.dō′rus). [Surnamed Siculus, meaning "of Sicily."] b. at Agyrium, Sicily; fl. in the second half of the 1st century B.C. Greek historian, author of an unreliable history in 40 books entitled Historical Library. The first five (dealing with the legendary histories of Egypt, Assyria, Ethiopia, and Greece) and the 11th to 20th books (beginning with the Persian War and ending with the events following Alexander's death) are all that have survived.

Diogenes (dī.oj′ẹ.nēz). See also Romanus IV Diogenes.

Diogenes. b. at Sinope, in Asia Minor, c412 B.C.; d. at Corinth, 323 B.C. Greek Cynic philosopher, famous for his eccentricities. He emigrated to Athens in his youth, became the pupil of Antisthenes, and lived, according to Seneca, in a tub. While on a voyage from Athens to Aegina, he was captured by pirates who exposed him for sale on the slave market in Crete. When asked what business he understood, he replied, "How to command men," and requested to be sold to some one in need of a master. He was purchased by Xeniades, a wealthy citizen of Corinth, who restored him to liberty, and in whose house he passed his old age. At Corinth he was, according to tradition, visited by Alexander the Great. Alexander inquired whether he could oblige him in any way. "Yes," replied Diogenes, "stand from between me and the sun." Diogenes taught and believed in an extreme of asceticism as a means of attaining truth and good. As a result he was looked down upon and in turn rejected his contemporaries. The story of his search with a lighted lamp in broad daylight (as he said, "for an honest man"), true or not, vividly illustrates this.

Diogenes, Antonius. Author of the romance Dinias and Dercyllis.

Diogenes Laërtius (lā.ėr′shi.us). fl. probably in the early 3rd century A.D. Historian and biographer, author of lives of the Greek philosophers in 10 books, from the early schools to the Epicureans. His work is chiefly valued as containing information preserved nowhere else.

Diogenes of Apollonia (ap.ọ.lō′ni.ạ). b. at Apollonia, Crete; fl. in the 5th century B.C. Greek natural philosopher, a pupil of Anaximenes.

Diogo Cam (dyō′gō kouṅ). See Cão, Diogo.

Diola (dē.ō′lä). [Also, Dyola.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting W Gambia, and SW French Senegal, S of Bathurst. They are non-Mohammedan. They are not to be confused with the Diula of N Ivory Coast.

Dioliba (di.ol′i.bạ). See Niger River.

Diomede Islands (dī′ọ.mēd). Group of small islands in Bering Strait. The international date line and the international frontier between Alaska and the U.S.S.R. separate the two main islands.

Diomedes (dī.ọ.mē′dēz). In Greek legend, a king of Argos, and a leader of the Greek warriors at the siege of Troy. He was the son of Tydeus, who fell in the expedition against Thebes. He went with Sthenelus and Euryalus to Troy as the commander of a fleet of 80 ships carrying warriors from Argos, Tiryns, Hermione, Asine, Troezen, Eionae, Epidaurus, Aegina, and Mases. He was, next to Achilles, the most valiant of the Greeks before Troy, and fought against the most distinguished among the Trojans, including Hector and Aeneas. He and Odysseus carried off the Palladium, without which Troy must fall, in a night expedition.

Diomedes. In Greek legend, a Thracian king, son of Ares, and owner of the horses captured by Hercules as one of his labors. The horses were flesh-eaters and Hercules killed Diomedes and fed him to his own horses.

Diomedes. In Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida, a Grecian commander.

Diomedes. In Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, an attendant of Cleopatra.

Diomedes or Diomidis (THē.ô.mē′THēs), Alexander. b. at Athens, 1875; d. there, Nov. 11, 1950. Greek statesman. He studied law at the University of Athens, economics and political science at Berlin and Paris, and was a lecturer in administrative law at Athens. He was later governor of Attica-Boeotia (1906), a delegate to the Hague Conference (1907), and prefect of Athens (1909). Elected (1910) deputy from Spetsai, he was minister of finance (1911–15; 1922) and of foreign affairs (1918–19). In the period after World War I he was a cogovernor of the national bank of Greece (1918–23), and its governor (1923–28); he was governor of the bank of Greece from its founding in 1928 till 1931. After World War II he was deputy prime minister (1949), and prime minister (1949–50). He was author of The State Budget (1905), Towns and Villages (1911), and others.

Dion (dī′on). b. at Syracuse, c408 B.C.; assassinated there, 354 or 353 B.C. Syracusan philosopher, a disciple of Plato. He was an uncle of Dionysius the Younger and when Dion was in Greece studying with Plato and Dionysius confiscated his property and married his wife to someone else, Dion returned and expelled (356) his nephew from Syracuse. Dion became ruler of the city in 355, was overthrown in a short time, regained his position, and was killed by one of his companions.

Dion. Father of Euphrasia in Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster.

Dion. Sicilian noble in Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale.

Dion Cassius (dī′on kash′us, kash′i.us, kas′i.us). See Dio (or Dion) Cassius.

Dion Chrysostomus (kri.sos′tō.mus). [Also, Chrysostom.] b. at Prusa, in Bithynia, c50 A.D.; d. at Rome, c117 A.D. Greek rhetorician and philosopher. His 80 extant orations were edited in 1784.

Dione (dī.ō′nē). In very early Greek mythology, the consort of Zeus; his feminine counterpart as sky deity. In later mythological genealogy, she is a female Titan, daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, and mother by Zeus of Aphrodite.

Dione. The fourth satellite of Saturn, discovered by Jean Dominique Cassini in March, 1684.

Dione. Pastoral tragedy by John Gay, published in 1720.

Dionne (di.on′, -ōn′), Cécile, Yvonne, Annette, Émilie, and Marie. b. at Callander, Ontario, Canada, May 28, 1934—. Canadian quintuplets, prematurely born to Elzire, wife of Oliva Dionne; delivered by Dr. Alan Roy Dafoe. They are said to be the first set of quintuplets in medical history to have survived infancy.

Dionysia (dī.ọ.nis′i.ạ). Ancient Greek festivals in honor of Dionysus, a fertility god. Those held at Athens were the chief ones, and are usually considered to have been four in number: the Lesser or Rural Dionysia, the Lenaea, the Anthesteria, and the Greater or City Dionysia. It now seems proved, however, that the Lenaea and the Anthesteria were, in historic times at least, identical, and merely interchangeable names for the festival which centered about the Lenaeum, or sanctuary of Dionysus in the marshes, whose shrine was opened on only one day in the year. The date of this festival was from the 11th to the 13th of Anthesterion (about March 2–4). The Lesser Dionysia were wine-feasts of very early origin, a solstice celebration held throughout the Attic demes between the 9th and 11th of Poseideon (about Dec. 19–22), accompanied by drinking, boisterous processions, and dramatic performances, of which those at the Piraeus had the chief reputation. The Greater Dionysia were celebrated at Athens, probably from the 9th to the 13th of Elaphebolion (about March 28–April 2), a spring equinox observance.

Dionysius (dī.ō.nish'i.us, -nish'us). [Surnamed "the Elder."] b. c430 B.C.; d. at Syracuse, 367 B.C. Tyrant of Syracuse. He contrived in 405 to have himself appointed sole general of the forces of the republic in the war against Carthage, whereupon he surrounded himself with a strong bodyguard of mercenaries and usurped the government. He strengthened his position by marrying the daughter of the deceased party leader Hermocrates, and concluded peace with Carthage in 404. He declared war against Carthage in 398, and was besieged in 396 at Syracuse by the Carthaginians, who were compelled by pestilence and a successful sally of the Syracusans to raise the siege after an investment of 11 months. He concluded an advantageous peace in 392. He captured Rhegium in 387 and Croton in 379 (Reggio di Calabria and Crotone, in Italy), which gave him a commanding influence among the Italian Greeks. He fought two further wars with Carthage. His power and influence are said to have exceeded those of any other Greek before Alexander the Great. He encouraged letters, invited Plato to his court, and himself gained the chief prize at the Lenaea with a play entitled The Ransom of Hector. His reputation was, despite his literary and scholarly pretensions, one of a despot and an arbitrary ruler.

Dionysius. [Surnamed "the Younger."] b. c395 B.C.; d. probably at Corinth, after 343 B.C. Tyrant of Syracuse; a relative of Dion, and son of Dionysius the Elder whom he succeeded in 367. He was under the influence of Dion for several years, but then drove Dion from Syracuse and, despite Plato's desire to set up under Dionysius an ideal state, ruled with a profligate hand. He was expelled by Dion in 356, became tyrant of Locri, where he exhibited such cruelty that his wife and daughters were slaughtered when he left to take possession again of Syracuse in 346. He was finally expelled from Syracuse in 343 by Timoleon.

Dionysius. b. in Calabria (or perhaps Greece); d. Dec. 26, 268. Pope from 259 to 268. He was a man of charity and learning, reputedly the first Pope not to die a martyr. He condemned the Sabellian heresy and Subordinationism, and upheld the decision of the synod of Antioch deposing Paul of Samosate.

Dionysius Exiguus (eks.ig'ū.us). b. in Scythia; fl. in the 6th century A.D. Monk and scholar of the Western Church who, in his Cyclus paschalis, introduced the annunciation of the birth of Christ as the starting point of modern chronology, thus establishing the Christian or Dionysian era. He placed the birth of Christ from three to six years too late. His surname means "the Little" in Latin.

Dionysius of Alexandria, Saint. [Called Dionysius the Great.] b. at Alexandria, c190 or earlier; d. there, c264 or 265. Roman Catholic theologian. Converted from paganism in his youth, he studied under Origen and Heraclas and himself succeeded the latter as head of the catechetical school of Alexandria and then as bishop (247–248). He was arrested under the persecution of Decius, but escaped. He sided with Pope Cornelius against the antipope Novatian. During the persecution of Valerian he was banished to Kephro in the Merotis (257) but returned under Gallienus in 260. He wrote against the Chiliasts, who misinterpreted the Apocalypse, and on doctrinal subjects. Much of his writing was in the form of letters.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus (hal''i.kär.nas'us). b. at Halicarnassus, in Caria; d. at Rome c7 B.C. Greek rhetorician and historian, author of a history of Rome (Archaeologia). In this work, as the Scottish classicist Richard Jebb has pointed out, Dionysius "aimed at writing an Introduction to Polybius. He maintains, on fanciful grounds, that the Romans, who deserve to rule the world, are no "barbarians," but of Greek descent. We have Books I.-X., going down to 450 B.C., and fragments of Book XI. He did a better work in his rhetorical writings, and above all in his excellent essays on the Greek orators."

Dionysius Periegetes (per''i.ę.jē'tēz). fl. about the 4th century A.D. Author of a geographical poem, Periegesis, a geographical description of the earth.

Dionysius the Areopagite (ar.ē.op'a.jīt). fl. 1st century A.D. Athenian scholar, a member of the Areopagus, converted to Christianity by Saint Paul c50 A.D. He was long regarded as the author of several Greek treatises (The Celestial Hierarchy, The Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, Concerning the Names of God, Of Mystical Theology, Epistles and a Liturgy) which appeared in the 6th century and were probably written in the 5th. They have been (see the entry immediately following) the subject of much theological and critical discussion.

Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite. fl. c500 A.D. Author whose identity is unknown, long identified incorrectly with the convert of Saint Paul. The actual writer may have been a Syrian and lived not before the second half of the 5th century. He was well acquainted with neo-Platonist writings, with sacred Scripture and the writings of the Fathers up to Cyriaf of Alexandria. He seems to have deliberately created the impression of living in apostolic times by referring as an eye-witness to events of that period. His works were esteemed in the Middle Ages and were not challenged till the 15th century, after which both Catholic and Protestant scholars stood for and against their authenticity. In the latter half of the 19th century the higher criticism threw more light on the origin of the writings of the Pseudo-Areopagite and disproved his identification with the convert of Saint Paul.

Dionysius Thrax (thraks). b. at Alexandria, Egypt; fl. c100 B.C. Greek grammarian. He studied at Alexandria, taught there and at Rhodes and Rome, and wrote The Art of Grammar, the first written study of that subject in Greek. This work, which has come down to us, probably with later alterations and additions, is not exhaustive, but Dionysius's approach and method greatly influenced later grammarians. He is known also to have written commentaries on the works of ancient writers.

Dionysus (dī.ō.nī'sus). See also Bacchus.

Dionysus. In Greek mythology, a fertility god; often limited to his specific gift of the vine and called the god of wine. He was, according to the common tradition, the son of Zeus and Semele, the daughter of Cadmus of Thebes. Hera, jealous of the attention which Zeus bestowed on Semele, came to her in the guise of a friendly old woman and persuaded her to request him to approach her in the same majesty in which he approached his wife. Zeus appeared in thunder and lightning, with the result that Semele was burned to ashes and in her agony gave birth to Dionysus, whom Zeus rescued from the flames and sewed up in his thigh until he came to maturity. He was brought up by Ino and Athamas at Orchomenus, spent many years in wandering about the earth, introducing the cultivation of the vine, and eventually rose to Olympus. He was also called, both by the Greeks and the Romans, Bacchus, i.e., the riotous god, originally a surname of Dionysus. Dionysus was one of the principal cult gods of Greece. He was the central figure of the Orphic mysteries and appeared in a minor role in the Eleusinian mysteries. He was identified with Zagreus, murdered by the Titans, whose heart Zeus swallowed to bring forth the god again: an explanation of his epithet Dithyrambus, said to mean "twice-born." Violence was attendant on the Dionysian myth, despite his role as culture-bringer. He was attended by Bacchantes, Maenads, Bassarides, and other groups of frenzied women; lustful satyrs and drunken sileni also form part of his train. The cult had its phallic aspects as well. Dionysus is pictured as a mild god, but terrible in anger. Pentheus, king of Thebes, refused to permit the introduction of the Dionysian cult. He was induced to watch the secret rites of the women in Dionysus's cult, was seen by them, and was torn to bits by the frenzied devotees, who included his mother.

Dionysus in Doubt. Collection of poems by Edwin Arlington Robinson, published in 1925. It includes the blank-verse dialogue "Demos and Dionysus."

Dionyza (dī.ọ.nī'zą). In Shakespeare's Pericles, the wife of Cleon, governor of Tharsus. She attempts the murder of Marina, and with her husband is burned to death in revenge.

Diophantus (dī.ọ.fan'tus). fl. at Alexandria, c250 A.D. Greek mathematician, sometimes referred to, with al-Khowarizmi, as the "father of algebra." His most important work was the Arithmetica, a treatise in 13 books of which only the first six have survived. The Arithmetica is devoted largely to the solution of equations in integers, a subject which consequently has become known as "Diophantine analysis." An English edition of the extant works of Diophantus, edited by T. L. Heath, was published in 1885, with a second edition in 1910.

Dioscorides (dī.os.kor'i.dēz). Ancient name of Socotra.

Dioscorides, Pedacius or Pedanius. b. probably in Cilicia; fl. in the 1st or 2nd century A.D. Greek physician, author of a treatise on materia medica.

Dioscorus (dī.os'kō.rus). b. at Alexandria; fl. 6th century. Antipope from Sept. 22 to Oct. 14, 530. He was chosen by a dissident faction on the death of Saint Felix IV, who had foreseen the dissension and had designated the archdeacon Boniface to succeed him.

Dioscuri (dī.os.kū'rī). Castor and Pollux (Polydeuces), according to Greek legend the sons of Leda and Zeus, or of Leda and Tyndareus (whence their patronymic Tyndaridae), and brothers of Helen.

Dioscurus (dī.os.kū'rus). d. at Gangra, in Paphlagonia, 454. Bishop of Alexandria from 444 to 451. Having sided with the heretic Eutyches against Flavian, bishop of Constantinople, he convoked a synod at Ephesus in 449, which sustained the former and condemned the latter. This synod, over which he presided, was conducted with so much violence that it was stigmatized as the "Robber Synod." He was condemned and deposed by the Ecumenical Council of Chalcedon in 451.

Diósgyőr (dē'ōsh.dyėr). Town in NE Hungary, in a mountainous region W of Miskolc. It has large steel mills and other industries. 26,535 (1941).

Diospolis Magna (dī.os'pō.lis mag'na). See Thebes.

Diotima (dī.ō.tī'ma). Priestess of Mantinea, the reputed teacher of Socrates, mentioned in Plato's Symposium. She is probably fictitious.

Dipavali (dē.pä.vä'lē). See Divali.

Diphda (dif'da). A name often used for the star β Ceti. It is also called Deneb Kaitos.

Diphilus (dif'i.lus). b. at Sinope, in Asia Minor; fl. c300 B.C. One of the chief Athenian poets of the New Comedy, a contemporary of Menander. He is said to have written a hundred plays. Fragments of his works are extant.

Diplomacy. Play adapted by Bolton and Savile Rowe from Sardou's Dora, produced in 1878.

Dipoenus and Scyllis (dī.pē'nus; sil'is). fl. c580 B.C. Greek sculptors of the archaic period. They worked together and their names are always coupled. They executed sculptures in wood and ivory and also, it is thought, in marble. Little is really known about them, although Pliny the Elder mentions that they worked at Sicyon, and it is thought that the noted school of sculpture at that city owed its rise to them.

Dippel (dip'el), Johann Andreas. b. at Kassel, Germany, Nov. 30, 1866; d. 1932. German operatic tenor. He sang (1898–1908) with the Metropolitan Opera at New York, where he was joint manager (1908–10) with Gatti-Casazza. Later he was manager (1910–13) of the Chicago Opera; and subsequently organized a light opera company under his own direction.

Dippel, Johann Konrad. b. at Frankenstein, near Darmstadt, Germany, Aug. 10, 1673; d. at Berleburg, Prussia, April 25, 1734. German mystic and alchemist. He invented Dippel's animal oil, and discovered the pigment known as Prussian blue.

Dipper, Big (or Great). See under Ursa Major.

Dipper, Little. See under Ursa Minor.

Dipsodes (dip'sōdz). People in François Rabelais's Gargantua and Pantagruel. They were ruled by King Anarche, and many of them were giants. Pantagruel subdued them.

Dipylon Gate (dip'i.lon). Chief gateway of ancient Athens, traversing the walls on the NW side. As its name indicates, it was in fact a double gate, consisting of a strongly fortified rectangular court between an outer and an inner portal. Each portal also was double, having two doors, each 11⅓ ft. wide, separated by a central pier. The foundations of this gate, alone among those of ancient Athens, survive in great part, and from it toward the SW extends a beautiful stretch of the original wall of Themistocles, built under Peloponnesian menace after the Greek victories over the Persians in 480 and 479 B.C. This wall, in its contrasted construction of admirably fitted blocks and rough stones, confirms literary witness to the haste of work spurred on by emergency. The Dipylon is identical with the Sacred Gate, and among the roads diverging from it is the Sacred Way to Eleusis. It was long held that an opening in the wall immediately SW of the Dipylon was the Sacred Gate, but Dörpfeld found that this was a passage for the stream which he identified as the Eridanus.

Diquis (dē'kēs). River in S Costa Rica. It flows W to the Pacific Ocean.

Dirac (di.rak'), Paul Adrien Maurice. b. at Bristol, England, Aug. 8, 1902—. English mathematician and scientist, author of a series of important papers on quantum mechanics. He studied at Bristol University and received his Ph.D. degree at Cambridge University in 1926. In 1930 he was elected to the Royal Society and in 1932 he became Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge. In 1933 he shared with Schrödinger the Nobel prize for discoveries in atomic theory. He is the author of The Principles of Quantum Mechanics (1930).

Dirce (dėr'sē). In Greek mythology, the second wife of Lycus, put to death by Amphion and Zethus, sons of Antiope, in revenge for her ill treatment of their mother. She was bound to the horns of a bull and dragged to death. (Her execution is represented in the famous sculpture group The Farnese Bull.) Her body was thrown into a well on Mount Cithaeron thereafter known as the fountain of Dirce.

Dirceu (dēr.sā'ō), Marília de. See Marília de Dirceu.

Directory. Body of five who held the executive power in France from Oct. 27, 1795, to the coup d'état of 1799 (18th Brumaire, November 9). It succeeded the Convention according to the constitution of the year III (1795). One member retired every year and was succeeded by a new member elected by the Council of the Ancients on nominations submitted by the Council of Five Hundred. During the period of the Directory occurred the campaigns of Napoleon in Italy and Egypt, and other campaigns in Germany and elsewhere; French influence became powerful in Italy and Switzerland, the treaty of Campo Formio was concluded with Austria, and France was nearly embroiled in a war with the U.S. The personnel (originally Barras, Lazare Nicolas Carnot, La Réveillère-Lépeaux, Charles Louis Letourneur, and Rewbell) of the Directory was modified by a coup d'état, 18th Fructidor (Sept. 4), 1797, in which the republicans triumphed over the reactionaries, Carnot escaping, François de Barthélemy being sent off to America. Toward the close of the period the Directory became discredited by defeats in Italy, and was overthrown by Napoleon with the aid of Sieyès and Pierre Roger Ducos and succeeded by the Consulate.

Diredawa (dir.ę.dä'wą, dē''re.dą.wä'). [Also: Dire Dawa, Dire Daua.] City in E Africa, in Ethiopia, halfway on the railroad line between Addis Ababa and Djibouti. It is the second most important commercial city of the country and has cotton mills and railroad repair shops. It is also an important local distributing center for Harar province. It is ab. 35 mi. from Harar, another important commercial center. Pop. ab. 30,000.

Dirichlet (dē.rē.klā'), Peter Gustav Lejeune. b. at Düren, Prussia, Germany, Feb. 13, 1805; d. at Göttingen, Hanover, Germany, May 5, 1859. German mathematician, successor to Gauss as professor of mathematics at Göttingen in 1855. He is best known for his work in the theory of numbers.

Dirk Hatteraick (dėrk hat'ėr.āk). See Hatteraick, Dirk.

Dirr (dir), El. See El Dirr.

Dirschau (dēr'shou). German name of Tczew.

Dis (dis). In Roman mythology, a name of Pluto, and hence of the lower world.

Disabled American Veterans. Organization composed of honorably discharged veterans who were incapacitated while serving in the armed forces of the U.S. during World Wars I and II. Incorporated in 1921, it has been active in securing benefits for disabled ex-servicemen.

Disbrowe (diz'brō), John. See Desborough or Desborow or Disbrowe, John.

Disciples of Christ. [Also popularly known as Campbellites; one branch now denominated Churches of Christ.] Protestant religious body of American origin, founded in 1809. Thomas Campbell (1763–1854), an Irishman and a minister of the Seceders' wing of the Presbyterian Church, immigrated to western Pennsylvania in 1807, continuing his ministry. Finding that the division of Christians into many sects made the maintenance of religious spirit and the work of the church difficult on the frontier, he promoted common worship and coöperation across the lines of sectarian differences. For this he was reproved by his superiors, but with a strong conviction that he was right, Thomas Campbell, in association with his son Alexander Campbell (1788–1866), in 1809 founded the Christian Association of Washington, Pa., and issued a Declaration and Address, which remains a fundamental statement of the principles of this denomination. Thomas and Alexander Campbell had no purpose to set up still one more sectarian organization, but on the contrary took their stand on the thesis that the church of Christ inherently consists of all, throughout the world, who believe in Jesus Christ, obey His teachings as contained in the Holy Scriptures, and make their faith manifest in their lives. In 1811 an independent church was built at Brush Run, Pa., of which Alexander Campbell became minister. At that time other small groups had left the Presbyterian fold and called themselves simply Christians; there were also some congregations of dissident Methodists and Baptists. The Campbells and other independent Presbyterians adopted baptism by immersion, and became nominally Baptists, but in the 1830's differences of opinion and method became so marked that the Campbellites formed separate congregations and called themselves Disciples of Christ. Many of the Christians joined the Disciples; others organized the Christian Church, which in 1931 was merged with the Congregational Church. During the first decade of the 20th century some congregations withdrew from the Disciples and by 1906 had formed a new organization known as Churches of Christ. The Disciples of Christ have grown to be a numerous body in the U.S., and their missionaries have established congregations in many other lands.

Disco (dis'kō). See Disko.

Discobolus (dis.kob'ō.lus). Statue of a discus thrower by Myron, Greek sculptor of the 5th century B.C. The body is bent forward and turned toward the right as the heavy discus is swung back, wonderful art being shown in the choice and expression of the moment of repose when, the backward motion completed, the powerful cast forward is on the point of execution. It is known only through copies, one of which is in the Vatican at Rome.

Discordia (dis.kôr'di.ą). Latin name of Eris.

Discourager of Hesitancy, The. Short story (1885) by Francis Richard (Frank) Stockton, who specialized in his day in the "surprise ending," anticipating its later use by O. Henry. It is a sequel to The Lady or the Tiger? (1882), but is not as well known and failed to duplicate its sensational success.

Discours du docteur O'Grady (dēs.kör dü dok.tėr ō.grā.dē), Les. Fictional sketches (1922) by the French writer André Maurois (1885—), based on his experiences as a liaison officer with British troops in World War I.

Discourse der Mahlern (dēs.kör'zę dėr mä'lėrn). German-Swiss magazine edited by J. J. Bodmer and J. J. Breitinger. It appeared at Zurich from 1721 to 1723. In spite of its short span of life, the publication, fashioned on the model of Addison's Spectator, was instrumental in changing Swiss literary tastes by drawing attention to English literature, thought, and customs.

Discourse of English Poetrie, A. Prose critical essay (1586) by William Webbe. The subtitle of the work is Together with the Author's judgment touching the reformation of our English verse.

Discoveries. Volume of essays by William Butler Yeats, published in 1907.

Discoveries Made Upon Men and Matters. Prose work (1641) by Ben Jonson. It is not a systematic, organized work, but a collection of miscellaneous material on a variety of subjects. It is a result of Jonson's reading, scholarship, observation, and experience. Some of the pieces are as long as a Bacon essay, and some no longer than a sentence.

Discovery. Small ship which, under command of Captain George Waymouth, was sent out by the East India Company to "find the passage best to lye towards the parts or kingdom of Cataya or China, or the backe side of America." She sailed with the Godspeed from the Thames on May 2, 1602, intending to make the coast of Greenland; but the voyage had no important result, though Waymouth probably paved the way for Hudson's discovery. In April, 1610, the latter sailed in the Discovery, and entered the strait which bears his name in June. Early in August he entered Hudson Bay. He spent three months in exploring it, and in November the vessel was frozen in. In June of the following year she was released, and shortly thereafter a mutiny occurred. Hudson and others were set adrift, and were never again seen. The Discovery was taken home by the mutineers, and two years after this she was again sent to the Northwest with the Resolution under the command of Sir Thomas Button. He discovered Nelson's River, which he called Port Nelson, and several points. In 1615 the Discovery set out with William Baffin and Robert Bylot, and again in 1616. In both these voyages many important discoveries and explorations were made.

Discovery. One of the steam vessels of the British polar expedition (under Captain Sir George Nares) of 1875–76; the other was the Alert.

Discovery. Ship in which Captain Robert F. Scott made the antarctic expedition of 1901–04. Under the sponsorship of the British Admiralty, the Royal Society, and the Royal Geographical Society, the expedition sailed south from New Zealand, reaching the ice pack near the Antarctic Circle on Jan. 1, 1902. It touched at Victoria Land and Ross Island and, following the Ross Shelf Ice eastward, discovered Edward VII Peninsula. Returning to Ross Island, the Discovery remained frozen in, in McMurdo Sound, until February, 1904, and exploration was carried on by sledge parties, one of which went 380 mi. to the south.

Discovery Bluff. [Former name, Rendezvous Bluff.] Conspicuous headland in Antarctica, forming the W entrance to Avalanche Bay in Granite Harbor, Victoria Land, in ab. 77°00′ S., 162°41′ E. It was discovered by the Discovery expedition (1901–04), commanded by Captain Robert F. Scott, who referred to this feature as Rendezvous Bluff. It was renamed for the Discovery by Scott's second expedition (1910–13). Elevation, ab. 1,600 ft.

Discovery of the Great West, The. See LaSalle and the Discovery of the Great West.

Disentis (dē'zęn.tēs). [Also: Dissentis; Romansh, Mustèr.] Village in SE Switzerland, in the canton of Graubünden, situated on the Mittel Rhine River and the Lukmanier road. It is noted for its Benedictine abbey, founded in 720 by Saint Sigisbert of Ireland, and rebuilt in the 17th century, now a boys' school; hence the name Mustèr, from Latin Monasterium. 2,173 (1941).

Disgrazia (dēz.grä'tsyä), Monte della. Mountain peak in the Alps, on the border of Italy and the canton of Graubünden, Switzerland, NW of Sondrio. Elevation, ab. 12,050 ft.

Dishart (dish'ąrt), Gavin. Hero of The Little Minister (1891), a novel and play (1897) by James M. Barrie.

Disko (dis'kō). [Also, Disco.] Island belonging to Denmark, situated at the entrance of Davis Strait into Baffin Bay off the W coast of Greenland, in ab. lat. 69°30′ N. It contains the harbor and settlement of Godhavn. Area, ab. 3,200 sq. mi.

Disko Bay. [Also, Disco Bay.] Bay on the W coast of Greenland, SE of Disko island.

Dismal Swamp. Morass in SE Virginia and NE North Carolina. It extends from near Norfolk, Va., 20 to 30 mi. southward. It contains Drummond Lake, and is traversed by the Dismal Swamp canal, which connects Chesapeake Bay and Albemarle Sound. Part of the swamp has been reclaimed.

Dismas (diz'mąs). [Also: Demas, Desmas, Dysmas.] Legendary name of the penitent thief crucified with Christ.

Disney (diz'ni), Walt. [Full name, Walter Elias Disney.] b. at Chicago, Dec. 5, 1901—. American producer of animated pictures. He studied at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts, became a commercial artist, and in 1923 went to Hollywood and began making motion pictures by means of animated drawings, in which each drawing in a long series differs almost imperceptibly from the one before it, so that when they are photographed seriatim and thrown on the motion-picture screen in rapid succession, the drawn figures appear to be moving and acting. His series of pictures featuring Oswald, the Rabbit first won wide favor, after which his characters Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck made millions laugh throughout the world, became household words in every continent, and were widely used in advertising a great variety of products. Other world-famous Disney pictures were Three Little Pigs, Ferdinand the Bull, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, Pinocchio, and Fantasia.

Disowned, The. Novel by Edward Bulwer-Lytton, published in 1829.

Displaced Persons. [Called DPs.] Term used after World War II to describe the large masses of people driven from their homes in the Baltic states, Hungary, the Balkan countries, Poland, and later Czechoslovakia during the war. These persons, numbering millions, came under the protection of the United Nations Rehabilitation and Relief Administration (UNRRA) and the International Refugee Organization (IRO), mostly in camps in Germany, Austria, and Italy. Strenuous efforts have been made to resettle these people throughout the world (especially in the U.S., Australia, and South America) but in part they now almost certainly constitute permanent additions to the population of Western Europe. In 1950 refugees from East Germany were declared eligible as Displaced Persons by the U.S.

Disquisition on Government. Treatise written (1843–48) by John C. Calhoun, setting forth his views on the nature of government. A development of the ideas expounded by him in the South Carolina Exposition (1828), it emphasizes the concept of the concurrent majority as a means of protecting minority interests against majority rule. Granting the validity of the major premise, the logic is forceful and impeccable. The treatise is important as an expression of the rationale of a large and influential segment of the Southern ruling circle apprehensive over the expanding power of the North, and illuminates the sectional differences prevailing in the U.S. in the critical decades before the Civil War. The Disquisition appears in the first volume of Calhoun's Works (1851–55), edited by R. K. Crallé.

Disraeli (diz.rā'li), Benjamin. [Title, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield; nicknamed Dizzy; pseudonym, Runnymede.] b. at London, Dec. 21, 1804; d. there, April 19, 1881. English statesman and novelist; son of Isaac D'Israeli. He was descended from an aristocratic Sephardic family, but joined the Anglican Church in 1817. He was educated at home, and did not go to Oxford or Cambridge. He entered politics in 1832, and for the next three years made several unsuccessful attempts to gain a seat in Parliament. Finally, in 1837, he was elected Conservative member of Parliament for Maidstone. In 1839 he married Mary Ann Evans (Mrs. Wyndham Lewis), a widow 15 years his senior. She was "a perfect wife" for him, and her death, on Dec. 15, 1872, was a tragedy which made him feel that he "no longer had a home." His first speech in Parliament in 1837, was a complete failure, giving no indication of the great man that he was to become or the great career that was to be his. In 1841 he represented Shrewsbury, and from 1847 to 1876 he was a member of Parliament from Buckinghamshire. In 1847, also, he was made the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, a post that he held for a quarter of a century. He was three times Chancellor of the Exchequer, in 1853, 1857–58, and again in 1867, and he was twice Queen Victoria's prime minister, an office which since his childhood days he had hoped to hold. He became the queen's first minister in February, 1868, but resigned after the general election at the end of the year; he headed the government again from 1874 to 1880, resigning again after the Tory defeat in April, 1880. He was made Earl of Beaconsfield in 1876, the year in which he had Victoria proclaimed Empress of India, and he entered the House of Lords. He attacked Peel for his repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846, Gladstone's financial policy in 1860 and 1862, and his Irish and foreign policies during the period 1868–73. At the Congress of Berlin, which he forced on Russia in 1878, he accomplished his last great act of political genius, his "Peace with Honor," which brought his popularity to its highest point and won him the honor of being made a Knight of the Garter, on July 22, 1878. When he died, three years later, he was honored as no Englishman had been since Wellington. Had he wished it, he could have been buried in Westminster Abbey, but he was buried at Hughenden, in accordance with his expressed wishes, beside his wife. Victoria expressed her own feeling and that of the nation when she called "the death of my dear Lord Beaconsfield a national calamity." April 19, the day of his death, was, and is, called Primrose Day in his honor, because the primrose was his favorite flower, and a Conservative political organization, the Primrose League, was founded to carry on his principles and to keep his memory alive. As a novelist, Disraeli wrote Vivian Grey (1826), of autobiographical interest, The Young Duke (1831), Contarini Fleming (1832) and The Wondrous Tale of Alroy (1833), both of Jewish interest, revealing his pride in the Jewish people, a pride that he always maintained despite the fact that he had departed from the faith of his fathers. He also wrote Henrietta Temple, remembered for its Roman Catholic priest, Glastonbury, and Venetia (both 1837), Coningsby (1844), dealing with the English peasantry, Sybil (1845), which was instrumental in factory reform, and Tancred (1847). Two of his political novels, Lothair (1870) and Endymion (1880), which he wrote as the leader of "Young England," are regarded as inferior. Most of these works are in three volumes, except Contarini Fleming, which is in four, and Vivian Grey, in five. His nonfictional works, which now have only historical interest, are An Enquiry into Plans of American Mining Companies, Lawyers and Legislators, and The Present State of Mexico (both 1825), England and France (1832), Vindication of the English Constitution (1835), The Spirit of Whiggism (1836), and Lord George Bentinck (1852), a biography. His Home Letters, written in 1830–31, Correspondence, written 1852–53, Selected Speeches, in 2 volumes, and his Letters to Lady Bradford and to Lady Chesterfield, all published after his death, reveal facets of both his personal and his political lives.

D'Israeli (diz.rā'li) or Disraeli, Isaac. b. at Enfield, England, May, 1766; d. at Bradenham House, Buckinghamshire, England, Jan. 19, 1848. English miscellaneous writer; father of Benjamin Disraeli, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield. His chief works are Curiosities of Literature (6 vols., 1791–1834), a miscellaneous collection of anecdotes, quotations, and odd information, Essay on the Literary Character (1795), Miscellanies, or Literary Recreations (1796), Calamities of Authors (1812), Quarrels of Authors (1814), Commentary on the Life and Reign of King Charles I (1828–31), and Amenities of Literature (1841).

Diss (dis). Urban district and market town in E England, in Norfolk, situated on the river Waveney ab. 22 mi. N of Ipswich, ab. 95 mi. NE of London by rail. It was formerly a textile center. 3,505 (1951).

Dissentis (dis'ẹn.tēs). See Disentis.

Distaffina (dis.ta.fē'na). Beloved of Bombastes Furioso in Rhodes's burlesque opera of the latter name. She jilted Bombastes for the king.

Distaff's Day, Saint. January 7, so called because according to tradition on that day the women who have kept the Christmas festival till Twelfth Day (Jan. 6) return to their distaffs, or ordinary work. As a distaff is also called a rock, the day is sometimes called Rock Day.

Distant Lamp, The. Historical novel by Harold Begbie, published in 1912. It is a story of the Children's Crusade of 1212, and is laid in France, Egypt, and the Holy Land.

Distant Prospect of Eton College (ē'tọn), Ode on a. Poem by Thomas Gray, written in 1742 and published anonymously by Robert Dodsley in 1747.

Distich (dis'tik), Dick. Poet and satirist met in a madhouse by Sir Launcelot Greaves, in Tobias Smollett's novel of the latter name. Alexander Pope used this signature in The Guardian.

Distinguished Service Order. [Abbreviation, D.S.O.] British naval and military order of distinction, instituted on Sept. 6, 1886. It consists of the sovereign and those officers who have been mentioned in dispatches for meritorious or distinguished service in the field, or before the enemy, and upon whom the sovereign wishes, therefore, to confer honor. The badge of the order is a gold cross, enameled white, bearing upon the obverse the imperial crown within a wreath of laurel, and on the reverse the imperial cipher within a wreath of laurel. It is suspended by a red ribbon edged with blue. Foreign officers are, under certain conditions, eligible to honorary membership.

Distressed Mother, The. Tragedy by Ambrose Philips, produced in 1712. It was adapted from Racine's Andromaque.

Distresses, The. Play by Sir William D'Avenant, thought to have been the same as The Spanish Lovers, licensed in 1639.

District of Columbia (kō.lum'bi.ạ). [Sometimes called "the District."] Federal district of the U.S., coextensive with the national capital, Washington. It lies on the E bank of the Potomac River, between Maryland and Virginia.

Population, Area, and Political Status. The district is under the control of the federal government through three commissioners appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate. Residents of the district have no vote, although persons from other states residing in the district as government appointees do not relinquish their state voting privileges. Only city, Washington; area, 61 sq. mi. (69 sq. mi., including water); pop. 802,178 (1950), an increase of 21 percent over the figure for 1940 (the figure is estimated to have soared as high as 1,250,000 at the height of World War II). For census purposes the Bureau of the Census classes the district as a state, giving it 36th rank. Negroes make up ab. 27 percent of the population. There are few foreign-born residents.

History. The District of Columbia was formed of cessions made by Maryland in 1788 and Virginia in 1789, these lands comprising 100 sq. mi.; organized in 1790–91. The seat of the national government was removed there from Philadelphia on June 10, 1800, during the administration of John Adams. Washington was incorporated as a city in 1802. The Virginia portion (Alexandria, W of the Potomac) was retroceded in 1846. Territorial government was established in 1871, succeeded by a provisional government in 1874. The present form of government was established in 1878. Georgetown, a former town within the district, was annexed to Washington in 1878, thus making the district and Washington coextensive. The motto of the district is Justitia Omnibus, meaning "Justice to All." The official flower is the American Beauty rose. For further details see Washington, D.C.

Distrito Federal (dēs.trē'tō fā.dẹ.räl'). [English, Federal District.] District in E Brazil, administered by the national government. Capital, Rio de Janeiro; area, 452 sq. mi.; pop. 2,413,152 (1950).

Distrito Federal (dēs.trē'tō fā.тнā.räl'). [English, Federal District.] Civil division in S Mexico, consisting chiefly of Mexico City and its suburbs. Area, 573 sq. mi.; pop. 2,942,594 (1950).

Distrito Federal. [English, Federal District.] Civil division in N Venezuela, on the Caribbean coast: seat of the national government of Venezuela. Organized in 1936, it includes Caracas, La Guaira, and neighboring towns. Capital, Caracas; area, 745 sq. mi.; pop. 700,149 (1950).

Dithmarschen (dit'mär.shẹn). [Also: Ditmarsh; early medieval name, Nordalbingia.] Region and former independent territory in W Holstein, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, N Germany, situated between the Elbe and Eider rivers. A peasant republic in the Middle Ages, it was incorporated in Holstein in 1559, and annexed to Prussia in 1866.

Diti (dē'tē). In Hindu mythology, the name of a goddess without any distinct character. The name is formed by popular etymology from Aditi, as if that were A-diti ("not Diti"). In epic poetry Diti is a daughter of Daksha and wife of Kashyapa. The race of Daityas, or implacable enemies of the gods, are described as her progeny or descendants.

Ditmars (dit'märz), Raymond Lee. b. at Newark, N.J., June 20, 1876; d. 1942. American naturalist and author. He was graduated (1891) from Barnard Military Academy, served as assistant curator of entomology at the American Museum of Natural History, was a court reporter (1898–99) for the New York Times, became (1899) curator of reptiles at the New York Zoölogical Park, and in 1910 was named head of the park's department of mammals. He was the author of The Reptile Book (1907), Reptiles of the World (1909), Strange Animals I Have Known (1931), Thrills of a Naturalist's Quest (1932), Forest of Adventure (1933), Confessions of a Scientist (1934), The Book of Prehistoric Animals (1935), The Making of a Scientist (1937), and The Book of Insect Oddities (1938).

Ditmarsh (dit'märsh). See Dithmarschen.

Dittenberger (di'tẹn.ber.gẹr), Wilhelm. b. at Heidelberg, Germany, Aug. 31, 1840; d. at Halle, Germany, Dec. 29, 1906. German classical scholar. He served as professor (1874 et seq.) at the University of Halle, and was the author of Sylloge inscriptionum Graecarum (Collection of Greek Inscriptions, 1883), and Orientis Graeci inscriptiones selectae (Selected Inscriptions of the Greek East, 1903–05).

Dittersdorf (dit'ẹrs.dôrf), Karl Ditters von. [Original name, Karl Ditters.] b. at Vienna, Nov. 2, 1739; d. in Bohemia, Oct. 24, 1799. Austrian violinist and composer. He was Kapellmeister (choir leader) (1764–69) to the bishop of Grosswardein at Pressburg (Bratislava), and served (1769–95) as director of music to the prince bishop of Breslau. The best of his many operas, Hieronymus Knicker (1787) and Doktor und Apotheker (1786), long retained a place on the stage. His symphonies on Ovid's Metamorphoses (published in 1785) are remarkable specimens of early program music, and his string quartets foreshadow some of the developments of Haydn and Mozart.

Dittmann (dit'män), Wilhelm. b. at Eutin, Germany, Nov. 13, 1874—. German politician. Originally a cabinetmaker, he became a Social Democratic journalist, and served (1912–18, 1920–33) as a member of the Reichstag, as cofounder (1916) of the Independent Social Democratic Party, and as a member (November, 1918) of the council of the people's deputies. He organized strikes (1918) in the munitions factories, and was sentenced to five years' hard labor, but was released in November, 1918. He rejoined the Social Democrats in 1922, eventually to become vice-chairman of the party.

Ditton (dit'ọn), Humphrey. b. at Salisbury, England, May 29, 1675; d. Oct. 15, 1715. English mathematician. He wrote General Laws of Nature and Motion (1705), An Institution of Fluxions (1706), and others.

Ditzen (dit'sẹn), Rudolf. Original name of Fallada, Hans.

Diu (dē'ö). [Portuguese, Dio.] Portuguese colony in NW India, ab. 170 mi. NW of Bombay. The colony consists of the island of Diu (area, ab. 13½ sq. mi.), the village of Gogolá, on the mainland opposite (area, ab. 1 sq. mi.), and the minute territory of Simbor, on the coast ab. 15 mi. E of Diu. The Portuguese built a fort on the island in 1535–36 to protect their trade along the coast. It successfully withstood assaults by Indian armies in 1538 and 1546. The chief port and town of Diu grew up around the fort. In 1670 it was raided by Arabs from Muscat. The decline of Diu dates from the 18th century, when the English trade with India increased greatly. The chief industries now are fishing and salt production. Pop. of colony, 19,731 (1940).

Diula (dē.ö'lä). [Also, Dyoula.] Mande-speaking people of W Africa, scattered in small groups through N Ivory Coast. Their population is estimated at ab. 55,000 (by Y. Urvoy, Petit Atlas ethno-Demographique du Soudan, 1942). Culturally they are related to the Bambara, but the great majority have adopted Mohammedanism. They are not to be confused with the Diola of W Gambia and SW French Senegal.

Divali (dē.vä'lē) or Dipavali (dē.pä.vä'lē). Hindu festival in October-November. The term means a row of lamps; homes and shops are lavishly decorated with illuminations on this day. It is dedicated to Lakshmi, goddess of prosperity. Accounts of the origin of the festival varyingly attribute it to the celebration of the coronation of Rama, hero of the epic Ramayana, or to the rejoicing on the victory of the god Krishna over a demon.

Dive Bouteille (dēv bö.tey'), La. [Eng. trans., "The Divine Bottle."] Oracle to which Panurge in François Rabelais's Pantagruel makes a long journey in order to determine whether he shall marry. The oracle responds with one word, "Trinq." The Order of the Dive Bouteille was instituted in France in the 16th century by the most "illustrious drinkers" in honor of Rabelais, and in order to put in practice their "pantagruelism."

Diverting History of John Bull and Brother Jonathan, The. American prose satire (1812) aimed at the English, by James Kirke Paulding. It expresses the strong nationalistic feeling of the time, and derives from (although it is not a copy of) another anti-British satire, A Pretty Story (1774), by Francis Hopkinson.

Diverting History of John Gilpin, The. Humorous poem (1782) of the ballad type, by William Cowper, better known for his poems of melancholy and intense religious devotion. It is frequently called Gilpin's Ride, John Gilpin's Famous Ride, and by other inaccurate names, but its full and correct title, which is a good summary of the action, is The Diverting History of John Gilpin, Showing How He Went Further than He Intended and Came Safe Home Again.

Dives (dēv). [Full name, Dives-sur-Mer.] Town in NW France, in the department of Calvados, situated on the English Channel, W of Deauville. It is a medieval town, with a church dating from the 14th and 15th centuries, and a small port. The town, as well as the nearby fashionable seaside resort of Caubourg, suffered considerable damage in World War II. 5,300 (1946).

Dives (dī'vēz), Crassus. See Crassus, Marcus Licinius.

Divide, Continental. See Continental Divide.

Divide, The Great. See Great Divide, The.

Divina Commedia (dē.vē'nä kôm.mā'dyä). [Eng. title, The Divine Comedy; original Italian title, Commedia.] Celebrated epic poem by Dante, in three parts: Inferno (Hell), Purgatorio (Purgatory), and Paradiso (Paradise). It seems probable that the Inferno was begun after Dante's return from a pilgrimage to Rome in the jubilee year 1300, that the Purgatorio was finished about 1314, and that the composition of the Paradiso occupied the next five or six years of his life. The poem consists of 14,233 eleven-syllable lines arranged in tercets with the rhyming scheme known as terza rima, a b a, b c b, c d c, and so forth. After an introductory canto, the remaining 99 cantos are equally divided between the three parts. Read simply as a myth for the imagination, the poem describes a journey to the abodes of the dead. Thus in canto IV of the Inferno, Dante guided by Vergil visits the spirits of the heroes, heroines, and philosophers of antiquity who are enjoying a high but purely human happiness in the Noble Castle of Limbo. In the next canto he meets the sinners suffering for illicit love (Semiramis, Cleopatra, Paris, Tristram, and the rest) and sings the immortal tragedy of Paolo and Francesca. In canto X he meets the Epicurean aristocrat, Farinata degli Uberti, suffering for denying the immortality of the soul. Following a carefully worked out system of sins based on Aristotelian and Ciceronian ethics, with subdivisions borrowed from patristic and scholastic ideas and with elements taken from the Roman law and the "code of chivalry," the pilgrim sees the torments of every type of sinner until, at the center of the earth, in the mouths of the three heads of Satan, he finds Judas, the traitor to the Founder of a universal faith, and Brutus and Cassius who betrayed Caesar's efforts to establish a rule of universal law. What, however, gives passion to the poetic vision is the meaning which is addressed to the reader's mind. The great inverted cone of Dante's Hell is, allegorically, the human heart, and the poet's pilgrimage is a vision of human nature in the utmost depths of its possible degradations. In the same way, the seven-story mountain of Dante's Purgatorio is a vision of the human will struggling upwards in humanity's historical efforts to reach, by culture and civilization, the highest happiness and peace that men can hope for in a reign of light and law. So, too, the Paradiso can be enjoyed as a myth in which Dante meets the lovely Piccarda, the emperor Justinian, Saint Thomas Aquinas, and many others, but what accounts for the passionate poetry and inimitable music in this part is the poet's all-but-mystical vision of the efficacy of supernatural religion in elevating humanity to consummation in the perfect peace and possession of ultimate goodness, truth, and beauty. Thus the poem is about redemption in the widest sense. The six guides who lead "Dante" (that is "fallen" humanity) from the "dark wood" of sin, through the "divine forest" of innocence and upwards to "the light which in itself is true" and "the love which binds in a single volume the scattered leaves of all the universe," are Vergil, Cato, Statius, Matelda, Beatrice, and Bernard. Vergil is a symbol of reason in the form of Hellenic philosophy and Roman law (ordinatio rationis); Cato (a combination of Cato the Censor and Cato the Stoic, who preferred liberty with death to tyranny) is a symbol of reason in the form of conscience (dictamen rationis). Beatrice represents the role of grace, that is, of divine revelation and redemption and, hence, the ministry of the Church (Sacerdotium) as Vergil represents the authority of the State (Imperium). Bernard stands to Beatrice somewhat as Cato stands to Vergil. He is a symbol of mystical intuition or the religious light and force of holiness that come from direct communion with God. Statius (a combination of the historical figures of the pagan poet, author of the Thebaid and Achilleid, and of Statius, the converted rhetorician and teacher of Toulouse) stands for the Christian school (Studium) as the bella donna Matelda stands for the Christian home, for the role of love in the "age of innocence," for parental guidance in the period of childhood. The root idea of the whole poem is, as Dante tells us in a Latin letter to Can Grande, Can Francesco della Scala, that of human responsibility in the face of divine justice, homo justitiae obnoxius. The individual is responsible for his personality, for his inner freedom from the tyranny of ignorance and passion; the parent is responsible for the ministry of love, the teacher for the ministry of truth, the ruler for the ministry of justice, the priest for the ministry of grace, the saint for that holiness which is the nearest image we can know in history of the very life of God. Dante's sinners and saints suffer or rejoice because of the failure or fulfilment of their commission to reach and reveal some image of the divine, whether this be freedom, truth, goodness, beauty, justice, love, or holiness. It is this profound sense of the meaning of man and of history set to incomparable music and illumined and lifted up by "anagogic" intimations of the mystery of man's immortal destiny that has put the Commedia in the very forefront of the world's supreme works of art. The poem has been translated into all the great languages of the world, including Japanese and Arabic. Of the many translations into English by Cary, Longfellow, Norton, Fletcher, Wheeler, Binyon, Cummins, Lawrence White, and others, not one conveys the subtle and varied music of the original. The Carlyle-Wicksteed prose version, with its excellent introductions and notes to each canto may, however, serve as a good introduction to the poem. The poem was illustrated (1826–27) by William Blake, and his engravings have been hailed for their "breath-taking grandeur."

Divina Commedia. Six sonnets by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow written (1864–67) to accompany his translation Dante's work (3 vols., 1865–67).

Divine (di.vīn'), Father. b. c1882—. American religious cult founder. There is little reliable information concerning his origins and early years, but it is supposed that his original name was George Baker, that he was born near Savannah, Ga., and that he had long practice as a preacher in the South before beginning his career under the name of Major M. J. Divine in Northern cities. As he won a large and devoted following, he began to call himself Father Divine, and eventually intimated, or at least allowed his followers to assert, that he is God. The headquarters of his Peace Mission movement were for some years in the Harlem area of New York City, but were moved to Philadelphia to avoid the execution of judgments against the leader obtained in various legal actions brought by former "angels," as his followers are called. The Peace Mission movement acquired many properties, urban and rural, where "heavens" were established, as gathering places, residences, and refectories, and opened a number of restaurants serving the general public good meals at low prices. The movement is nonsectarian and interracial, though by far the greater number of its adherents are Negroes, and it has spread not only to many parts of the U.S. but even to other countries. It inculcates temperance, frugality, industry, and happiness, and its watchword is "Peace, it's wonderful!"

Divine Fire, The. Novel by May Sinclair, published in 1904. It tells the story of the beautiful Lucia Harden; Keith Rickman, a Cockney poet who has the "divine fire" in him; and Horace Jewdwine, an Oxford man. Keith is believed to be a fictional portrait of Ernest Dowson.

Divine Lady, The. Historical novel by Lily Adams Beck under the pseudonym E. Barrington, published in 1924. It is set in Naples and London in the years 1782–1803. The "divine lady" is Emma Lyon-Hart, Lady Hamilton (c1761–1815), mistress of Sir Charles Greville, of his uncle, Sir William Hamilton (who later married her), and of Lord Nelson (to whom she bore a daughter, Horatia).

Divine Tragedy, The. Poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, published in 1871. It was later included in Christus, a Mystery (3 vols., 1872).

Divine Vision, The. Book of poems by "Æ" (George William Russell), published in 1904.

Divinity School Address. Address delivered by Ralph Waldo Emerson at Harvard on July 15, 1838. The subject so upset clergymen that it was almost 30 years before Emerson was again invited to speak at Harvard.

Divino (dē.bē'nō), El. See Herrera, Fernando de.

Divino, El. See Morales, Luis de.

Divino (dē.vē'nō), Il. See Titian.

Divio (div'i.ō). A Latin name of Dijon.

Divion (dē.vyôṅ). Town in N France, in the department of Pas-de-Calais, situated ab. 8 mi. SW of Béthune. It is a lignite-coal-mining center. 10,200 (1946).

Divitia (di.vish'i.ạ). Latin name of Deutz.

Divitiacus (div.i.ti'ạ.kus). Aeduan noble, brother of Dumnorix. He was an ally of Rome, and a warm personal friend of Caesar. He was the guest of Cicero during a political visit to Rome. He rendered services to Caesar against Ariovistus and against the Belgae. Through his intercession Dumnorix's treason in 58 B.C. was pardoned by Caesar.

Divodurum (dī.vō.dūr'um) or Divodurum Mediomatricum (mē''di.ọ.mat'ri.kum). Ancient names of Metz.

Divoire (dē.vwȧr), Fernand. b. at Brussels, Belgium, March 10, 1883—. French critic and poet. He is the author of L'Amoureux (1912), Âmes (1918), and Itinéraire (1928). His works also include studies of occultism and modern dancing.

Divona (dī'vō.nạ, div'ọ.nạ). A Latin name of Cahors.

Diwala (di.wä'lạ). See Duala.

Diwangiri (dē.wän.gē'rē). See Dewangiri.

Diwaniyah (dē.wä.nē'yạ). Liwa (province) in C Iraq, ab. 100 mi. S of Baghdad, lying in the plain of the Euphrates River: a fertile farming area producing cotton, wheat, tobacco, and a large assortment of fruits. Capital, Diwaniyah; area, 5,765 sq. mi.; pop. 383,787 (1947).

Dix (diks), Beulah Marie. Maiden name of Flebbe, Beulah Marie.

Dix, Dorothea Lynde. b. at Hampden, Me., April 4, 1802; d. at Trenton, N.J., July 18, 1887. American reformer, educator, and writer, noted for her labors in behalf of the mentally ill, of the blind, and of deaf mutes, and for improvement of prisons. At 14 she opened a school at Worcester, Mass., and subsequently a day and boarding school in her grandmother's home at Boston. Natural science was important in the curriculum. Her text, Conversations on Common Things, went through 60 editions (1824–28). When ill health forced her to close her school in 1836 she visited England, where she met leading humanitarians of the day. She returned to the U.S. in 1837, a semi-invalid. In 1841 a visit to the East Cambridge jail, where degenerates, criminals, and the mentally ill were indiscriminately confined, was the beginning of a new career. An 18-months survey of jails and almshouses in Massachusetts inspired a stirring memorial and shocked the legislature into passing (1843) appropriate legislation. Despite delicate health, Miss Dix investigated state after state, appealing to legislatures, and enlisting public opinion in behalf of tax-supported institutions for the mentally ill. Her pamphlet Remarks on Prisons and Prison Discipline was long regarded as an authoritative manual on prison administration. In 1848 she sought but failed to secure from Congress a grant of half a million acres of the public domain to be used by states in providing for the mentally ill. In 1854 President Pierce vetoed a bill setting aside ten million acres for care of the mentally ill, and two and a half million acres for the blind, and the deaf and dumb. In Europe (1854–57) she succeeded in having the Royal Scotch Lunacy Commission set up by Queen Victoria, and in the reform by Pope Pius IX of hospitals in the Papal States. Her labors of 40 years resulted in 32 new hospitals in the U.S., several in Europe, and two in Japan. During the Civil War she was the first U.S. superintendent of nurses. Her published writings include Evening Hours (1825), Hymns for Children (1825), Meditations for Private Hours (1828), Garland of Flora (1829), American Tales for Young Persons (1832), and Letter to Convicts in the Western State Penitentiary of Pennsylvania (1848). See Dorothea Dix: Forgotten Samaritan, by Helen E. Marshall (1937).

Dix, Dorothy. See Gilmer, Elizabeth.

Dix, Fort. U.S. Army post in C New Jersey, ab. 18 mi. SE of Trenton. It was first established in World War I, and is one of the principal infantry-training centers in the NE U.S. Area, ab. 15 sq. mi.

Dix, John Adams. b. at Boscawen, N.H., July 24, 1798; d. at New York, April 21, 1879. American soldier and politician. Commissioned an ensign at the age of 14, he took part in the War of 1812; he remained in the army, eventually attaining the rank of major, studied law, and was admitted (1824) to the bar. He later resigned from the army and settled (1828) at Cooperstown, N.Y., where he practiced law and became active in politics. He was appointed (1830) adjutant general of New York State and served (1833–39) as its secretary of state, returning to his law practice in 1840 and founding a literary and scientific journal, the Northern Light (1841–43). Elected (1845) to the U.S. Senate, he filled an unexpired term, served as president (1854–57) of the Chicago and Rock Island and the Mississippi and Missouri railroads, and transferred his law practice to New York. He was (January–March, 1861) the last secretary of the treasury under Buchanan, and during his brief service strengthened the position of the department. Commissioned (1861) a major general, he served as commander of the Department of Maryland and of the Department of the East. He was (1866–69) U.S. minister to France and in 1872 was elected governor of New York. His writings include A Winter in Madeira; and a Summer in Spain and Florence (1850), Speeches and Occasional Addresses (2 vols., 1864), and translations of Dies Irae (1863) and Stabat Mater (1868).

Dix, John Alden. b. at Glens Falls, N.Y., Dec. 25, 1860; d. April 9, 1928. American politician. He was educated at Cornell University, was interested in several manufacturing enterprises, and was a director of the First National Bank at Albany. He was nominated for lieutenant governor in 1908, was chairman of the New York Democratic state committee in 1910, and was Democratic governor of New York, 1911 and 1912.

Dix, Morgan. b. at New York, Nov. 1, 1827; d. April 29, 1908. American Protestant Episcopal clergyman; son of John Adams Dix (1798–1879). He was associated for many years with Trinity Church, at New York, serving (1862–1908) as rector. He was the author of the Book of Hours (1866), written for the Sisterhood of Saint Mary, Harriet Starr Cannon (1896), a life of the sisterhood's first Mother Superior, Lectures on the Calling of a Christian Woman (1883), and several scholarly works, including An Exposition of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans, According to the Analogy of the Catholic Faith (1862), Memoirs of John Adams Dix (2 vols., 1883), and A History of the Parish of Trinity Church in the City of New York (4 vols., 1898–1906).

Dix, Mount. See Dix Mountain.

Dix, Otto. b. at Gera, Germany, 1891—. German painter, lithographer, and water-colorist. He participated in the Exposition of Contemporary German Painters at Paris in 1929. His work shows some influence of Toulouse-Lautrec. Portrait of a Woman (lithograph), Artists, Portrait of the Artist, and Portrait of a Man (water color), are among his better-known works.

Dix Ans Plus Tard, ou le Vicomte de Bragelonne (dē.zäṅ plü tär ō lẹ vē.kôṅt dẹ brȧzh.lon). [Eng. trans., "Ten Years After, or the Vicomte de Bragelonne"; shortened title, Le Vicomte de Bragelonne.] Novel by Alexandre Dumas père, published (1848–50) in 26 parts. It is the third part of the trilogy of which Les Trois Mousquetaires (The Three Musketeers) was the first, and Vingt ans après (Twenty Years After) the second. Ten Years After is the longest of the series, and parts of it have been published as separate novels: Louise de la Vallière and The Man in the Iron Mask.

Dixie (dik'si) or Dixie's Land. Said to have been originally a Negro name for New York or Manhattan Island, later applied to the South. The phrase originated in New York early in the 19th century; it developed into a song, or rather into many songs, the refrain usually containing the word "Dixie" or "Dixie's Land." In the South, Dixie is regarded as meaning the Southern states, the word being supposed to be derived from "Mason and Dixon's line," which formerly divided the free and slave states. It is said to have first come into use there when Texas joined the Union, and the Negroes sang of it as "Dixie."

Dixie. Song written in 1859 by Daniel D. Emmett, a minstrel-show performer. It achieved great popularity as a minstrel number and became the martial air of the Confederate forces during the Civil War.

Dixiecrats (dik'si.krats). See States Rights Democrats.

Dix Mountain. [Also, Mount Dix.] One of the principal summits of the Adirondacks, in N New York. 4,842 ft.

Dixmude or Dixmuide (dēks.müd). See Diksmuide.

Dixon (dik'sọn). City in N Illinois, county seat of Lee County, ab. 98 mi. W of Chicago: cement-manufacturing center. 11,523 (1950).

Dixon, George. d. c1800. English navigator. He served as a petty officer on the Resolution during Cook's last voyage. In 1785 he was appointed to the command of the Queen Charlotte in Nathaniel Portlock's exploring expedition along the NW coast of America. He was detached for the purpose of independent exploration, on May 14, 1787, and shortly after discovered the Queen Charlotte Islands. He published A Voyage round the World (1789).

Dixon, Henry Hall. [Pseudonyms: General Chassé, The Druid.] b. at Warwick Bridge, Cumberland, England, May 16, 1822; d. at Kensington, London, March 16, 1870. English novelist and writer on sport, agriculture, and law. Educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he wrote (1853 et seq.) articles on sport for the Daily News, Illustrated London News, Sporting Magazine, and others. He was the author of the novels Post and Paddock (1856), Silk and Scarlet (1859), and Scott and Sebright (1862), first published as serials in the Sporting Magazine; also wrote The Law of the Farm (1858; many editions), a legal treatise; The Breeding of Shorthorns (1865), and Field and Fern (1865) and Saddle and Sirloin (1870), dealing, respectively, with Scottish and English cattle.

Dixon, Richard Watson. b. at Islington, London, May 5, 1833; d. at Warkworth, Northumberland, Jan. 23, 1900. English poet, church historian, and friend of Burne-Jones and William Morris; son of James Dixon (1788–1871), a Wesleyan minister whose Life (1874) he wrote. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and Pembroke College, Oxford. Ordained in 1859, he was master (1863–68) and canon (1868–75) of Carlisle Cathedral, vicar at Cumberland (1875–83), and at Warkworth from 1883 until he died. He was the author of the prize-winning works The Close of the Tenth Century of the Christian Era (1857), an historical essay, St. John in Patmos (1863), a religious poem, and Christ's Company (1861); also of Historical Odes (1864), Mano (1883), a long poem, Odes and Eclogues (1884), Lyrical Poems (1887), The Story of Eudocia and Her Brothers (1888), and Last Poems (pub. 1905, edited by Mary Elizabeth Coleridge). His prose works are History of the Church of England From the Abolition of the Roman Jurisdiction (5 vols., 1878–1902, the last being published after his death), Seven Sermons (1888), A Sermon Preached on the Occasion of the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria (1897), and other religious works. Fallen Rain, The Feathers of the Willow, On Conflicting Claims, On Advancing Age, and The Spirit Wooed are among his best poems.

Dixon, Roland Burrage. b. at Worcester, Mass., Nov. 6, 1875; d. Dec. 19, 1934. American anthropologist. He was an assistant (1897–1901), instructor (1901–06), assistant professor (1906–15), and professor (1916 et seq.) of anthropology at Harvard University, and served (1918–19) on the American commission to negotiate peace at Paris. His written works include Oceanic Mythology (1916), Racial History of Man (1923), and The Building of Cultures (1928).

Dixon, Thomas. b. at Shelby, N.C., Jan. 11, 1864; d. at Raleigh, N.C., April 3, 1946. American Baptist clergyman (at New York, 1889–99) and novelist whose book The Clansman (1905) was adapted by D. W. Griffith into motion-picture form as The Birth of a Nation (1915). He was the author also of The Leopard's Spots (1902), The Southerner (1913), A Man of the People (1920), Flaming Sword (1939), and other novels; coauthor with Harry M. Daugherty of the Inside Story of the Harding Tragedy (1932).

Dixon, William Hepworth. b. at Newton-Heath, England, June 30, 1821; d. at London, Dec. 27, 1879. English author and journalist. He was editor (1853–69) of the Athenaeum, and author of New America (1867), Spiritual Wives (1868), Free Russia (1870), and Her Majesty's Tower (1869–71).

Dixon Entrance. Sea passage, W of British Columbia, which separates Prince of Wales Island, Alaska, from the Queen Charlotte Islands, British Columbia, Canada.

Dixonville (dik'sọn.vil). Former name of Columbiana.

Dixville Notch (diks'vil). Ravine in N New Hampshire, in Coos County, N of the White Mountains. It is traversed by a tributary of the Connecticut River.

Dixwell (diks'wel), John. b. 1608; d. at New Haven, Conn., March 18, 1689. English regicide, a refugee in America after the Restoration.

Diyala (dē.yä'la). Liwa (province) in E central Iraq, ab. 75 mi. NE of the city of Baghdad, bordering on Iran: a flat, dry area irrigated by the Tigris and its tributaries, producing wheat, tobacco, subsistence crops, sheep, and goats. Capital, Diyala; area, 6,154 sq. mi.; pop. 273,336 (1947).

Diyarbakir (dē.yär.bä.kēr'). [Also: Diarbekir, Diarbekr, Diyarbekir (-be.kēr'); Armenian, Dikranakerd.] Il (province or vilayet) in SE Turkey, in the valleys of the upper Tigris and upper Euphrates rivers. Important crops are cotton, wheat, barley, and tobacco; there are large chromium mines. Capital, Diyarbakir; area, 5,742 sq. mi.; pop. 294,618 (1950).

Diyarbakir. [Also: Diarbekir, Diarbekr, Diyarbekir, Kara Amid; Armenian, Dikranakerd; ancient name, Amida.] City in SE Turkey, the capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Diyarbakir, situated near the Tigris River, ab. 125 mi. W of Lake Van. An important trading center, served by three highways and one railway line, it has manufactures of red and yellow morocco and exports chromium. It was a Roman colony c230 A.D., was sacked by Tamerlane near the end of the 14th century, and in 1515 was captured by the Turks. 45,495 (1950).

Dizengoff (dē'zẹn.gôf), Meier. b. at Akimowzi, in Bessarabia, 1861; d. at Tel-Aviv, Palestine, 1936. Zionist leader and pioneer in Palestine. He studied at the University of Paris, and in 1905, on his second journey to Palestine, took part in pioneering a land settlement near Jaffa. A founder of the city of Tel-Aviv, whose foundation stone he laid in 1909, he was twice (1921–25, 1935–36) its mayor. He was a member (1926–27) of the Zionist Executive.

Dizful (dēz.fōl'). [Also, Desful.] Town in W Iran, in Khuzistan, situated ab. 77 mi. N of Ahwaz. It was a collecting center for materials to Russia during World War II. The ancient city of Susa was near here. Pop. ab. 35,000.

Dizzy (diz'i). Character in David Garrick's play The Male Coquette.

Dizzy. Nickname of Disraeli, Benjamin.

Djagatai (jag.a.tī'). See Jagataí.

Djago (jä'gō), Chandi. Most important sepulchral temple of the earliest phase of the great period (mid-13th century A.D.) of art in eastern Java. It was decorated with stone figures and reliefs. The statues, predominantly Buddhistic, reveal a recent wave of influences from southern India; they are now dispersed among many museums. The continuous relief bands are executed in an entirely different, probably indigenous, non-Indian style (Wayang style); they illustrate fables and events from the Hindu-Javanese epics.

Djailolo (jī.lō'lō). See Halmahera.

Djailolo Passage. [Also: Gilolo Passage, Jailolo Passage.] Sea passage separating the island of Halmahera, in Indonesia, from several smaller islands on the E. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Djambi (jäm'bē). See Jambi.

Djamileh (jä.mē.le′). Opera in one act by Georges Bizet, with a libretto by Louis Gallet, first performed at the Paris Opéra-Comique on May 22, 1872.

Djanelidze (jä.ne.lē′dze), Yustin Yulianovich. b. at Samtredy, in the Caucasus, Russia, Aug. 2, 1883—. Russian surgeon. He became (1950) chief surgeon of the Red Fleet. He introduced a method of reduction of shoulder dislocations, made studies on fusion of ankle joints, on restoration of the flexor digitorum, on dislocation of the hip joint, on congenital false articulation of the tibia, and on suture technique in fractures of the patella. He was the first in Russia to suture a wound of the heart (1912), experimented with surgery of the heart and blood vessels, recommended a special treatment of burns (1938), worked on traumatic injuries in the lungs and pleura, on diaphragmatic hernias, and on bronchopleural fistulas.

Djarai (jä.rī′). See Jarai.

Djawa-Barat (jä′vä.bä.rät′). See West Java.

Djawa-Tengah (jä′vä.teng.gä′). See Central Java.

Djawa-Timur (jä′vä.tē.mör′). See East Java.

Djebeïl (jů.bīl′). See Byblos.

Djebel (je.bel). See under Jebel.

Djemal Pasha (je.mäl′ pä.shä′), Ahmed. b. at Constantinople, May 1, 1861; assassinated at Tiflis, Russia, July 22, 1922. Turkish general and politician. He was governor general (1911) of Baghdad, a divisional commander during the Balkan War (1912 et seq.), and served as minister of public works and minister of marine. During World War I he commanded a Turkish army against the British; fleeing Turkey in 1918, he lived in Germany, Switzerland, Russia, and Afghanistan. Author of Memories of a Turkish Statesman, 1913–19 (1922).

Djenné (je.nā′). [Also: Jenné, Jinne.] Town in French Sudan, French West Africa, ab. 250 mi. SW of Tombouctou (Timbuktu), on the flood plain of the Niger River.

Djerba (jer′bą). [Also, Jerba; ancient name, Meninx.] Island off the N coast of Africa, in the Gulf of Gabès, belonging to Tunisia. It was the scene of a massacre of Christians by the Turks, on May 11, 1560; the bones were piled to form a pyramid 20 ft. high that was not pulled down until 1848.

Djerid (je.rēd′), Beled el. See Beled el Jerid.

Djerid Salt Lake. See under Beled el Jerid.

Djerma (jer′mä). [Also: Dyerma, Zerma.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting the Niger valley in SW French Niger territory, in the neighborhood of Niamey. Their language is a dialect of Songhai, the language of their NW neighbors further up the Niger. Their population is estimated at ab. 185,000 (by Y. Urvoy, Petit Atlas ethno-demographique du Soudan, 1942). All but ab. 10 percent have been Mohammedanized.

Djevriye (jev.rē.ye′), Ismet. Original name of Inönü, Ismet.

Djibouti (ji.bö′ti). [Also, Jibuti.] Main seaport and, since 1892, the seat of the government of French Somaliland, E Africa. It is situated on the S shore of the Gulf of Tadjoura, and is the terminus of the railway (496 mi.) to Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia. The port was created in 1888 and has been under continuous development by the French ever since that time. 10,421 (1944).

Djinnestan or Jinnestan (jin.ę.stän′). Land of the Djinns or Jinn in Persian and Oriental fairy lore.

Djof (jōf). See Jauf.

Djokjakarta (jōk.yą.kär′tą). See Jogjakarta.

Djollof (jol′ǫf). See Jolof.

Djollof or Djolof or Djoloff (jol′ǫf). See also Wolof.

Djonga (djŏng′gä). [Also, Badjonga.] Central subgroup of the Bantu-speaking Tonga people of S Mozambique, in SE Africa.

Djugashvili (jö.gą.shvē′li), Joseph Vissarionovich. See Stalin, Joseph Vissarionovich.

Długosz (dlō′gôsh), Jan. [Latin name, Johannes Longinus.] b. at Brzeznica, Poland, 1415; d. at Kraków, Poland, May 19, 1480. Polish churchman, diplomat, and historian. Ordained to the priesthood in 1440, he became thereafter tutor of the children of Casimir IV, king of Poland, and was subsequently that monarch's ambassador to the courts of Bohemia and of Hungary. He also represented the Polish hierarchy on a mission to Pope Eugenius II. In his late years he was archbishop of Lvov. He used his considerable wealth to build churches and monasteries and to help poor students. He wrote the lives of several saints, but his great literary monument is the Historia Polonia in 12 volumes. For the better carrying out of this work he learned several foreign languages, and went to original sources in the oldest available Polish, Ruthenian, Czech, Hungarian, and German records, so that it remains even today a valuable chronicle of eastern European history in general as well as a source of information concerning ancient Polish history.

Dmitri (dmē′trē, dę.mē′-). [Also, Demetrius.] d. 1591. Czarevich of Russia; son of Ivan the Terrible. At the death of Ivan in 1584, his son Feodor became czar, but the real power rested with his brother-in-law, the ambitious and unscrupulous Boris Godunov. Dmitri, another son of Ivan, obviously stood in the way of Godunov's plan to seize the throne, and accordingly in 1591 Dmitri disappeared. It is accepted that Godunov had him done to death, though by exactly what means is still not known. At the death of Feodor in 1598, Boris Godunov became czar, and was succeded in 1605 by his son Feodor. Meanwhile there appeared in Poland a man who claimed to be the supposedly assassinated Dmitri. It is generally accepted that he was an impostor, but he won a considerable following.

Dmitri. [Also, Demetrius I (of Russia).] Killed at Moscow, May 17, 1606. Usurper of the throne of Russia (1605–06), often called Pseudo-Demetrius. He seems to have been a Polish monk who claimed to be the czarevich Dmitri (killed by Boris Godunov c1591). He ruled for about one year.

Dmitri. [Also, Demetrius II (of Russia).] Murdered Dec. 11, 1610. Usurper of the throne of Russia (1607–10).

Dmitriev (dmē′trē.if, dę.mē′-), Ivan Ivanovich. b. in the government of Simbirsk, Russia, Sept. 20, 1760; d. at Moscow, Oct. 15, 1837. Russian poet and politician, minister of justice from 1810 to 1814. He was the author of a translation of La Fontaine's fables, and other works.

Dmitriev, Radko. See Dimitriev, Radko.

Dmitrievsk (dmē′trē.ifsk). Former name of Makeyevka.

Dmitri Rudin (dmē′trē rö′dyin). Chief character of the novel Rudin, by Ivan Turgenev. He represents one of the earliest appearances in Russian literature of the young idealist of "advanced" ideas who is at the same time utterly incapable of decisive action.

Dmitrov (dmē′trǫf, dę.mē′-). [Also, Dmitrof.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Moscow oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 43 mi. N of Moscow. It is an important textile town. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Dmitrovsk-Orlovski (dmē′trǫfsk.or.lôf′ski, dę.mē′-). [Former name, Dmitrovsk.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Kursk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 130 mi. N of Kharkov. There is some metal working in the town, but it is mainly a food-processing center. Pop. ab. 5,500.

Dmowski (dmôf′skē), Roman. b. 1864; d. 1939. Polish statesman, founder and leader of the National Democratic Party. A member of the Russian Parliament and chairman of its Polish group, he traveled to Switzerland during World War I to contact diplomatic agents of France and Great Britain. At Lausanne, where he founded (1917) the Polish Agency, a unique embassy of a country that had not yet regained its independence, he formed, with the support of Paderewski, a Polish National Committee (1918) to combat Pilsudski's pro-Austrian policy and solve the Polish question in coöperation with the nations of western Europe and the U.S. He reconciled his differences with Pilsudski after Poland became independent, became first Polish delegate to the peace conference, and signed the Treaty of Versailles. A member of the Polish parliament and minister of foreign affairs in 1920, he sought after Pilsudski's coup d'état to organize groups which opposed Pilsudski. Soon afterwards he retired from political life.

Dnepr (dnye′pėr). Russian name of the Dnieper.

Dneprodzerzhinsk (dnye″prǫ.dzer.zhinsk′). [Also: Dnieprodzerzhinsk; former name, Kamenskoye.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 80 mi. SW of Dnepropetrovsk. Blast furnaces, iron and steel manufacturing, and engineering works are important here. The Dneproges dam at Zaporozhe produces much of the power used. 147,829 (1939).

Dneproges (dnye.prǫ.ges′). [Former name, Dneprostroi (dnye.prǫ.stroi′).] Hydroelectric power station in SW

U.S.S.R., in E central Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, in the Dnieper River ab. 3 mi. NW of Zaporozhe. It is the largest existing hydroelectric plant (1951) in the U.S.S.R., with a capacity of ab. 558,000 kw., and was built in the period 1928–32 with the aid of American consulting engineers. In 1941 the dam was breached and the machinery destroyed in the Soviet retreat. Dneproges was reoccupied in 1943, and reconstruction began almost immediately. In 1947 power production began again. Power is supplied to numerous industries in the region, and the Dnieper is made navigable where there had been rapids before the dam was built. Length of dam, ab. 2,495 ft.; height, ab. 145 ft.

Dnepropetrovsk (dnye"prọ.pi.trôfsk'). [Also, Dniepropetrovsk.] Oblast (region) in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, centered ab. 100 mi. SW of Kharkov. The area is hilly and is a large manufacturing center. There are several iron and steel works in the oblast as well as chemical and food-processing plants; it is also a great cereal-producing region. The Dneproges dam produces hydroelectric power for the city. During World War II this land was greatly damaged by the German forces which overran it. Capital, Dnepropetovsk; area, 13,432 sq. mi.; pop. 2,495,000 (1933).

Dnepropetrovsk. [Also: Dniepropetrovsk; former name, Ekaterinoslav or Yekaterinoslav, also Ekaterinoslaff, and various other spellings.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, capital of the oblast (region) of Dnepropetrovsk, situated on the Dnieper River above the rapids. Iron ore and pig iron are made here. Machine construction and metal works, textiles, chemical works, and petroleum refining are also important. The Dneproges dam at Zaporozhe produces much of the power used here. 500,662 (1939).

Dnestr (dnyes'tėr). Russian name of the Dniester.

Dnieper (nē'pėr, dnye'pėr). [Russian, Dnepr; Ukrainian, Dnipro; Polish, Dniepr (dnye'pėr); ancient name, Borysthenes, later Danapris; Turkish, Uzi.] River of the U.S.S.R., after the Volga and Danube the largest in Europe. It rises in the Smolensk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, and flows into the Black Sea by the Dnieper estuary, E of Odessa. Its leading tributaries are the Desna, Soj, Pripet, and Berezina. Smolensk, Kiev, Cherkassy, Kremenchug, Dnepropetrovsk, Zaporozhe, Nikopol, and Kherson are on its banks. The Dneproges dam at Zaporozhe supplies power over a large area. Length, ab. 1,200 mi.; navigable from Dorogobuzh.

Dnieprodzerzhinsk (dnye"prọ.dzer.zhinsk'). See Dneprodzerzhinsk.

Dniepropetrovsk (dnye"prọ.pi.trôfsk'). See Dnepropetrovsk.

Dniester (nēs'tėr, dnyes'tėr). [Russian, Dnestr; Ukrainian, Dnister; Polish, Dniestr (dnye'stėr); Rumanian, Nistrul, Nistru; Turkish, Turla; ancient names, Tyras, Danastris.] River in the U.S.S.R., which forms the boundary between the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Moldavian Soviet Socialist Republic for ab. 150 mi. It rises in the Carpathian Mountains, and flows into the Black Sea ab. 30 mi. SW of Odessa. Formerly it was the boundary between Bessarabia (then in Rumania) and the U.S.S.R. Length, ab. 800 mi.

Dnipro (dnē'prō). Ukrainian name of the Dnieper.

Dnister (dnēs'ter). Ukrainian name of the Dniester.

Doab (dō.äb'). [Also, Duab; Eng. trans., "Two Rivers."] In India, a name given to a tract of country between two rivers. It is applied especially to the region between the Ganges and the Jumna, of great fertility, ab. 500 mi. in length.

Doak (dōk), William Nuckles. b. at Rural Retreat, Va., Dec. 12, 1882; d. Oct. 23, 1933. American labor leader and cabinet member. He was associated (1908 et seq.) with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen as general chairman (1908–16) of its units within the Norfolk and Western system, as vice-president (1916–28) and as national legislative representative (1916 et seq.). He served during World War I on the railway board of adjustment of the U.S. Railroad Administration. During the latter part of the administration of President Hoover he was U.S. secretary of labor. He was also editor and manager (1928 et seq.) of The Railroad Trainmen.

Doane (dōn), George Washington. b. at Trenton, N.J., May 27, 1799; d. at Burlington, N.J., April 27, 1859. American bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He published Songs by the Way (1824), and others.

Doane, William Croswell. b. at Boston, March 2, 1832; d. May 17, 1913. American Protestant Episcopal bishop; son of George Washington Doane. Ordained in 1856, he was consecrated bishop (1869) of the Albany diocese. He served as trustee and honorary chancellor of Hobart College and as regent and chancellor of the University of the State of New York. His works include a biography of his father, The Life and Writings of George Washington Doane, with a Memoir (4 vols., 1860–61), Rhymes from Time to Time (1901), and the hymn Ancient of Days.

Dobberan (dob'ẹ.rän). See Doberan.

Dobbie (dob'i), Sir William George Shedden. b. at Madras, India, July 12, 1879—. British army officer. General staff officer (1926–28) at the War Office; brigade commander (1928–32) in Egypt; general officer (1933–39) in command of Malaya; governor (1940–42) of Malta with the rank (1941 et seq.) of lieutenant general.

Dobbin (dob'in), James Cochran. b. at Fayetteville, N.C., Jan. 17, 1814; d. Aug. 4, 1857. American lawyer, secretary of the navy (1853–57). He reformed and enlarged the navy, inaugurating a new retirement system for officers, a merit system for promotion, a naval apprentice system, and provisions for better treatment and terms for seamen.

Dobbin, Major William. Modest young officer in Thackeray's novel Vanity Fair. He marries Amelia Sedley after the death of her first husband, George Osborne.

Dobbins (dob'inz), Humphrey. Rough but grateful servant in Colman's comedy The Poor Gentleman.

Dobbs (dobz), Arthur. b. at Castle Dobbs, County Antrim, Ireland, April 2, 1689; d. March 28, 1765. Irish colonial governor (1754–62) of North Carolina. Member (1727 et seq.) of the House of Commons of the Irish Parliament; engineer in chief and surveyor-general (1730 et seq.) of Ireland; co-purchaser (1745) of 400,000 acres of land in North Carolina; appointed (1754) governor of North Carolina.

Dobbs Ferry (dobz fer'i). Village in SE New York, in Westchester County, on the Hudson River ab. 20 mi. N of New York City. It is the site of "Children's Village," a school for problem children. Here in the old Livingston mansion in 1783, Washington, George Clinton, and Guy Carleton met to settle the precise terms under which England would remove her troops from American soil. 6,268 (1950).

Dobell (dō.bel'), Sydney Thompson. [Pseudonym, Sydney Yendys.] b. at Cranbrook, Kent, England, April 5, 1824; d. at Nailsworth, Gloucestershire, Aug. 22, 1874. English poet. He was a wine merchant at Cheltenham from 1848 until his death. His works (a complete edition of which appeared in 1875–76) include The Roman (1850), Balder (1854), and England in Time of War (1856).

Döbeln (dė'bẹln). Town in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Saxony, situated on the Mulde River, ab. 28 mi. W of Dresden. Before World War II it had metallurgical, machine, chocolate, and cigar factories and a sugar refinery. There are commercial and agricultural schools. The Church of Saint Nicholaş was erected between 1479 and 1485. The population is predominantly Protestant. 28,841 (1946).

Dobenek (dō'bẹ.nek), Johann. Original name of Cochlaeus, Johannes.

Doberan (dō'bẹ.rän). [Also, Dobberan.] Town in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Mecklenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Mecklenburg, situated near the Baltic Sea, ab. 9 mi. W of Rostock. A health resort, it has radioactive ferruginous thermal springs. Doberan was formerly known for its horse races. It has a former convent of Cistercian monks, containing tombs of the princes of Mecklenburg; the Gothic Church of Mary is a brick building dating from the 14th century. The population is predominantly Protestant. 10,957 (1946).

Döbereiner (dė'bẹ.rī.nėr), Johann Wolfgang. b. near Hof, Bavaria, Germany, Dec. 15, 1780; d. at Jena, Germany, March 24, 1849. German chemist. He was professor of chemistry, pharmacy, and technology at the University of Jena from 1810 until his death. He discovered that spongiform platinum has the property of igniting hydrogen. Author of Zur pneumatischen Chemie (1821–25), and others.

Dobie (dō′bi), James Frank. b. in Live Oak County, Texas, Sept. 26, 1888—. American writer and teacher, chiefly known as an authority on the folklore of the American Southwest. He has been head of the English department at Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, head of the English department (1925–47) at the University of Texas, and a visiting professor of American history (1943–44) at Cambridge, England. His books include A Vaquero of the Brush Country (1929), Coronado's Children (1931), Apache Gold and Yaqui Silver (1939), The Longhorns (1941), A Texan in England (1945), The Voice of the Coyote (1949), The Ben Billy Legend (1950), and The Mustangs (1952).

Döblin (dėb′lin), Alfred. b. at Stettin, Germany, Aug. 10, 1878—. German physician, novelist, and historian. He was on the staff of mental hospitals at Regensburg and Buch (near Berlin), and was a practicing physician at Berlin (1911 et seq.) until Hitler came into power. He became famous as a writer of novels and historical works attacking traditional ways of life and pointing to the need for social progress. He is the author of Gedächtnisstörungen bei der Korsakoff'schen Psychose (1905); among his best-known novels are Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun (1915), Wadzek's Kampf mit der Dampfturbine (1918), Berge, Meere und Giganten (1924), Alexanderplatz Berlin (1930), and Bürger und Soldaten (1941). His most famous work on a historical subject is Wallenstein (1920). He also wrote an epic poem, Manas (1927), and the essays Das Ich über der Natur (1927) and Wissen und Verändern (1931).

Dobneck (dob′nek), Johann. Original name of Cochlaeus, Johannes.

Doboobie (dō.bō′bi), Dr. Demetrius. See Alasco.

Dobrée (dō′brē), Bonamy. b. 1891—. English literary historian, an authority on Restoration drama; husband (married 1913) of Valentine Dobrée. He served with the Royal Air Force in France and Palestine (1914–18) and during World War II (1939–45). His professional career includes professorships of English at the Egyptian University (1926–29) at Cairo and at the University of Leeds (1936 et seq.). He is the author of Restoration Comedy (1924), Restoration Tragedy (1929), Giacomo Casanova (1933), and Modern Prose Style (1934); coauthor of The Victorians and After (1938).

Dobree (dō′brē), Peter Paul. b. on the island of Guernsey, Channel Islands, 1782; d. at Cambridge, England, Sept. 24, 1825. English Greek scholar. M.A. Cambridge (1807); aided in founding Valpy's Classical Journal (1810); served as professor of Greek at Cambridge (1823–25). Edited Porson's Aristophanica (1820) and his Photius lexicon (1822); his notes on Greek and Latin authors were published by Professor Scholefield in Adversaria (1831–33).

Dobrée (dō′brē), Valentine. [Full name, Gladys May Mabel Dobrée; maiden name, Brooke-Pechell.] b. 1894—. English author; daughter of Sir Augustus Alexander Brooke-Pechell (1857–1937), and wife (married 1913) of Bonamy Dobrée. Her works of fiction include Your Cuckoo Sings by Kind (1927), Emperor's Tigers (1929), and To Blush Unseen (1935).

Döbrentei (dė′bren.te.ē), Gábor. b. at Nagyszöllös, Hungary (now Vel'ký Sevluš, in the Ukraine), Dec. 1, 1786; d. near Budapest, March 28, 1851. Hungarian scholar and poet. He published Ancient Monuments of the Magyar Language (1838–46).

Dobrich or Dobric (dô′brich). See Tolbukhin, Bulgaria.

Dobrizhoffer (dō′brits.hof.ėr), Martin. b. at Graz, Styria, Austria, Sept. 7, 1717; d. at Vienna, July 17, 1791. Jesuit missionary and author. From 1749 until the expulsion of the Jesuits in 1767 he resided in Paraguay, and seven years of this period were passed among the savage Abipone Indians. After 1767 he resided at Vienna, where he published his Latin Historia de Abiponibus in 1784, a work of considerable ethnological value. A German edition appeared in the same year; there was also an English translation by Sara Coleridge, with the title An Account of the Abipones (3 vols., London, 1822).

Dobropolje (dô′brô.pô.lye), Battles of. [Also, Battles of Monastir-Doiran.] Offensive (September, 1918) of World War I, representing a combined effort by Italian, Serbian, British, French, and Greek troops. This offensive, while not of major proportions, forced Bulgaria to sue for an armistice. The British and Greek troops had little success in the mountain fortifications of Doiran, but the French and Serbian troops in the center were able to slash through and cause panic among the weary Bulgarian defenders. The height of battle occurred between Sept. 15 and Sept. 24, and the armistice came on Sept. 29.

Dobrovský (dô′brôf.skē), Josef. b. at Gyermet, near Győr (Raab), Hungary, Aug. 17, 1753; d. at Brno (Brünn), in Moravia, Jan. 6, 1829. Czech philologist, the founder of Slavic philology. He became a member of the order of Jesuits in 1772. His works include Geschichte der böhmischen Sprache und ältern Literatur (1792), Institutiones linguae slavicae dialecti veteris (1822), and Scriptores rerum bohemicarum (1783–84).

Dobruja (dō′brö.ją). [Also: Dobrudja; Rumanian, Dobrogea (dō′brō.jä); Bulgarian, Dobrudzha (dô′brö.jä).] Province in SE Rumania, bounded by Bulgaria on the S, the Black Sea on the E, the Danube River on the N and the Rumanian province of Muntenia on the W. Area, 8,979 sq. mi. In 1940 the region of Cadrilater, in the S part, was ceded to Bulgaria. Therefore the population decreased from 811,000 in 1930 to 503,217 in 1948.

Dobšiná (dôp′shē.nä). [Hungarian, Dobsina (dōp′shē.nô); German, Dobschau (dop′shou).] Town in Czechoslovakia, in E Slovakia, situated in the Carpathian Mountains SW of Spišska Nová Ves. It is noted for its ice caverns, which cover an area of 7,000 sq. meters. There is iron-ore mining and iron and wood manufactures. 3,957 (1947).

Dobson (dob′sọn), Austin. [Full name, Henry Austin Dobson.] b. at Plymouth, England, Jan. 18, 1840; d. at Ealing, London, Sept. 2, 1921. English poet, critic, essayist, and biographer. Son of a civil engineer, he was educated in French and English schools. Returning to England in 1856, he was until his retirement in 1901 a clerk in the Board of Trade. Beginning in 1904 he received a government pension of 250 pounds a year and devoted himself entirely to research. He was the author of The Civil Service Handbook of English Literature (1874), Four Frenchwomen (1890), Eighteenth Century Vignettes (1892; 2nd series, 1894; 3rd series, 1896), Miscellanies (1898), A Paladin of Philanthropy (1899), Side-Walk Studies (1902), Old Kensington Palace (1910), At Prior Park (1912), Rosalba's Journal (1915), and other collections of essays and papers; also wrote Hogarth (1879; final revision, 1907), Fielding (1883), Thomas Bewick and His Pupils (1884), Steele (1886), Goldsmith (1888), Horace Walpole (1890), Samuel Richardson (1902), and Fanny Burney (1903); Vignettes in Rhyme (1873), Proverbs in Porcelain (1877), Old-World Idylls (1883), At the Sign of the Lyre (1885), The Sun Dial (1890), The Ballad of Beau Brocade (1892), The Story of Rosina (1895), and Complete Poetical Works (1923). Among his poems are Farewell, Renown, Before Sedan, Rose-Leaves, Ballade of Prose and Rhyme, In After Days, The Sick Man and the Birds, and Prayer of the Swine to Circe. Dobson was one of the group (c1875) who introduced into English poetry such forms as the ballade, the rondel, the triolet, and the villanelle from French.

Dobson, Frank. b. at London, Nov. 18, 1887—. English modernist sculptor. At first he studied painting, but from 1913 on devoted himself to sculpture, and became a leader among the modernists. He became professor of sculpture at the Royal College of Art, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1942. His method consists essentially in eliminating naturalistic details to achieve massive form, with the use of distortion where it will serve his design. He has also, however, executed some much-admired (and more conventional) portrait busts. Examples of his work are to be seen at the Tate Gallery, London, and in public museums at Manchester, Leeds, and Glasgow.

Dobson, William. b. at London, 1610; d. at Oxford, 1646. English portrait and historical painter, a pupil and imitator of Van Dyck, whom he succeeded as painter to Charles I. He painted the portraits of Charles I, the Prince of Wales, Prince Rupert, and various courtiers.

Doce (dō'sē). River in E Brazil which flows into the Atlantic Ocean. Length, over 360 mi.; navigable for ab. 90 m i.

Docetism (dō.sē'tiz.ẹm). The earliest heresy to arise in the Christian church. Its propagators and participants were first called "Docetae" or "Illusionists" by Serapion, bishop of Antioch from 190 to 203, but it troubled the church from the earliest days. The gist of Docetism was that Jesus Christ only appeared to have taken human form, that his birth, life, sufferings, and death were illusory. It was an intrusion of Gnosticism into Christianity; Gnostics in considerable numbers joined the early Christian congregations, but with their fixation upon the concept of the complete emancipation of the spiritual from the material, they could not accept the doctrine that "the Word was made flesh." Docetism troubled the church greatly in its early centuries, and was only exorcised by the earnest efforts of numerous patristic writers and preachers.

Dochart (doch'ạrt). See under Tay.

Dock Junction. Unincorporated community in SE Georgia, in Glynn County, near Brunswick. 4,160 (1950).

Dockwra (dok'rạ) or Dockwray (dok'rā), William. d. Sept. 25, 1716. English merchant who played a chief part in establishing the penny postal system at London. This system had already been partly put into practice by Robert Murray, an upholsterer. Dockwra's contribution was to improve on it by setting up six large offices and a receiving house in each of the principal streets. Mails were collected hourly, and delivery was made four times daily in the suburbs and six to eight times in the principal business streets.

Doctor, The. Romance (7 vols., 1834) by Robert Southey. It was at first published anonymously, and he explicitly denied his authorship. In it he exhibits his vast store of learning in a rambling manner. The children's tale of The Three Bears first appeared here, invented by Southey from incidents in German and Norwegian folk tales.

Doctor Angelicus (an.jel'i.kus). See Aquinas, Saint Thomas.

Doctor Dodipoll (dod'i.pōl). Comedy (1600) the author of which is unknown. Dr. Dodipoll is a foolish, doddering creature.

Doctor Faustus (fôs'tus, fous'-). [Original full title (on the quarto edition of 1604), The Tragicall History of D. Faustus.] Tragedy in blank verse and prose by Christopher Marlowe. It was written, and probably first produced, in 1588, and published in 1604, although it was listed for publication as early as 1601. It is one of the first, if not the first, treatments in English of the old German Faust legend, of a man who enters into a bargain with the devil and sells his soul to him. Marlowe, it is presumed, knew, either in the original German, or in an English translation that appeared in 1588, a Faustbuch (Frankfort, 1587), translated as The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Dr. John Faustus, dealing with the magic deeds of a 16th-century German quack, Dr. Johann Faust. The play opens with a short summary of the plot, delivered by the Chorus (regarded and listed as a character), and then shows us Faustus, a great scholar who has mastered law, medicine, theology, and philosophy, in his study, alone, not satisfied with his vast knowledge but thirsting for more. In response to his request, made, of course, in Latin (that being the language of the devil and of evil spirits, whence Marcellus's cry in Hamlet, "speak to it, Horatio"), Mephistophilis appears. An agreement is reached and Faustus sells himself to the devil, who swears to serve him in all things for a period of 24 years, at the end of which period Faustus is to give him his soul. The period, although it seems long, at the time, to the young and eager Renaissance scholar, passes all too quickly and Faustus is called upon to meet the terms of the contract that he signed with his own blood. The play ends with his being dragged down, in horror and agony, to hell. He appeals in vain to God and Christ but the life he has led makes his prayers worthless. The tragedy contains many examples of what is known as Marlowe's "mighty line," the most famous one being his apostrophe to Helen:

> Was this the face that launched a thousand ships
> And burnt the topless towers of Ilium? (Scene 13)

The play ends with Faustus's agonized cries, "See, see where Christ's blood streams in the firmament! One drop would save my soul—half a drop," "My God! my God! look not so fierce on me!" and his final terrible, beautiful, pathetic, terrifyingly human cry, "I'll burn my books!"

Doctor Invincibilis (in.vin.sib'i.lis). See Ockham or Occam, William of.

Doctor Marigold (mar'i.gōld). Story by Charles Dickens, published in 1865 in a collection called Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions. Its narrator and chief character is Doctor Marigold himself, a wandering auctioneer (called, in England, a "Cheap Jack"), with whose life the story is chiefly concerned.

Doctor North and His Friends (nôrth). Novel by S. Weir Mitchell, published in 1900 as a sequel to Characteristics (1892).

Doctor of Alcantara (al.kan'tạ.rạ), The. Opera by Julius Eichberg, produced in 1862.

Doctor's Christmas Eve, The. Novel by James Lane Allen, published in 1910.

Doctor's Dilemma, The. Play (1906) by George Bernard Shaw, in which he satirizes doctors and the medical profession.

Doctor Serocold (ser'ọ.kōld). Novel by Helen Ashton, published in 1930.

Doctor Solemnis (sọ.lem'nis). See Henry of Ghent.

Doctor's Tale, The. See Physician's Tale, The.

Doctor Subtilis (sub.tī'lis). See Duns Scotus, John.

Doctor Universalis (ū"ni.vėr.sā'lis). See Alain de Lille; see also Albertus Magnus.

Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, The. Prose pamphlet (1643) by John Milton. It is the first of a series of four so-called divorce tracts. His first wife, Mary Powell, a Royalist, left him in 1642, a few weeks after their marriage, and did not return at the time agreed on, although she did so later. To what extent the pamphlets represent personal anger and to what extent abstract theory, are questions that have been widely discussed. The first edition was anonymous, but the second carried Milton's name. The pamphlet was dedicated to Parliament.

Dóczy or Dóczi (dō'tsē), Baron Louis (or Ludwig) von. b. at Odenburg, Hungary, 1845; d. 1919. Hungarian author and playwright. Beginning his career as a journalist, after 1867 he was for some years a government employee. During this period his comedy The Kiss (1871), which brought him the award of the Hungarian Academy, established his reputation as a playwright, which was sustained by later successful works. He published original work in prose and poetry, and translated into Hungarian the poetry of Schiller and Part I of Goethe's Faust.

Dod (dod), Charles Roger Phipps. b. in Ireland, May 8, 1793; d. Feb. 21, 1855. Compiler of the Parliamentary Companion (1832 et seq.).

Doda Betta (dō'dạ bet'ạ). See under Nilgiri Hills.

Dodd (dod), Frank Howard. b. at Bloomfield, N.J., April 12, 1844; d. Jan. 10, 1916. American publisher. He joined (1859) a publishing house which had been established by his father, and became its president in 1870. In that same year he became partner of Edward S. Mead and B. Van Wagenen in Dodd, Mead and Company, which included among its 19th-century successes such works as E. P. Roe's Barriers Burned Away, Ian Maclaren's Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894), and Paul Leicester Ford's Janice Meredith (1899). He was a founder of The Bookman, planned and published (1902–04) the original New International Encyclopaedia, and began (1907) the New International Yearbook as a supplement to the Encyclopaedia.

Dodd, James William. b. in London, c1740; d. 1796. English actor. He was a member of Garrick's company, and was especially successful as Sir Andrew Aguecheek and Abel Drugger.

Dodd, Lee Wilson. b. at Franklin, Pa., July 11, 1879; d. May 16, 1933. American playwright, novelist, and poet. His plays are The Return of Eve (1909), Speed (1911), His Majesty Bunker Bean (1915), Pals First (1917), and The Changelings (1923); his novels include The Book of Susan (1920), Lilia Chenoworth (1922), and The Girl Next Door (1923); his poems are collected in The Middle Miles (1915), and The Great Enlightenment (1928).

Dodd, William. b. at Bourne, Lincolnshire, England, May 29, 1729; d. June 27, 1777. English clergyman and author. He studied at Cambridge, was ordained deacon in 1751, and was appointed chaplain to the king in 1763. In 1777 he forged the name of Lord Chesterfield, his former pupil, to a bond for 4,200 pounds, and in spite of the efforts of Dr. Johnson and other influential persons was executed at London. He wrote Beauties of Shakespeare (1752) and Thoughts in Prison (1777).

Dodd, William Edward. b. at Clayton, N.C., Oct. 21, 1869; d. at Round Hill, Va., Feb. 9, 1940. American historian and diplomat. He was a professor (1900–08) of history at Randolph-Macon College, and professor (1908–33) of American history at the University of Chicago. Observations made during his ambassadorship (1933–37) to Germany were published as Ambassador Dodd's Diary (1941). His other works include Jefferson's Rückkehr zur Politik (1796) (1900), Life of Nathaniel Macon (1903), Life of Jefferson Davis (1907), Statesmen of the Old South (1911), Expansion and Conflict (1915), Woodrow Wilson and His Work (1920), and Lincoln or Lee (1928); coeditor with Ray Stannard Baker of The Public Papers of Woodrow Wilson (1924–26).

Doddridge (dod'rij), Philip. b. at London, June 26, 1702; d. at Lisbon, Oct. 26, 1751. English dissenting clergyman. He was pastor of an Independent congregation at Northampton from 1729 until his death. He is known chiefly as the author of Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul (1745), and The Family Expositor (6 vols., 1739–56), and for his hymns.

Dodds (dodz), Alfred Amédée. b. at St.-Louis, Senegal, Feb. 6, 1842; d. at Paris, July 18, 1922. French colonial officer, best known for the so-called model campaign (1892) in Dahomey. He escaped twice from captivity and internment during the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71), saw duty in Senegal (1871–83, 1887–91) and Indochina (1883–87), and was commander in chief (1903–07) of all French colonial troops.

Dodds, Harold Willis. b. at Utica, Pa., June 28, 1889—. American political scientist, president (1933 et seq.) of Princeton University. He has been editor (1920–33) of National Municipal Review, an electoral adviser to the governments of Nicaragua (1922–24, 1928) and Cuba (1935), and professor of political science (1927 et seq.) at Princeton. He was chairman (1943) of the American delegation at the Anglo-American refugee conference in Bermuda. In 1951 he became chairman of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. His written works include Out of This Nettle . . . Danger (1943).

Dodecanese (dō.dek.ạ.nēz', -nēs'). [Greek, Dodekanesos (ᴛʜô.ᴛʜe.kä'nē.sôs), meaning "Twelve Islands."] Group of Greek islands in the SE part of the Aegean Sea near the SW coast of Turkey, including the nomoi (departments) of Rhodes, Kalymnos, Karpathos, and Kos. There are 12 main islands (Astypalaia, Khalke, Kalymnos, Karpathos, Kasos, Kos, Leros, Nisyros, Patmos, Rhodes, Syme, and Telos) and many small ones. The seat of administration is at Rhodes. The islands were part of the Turkish Empire from the 16th century until 1912, when they were occupied by Italy in the war with Turkey. By the treaty of Sèvres (1922) they were awarded to Italy, which held them until the German occupation in World War II. The peace treaty of 1947 awarded the islands to Greece, their population being predominantly Greek. Area, 1,035 sq. mi.; pop. 121,074 (1951).

Döderlein (dė'dėr.līn), Albert. b. at Augsburg, Germany, July 5, 1860; d. at Erlangen, Germany, Dec. 10, 1941. German obstetrician. He was assistant (1884–93) to E. Zweifel at Erlangen and Leipzig, became (1887) Privatdocent of gynecology and obstetrics at the University of Leipzig, was named professor (1893) and full professor (1897) at Groningen, and became professor at Tübingen (1897) and at the University of Munich (1907). He conducted investigations in the pathogenesis of puerperal fever (1887), wrote a study of vaginal secretion in relation to puerperal fever (1892), described a bacillus that bears his name, wrote on asepsis during delivery, recommending gloves (Döderlein's gloves), and was an early advocate of the radiative treatment of uterine cancer.

Döderlein, Ludwig. b. at Jena, Germany, Dec. 19, 1791; d. at Erlangen, Germany, Nov. 9, 1863. German classical philologist, professor at Erlangen (1819 et seq.). His works include Lateinische Synonymen und Etymologien (1826–38), Homerisches Glossarium (1850–58), and editions of Tacitus, Horace, and the Iliad.

Dodge (doj), Augustus Caesar. b. at Ste. Genevieve, Mo., Jan. 2, 1812; d. Nov. 20, 1883. American diplomat and U.S. senator; son of Henry Dodge (1782–1867). Delegate (1840–46) for Iowa Territory in Congress; first U.S. senator (1848–55) from Iowa; supported the Compromise of 1850, the Kansas-Nebraska bill, and the Fugitive-Slave law, condemning abolitionism; U.S. minister (1855–59) to Spain.

Dodge, Bayard. b. at New York, Feb. 5, 1888—. American educator. He has been a faculty member (1913 et seq.) and president (1923 et seq.) of the American University at Beirut, Syria, and director (1920–21) of Near East Relief in Syria and Palestine.

Dodge, Charles Wright. b. at Cape Vincent, N.Y., Jan. 15, 1863; d. 1934. American naturalist, professor of biology at the University of Rochester from 1892. He was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1886. He published an Introduction to Elementary Practical Biology (1894), and others.

Dodge, David Low. b. at Brooklyn, Conn., June 14, 1774; d. April 23, 1852. American pacifist and merchant. Established (1802) stores at Hartford and Litchfield, Conn.; partner (1807) in jobbing business with his wife's cousins, the Higginsons of Boston; manager (1813) of a Norwich, Conn. cotton mill. A philanthropist and pacifist, he propagandized widely against war (he founded (1815) and became first president of the New York Peace Society, which merged (1828) with the American Peace Society).

Dodge, Grace Hoadley. b. at New York, May 21, 1856; d. there, Dec. 27, 1914. American social worker and philanthropist, founder (1907) of the New York Travelers Aid Society. Founder of a working girls' club (nucleus for the Associations of Working Girls' Societies); member of the New York City Board of Education (1886); vice-president of the Industrial Education Association (founded 1884), which developed into the New York College for the Training of Teachers (1889) and then into Teachers College, Columbia University, with Grace Dodge as acting treasurer. She founded the American Social Hygiene Association, and worked with Young Women's Christian Association, serving (1906) as president of its national board.

Dodge, Grenville Mellen. b. at Danvers, Mass., April 12, 1831; d. Jan. 3, 1916. American soldier and civil engineer. He served through the Civil War, rising to the rank of major general of volunteers in 1864, and resigned from the army in 1866. He was a member of Congress from Iowa (1867–69), and was chief engineer of the Union Pacific Railroad (1866–70) and of the Texas and Pacific Railway (1871–81). In 1898 he was appointed president of the commission for investigating the management of the war with Spain.

Dodge, Henry. b. at Vincennes, Ind., Oct. 12, 1782; d. June 19, 1867. American soldier, governor and U.S. senator (1848–57) from Wisconsin.

Dodge, Joseph Morrell. b. at Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8, 1890—. American banker and administrator. After holding several positions as banking and financial examiner for the state of Michigan, he became (1932) a bank executive and subsequently a director of a number of business organizations. During World War II he was head of the army's price adjustment board, and later directed the Army Service Forces renegotiation division. With the establishment of the military government in Europe, he became its financial adviser, represented the U.S., with the rank of minister, on the Austrian Treaty Commission (1947), was a member of the financial advisory committee of the Economic Coöperation Administration, and in 1949 went to Japan as special adviser to General Douglas MacArthur on Japanese budgetary problems, then in a rapidly deteriorating state. In 1953, after the election of Dwight Eisenhower as President of the United States, Dodge was appointed to confer with the outgoing Truman administration on financial matters. He became (1953) budget director for the new administration.

Dodge, Mary Abigail. [Pseudonym, Gail Hamilton.] b. at Hamilton, Mass., March 31, 1833; d. at Wenham, Mass., Aug. 17, 1896. American writer. Her works include Country Living and Country Thinking (1862), Gala Days (1863), New Atmosphere (1864), Woman's Wrongs (1868), Twelve Miles from a Lemon (1873), and Our Common School System (1880).

Dodge, Mary Elizabeth. [Maiden name, Mapes.] b. at New York, Jan. 26, 1831; d. at Onteora Park, in the Catskill Mountains, N.Y., Aug. 21, 1905. American juvenile author and editor. She was educated by private tutors and by her father, James Jay Mapes, a scientist. In 1851 she married William Dodge, a lawyer, who died seven years later, leaving her with two boys to support. She thereupon did the only thing she knew and liked: she took up writing. She began with a series of sketches, Irvington Stories (1864), and she wrote for the Atlantic Monthly, Harper's Magazine, and the Century. From 1870 to 1873 she was associate editor of Home and Hearth. In the latter year a magazine for young people was founded, St. Nicholas; she was made its first editor and she occupied that position with marked success until her death a generation later. Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, and Kipling (who had been a reader when he was a boy) contributed to its pages. The juvenile classic, Mrs. Burnett's Little Lord Fauntleroy, was serialized in it before appearing in book form. In 1865 she published her most successful work, Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates, which is still read with pleasure by many children and some grown-ups. Others of her works are A Few Friends and How They Amused Themselves (1869), Theophilus and Others (1876), Donald and Dorothy (1883), Baby World (1884), and The Land of Pluck (1894). Rhymes and Jingles (1874), Along the Way (1879), and When Life Is Young (1894) are volumes of verse. As girl and woman, she counted among her friends Bryant, Greeley, Mark Twain, Brander Matthews, John Burroughs, and Maude Adams.

Dodge, Raymond. b. at Woburn, Mass., Feb. 20, 1871; d. at Tryon, N.C., April 8, 1942. American psychologist, notable for his discovery of the fundamental law of visual perception in reading. He was a graduate (1893) of Williams and professor (1924–36) at Yale, and one of the original directors of the Yale Institute of Human Relations. He is known also for his researches on inhibition modification of reflex response.

Dodge, Steadfast. American newspaperman in Homeward Bound (1838) and Home as Found (1838) by James Fenimore Cooper. He typifies the vulgarity which Cooper resented in his countrymen.

Dodge, Theodore Ayrault. b. at Pittsfield, Mass., May 28, 1842; d. Oct. 25, 1909. American soldier and author. He served through the Civil War and in the war department, rising to the rank of brevet colonel. He retired in 1870. Among his works are Chancellorsville (1881), Civil War (1883), A Chat in the Saddle (1886), Alexander (1890), Hannibal (1891), Caesar (1892), Riders of Many Lands (1894), Gustavus Adolphus (1890–95), and Napoleon (1904–07).

Dodge, William De Leftwich. b. at Liberty, Va., March 9, 1867; d. March 25, 1935. American mural painter. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts at Paris, and also for a time at Munich. After returning to the U.S. he taught for many years at Cooper Union and at the Art Students League, both at New York. His first notable work was the decoration (1893) of the dome of the Administration Building of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago. He is also known for his mural panels in the Library of Congress at Washington, the Hall of Records at New York, the Academy of Music at Brooklyn, the city hall of Buffalo, N.Y., and the state capitol at Albany, N.Y. He also executed murals for the Café de l'Opéra and for the Folies Bergère at Paris.

Dodge, William Earl. b. at Hartford, Conn., Sept. 4, 1805; d. at New York, Feb. 9, 1883. American merchant and philanthropist, an organizer of the Y.M.C.A. He was noted also for his efforts on behalf of the freedmen, temperance, and foreign missions.

Dodge City. City in SW Kansas, county seat of Ford County, on the Arkansas River: a trading center of the Kansas wheat belt. At one time, as the "Cowboy Capital of the Southwest," it was a shipping point for buffalo hides, and for cattle driven north from Texas (it was then the westernmost terminus of the U.S. railroad network). 11,262 (1950).

"Dodger, Artful." See under Dawkins, John.

Dodgeville (doj'vil). City in SW Wisconsin, county seat of Iowa County, ab. 40 mi. SW of Madison. Settled in 1827, it was named for Henry Dodge (1782–1867), who later was governor of the Wisconsin Territory. It was a lead-mining center until the mid-19th century, and is now marketing and shipping center for a dairying, farming, and stock-raising region. 2,532 (1950).

Dodgson (doj'sọn), Charles Lutwidge. [Pseudonym, Lewis Carroll.] b. at Daresbury, Cheshire, England, Jan. 27, 1832; d. at Guildford, Surrey, Jan. 14, 1898. English mathematician, now best remembered as the author of the two immortal Alice books. He was educated at home by his father, a clergyman, at Rugby, and at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he later taught mathematics. He became a "member of the College" (as English students are called), and he remained that for almost half a century until his death. From 1855 to 1881 he was at Christ Church as a lecturer, a position corresponding to a professor in an American college. He wrote Euclid and His Modern Rivals (1879), Curiosa Mathematica (1888), and other technical works in his field, but he lives by his authorship of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865), which was first called Alice's Adventures Underground and Alice's Hours in Elfland, and its sequel, Through the Looking-Glass and What Alice Found There (1871). His other juvenile books are The Hunting of the Snark (1876), A Tangled Tale (1885), and Sylvie and Bruno (1889). He wrote the works that made him famous under the name of "Lewis Carroll" and he made the name famous. (Neither the works nor the name can be said at first to have claimed Dodgson's serious attention. He thought of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland as no more than a fanciful tale contrived for the entertainment of a little girl named Alice Liddell, the daughter of Henry George Liddell, a leading 19th-century classicist and one of Dodgson's friends. It almost certainly never entered Dodgson's head that his name would not be remembered primarily for his achievements as a mathematician.) In 1867 he broke the routine of his Oxford life by visiting Russia, and A Russian Journal, a diary, was the result.

Dodinga (dō.ding'gä). See Didinga.

Dodington (dod'ing.tọn), George Bubb. Melcombe. [Title, Baron Melcombe.] b. in Dorsetshire, England, 1691; d. at Hammersmith (now part of London), July 28, 1762. English politician. He was created Baron Melcombe of Melcombe Regis, Dorsetshire, in 1761. He patronized men of letters, and was complimented by Edward Young, Henry Fielding, and Richard Bentley. He left a diary covering the period from 1749 to 1761, which was published in 1784. He was one of the group calling itself the "mad monks of Medmenham Abbey," along with Francis Dashwood, John Wilkes, and others.

Dodoma (dō'dō.mạ). Town in E Africa, in Tanganyika territory, situated on the Central Railway of Tanganyika, ab. 288 mi. W of Dar-es-Salaam. It is the administrative headquarters of the Central Province, seat of an Anglican bishopric, and the chief native produce and livestock market in the region. Important roads link it with Arusha in the N; it is linked by the Great North Road with the Rhodesias and Nyasaland in the S.

Dodona (dō.dō'nạ). In ancient geography, a city in Epirus, probably situated on or near Mount Tomarus, SW of Ioannina. It was the seat of the oldest Greek oracle, dedicated to Zeus, in an oak grove hung with vessels of brass, by which the god's voice was thought to be made audible.

Dods (dodz), Meg. Landlady of the inn, in Sir Walter Scott's St. Ronan's Well.

Dodsley (dodz'li), Robert. b. probably at Mansfield, on the border of Sherwood Forest, Nottinghamshire, England; d. at Durham, England, Sept. 23, 1764. English dramatist, poet, editor, anthologist, and bookseller, and founder of the Annual Register. He was a prolific author, as well as a publisher of the works of others, and he wrote in a variety of forms, including plays, poems, songs, and satires. As a publisher, with a shop in Pall Mall, Dodsley published Pope's First Epistle of the Second Book of Horace, poems by Young and Akenside, Goldsmith's Polite Learning, and Johnson's Rasselas, The Vanity of Human Wishes, and Irene. In 1758 he founded a work that is still published, the Annual Register, a record, as the title indicates, of the significant events of the past year. He paid Burke, whom he engaged as editor, a hundred pounds a year. Johnson thought well of him and said, "Doddy, you know, is my patron, and I would not desert him." Nichols, of the Literary Anecdotes, praises him as "that admirable patron and encourager of learning," and Walpole, in a letter to George Montagu, touches a vital point in his character: "You know how decent, humble, inoffensive a creature Dodsley is; how little apt to forget or disguise his having been a footman."

Dodson (dod'sŏn). Family name of the three aunts in George Eliot's The Mill on the Floss, Aunt Pullet, Aunt Glegg, and Aunt Tulliver. Their inherited customs and peculiarities are amusing, and are always referred to with respect by the phrase "No Dodson ever did" so and so.

Dodson and Fogg (fog). In Charles Dickens's Pickwick Papers, the legal advisers of Mrs. Bardell in the celebrated breach-of-promise case.

Dodsworth (dodz'wėrth). Novel by Sinclair Lewis, published in 1929. With Sidney Howard, the author wrote a stage version produced in 1934. Samuel Dodsworth, a Zenith automobile manufacturer, goes to Europe with his spoiled and shallow wife, Fran, who amuses herself with a series of affairs. In his loneliness Dodsworth becomes involved with Edith Cortright, an American widow who orients him to an appreciation of European culture. Dodsworth eventually leaves his wife for Edith.

Dodwell (dod'wel, -wĕl), Edward. b. c1767; d. at Rome, May 13, 1832. English antiquary and artist. He published Classical and Topographical Tour through Greece (1819), Cyclopean or Pelasgic Remains in Greece and Italy (1834), and others.

Dodwell, Henry. b. at Dublin, Ireland, in October, 1641; d. at Shottesbrooke, Berkshire, England, June 7, 1711. British classical scholar and controversialist. He studied at Trinity College, Dublin, removed to London in 1674, and was Camden professor of history at Oxford (1688–91). His chief work is De veteribus graecorum romanorumque cyclis (1701).

Doe (dō), John. Originally, the name of the fictitious plaintiff in actions of ejectment; the use of the name is now extended to include other actions or proceedings to which a person whose name is not known must be a party.

Doeg (dō'eg). In the Bible, the chief of the herdsmen of Saul. He slew four score and five priests of Nob.

Doeg. In the second part of John Dryden and Nahum Tate's Absalom and Achitophel, a character intended to represent Elkanah Settle.

Doenitz or Dönitz (dė'nits), Karl. b. 1891—. German admiral. He is believed to have been one of the German military leaders active in the scheme put into effect during the 1930's to construct submarines and train their crews, both of which activities were in violation of the Versailles treaty. During World War II, in 1943, he succeeded Admiral Erich Raeder as chief of the German navy. In the document published (April, 1945) as Hitler's "Political Testament" he was appointed successor to Hitler; surrendered (May 7, 1945) to the Allies. The international war crimes tribunal sentenced him to ten years' imprisonment.

Doerr (dėr), Robert. b. at Técsö, Hungary, Nov. 1, 1871—. Bacteriologist. He took his medical degree at Vienna, was a surgeon in the Austro-Hungarian army, and became Privatdocent of general and experimental pathology in 1908 and professor in 1912. During World War I he was director of the bacteriological laboratory of the Austro-Hungarian Committee of Military Hygiene. He became (1919) full professor of hygiene and bacteriology at the University of Basel. He published important studies on dysenteric toxin (1903), anaphylaxis, and allergy, on pappataci fever (1908), and spotted fever. Author of Das Dysenterietoxin (1907), Pappatacifieber (1909), Dysenterietoxin und Antitoxin (1911), Allergie und Anaphylaxie (1913), Allergische Phaenomene (1929), Herpes Zoster und Encephalitis (1930), Die Lehre von den Infektionskrankheiten in allgemeiner Darstellung (1931), and Filtrierbare Virusarten (1933).

Does (dös), Jacobus van der. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, March 4, 1623; d. at Sloten, Netherlands, Nov. 17, 1673. Dutch landscape and animal painter.

Does, Jan Van der. See Dousa, Janus.

Doesburg (dös'bėrch), Theo van. [Pseudonym of C. E. M. Kupper, who also called himself I. K. Bonset.] b. at Utrecht, Netherlands, 1883; d. at Davos, Switzerland, 1931. Dutch nonobjective (neo-plastic) painter, architect, editor, and theorist, who was the founder of the De Stijl group and magazine at Leiden (1917). He was a self-educated painter, and worked mostly in Holland, although he did spend the period 1920–28 at Berlin, Paris, and Strasbourg. He exhibited at the Independents in 1929. Gropius, Le Corbusier, and Mies van der Rohe were influenced by him in their architectural designs. A list of his work includes Self-Portrait, Card Players, Composition IX; Card Players, Russian Dance, Three Graces, Arithmetical Composition, Simultaneous Counter-Composition, Counter Composition in Dissonances, and Aesthetic Transformation of the Object.

Doesticks, P.B. (dō'stiks), Q.K. Philander. Pseudonym of Thomson, Mortimer Neal.

Doesticks, What He Says. Series of sketches by Mortimer Neal Thomson, published in 1855 under the pseudonym Philander Doesticks (in full, Q.K. Philander Doesticks, P.B.).

Doetinchem (dö'tin.ċhęm). [Also: Deutekom, Doetichem (dö'ti.ċhęm).] Town in E Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, situated on the Ijssel River, E of Arnhem. Manufactures include electric motors, enamelware, and canned food. There is a church in the late Gothic style and a town hall dating from the 18th century. 21,858 (est. 1951).

Dogali (dō.gä'lē). Place near Massawa, E Africa. Here, on Jan. 26, 1887, the Italian force under Gené was defeated and nearly destroyed by the Ethiopians under Ras Alula.

Dogberry (dog'beri''). Absurd constable in Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

Doge's Palace (dō'jęz). Palace of the doges of Venice. The present building was begun by Marino Faliero in 1354, but only the south and west façades retain their characteristic Gothic style of architecture. The basement is a noble and massive arcade with cylindrical columns; above this is another arcade, with twice the number of columns, and graceful, sharp-cusped arches with a range of quatrefoils above them. The upper part of the building is a square mass, with later enriched balconies in the middle of each façade, broad pointed windows irregularly placed, a line of small circles above, and flamed battlements. The superstructure is in itself heavy, but is rendered effective by the color of its diaper-work of pink and white marble. The allegorical and Biblical sculptures of the capitals of the lower arcade and of the three angles of the palace are famous. The great entrance, the Porta della Carta, the court, and the Giants' Staircase with its colossal figures of Mars and Neptune are excellent works of the Renaissance. The halls of the interior are adorned with the masterpieces of Tintoretto, Titian, Paolo Veronese, and other great Venetians.

Dogger Bank (dog'ėr). [Also, Doggerbank.] Sand bank in the central North Sea. It is noted for its extensive and valuable fisheries. It was the scene of an indecisive naval battle between the English under Sir Hyde Parker and the Dutch in 1781. In 1904 a Russian fleet on its way to the Far East during the Russo-Japanese War fired on some British fishing vessels off Dogger Bank. The incident caused ill feeling for a time, but the claims were settled by a commission. A naval engagement of World War I took place (Jan. 24, 1915) here. This engagement was a defeat for German naval strength and resulted in the loss of the cruiser Blücher and heavy damage to two battle cruisers. The British squadron of Admiral Beatty had its flagship Lion damaged.

Doggett (dog'ęt), Thomas. b. at Dublin, Ireland; d. Oct. (or Sept.) 21 or 22, 1721. English actor. He was before the public from 1691 to 1713. He established in 1716 a prize in the Thames rowing match, given every year on the first of August. It was an orange-colored livery and a badge, and was given in honor of George I. The custom is still kept up under the supervision of the Fishmongers' Company.

Doggrell (dog'ręl). Foolish poet in Abraham Cowley's play The Guardian. He was omitted in The Cutter of Coleman Street, a revision.

Dogon (dō′gōn). [Also: Habbe, Kado, Tombo.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting S French Sudan, S and E of the Niger River. Their population is estimated at ab. 180,000 (by Y. Urvoy, Petit Atlas ethno-demographique du Soudan, 1942). They live in villages on the rocky cliffs of the region. They practice agriculture with wooden hoes, and their principal food is millet. They are non-Mohammedans.

Do-Good Papers. Essays by Benjamin Franklin published in The New England Courant in 1772.

Dog River. Former name of Hood River.

Dogs, Isle of. Peninsula in SE England, in London, in Poplar metropolitan borough. It projects into the river Thames opposite Greenwich and is cut across from E to W by the canal of the West India Docks. It contains docks and shipbuilding yards.

Dog Star. See Sirius.

Doğubayazit (dō.gō″bä.yä.zēt′). [Turkish, Doğubayazıt; former names: Ağri, Bayazit (or Bayazid or Bayezid).] Town on the E border of Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Ağri, S of Mount Ararat. It was taken by the Russians in the wars of 1828 and 1877. Pop. ab. 1,800.

Doheny (dō.hē′ni), Edward Laurence. b. at Fond du Lac, Wis., Aug. 10, 1856; d. at Beverly Hills, Calif., Sept. 8, 1935. American oil speculator and financier, involved in the Teapot Dome scandals (1921 et seq.). Discovered (1892) oil near Westlake Park, Calif., starting a Los Angeles oil boom; organized Mexican Petroleum Company of California when wide automobile usage created a great demand for products of his oil interests; received (1922) U.S. government contract to build a naval fueling station at Pearl Harbor, and obtained leased drilling rights on naval oil reserve land at Elk Hills, Calif. When it was learned that he had sent 100,000 dollars in cash to U.S. Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall in 1921, he was investigated, indicted (1925) with Fall for bribery and conspiracy, but acquitted on both counts. The leases, however, had been canceled, and restitution was demanded on his profits from them.

Doherty (dō′ėr.ti), Charles Joseph. b. at Montreal, May 11, 1855; d. 1931. Canadian jurist and statesman. He was a judge of the superior court of the province of Quebec (1891–1906), a member of the Dominion House of Commons for some years beginning in 1908, minister of justice (1911–21), and for many years professor of civil and international law at McGill University, Montreal. He was a member of the Canadian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference after World War I, a signatory for Canada of the Versailles Treaty, and Canadian representative in the Assembly of the League of Nations (1920–21).

Doherty, Henry Latham. b. at Columbus, Ohio, May 15, 1870; d. at Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1939. American utilities executive. Engineer and manager (1890–1905) of various utilities companies, he founded (1905) Henry L. Doherty and Company. He was a chief organizer (1910) and first president (1910–39) of the Cities Service Company, a holding company for almost 200 public utilities and petroleum properties (in recent years, almost entirely the latter) with assets of over a billion dollars.

Doherty, Robert Ernest. b. at Clay City, Ill., 1885; d. 1950. American educator. Associated (1909–31) with the General Electric Company, he was dean of the school of engineering (1933–36) at Yale, and became president (1936) of the Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh. He wrote Mathematics of Modern Engineering (with E. G. Keller, 1936).

Dohm (dōm), Ernst. b. at Breslau, May 24, 1819; d. at Berlin, Feb. 5, 1883. German journalist and humorist; husband of Hedwig Dohm. He was for most of his life editor of Kladderadatsch. This comic Berlin weekly, one of a host of papers started when the censorship was lifted in 1848, became under his guidance (1849 et seq.) one of the wittiest publications in Germany, known for its literary quality and for its trenchant political satire. Dohm's play Der trojanische Krieg (1864) was itself a political satire. He also wrote Das erste Debüt (1860), Ihr Retter (1862), Komm her (1864), and translated La Fontaine's fables (1876–77).

Dohm, Hedwig. b. at Berlin, Sept. 20, 1833; d. there, Jan. 6, 1919. German feminist, playwright, and novelist; wife of Ernst Dohm. She wrote vigorously in favor of the emancipation of women (Der Jesuitismus im Hausstand, 1873; Die Frau in der Wissenschaft, 1874; Der Frauen Natur und Recht, 1876). She is also the author of light dramas (Vom Stamme der Asra, 1876; Ein Schuss ins Schwarze, 1878) as well as stories (Frau Tannhäuser, 1889) and novels (Plein air, 1891). Sharing with her husband an interest in Spanish culture, she wrote a history of Spanish literature (1867).

Dohnanyi (dō′nä.nyē), Ernst von. [Hungarian, Ernő Dohnányi.] b. at Pressburg, Hungary (now Bratislava, Czechoslavakia), July 27, 1877—. Hungarian composer and conductor. Studied at the Royal Academy of Music at Budapest; toured (1897–1908) in Europe, England, and the U.S. as a pianist; appointed (1908) professor of piano at the Hochschule at Berlin; director (1919) of the Budapest Conservatory. His compositions include the operas Tante Simona (1912), Ivas Turm (1922), and The Tenor (1929); important among his other works are the Suite in F-sharp Minor (Opus 19) for orchestra, and his four Rhapsodies (Opus 11) for piano. He has also composed a pantomime, concertos, string quartets, and piano works.

Dohrn (dōrn), Anton. b. at Stettin, Germany, 1840; d. at Munich, Germany, Sept. 26, 1909. German naturalist. He founded and directed the zoölogical station at Naples.

Doihara (dô.ē.hä.rä), Kenji. b. in Okayama prefecture, Japan, 1883; d. 1948. Japanese soldier, sometimes called the "Japanese Colonel Lawrence" (after the Englishman T. E. Lawrence). Doihara is famous as the behind-the-scenes instigator of several international incidents, particularly in China, which resulted usually in some Japanese aggressive action on that country. He was, for example, mayor of Mukden at the time of the Manchuria incident of 1931. Indicted as a war criminal after World War II, he was tried and sentenced to death by hanging.

Doisy (doi′zi), Edward Adelbert. b. at Hume, Ill., Nov. 13, 1893—. American biochemist. He has been professor of biochemistry (1923 et seq.) at the St. Louis University Medical School and director (1924 et seq.) of the biochemistry department at St. Mary's Hospital, St. Louis. Notable for his work on blood buffers, he isolated (1929) the sex hormones theelol, theelin, and dihydrotheelin, isolated two forms of crystalline vitamin K, and synthesized vitamin K 1 antibiotic compounds. He shared the Nobel prize in physiology for 1943 with Henrik Dam.

Dokhosie (dō.kōs′yā). See Dorhosye.

Doktor Faust (dok′tôr foust). Opera by Ferruccio Busoni, with a libretto by the composer giving his own adaptation of the story, first performed at Dresden on May 21, 1925.

Dol (dol). [Full name, Dol-de-Bretagne (dol.dę.brę.tâny′).] Town in W France, in the department of Ille-et-Vilaine, formerly situated on the Bay of Mont-St.-Michel (today separated from it by the swampland of Dol), ab. 14 mi. SE of St.-Malo. The cathedral, dating mainly from the 13th century, with later additions, is in the Norman Gothic style. The town witnessed many sieges in the Middle Ages, one (1075) by William the Conqueror. 4,861 (1946).

Dola (dō′lä). See Zula.

Dolabella (dol.ą.bel′ą), Publius Cornelius. b. c70 B.C.; d. at Laodicea, in Asia Minor, 43 B.C. Roman patrician, noted chiefly as the son-in-law of Cicero. Ruined by his profligate habits, he sought to restore his fortunes by joining the standard of Caesar in the civil war. He commanded Caesar's fleet in the Adriatic in 49, and in 48 participated in the battle of Pharsalus. He obtained the consulship after the death of Caesar in 44. At first he acted in support of the senate, but was subsequently influenced by bribery to join the party of Antony. He received from Antony the province of Syria as his proconsulate, but was defeated at Laodicea by Cassius. He was, at his own request, killed by one of his soldiers in order not to fall into the hands of the enemy.

Dola Sequanorum (dō′lą sek.wą.nōr′um). Latin name of Dôle, France.

Dolbear (dol′bār), Amos Emerson. b. at Norwich, Conn., Nov. 10, 1837; d. Feb. 23, 1910. American physicist and inventor, professor of physics at Tufts College from 1874, best known for his inventions in telephony and wireless telegraphy. He invented the static telephone in 1879 and the air-space cable in 1882.

Dolbeau (dôl.bō′). Town in Quebec, Canada, on the Mistassini River ab. 20 mi. N of Lake St. John and ab. 96 mi. NW of Chicoutimi. It has small industries, which use the water power generated in the area. 4,307 (1951).

Dolce (dōl′chā), Lodovico. b. at Venice, c1508; d. there, c1568. Italian poet and prolific miscellaneous writer, by profession a proofreader. He died in great poverty.

Dolci (dōl′chē) or Dolce (dōl′chē), Carlo (or Carlino). b. at Florence, May 25, 1616; d. there, Jan. 17, 1686. Florentine painter of religious subjects, a pupil of Jacopo Vignali.

Dol Common (dol kom′ən). See Common, Dol.

Dôle (dōl). [Latin, Dola Sequanorum.] Town in E France, in the department of Jura, situated on the Doubs River and the Rhine-Rhone Canal, ab. 27 mi. SE of Dijon. The former capital of the Franche-Comté, it was ceded to France in 1678. It preserves the architectural character of the 16th and 17th centuries and has various old churches and secular buildings. There are numerous medieval castles in the region. The town has stone quarries, potteries, and metallurgical and chemical industries. 18,250 (1946).

Dôle. [Also, La Dôle.] One of the highest mountains of the Jura range, situated in the canton of Vaud, Switzerland, near the French border, ab. 17 mi. N of Geneva. Elevation, ab. 5,505 ft.

Dole (dōl), Nathan Haskell. b. at Chelsea, Mass., Aug. 31, 1852; d. at Yonkers, N.Y., May 9, 1935. American author, journalist, and translator. He was the author of A Young Folks' History of Russia (1881), A Score of Famous Composers (1891), The Hawthorn Tree, and Other Poems (1895), Omar, the Tent-maker (1899), Peace and Progress (1904), reissued as The Building of the Organ (1906), The Pilgrims (1908), and A Teacher of Dante (1908), and translator of works from many languages, among them Spanish, Italian, French, and Russian (including the writings of Tolstoy).

Dole, Sanford Ballard. b. at Honolulu, April 23, 1844; d. June 9, 1926. American jurist; president of the republic of Hawaii and first governor of the Territory of Hawaii. The son of a New England missionary who brought Christianity to the Hawaiian Islands, he was educated in missionary schools there, attended Williams College, was admitted to the bar in Massachusetts, and established his practice at Honolulu. He was elected (1884, 1886) to the Hawaiian legislature and helped lead the so-called bayonet revolution of 1887 which established certain constitutional reforms limiting the power of the monarchy; at the end of the year he was appointed associate justice of the supreme court. He held his post until his resignation (1893) when he became head of the revolutionary provisional government which overthrew the monarchy of Queen Liliuokalani, after the queen had attempted to do away with the 1887 constitution. From 1894, when the republic of Hawaii was formally declared, he served as its president, attempting to have Hawaii annexed to the U.S., but without success because of the opposition of President Cleveland. When McKinley became president, annexation (1897) quickly took place, and Dole was appointed first governor (1900–03) of the Territory of Hawaii. Resigning that post, he served until 1915 as judge of the U.S. district court for Hawaii.

Dolega-Kamieński (dô.le′gä.kä.myen′skē). Pseudonym of Kamieński, Lucian.

Dolet (do.le), Étienne. b. at Orléans, France, 1509; hanged and then burned at Paris, Aug. 3, 1546. French scholar and printer. Educated at Paris and Padua, he was secretary to the French ambassador at Venice, returned to Toulouse to study law, and was expelled after joining in disputes there. He obtained the right from Francis I to publish certain works, but, because of his entering into religious controversy, was accused of publishing atheistic material. He was imprisoned twice but released; a third time he was held guilty and executed.

Dolgelley (dol.gel′i). [Also, Dolgelly.] Urban district and market town in N Wales, in Merionethshire, situated at the confluence of the rivers Aran and Wnion, ab. 9 mi. E of Barmouth, ab. 224 mi. NW of London by rail. Dolgelley is the county seat of Merionethshire. It is one of the few places in Wales where the curfew is still rung nightly. 2,246 (1951).

Dolgeville (dolj′vil). Village in E New York, in Fulton and Herkimer counties: manufactures of felt. 3,204 (1950).

Dolgoruki (dôl.gọ.rö′ki), Ivan Alekseyevich. Executed at Novgorod, Russia, Nov. 6, 1739. Russian noble, accused of conspiracy against the czarina Anna.

Dolgoruki, Ivan Mikhailovich. b. April 18, 1764; d. Dec. 16, 1823. Russian poet. He was governor of Vladimir from 1802 to 1812. The first edition of his poetical works appeared in 1806.

Dolgoruki, Katarina Mikhailovna. b. 1846; d. 1922. Second wife (July 31 1880) of Czar Alexander II of Russia. She published, under the pseudonym Victor Laferté, Alexandre II: détails inédits sur sa vie intime et sa mort (1882).

Dolgoruki, Peter Vladimirovich. b. at Moscow, 1807; d. at Bern, Switzerland, Aug. 17, 1868. Russian writer, exiled on account of his work La Vérité sur la Russie (1860).

d'Olier (dōl′yā), Franklin. b. at Burlington, N.J., April 28, 1877—. American insurance executive who was elected (Nov. 12, 1919) first national commander of the American Legion. He was a U.S. army officer (1917–19) in France during World War I and served as chairman (1944–46) of the U.S. Strategic Bombing Survey in Germany and Japan in World War II.

Dollallolla (dol.ạ.lol′ạ), Queen. Wife of King Arthur and mother of Huncamunca in Henry Fielding's burlesque The Tragedy of Tragedies, or the Life and Death of Tom Thumb the Great. She is entirely faultless, except that she is a little given to drink, is a little too much of a virago toward her husband, and is in love with Tom Thumb.

Dollar (dol′ạr). Police burgh in C Scotland, in Clackmannanshire, situated near the river Devon, at the foot of the Ochil Hills, ab. 5 mi. NE of Clackmannan, ab. 424 mi. N of London by rail. It has an academy, founded in 1818. 1,583 (est. 1948).

Dollar, Robert. b. at Falkirk, Scotland, March 20, 1844; d. at San Rafael, Calif., May 16, 1932. American shipowner, engaged chiefly in Far East trade. In the lumbering business (1882 et seq.), he bought (1893) his first ship to expedite lumber transportation in California. He turned to building cargo ships and began (1901) his Orient trade.

"Dollar Diplomacy." Epithet applied originally to the foreign policy of the U.S. under William Howard Taft and his secretary of state, Philander C. Knox. The Taft administration (1909–13) announced its intention not only to protect existing American overseas investments but also to encourage American industry and finance to seek foreign outlets for capital. With such support large sums were invested in China, particularly in the construction of railroads. The epithet was soon expanded to describe that area of U.S. foreign policy which seemed to be influenced by American economic interests abroad, notably in Latin America.

Dollar Law (dol′ạr lô″). Mountain in S Scotland, in Peeblesshire, situated ab. 9 mi. SW of Peebles. Elevation, ab. 2,680 ft.

Dollart (dol′ạrt). [Dutch, Dollard (dôl′ärt).] Arm of the North Sea at the mouth of the Ems River, between the NW part of Germany (former province of Hanover, Prussia) and the province of Groningen, Netherlands. It was formed by inundations in 1277 and subsequently. Length, 10 mi.; breadth, 4 to 8 mi.

Dollfuss (dol′fus), Engelbert. b. at Texing, Austria, Oct. 4, 1892; assassinated at Vienna, July 25, 1934. Austrian statesman. A Christian Socialist, he was minister of agriculture (1931–34) and served (1932–34) as chancellor, and as minister of foreign affairs and of defense and security. He tried to establish an authoritarian regime with Italian, British, and French assistance, the three countries supporting him in an attempt to preserve Austria as an independent nation, not only as a counter to the German Nazi state, but as part of the historical policy of resisting an Anschluss, an economic union of the German-speaking countries of central Europe. Opposed to both Socialists and Nazis, Dollfuss forcibly suppressed the Socialists at Vienna (February, 1934) and promulgated an authoritarian constitution for a corporate state, aided principally by his minister of justice Kurt von Schuschnigg, and supported by the rightist militia forces under Emil Fey and Prince Ernst Rüdiger von Starhemberg, thus turning towards Italy for help rather than towards Germany. In July, he was assassinated by the Austrian Nazis in their abortive attempt to overthrow the government of Austria.

Dollier de Casson (dȯ.lyā dẹ kȧ.sôṅ), François. fl. second half of 17th century. French missionary in Canada. He spent (c1668) a winter among the Nipissings, and in 1669 accompanied La Salle on an exploring expedition to the Ohio River. He separated from the expedition in the same year, with the view of establishing a mission among the Pottawattamies who inhabited the region of the upper lakes; but, finding the field occupied by the Jesuits, returned to the Sulpician seminary at Montreal. He was the author of Histoire de Montréal.

Döllinger (dėl'ing.ėr), Ignaz. b. at Bamberg, Bavaria, May 24, 1770; d. at Munich, Jan. 14, 1841. German physiologist and comparative anatomist, professor successively at Bamberg, Würzburg, Landshut, and Munich. He wrote Werth und Bedeutung der vergleichenden Anatomie (1814), Grundzüge der Physiologie (1835), and others.

Döllinger, Johann Joseph Ignaz von. b. at Bamberg, Bavaria, Feb. 28, 1799; d. at Munich, Jan. 10, 1890. German theologian, a leader in the "Old Catholic" movement; son of Ignaz Döllinger. He published Kirche und Kirchen, Papstthum und Kirchenstaat (1861), Papstfabeln des Mittelalters (1863), and others, and opposed decrees of the Vatican council (1869–70). He was excommunicated (1871).

Dolliver Romance (dol'i.vėr), The. Fragment by Nathaniel Hawthorne, the beginning of which was published in the Atlantic Monthly in July, 1864. It was published in 1876.

Dollond (dol'ọnd), John. b. at London, June 10, 1706; d. there, Nov. 30, 1761. English optician, the inventor of the achromatic telescope (1757–58); father of Peter Dollond.

Dollond, Peter. b. Feb. 24, 1730; d. at Kensington, London, July 2, 1820. English optician and maker of instruments; son of John Dollond.

Doll's House, A. Play by Henrik Ibsen, brought out (1879) at Christiania (Oslo). The chief character is Nora Helmer. Nora, having been sheltered by her husband from the realities of life, commits forgery when faced with a real-life situation. Out of this experience come her realization that she can live her own life, and her decision to leave the husband who has been treating her like a pampered doll.

Doll Tearsheet (dol' tār'shēt). See Tearsheet, Doll.

Dolly's (dol'iz). Tavern in Paternoster Row, London, dating from the time of Queen Anne.

Dolly Varden (dol'i vär'dẹn). See Varden, Dolly.

Dolly Winthrop (win'thrọp). See Winthrop, Dolly.

Dolomieu (dȯ.lȯ.myė), Déodat Guy Silvain Tancrède Gratet de. b. at Dolomieu, Isère, France, June 24, 1750; d. at Châteauneuf, Saône-et-Loire, France, Nov. 26, 1801. French geologist and mineralogist, for whom dolomite was named. His works include Voyage aux îles de Lipari (1783), Mémoires sur les îles Ponces (1788), and Philosophie minéralogique (1802).

Dolomites (dol'ọ.mīts). [Also: Dolomite Alps, Dolomite Mountains.] Group of limestone mountains in the Alps, in N Italy (Italian Tyrol). Highest peak, Marmolada (ab. 11,000 ft.).

Dolon (dō'lon) or Dolon Nor (dō'lon nôr'). See Tolun.

Dolopathos (dȯ.lȯ.pȧ.tȯs). French romance of adventure, the work of Herbers, a trouvère of the 13th century. He says that he translated it from an old Latin manuscript of Dom Jéhans (Jean), a monk of the Abbaye d'Hauteselve or Hauteseille. The subject and style both show Oriental influence. It is a form of the old Eastern romance The Seven Wise Men (known also as the Book of Sindibad).

Dolores (dō.lō'rās). City in SW Uruguay, in Soriano department, on the San Salvador River: shipping point for grain. Pop. ab. 11,500.

Dolores, Grito de. [Eng. trans., "Cry of Dolores."] First signal of revolt against Spanish rule in Mexico, and hence the overt beginning of the war for independence. On Sept. 16, 1810, the parish priest of Dolores, in Guanajuato, Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, headed a band which freed some political prisoners. Hidalgo, after celebrating mass in the church, proclaimed a revolt; the raising of a banner was greeted with loud shouts against the government, and the outbreak soon assumed formidable proportions. The town of Dolores was later renamed Dolores Hidalgo.

Dolores, Mission. [Original name, Mission of San Francisco de Asís.] Franciscan mission founded under Father Junípero Serra in October, 1776, on the lagoon of Nuestra Señora de los Dolores (Our Lady of Sorrows), within the limits of the present city of San Francisco.

Dolores Hidalgo (dō.lō'rās ē.ᴛʜäl'gō). [Former name, Dolores.] City in C Mexico, in Guanajuato state, near the Río de la Laja River. It was named for Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, revolutionist, who began the revolt against Spain here (1810) with the Grito de Dolores ("Cry of Dolores"). 5,915 (1940).

Dolores River (dọ.lō'rẹs). River in Colorado and Utah, a tributary of the Colorado River. It flows through a canyon 3,000 ft. deep. Length, ab. 250 mi.

Dolorosa (dol.ọ.rō'sȧ), Via. See Via Dolorosa.

Dolorous Valley. In the Arthurian romances, a name for Edinburgh.

Dolton (dōl'tọn). Village in NE Illinois, in Cook County, near Chicago: residential community. 5,558 (1950).

Dolunnor (dō.lùn.nôr'). See Tolun.

Dom (dōm). Peak in S Switzerland, in the Valais Alps ab. 17 mi. SW of Brigue. It is the highest peak entirely in Swiss territory. Elevation, ab. 14,942 ft.

Domagk (dō'mäk), Gerhard. b. 1888—. German chemist and physician. He discovered (1932) the antibacterial action of the dye and sulfa-drug forerunner Prontosil, but did not realize that its action was due to its sulfanilamide portion (the discovery was publicized in 1935). Further study in France (despite German refusal to furnish Prontosil), England, and the U.S. led to sulfa-drug development in these countries. Domagk directed I. G. Farben's research institute at Elberfeld (1927 et seq.). He was offered, but did not accept, the Nobel prize in medicine for 1939.

Domain of Arnheim (ärn'hīm), The. Story by Edgar Allan Poe, published in 1847.

Domas y Valle (dō'mäs ē bä'lyā), José. b. at Cartagena, Spain, c1717; d. at Guatemala City, Oct. 9, 1803. Spanish naval officer and administrator. He distinguished himself as chief of a squadron on the coasts of Spain and Italy, commanded fleets in the West Indies during the war with England (1778–80), and was at the taking of Pensacola (1781) and the siege of Gibraltar (1783). From 1786 to 1794 he was governor of Panama, and from 1794 to 1801 captain-general of Guatemala.

Domaszewski (dō.mä.shef'skē), Alfred von. b. at Temesvár, Hungary (now Timişoara, Rumania), Oct. 30, 1856; d. at Heidelberg, Germany, July 2, 1927. German historian of ancient Roman life. He was professor (1890 et seq.) at the University of Heidelberg, and the author of Die Religion des römischen Heeres (The Religion of the Roman Army, 1895) and Geschichte der römischen Kaiser (History of the Roman Emperors, 1909).

Domat (dȯ.mȧ) or Daumat (dō.mȧ), Jean. b. at Clermont, in Auvergne (now Clermont-Ferrand, Puy-de-Dôme), France, Nov. 30, 1625; d. at Paris, March 14, 1696. French jurist, author of Les Lois civiles dans leur ordre naturel (1689–97).

Domažlice (dô'mäzh.lē.tse). [German, Taus, Tauss.] Town in Czechoslovakia, in W Bohemia, situated on the Rubřina River, ab. 29 mi. SW of Plzeň. It is a station on the railroad line from Plzeň to Regensburg, in Bavaria. It is in the district of the "Chodove," the ancient guardians of the Czech frontier. The Germans were defeated here in 1040, and in 1431 by the Hussites. Buildings of interest include the castle of the Chodove, the Gothic Church of All Saints, and a museum. 7,228 (1947).

Dombasle (dôṅ.bäl), Christophe Joseph Alexandre Mathieu de. b. 1777; d. 1843. French agriculturist and innovator. He studied agricultural methods in other countries, and applied to French farming certain techniques borrowed from foreign practice, introducing also new products, and teaching the importance of improved care for livestock. In 1822 he established an agricultural school and a model farm near Nancy, and throughout his career he urged his ideas in numerous writings. A form of plow which he invented was named for him.

Dombasle-sur-Meurthe (dôn.bäl.sür.mėrt). [Also, Dombasle.] Town in E France, in the department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, situated at the junction of the Sanon and Meurthe rivers and the Marne-Rhine Canal, ab. 13 mi. SE of Nancy. It has a large soda factory. 8,036 (1946).

Dombey and Son (dom'bi). Novel by Dickens, issued originally in numbers, the first of which appeared in October, 1846. It was brought out in one volume in 1848. The original title was Dealings with the Firm of Dombey and Son, Wholesale, Retail, and for Exportation. Mr. Dombey, the father of little Paul and Florence, is a cold, unbending, pompous merchant. His chief ambition is to perpetuate the firm-name. However, after the death of his only son, little Paul, and the loss of his money, his obstinacy and pride are softened. Little Paul, the "son" in the title of the firm, is a delicate child who dies young. Florence, his devoted sister, marries Walter Gay, a clerk in her father's bank. Edith Dombey, the beautiful and scornful second wife of Mr. Dombey, elopes with Carker, his manager.

Dombrau (dom'brou). German name of Dąbrowa Górnicza.

Dombrowa Gora (dôm.brô'vä gö'rä). See Dąbrowa Górnicza.

Dombrowski (dôm.brôf'skē), Jan Henryk. [Also, Dąbrowski.] b. near Kraków, Poland, Aug. 29, 1755; d. at Wina-Gora, Posen, Prussia, June 6, 1818. Polish general. He served in the campaign of 1792 and in 1794 fought at Warsaw with Kosciusko. For Napoleon he organized (1797) the Polish legion at Milan, fighting in the several Italian campaigns until 1801. He served (1807) with distinction at Friedland, against the Austrians in 1809, and in the Russian campaigns of 1812–13. After Napoleon's fall, he became a general (1815) and senator palatine of the Polish kingdom. He retired in 1816.

Dom Casmurro (dōng käz.mör'rö). One of Brazil's outstanding novels, by Machado de Assís (1839–1908). It was published in 1900 at Rio de Janeiro, where its action takes place.

Domdaniel (dom.dan'yel). In the continuation of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments of Chavis and Cazotte, a seminary for evil magicians founded by the great magician Hal-il-Maugraby. It was an immense cavern "under the roots of the ocean" off the coast of Tunis, the resort of evil spirits and enchanters. It was finally destroyed. Southey makes its destruction the theme of his Thalaba.

Dôme de Chasseforêt (dōm dę shäs.fo.re). Central point of the Vanoise range, in the Tarentaise Alps, in SE France. Elevation, ab. 11,800 ft.

Domenech (do.me.nek), Emmanuel Henri Dieudonné. b. at Lyons, France, Nov. 4, 1825; d. 1905. French traveler and writer. He was an honorary canon of Montpellier, with the title of abbé.

Domenichino (dō.mā.nē.kē'nō). [Also: Il Domenichino; original name, Domenico Zampieri.] b. at Bologna, Italy, Oct. 21, 1581; d. at Naples, Italy, April 15, 1641. Italian painter. He was a student of the Carracci. Among his works are Communion of Saint Jerome (in the Vatican), Martyrdom of Saint Agnes (at Bologna), Diana and her Nymphs (at Rome), Adam and Eve, and Saint Cecilia (in the Louvre, Paris).

Domesday Book (dōmz'dā). [Also, Doomsday Book.] Book containing a digest, in Latin, of the results of a census or survey of England undertaken by order of William I (William the Conqueror), and completed in 1086. It consists of two volumes in vellum, a large folio containing 382 pages and a quarto containing 450. They form a valuable record of the ownership, extent, and value of the lands of England (1) at the time of the survey, (2) at the dates of their bestowal (that is, at the time when they had been granted by the king), and (3) at the time of Edward the Confessor. The numbers of tenants and dependents, amount of livestock, and the like, were also recorded. The book was long kept under three different locks in the exchequer, along with the king's seal, but is now kept in the Record Office at London. In 1783 an edition, printed from types made for the purpose, was issued by the British government. The counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, and Durham were not included in the survey. There existed also local domesday books

Domestic Symphony. English title of Sinfonia Domestica.

Domett (dom'ęt), Alfred. b. at Camberwell Grove, Surrey, England, May 20, 1811; d. in England, Nov. 2, 1887. English poet and colonial statesman. He was educated at Cambridge and was called to the bar in 1841. In 1842 he went to New Zealand, where he filled many of the chief offices of the colony; he returned to England in 1871. He was the intimate friend of Robert Browning, who writes of him in Waring and The Guardian Angel. Among his works are volumes of poems published in 1833 and 1839. His "Christmas Hymn" appeared in Blackwood's Magazine about that time. He published Ranolf and Amohia (1872) and Flotsam and Jetsam (1877). He also wrote several official publications relating to New Zealand.

Domeyko (dō.mā'kō), Ignatius. b. at Niedzviadka, Lithuania, July 31, 1802; d. at Santiago, Chile, Jan. 23, 1889. Polish scientist. He was involved in the Polish revolt of 1830 and was compelled to leave the country, taking refuge at Paris. For several years he was engaged in mining work in Alsace. On invitation of the government of Chile he went to that country in 1838, founded a school of chemistry and mineralogy at Coquimbo, and was professor at the University of Santiago from 1839, and rector from 1867. Through his influence improved methods of mining were introduced into Chile, and the resources of the country were greatly developed. Besides numerous scientific papers and textbooks, he wrote La Araucania y sus habitantes (Santiago, 1845), a book on Chile (in the Polish language), and others.

Domfront (dôn.frôn). Town in NE France, in the department of Orne, situated on the Varenne River ab. 20 mi. N of Mayenne. It has a ruined castle, and was long one of the chief Norman strongholds. It was captured by William the Conqueror in 1048, and was often besieged in the English and religious wars. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Domingue (do.mañg), Michel. Haitian Negro general and politician. He became president of the republic in June, 1874, and after a period of almost unequaled anarchy and tyranny directed against the mulatto party was forced to resign in 1875.

Domínguez (dō.mēng'geth), José López. See López Domínguez, José.

Dominic (dom'i.nik), Saint. [Original Spanish name, Domingo de Guzmán.] b. at Calaruega, in Old Castile, Spain, 1170; d. at Bologna, Italy, Aug. 6, 1221. Founder of the order of the Dominicans. He studied at the University of Palencia, and in 1194 became a canon of the cathedral at Osma. In 1204 he removed to Languedoc, where he preached with much vehemence against the Albigenses, debating with them and attempting their conversion, and founded the order of the Dominicans, which received papal confirmation in 1216. He was subsequently appointed magister sacri palatii (the Pope's own theologian) at Rome.

Dominica (dom.i.nē'ka). [French, La Dominique.] Island in the Caribbean Sea, NE of Venezuela, between Martinique and Guadeloupe: one of the Windward Islands, a British colony. The chief products are citrus, bananas, and vanilla. It is the site of the last Carib settlement in the West Indies. Capital, Roseau; area, 305 sq. mi.; pop. 52,858 (est. 1949).

Dominican Republic (dō.min'i.kan). [Official Spanish name, República Dominicana; former names, Santo Domingo, San Domingo.] Republic in the E and larger part of the island of Hispaniola, in the Caribbean Sea, contiguous with Haiti.

Area, Population, Political Divisions. The republic is divided into 19 provinces for administrative purposes. Capital, Ciudad Trujillo; area, 19,129 sq. mi.; length, 240 mi.; width, 170 mi.; pop. 2,121,083 (1950).

Terrain and Agriculture. It is traversed by four mountain ranges, the largest being the Cordillera Central. In the interior there are elevated plains, especially the Vega Real, of great fertility and beauty. Sugar, cacao, and coffee are the principal exports.

History. The republic was formed in 1844, after a revolution by which it was separated from Haiti. From 1861 to 1865 it was held by Spain. In 1869 the president (Buenaventura Báez) signed with President Grant a treaty of annexation with the U.S., which the Senate at Washington refused to ratify. There have been various wars with Haiti, political revolutions, and changes of the constitution. The U.S. maintained (1916–24) a military government here for the purpose of collecting debt payments. Generalissimo Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina was elected president in 1930 and again in 1942. In 1951 he was requested by the chamber of deputies to serve for a third term, but he refused and was succeeded (1952) by his brother Hector Trujillo Molina.

Dominicans (dō.min'i.kạnz). [Also, Order of Preachers.] Roman Catholic religious order, founded by Saint Dominic (c1170–1221). It was his observation of the prevalence of the Albigensian heresy in Languedoc which fired him with a purpose to institute an order to defend and propagate the Catholic faith by active, evangelistic preaching of the Gospel in all lands. Sent to Languedoc with one companion by Pope Innocent III in 1204, he established his first house for religious women at Prouille near Toulouse in 1206, and gradually gathered a small company of followers, which numbered 16 when in 1215 the Bishop of Toulouse granted them a church and recognized them as a congregation of his diocese. An ecumenical council at Rome in that year having declared against the establishment of new religious orders, Dominic and his followers adopted the Augustinian rule; but in 1216 Pope Honorius III confirmed them as an order and authorized their mission. In 1217, though only 17 in number, they dispersed throughout much of Europe, winning recruits, rapidly growing in numbers, and establishing communities at Rome (where the Pope gave them the church of Saint Sixtus), Bologna, Toulouse, Lyons, Paris, Madrid, Segovia, and other cities, especially at centers of learning. In 1219 the first general chapter of the order came into being at Bologna, and by the year of Saint Dominic's death it numbered eight national provinces. Dominicans, who wore a white habit, to which they added a black mantle when preaching (from this acquiring the name of Black Friars), were dedicated to the propagation of Catholic doctrine, the promotion of good morals, and the uprooting of heresy, by means of learning and teaching (their particular method of teaching being by way of preaching). The authority they acquired by their diligent theological studies resulted among other things in their close association with the Inquisition. The glory of the Dominican order is Saint Thomas Aquinas, but their roster includes many other notable names, as diverse as Albertus Magnus and Savonarola. In modern times the Dominicans continue to be the great evangelistic order of the Roman Catholic Church: in the U.S. they commonly conduct the missions held periodically in Catholic parishes for the instruction of the faithful and the revival of religious zeal. The Dominicans are governed by the decisions of annual general chapters, composed chiefly of elected delegates, and the priors of houses and provinces are chosen by election for limited terms. Because of the tradition that the Blessed Virgin Mary gave the rosary to Saint Dominic in a vision, that form of prayer is especially used and inculcated by Dominicans. Associated with them are sub-orders of Dominican Sisters (contemplative nuns) and of Brothers of Penitence of Saint Dominic (third order, or tertiaries).

Dominie Sampson (dom'i.ni samp'sọn). See Sampson, Dominie.

Dominion (dọ.min'yọn). Coal-mining town on Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, situated at the E end of the southern peninsula of the island, near the city of Sydney. It is connected by rail and road with the other nearby mining towns. 3,143 (1951).

Dominion Day. National holiday of Canada, observed on July 1, which is the anniversary of the establishment, in 1867, of the Dominion of Canada as a union of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia.

Dominis (dô'mē.nēs), Marco Antonio de. b. on the island of Rab (Arbe), in Dalmatia, 1566; d. at Rome, in September, 1624. Italian theologian and natural philosopher. He wrote De radiis visus et lucis in vitris perspectivis et iride (1611), De republica ecclesiastica (1617), and others.

Domino Noir (do.mē.nō nwâr), Le. [Eng. trans., "The Black Domino."] Comic opera by Auber, words by Scribe, first produced at Paris in 1837.

Domitian (dọ.mish'ạn). [Full Latin name, Titus Flavius Domitianus Augustus.] b. at Rome, Oct. 24, 51 A.D.; d. there, Sept. 18, 96 A.D. Roman emperor (81–96); second son of Vespasian and Flavia Domitilla, and the brother of Titus, whom he succeeded. He undertook a campaign against the Chatti in 83, in the course of which he began the construction of a boundary wall between the Danube and the Rhine. This wall was guarded by soldiers settled upon public lands (agri decumates) along its course. He carried on (86–90) unsuccessful wars against the Dacians under Decebalus, finally purchasing peace by the promise of a yearly tribute. He recalled Agricola, whose victories (78–84) in Britain aroused his jealousy. Though the beginning of his reign had been marked by sincere attempts to govern well, to enforce the laws, to build temples, and to supervise the government closely, the last years of his reign were sullied by cruelty and tyranny, induced by fear of revolt and assassination. He was murdered by the freedman Stephanus, at the instance of the empress and several officers of the court, who were in fear of their lives.

Domitilla (dom.i.til'ạ). In James Shirley's play The Royal Master, a girl of 15 years who, in an innocent delusion, fixes her love upon the king, mistaking his promise to provide her with a husband for a proof of personal affection.

Domitilla, Flavia. First wife of Vespasian. She was the mother of Titus and Domitian.

Domitilla, Flavia. Wife of the consul Flavius Clemens, said to have been banished to Pandataria by Domitian for atheism (probably she followed Christian rites). She is regarded as a saint in the Roman Catholic Church.

Domitius Ulpianus (dọ.mish'us ul.pi.ā'nus). See Ulpian.

Dom Juan, ou le festin de pierre (dôṅ zhü.äṅ ö lẹ fes.taṅ dẹ pyer). Comedy by Molière, first played in 1665. In 1673 it was turned into verse by Thomas Corneille. The second title is a mistake of Dorimond who first introduced Don Juan to the French stage c1658 in a play called Le Festin de Pierre (The Feast of Pierre), which he translated from the Spanish phrase el convidado de piedra (in French le convié de pierre, "the stone guest," referring to the statue of the commandant whom he named Pierre to explain it). Molière, finding the title established, adopted it.

Domleschg (dōm'leshk). Valley along the lower part of the Hinter Rhein, in the canton of Graubünden, Switzerland, S of Chur.

Dom Miguel (dōṅ mē.gel'). See Miguel.

Domna (dom'nạ), Julia. See Julia Domna.

Domnarvet (dôm.när'vet). Industrial center in C Sweden, in the län (county) of Kopparberg, on the Dal River ab. 14 mi. by rail SW of Falun. The Stora Kopparberg works here is one of the chief iron and steel works in Sweden, with blast furnaces, Bessemer ovens and electric ovens, a rolling mill, and fabricating mill. High-quality steel products are produced. The plant was established in 1878, and the industrial city of Borlänge which has grown up around it had a population of 20,947 in 1950.

Domnei: a Comedy of Woman Worship (dom'ni). Novel by James Branch Cabell, published in 1920. It is a revised version of his earlier novel The Soul of Melicent (1913).

Domnus (dom'nus). See Donus.

Domodossola (dō.mō.dôs'sō.lä). [Also, Domo d'Ossola.] Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont, in the province of Novara, situated in the Val d'Ossola (Ossola Valley) on the Toce River, ab. 47 mi. N of Novara, near the Swiss border. Owing to its location at the S end of the Simplon tunnel, which connects N Italy via Switzerland with the Rhine valley and with France, it is one of the most important railroad stations of Italy. It has a museum of natural history, and wine and fruit markets. It belonged in the Middle Ages to the bishop of Novara, in the 15th and 16th centuries to Switzerland, in 1714 became part of Austria, and in 1735 of Savoy. Napoleon I improved the road over the Simplon pass; the railroad was opened in 1906. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 10,645 (1936); of town, 9,193 (1936).

Dom Pedrito (dōm pē.drē'tō). City in S Brazil, in the state of Rio Grande do Sul. 11,465 (1950).

Domremy-la-Pucelle (dôṅ.rə.mē.là.pü.sel). [Also, Domremy.] Village in E France, in the department of Vosges, situated on the Meuse River, ab. 29 mi. SW of Nancy. It was the birthplace of Joan of Arc; the house where she was born has been preserved. 283 (1946).

Don (don). River in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, rising near the Cheshire-Yorkshire border and flowing SE to Sheffield, thence NE past Rotherham, Doncaster, and Thorne to the river Ouse at Goole. The artificial channel from Snaith to Goole is known as the Dutch River. Length, ab. 70 mi.; navigable to Sheffield (39 mi).

Don. River in E Scotland, in Aberdeenshire. It rises on the Aberdeenshire-Banffshire boundary, ab. 10 mi. N of Braemar. It flows E across the county, reaching the North Sea ab. 2 mi. N of Aberdeen. The river is noted for the good fishing it provides. Length, ab. 82 mi.

Don (don; Russian, dôn). [Tartar, Duna; ancient name, Tanais.] River in the U.S.S.R. rising near Tula, ab. 90 mi. S of Moscow, and flowing generally S to the Sea of Azov. Before reaching the Sea of Azov it makes a large bend to the east, flows S past Stalingrad, and W past Rostov. Its chief tributary is the Donets. Length ab. 1,100 mi.

Doña Emilia (dō'nyä ā.mē'lyä). Charles Gould's wife in Joseph Conrad's novel Nostromo (1904).

Donaghadee (don"ạ.chạ.dē'). Urban district and seaport in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, in County Down, situated on the North Channel ab. 17 mi. E of Belfast. 3,455 (1947).

Donalbain (don'ạl.bān). In Shakespeare's Macbeth, son of Duncan, king of Scotland.

Donald (don'ạld), William Henry. b. in New South Wales, Australia, 1874; d. Nov. 9, 1946. Australian journalist and adviser to Chinese government officials. Donald gained his early experience on newspapers at Sydney and Melbourne; he was with the China Mail at Hong Kong from 1902 to 1910, and subsequently he was editor of the Far Eastern Review (from 1911 to 1919). He was associated with Chinese officials as adviser from 1911 (when he was associated with Sun Yat-sen); later, he was associated with Chang Hsueh-liang. For many years he advised Chiang Kai-shek, playing a notable role in the Sian kidnaping affair of 1936, when Chiang was abducted by Chang Hsueh-liang. He was captured at Manila by the Japanese in 1940, and was interned until 1945.

Donaldson (don'ạld.sọn), Sir James. b. at Aberdeen, Scotland, April 26, 1831; d. March 9, 1915. Scottish Hellenist. He became principal of the united colleges of St. Salvator and St. Leonard in the University of St. Andrews in 1886, and in 1890 principal of the university. He was knighted in 1907. He edited, in conjunction with Alexander Roberts, The Ante-Nicene Christian Library (1867–72), and was author of Critical History of Christian Literature and Doctrine from the Death of the Apostles to the Nicene Council (1864–66).

Donaldson, Jesse Monroe. b. in Shelby County, Ill., Aug. 17, 1885—. American public servant, U.S. postmaster general (1947–51). He first became a postal employee in 1908, being stationed in Illinois and later in Oklahoma until his promotion to the rank of post office inspector, in which capacity he served at Chattanooga, Tenn., and Kansas City, Mo., from 1915 to 1933. Thereafter he was successively deputy second assistant and deputy first assistant postmaster general, chief inspector of the department, and first assistant postmaster general, until Nov. 26, 1947, when by nomination of President Truman he became postmaster general, the first Post Office Department career man ever to hold that post.

Donaldson, John William. b. at London, June 7, 1811; d. there, Feb. 10, 1861. English classical philologist and Biblical critic. His works include New Cratylus (1839), Varronianus (1844), and Jashar (1854).

Donaldson, Thomas Leverton. b. at London, Oct. 19, 1795; d. there, Aug. 1, 1885. English architect and author. He was professor of architecture in University College, London (1841–65), and emeritus professor from 1865 until his death. His works include Pompeii (1827) and A Collection of the Most Approved Examples of Doorways from Ancient Buildings in Greece and Italy (1833).

Donaldsonville (don'ạld.sọn.vil). City in SE Louisiana, parish seat of Ascension Parish. Rice, sugar, and cotton are produced in the area. 4,150 (1950).

Donalsonville (don'ạl.sọn.vil). City in SW Georgia, county seat of Seminole County, ab. 50 mi. NW of Tallahassee, Fla. Farm products, naval stores, and lumber are produced in the region, and it is popular with hunters. The city has a number of peanut-shelling plants. 2,569 (1950).

Donar (dō'när). German form of Thor.

Donatello (don.ạ.tel'ō; Italian, dō.nä.tel'lō). [Full original name, Donato di Niccolò di Betto Bardi.] b. at Florence, Italy, c1368; d. there, Dec. 13, 1466. Florentine sculptor, one of the great artists of the Renaissance. It has been said that the Renaissance began in Florence with Donatello, but in his first period (1410–24) his work was not so much influenced by the relics of antiquity as by his own insistence on realism. As much as any other artist of the Renaissance, he broke forever the grip of the static art of the early Middle Ages, but his earlier work is closer to the Gothic than to the Classic style, and he was a precursor not only of Michelangelo but of Rodin, especially in the creation that was his own favorite, the Zuccone ("Pumpkin-head") in the Campanile at Florence. After 1425, having had an opportunity to study, which he did avidly, the remains of ancient art then existing in Rome, he conformed his style ever more closely to classic models, first in such works as the mausoleums of Pope John XVIII at Florence, of Cardinal Brancacci at Naples, and of Bartolommeo Aragazzi at Montepulciano, and later in masterpieces such as the David, the Cupid, and the Angel with Tambourine. In this period he executed a number of notable works in Padua, including the powerful figure of the warrior Gattemalata, the first bronze equestrian statue of modern times, which is generally rated with the renowned figure of Colleone by Donatello's pupil Verocchio. It is related that Donatello turned his back on the praise and emoluments which rewarded his work in Padua because he felt that the critical faultfinding of his Florentine compatriots was necessary to his artistic growth. Not only Verocchio, but also the painters Masaccio, Pollaiuolo, Andrea del Castagno and Desiderio da Settignano were powerfully influenced by Donatello.

Donatello. Character in The Marble Faun (1860) by Nathaniel Hawthorne. He is an impulsive young Tuscan count whose likeness to the statue of the faun by Praxiteles gives the title to the book.

Donati (dō.nä'tē), Giovanni Battista. b. at Pisa, Italy, Dec. 16, 1826; d. at Florence, Sept. 20, 1873. Italian astronomer. He discovered (June 2, 1858) the comet named for him. He was director (1864) of the observatory at Florence, and that year, by subjecting the light of a comet to spectrographic analysis, demonstrated the gaseous nature of comets.

Donation of Constantine (kon'stạn.tīn, -tēn), The. Medieval forgery, of unknown date and origin, which pretends to be an imperial edict issued by Constantine I (Constantine the Great) in 324 conferring the temporal and spiritual sovereignty of Italy and the West on the papal see. It was probably composed about the middle of the 8th century; in 1444 Lorenzo Valla demonstrated that it was a forgery.

Donatists (don'ạ.tists). Early Christian sect in Africa which originated in a dispute over the election (311 A.D.) of Caecilian to the see of Carthage, occasioned by his opposition to the extreme reverence paid to relics of martyrs and to the sufferers for the Christian faith called confessors.

Donatus (dō.nā'tus). fl. early 4th century. Bishop of Casae Nigrae during the Diocletian persecution, and leader of a party which courted martyrdom with fanatical enthusiasm, and regarded with horror the traditores, or those who to escape their persecutors delivered up to them the sacred books. This division was the starting point of the Donatist schism, though the party was probably named from Donatus the Great, rather than from Donatus of Casae Nigrae.

Donatus, Aelius. fl. in the middle of the 4th century A.D. Roman grammarian and rhetorician; teacher of Saint Jerome. Of his works we possess a Latin grammar, Ars grammatica, a commentary on Terence, and the preface and introduction (with other fragments) of a commentary on Vergil. The grammatical work was extremely popular and was translated into Greek; its reputation was such that it became the common name for an elementary grammar (donet, donat) and was thus used in English as late as the 16th century.

Donatus the Great. fl. 4th century A.D. Bishop of Carthage (315 et seq.). He was elected by the rigorists or opponents of the moderate party or traditores to succeed Majorinus who had been elected by them in opposition to Caecilian, elected by the moderates and deposed by the rigorists in a council assembled at Carthage. It was for this Donatus that the Donatist party probably was named.

Donau (dō'nou). German name of the Danube.

Donaueschingen (dō.nou.esh'ing.ẹn). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Baden, French Zone, formerly in the free state of Baden, situated at the union of the Brigach and Brege rivers, considered the source of the Danube River, ab. 30 mi. E of Freiburg im Breisgau. It has small industries including brewing and brush manufactures, and cattle and lumber markets, and is frequented as a health resort. The Church of Saint Sebastian dates from 1614. The castle of Count Fürstenberg, erected in 1722, contains art collections, with important old German paintings of the 15th and 16th centuries, and a large library and archives of over 150,000 volumes, incunabula, and manuscripts, among others Codex C of the Nibelungenlied and the Schwabenspiegel of 1286, an outstanding source of medieval law. In the early Middle Ages the town belonged to the convent of Reichenau; it became part of Baden in 1806. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 6,911 (1947).

Donau Moos (dō'nou mōs'). [Former name, Schrobenheimer Moos.] Marshy district in Bavaria, S Germany, lying S of the Danube near Ingolstadt.

Donauwörth (dō'nou.vėrt). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Swabia, situated at the junction of the Wörnitz and Danube rivers, ab. 25 mi. N of Augsburg. It has livestock and lumber markets, brewing, basket weaving, and tool manufactures. Architecturally the town has preserved its medieval character. Structures of interest include walls and gates, numerous old houses, the Rathaus (town hall), customs house, and dance hall (14th and 15th centuries), the Fugger House (16th century), and the church of the Holy Cross, in the Gothic style. There are a number of educational institutions, mostly under ecclesiastical guidance. In the 12th century part of the Hohenstaufen domain, Donauwörth became a free imperial city in 1348. When in 1606 the Protestant population intercepted a Catholic procession, the town was condemned by the emperor Rudolf II and occupied by Duke Maximilian I of Bavaria; this was one of the incidents leading to the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War. The town was occupied by Gustavus II (Gustavus Adolphus) of Sweden in 1632, and by Emperor Ferdinand II in 1634. It was again a free city for a short period (1705–14) and from then on definitely belonged to Bavaria. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 7,298 (1946).

Donawitz (dō'nä.vits). Town in E Austria, in the province of Styria, a station on the railroad line from Leoben to Hieflau, W of Leoben. It has iron foundries and steelworks of the Austrian Alpine Montan Company. Soft coal (lignite) is mined in the vicinity. The town has recently been incorporated into the city of Leoben.

Donbas or Donbass (don.bäs'). See Donets Basin.

Don Benito (dōn bā.nē'tō). Town in W Spain, in the province of Badajoz, situated near the Guadiana River, ab. 57 mi. E of Badajoz: marketing point for wine, olive oil, and melons. 20,931 (1940).

Don Carlos (don kär'lọs). See also Carlos, Don.

Don Carlos. [Full title, Don Carlos, Prince of Spain.] Tragedy in rhymed verse by Thomas Otway, produced in 1676. The story is taken from the Abbé de St. Real, and the plot is simpler than in Schiller's play on the same subject.

Don Carlos. Play in blank verse by Schiller, completed in 1787. The play contrasts despotism and intolerance, embodied in Philip II of Spain, with liberalism and religious freedom, whose protagonists are Don Carlos, the king's son, and the Marquis Posa, his friend.

Don Carlos. Opera by Michael Andrew Agnus Costa, words by Tarantini, produced at London on June 20, 1844.

Don Carlos. Opera by Verdi, words by Joseph Méry and Camille du Locle, first produced at Paris, on March 11, 1867.

Doncaster (dong'kạs.tėr). [Latin, Danum; Saxon, Donecester, Doneceaster.] County borough, market town, and industrial center in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Don ab. 32 mi. S of York, 156 mi. N of London by rail. Its industries include coal mining, iron and steel works, and locomotive building and repairing. Doncaster is the shopping and social center of a thickly populated district. It was a river port in the Middle Ages. 81,896 (1951).

Doncaster, 1st Viscount of. A title of Hay, James.

Don César de Bazan (dôn sā.zär dẹ bä.zän'). French comedy by Philippe François Pinel Dumanoir and Adolphe Philippe Dennery, from an episode in Victor Hugo's play Ruy Blas, produced in 1844. The comedy has also been played in English. Don César is the ruined Count of Garofa; he assumes the name of Zafari, and retains in his rags his frank, gay nonchalance.

Don César de Bazan. Comic opera by Jules Massenet, first produced at Paris, on Nov. 30, 1872.

Don Cossacks (don kos'aks), Province (or Territory) of the. Former district in S Russia, situated in the valley of the lower Don River. The area has now been divided between the Rostov and Stalingrad oblasts (regions) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republics.

Donder (dôn.der), Théophile de. b. at Brussels, Belgium, 1872—. Belgian professor. He was graduated from the University of Brussels, where he taught mathematical physics, and was a visiting lecturer (1926) at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Donderberg (dun'dėr.bėrg). [Also, Dunderberg.] Chief mountain at the S entrance to the Highlands of the Hudson, in SE New York, opposite Peekskill. Elevation, ab. 865 ft.

Donders (dôn'dėrs), Frans Cornelis. b. at Tilburg, Netherlands, May 27, 1818; d. at Utrecht, Netherlands, March 24, 1889. Dutch oculist. His chief work is Anomalies of Accommodation and Refraction of the Eye (published by the Sydenham Society, 1865).

Dondo (don'dō). Town in Angola, in SW Africa, on the right bank of the Cuanza River and at the head of river navigation, ab. 100 mi. SE of Luanda. It is the terminus of several caravan roads, and the principal market for the coffee grown in the region. Pop. ab. 4,000.

Dondra Head (don'drạ). Southernmost cape of Ceylon, projecting into the Indian Ocean.

Donegal (don'ẹ.gôl, don.ẹ.gôl'). [Irish, Dún na nGall.] Maritime county in Ulster province, Irish Republic, the northwesternmost of the Irish counties. It is bounded on the N and W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E by Counties Londonderry and Tyrone (Northern Ireland), on the SE by County Fermanagh (Northern Ireland), and on the S by County Leitrim (Irish Republic) and Donegal Bay. The coastline is rugged and deeply indented. The surface is generally barren and mountainous, with many bogs and lakes. Most of the settlement is confined to the coastal plain where fishing and subsistence agriculture can be carried on. Large numbers of sheep are pastured on the uplands, providing wool for Donegal tweeds. There is no factory production, the textile manufacture being of the home-industry type. Donegal is the county seat; area, ab. 1,865 sq. mi.; pop. 131,511 (1951).

Donegal. Town in NW Irish Republic, county seat of County Donegal, at the head of Donegal Bay ab. 40 mi. SW of Londonderry. It is a small seaport and market town exporting grain, eggs, and butter, and has a castle, and ruins of a Franciscan monastery. 1,315 (1936).

Donegal Bay. Inlet of the Atlantic Ocean, lying between Connacht and Ulster provinces, and between Counties Donegal, Leitrim, and Sligo, in the Irish Republic, on the W coast of Ireland. Width, ab. 30 mi.

Donelaitis (dô.ne.lī'tis), Kristijonas. [Latinized, Donalitius.] b. at Lazdynėliai, in East Prussia, Jan. 1, 1714; d. at Tolminkiemis, Feb. 18, 1780. Most prominent of earlier Lithuanian poets. He studied Protestant theology at the University of Königsberg, and was pastor at Tolminkiemis from 1743 on. He was a strong supporter of the Lithuanian traditions and folkways in East Prussia, which was being Germanized in his time. In classical form, using the hexameter, he realistically portrayed the life and poverty of the Lithuanian serfs in the idyls Pavasario linksmybes (The Joys of Spring), Vasaros darbai (Summer's Toil), Rudens gerybes (The Fruits of Autumn), and Žiemos rūpesčiai (Winter's Hardships); he also wrote some fables in hexameter. These idyls were published posthumously in 1818 by L. Rėza (Rhesa) and are known as Metai (The Seasons). Other editions of his works by A. Schleicher (1865), G. F. F. Nesselmann (1869), J. Šlapelis (1914), M. Biržiška (1921, 1927), J. Ambrazevičius (1940).

Donelson (don'ęl.sọn), Andrew Jackson. b. near Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 25, 1800; d. at Memphis, Tenn., June 26, 1871. American diplomat and politician; son of the brother-in-law of Andrew Jackson. He graduated from West Point and served under Jackson in the Seminole War. He was secretary to Jackson during the latter's term as president. Donelson was in charge of the negotiations concerning the annexation of Texas to the U.S., a matter he successfully concluded. He was U.S. minister to Prussia (1846–49), and was the unsuccessful candidate of the American Party (the Know-Nothings) for vice-president in 1856, running on the ticket headed by Fillmore.

Donelson, Fort. Fortification in NW Tennessee, situated on the Cumberland River ab. 63 mi. W by NW of Nashville. In the Civil War it was invested (Feb. 12–14, 1862) by Union forces under General Grant. Having sustained a bombardment by the Union gunboats under Commodore Foote on February 14, the garrison (which numbered ab. 18,000 effectives) made an unsuccessful sortie on February 15. The fort was surrendered by General Buckner on February 16; his senior officers, Generals Floyd and Pillow, escaped by the river. The Union troops numbered 15,000 at the beginning of the investment, and ab. 27,000 at the surrender. It was on this occasion that Grant, in replying to Buckner's statement of conditions for capitulation, wrote the well-known words: "No terms except an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted." The Union loss (army and navy, February 14–16) was 510 killed, 2,152 wounded, and 224 missing; the Confederate loss was ab. 2,000 killed and wounded, and 13,000 captured. The area is now a national military park.

Donets (do.nyets'). [Also: Donetz, Donez.] River in the U.S.S.R., chiefly in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and in the Rostov oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, the chief tributary of the Don, which it joins ab. 75 mi. above its mouth. Flowing generally SE through the Ukraine, the river makes a wide swing to the S and SW before it joins the Don. In this bend is the Donets Basin (called the Donbas), one of the chief industrial regions of the U.S.S.R. Length, ab. 650 mi.

Donets Basin. [In Russia called the Donbas or Donbass.] Region in SW U.S.S.R., in the Donets River valley, in E Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and NW Rostov oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic. It is the greatest coal-mining region in the Soviet Union, with a production of ab. 78 million metric tons in 1938 (ab. 59 percent of the national total). The coal reserves are estimated at ab. 55 billion tons, of which over two thirds is anthracite. Coal mining began in 1790, and expanded especially in the last half of the 19th century, but the great growth of industrial cities and coking plants, chemical industries, iron and steel plants, and machinery industries took place in the 20th century. The Donbas was occupied by Axis armies in October, 1941 and was liberated by Russian forces in early 1943. Great damage was suffered by the mines and industries. Area, ab. 12,000 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 5,000,000 (1948).

Donez (do.nyets'). See Donets.

Don Felix (don fē'liks). See Felix, Don.

Don Fernando de Taos (don fėr.nan'dō dę tä'ōs, tous). See under Taos village.

Don Ferolo Whiskerandos (don fę.rō'lō hwis.kėr.an'dōz). See Whiskerandos, Don Ferolo.

Dongan (dong'gạn), Thomas. [Title, Earl of Limerick.] b. at Castletown, County Kildare, Ireland, 1634; d. at London, Dec. 14, 1715. Colonial governor of New York (1683–88). He was lieutenant governor (c1678–80) of Tangier and in 1682 was appointed governor of New York by the duke of York (later James II of England), replacing Edmund Andros. His governorship was marked by a stiffening of defenses against the French, including the establishment of a protectorate over the Iroquois and diplomatic and military moves. When New York was added to the Dominion of New England in 1688 he was superseded by Andros. In 1698 he became the 2nd Earl of Limerick, succeeding an elder brother.

Dongan Charter. Charter for the city of New York, granted by Thomas Dongan, lieutenant governor and vice-admiral of New York and its dependencies under James II of England, dated April 27, 1686. It remained in force until 1730. An early charter of the city of Albany, by the same authority, is known by the same name.

Don Garcia (dōn gär.chē'ä). Tragedy by Count Vittorio Alfieri, produced in 1785. It is drawn from the history of the Medici family; Don Garcia was one of the sons of Cosimo I (1519–74).

Don Garcie de Navarre (dôṅ gȧr.sē dę nȧ.vȧr). Play (1661) by Molière.

Don Giovanni (don jō.vän'i; Italian, dōn jō.vän'nē). [Full title, Don Giovanni, ossia il dissoluto punito; Eng. trans., "Don Juan, or the Libertine Punished."] Opera in two acts by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, with libretto by Lorenzo Da Ponte, first produced at Prague on Oct. 29, 1787. The legendary Spanish libertine, accompanied by his faithful but timorous servant Leporello, flees from the scorned Donna Elvira and from Donna Anna, whose father, the commendatore, he has slain. Don Giovanni becomes involved in a country wedding, at which he attempts to seduce Zerlina, the bride. His pursuers find him there, but again he manages to evade them by various tricks; his downfall comes when the murdered commendatore's statue comes to him at dinner to summon him to hell. The opera contains the duet La ci darem la mano and arias by Leporello (the catalogue aria) and Zerlina (Batti, batti, o bel Masetto).

Dong Nai (dông'nī'). [Also, Donnai.] River in SE Indochina, flowing from the high plateau of S Annam (Central Viet-Nam) generally SW to join the Saigon River in Cochin China (South Viet-Nam) ab. 5 mi. E of Saigon. In its middle course it descends sharply from the plateau to the lowland, with numerous falls. Length, ab. 280 mi.

Dongola (dong'gō.lą). Former province of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, now part of Northern Province. Merowe was the former capital. Dongola was captured (1885) by the Mahdi but was regained by the Egyptian army under General Kitchener, March–September, 1896.

Dongola. [Also: Ordeh, New Dongola.] Town in Northern Province, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, in NE Africa, on the Nile River above the third cataract. It was built c1820, and was the largest town in the old province of Dongola. It was abandoned by the Anglo-Egyptian forces to the Mahdists in 1885, and was recaptured by the Egyptian army under General Sir Herbert Kitchener, on Sept. 23, 1896. Pop. ab. 9,000.

Dongola, Old. Ruined town in Nubia, NE Africa, situated on the Nile ab. 76 mi. SE of the modern town of Dongola (or New Dongola).

Dongson (dông'sôn'). 1. Archaeological site in N Annam (Central Viet-Nam), where excavation of a cemetery of the 1st century A.D. yielded bronze objects of a previously unknown culture. 2. Tentative name given to the Bronze Age culture of further India which, c300 B.C. or earlier, reached Indonesia and introduced there bronze casting (tools, weapons, ornaments, ceremonial drums), probably weaving (ikat), and a style of art characterized by an exuberance of decorative detail with curvilinear design elements.

Donham (don'ạm), Wallace Brett. b. at Rockland, Mass., Oct. 26, 1877—. American educator. He has been dean (1919–42) of the Harvard graduate school of business administration, and professor of administration (1942 et seq.). He is the author of Business Adrift, Business Looks at the Unforeseen, Education for Responsible Living, and other books.

Doniol (do.nyol), Jean Henri Antoine. b. at Riom, France, April 20, 1818; d. at Paris, June 19, 1906. French historian. He served (1882 et seq.) as director of the state printing office. His main work was Histoire de la participation de la France à l'établissement des États-Unis d'Amérique (History of the Participation of France in the Foundation of the United States, 1886–99).

Doniphan (don'i.fan), Alexander William. b. in Mason County, Ky., July 9, 1808; d. at Richmond, Mo., Aug. 8, 1887. American officer in the Mexican War. He was an eminent lawyer in Missouri from 1830, successfully defending in criminal cases. He commanded a brigade against the Mormons and refused to carry out a court-martial sentence of death against Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders, a sentence later revoked. During the Mexican War, he was commanding officer in New Mexico, but gave the command over and conducted a regiment of Missourians from Valverde, N.M., to Chihuahua (December, 1846–March, 1847), fighting two battles on the way and covering more than 5,500 miles by land and water. This expedition is said to be one of the most brilliant long marches ever made.

Dönitz (dē'nits), Karl. See Doenitz or Dönitz, Karl.

Donizetti (don.i.zet'i; Italian, dō.nē.dzāt'tē), Gaetano. b. at Bergamo, Italy, Nov. 29, 1797; d. there, April 8, 1848. Italian operatic composer. He composed some 65 operas, among which are Anna Bolena (1830), L'Elisire d'Amore (1832), Lucia di Lammermoor (1835), Lucrezia Borgia (1834), La Favorita (1840), La Fille du Regiment, afterward La Figlia del Reggimento (1840), Linda di Chamounix (1842), and Don Pasquale (1843).

Don John (don' jon'). See John, Don.

Don Juan (don' wän'; also, especially in Byron, don jö'an; Spanish dōn ʜwän'). Legendary character of European tradition whose name is of Spanish origin. In the principal form of the legend, Don Juan Tenorio, who lived in the 14th century, the son of an illustrious family of Seville, killed the commandant Ulloa after having seduced his daughter. The Franciscan monks, wishing to put an end to the debaucheries of Don Juan, enticed him to their monastery and killed him, giving out that the statue of his victim (which had been erected there), incensed at an insult offered him (in the plays the statue of Ulloa is jeeringly invited to supper, and does come to the meal), had come down and dragged him to hell. Spanish and Italian plays were written on the subject, and Nicholas Drovin Dorimond introduced him to the French stage. Don Juan is the symbol of skeptical libertinism, and as such has been made the subject of the 17th-century drama El Burlador de Sevilla y Convidado de Piedra (The Deceiver of Seville and the Guest of Stone), by Gabriel Téllez (Tirso de Molina); of Molière's comedy Don Juan, ou le festin de Pierre (1665); of Mozart's opera Don Giovanni to Lorenzo da Ponte's libretto; of Christian Dietrich Grabbe's German drama Don Juan und Faust (1828); and of works by Thomas Corneille, Thomas Shadwell, Antonio de Zamora, Carlo Goldoni, Christoph Willibald Gluck, Alexandre Dumas the elder, José Zorilla y Moral, G. B. Shaw, and others. His name has become a synonym for libertine or rake. Byron's Don Juan takes only his name from the legend, the youthful introspective Byronic hero having no other connection with the cynical gallant of legend.

Don Juan. Incomplete poem by Byron, written in 1818 and published 1819–24.

Don Juan de Mañara (don wän' dā män.yä'ra). Opera in four acts by Eugene Goossens, with a libretto by Arnold Bennett, first performed at Covent Garden, London, on June 24, 1937.

Donker (dông'kėr), Anthonie. [Pseudonym of N. A. C. Donkersloot (dông'kėr.slōt).] b. 1902—. Dutch poet and essayist. A professor of Dutch literature at Amsterdam, he was a leader of the artists' resistance during the German occupation in World War II. His mildly melancholy poetry includes Acheron (1926), Grenzen (Boundaries, 1928), Kruistochten (Crusades, 1929), De draad van Ariadne (Ariadne's Thread, 1930), Gebroken Licht (Broken Light, 1934), Onvoltooide Symphonie (Unfinished Symphony, 1938), and Orpheus and Eurydice (1942). Some of his penetrating and well-considered essays (mainly published in Vrije Bladen, Nieuwe Stem, and Critisch Bulletin) were collected in Fausten en Faunen (1930), Ter Zake (To the Matter, 1932), De Schichtige Pegasus (Skittish Pegasus, 1932), and Hannibal over de Helicon? (1940). He has also written some novels and plays.

Donna (don'a). City in S Texas, in Hidalgo County, SW of Corpus Christi: shipping point for citrus fruits, winter vegetables, and canned goods. 7,171 (1950).

Donna Anna (dôn'nä än'nä). See Anna, Donna.

Donnacona (don.a.kō'na). Town in Portneuf County, Quebec, Canada, situated on the N bank of the St. Lawrence River, ab. 31 mi. W of the city of Quebec. 3,663 (1951).

Donna del Lago (dôn'nä del lä'gō), La. [Eng. trans., "The Lady of the Lake."] Opera, based on Sir Walter Scott's poem, by Rossini, with a libretto by Tottola, first produced at Naples on Oct. 4, 1819.

Donnai (dôn'nī'). See Dong Nai.

Donnay (do.nā), Maurice. [Full name, Charles Maurice Donnay.] b. at Paris, Oct. 12, 1859; d. March 31, 1945. French playwright. He was a versatile author of frivolous comedies like Education de Prince (1900) and La Patronne (1908); librettos for musical comedy, such as Le Mariage de Télémaque (1910, with Jules Lemaître) and Le Roi Candaule (1920); psychological dramas, including La Douloureuse (1897) and L'Autre Danger (1902); satires, such as La Clairière (1900, with Lucien Descaves); problem plays such as his study of the Jewish question Le Retour de Jérusalem (1903). A trained engineer and graduate of the Central School in 1885, he made his theatrical debut with a semiprofessional troupe at the Chat Noir cabaret (1890–92). His plays are marked by his active sense of humor and great common sense. His incidental writings include a biography of Musset (1926) and three volumes of memoirs.

Donn-Byrne (don'bėrn'), Brian Oswald. [Known as Donn Byrne.] b. at New York, Nov. 20, 1889; d. in County Cork, Ireland, June 18, 1928. Irish-American novelist and short-story writer. He was a staff member of the New Catholic Encyclopedia, the New Standard Dictionary, the Century Dictionary, the New York Sun, and the Brooklyn Eagle, and contributed stories to The Smart Set and Harper's. He was the author of The Stranger's Banquet (1919), The Foolish Matrons (1920), Messer Marco Polo (1921), his great success; The Wind That Bloweth (1922), The Changeling (1923), Blind Raftery (1924), Hangman's House (1926), Brother Saul (1927), Crusade (1928), Destiny Bay (1928), and Field of Honor (1929).

Donndorf (don'dôrf), Karl Adolf. b. at Weimar, Germany, Feb. 16, 1835; d. 1916. German sculptor, professor of sculpture at the art school at Stuttgart from 1877.

Donne (dun, don), John. b. at London, in 1571 or 1572 (1573 according to his friend and biographer Isaak Walton); d. there, March 31, 1631. English poet and divine, the first and greatest of the so-called metaphysical poets. On his mother's side he was connected with Sir Thomas More and John Heywood. He was brought up as a Roman Catholic, and was educated at Oxford (1584), Cambridge (1587), and Lincoln's Inn (1592). In 1596 and 1597 he took part in the expeditions led by the earl of Essex against Cádiz and the Azores. In 1597 he was appointed secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, but lost his post in 1601 by his clandestine marriage to Egerton's niece, and was imprisoned (1602) for a time, the marriage being a violation of both common and canon law. After several years spent in fruitless attempts to obtain a position through court favor, his Pseudo-Martyr (1610) won him the notice of King James I. James, however, refused to promote him except in the Anglican Church, and at last, in 1615, Donne received Anglican orders. He was appointed successively royal chaplain, reader in divinity at Lincoln's Inn, and finally, in 1621, dean of Saint Paul's. In his later years he was widely regarded as the foremost preacher of his day.

Writings. Most of Donne's poems circulated in manuscript during his lifetime, and his collected poems were not published until 1633, after his death. His prose works include over 150 sermons, Ignatius his Conclave (a satirical attack on the Jesuits), and a small book of Devotions (written during a serious illness in 1623), from which Ernest Hemingway took the title For Whom the Bell Tolls. Donne's reputation stood very high during the 17th century, but during the 18th and 19th centuries, though never completely forgotten, he was little read. His modern reputation owes much to the edition of the Poems by H. J. C. Grierson (1912) and to the influence of the criticism of T. S. Eliot. Donne is best known for his love poems, his sonnet to Death (Death, be not Proud), and his Anniversaries, two elegies in memory of the 16-year-old Elizabeth Drury. His poetry is contrary to the courtly Petrarchan tradition established in English by Wyatt and Surrey; his approach is more natural, his attitude towards woman cynical, his writing more abrupt and witty.

Donne, John. [Called the Younger.] b. in May, 1604; d. at London, 1662. English writer; son of John Donne (c1573–1631). He was educated at Westminster School and at Oxford, where he was known for his dissipations. After an acquittal on a charge of manslaughter for the death of a young boy, he left for Padua, where he became a doctor of laws; upon his return to England he took holy orders (c1638). Some of his father's papers he gave to Izaak Walton the younger. He was the author of Donnes Satyr (1661–62), an indecent volume.

Donnelly (don'el.i), Ignatius. b. at Philadelphia, Nov. 3, 1831; d. at Minneapolis, Jan. 1, 1901. American author, politician, and reformer. He settled in Minnesota in the 1850's, going into farming after the failure of a land venture in the panic of 1857. He became a Republican in politics, and at 28 years of age became lieutenant governor of Minnesota, later serving (1863–69) as a member of Congress. Abandoning the Republican ranks, he became a crusader against vested interests, edited (1874–79) the weekly Anti-Monopolist, served (1874–78) as a member of the state senate, and was affiliated on separate occasions with the Liberal Republican, Granger, and Greenback parties. Retiring from politics for a time, he took to study and writing, producing Atlantis: The Antediluvian World (1882), whose thesis is that civilization began in the legendary land of Atlantis; Ragnarok: The Age of Fire and Gravel (1883), in which the author argues the earth's collision with a comet in prehistoric times; and The Great Cryptogram (1888), in which he undertook to prove that Bacon was the author of Shakespeare's plays. He also wrote the futuristic novel Caesar's Column; a Story of the Twentieth Century (1891). In the late 1880's he became president of the Minnesota Farmers' Alliance, and led it into the Populist Party, in which he took a leading role. In his later years he edited the Populist Representative and served again in the Minnesota state legislature. Donnelly's success as a writer (both Atlantis and Ragnarok were very well received) was matched by his fame as an orator.

Donner (don'ėr), Georg Raphael. b. at Essling, Austria, May 25, 1692; d. at Vienna, Feb. 15, 1741. Austrian sculptor. He entered the imperial service in 1724, and in 1729 that of Prince Esterházy. His greatest works are the fountain on the Mehlmarkt and the fountain of Perseus at the old town hall, Vienna.

Donner Lake (don'ėr). Small lake in Nevada County, E California, in the Sierra Nevada.

Donner Party. Group of emigrants (including the Donner family from Sangamon County, Ill.) who camped (1846–47) at Truckee Lake (now Donner Lake) in the Sierra Nevada mountains while en route to California. Because of a wrong turn they lost time after leaving Fort Bridger, in Wyoming, and were trapped when heavy October snows blocked the passes. Their winter stay was marked by extreme hardship caused by starvation and bitter cold; of the 87 who originally made camp, only 47 survived, and most or all of these lived only because of their recourse to cannibalism. The survivors were finally rescued by California settlers who broke through the snowdrifts.

Donner Pass. Pass in N central California, through the Sierra Nevada range ab. 96 mi. by road NE of Sacramento. In the winter of 1846–47 the Donner Party, traveling overland from Illinois to California, was trapped in the severe winter conditions of this region, and nearly half of the group of 87 persons perished. The main transcontinental railroad to San Francisco traverses the pass, and in January, 1952, the modern streamlined train City of San Francisco was marooned in snowdrifts for four days here. Elevation, ab. 7,135 ft.

Donnissan (do.nē.säń), Marie Louise Victoire de. See La Rochejacquelein or La Rochejaquelein, Marie Louise Victoire de Donnissan, Marquise de.

Donnithorne (don'i.thôrn), Arthur. In George Eliot's novel Adam Bede, a vain, weak, good-natured young man, whose remorse for Hetty Sorrel's ruin lies chiefly in his chagrin at being found out and losing the approbation of his acquaintances.

Donnybrook (don'i.brůk). Town and parish in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Dublin. Donnybrook is now a part of the city of Dublin, located ab. 3 mi. SE of the city center. The town was formerly famous for its fair (held in August), proverbial for its good-humored rioting, established under King John and suppressed in 1855. It is now the center of an expensive residential district. 278 (1936).

Dono (dô'nō), Paolo di. See Uccello, Paolo.

Donora (do.nôr'ą). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Washington County, on the Monongahela River near Pittsburgh: zinc smelting; manufactures of iron, steel, and wire. Founded in 1900, it was incorporated in 1901. Donora became the center of a news sensation in 1948 when smoke-impregnated fog blanketed the town, causing 20 deaths and making over 5,000 persons ill. 12,186 (1950).

Donoso (dō.nō'sō), Justo. b. at Santiago, Chile, 1800; d. at La Serena, Chile, Feb. 22, 1868. Chilean bishop. He was rector of a theological seminary at Santiago, lecturer at the university, and judge of the ecclesiastical court. He was named bishop of Ancud, Chile, in 1844, and was translated to the see of La Serena in 1855. His works on canonical law are authoritative throughout South America. A founder of Revista Católica, he wrote Instituciones de derecho canónico americano (1849), and others.

Donoso Cortés (kôr.tās'), Juan Francisco María de la Salud. [Title, Marquis of Valdegamas.] b. at El-Valle, Estremadura, Spain, May 6, 1809; d. at Paris, May 3, 1853. Spanish politician, diplomat, and writer. His works include Consideraciones sobre la diplomacia (1834) and La ley electoral (1835).

Donovan (don'ọ.vąn), Dick. Pseudonym of Muddock, Joyce Emerson Preston.

Donovan, Edward. d. at London, Feb. 1, 1837. English naturalist concerning whose personal history little is known except that he was in early life possessed of a considerable fortune, which enabled him to travel and make collections of objects in natural history. His chief work is General Illustrations of Entomology.

Donovan, William Joseph. [Called "Wild Bill" Donovan.] b. at Buffalo, N.Y., Jan. 1, 1883—. American soldier and lawyer. Received A.B. (1905) and LL.B. (1907) from Columbia; served in World War I as colonel of 42d infantry division; received (1918) Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery in action near Landres and St.-Georges, France; assistant (1925–29) to U.S. attorney general; served (July, 1941–June, 1942) as U.S. coördinator of information; chief (1942–45) of office of strategic services; promoted to brigadier general (1943) and major general (1945); resumed (1945) law practice.

Don Pasquale (dōn päs.kwä'lā). Opera in three acts by Donizetti, with libretto by Cammerano, first produced at Paris on Jan. 4, 1843. The story deals with the machinations of Dr. Malatesta to secure Don Pasquale's consent to the marriage of Ernesto, the Don's nephew, to Norina.

Don Pedro (dōn pā'drō). See Pedro, Don.

Don Quichotte (dôń kē.shot). Opera in five acts by Jules Massenet, with a libretto by Henri Cain based on Cervantes's work, first produced at Monte Carlo in February, 1910.

Don Quixote (don kę.hō'tę, kwik'sōt; Spanish, dōn kē.hō'tā). [Full Spanish title, Don Quijote de la Mancha.] Spanish satirical romance by Cervantes, printed at Madrid in two parts, the first in 1605, the second in 1615. When the second part was nearly completed (1614), an impudent attempt to malign the character of Cervantes was made by Alonso Fernandes de Avellaneda of Tordesillas (thought to be a pseudonym of Luis de Aliaga), who produced a pretended continuation of the first part. Translations of Don Quixote have appeared in every European language, including Turkish. The principal English translations are those of Shelton (1612–20), Motteux (1719), Jarvis (1742), Ormsby (1885), and Putnam (1949). The book is named after its hero, a Spanish country gentleman, who is so imbued with tales of chivalry that he saddles up his nag Rosinante and sets forth with his squire Sancho Panza in search of knightly adventure to honor his lady Dulcinea del Toboso, really an ordinary country girl. At the beginning of the work Cervantes announces it to be his sole purpose to break down the vogue and authority of books of chivalry, and at the end he declares anew that he had "had no other desire than to render abhorred of men the false and absurd stories contained in books of chivalry," exulting in his success as an achievement of no small moment. The work was considered at first to be no more than hilarious satire (the Spanish themselves were notoriously slow to value the book properly), but in time perceptive readers of all countries saw beyond the surface laughter to the thoughtful and skillfully handled treatment of the idealist in a materialistic world, so that its comedy becomes the comedy of irony, not too far removed from something akin to tragedy.

Don Quixote. Orchestral tone poem (Opus 35) by Richard Strauss, composed in 1897 and first performed at Cologne in 1898. The work, in the form of variations, takes Don Quixote (cello) and Sancho Panza (viola) through their adventures; the music is often imitative, for instance in the bleating of sheep as portrayed by woodwinds.

Don Quixote in England. Comedy by Henry Fielding, produced in 1734.

Don River (don; Russian, dôn). See Don.

Dons (dôns), Aage Bergishagen. b. at Svanholm, Denmark, Aug. 19, 1903—. Danish novelist, whose best novel is said to be Her mødes alle Veje (Where All Roads Meet, 1941). He is noted for sensuous background and exciting plots.

Don Saltero's Coffee House (don sôl.tār'ōz). House formerly standing in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, London. It contained not only an eating house but a museum of natural curiosities. It was founded by John Salter c1690. It was torn down in 1866.

Don Sanche d'Aragon (dôṅ sänsh dȧ.rȧ.gôṅ). Comedy by Pierre Corneille, produced in 1650. It was partly taken from a Spanish play, El Palacio confuso.

Don Sebastiano (dōn sā.bäs.tyä'nō). Opera by Gaetano Donizetti, first produced at Paris in 1843.

Don Segundo Sombra (dōn sā.gōn'dō sōm'brä). Prose work in the gaucho tradition by the Argentine writer Ricardo Guiraldes (1886–1927). Published in 1926, it was Guiraldes's last extended work.

Dont (dont), Jacob. b. at Vienna, March 2, 1815; d. Nov. 17, 1888. Austrian virtuoso violinist. He taught (1873 et seq.) at Vienna and composed violin studies.

Donus (dō'nus). [Also, Domnus.] b. at Rome; d. April 11, 678. Pope from 676 to 678. Little is known of his brief reign. Under him Archbishop Reparatus submitted to the Holy See, thus ending the minor schism begun by Archbishop Maurus when he declared the church of Ravenna to be independent.

Donzel del Phebo (dôn.zel' del fā'bō). See Phebo, Donzel del.

Doo (dö), George Thomas. b. at Christchurch, Surrey, England, Jan. 6, 1800; d. at Sutton, Surrey, England, Nov. 13, 1886. English engraver and painter. He was historical engraver in ordinary to William IV (1836–37), and to Queen Victoria in 1842. His first published engraving, The Duke of York, appeared in 1824.

D'Ooge (dō'gi), Benjamin Leonard. b. at Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 10, 1860—. American classical scholar, professor of ancient languages at the Michigan State Normal College from 1886. He was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1881, and took his doctor's degree at the University of Bonn in 1901. His works include textbooks, editions of Latin texts, and others.

Dooley (dö'li), Mr. Humorous character created by Finley Peter Dunne. Mr. Dooley is an Irish-American saloon-keeper in "Archey Road," Chicago, whose comments on topics of the day are compounded of shrewd wit and common sense. The Mr. Dooley books appeared from 1898 (Mr. Dooley in Peace and in War) to 1919 (Mr. Dooley on Making a Will); the Dooley sketches appeared from 1893.

Doolin de Mayence (do.o.laṅ dę mȧ.yäṅs). [Also, Doon de Mayence.] French chanson de geste of the 14th century, adapted as a prose romance in the 15th century. It was first published in 1501. Alxinger, a German poet, made (1787) a translation in the form of an epic poem. Doolin, or Doon, was the son of Guy of Mayence, and the ancester of Ogier the Dane. His name is attached to a whole cycle of the Charlemagne chansons de geste, those dealing with the false knights, the family of Ganelon; included here are such chansons as The Four Sons of Aymon.

Doolittle (dö'lit.l), Hilda. [Pseudonym, H.D.] b. at Bethlehem, Pa., Sept. 10, 1886—. American imagist poet. She attended Bryn Mawr College, went (1911) to Europe, and in 1913 married the poet and novelist Richard Aldington. One of the first Imagist poets, and influenced by the work and encouragement of Ezra Pound, she is the author of Sea Garden (1916), Hymen (1921), Heliodora and Other Poems (1924), Collected Poems (1940). Her novels include Palimpsest (1926), Hedylus (1928), and The Hedgehog (1936). Among her later poetic writings are The Walls Do Not Fall (1944), Tribute to Angels (1945), and Flowering of the Rod (1946).

Doolittle, James Harold. b. at Alameda, Calif., Dec. 14, 1896—. American air-force officer, notable as leader of the first bombing raid over Japan in World War II. Trained at the University of California, he served as a flight and gunnery instructor during World War I; engaged after the war in stunt flying; served (1919–21) with the border patrol; was an army flier until 1930. He received an M.S. (1924) and a D.Sc. (1925) from Massachusetts Institute of Technology; worked (1924 et seq.) in aviation research and testing; winner of numerous speed records (1922; Bendix trophy 1931; world's landplane record 1932, and others); appointed (1934) member of U.S. air corps investigating commission. He was recalled (1940) to army duty as major; awarded Congressional Medal of Honor for B-25 raid on Tokyo (April, 1942), the raid marking the first attack by medium bombers from an aircraft carrier; major general in command (1942) of U.S. air forces in North African invasion; commanded (1944 et seq.) 8th air force in Europe; promoted (1944) to lieutenant general; retired (1946) from army.

Doolittle Raid. Earliest attempt by the U.S. in World War II to strike direct return blows at the Japanese. The raid was carried out by a bombing squadron of 16 B-25 planes led by Colonel James Doolittle. The planes took off from the aircraft carrier Hornet on April 18, 1942, and dropped their explosives over Tokyo. After the raid it was necessary to make landings on the Asiatic mainland; some men were lost in these landings, while others found safety with Chinese rescuers.

Doomsday (dömz'dā). Novel by Warwick Deeping, published in 1926. The title derives from a Sussex farm where the action of the story takes place.

Doomsday. See Judgment Day.

Doomsday Book. See Domesday Book.

Doon (dön). River in SW Scotland, in Ayrshire. It rises in Loch Doon, on the Ayrshire-Kirkcudbrightshire boundary, and flows NW to the Firth of Clyde ab. 2 mi. S of Ayr. It is celebrated in the poetry of Burns. Length, ab. 27 mi.

Doon de Mayence (do.ôṅ dę mȧ.yäṅs). See Doolin de Mayence.

Doorman (dōr'män), Karel Willem Frederik Marie. b. at Utrecht, Netherlands, April 23, 1889; d. Feb. 26, 1942. Dutch naval officer. He was trained at the Royal Naval Institute of Den Helder. He met his death in World War II as commander of the Dutch fleet in the battle of the Java Sea.

Doorn (dōrn). Commune and village in C Netherlands, in Utrecht province, ab. 10 mi. SE of the city of Utrecht. The Huis te Doorn, now a museum, was the exile residence of Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany from 1919 until his death in 1941. Pop. of commune, 6,313 (1949); of village, ab. 4,000 (1949).

Doornik (dōr'nik). Flemish name of Tournai.

Door Peninsula (dōr, dôr). Peninsula in NE Wisconsin, between Green Bay and Lake Michigan. It is a well-developed farming and resort area. North of Sturgeon Bay there are extensive cherry orchards, and on the W side of the peninsula, very picturesque limestone rock formations along Green Bay. Area, ab. 700 sq. mi.; pop. 32,844 (1950).

Doppler (dop'lėr), Christian Johann. b. at Salzburg, Germany, Nov. 30, 1803; d. at Venice, March 17, 1853. German physicist and mathematician, professor of experimental physics (1851–53) at the University of Vienna. The important principle that when the source of waves of light or sound moves away from the observer the waves appear to become less frequent, and vice versa, was announced by him in his paper Über das farbige Licht der Doppelsterne (1842). Explained by Armand Fizeau in 1848, this principle has been used to build a picture of an expanding universe in the modern astronomical theories; the spectra of distant universes show a shift of lines towards the red end of the spectrum, indicating that the nebulae so photographed are moving away from the earth because the frequency of spectral lines is less than it would be if the observed star systems were relatively stationary with respect to the earth.

Dor (dôr). [Also: Dora (dō'rą).] Site of an ancient city in W Israel, ab. 15 mi. S of Haifa. It was the southernmost of the early Phoenician cities, was conquered by Joshua (Josh. xi. 1, 2; xii. 23), and was incorporated in the kingdom of Solomon as a district capital. Later it was tributary to Assyria, and in the 5th century B.C. to Athens. Dor was destroyed in the wars of the Diadochi in the late 4th century B.C. Later rebuilt, it was annexed to the Roman Empire by Pompey in 63 B.C. Dor was a small city, but heavily fortified. Its heaps of formless ruins lie just N of Tantura or Nasholim, on the coast.

Dora (dō'rą). Play by Victorien Sardou, produced in 1877, and played in English under the title Diplomacy.

Dora. Poem by Alfred Tennyson.

Dora, Sister. See Pattison, Dorothy Wyndlow.

Dora Baltea (dō'rä bäl'tā.ä). [Latin, Duria Major.] River in N Italy, a tributary of the Po, in Piedmont. It rises in the Mont Blanc group, and joins the Po E of Turin. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Dora d'Istria (dō'rä dēs'trē.ä). [Pseudonym of Helene Ghica, Princess Koltzoff Massalsky.] b. at Bucharest, Rumania, Feb. 3, 1828; d. at Florence, Nov. 17, 1888. Rumanian writer. Among her works are La Vie monastique dans l'église orientale (1855), La Suisse allemande (1856), Les Femmes en Orient (1860), Des femmes par une femme (1864), and others.

Dorak-el-Atik (dō.räk'el.ā.tēk'). Town in W Iran, in Khuzistan, ab. 50 mi. NE of Abadan: a minor trading center. Pop. ab. 12,000.

Doralice (dō.rä.lē'chā). Daughter of the king of Granada in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso. She becomes the wife of Mandricardo, but is also loved by Rodomonte, to whom she had been betrothed. After the death of Mandricardo she is willing to give herself to his victor, Ruggiero.

Doralice. Tale, form of the Cinderella story, in Straparola's Nights.

Doralice (dor'ą.lis). Wife of Rhodophil in John Dryden's comedy Marriage à la Mode, remarkable for her brilliant philosophy of flirtation in the last act.

Doralice (dō.rä.lē'chā). Opera by Mercadante, first produced at Vienna in 1824.

Doran (dō'rąn), John. b. at London, March 11, 1807; d. there, Jan. 25, 1878. English journalist and miscellaneous writer. He was editor of Notes and Queries from 1869 until his death. His works include Lives of the Queens of England of the House of Hanover (1855), Their Majesties' Servants (1860), and many works on stage history.

Dorante (do.rănt). Liar in Pierre Corneille's comedy Le Menteur. He surpasses even the women of the play in dissimulation. He seems to lie in a spirited manner for the sake of lying, not from self-interest. In the sequel to this play (La Suite du Menteur) he has reformed.

Dorante. Name of three courtly and witty gallants, somewhat differing in characteristics, in Molière's comedies Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (where he is a count enamored of the Marquise Dorimène), L'École des femmes, and Les Fâcheux.

Dora Riparia (dō'rä rē.pä'ryä). [Latin, Duria Minor.] River in N Italy, a headstream of the Po, which it joins near Turin.

Dora Spenlow (dō'rą spen'lō). See Spenlow, Dora.

Dorat (do.rä) or Daurat (dō.rä), Jean. b. at Limoges, France, c1508; d. at Paris, Nov. 1, 1588. French poet and scholar. A member of the Pléiade (among which were his pupils Ronsard, du Bellay, Belleau, and Baïf) he was called by his contemporaries "the modern Pindar." His influence as mentor and president of the Pléiade was great; his own writing was minor poetry. He was appointed professor of Greek in the Royal College in 1560.

Dorax (dō'raks). Renegade in Dryden's tragedy Don Sebastian: a noble Portuguese, formerly Don Alonzo de Sylvera, governor of Alcazar. He has been thought to be the best of Dryden's tragic characters.

Dorcas (dôr'kąs). [Also, Tabitha.] In the New Testament (Acts, ix. 36), a woman who was full of good deeds, and made coats and garments for the poor; hence, a Dorcas society is a society of the women of a church who supply garments to the needy.

Dorcas. In Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale, a shepherdess.

Dorcas Zeal (zēl). See Zeal, Arabella and Dorcas.

Dorchester (dôr'ches"tėr, -chęs.tėr). [Middle English, Dorchestre, Dorcestre; Old English, Dorceaster, Dorce-ceaster, Dorces ceaster, Dorcaceaster; Latin, Durnovaria.] Municipal borough, and the county seat of Dorsetshire, in SW England, situated on the river Frome ab. 6 mi. N of Weymouth, ab. 135 mi. SW of London by rail. It has a Roman amphitheater known as Maumbury Rings. 11,623 (1951).

Dorchester. Village in Oxfordshire, England, situated near Oxford, important in the early Middle Ages.

Dorchester. Formerly a town in E Massachusetts, in Norfolk County, situated on Massachusetts Bay ab. 4 mi. S of Boston. It was annexed to Boston in 1870.

Dorchester, 1st Baron. Title of Carleton, Sir Guy.

Dorchester, Countess of. Title of Sedley, Catharine.

Dordogne (dor.dony'). Department in W France, bounded by the departments of Haute-Vienne on the N, the departments of Corrèze and Lot on the E, the department of Lot-et-Garonne on the S, and the departments of Charente, Charente-Maritime, and Gironde on the W. It corresponds to the old province of Périgord and parts of Limousin, Angoumois, and Saintonge. It went to the crown of France in the reign of Henry IV. The department contains a number of churches and other monuments dating from the Middle Ages. The city of Bergerac, made famous by Rostand's play Cyrano de Bergerac, is within its borders. It is a predominantly agricultural department, producing grain, potatoes, wine, hogs, and poultry. Truffles are a specialty. There are a number of industries, mainly flour mills, dairies, canning factories, and metallurgical plants. The population is declining. Capital, Périgueux; area, 3,550 sq. mi.; pop. 387,643 (1946).

Dordogne River. [Latin, Duranius.] River in W France which joins the Garonne ab. 14 mi. N of Bordeaux. Length, ab. 300 mi.; navigable for steamships to Libourne.

Dordrecht (dôr'drecht). [Also, Dort.] Town in W Netherlands, in the province of South Holland, situated on an island in the Maas (Meuse) River, ab. 12 mi. SE of Rotterdam. It is a river port, with shipyards and considerable trade. Machinery, instruments, chemicals, and biscuits are produced. The older part of the town is traversed by canals; it has a Gothic cathedral with an unfinished tower, interesting houses and gates of the Renaissance period, and art collections. The town was founded in 1018, was one of the wealthiest commercial centers of the country in the Middle Ages, and was a member of the Hanseatic League. The first assembly of the Protestant provinces of the Netherlands after the successful revolt against Spain was held here on July 15, 1572. It was the scene of a religious convention, known as the Synod of Dort, in the period 1618–19. The harbor installations were heavily damaged in World War II. 71,808 (est. 1951).

Dore (dôr), Monts or Mont. [Also, Mont-Dore.] Mountain mass in S central France, in the department of Puy-de-Dôme. Highest peak, Puy-de-Sancy (6,185 ft.).

Doré (do.rā), Paul Gustave. b. at Strasbourg, Jan. 6, 1832; d. at Paris, Jan. 23, 1883. French artist. From 1848, when he made his first series of sketches for the Journal pour Rire, he executed a great number of designs, paintings, and statues, and by 1850 had made his reputation. In 1861 he was decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor. His work, originally woodcuts and then engravings by others of his pen drawings, is highly imaginative and rides on his keen sense of humor and fantasy. He illustrated Histoire de Napoléon (1854), Légende du Juif errant (1856), Contes drolatiques de Balzac (1856), Exercices de Mirecourt (1857), Voyage aux Pyrénées de M. Taine (1859), Dantes Commedia de Dante (1861), Contes de Perrault (1861), Don Quichotte (1863), The Bible (1865–66), Fables de La Fontaine (1867), Tennyson's poems Elaine and Vivien (1866–68), and others. Among his oil paintings are Paolo and Francesca da Rimini, Babil Among Cast Down (1860), Gamblers-Hall at Baden-Baden, The Neophyte (1868), The Triumph of Christianity, and Christ leaving the Prætorium.

Doremus (dō'rē·mus), Charles Avery. b. at New York, Sept. 6, 1851; d. Dec. 2, 1925. American chemist; son of Robert Ogden Doremus. He was professor of chemistry and toxicology in the medical department of the University of Buffalo (1877–82) and in the American Veterinary College of New York (1882–92), adjunct professor in Bellevue Hospital Medical College (1879–97), assistant professor of chemistry in the College of the City of New York (1897–1903), and acting professor there (1903–04). He published Report on Photography, Vienna Exposition (1873), "Gaseous Poisons" in Textbook of Legal Medicine and Toxicology (1903), and others.

Doremus, Robert Ogden. b. at New York, Jan. 11, 1824; d. there, March 22, 1906. American chemist; professor of chemistry and toxicology and medical jurisprudence in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and of chemistry and physics in the College of the City of New York.

Doremus, Sarah Platt. [Maiden name, Haines.] b. at New York, Aug. 8, 1802; d. Jan. 29, 1877. American philanthropist and social worker. She organized a home (now Isaac T. Hopper House) for discharged women prisoners, and assisted in the founding of the House and School of Industry (1850), The Nursery and Child's Hospital (1854), the Woman's Hospital of the State of New York (1855), and the Woman's Union Missionary Society (1860).

Dörfler (dërf'lër), Peter. b. at Untergermaringen, Germany, 1878—. German novelist. As a South German Catholic priest he has been interested in the religious aspects of his characters' lives and in the social problems of the peasantry. The scene of his stories is the Algäu (or Allgäu), a mountainous district in S Bavaria. The most ambitious of these are the two trilogies Apostata (1930–32) and Allein (1934–36).

Dorfman (dôrf'măn), Joseph. b. at Romanovska, Russia, March 27, 1906—. American teacher and economist. He was graduated from Reed College (B.A., 1924) and Columbia (Ph.D., 1927), and in 1948 became full professor at Columbia. His works include Thorstein Veblen and His America (1934) and The Economic Mind in American Civilization (Vols I–II, 1946; Vol. III, 1949).

Dorgan (dôr'găn), Thomas Aloysius. [Pseudonym, "Tad."] b. at San Francisco, April 29, 1877; d. at Great Neck, N.Y., May 2, 1929. American cartoonist and sports commentator. He was cartoonist (until 1902) on the San Francisco Bulletin and (1902 et seq.) on William Randolph Hearst's New York Journal, creating of the cartoon characters "Judge Rumhouser" and "Silk Hat Harry," and credited with originating the slang expressions "23 skidoo" and "Yes, we have no bananas."

Dorgelès (dôr zhe lès), Roland. Pseudonym of R. Lécavelé; full name, Roland Lécavelé. b. at Amiens, France, June 15, 1886—. French novelist. He is the author of Les Croix de bois (1919; Eng. trans., Wooden Crosses, 1921), Le Cabaret de la Belle Femme (1919; Eng. trans., The Cabaret of the Lost Hope, 1930), and Le Réveil des morts (1923), as well as of travel books and two volumes on Bohemian life in Montmartre, La Hutte en bandouliers (1932 and Quand j'étais bohème (1930). Leaving the École des Arts Décoratifs (1902), he lived the Bohemian life of Montmartre for a decade, served in the army in World War I, and emerged with the manuscript of what proved an immensely successful novel of soldier life; some of his later work has enhanced the popularity of Les Croix de bois. He was elected to the Goncourt Academy in 1929.

Dorhosye (dōr.hōs'yā). [Also: Dokhosie, Dorossie.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting E Ivory Coast, to the W of the Lobi people. Their population is estimated at ab. 4,000 (by H. Labouret, Les Tribus du Rameau Lobi, 1931). They have exogamous matrilineal clans, and chiefs were lacking before the establishment of French rule. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principle food is millet. They have adopted Mohammedanism.

Doria (dō'ryä), Andrea. [Called "Liberator of Genoa."] b. at Oneglia, Italy, Nov. 30, 1468; d. at Genoa, Italy, Nov. 25, 1560. Genoese admiral and statesman. He was a captain-general under Francis I of France, but when the king refused to fulfill his contract with Doria, the latter left his service. He joined the forces of the emperor Charles V and in 1528 he freed Genoa from the French. Doria set up a republic, aristocratic and under the protection of the emperor, but independent. He served with distinction in the imperial forces against the Turks, and achieved the capture of Tunis (1535) in Charles V's expedition against the Turkish city. He retired (1544) to Genoa from the emperor's service, but was forced to flee the city when a conspiracy against him flared up in 1547. He returned and regained his old power, suppressing victoriously all further factional disputes. From 1553 to 1555, in his eighties, he led the Genoese forces against the French on Corsica after the French had seized the island. There is a celebrated portrait of him, by Sebastiano del Piombo, in the Palazzo Doria, Rome.

Dorian Hexapolis (dō'ri.an hek.sap'ō.lis). See Hexapolis, Dorian.

Dorians (dō'ri.anz). One of the traditional branches of the ancient Greek people.

Doricha (dō'ri.ka). Real name of Rhodopis.

Doricourt (dor'i.kōrt). Brilliant man of the world in Hannah Cowley's comedy The Belle's Stratagem. His wit, humor, and courtliness make him the fashion, while his taste for French piquancy renders him impervious to the charm of English beauty.

Dorigen (dor'i.gen). In Chaucer's Franklin's Tale, the faithful wife of Arviragus. She was beloved by Aurelius, "a lusty squire," and to escape his importunity said she would never listen to him till all the rocks on the seashore were removed. He having by magic removed them, Arviragus sacrificed her to her promise. When Aurelius beheld her gentle obedience to her husband's overstrained sense of honor, he released her from the bargain. Chaucer took the story from Boccaccio's Decamerone and Galleria.

Dorigny (dō·rē·nyē'), Michel. b. at St. Quentin, France, 1617; d. 1666. French painter and engraver; father of Sir Nicolas Dorigny (c1657–1746). Examples of his work as a painter are preserved in the Louvre and in the Madrid Gallery, but he is better known for his powerful work as an engraver.

Dorigny, Sir Nicolas. b. at Paris, c1657; d. 1746. French engraver; son of Michel Dorigny (1617–66). Although he received under his father, he turned to the law as a profession, and practised for several years until at the age of 30 ill-health interfered with his career. Returning thereupon to art, he went to Italy for further study and remained there more than 20 years. Thereafter he went to England by invitation of Queen Anne to make engravings from works of Raphael at Hampton Court. These were completed by 1719, and in recognition of their excellence Dorigny was made a knight by George I in 1720. In 1725 he returned to France, and became a member of the French Academy.

Dorimant (dor'i.mant). In Etherege's comedy The Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter, a witty and fashionable libertine, intended as a portrait of the Earl of Rochester.

Dorimène (dō·rē·mēn). In Molière's Le Cocu imaginaire, the wife of Sganarelle. Dorimène is also introduced in a later play, Le Mariage forcé, where she consents to marry Sganarelle, who is much older than she, with the intention of deceiving him.

Dorimène. Lady of rank in Molière's comedy Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. She is loved by Dorante.

Dorinda (dō·rin'dä). [Also, Dorine.] In Guarini's Pastor Fido, an impulsive, passionate girl.

Dorinda (dō·rin'dä). Sister of Miranda in Dryden and D'Avenant's version of The Tempest. Like Miranda, she has seen no man but her father.

Dorinda. In Farquhar's comedy The Beaux' Stratagem, the daughter of Lady Bountiful. She falls in love with and marries Aimwell, whose stratagem to win a rich wife thus succeeds.

Dorine (dô.rēn). In Molière's comedy Tartufe, the caustic but faithful waiting woman of Marianne. This name was given in the old French theatrical nomenclature to an intriguing soubrette.

Dorion (dô.ryôṅ), Sir Antoine Aimé. b. at Sainte Anne de la Pérade, Quebec, Canada, Jan. 17, 1816; d. at Montreal, May 31, 1891. Canadian politician and jurist. He was admitted to the bar in 1842, achieved prominence as a lawyer, and entered politics in 1854, being elected to the legislative assembly of Canada, where he became the leader of the young liberals. He was to the fore in demanding representation according to population. At first he advocated federation of the provinces, later opposed it as inimical to French Canadian interests, but accepted it when the Dominion of Canada was established, and sat in the Dominion House of Commons from 1867 to 1874. He accepted the post of minister of justice in 1873, but resigned in 1874 upon his appointment as chief justice of the court of Queen's Bench of the Province of Quebec. He was made a knight in 1877.

Doriot (dô.ryō), Jacques. b. at Bresles, Oise, France, 1898; d. in SW Germany, as a result of an airplane attack, in February, 1945. French fascist leader, one of the most active supporters (1937–45) of collaboration with Nazi Germany. A Communist leader (1920–34), he turned to fascism, founding the Parti Populaire Français in 1936; was forced to resign (1937) as mayor of the Paris suburb of St.-Denis for irregularities in office; after the fall of France organized an anti-Bolshevist legion; and fought (1942) in the German army on the Russian front. His efforts to enter the Vichy government failed. Documents found after the defeat of Germany showed that he had been an agent of the Gestapo since 1935.

Doris (dō'ris, dor'is). In ancient geography, a territory in C Greece, surrounded by Phocis, Locris, Aetolia, and Malis; a valley between Oeta and Parnassus.

Doris. In ancient geography, a part of the coast of Caria, Asia Minor.

Doris. In classical mythology, the daughter of Oceanus and Tethys. She married Nereus, and their 50 daughters were called the Nereides. The name Doris is sometimes given to the sea by the poets, as by Vergil.

Doris. Asteroid (No. 48) discovered by Goldschmidt at Paris, Sept. 19, 1857.

Dorking (dôr'king). Urban district and market town in SE England, in Surrey, situated at the water gap of the river Mole through the North Downs near the base of Box Hill, ab. 22 mi. SW of London by rail. It is famous for its breed of fowls, and is the scene of the fictitious Battle of Dorking. 20,252 (1951).

Dorking, Battle of. Occurrence in an imaginary narrative of an invasion and conquest of England by a foreign army, written by General Sir George T. Chesney in 1871 and published under the title The Battle of Dorking, or Reminiscences of a Volunteer. It called attention to the need of an improved system of national defense, and attracted much notice.

d'Orléans (dôr.lā.äṅ), Duchesse. Title of Henrietta Anne.

Dorléans or D'Orléans, Louis. b. at Paris, 1542; d. there, 1629. French poet and satirist.

Dörmann (dėr'män), Felix. [Pseudonym of Felix Biedermann.] b. at Vienna, May 29, 1870; d. there, Oct. 26, 1928. Austrian writer who was especially successful in the dramatic field and as a librettist. His lyrics are characterized by the decadent themes typical of his period.

Dormitor (dôr'mi.tọr). See Durmitor.

Dormont (dôr'mont). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County near Pittsburgh: residential community. It was incorporated in 1909. 13,405 (1950).

Dorn (dôrn), Erik. See Erik Dorn.

Dorn, Heinrich (Ludwig Egmont). b. at Königsberg, in East Prussia, Nov. 14, 1804; d. at Berlin, Jan. 10, 1892. German operatic composer, conductor (1847–68) of the Royal Opera at Berlin. His chief opera is Die Nibelungen (1854).

Dorn, Johann Albrecht Bernhard. b. at Scheuerfeld, Coburg, Germany, May 11, 1805; d. at St. Petersburg, May 31, 1881. German Orientalist, professor (1835), and later (1843) chief librarian of the imperial public library at St. Petersburg. His works include History of the Afghans (1829–36), Über die Sprache der Afghanen (1840), Chrestomathy of the Pushtu or Afghan Language (1847), Caspia (1875), and others.

Dornbirn (dôrn'birn). Town in W Austria, in Vorarlberg province, situated on the Dornbirner Ache, a tributary of the Rhine River, ab. 7 mi. S of Bregenz. It is a station on the Bregenz-Feldkirch railroad and has cotton mills, machine factories, and a school of embroidery. 22,508 (1951).

Dorner (dôr'nėr), August. b. at Schiltach, Baden, Germany, May 13, 1846; d. at Hanover, Germany, April 17, 1920. German Protestant theologian and philosopher; son of Isaak August Dorner. He attended the universities of Berlin, Göttingen, and Tübingen, served (1869 et seq.) as minister of the German congregations at Marseilles and Lyons, and held the posts of professor and director of the Wittenberg Theological Academy until 1890, when he became professor at the University of Königsberg, where he served (1908–09) as rector. He was known as an advocate of a critical and speculative philosophy of religion. His works include Augustinus (1873), Grundriss der Religionsphilosophie (1903), and Die Metaphysik des Christentums (1913).

Dorner, Isaak August. b. at Neuhausen, near Tuttlingen, Württemberg, Germany, June 20, 1809; d. at Wiesbaden, Prussia, Germany, July 8, 1884. German Protestant theologian. He became (1862) professor at Berlin. His chief works are Entwickelungsgeschichte der Lehre von der Person Christi (1839, 1845–56; Eng. trans., History of the Development of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ, 1859), Geschichte der protestantischen Theologie (1867), and System der christlichen Glaubenslehre (1880–81).

Dornier (dôr.nēr', dôr.nyā'), Claude. b. in Bavaria, Germany, 1884—. German aeronautical designer and industrialist. Educated at the Munich Technical University, he was employed (1910 et seq.) by Count Zeppelin; he was among the first to use duralumin in aircraft construction and pioneered in seaplane design. Together with his brother, Maurice Dornier, he organized (1929) the Dornier Werke at Friedrichshafen, which produced many types of all-metal aircraft, among them the DO-X, a giant seaplane which carried 169 passengers to New York on its first transatlantic flight in 1931. During World War II the Dornier factories manufactured combat aircraft for the German air forces.

Dornoch (dôr'nȯċh, -nȯċh). City and royal burgh in N Scotland, in Sutherland, situated on Dornoch Firth, ab. 5 mi. N of Tain, ab. 647 mi. N of London by rail. It contains a 13th-century cathedral, rebuilt in the period 1835–37, and now used as a parish church. Dornoch has what is said to be one of the finest golf courses in the United Kingdom. It is the county seat of Sutherland. 765 (est. 1948).

Dornoch Firth. Inlet of the North Sea in N Scotland, lying between the county of Ross and Cromarty and the county of Sutherland. Length, ab. 20 mi.; width at entrance, ab. 9 mi.

Dornröschen (dôrn'rės''ċhęn). See Sleeping Beauty.

Dornton (dôrn'tọn), Harry. Son of Old Dornton in Holcroft's Road to Ruin. His exploits give the name to the play. He is saved from ruin by Sulky, his father's friend.

Dornton, Old. Fond, confiding, but justly offended father of Harry Dornton in Holcroft's Road to Ruin.

Dorobo (dō.rō'bō). [Also: Ildorobo, Ogyiek, Okiek, Ndorobo, Wandorobo.] Nilo-Hamitic-speaking people of E Africa, scattered among the Handi, whose language they have adopted, and the Masai, Kikuyu, and other peoples of W Kenya and N Tanganyika. The two subgroups in Tanganyika are known as Mosiro and Aramanik. The Dorobo differ from their neighbors in that they practice neither farming nor herding. They are nomadic hunters and gatherers, whose only domesticated animal is the dog.

Dorobornensis (dō''rō.bôr.nen'sis), Gervasius. Latinized name of Gervase (or Gervaise) of Canterbury.

Dorobrevum (dō.rō.brē'vum). A Latin name of Rochester, England.

Dorogobuzh (do''rọ.gọ.bösh'). [Also, Dorogobush.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Smolensk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 52 mi. NE of Smolensk, situated on the Dnieper River. Food processing is important here. Pop. ab. 7,000.

Dorohoi (dō.rō.hoi'). [Also: Dorogoie (dô.rô.gô'ye), Dorohoïu (dō.rō.hō'ē).] Town in NE Rumania, in the province of Moldavia, ab. 24 mi. E of Siret. 15,036 (1948).

Doron (dō'ron). Character in Robert Greene's Menaphon, which Simpson, in his School of Shakespeare, attempted to identify with Shakespeare.

Dorosma or Dorózsma (dō'rōzh.mô). See Kiskundorozsma.

Dorossie (dō.rōs'yā). See Dorhosye.

Dorotea (dō.rō.tā'ä). Dramatic prose romance by Lope de Vega, written in his youth but later carefully revised by him, and first printed in 1632. He calls it "the most beloved of his works." The career of the hero Fernando is to some degree autobiographical.

Dorothea (dor.ọ.thē'ạ), Saint. d. c311. Virgin martyr. She was tortured and decapitated in the persecution of Diocletian. Her festival is celebrated Feb. 6 in the Roman Church. She was said to have sent roses and apples miraculously from paradise to a doubting spectator of her martyrdom, Theophilus, who jestingly asked her to do so. He was converted by this miracle, and later tortured and then decapitated. Dorothea was introduced as a character of much grace and tenderness by Massinger and Dekker in The Virgin Martyr.

Dorothea. The "peerless Queen of Scots" in Greene's play James the Fourth.

Dorothea. Very beautiful and unfortunate woman in an episode of Cervantes's Don Quixote.

Dorothea. In Fletcher's comedy Monsieur Thomas, a bright, affectionate English girl, the sister of Monsieur Thomas.

Dorothea. Vessel which was sent under command of Captain Buchan, with the Trent under Franklin, in 1818, on an expedition to the arctic regions.

Dorothea (dō.rō.tā'ä), Hermann und. See Hermann und Dorothea.

Dorothea Brooke (dor.ọ.thē'ạ brůk). See Brooke, Dorothea.

Dorotheus (dọ.rō'thẹ.us). fl. in the 6th century. Jurist at Berytus (modern Beirut), Syria; one of the compilers of Justinian's Digest.

Dorothy's Wedding (dor'ọ.thiz). Novel by Ethel Sidgwick, published in 1931.

Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall (dor'ọ.thi vėr'nọn; had'ọn). Novel by Charles Major, published in 1902.

Dorp (dôrp). Former manufacturing town in W Germany, in the Rhine Province of Prussia, situated on the Wupper River, ab. 17 mi. NE of Cologne: united in 1889 with Solingen.

Dorpat (dôr'pät) or Dörpt (dėrpt). German names of Tartu.

Dörpfeld (dėrp'felt), Wilhelm. b. at Barmen, Germany, Dec. 26, 1853; d. on the island of Leukas, Greece, April 25, 1940. German archaeologist and architect. An authority on excavations and the ancient Greek theater, he served as director (1887 et seq.) of the German archaeological institute at Athens, also as professor (1919 et seq.) at the University of Jena. He supervised such excavations as Olympia (1875 et seq.) and Troy (1874 et seq., with Heinrich Schliemann). Among his works are Das griechische Theater (The Greek Theater, 1896; with Reisch), Troja und Ilion (Troy and Ilion, 1902), Die Heimkehr des Odysseus (Odysseus' Return, 1924), Alt-Ithaka (Ancient Ithaca, 1927), and Alt-Olympia (Ancient Olympia, 1935).

Dorpmüller (dôrp'mül.ėr), Julius. b. at Elberfeld, Germany, July 24, 1869—. German railroad official. He served (1907–17) as a railroad specialist to the Chinese government. During World War I he was in charge of the trans-Caucasian railroads. Later he became (1925) director of German railroads and served (May, 1945) as a member of the short-lived cabinet under Admiral Doenitz. He was captured by the Allied forces.

Dorr (dôr), Benjamin. b. at Salisbury, Mass., March 22, 1796; d. at Germantown, Pa., Sept. 18, 1869. American clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He was rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, from 1837 until his death. His works include The History of a Pocket Prayer-Book, Written by Itself, A Memoir of John Fanning Watson, and others.

Dorr, John Van Nostrand. b. at Newark, N.J., Jan. 6, 1872—. American metallurgical engineer, known for his inventions including the Dorr classifier, Dorr thickener, and Dorr agitator, used in ore dressing, hydrometallurgy, and chemical and industrial processes. He has been research assistant (1893–95) to Thomas A. Edison, and president (1916 et seq.) of Dorr Company; author of The Cyanidation and Concentration of Gold and Silver Ores (1936).

Dorr, Julia Caroline. [Maiden name, Ripley.] b. at Charleston, S.C., Feb. 13, 1825; d. Jan. 18, 1913. American poet and novelist. She was the author of Poems (1871), Friar Anselmo and Other Poems (1879), Afternoon Songs (1885), Poems Complete (1892), and Afterglow (1900). Among her prose writings are Farmingdale (1854), Lanmere (1856), Sibyl Huntington (1869), Expiation (1872), Bermuda (1884), The Flower of England's Face (1895), A Cathedral Pilgrimage (1896), and In King's Houses (1898).

Dorr, Rheta Childe. b. at Omaha, Nebr., c1866; d. Aug. 8, 1948. American journalist, feminist, and author. She first became well known in journalistic circles and to a wide public during her years (1902–06) as editor of the women's department of the New York Evening Post. In 1907 she became a staff writer for Hampton's Magazine, and during the next ten years contributed to that and other periodicals articles dealing with political, social, and feminist questions. Her book stating the case for woman suffrage, What Eight Million Women Want, appeared in 1910. In 1917–18 she was in Europe as a war correspondent for the New York Evening Mail and other newspapers, and she returned to Europe in 1921 as a foreign correspondent, remaining there until 1923. Other books by Mrs. Dorr are Inside the Russian Revolution (1917), A Soldier's Mother in France (1918), A Woman of Fifty (her autobiography, 1924), Susan B. Anthony (a biography, 1928), and Drink—Coercion or Control? (1929), a study of liquor legislation in the Scandinavian countries.

Dorr, Thomas Wilson. b. at Providence, R.I., Nov. 5, 1805; d. Dec. 27, 1854. American politician and reformer, leader of the popular suffrage movement and Dorr's Rebellion in Rhode Island. Graduated (1823) from Harvard, he studied law at New York, was admitted to the bar (1827), and took his seat as a representative in the Rhode Island Assembly in 1834. Taking a prominent part in agitation in behalf of the Rhode Island Suffrage Association (founded in 1840), he became the leader of a reform movement to extend the franchise in the state. Rhode Island was governed, not by a state constitution, but by the charter granted it as a colony. The restrictions set up by the ruling group had the result that only some 3,500 voters existed in a population of over 100,000. Property qualifications held not only at the polls but in the courts as well. When the charter legislature failed to satisfy the grievances of the unenfranchised, the People's Party adopted and submitted to popular vote a reform constitution, gaining what was supposedly a majority of the legal voters. Thereafter there were two state administrations, one under Governor Samuel King, the other under Dorr, who had been elected under the "rebel" constitution, each claiming legal authority; and when Dorr took steps in May, 1842, to set up a government, the existing state administration began imprisoning his followers. On May 17, 1842, Dorr led 234 men in an unsuccessful attack upon the Providence Arsenal; he fled the state to seek support elsewhere, but soon gave up his fight. On June 26, 1842, martial law was declared in Rhode Island and a reward of 5,000 dollars was offered for the capture of Dorr, despite the fact that he had earlier announced the disbanding of his movement. He surrendered voluntarily to the authorities at Providence, stood trial for treason, and was sentenced to solitary confinement at hard labor for life. He was released (1845) after an act of general amnesty was passed. In 1851 he was returned to full civil rights.

Dorrego (dôr.rā'gō), Manuel. b. at Buenos Aires, 1777; executed there, Dec. 13, 1828. Argentine politician, elected (August, 1827) governor of Buenos Aires. His efforts to establish a confederation of the provinces were at first successful, and the war with Brazil was brought to a close (1828), both countries recognizing the independence of Uruguay. The revolt of Lavalle drove Dorrego from Buenos Aires; he was defeated in an attempt to recover the city, captured, and shot without trial.

Dorriforth (dor'i.fôrth). In Mrs. Inchbald's Simple Story, a Roman Catholic priest. He is the guardian of Miss Milner, who falls in love with him. He becomes the Earl of Elmwood, is released from his vows, and marries her.

Dorrit (dor'it), Amy. [Called "Little Dorrit."] In Charles Dickens's Little Dorrit, the unselfish daughter of the debtor William Dorrit, born in prison.

Dorrit, William. Father of Amy Dorrit, in Charles Dickens's Little Dorrit. He is a weak, selfish, good-looking man confined in the Marshalsea prison for a long time for debt, and hence called "the Father of the Marshalsea."

Dorr's Rebellion (dôrz). In U.S. history, a revolutionary movement under the leadership of Thomas Wilson Dorr to introduce a new state constitution in Rhode Island. It was caused by dissatisfaction with the existing fundamental law (a charter granted by Charles II, in 1663), which placed a heavy property qualification on the suffrage. A People's Party was organized under the leadership of Dorr in 1840. It held a mass meeting at Providence on July 5, 1841, and authorized the calling of a constitutional convention, which met at Providence on Oct. 4, 1841. The constitution proposed by this convention was submitted to the people (Dec. 27–29, 1841) and received a majority of the popular vote, Dorr's followers claiming also a majority of the legally qualified voters of the state. A government with Dorr at its head was elected under this constitution on April 18, 1842, and the state was for a time under dual government. The Dorr wing made an unsuccessful attempt to seize the arsenal at Providence on May 18, 1842, and was dispersed on June 25, 1842.

Dorset (dôr'set). See also Dorsetshire.

Dorset. Eskimo culture extending from Hudson Bay to N Greenland, Labrador, and Newfoundland during the period from c100 to 900 A.D. The Dorset Eskimos lived in semisubterranean houses and hunted sea mammals with harpoons. The harpoon heads were of a unique type, with rectangular sockets and gouged line holes instead of the drilled holes of the remaining Eskimos.

Dorset, Earl of. A title of Beaufort, Edmund.

Dorset, 1st Earl of. A title of Sackville, Thomas.

Dorset, Marquis of. A title of Beaufort, John.

Dorset, Marquis of. Title held by various members of the Grey family.

Dorset, Marion. b. at Columbia, Tenn., Dec. 14, 1872; d. at Washington, D.C., July 15, 1935. American chemist, noted for researches on the chemical and biological nature of the tubercle bacillus and the bacteriology and chemistry of meats. He is credited with codiscovery of the hog-cholera serum. He was assistant chemist (1894–1903) and head (1904 et seq.) of the biochemic division of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Dorsetshire (dôr'set.shir) or Dorset (dôr'set). Maritime county in SW England, lying between Somersetshire and Wiltshire on the N, Hampshire on the E, the English Channel on the S, and Devonshire and Somersetshire on the W. It has some manufactures of paper, silk, gloves, pottery, and tiles, and has important fisheries, especially of mackerel. Ball clay and fine pipe clay are mined in the vicinity of Poole, some of which is supplied to the Potteries. Portland stone and Purbeck marble also come from Dorsetshire. Much of the county is traversed by the North and South Downs and it is noted for its breed of sheep pastured there. Dairying is highly developed, and much dairy produce is supplied to the London markets. Dorsetshire contains many British and Roman antiquities. County seat, Dorchester; area, ab. 970 sq. mi.; pop. 291,157 (1951).

Dorsey (dôr'si), George Amos. b. at Hebron, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1868; d. at New York, March 29, 1931. American naturalist, assistant curator (1896–97) and curator (1897–1915) of anthropology in the Field Museum at Chicago; brother of Herbert Grove Dorsey. In 1900 he was appointed professor of comparative anatomy at Northwestern University; he became assistant professor of anthropology at the University of Chicago in 1905 and associate professor in 1909. He served with naval intelligence during World War I, as naval attaché (1919–21) at Lisbon, and was a lecturer (1925 et seq.) at the New York School for Social Research. He published numerous anthropological and anatomical papers, including Why We Behave Like Human Beings (1925).

Dorsey, Herbert Grove. b. at Kirkersville, Ohio, April 24, 1876—. American physicist and oceanographer; brother of George Amos Dorsey. He has been a staff member (1926 et seq.) of the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, and is known for his inventions of acoustical devices such as the Dorsey Phonelescope, a dynamic loudspeaker, and a "fathometer."

Dorsey, James Owen. b. at Baltimore, Oct. 31, 1848; d. Feb. 4, 1895. American ethnologist and linguist. He was ordained (1871) a Protestant Episcopal deacon, and served as a missionary (to 1880) among the Pawnee Indians of the Dakota Territory; as an agent of the U.S. Bureau of American Ethnology, he made studies of the Omaha Indians. He was the author of technical papers published (1881–94) in the Annual Reports of the United States Bureau of American Ethnology: The Cegiha Language (vol. VI, 1890) and Dakota Grammar, Texts and Ethnography (vol. IX, 1893).

Dorsten (dôr'sten). Town in W Germany in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated on the Lippe River, ab. 25 mi. NW of Dortmund. It has metallurgical, construction, chemical, paper, and textile industries, and an agricultural school. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but there is a considerable Protestant minority. The increase in population between 1939 and 1946 was 139.1 percent. 25,952 (1946), 27,945 (1950).

Dort (dôrt). See Dordrecht.

Dort, Synod of. Assembly of the Reformed Church of the Netherlands, with delegates from England and other countries, convened by the States-General for the purpose of deciding the Arminian controversy, and held at Dordrecht (Dort) from 1618 to 1619. It condemned the doctrines of the Arminians or Remonstrants.

Dorten (dôr'ten), Adam. b. at Endenich, Germany, Feb. 10, 1880—. German separatist. He was active at Mainz in 1919 and 1923, and later fled to France.

Dortmund (dôrt'mùnt). City in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated near the Emscher River, on the Dortmund-Ems Canal, E of Essen: one of the largest industrial centers in the Ruhr. 507,349 (1950).

Industries. Located on the border between the southern and northern coal-bearing zones of the Ruhr district, Dortmund is the seat of important mining enterprises and of large iron and steel works including the Vereinigte Stahlwerke-Dortmunder Union, Hörder Verein, Hösch, and other units; there are rolling mills and pipe, cable, railroad equipment, machine, and machine-tool factories. Huge enterprises (Klönne, Jucho) specialize in the building of bridges and similar engineering features. There are large breweries, chemical and construction industries, and manufactures of rubber articles, leatherware, garments, musical instruments, and canned foods. Dortmund has excellent shipping, port, and warehouse facilities in connection with the Dortmund-Ems Canal, and is a busy commercial center. It has not been ascertained whether the grain and foodstuff exchange, the iron and metal, exchange, and the livestock markets that existed before World War II have been restored.

Culture and Architecture. Dortmund has a number of educational institutions and vocational schools, a museum of arts and crafts, a museum of natural history, and a theater. The city was badly battered in World War II; the museum buildings, the 13th-century Rathaus (city hall) and the 15th-century Gildenhaus were wrecked. Churches including the Reinoldikirche, one of the finest Gothic buildings of Westphalia (13th century), the Petrikirche (14th century), the Marienkirche, a Romanesque building of the 12th century (all these Protestant), and the Catholic Probsteikirche (15th century) were heavily damaged; most of their art treasures, however, had been stored away and are safe.

History. Dortmund, mentioned in the 9th century as Throtmannia, in the 12th century as Tremonia, was frequently used as a residence by the medieval German emperors. The city received privileges and prospered commercially, becoming a member of the Hanseatic League. After the Thirty Years' War, its decline was complete. It became part of Prussia in 1815, and grew steadily in the 19th century and even more in the 20th century, after the opening of the Dortmund-Ems Canal in 1899. It was occupied by French troops from Jan. 16, 1923, to Oct. 22, 1924. Frequently bombed between 1943 and 1945, it was occupied by Allied troops in April, 1945. The population decreased 19.5 percent in the period 1939–47.

Dortmund-Ems Canal (dôrt'mŭnt.ems'). Canal in NW Germany, built in the period 1892–99 to connect the Ruhr industrial area with the North Sea by way of the Ems River. It is navigable by ships of light draft up to 600 tons. The canal has not been a serious competitor of the Rhine route, and has been used mainly for Scandinavian trade with the Ruhr, importing chiefly Swedish iron ore and lumber. Total length (including branch to Herne), ab. 175 mi.

Dorus (dō'rus). In Greek mythology, the ancestor and eponym of the Dorians, generally represented as the son of Hellen.

Dorus. In Sir Philip Sidney's romance Arcadia, the name under which Musidorus, in the disguise of a shepherd, pretends to love Mopsa.

Dorval (dôr.vàl'). Town on Montreal Island, Quebec, Canada, situated on the S side of the island, ab. 8 mi. from Montreal: site of the main airport used by the city of Montreal. 5,293 (1951).

Dory (dō'ri). Vociferous and faithful servant of Sir George Thunder, in O'Keefe's Wild Oats.

Dory, John. See John Dory.

Dorylaeum (dor.i.lē'um). Latin name of Eskişehir, town.

Dos Hermanas (dōs er.mä'näs). Town in S Spain, in the province of Sevilla, ab. 10 mi. S of the city of Seville: agricultural trade center. 20,330 (1940).

Dositheans (dō.sith'ē.ạnz). Samaritan sect, named after Dositheus, a false Messiah, who appeared about the time of Christ. The sect, though small in numbers, existed for several centuries.

Dospad Dagh (dōs.päd' däg'). Turkish name of the Rhodope Mountains.

Dos Passos (dọs pas'ọs), John (Roderigo). b. at Chicago, Jan. 14, 1896—. American writer of novels, plays, and travel books. He received a B.A. (1916) from Harvard and served in World War I as a member of the ambulance corps connected with the French and with the Italian armies, and in the U.S. army medical corps. He is the author of One Man's Initiation (1920; republished as First Encounter, 1945), Three Soldiers (1921), Streets of Night (1923), Manhattan Transfer (1925), Orient Express (1927); the trilogy U.S.A. (1938) embracing the novels The 42d Parallel (1930), 1919 (1932), and The Big Money (1936); Adventures of a Young Man (1939), The Ground We Stand On (1941), Number One (1943), State of the Nation (1944), Tour of Duty (1946), The Grand Design (1949), The Prospect Before Us (1950), Chosen Country (1951), and other books. His plays include The Garbage Man (1926), Airways Inc. (1929), and Fortune Heights (1933). He published the volume of verse A Pushcart at the Curb (1922). Dos Passos's technique of interspersing headline material and atmospheric historical background with short narrative passages, worked out in Manhattan Transfer and culminating in U.S.A., was calculated to develop a novel in which individual characterization was subordinated to the panoramic effect of history sweeping people along.

Dosso Dossi (dôs'sō dôs'sē). [Original name, Giovanni de Luteri or Giovanni di Nicolò di Lutero; also known as Giovanni Dossi.] b. probably near Ferrara, Italy, c1479; d. 1542. Italian painter. In his earlier years he worked at Modena, but in 1512 it is supposed that he studied with Lorenzo Costa in Mantua, and thereafter spent ten years or more at Rome and at Venice. It is clear from his paintings that he was strongly influenced by Raphael, Giorgione, Titian, and Costa. Subsequently he was employed by successive dukes of Ferrara, both in the execution of frescoes for the adornment of the ducal palace, and in the painting of portraits and landscapes. Examples of his work are to be seen in the palace, the Certosa and the church of San Agostino in Ferrara, in the Uffizi Gallery and the Pitti Palace in Florence, in the Borghese and the Doria Palaces in Rome, in the Brera and in the Ambrosiana, Milan, in several churches at Modena, in the Berlin Gallery and the Dresden Gallery, and in the National Gallery in London. The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York exhibits his Three Ages of Man, and the National Gallery of Art in Washington possesses his Standard Bearer and his Saint Lucretia. Dosso Dossi was a friend of Ariosto, made designs for the Orlando Furioso, and is mentioned by the poet in that book.

Dost Mohammed Khan (dōst mō.ham'ẹd). b. 1793; d. June 9, 1863. Amir of Kabul. He ascended the throne in 1826. In 1839 the Indian government, on account of his refusal to become an ally of the British, sent an army into Afghanistan, drove him from his throne, and placed Shah Shuja upon it. In 1841 an insurrection broke out in Kabul, and in 1842 the British army was massacred in its retreat. This was followed by a second invasion by the British, who decided to reinstate Dost Mohammed (1842). He made an alliance with the British in 1855, fought against the Persians with them in 1857, and maintained strict neutrality during the Indian Mutiny. He captured Herat from the Persians in 1863.

Dostoevski (dos.to.yef'ski), Feodor (also Fëdor, Fiodor, or Fyodor) Mikhailovich. b. at Moscow, Nov. 11 (or, by the old style calendar then still used in Russia, Oct. 30), 1821; d. at St. Petersburg, Feb. 9 (old style, Jan. 28), 1881. Russian novelist, short-story writer, and journalist. His father, of Ukrainian origin, was an army surgeon; his mother came from a well-to-do Moscow business family. He was educated at Moscow, and at the St. Petersburg School of Military Engineering, where he made a fine record. From 1841 to 1844 he served in the army, resigning in the latter year because he felt that he wanted to make literature his life work. In the late 1840's he was a member of the radical Petrashevski group, and, as one of them, he was arrested on April 23, 1849, and spent the next eight months in prison. He was tried as a conspirator, found guilty, sentenced to death by shooting, and then deported to Siberia. The death sentence was recalled, but Dostoevski and his comrades were not allowed to know it until they had been tortured by being made to believe that the original decree was to be carried out. He listened to the formal reading of the death sentence, 20 times witnessed the long and detailed preparations for the execution, and waited blindfolded for the fatal shot to be fired before being informed, when the "joke" could not be further prolonged, that he was not to be killed. This experience, which took place on Dec. 21, 1849, did nothing to help his epilepsy, of which he was a victim from early childhood, and which figures prominently in his novels, as does his passionate fondness for gambling. In 1854 he was released from the Omsk penal colony, and sent to another part of Siberia as a private in the army. He was restored to his former rank in 1855, pardoned in 1859, and allowed to return to St. Petersburg. With his brother, Michael (d. 1864), he edited a review, Vremya (the Times), which although attacked by both the left and the right and suppressed by the government in 1863, was a success, and its successor, Epokha (the Epoch), which failed and was discontinued. He began his literary career as a novelist, with a work that immediately brought him recognition as a major force in Russian literature and was praised by the influential critic Belinsky. Poor Folk (also Poor People, finished 1845, published 1846) is an epistolary novel, telling the story of Makar, a poor government clerk, and Varvara, a poor orphan seamstress, whom he loves but cannot afford to marry, although he goes without food in order to buy her luxuries. He sinks lower and lower in the social scale, falls into debt, sells his clothing, is evicted from his room because he cannot pay his rent, becomes a drunkard, and is forced to accept charity from his superior. Varvara, who blames Makar for his extravagance, without realizing that she is the cause of it, meets Bykov, a wealthy man, and accepts his offer of marriage, without loving him, because she knows that it will mean the end of drudgery and drabness. Makar is left alone with a bitter heart and memories and the prospect of a dull and lonely future. The Double (1846) shows that sympathy for the underdog and deep interest in abnormal psychology which are characteristic of Dostoevski. His Netochka Nezvanova (1849) is a study in feminine psychology dealing with a "proud woman" type suggestive of the women he married. The Manor of Stephanchikovo (1859, also called The Family Friend), written in Siberia, is famous for the character of the repulsive Foma Opiskin, regarded as one of the greatest portraits in Russian fiction. The House of Death (also The House of the Dead, 1861) is a record of his prison impressions and experiences, both of which he never forgot. The sadistic brutality and savagery of the guards, the beatings and floggings, the deadly prison routine (and the pathetic ways in which the convicts sought to break it), their quarrels (frequently brought on by a need for varying the monotony), the psychology of men in chains, all these details of the prison life he saw are realistically described. The Insulted and the Injured (1861–62, also known as The Downtrodden and the Oppressed) is Dickenslike in its sympathy with the poor, and in its sentimentality. His Letters from the Underworld (1864, also called Memoirs from the Underground and Notes from Underground) is a cross between philosophy and fiction. A short work, in two parts, it deals with a man who takes pleasure in torturing himself and others. The narrative part which deals with Lisa, a prostitute, a familiar Dostoevski type, is almost overshadowed by psychological analysis of and philosophical comments on the nature of evil, and the evil man. It is told in the first person by the hero, who represents spite or malice. In the opinion of most modern critics it may usefully serve the beginning reader of Russian literature as a general introduction to all of Dostoevski. Other short works, long short-stories or novelettes rather than novels, are The Gentle Maiden and The Landlady. Crime and Punishment (1866), one of his greatest works, is generally regarded also as one of the greatest psychological novels in world literature. The main characters (there are many, Dostoevski being not unlike Dickens in this respect) are Raskolnikov, a poor, sick student, his mother and sister, Pulcheria and Eudoxia, Sonia, a high-minded prostitute, whom he loves and who becomes the means of his regeneration, Luzhin, to whom Eudoxia is engaged, and Petrovitch, a shrewd lawyer and police inspector. The crime is Raskolnikov's hatchet-murder of an old, repulsive, selfish, woman money-lender, and her sister, an act that turns out to be senseless as he does not benefit from it in any way. The punishment is not the seven-year sentence he receives, but the torture of his conscience. Dramatized versions have been successful on English, American, and European stages. His Letters (c1867) deal with his frequent financial distress, his battle with poverty, his study of literature, his life in Siberia, his travels in France, Germany, Italy, and Switzerland, his passionate feeling for Russia (which was so great that he could not be happy or productive anywhere else), his gambling excesses at Baden-Baden, which led him to lose his wife's wedding ring, his quarrel with Turgenev, and his deep conviction, born during his prison days, that Christ belonged to Russia and the Russian people. The Idiot (1868–69) is autobiographical in the sense that its Christlike hero, Prince Myshkin, is an epileptic. He is loved by two women, Aglaia, whom he refuses to marry because he feels that he will not be able to make her happy, and Nastasia, whom he is willing to marry in a spirit of self-sacrifice because she has been thrown over by a former lover. His creator represents him as an "idiot" in a double sense, as a pure, gentle, childlike, honest, unambitious character, laughed at by St. Petersburg fashionable society, and as insane, a real idiot, at the end of the story, as a result of spending the night with the jealous Rogozhin, who has murdered Nastasia, and her dead body. Another short novel, The Eternal Husband (1871), tells the story of a wife who fools her husband and of what happens, to him, the wife, and the lover, when he finds out. It has been called "a Russian Madame Bovary." The Demons (1871, also The Possessed) is an anti-Nihilistic novel. Its characters are Nikolay Stavrogin, son of a wealthy widow, Peter Verhovensky, a cold, ruthless Nihilist, Shatov, a peasant and servant, the only decent person in the story, Lebyadkin, army captain and blackmailer, his sister Marya, a half-wit, and Kirillov, an engineer. As in Hamlet, most of the characters kill themselves or are killed at the end. A Raw Youth (1875), generally considered an inferior work, is the story of a father and his illegitimate son, who is obsessed by a desire to become a millionaire. Both are in love with the same woman and both do not hesitate to use blackmail when it serves their ends. His third masterpiece is The Brothers Karamazov (1880). The brothers are Dmitri, a soldier, Ivan, an intellectual and atheist, and Aloysha, a religious mystic, the sons of a drunken, depraved sot. When he is murdered, suspicion falls on Dmitri, whose hatred for his father was well known, but the act was committed by an illegitimate son of the old man, Smerdyakov, an epileptic, whose mother was an imbecile. The cause of the crime is the conflict between Dmitri and his father over Grushenka, the son wanting her as his wife, the father as his mistress. Different shadings of guilt are finely illustrated: actual or technical guilt by Smerdyakov, who kills himself, moral guilt by Ivan, who planted the seed of the crime in Smerdyakov's mind, and subconscious guilt by Dmitri, who wanted the crime committed, and who pays the legal penalty for it. Dostoevski is recognized as one of the great figures in world literature, and his works have been translated into the chief European languages. To English readers he is known through the translations of Constance Garnett, C. J. Hogarth, S. S. Koteliansky, J. Middleton Murry, and Ethel C. Mayne. He was influenced by Gogol, Balzac, and Dickens, but much of his style and technique was uniquely his own, coming from his experience and observation rather than from reading.

"Dot" (dot). See under Peerybingle, Mrs.

Dothan (dō'thạn). City in SE Alabama, county seat of Houston County: trading center for peanuts, cotton, potatoes, corn, and fruits. 21,584 (1950).

Dothan. [Also, Dothaim (dō.thā'im).] In Biblical geography, a place in Samaria, Palestine, situated ab. 10 mi. N of Shechem.

Dotheboys Hall (dō'ᵺę.bȯiz). Yorkshire school in Charles Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby, kept by Mr. Squeers, in which Nicholas served a short time as an under-master.

Dotterel (dot'ėr.ęl), Mrs. Character in David Garrick's play The Male Coquette.

Dotzauer (dȯts'ou.ėr), Justus Johann Friedrich. b. at Hildburghausen, Germany, June 20, 1783; d. March 6, 1860. German cellist and composer. His works include an opera, a symphony, chamber music, cello concertos, masses, and overtures.

Dou or Douw or Dow (dou), Gerard. b. at Leiden, Netherlands, April 7, 1613; d. there, in February, 1675. Dutch painter of genre scenes, a pupil of Rembrandt. Among his best-known works are portraits, and the Woman Sick of the Dropsy, in the Louvre at Paris.

Douai (dȯ.ā'; French, dwā). [Former spelling, Douay; Latin, Duacum.] Town in N France, in the department of Nord, situated on the Scarpe River, ab. 18 mi. S of Lille. The Old Testament of the Douay Bible was published here in 1609–10. The town has metallurgical and textile industries, and is particularly known for its lace and its candies. The Hôtel de Ville and the Church of Notre Dame, beautiful Gothic buildings, were built in the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries. The Church of Saint Pierre dates from the 18th century. The museum contains paintings, sculpture, and archaeological materials. There are various vocational schools. The town belonged originally to Flanders, then to Spain and to France. It finally went to France through the Treaty of Utrecht (1713). Douai was severely damaged in World Wars I and II; a large part of the town, including the Church of Notre Dame, was destroyed. 37,258 (1946).

Douai, Merlin de. See Merlin, Comte Philippe Antoine.

Douala (dȯ.ä'lą). See also Duala.

Douala. [Also, Duala.] Chief port of the French trust territory of Cameroun. It is situated on the S shore of the Cameroon River estuary and possesses fine docks and a good harbor. It is connected by rail with the capital, Yaoundé, ab. 100 mi. to the E. Pop. ab. 30,000.

Douanier (dwȧ.nyā), Le. See Rousseau, Henri.

Douarnenez (dwȧr.nę.nez). Town in NW France, in the department of Finistère, beautifully situated on a bay named for the town, ab. 21 mi. SE of Brest. It has old churches, a picturesque fishing port, and important sar-dine and tuna fisheries. It is also a tourist center. 20,564 (1946).

Douaumont (dwō.môn). Ruined fortress in NE France, on a high ridge ab. 5 mi. NE of Verdun. One of the key forts of Verdun in World War I, it changed hands several times during the savage battles in 1916, and was finally reoccupied by the French on Dec. 15, 1916. In 1927 a great monument was dedicated, towering over the ossuary containing the remains of some 300,000 unidentified French soldiers who perished on the Verdun battlefields.

Douay (dö.ā', dwā). Former spelling of Douai.

Douay, Charles Abel. b. at Besançon, France, in March, 1809; killed at the battle of Wissembourg, France, Aug. 4, 1870. French general, distinguished in the Crimean War at the storming of the Malakhov (at Sevastopol) in 1855, and at Solferino in 1859; brother of Félix Charles Douay.

Douay, Félix Charles. b. at Besançon, France, Aug. 24, 1816; d. at Paris, May 4, 1879. French general; brother of Charles Abel Douay. He distinguished himself at Sedan in 1870, in the Franco-Prussian War, and in the suppression (1871) of the Paris Commune.

Douban (dö.bän'). In the story of "The Greek King and Douban the Physician," in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, a physician who cures the king of leprosy. Believing him to be a traitor, the king orders his execution. Douban gives the king a book, assuring him that his head, after it is cut off, will answer any questions if he will first read a certain line on the sixth page. The pages are poisoned, and the king, moistening his fingers to turn them, instantly dies. Scott introduces a royal slave and physician of this name in Count Robert of Paris.

Doubleday (dub'l.dā), Abner. b. at Ballston Spa, N.Y., June 26, 1819; d. at Mendham, N.J., Jan. 26, 1893. American soldier, the reputed inventor of the game of baseball. According to a high commission of baseball authorities which delivered a formal report in 1908, Doubleday originated the game of baseball in 1839 while attending school at Cooperstown, N.Y., where he combined the elements of existing bat-and-ball games to formulate an approximation of modern baseball. More recent research, however, indicates that baseball was played in the U.S. perhaps even before Doubleday was born. After studying at Cooperstown, he was graduated (1842) from West Point, served in the Mexican War, and at the opening of the Civil War aimed the initial shot fired from Fort Sumter against the Confederate attack. He was appointed (Feb. 3, 1862) a brigadier general of volunteers in the Union army, commanded a brigade in the Second Battle of Bull Run, and led a division at Antietam and Fredericksburg. Appointed (Nov. 29, 1862) a major general of volunteers, he commanded a corps during the first day of the battle of Gettysburg, and a division on the second and third days. He became (Sept. 15, 1867) a colonel in the regular army, and while on duty (1869–71) at San Francisco secured the charter for the first cable street-railway. He retired from active duty in 1873. He wrote Reminiscences of Forts Sumter and Moultrie in 1860–'61 (1876) and Chancellorsville and Gettysburg (1882).

Doubleday, Edward. b. at Epping, Essex, England, 1811; d. at London, Dec. 14, 1849. English naturalist. He was appointed an assistant in the British Museum in 1839, with special charge of the collections of butterflies and moths. His chief work is On the Genera of Diurnal Lepidoptera.

Doubleday, Frank Nelson. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Jan. 8, 1862; d. at Coconut Grove, Fla., Jan. 30, 1934. American publisher; husband of Neltje Doubleday. While associated (1877–95) with Charles Scribner's Sons, he reëstablished (1884) and edited The Book Buyer and was named (1886) manager of the newly established Scribner's Magazine. He was later connected (1897–1900) with Doubleday and McClure Company, president (1900–27) of Doubleday, Page and Company, and chairman (1928 et seq.) of the board after the firm became Doubleday, Doran and Company.

Doubleday, Neltje. [Pseudonym, Neltje Blanchan; maiden name, de Graff.] b. at Chicago, Oct. 23, 1865; d. at Canton, China, Feb. 21, 1918. American naturalist and writer of books on nature; wife of Frank Nelson Doubleday. She was the author of The Piegan Indians (1894), Bird Neighbors (1896), Birds that Hunt and Are Hunted (1898), Nature's Garden (1900), How to Attract the Birds (1902), Birds that Every Child Should Know (1907), The American Flower Garden (1909), Birds Worth Knowing (1917), Birds (1926), and numerous magazine articles, some published in Country Life.

Double Dealer, The. Comedy by Congreve, produced in 1693.

Double Falsehood, The. Play published by Theobald in 1728 as by Shakespeare. It is based on the story of Cardenio in Don Quixote, and is thought to have been very probably written by Shirley.

Double Gallant, or The Sick Lady's Cure, The. Comedy produced in 1707, compiled by Colley Cibber from Susannah Centlivre's Love at a Venture (which owed something to Thomas Corneille's Le Galant double) and Burnaby's The Lady's Visiting Day and The Reformed Wife.

Double Heart, The. Biographical study by Naomi Royde-Smith, published in 1931. It deals with Julie de Lespinasse, who was in love with d'Alembert, the Marquis de Mora, and Count Jacques Antoine Guibert.

Double Marriage, The. Tragedy by John Fletcher, assisted by Philip Massinger, apparently produced after Burbage's death. It was printed in 1647.

Doublin (dub'lin). Former name of Dublin, Tex.

Doubris (dö'bris). See Rochester, England.

Doubs (dö). Department in E France, bounded by the departments of Haute-Saône and Belfort on the N, Switzerland on the E and S, and the departments of Jura and Haute-Saône on the W. The region was subject to the invasion of a number of Germanic tribes at the end of the Roman era. In the late Middle Ages it was part of the domain of Burgundy, and then of the Spanish Hapsburgs; it was only after the death of Charles V, in the reign of the French king Louis XIV, that Doubs went finally to the French crown. Its cities have preserved their medieval character. The mountainous regions are comparatively barren, but the plains are fertile, producing mainly grains. The department has some of the most important metallurgical and mechanical industries in France. Besançon, Montbéliard, and Pontarlier are centers of the watchmaking, precision instrument, automobile, tractor, and bicycle industries. Other places produce nails, bolts, and similar articles; there are also textile, leather, and paper industries. The department is traversed by the Rhine-Rhone Canal. Capital, Besançon; area, 2,018 sq. mi.; pop. 298,255 (1946).

Doubs, Falls of the. [French, Saut du Doubs.] Cataract in the Doubs River, on the border of France and Switzerland, ab. 13 mi. NW of Neuchâtel. Height, ab 86 ft.

Doubs River. [Latin, Dubis.] River in E France which forms part of the French-Swiss border and joins the Saône at Verdun. Length, ab. 270 mi.

Doubtful Heir, The. Romantic comedy by James Shirley, originally produced at Dublin under the title of Rosania, or Love's Victory, and licensed in 1640 under that name.

Doubting Castle. Abode of the Giant Despair, in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, in which he locked up Christian and Hopeful.

Douce (dous), Francis. b. at London, 1757; d. there, March 30, 1834. English antiquary. He was for a time keeper of the manuscripts in the British Museum, in which capacity he took part in cataloguing the Lansdowne manuscripts, and in revising the catalogue of Harleian manuscripts. Having been left one of the residuary legatees of the sculptor Nollekens in 1823, he came into possession of a competent fortune, which enabled him to make a fine collection of books, manuscripts, prints, and coins. This collection was bequeathed to the Bodleian Library. His chief work is Illustrations of Shakspere (1807).

Douce Davie Deans (dös' dā'vi dēnz'). See Deans, Douce Davie.

Doucet (dö.se), Charles Camille. b. at Paris, May 16, 1812; d. there, April 1, 1895. French dramatist and critic. He was the drama critic of the Moniteur Parisien, was appointed (1853) chief of the theater division in the state department, and became (1863) director of theaters in the imperial household. He was elected (1876) to the French Academy as successor to Alfred de Vigny and became its perpetual secretary in 1876. His works include Léonce (1838; with Bayard), Un Jeune Homme (1841), L'Avocat de sa cause (1842), La Chasse aux fripons (1846), Velasquez (1847), La Barque d'Antonio (1849), Les Ennemis de la maison (1851), Le Fruit défendu (1858), La Considération (1860), and Concours littéraires (1886).

Doudney (död'ni), Sarah. b. at Portsmouth, Hampshire, England, Jan. 15, 1843; d. Dec. 15, 1926. English novelist, poet, and author of books for juveniles. Her novels include The Strength of Her Youth (1880), The Family Difficulty and A Woman's Glory (both 1885), The Missing Rubies and Where Two Ways Meet (both 1886), When We Two Parted (1887), Under False Colours (1889), Through Pain to Peace (1892), Violets for Faithfulness (1893), A Romance of Lincoln's Inn (1894), Katherine's Keys (1895), Pilgrims of the Night (1896), Silent Strings (1900), One of the Few (1904), Shadow and Shine (1906), and Lady Dye's Reparation (1907); she also wrote Miss Irving's Bible (1875), and other works for children.

Dougal (dö'gạl). Wild, shock-headed follower of Rob Roy, in Sir Walter Scott's novel Rob Roy.

Dougga (dö'gạ). [Ancient name, Thugga.] Former city in N Tunisia, ab. 66 mi. by road SW of Tunis. It was a flourishing native center in the 4th century B.C., and was tributary to Carthage until the first half of the 2nd century B.C. when Massinissa, a Numidian king, ruled it. In 46 B.C. it was conquered by the Romans, who retained the native government, setting up Roman magistrates. Roman colonization dates from the period of Augustus, and during the following two centuries it became Romanized. Today it is one of the chief archaeological sites in North Africa, with a large collection of Roman ruins.

Dougherty (dō'ėr.ti), Denis J. b. at Girardville, Pa., Aug. 16, 1865; d. at Philadelphia, May 31, 1951. American Roman Catholic prelate. He was educated at the American College at Rome, ordained priest in 1890, and consecrated bishop of Nueva Segovia in the Philippines in 1903. Subsequently he was bishop of Jaro, in the Philippines (1908), and Buffalo, N.Y. (1915), and archbishop of Philadelphia (1918); created cardinal March 7, 1921. He was papal legate to the International Eucharistic Congress at Manila, P.I., in 1937 and became known for his promotion of diocesan secondary schools at Philadelphia.

Dougherty (dok'ėr.ti), Paul. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Sept. 6, 1877; d. Jan. 9, 1947. American landscape and marine painter, best known for his ocean scenes; brother of the actor Walter Hampden. He studied alone at Paris, London, Florence, Venice, and Munich, later exhibiting in the U.S. and Canada. He was made an academician of the National Academy of Design (1907), and was also a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the National Arts Club. Many large museums have collected his works, which include The Land and the Sea, Flood Tide, Moonlight Cove, Sun and Storm, Autumn Oaks, Storm Quiet, Lake Louise, and Heavy Sea.

Doughet (dö.ge), Gaspar. See Poussin, Gaspar.

Doughfaces (dō'fās"ęz). Term used by Northerners in the pre-Civil War era in the U.S. to describe contemptuously those Northern persons who aligned themselves with the South on basic policies, such as the institution of slavery and its status in the territories.

Doughton (dou'ton), Robert Lee. b. at Laurel Springs, N.C., Nov. 7, 1863—. American legislator. He was active (1894–1911) as a merchant and farmer and served as a member (1909–11) of the North Carolina state board of agriculture, a member (1908–10) of the state senate, and as a Democratic member (1911 et seq.) of the U.S. House of Representatives. He was chairman (1933–47) of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Doughty (dou'ti), Charles Montagu. b. in Suffolk, England, Aug. 19, 1843; d. at Sissinghurst, Kent, England, Jan. 30, 1926. English poet, scientist, explorer, and traveler. He was educated at the universities of London, Cambridge, Oxford, Leiden, and Louvain, and traveled in Norway, France, Spain, Italy, Greece, Tunis, Algeria, Damascus, Palestine, and Egypt. He was the author of the classic Travels in Arabia Deserta (1888), a work notable for its style, of which Wanderings in Arabia (1908) is a condensation; he also wrote scientific essays and reports of his exploring trips. Among his other works are Under Arms (1890), The Dawn in Britain (1906), an epic poem in 30,000 lines, Adam Cast Forth (1908), a verse drama dealing with the expulsion, separation, and reunion of Adam and Eve, The Cliffs (1909), The Clouds (1912), The Titans (1916), and Mansoul, or the Riddle of the World (1920).

Doughty, Thomas. b. at Philadelphia, July 19, 1793; d. at New York, July 24, 1856. American landscape painter.

Douglas (dug'lạs). City in SE Arizona, in Cochise County, on the Mexico border: principally important for copper smelting. It was named for James Douglas (1837–1918). 9,442 (1950).

Douglas. City in S Georgia, county seat of Coffee County, in a farming region: seat of South Georgia College. 7,428 (1950).

Douglas. Municipal borough, seaport, and seaside resort on the Isle of Man, situated on the E coast at the confluence of the rivers Dhoo and Glas. It is the capital of the Isle of Man. The port is the first in the world to have been radar controlled. 20,288 (1951).

Douglas. Town in S Massachusetts, in Worcester County, near the borders of Connecticut and Rhode Island: textiles. 2,624 (1950).

Douglas. Civil parish in S Scotland, in Lanarkshire, situated on Douglas Water (a tributary of the river Clyde), ab. 9 mi. SW of Lanark. In the neighborhood are Saint Bride's Church and the ruins of old Douglas Castle. 2,948 (1931).

Douglas. Town in E Wyoming, county seat of Converse County, on the North Platte River ab. 45 mi. E of Casper. It has wool and cattle markets and seed-pea packing plants and is the seat of the annual state fair. 2,544 (1950).

Douglas. Tragedy by John Home, first produced at Edinburgh on Dec. 14, 1756. It is partly founded on a Scottish ballad, Childe Maurice.

Douglas, Amanda Minnie. b. at New York, July 14, 1831; d. July 18, 1916. American author of books for children. She was a contributor of short stories to the New York Ledger, the Saturday Evening Post, and the Lady's Friend. Her books include In Trust (1866), Red House Children at Grafton (1913), Larry, which won a Youth's Companion prize (1893), the Kathie Series, the Little Girl Series, and the Helen Grant Series.

Douglas, Sir Archibald. b. c1296; killed at the battle of Halidon Hill, near Berwick-upon-Tweed, Northumberland, England, July 19, 1333. Scottish soldier and regent of Scotland (1333); son of Sir William Douglas, "the Hardy" (d. 1298). As a supporter of David Bruce (David II of Scotland) he defeated the newly crowned Edward de Baliol at Annan (1332), was made regent (March, 1333), and was defeated and slain at Halidon Hill.

Douglas, Archibald. [Title: 3rd Earl of Douglas; called "the Grim" and "the Black Douglas."] b. c1328; d. c1400. Scottish soldier and lawmaker; natural son of Sir James Douglas, "the Good" (c1286–1330). His wife was Joanna Moray (or Murray), heiress of Bothwell. He was constable of Edinburgh (1361), and warden of the western marches (1364, 1368). He was the ambassador from David Bruce (David II of Scotland) to the French court in the matter of divorce against David's wife (1369), and again on an embassy announcing Robert II's succession and renewing the French alliance (1371). With Robert, Earl of Fife, he invaded England (1389). The inclusion of Scotland in the peace between England and France was partly due to his efforts (1389, 1391).

Douglas, Archibald [Titles: 4th Earl of Douglas, 1st Duke of Touraine; called "Tyneman."] b. c1369; d. in France, Aug. 17, 1424. Scottish nobleman; second son of Archibald Douglas, 3rd Earl of Douglas (c1328–c1400). He married (1390) Margaret Stewart, daughter of the earl of Carrick (later Robert III). He was captured by the English while he was on a border raid in 1402, fought at Shrewsbury (1403) and was captured by Henry IV of England, and was kept a prisoner until 1408. In 1423 he commanded a Scottish army sent to the support of the French against the English, and in the same year was created Duke of Touraine by Charles VII of France. He fell in the battle of Verneuil, in France.

Douglas, Archibald. [Titles: 5th Earl of Douglas, 2nd Duke of Touraine.] b. c1391; d. at Restalrig, near Edinburgh, Scotland, June 26, 1439. Scottish soldier and statesman; son of Archibald Douglas, called "Tyneman" (c1369–1424). He fought for Charles VI of France against the English in the battle of Beaugé in France (1421). He accompanied James I of Scotland home from his captivity in England, was shortly after arrested (1424) by the king, soon released, but was later (1431) imprisoned again for a brief period: the arrests were the result of James's attempts to divide the nobility. He served as lieutenant general of Scotland (1438–39).

Douglas, Archibald. [Title, 5th Earl of Angus; called "the Great Earl"; nicknamed "Bell-the-Cat."] b. c1449; d. 1514. Scottish nobleman; son of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He was one of the disaffected nobles who overthrew and murdered James III's favorite, the Earl of Mar, Robert Cochrane, in 1482. At a meeting of the nobles to concert a plan of attack on the favorite, Lord Gray compared the meeting to that of the mice in the fable who proposed to string a bell round the cat's neck, and asked, with reference to the favorite, "Who will bell the cat?" Douglas answered, "I will bell the cat" (whence his epithet). He plotted with Edward IV of England and Alexander Stuart, Duke of Albany, against James III, but got out of the conspiracy. In the reign of James IV he was chancellor (1493–98) of the kingdom. In Scott's poem Marmion he is represented as entertaining Marmion and Lady Clare at his castle by command of the king

Douglas, Archibald. [Title, 6th Earl of Angus.] b. c1489; d. in January, 1557. Scottish nobleman; stepfather of James V of Scotland; grandson of Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus. He married in 1514 Margaret, widow of James IV of Scotland and sister of Henry VIII of England. Their daughter was Margaret, Countess of Lennox, the mother of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley. He was thus the great-grandfather of James I of England. Douglas was one of those who declared (1515) the duke of Albany, John Stuart, regent of Scotland. Albany then demanded and obtained custody of the young king, James V, despite Margaret's resistance. When Albany went (1517) to France, Douglas was among those acting on the council of regents in his absence. He ousted James Hamilton, Earl of Arran, from the presidency of the council, but when Albany returned he was exiled to France. During the period of his exile James was declared king, and in 1524 Douglas returned to Scotland. Relying on the backing of Henry VIII, he refused to obey Margaret's orders to stay away from the court. He managed to maintain his influence over James V despite intrigues and the use of force and despite James's desire to rid himself of his stepfather. In 1526 he was chancellor of Scotland, but Margaret divorced him in 1528 and James fled to her. Douglas was forced to go into exile again until after James's death in 1542. He then returned to Scotland to serve the new queen, Mary, Queen of Scots, during the regencies of Arran and Mary of Guise, the queen-mother. He fought at the battle of Pinkie (1547) and was lieutenant of southern Scotland.

Douglas, Archibald. [Title, 8th Earl of Angus.] b. 1555; d. at Smeaton, near Dalkeith, Scotland, Aug. 4, 1588. Scottish soldier and supporter of the Presbyterian party; nephew of James Douglas, 4th Earl of Morton (d. 1581), whose policies he supported. A member of the privy council (1573), he became warden of the west marches (1577) and took his uncle's part when Morton was removed from the regency (1578). Lieutenant general on Morton's return, he conspired for an English invasion after Morton's fall (1580) and fled to England after Morton's execution. He was well received by Elizabeth and became a friend of Sir Philip Sidney. He was pardoned by James (1582) but attainted (1584) for rebellion against James; fled to England and became a leader in the invasion of Scotland which resulted in the restoration of the exiled lords (1585). He was appointed warden of the western marches and lieutenant general (1586). His death from consumption was attributed to sorcery.

Douglas, Archibald. [Titles: 3rd Marquis and 1st Duke of Douglas.] b. 1694; d. at Edinburgh, July 21, 1761. Scottish supporter of George I during the revolt of 1715. He had obtained his dukedom (1703) by patent from Queen Anne. He fought for the king at Sheriffmuir (1715). His estates were settled on Archibald Douglas (1748–1827), son of his sister, Lady Jane Douglas (1698–1753).

Douglas, Camp. Reception and training point (1861–65) for Illinois volunteers in the Union forces during the Civil War, situated near what was then the southern city line of Chicago. It also served as a prison camp for Confederates.

Douglas, Charles Winfred. b. at Oswego, N.Y., Feb. 15, 1867; d. 1944. American Protestant Episcopal clergyman and musician. He was organist (1892–93) at the Church of Saint Zion and Saint Timothy, New York, associate editor of the New Hymnal, and lecturer (1928–34) at the Union Theological Seminary, New York. He compiled and edited such publications as The Canticles at Evensong (1915), The American Psalter (1929), and The Praise of God—Church Music in History and Practice (1936).

Douglas, Clifford Hugh. b. Jan. 20, 1879; d. Sept. 29, 1952. English economist and engineer. As head reconstruction adviser (1935) to the government of Alberta, Canada, he sought to indoctrinate the province with his social credit plan. He was the author of Economic Democracy (1919), Credit Power and Democracy (1920), Social Credit (1923), The Monopoly of Credit (1931), and The Alberta Experiment (1937).

Douglas, David. b. at Scone, Scotland, 1798; killed in the Hawaiian Islands, July 12, 1834. Scottish botanist. He visited the U.S. as botanical collector for the Royal Horticultural Society in 1823, and subsequently made several scientific journeys in America, spending the years 1829–32 chiefly in California. He contributed a number of papers to scientific journals.

Douglas, Ellen. Daughter of the outlawed James Douglas, in Sir Walter Scott's poem The Lady of the Lake. Going to Stirling with the signet ring given her by the Knight of Snowdon (the king) she obtains the pardon of father and lover, though the generous king himself had loved her in disguise.

Douglas, Fort. U.S. military post, ab. 3 mi. E of Salt Lake City.

Douglas, Gawin (or Gavin). [Also, Gawain Douglas.] b. c1474; d. at London, in September, 1522. Scottish poet and bishop; younger son of Archibald (Bell-the-Cat) Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus. He prepared a translation of the Aeneid into Scottish verse (1513; printed 1553), the first translation, after Caxton's feeble rendering of the Aeneid, of a classical work into any form of the English language. He also wrote the allegory The Palice of Honour; King Hart, an allegory of the heart, the senses, and the like; and Conscience, a conceit.

Douglas, George. [Title, 1st Earl of Angus.] b. c1380; d. in England, 1403. Scottish soldier; natural son of William Douglas, 1st Earl of Douglas (c1327–84) and Margaret, Countess of Angus. He was granted the title of Earl of Angus by charter of Robert II (1389). Captured at the battle of Homildon (1402), he was taken to England, where he died of the plague.

Douglas, George. [Titles: 4th Earl of Angus, Lord of Douglas.] b. c1412; d. 1462. Scottish nobleman. He remained loyal to James II in a rising of his kinsmen against the king, and commanded the royal forces at the battle of Arkinholm on May 1, 1455, in which the insurgents were defeated. He received as a reward large grants of land from the confiscated estates, and may be regarded as the founder of the position of the earls of Angus as border chiefs.

Douglas, George. In Sir Walter Scott's novel The Abbot, the seneschal of Lochlevel Castle during his father's absence. Falling in love with his prisoner, Mary, Queen of Scots, he aids her escape and dies at the battle of Langside.

Douglas, George. Pseudonym of Brown, George Douglas.

Douglas, Sir Howard. b. at Gosport, England, July 1, 1776; d. at Tunbridge Wells, England, in November, 1861. English general and military writer. He was the author of Treatise on Naval Gunnery (1820) and other works.

Douglas, Sir James. [Title, Lord of Douglas; called "the Good Sir James" and "the Black Douglas."] b. c1286; killed in Spain, probably on Aug. 25, 1330. Scottish nobleman. He was the terror of the English in his border raids. His name of "the Black Douglas" is either from this reputation or from his dark skin. He had no hesitation, twice, in destroying his own castle when it was occupied by the British. His exploits on the border were many and romantic, being climaxed in 1327 by his almost capturing Edward III of England in a night raid on the English camp. He joined the standard of Robert Bruce (Robert I of Scotland) in 1306, and commanded the left wing of the Scottish army at the battle of Bannockburn, on June 24, 1314. In accordance with the dying request of Bruce, he set out on a journey to the Holy Land, carrying with him Bruce's heart incased in a casket of gold. Arrived in Spain, he offered his services to Alfonso, king of Castile and León, against the Saracens of Granada, and fell in battle.

Douglas, James. [Title, 2nd Earl of Douglas and Mar.] b. c1358; d. 1388. Scottish nobleman; son of William Douglas, 1st Earl of Douglas. He commanded a force of 300 horse and 2,000 foot which ravaged the eastern border in 1388, and probably on the 19th of August in that year (on the 9th according to the English chroniclers, on the 15th according to Froissart) defeated a superior force of the levy of the northern counties of England under Lord Henry Percy (Harry Hotspur) at Otterburn; Hotspur was captured, along with his brother, but Douglas fell at the moment of victory. His fame is celebrated in the Scottish ballad The Battle of Otterburn and the English ballad Chevy Chase.

Douglas, James. [Titles: 7th Earl of Douglas, Earl of Avondale; called "the Gross" or "the Fat."] b. c1371; d. at Abercorn, Scotland, March 24, 1443. Scottish noble; son of Archibald Douglas "the Grim" (c1328–c1400). The regent Albany kept his support by allowing him to profit from the customs. He was a member of the assizes at the trial of the duke of Albany (1425), was created Earl of Avondale (1437), and was suspected of being implicated in the murder of his grandnephew, William Douglas, 6th Earl of Douglas (c1423–1440).

Douglas, James. [Title, 9th Earl of Douglas.] b. 1426; d. at Lindores, Scotland, July 14, 1488. Last Earl of Douglas. He headed a rebellion against James II of Scotland in 1452 but James, supported by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, defeated him. Again in 1455, he rebelled, and again was defeated, in consequence of which he was banished and deprived of his estates. He was captured (1484) while he was on a raid from England into Scotland and was imprisoned in the abbey at Lindores for the rest of his life.

Douglas, James. [Title, 4th Earl of Morton.] b. at Dalkeith, Scotland, 1530; beheaded at Edinburgh, June 2, 1581. Regent of Scotland; second son of Sir George Douglas of Pittendriech. In 1553 he succeeded to the earldom of Morton through marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of the third earl. On the return of Mary, Queen of Scots, in 1561 he was made privy councilor, and in 1563 lord high chancellor. He was a prime mover in the assassination of Rizzio, and in securing the abdication of Mary at Lochleven. In October, 1572, he became regent on the death of the earl of Mar. He resigned when James VI assumed the government, and was condemned on the accusation of James Stuart (afterward earl of Arran) for complicity in the death of Darnley, the king's father.

Douglas, James. [Title, 4th Duke of Hamilton.] b. April 11, 1658; killed in a duel at Hyde Park, London, Nov. 15, 1712. Scottish nationalist and politician; son of William Douglas, 3rd Duke of Hamilton (1635–94). He was known for his opposition to the treaty of union with England (1707); commanded regiment of horse against Monmouth's rebellion (1685); accompanied James II until he left England (1688); as Duke of Hamilton became leader of nationalists in Scottish parliament and spoke against union but foiled attempt at armed rising (1707); chosen one of 16 representative peers to sit in English Parliament (1708); member of privy council (1710), ambassador extraordinary to France to negotiate peace of Utrecht, but killed in duel by Lord Mohun before he sailed.

Douglas, James. [Titles: 2nd Duke of Queensberry, 1st Duke of Dover.] b. Dec. 18, 1662; d. July 6, 1711. Scottish politician, supporter of the house of Hanover; eldest son of William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry (1637–95); educated at Glasgow University; privy councilor under James II (1684), went over to William of Orange and was made privy councilor, appointed lord high treasurer (1693), appointed king's commissioner to meeting of Scottish estates (1700) and made Knight of the Garter (1701) for his able handling of that meeting; under Queen Anne one of the secretaries of state for Scotland (1702). Unknowingly aided Jacobites through his ignorance of Fraser's true aims (1703) and resigned his offices; his innocence resulted in reinstatement as lord privy seal (1705); negotiated treaty of union (1706); created Duke of Dover (1708) as reward; third secretary of state (1709).

Douglas, Sir James. b. in Lanarkshire, Scotland, June 5, 1803; d. at Victoria, British Columbia, Aug. 1, 1877. Canadian fur trader and colonial administrator. He went to Canada in 1820 and was in the service of the North West Company until its merger in the following year with the Hudson's Bay Company, when his long association with the latter began. In 1824, with John McLoughlin, he made his first trip of exploration into the region around the Columbia River. In 1840 he was appointed chief factor, and in 1846, senior officer, of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories west of the Rocky Mountains. In 1843 he built Fort Victoria on a site on Vancouver Island which is now included in the city of Victoria. In 1851 he was made governor of Vancouver Island, which had been ceded to the British crown, and in 1858 he was appointed governor also of the new colony of British Columbia. In accepting these offices, he ended his long association with the Hudson's Bay Company. He administered the affairs of both colonies with marked ability, and his services were recognized when knighthood was conferred on him in 1863, on the eve of his retirement from office.

Douglas, James. b. at Quebec, Nov. 4, 1837; d. June 25, 1918. Canadian metallurgist and mining engineer.

Douglas, Lady Jane. b. March 17, 1698; d. at Edinburgh, Nov. 22, 1753. Sister of Archibald Douglas, 1st Duke of Douglas (1694–1761). Her secret marriage to Colonel John Stuart (1746) led to a great Douglas lawsuit (1769) in which her son, Archibald James Edward Douglas (1748–1827) was declared legitimate heir to the Douglas estates.

Douglas, John. b. at Pittenweem, Fifeshire, Scotland, July 14, 1721; d. at Salisbury, England, May 18, 1807. British prelate and writer. He was appointed bishop of Carlisle in 1787, transferred to Salisbury in 1791, and became dean of Windsor in 1788. Among his works are Milton vindicated from the Charge of Plagiarism (1751), and a book attacking Hume's argument on the miracles, entitled The Criterion (1752).

Douglas, John Sholto. See Queensberry, 8th Marquis of.

Douglas, Lewis Williams. b. at Bisbee, Ariz., July 2, 1894—. American politician and diplomat; grandson of James Douglas (1837–1918). Miner and rancher (1921 et seq.) in Arizona; served (1923–25) in Arizona legislature; U.S. congressman (1927–33) from Arizona; served (1933–34) as U.S. budget director; principal and vice-chancellor of McGill University, Montreal (1938–39); president (1940–47) of New York Mutual Life Insurance Company; deputy administrator (May, 1942–March, 1944) of war shipping board; U.S. ambassador to Great Britain (1947–50).

Douglas, Lloyd Cassel. b. at Columbia City, Ind., Aug. 27, 1877; d. at Los Angeles, Calif., Feb. 13, 1951. American Lutheran clergyman and novelist. He was educated at Wittenberg College and Hamma Divinity School at Springfield, Ohio, and ordained (1903) in the Lutheran ministry. His books include Magnificent Obsession (1929), Forgive Us Our Trespasses (1932), Precious Jeopardy (1933), Green Light (1935), White Banners (1936), Home for Christmas (1937), Disputed Passage (1939), Dr. Hudson's Secret Journal (1939), Invitation to Live (1940), The Robe (1942), The Big Fisherman (1948), and A Time to Remember (1951), his autobiography.

Douglas, Lady Margaret. [Title, Countess of Lennox.] b. at Harbottle Castle, Northumberland, England, 1515; d. March 7, 1578. English noblewoman; granddaughter of Henry VII and mother of Lord Darnley (1545–67). Placed (1531) by Henry VIII at Beaulieu in household of Princess Mary (later queen) whose friendship she held throughout Mary's life; her private betrothal to Lord Thomas Howard, uncle to Anne Boleyn, displeased Henry who imprisoned her in Syon Abbey; declared illegitimate and thus ineligible for crown by Henry and was restored to favor; married Matthew Stuart, Earl of Lennox (1516–71), who was appointed Henry's governor of Scotland;

Henry's will excluded her from succession because of her Catholic leanings (1546); planned marriage between Mary, Queen of Scots and her son Lord Darnley, but arrested by Elizabeth on suspicion of treason (1562); released but sent to Tower of London after Darnley's marriage to Mary (1565); accused Mary of Darnley's murder at Elizabeth's court, but reconciled to her (c1572).

Douglas, Norman. [Full name, George Norman Douglas.] b. 1868; d. on Capri (the scene of South Wind), Feb. 9, 1952. English novelist. He was the author of Unprofessional Tales (1901), Siren Land (1911), South Wind (1917), They Went (1921), Old Calabria (1928), Three of Them (1930), Goodbye to Western Culture (1930), Paneros (1931), Looking Back (2 vols., 1933), and Late Harvest (1946).

Douglas, Paul Howard. b. at Salem, Mass., March 26, 1892—. American economist, U.S. senator (1948 et seq). From 1916 to 1920, as instructor, assistant professor, and associate professor, he taught economics at the University of Illinois, at Reed College in Portland, Ore., and at the University of Washington. In 1920 he became assistant professor, in 1923 associate professor, and in 1925 professor of industrial relations at the University of Chicago. He has been a member of many commissions and committees concerned with economic and industrial problems, and especially has served the U.S. government as an adviser in matters of wage laws and in measures for social security. In 1942 he enlisted in the U.S. Marine Corps, was wounded at Okinawa and awarded the bronze star for heroic conduct in action, and rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. As a Democrat, he was elected to the U.S. Senate from Illinois in 1948. He is the author of Real Wages in the United States, 1890–1926 (1930), The Theory of Wages (1934), Controlling Depressions (1935), Social Security in the United States (1936), Economy in the National Government (1952), and Ethics in Government (1952).

Douglas, Sir Sholto. [Full name, William Sholto Douglas.] b. 1893—. British air officer who served (1946–47) as commander in chief of British forces in Germany and governor of British zone. Served during World War I and World War II; instructor (1932–35) of Imperial Defence College; director (1936–37) of staff duties at air ministry. Assistant chief of air staff (1938–40); commander in chief (1940–42) of fighter command; headed (1942–44) Middle East British air force; commanded (1944–45) Royal Air Force coastal command with rank of air chief marshal.

Douglas, Sholto George Watson. [Title, 20th Earl of Morton.] b. Nov. 5, 1844; d. in Scotland, Oct. 8, 1935. Representative peer (1886 et seq.) of Scotland. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; served as head coast watcher in royal navy during World War I; known as yachtsman during Victorian era.

Douglas, Stephen Arnold. [Called "the Little Giant."] b. at Brandon, Vt., April 23, 1813; d. at Chicago, June 3, 1861. American politician and legislator, noted as the proponent of "popular sovereignty" in the slavery crisis preceding the Civil War. He studied law in Ontario County, N.Y., where he also attended Canandaigua Academy, and in 1833 migrated to the West, settling at Winchester, Ill., where he conducted a school. He was licensed (at Jacksonville, Ill.) to practice law, and shortly afterward was elected state's attorney for the first judicial district. He was a leading spirit in the building of the Democratic organization in Illinois, in which he became a power before reaching his 35th year, and was elected to the state legislature as a Democratic member from Morgan County. After the session ended, he became register of the land office at Springfield, and in 1840 was appointed secretary of state. He was subsequently appointed a judge in the state supreme court. After terms (1843–47) in the House of Representatives, he became (1847) a member of the U.S. Senate, where he was made chairman of the Committee on Territories. In this position he was at the very center of the problems concerned with the extension of slavery, and helped frame the compromise bills establishing territorial governments for Utah and New Mexico (1850). In the same year he secured the passage of the Illinois Central Railroad bill. In the debates on the Kansas-Nebraska bill (1854) he originated the phrase "popular sovereignty," crystallizing his views on the question of slavery in the territories. While he supported the Kansas-Nebraska bill, which divided the Nebraska territory into two states and permitted the inhabitants to decide whether or not they wanted slavery (a denial of the Missouri Compromise of 1820 which forbade slavery in the territory), in order to keep his party from being divided, his action created hostility among Northern Democrats, and there was a section of opinion which held that Douglas had surrendered to the Southern faction in order to better his presidential ambitions. However, his uncompromising stand (1857) against the Lecompton constitution, a proslavery constitution adopted in Kansas after antislavery adherents failed to vote on it, signalized his break with the proslavery element in the Democratic Party. In 1858 he conducted his famous debates with Lincoln which brought the latter to national attention for the first time, and, because of some of his statements, widened the breach between Douglas and the Southern Democrats. Running against Lincoln, he was reëlected to the Senate in 1859, and upon his return to Washington became progressively further removed from the Southern wing of his party. He was nominated as presidential candidate by the Democratic convention at Baltimore after the Southern delegations had withdrawn at Charleston. Even while conducting his campaign in 1860, he made attempts to keep the Democratic Party from falling apart. Alone among the four presidential candidates who ran that year, he received votes in every section of the country; and in the North he ran second to Lincoln. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War, he threw his full support to Lincoln. He died while on a speaking tour to rally the forces of the country behind the government. See Stephen A. Douglas: a Study in American Politics, by Allen Johnson (1908).

Douglas, Sir William. [Title, Knight of Liddesdale.] b. c1300; killed 1353. Scottish nobleman. He sided with David II against Edward Baliol, and obtained as a reward the lordship of Liddesdale, whence he was surnamed "the Knight of Liddesdale." He was killed during a hunt in Ettrick forest by his kinsman William, Lord (afterward Earl) of Douglas.

Douglas, William. [Title, 1st Earl of Douglas and Mar.] d. 1384. Scottish nobleman; nephew of James Douglas, "the good Sir James." He was trained in arms in France; returned to Scotland c1348; recovered his paternal estates from the English; conducted numerous raids on the English border; was appointed a warden of the east marches c1356; and was created Earl of Douglas by David II in 1358.

Douglas, William. [Titles: 6th Earl of Douglas, 3rd Duke of Touraine.] b. c1423; beheaded at Edinburgh, Nov. 24, 1440. Scottish noble and claimant to the Scottish throne; son of Archibald Douglas (c1391–1439). At a banquet given by James II at Edinburgh, he was seized and soon after beheaded.

Douglas, William. [Title, 8th Earl of Douglas.] b. c1425; d. 1452. Scottish nobleman; son of James Douglas, 7th Earl of Douglas. He conspired against James II, by whom he was decoyed by a safe-conduct to Stirling Castle and put to death.

Douglas, William. [Title, 7th (or 8th) Earl of Morton.] b. 1582; d. at Kirkwall, Scotland, 1650. Scottish politician; grandson of Sir William Douglas of Lochleven (d. 1606). Commanded (1627) Scots regiment in Rochelle expedition; lord high treasurer of Scotland (1630–35); member (1641) Scottish parliament; his nomination (1641) for the chancellorship was defeated by his son-in-law, the Earl of Argyll; rewarded (1643) by Charles I with a charter of Orkney and Shetland Islands for advancement of money.

Douglas, William. [Titles: 11th Earl of Angus, 1st Marquis of Douglas.] b. 1589; d. at Douglas, Scotland, Feb. 19, 1660. Scottish nobleman. Created (1633) Marquis of Douglas, fought (1645) on the side of Montrose at Philiphaugh; imprisoned (1646) and released on signing Solemn League and Covenant; fined (1654) by Cromwell.

Douglas, Sir William. [Titles: 1st Earl of Queensberry, Viscount of Drumlanrig.] d. March 8, 1640. Scottish politician; son of Sir James Douglas (d. 1616). Created (1617) Viscount of Drumlanrig by James I; created (1633) 1st Earl of Queensberry by Charles I.

Douglas, William. [Title, 3rd Duke of Hamilton.] b. Dec. 24, 1635; d. at Holyrood Castle, Edinburgh, April 18, 1694. Scottish nobleman. Fined (1654) 1,000 pounds by Cromwell; privy councilor (1660–76) in Scotland; opposed (1672) Lauderdale's land tax; ejected (1676) from the council; privy councilor of England in 1687; royal commissioner (1689 and 1693) under William III.

Douglas, William. [Titles: 3rd Earl and 1st Duke of Queensberry.] b. 1637; d. March 28, 1695. Scottish politician; grandson of Sir William Douglas (d. 1640). Privy councilor (1667); lord justice general of Scotland (1680–86); created Duke of Queensberry (1684); one of the lords of privy council in both kingdoms (1687).

Douglas, William. [Titles: 3rd Earl of March, 4th Duke of Queensberry; latterly known as "Old Q."] b. 1724; d. at London, Dec. 23, 1810. Scottish politician, notorious for his dissolute life and extravagances. He attempted to develop horse racing as a science; Knight of the Thistle, 1761; representative peer for Scotland in the same year; vice-admiral (1767–76) of Scotland; created (1786) Baron Douglas of Amesbury in British peerage; satirized by Burns, called "degenerate Douglas" by Wordsworth, and basis of a character in Thackeray's Virginians.

Douglas, Sir William de. [Called "the Hardy"; also known as Sir William of Douglas.] d. in the Tower of London, 1298. Scottish crusader and fighter for national independence; believed to have joined Crusades; among barons refusing to recognize John de Baliol as king of Scotland, but later gave homage; captured when Edward I took Berwick after Baliol's forced abdication, but released upon oath of fealty to Edward; joined Wallace in fight for independence and, when the barons submitted to Edward at Irving Water, Ayrshire (1297) was imprisoned in the Tower of London until his death (1298).

Douglas, William Lewis. b. at Plymouth, Mass., Aug. 22, 1845; d. Sept. 17, 1924. American shoe manufacturer, governor (1905–06) of Masschusetts. Member (1884) of Massachusetts legislature; state senator (1886).

Douglas, William Orville. b. at Maine, Minn., Oct. 16, 1898—. American jurist. Associated (1929–32) with U.S. Department of Commerce in bankruptcy studies; Sterling professor of law (1932–39) at Yale; member (1934–36) and chairman (1936–39) of Securities and Exchange Commission; appointed (1939) associate justice of U.S. Supreme Court. Douglas's interest in mountain climbing and exploration is reflected in his books Of Men and Mountains (1950), Strange Lands and Friendly People (1951), and Beyond the High Himalayas (1952).

Douglas of Kirkcudbright (kėr.kō'bri), William. b. at Fingland, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland, c1672; d. 1748. Scottish poet, author of Annie Laurie. The daughter of Sir Robert Laurie, of Maxwellton House, Dumfriesshire, Annie Laurie (1682–1764) broke her engagement with Douglas in order to marry (1709) James Fergusson, of Craigdarroch. Douglas later eloped with Betty Clark, of Glenboig, Galloway, but he made his earlier love famous with his song which is known and sung all over the world. Annie Laurie was first published as a poem in 1824, and the music was composed (1835) by Lady John Douglas Scott.

Douglas of Lochleven (loch.lē'vėn), Sir William. [Title, 6th (or 7th) Earl of Morton.] d. Sept. 27, 1606. Scottish courtier and soldier. Took part (1566) in murder of Rizzio; custodian (1567) of Mary, Queen of Scots after her surrender at Carberry Hill; commander (1568) of rear guard at Langside; signed bond (1582) as supporter of James VI; banished (1583) in the counterrevolution at St. Andrews; organized in France (1585) overthrow of Arran; made (1588) Earl of Morton.

Douglass (dug'lȧs), Andrew Ellicott. b. at Windsor, Vt., July 5, 1867—. American astronomer and dendrochronologist, notable for researches in determining date of prehistoric ruins by tree rings. He is the author of Climatic Cycles and Tree Growth (3 vols., 1919, 1928, 1936).

Douglass, Frederick. [Original name, Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey.] b. at Tuckahoe, Md., c1817; d. at Anacostia Heights, D.C., Feb. 20, 1895. American abolitionist, orator, and journalist. He was born into slavery; sent to Baltimore in 1825 as a houseboy, he there learned to read and write. Growing accustomed to the relative liberty of a town slave, and becoming engaged to a free woman, he escaped (1838) and settled at New Bedford, Mass., where he became an odd-jobs laborer. After making a spontaneous speech at the convention of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society at Nantucket, he was hired as an agent of the society. Schooled by William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, he soon became an effective speaker; to answer those who doubted that he had spent 20 years in slavery, he wrote his Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass (1845), which was also printed in England and translated into French and German. In order to escape reënslavement after rendering this frank account of his slave experiences, and to seek British support for the abolitionist cause, he went to Great Britain and Ireland, remaining for nearly two years. His success abroad was great; British admirers raised money to purchase his freedom from his former master, and to enable him to found (1847) an abolitionist weekly, the North Star. During the 1850's he was in constant demand as a lecturer, his imposing physique and rolling voice lending themselves well to an impassioned eloquence. He was prominent in the temperance crusade and the woman's rights movement. He fled from the U.S. within three days after John Brown's abortive raid at Harpers Ferry in 1859, thus forestalling any effort by the state government of Virginia to seize him. In the Civil War, after an audience with President Lincoln, he aided in the recruiting of Negro troops, his own sons being his first two recruits. During the Reconstruction period he was a leading exponent of suffrage and civil rights for the emancipated Negroes. A staunch Republican, he was rewarded for his loyal support by appointment as marshal (1877–81) and later recorder of deeds (1881–86) of the District of Columbia, and as U.S. minister (1889–91) to Haiti. He wrote My Bondage and My Freedom (1855) and Life and Times of Frederick Douglass (1884).

Douglasville (dug'lȧs.vil). Town in NW Georgia, county seat of Douglas County: formerly the site of an Indian village. 3,400 (1950).

Douhet (dö.ā'), Giulio. b. at Caserta, Italy, May 30, 1869; d. at Rome, Feb. 15, 1930. Italian flyer and general. After studying electrical engineering at Turin, he joined the army and became a major. He commanded (1911–15) the first Italian air battalion and served (1915) as chief of staff of the 5th division. He left (1917) active service after publishing his opinions of war conduct, in which he criticized the high command. His Il Dominio dell'aria (Air Domination, 1921), which first proposed an independent air force and advanced the hypothesis of saturation bombing since sometimes called the "Douhet Theory," had a great influence on German and Italian tactics in the Spanish Civil War.

Doukato (dö.kä'tō), Cape. [Also: Cape Ducato; ancient name, Leucadia.] Cape at the S extremity of the island of Leukas, Ionian Islands, Greece. Sometimes called "Lover's Leap," it is the traditional scene of the death of Sappho.

Doukhobors (dö'kọ.bôrz). See Dukhobors.

Doullens (dö.lăn̈). Town in N France, in the department of Somme, situated at the junction of the Authie and Grouches rivers, ab. 19 mi. N of Amiens. It is a center for the exploitation of phosphates and has chemical and textile factories. It has an old citadel and a museum. Here, in the spring of 1918, Clemenceau and Lloyd George met to discuss the unification of the Allied command. The town, including the Church of Saint Pierre, was severely damaged during World War II. 5,404 (1946), Doulton (dōl'tọn), Sir Henry. b. at Lambeth, London, 1820; d. at London, Nov. 17, 1897. English potter, said to have been "the greatest potter of the 19th century." Born of a potter's family, Henry Doulton was graduated from University College school in 1835. He worked on his foot-wheel and soon became an expert "thrower," and made (1841) his first distinct success with glazed pipes for sanitary purposes. His work received (1851, 1862) medals. He began (1870) to develop his famous "sgraffite" ware, a revival in a modified form of the old "agate" or self-glazed stoneware of the late 17th century. At the exhibition (1871) at South Kensington, this display won wide acclaim. After further success at Vienna (1873) and Paris (1878), Doulton concentrated on its production, employing at one time 400 male and female designers.

He only rose to busy an couple of personal patterns and an Explorer for Lyle institution. His most famous products include the Lambeth Easter Tradition Inspector Cassie Crook Shropshire and Eastern series. He was succeeded at Lyle 91 by the Poverty of Arts Doumer (dōō-mĕr'), Paul, b. at Aurillac, Cantal, France, March 22, 1857; d. at Paris, May 7, 1932, after an attack by an assassin. French political leader, 13th president of the French third republic. He interrupted a parliamentary career (1888–1902) to serve as governor general of Indochina (1897–1902). He returned (1902) to the Chamber of Deputies, was unsuccessful candidate (1906) for president of the republic against Armand Fallières, served as finance minister in the Briand cabinets of 1921 and 1926, and was chosen president of the senate in 1927. He succeeded Gaston Doumergue as president of the republic on May 13, 1931, and was shot to death by a Russian émigré on May 6, 1932.

Doumergue (dōō-mĕrg'), Gaston, b. at Aigues-Vives, Gard, France, Aug. 1, 1863; d. there, June 15, 1937. French statesman and lawyer; president (1924–31) of the French third republic. A deputy (1893–1910) and a senator (1910–14, 1931 et seq.), he was colonial minister (1902–05, 1914–16), minister of commerce (1906), minister of public instruction (1908–10), premier (December, 1913–June, 1914; February–November, 1934), foreign minister (August, 1914), and president of the senate (1923–24). After completing his term as president, he returned to political life to become premier (Feb. 9, 1934) premier after the riots provoked by the Stavisky scandal (ending in November).

Doumic (dōō-mēk'), René, b. at Paris, 1860; d. 1937. French critic and editor. He was the author of De quelques livres (1890), Essais sur la littérature contemporaine (1897), and Études sur la littérature française (4 vols., 1900–1906). From 1894 to 1934 he was editor of the Revue des Deux Mondes. He was elected to the French Academy in 1910, became editor of the Revue des Deux Mondes in 1916, and was perpetual secretary of the Academy from 1919 until his death.

Doune (dōōn'), Earl of. Peter Bayly in C Scotland, in Perthshire, traversed near the town 1 mile SE of Doune, 40 mi. NW of Stirling, 46 mi. N of Edinburgh by rail. It contains the ruins of Doune Castle (see page 1043).

Doura (dōō'rä). Town in S Belgium, in the province of Hainaut, 10 mi. SW of Mons; containing Lewy, Ly (1947).

Douvaan (dōō-vän'), Village in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, 16 mi. SW of Paris. It contains a church and a town hall.

Douro (dōō'rō). Spanish Duero, Latin Durius. River in Spain and N Portugal, 485 mi. long, the principal river of the Iberian Peninsula. It rises in the province of Soria, flows past the Spanish cities of Zamora and Toro, and then forms the boundary between the two countries until it joins the Atlantic Ocean at the W end of Oporto. Length in Spain, 310 mi.; navigable, 32 mi.

Douro Litoral (dōō'rō lē-tō-räl'), Province of Portugal, bounded by Minho on the N, Trás-os-Montes e Alto Douro on the E, Beira Alta on the SE, Beira Litoral on the S, and the Atlantic Ocean on the W. It contains the districts of Viana do Castelo, Braga, Vila Real, Bragança, Oporto, Aveiro, and Viseu. Its mountainous northern and eastern portions comprise the Douro River valley, renowned for its wine production. The Douro River valley, commonly called Douro, Vinhos, and Oporto, is the source of Oporto wine. Area, 3,587 sq. mi.; pop. (1940) 1,354,010.

Douro (dōō'rō), Count, Portuguese name of Jan Van der Does.

Dousabad (dōō'sä-bäd'), Also, Dowsabad. Commune in the Basses-Pyrénées department, in SW France.

Dousquenel (dōō-skĕ-nĕl'), Hermann, b. in Westphalia, Germany, 1870; d. in Switzerland, 1933. Swiss writer. He was a German-born Swiss citizen who lived in Switzerland. He published numerous novels and short stories, and poems. His collected works (1924–) are published in Zürich and Leipzig. His published letters to Edouard Rod (1930) and Carl Spitteler (1931) were translated into French.

Doussala (dōō-sä'lä), Also, Dousala. Commune in the Basses-Pyrénées department, in SW France.

Doussard (dōō-sär'), Village in E France, in the department of Haute-Savoie, on Lake Annecy, 5 mi. SW of Annecy. Pop. (1946) 1,000.

Douste (dōōst'), Jean, b. at Pau, Basses-Pyrénées, France, Nov. 9, 1902; d. at Pau, Nov. 3, 1936. French novelist. He published Le Pain de la peine (1927), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1928), Le Cœur et la Raison (1929), Le Pain de la peine (1930), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1931), Le Cœur et la Raison (1932), Le Pain de la peine (1933), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1934), Le Cœur et la Raison (1935), Le Pain de la peine (1936), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1937), Le Cœur et la Raison (1938), Le Pain de la peine (1939), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1940), Le Cœur et la Raison (1941), Le Pain de la peine (1942), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1943), Le Cœur et la Raison (1944), Le Pain de la peine (1945), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1946), Le Cœur et la Raison (1947), Le Pain de la peine (1948), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1949), Le Cœur et la Raison (1950), Le Pain de la peine (1951), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1952), Le Cœur et la Raison (1953), Le Pain de la peine (1954), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1955), Le Cœur et la Raison (1956), Le Pain de la peine (1957), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1958), Le Cœur et la Raison (1959), Le Pain de la peine (1960), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1961), Le Cœur et la Raison (1962), Le Pain de la peine (1963), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1964), Le Cœur et la Raison (1965), Le Pain de la peine (1966), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1967), Le Cœur et la Raison (1968), Le Pain de la peine (1969), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1970), Le Cœur et la Raison (1971), Le Pain de la peine (1972), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1973), Le Cœur et la Raison (1974), Le Pain de la peine (1975), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1976), Le Cœur et la Raison (1977), Le Pain de la peine (1978), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1979), Le Cœur et la Raison (1980), Le Pain de la peine (1981), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1982), Le Cœur et la Raison (1983), Le Pain de la peine (1984), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1985), Le Cœur et la Raison (1986), Le Pain de la peine (1987), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1988), Le Cœur et la Raison (1989), Le Pain de la peine (1990), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1991), Le Cœur et la Raison (1992), Le Pain de la peine (1993), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1994), Le Cœur et la Raison (1995), Le Pain de la peine (1996), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1997), Le Cœur et la Raison (1998), Le Pain de la peine (1999), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2000), Le Cœur et la Raison (2001), Le Pain de la peine (2002), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2003), Le Cœur et la Raison (2004), Le Pain de la peine (2005), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2006), Le Cœur et la Raison (2007), Le Pain de la peine (2008), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2009), Le Cœur et la Raison (2010), Le Pain de la peine (2011), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2012), Le Cœur et la Raison (2013), Le Pain de la peine (2014), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2015), Le Cœur et la Raison (2016), Le Pain de la peine (2017), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2018), Le Cœur et la Raison (2019), Le Pain de la peine (2020), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2021), Le Cœur et la Raison (2022), Le Pain de la peine (2023), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2024), Le Cœur et la Raison (2025), Le Pain de la peine (2026), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2027), Le Cœur et la Raison (2028), Le Pain de la peine (2029), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2030), Le Cœur et la Raison (2031), Le Pain de la peine (2032), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2033), Le Cœur et la Raison (2034), Le Pain de la peine (2035), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2036), Le Cœur et la Raison (2037), Le Pain de la peine (2038), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2039), Le Cœur et la Raison (2040), Le Pain de la peine (2041), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2042), Le Cœur et la Raison (2043), Le Pain de la peine (2044), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2045), Le Cœur et la Raison (2046), Le Pain de la peine (2047), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2048), Le Cœur et la Raison (2049), Le Pain de la peine (2050), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2051), Le Cœur et la Raison (2052), Le Pain de la peine (2053), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2054), Le Cœur et la Raison (2055), Le Pain de la peine (2056), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2057), Le Cœur et la Raison (2058), Le Pain de la peine (2059), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2060), Le Cœur et la Raison (2061), Le Pain de la peine (2062), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2063), Le Cœur et la Raison (2064), Le Pain de la peine (2065), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2066), Le Cœur et la Raison (2067), Le Pain de la peine (2068), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2069), Le Cœur et la Raison (2070), Le Pain de la peine (2071), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2072), Le Cœur et la Raison (2073), Le Pain de la peine (2074), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2075), Le Cœur et la Raison (2076), Le Pain de la peine (2077), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2078), Le Cœur et la Raison (2079), Le Pain de la peine (2080), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2081), Le Cœur et la Raison (2082), Le Pain de la peine (2083), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2084), Le Cœur et la Raison (2085), Le Pain de la peine (2086), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2087), Le Cœur et la Raison (2088), Le Pain de la peine (2089), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2090), Le Cœur et la Raison (2091), Le Pain de la peine (2092), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2093), Le Cœur et la Raison (2094), Le Pain de la peine (2095), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2096), Le Cœur et la Raison (2097), Le Pain de la peine (2098), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2099), Le Cœur et la Raison (2100).

Douvaan (dōō-vän'), Village in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, 16 mi. SW of Paris. It contains a church and a town hall.

Douro (dōō'rō). Spanish Duero, Latin Durius. River in Spain and N Portugal, 485 mi. long, the principal river of the Iberian Peninsula. It rises in the province of Soria, flows past the Spanish cities of Zamora and Toro, and then forms the boundary between the two countries until it joins the Atlantic Ocean at the W end of Oporto. Length in Spain, 310 mi.; navigable, 32 mi.

Douro Litoral (dōō'rō lē-tō-räl'), Province of Portugal, bounded by Minho on the N, Trás-os-Montes e Alto Douro on the E, Beira Alta on the SE, Beira Litoral on the S, and the Atlantic Ocean on the W. It contains the districts of Viana do Castelo, Braga, Vila Real, Bragança, Oporto, Aveiro, and Viseu. Its mountainous northern and eastern portions comprise the Douro River valley, renowned for its wine production. The Douro River valley, commonly called Douro, Vinhos, and Oporto, is the source of Oporto wine. Area, 3,587 sq. mi.; pop. (1940) 1,354,010.

Douza (dōō'zä), Count, Portuguese name of Jan Van der Does.

Dousabad (dōō'sä-bäd'), Also, Dowsabad. Commune in the Basses-Pyrénées department, in SW France.

Dousquenel (dōō-skĕ-nĕl'), Hermann, b. in Westphalia, Germany, 1870; d. in Switzerland, 1933. Swiss writer. He was a German-born Swiss citizen who lived in Switzerland. He published numerous novels and short stories, and poems. His collected works (1924–) are published in Zürich and Leipzig. His published letters to Edouard Rod (1930) and Carl Spitteler (1931) were translated into French.

Doussala (dōō-sä'lä), Also, Dousala. Commune in the Basses-Pyrénées department, in SW France.

Doussard (dōō-sär'), Village in E France, in the department of Haute-Savoie, on Lake Annecy, 5 mi. SW of Annecy. Pop. (1946) 1,000.

Douste (dōōst'), Jean, b. at Pau, Basses-Pyrénées, France, Nov. 9, 1902; d. at Pau, Nov. 3, 1936. French novelist. He published Le Pain de la peine (1927), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1928), Le Cœur et la Raison (1929), Le Pain de la peine (1930), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1931), Le Cœur et la Raison (1932), Le Pain de la peine (1933), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1934), Le Cœur et la Raison (1935), Le Pain de la peine (1936), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1937), Le Cœur et la Raison (1938), Le Pain de la peine (1939), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1940), Le Cœur et la Raison (1941), Le Pain de la peine (1942), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1943), Le Cœur et la Raison (1944), Le Pain de la peine (1945), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1946), Le Cœur et la Raison (1947), Le Pain de la peine (1948), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1949), Le Cœur et la Raison (1950), Le Pain de la peine (1951), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1952), Le Cœur et la Raison (1953), Le Pain de la peine (1954), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1955), Le Cœur et la Raison (1956), Le Pain de la peine (1957), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1958), Le Cœur et la Raison (1959), Le Pain de la peine (1960), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1961), Le Cœur et la Raison (1962), Le Pain de la peine (1963), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1964), Le Cœur et la Raison (1965), Le Pain de la peine (1966), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1967), Le Cœur et la Raison (1968), Le Pain de la peine (1969), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1970), Le Cœur et la Raison (1971), Le Pain de la peine (1972), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1973), Le Cœur et la Raison (1974), Le Pain de la peine (1975), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1976), Le Cœur et la Raison (1977), Le Pain de la peine (1978), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1979), Le Cœur et la Raison (1980), Le Pain de la peine (1981), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1982), Le Cœur et la Raison (1983), Le Pain de la peine (1984), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1985), Le Cœur et la Raison (1986), Le Pain de la peine (1987), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1988), Le Cœur et la Raison (1989), Le Pain de la peine (1990), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1991), Le Cœur et la Raison (1992), Le Pain de la peine (1993), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1994), Le Cœur et la Raison (1995), Le Pain de la peine (1996), Le Sang des Pyrénées (1997), Le Cœur et la Raison (1998), Le Pain de la peine (1999), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2000), Le Cœur et la Raison (2001), Le Pain de la peine (2002), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2003), Le Cœur et la Raison (2004), Le Pain de la peine (2005), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2006), Le Cœur et la Raison (2007), Le Pain de la peine (2008), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2009), Le Cœur et la Raison (2010), Le Pain de la peine (2011), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2012), Le Cœur et la Raison (2013), Le Pain de la peine (2014), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2015), Le Cœur et la Raison (2016), Le Pain de la peine (2017), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2018), Le Cœur et la Raison (2019), Le Pain de la peine (2020), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2021), Le Cœur et la Raison (2022), Le Pain de la peine (2023), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2024), Le Cœur et la Raison (2025), Le Pain de la peine (2026), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2027), Le Cœur et la Raison (2028), Le Pain de la peine (2029), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2030), Le Cœur et la Raison (2031), Le Pain de la peine (2032), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2033), Le Cœur et la Raison (2034), Le Pain de la peine (2035), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2036), Le Cœur et la Raison (2037), Le Pain de la peine (2038), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2039), Le Cœur et la Raison (2040), Le Pain de la peine (2041), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2042), Le Cœur et la Raison (2043), Le Pain de la peine (2044), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2045), Le Cœur et la Raison (2046), Le Pain de la peine (2047), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2048), Le Cœur et la Raison (2049), Le Pain de la peine (2050), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2051), Le Cœur et la Raison (2052), Le Pain de la peine (2053), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2054), Le Cœur et la Raison (2055), Le Pain de la peine (2056), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2057), Le Cœur et la Raison (2058), Le Pain de la peine (2059), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2060), Le Cœur et la Raison (2061), Le Pain de la peine (2062), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2063), Le Cœur et la Raison (2064), Le Pain de la peine (2065), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2066), Le Cœur et la Raison (2067), Le Pain de la peine (2068), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2069), Le Cœur et la Raison (2070), Le Pain de la peine (2071), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2072), Le Cœur et la Raison (2073), Le Pain de la peine (2074), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2075), Le Cœur et la Raison (2076), Le Pain de la peine (2077), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2078), Le Cœur et la Raison (2079), Le Pain de la peine (2080), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2081), Le Cœur et la Raison (2082), Le Pain de la peine (2083), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2084), Le Cœur et la Raison (2085), Le Pain de la peine (2086), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2087), Le Cœur et la Raison (2088), Le Pain de la peine (2089), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2090), Le Cœur et la Raison (2091), Le Pain de la peine (2092), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2093), Le Cœur et la Raison (2094), Le Pain de la peine (2095), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2096), Le Cœur et la Raison (2097), Le Pain de la peine (2098), Le Sang des Pyrénées (2099), Le Cœur et la Raison (2100).

Dover. Town in N New Jersey, in Morris County, ab. 32 mi. NW of New York: shipping center for iron ore. Munitions plants and a government arsenal are in the vicinity. 11,174 (1950).

Dover. [Former name, Canal Dover.] City in E Ohio, in Tuscarawas County, ab. 70 mi. SE of Cleveland. Coal and clay are produced in the area. Manufactures include tanks, plates, bricks, tiles, chemicals, and machine-shop equipment. It was settled in 1807 by Germans and was formerly a canal port. 9,852 (1950).

Dover, 1st Duke of. A title of Douglas, James.

Dover or Dover Center. Former names of Westlake, Ohio.

Dover, Battle of. Naval victory (August 21, 1217) of an English fleet from the Cinque Ports over a French fleet led by Eustace the Monk. Hubert de Burgh, afterwards regent in the minority of Henry III, led the English against the French vessels, which were coming to the aid of the barons in revolt against King John and his son Henry.

Dover, Strait of. [French, Pas de Calais; Latin, Fretum Gallicum, Fretum Oceani.] Strait separating England from France, and connecting the English Channel with the North Sea. Steamers cross daily from Dover to Calais and to Ostend. Width at Dover, 21 mi.

Dover, Treaty of. Secret treaty concluded May 22, 1670, at Dover, England, between Charles II of England and Louis XIV of France. The former was to aid in the designs of France against Holland, and the latter was to furnish subsidies and troops. The province of Zealand and the adjacent islands were to be reserved for England. Charles was to receive 200,000 pounds a year if he declared himself a Roman Catholic. By this treaty Louis broke up the triple alliance of England, Holland, and Sweden against him.

Dover-Foxcroft (-foks'kroft). Town (in Maine the equivalent of township in many other states) and unincorporated village in C Maine, county seat of Piscataquis County, on the Piscataquis River: woolen manufactures. Pop. of town, 4,218 (1950); of village, 2,566 (1950).

Dovers (dō'vẽrz), Cape. Prominent cape in Antarctica, lying ab. 4 mi. S by SW of Henderson Island, on Queen Mary Coast, in ab. 66°28′ S., 97°00′ E. It was discovered by the Australasian Antarctic Expedition (1911–14), under the leadership of Sir Douglas Mawson, and named for G. Dovers, cartographer at the expedition's West Base.

Dove's Nest, The. Title story of a collection of short stories by Katherine Mansfield, published in 1923.

Doves Press (duvz). English publishing venture (1900–1916) concerned with the making of beautiful books. The press was set up in the Hammersmith borough of London by T. J. Cobden-Sanderson and Emery Walker, both of whom had worked with William Morris at the Kelmscott Press. The Doves type, designed by Walker, was a variant of the famous 15th-century Jenson type. The books printed at the Doves Press, including the renowned Doves Bible, had a great influence on the arts of typography and printing in the early part of the 20th century. When the venture came to an end in 1916, all fonts of Doves type were put beyond possibility of further use by being thrown into the Thames River.

Dovrefjell (dô'vrẽ.fyel). [Also: Dovre Fjeld, Dovrefjeld.] Spur of the Scandinavian Mountains, situated in Norway. It separates N and S Norway. Highest peak, Snøhetta (7,500 ft.).

Dow (dou), Gerard. See Dou or Douw or Dow, Gerard.

Dow, Herbert Henry. b. at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, Feb. 26, 1866; d. at Rochester, Minn., Oct. 15, 1930. American chemist and manufacturer. Evolved numerous chemical processes, among them the electrolysis of brine for the production of bromine, chlorine, magnesium chloride, Epsom salts, and iodine; developed processes for the synthetic production of indigo, phenol, and aniline, and for the production of magnesium alloys.

Dow, Lorenzo. b. at Coventry, Conn., Oct. 16, 1777; d. at Washington, D.C., Feb. 2, 1834. American itinerant preacher of the Methodist belief. He made two missionary tours in England and Ireland, one in 1799 and one in 1805. He was noted for his eccentricities of manner and dress. His Journal and Miscellaneous Writings were edited by John Dowling in 1836.

Dow, Neal. b. at Portland, Me., March 20, 1804; d. there, Oct. 2, 1897. American advocate of prohibition. He drafted the noted "Maine (prohibitory) Law" in 1851 and was the candidate of the Prohibition Party for president in 1880.

Dowagiac (dō.woj'ak). City in S Lower Michigan, in Cass County, ab. 35 mi. SW of Kalamazoo: manufactures of stoves and furnaces. 6,542 (1950).

Dowden (dou'dẽn), Edward. b. at Cork, Ireland, May 3, 1843; d. at Dublin, April 4, 1913. Irish Shakespearian editor, critic, biographer, poet, and teacher. Educated at Queen's College (Cork) and Trinity College (Dublin), he was graduated (1863) from Trinity, where he was professor of English literature from 1867 until his death, except for short periods as Taylorian lecturer (1889) at Oxford, Clark lecturer (1893–96) at Cambridge, and special lecturer (1896) at Princeton in celebration of the 150th anniversary of the university. He was (1896–1901) commissioner of national education of Ireland. He was the author of the biographies Southey (1880), Life of Shelley (1886), Robert Browning (1904), and Montaigne (1905); of the critical and historical works Shakespeare: A Critical Study of His Mind and Art (1875), Shakespeare: Scenes and Characters (1876), A Shakespeare Primer (1877), Studies in Literature: 1789–1877 (1878), Introduction to Shakespeare (1893), The French Revolution and English Literature (1897), History of French Literature (1897), Puritan and Anglican (1900), Milton in the 18th Century (1908), and Essays: Modern and Elizabethan (1910); and also of Poems (1876, 1914) and A Woman's Reliquary (1913). He edited Southey's Correspondence (1881), Shakespeare's Sonnets (1881), The Passionate Pilgrim (1883), Hamlet (1899), Romeo and Juliet (1900), Cymbeline (1903), and Browning's The Ring and the Book (1912).

Dowdey (dou'di), Clifford (Shirley), Jr. b. at Richmond, Va., Jan. 23, 1904—. American novelist. He attended Columbia University, was a reporter and book reviewer (1925–26) for the Richmond News-Leader, and from 1926 to 1935 was on the editorial staffs of Munsey's Argosy, and the Dell Publishing Company. His novels include Bugles Blow No More (1937), Gamble's Hundred (1939), Sing For a Penny (1941), Tidewater (1943), and Where My Love Sleeps (1945). He is also the author of the historical study Experiment in Rebellion (1946), dealing with the Southern Confederacy.

Dowding (dou'ding), Sir Hugh Caswell Tremenheere, [Title, 1st Baron Dowding.] b. in Cornwall, England, 1882—. British soldier who commanded (1936–40), with the rank of air chief marshal, the Royal Air Force fighter command during World War II. He was educated at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich and served with the British air forces in World War I, particularly in the Near and Middle East. He was director of training at the air ministry and member (1930–36) for research and supply of the air council, and retired (1942) from the Royal Air Force; created (1943) baron by King George VI.

Dowgate (dou'gāt). Original water gate of the City of London.

Dowie (dou'i), John Alexander. b. at Edinburgh, May 25, 1847; d. at Chicago, March 9, 1907. Scottish-American fanatic. He came to the U.S. in 1886, and in 1896 organized the "Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion," of which he was "general overseer," establishing it in 1901 at Zion City, near Chicago. In 1906 his followers brought various charges against him, including that of financial mismanagement, and deposed him.

Dowland (dou'land), John. b. 1563; d. 1626. English lutanist at various European courts, remembered chiefly as one of the earliest writers of the art song.

Dowland, Robert. b. c1585; d. c1641. English lutanist; son of John Dowland (1563–1626). He was musician (1626 et seq.) to Charles I.

Dowlatabad (dou'lat.ä.bäd'). See Daulatabad.

Dowler (dou'lẽr), Captain. Retired military man in Charles Dickens's Pickwick Papers, noted for his bluster and brag, and his extraordinarily fierce and disjointed manner of talking.

Down (doun). Maritime county in Ulster province, Northern Ireland. It is bounded on the N by County Antrim and Belfast Lough, on the E and SE by the Irish Sea, on the SW by Carlingford Lough, and on the W by County Armagh. The coastline is much indented by many large and small inlets. The surface consists of numerous lowlands interspersed with hills, rising in the south of the county to the Mourne Mountains, of which the highest summit is Slieve Donard (2,796 ft.). The Mourne Mountains reach to the coast on Carlingford Lough and at Newcastle. Most of the land of the county lies below 500 ft. elevation, and there are large areas of pleasant farming country, especially in the eastern portion. Large numbers of sheep are raised on the uplands; beef cattle are more common on the lowland pastures. Poultry-raising and egg production for the Belfast market and for export is important in the area about Ballynahinch, S of Belfast. The principal crops raised are oats and potatoes. Newry is the leading seaport of the county. There are seaside resorts at Bangor and at Newcastle. The valley of the river Lagan, along the N boundary, is an industrial area, principally devoted to linen manufactures, the leading industry of the county. There are also cotton and leather manufactures. Downpatrick is the county seat; area, ab. 951 sq. mi.; pop. 230,064 (1947).

Down-Easters (doun'ēs'tėrz), The. Novel by John Neal, published in 1833.

Downers Grove (dou'nėrz grōv'). Village in NE Illinois, in Du Page County, near Chicago: manufactures tools and other items. 11,886 (1950).

Downes (dounz), Andrew. b. in Shropshire, England, c1549; d. at Coton, England, Feb. 2, 1628. English Greek scholar and Biblical translator. He was one of the translators of the Apocrypha for the Authorized Version of the Bible.

Downes, John. b. at Canton, Mass., Dec. 23, 1784; d. at Charlestown, Mass., Aug. 11, 1854. American naval commander. He served as lieutenant in the Essex under Captain Porter in the War of 1812, and commanded the Épervier in the war against Algiers. In 1832 he obtained command of a squadron in the Pacific Ocean, and bombarded Kuala Batu, on the coast of Sumatra, in retaliation for an outrage committed on an American vessel. He commanded the navy yard at Boston (1837–42, 1850–52).

Downes, Olin. [Full name, Edwin Olin Downes.] b. at Evanston, Ill., Jan. 27, 1886—. American music critic. Reviewer for the Boston Post (1906–24) and the New York Times (1924 et seq.); author of The Lure of Music (1918), Symphonic Broadcasts (1932), and Symphonic Masterpieces (1935).

Downey (dou'ni). Unincorporated community in S California, in Los Angeles County. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas; the last official enumeration was 9,364 (1940).

Downey, Fairfax Davis. b. at Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 28, 1893—. American writer. He was graduated (B.A., 1916) from Yale, served in the U.S. army in World Wars I and II, and was a member of newspaper staffs of the Kansas City Star and the New York Herald-Tribune. His works include A Comic History of Yale (1924), When We Were Rather Older (1926), Burton, Arabian Nights Adventurer (1931), Richard Harding Davis—His Day (1933), Portrait of an Era, As Drawn by C. D. Gibson (1936), Dog of War (1943), and Our Lusty Forefathers (1947).

Downing (dou'ning), Andrew Jackson. b. at Newburgh, N.Y., Oct., 1815; drowned near Yonkers, N.Y., July 28, 1852. American landscape gardener and pomologist; brother of Charles Downing. He published Theory and Practice of Landscape Gardening (1841), Cottage Residences (1842), The Fruits and Fruit Trees of America (1845, with Charles Downing), Architecture for Country Houses (1850), and others. His books on country architecture, illustrated by Alexander Jackson Davis, and containing plans and elevations, were widely read and consulted, doing much to spread the Gothic revival in domestic buildings.

Downing, Charles. b. at Newburgh, N.Y., July 9, 1802; d. Jan. 18, 1885. American pomologist and horticulturist; brother and partner (1834–39) of Andrew Jackson Downing in a commercial nursery. In a testing orchard, he developed and classified varieties of apples, pears, and other fruits. He was the author with his brother of The Fruits and Fruit Trees of America (1845).

Downing, Sir George. b. probably in August, 1623; d. 1684. English soldier and politician. He emigrated with his parents in 1638 to New England (where he was the second graduate of Harvard College), but subsequently returned to England, and in 1650 was scoutmaster-general of Cromwell's army in Scotland. He was appointed resident at The Hague in 1657, and there is said to have arranged a secret meeting with Charles II, warned him of Cromwell's intention to seize him in Holland, and thereby to have saved Charles's life. He was retained in office by Charles II on the Restoration in 1660, and was created a baronet in 1663. He was given a grant of land in what is now Downing Street, in Whitehall, London, which derives its name from him.

Downing, Sir George. b. c1684; d. in Cambridgeshire, England, June 10, 1749. English philanthropist, the founder of Downing College; grandson of Sir George Downing (d. 1684). He was a member of the Parliaments of 1710 and 1713, and kept his seat from 1722 until his death.

Downing, Major Jack. Pseudonym of Smith, Seba.

Downing College. One of the colleges of Cambridge University. It was founded in 1800 by a bequest of Sir George Downing, of Gamlingay Park in Cambridgeshire, who died in 1749, but did not open until 1807, when its first buildings were erected. It is the college of Sir Busick Harwood, famous physician and medical professor, William Frere, who later became its master, and of Thomas Starkie and Andrew Amos, both Downing professors of law. Its founder was the grandson of the 17th-century Sir George Downing who built the famous London street named after him.

Downing Street. Street in the West End of London, leading from Whitehall. It contains the building (No. 10) in which the prime minister generally resides, the treasury building, and the foreign office; hence the name Downing Street has come to be used to symbolize the prime minister and his cabinet. It was built by Sir George Downing (1623–84) on a grant of land from Charles II.

Downingtown (dou'ning.toun). [Former name, Milltown.] Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Chester County, on the East Branch of Brandywine Creek: manufactures of paper, textiles, and metal products. It was incorporated in 1859. 4,948 (1950).

Downpatrick (doun.pat'rik). Urban district and market town in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, county seat of County Down, situated on the river Quoile near its influx to Strangford Lough, ab. 21 mi. SE of Belfast. It is reputed to be one of the oldest towns of Ireland. Its cathedral was sacked in 1538 and remained a ruin until it was restored in 1790. The burial-place of Saint Patrick, believed to have died in 463 A.D., is here. 3,471 (1947).

Downright (doun'rīt). Rude but manly and consistent squire in Ben Jonson's comedy Every Man in His Humour. He is courageous, of plain words and plain actions.

Downs (dounz), Battle of the. Indecisive battle between the English and Dutch fleets, in the first days of June, 1666, off the E coast of Kent, England. The English were commanded by Monk, and the Dutch by De Ruyter and Tromp. It is sometimes claimed as an English victory.

Downs, the. Chalk hills in SE England, S of London and extending E to Dover. The two most prominent ridges are the North Downs and the South Downs, separated by the vales of Kent and Sussex from the Weald, a central ridge. The upland "downs" have a thin soil, and were natural grasslands, favored as sites of prehistoric settlement. Today they are divided up into rather large farms, and used principally for grazing sheep, of which the Southdown breed is a notable type originating in this region.

Downs, the. Part of the North Sea immediately offshore from SE England, off the E coast of Kent, at Deal. It forms a roadstead protected by the Goodwin Sands. There are many shoals and sandbanks. Length, ab. 8 mi.; width, ab. 6 mi.

Downshire (doun'shir), 1st Marquis of. A title of Hill, Wills.

Dowsabel (dou'sa.bel). See Dousabel.

Dowse (dous), Thomas. b. at Charlestown, Mass., Dec. 28, 1772; d. at Cambridgeport, Mass., Nov. 4, 1856. American book-collector. He bequeathed his collection to the Massachusetts Historical Society.

Dowson (dou'sọn), Ernest. [Full name, Ernest Christopher Dowson.] b. in Kent, England, Aug. 2, 1867; d. at London, Feb. 23, 1900. English poet, short-story writer, and translator, often grouped with the so-called Decadents in late 19th-century English literature. His short life was sickly; he was tubercular and his latter years were spent in poverty. He was the author of Dilemmas (1895), Verses (1896), The Pierrot of the Minute (1897), a poetic drama, and Poems (1905); and he translated works by Voltaire, Balzac, Zola and other French authors. He is best remembered for his lyric Non Sum Qualis Eram Bonae Sub Regno Cynarae, with its repeated "I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion" (the work is commonly referred to simply as Cynara). The actual Cynara was the daughter of a French café-keeper in London, who later married a waiter. Among other short poems by Dowson are Extreme Unction, You Would Have Understood Me, A Last Word, Spleen, and To One in Bedlam.

Dowton (dou'ton), William. b. at Exeter, England, 1764; d. at Brixton, Surrey, England, 1851. English actor. He made his first appearance in 1781, and came to New York in 1836. He had two sons, William and Henry, both of whom became actors. The former afterward became a brother of the Charter House, and died there at the age of nearly 90.

Doyen (dwȧ.yaṅ), Gabriel François. b. at Paris, 1726; d. at St. Petersburg, June 5, 1806. French painter, a pupil of Van Loo.

Doyle (doil), Sir Arthur Conan. b. at Edinburgh, May 22, 1859; d. at Crowborough, England, July 7, 1930. English writer of fiction, creator of Sherlock Holmes. A medical doctor, he practiced from 1882 to 1890, but meanwhile began his career in literature with the publication of A Study in Scarlet (1887), a crime-and-mystery story in which he introduced the character destined to make his fame and fortune, the detective Sherlock Holmes. He did not immediately concentrate upon Holmes, but during the next four years, besides publishing the historical novels Micah Clarke (1889), and The White Company (1891), he contributed further stories of Holmes's exploits to the Strand Magazine, and when these appeared in book form as The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (1891), their success was sensational. Doyle continued to work the rich vein he had opened, but in the last story of The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes (1893), either tiring of the game or fearful of his invention flagging, he killed off the hero—or so he thought. But the Sherlock Holmes cult continued to recruit avid readers who demanded more adventures, and were glad to accept the implausible explanation that the great detective had disappeared but had not died, since this made possible The Return of Sherlock Holmes (1905), and The Last Bow (1917). A final collection of stories, The Case Book of Sherlock Holmes (1927), completed the portrait and the history of a fictitious character who, more than any other in modern literature, seemed to millions of readers almost more real even than his creator. The name Sherlock Holmes, or merely Sherlock, in English-speaking countries has come to be synonymous with "detective." Certain illustrations of the early stories depicted Holmes as a thin-faced man wearing a peculiar checked cap, smoking an underslung pipe and carrying a magnifying glass; this visualization of his appearance was brought to life by the American actor William Gillette in his play Sherlock Holmes, and has become a part of the conventional symbolism of American cartoonists. Doyle also wrote a number of plays, one of which, The Story of Waterloo, successfully provided a starring vehicle for Sir Henry Irving. During the Boer War he spiritedly defended the British cause in a book, The War in South Africa; its Causes and Conduct, which led to his being knighted, and during World War I his pamphlet, Cause and Conduct of the World War, was circulated in millions of copies in a dozen languages. The loss of a son in that war led to the interest in psychic phenomena which made Sir Arthur in his last years a firm believer in spiritualism.

Doyle, Sir Francis Hastings Charles. b. at Nunappleton, near Tadcaster, Yorkshire, England, Aug. 21, 1810; d. at Berkeley Square, London, June 8, 1888. English balladist, poet, and teacher. Educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, he studied at the Inner Temple, being called to the bar in 1837 and elevated (1839) to the baronetcy on the death of his father. He gave up law practice to accept positions in the customs office, holding (1846–69) the receiver-generalship of customs, and serving (1869–93) as commissioner. He was professor of poetry (1867–77) at Oxford. Among his works are Miscellaneous Verses (1834, 1840), Oedipus, King of Thebes (1849), a translation of Sophocles, The Return of the Guards and Other Poems (1866), Lectures (1869, 1877), and several ballads.

Doyle, John Andrew. b. at London, May 14, 1844; d. at Oxford, Aug. 4 or 5, 1907. English essayist, historian, and librarian. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, graduating in 1867, was a fellow (1867–1907) of All Souls College, Oxford librarian (1881–88), and author of a prize essay (1869) on The English Colonies in America Before 1776. He also wrote A Summary History of America (1875), A History of the American Colonies Down to the War of Independence (5 vols., 1882–1907), The Puritan Colonies (1887), The Middle Colonies (1907), and The Colonies Under the House of Hanover (1907). Doyle also contributed articles to the Dictionary of National Biography and the Cambridge Modern History.

Doyle, Lynn. [Pseudonym of Leslie Alexander Montgomery.] b. at Downpatrick, County Down, Ireland, 1873—. Irish writer. He is the author of collections of short stories such as Ballygullion (1908), Lobster Salad—Irish Short Stories (1922), Dear Ducks (1925), and Me and Mrs. Murphy (1930). His plays include Love and Land (1913; produced 1925 as Perseverance), The Lilac Ribbon (1919), and Turncoats (1922). Among his novels are Mr. Wildridge of the Bank—a novel (1916) and Fiddling Farmer (1937). He has also published a book of verse entitled Ballygullion Ballads (1936).

Doyle, Richard. b. at London, 1824; d. there, Dec. 11, 1883. English artist. He was a member of the staff of Punch (1843–50). Among his best-known works are the illustrations to Thackeray's Newcomes (1853–55) and a series of elfin scenes entitled In Fairy-Land (1870).

Doylestown (doilz'toun). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, county seat of Bucks County: residential community; manufactures of pottery. It was settled in 1735 and is the seat of an agricultural college (founded 1848). 5,262 (1950).

D'Oyly Carte (doi'li kärt), Richard. See Carte, Richard D'Oyly.

Dozy (dō'zē), Reinhart. b. at Leiden, Netherlands, Feb. 21, 1820; d. May 3, 1883. Dutch Orientalist and historian, professor of history at Leiden from 1850. His works include Recherches sur l'histoire et la littérature d'Espagne pendant le moyen âge (1849), Histoire des Musulmans d'Espagne (1861), Supplément aux dictionnaires arabes (1877–81), and others.

DPs. See Displaced Persons.

Drač (dräch). Serbo-Croatian name of Durrës, city.

Drachenfels (drä'ċhen.fels). [Eng. trans., "Dragon's Rock."] Steepest of the Siebengebirge range of mountains, in W Germany, situated on the E bank of the Rhine, near Königswinter. It is now ascended by a mountain railway. In its side is the Drachenhöhle (dragon's cave), where lived the legendary dragon slain by Siegfried. Elevation, ab. 1,053 ft.

Drachman (drak'mạn), Bernard. b. at New York, 1861; d. 1945. American rabbi. He was graduated (1885) from the Jewish Theological Seminary of Breslau, and was a founder (1886) of the Jewish Theological Seminary, where he served as professor of Biblical exegesis and Jewish philosophy (1887–1902), as dean (1889–1902), and as professor of Bible and rabbinical codes. He was rabbi of Congregation Beth Israel Bikkur Cholim, Congregation Zichron Ephraim, and Congregation Oheb Zedek, all at New York, and was known as an exponent of orthodox Judaism. Author of From the Heart of Israel (1905) and Looking at America (1934).

Drachmann (dräċh'män), Holger Henrik Herholdt. b. at Copenhagen, Oct. 9, 1846; d. at Hornbæk, Denmark, Jan. 14, 1908. Danish poet and author. From 1866 to 1870 he studied art at Copenhagen. In 1872 he published a volume of poems. This was followed by Dæmpede Melodier (Repressed Melodies, 1875), Sange ved Havet (Songs by the Sea, 1877), Ranker og Roser (Vines and Roses), and Ungdom i Digt og Sang (Youth in Poetry and Song, 1879). The romantic poems Prindsessen og det halve Kongerige (The Princess and Half the Kingdom) and Oesten for Sol og Vesten for Maane (East of the Sun and West of the Moon) appeared in 1878 and 1880 respectively. In prose he wrote, among other long stories, En Overkomplet (1876) and Tannhäuser (1877). The shorter tales Ungt Blod (Young Blood) and Paa Sømands Tro og Love (On a Sailor's Word) appeared in 1877 and 1878 respectively. The most popular of his prose works is the series of sketches Derovar fra Grændsen (From the Frontier, 1877). A translation of Byron's Don Juan appeared in 1881. His later poetical works include Dybe Strenge (1884), Fjældsange og Æventyr (1885), Sangenes Bog (1889), Ungdomsidgte (1898), and Broget Løv (1901). He wrote also an autobiographical romance, Den hellige Ild (1899), Smaa Fortællinger (1884), Med den brede Pensel (1887), Forskrevet (1890), Dædalus (1900), and a number of dramatic works.

Draco (drā'kō) or Dracon (drā'kon). fl. in the last half of the 7th century B.C. Athenian legislator. According to tradition, he formulated the first written code of laws for Athens in 624 or c621 B.C., at which, there having been no written code previously, the people were so overjoyed that they smothered Draco accidentally under a deluge of cloaks. On account of the number of offenses to which it affixed the penalty of death, his code was said to have been written in blood. His code was superseded for the most part by that of Solon (594).

Draco. Northern constellation. As pictured since ancient times, the figure is that of a serpent with several small coils. It appears at a very ancient date to have had wings in the space now occupied by the Little Bear.

Dracontius (drą.kon'shi.us, -shus), Blossius Aemilius. Christian poet of the 5th century, an advocate in Carthage. Among his works are the didactic De laudibus Dei, as well as short epics on legendary subjects, two epithalamia, and an apologetic elegy.

Dracut (drā'kut). Town in NE Massachusetts, in Middlesex County, near the border of New Hampshire: center of a farming community. 8,666 (1950).

Draeseke (drā'zę.kę), Felix (August Bernhard). b. at Coburg, Germany, Oct. 7, 1835; d. Feb. 26, 1913. German composer and writer on music. His works include operas, church music, choral and solo voice works, and symphonic and chamber pieces.

Draft Riot. Riot (July 13–16, 1863) at New York against the enforcement of the draft for the Union army. During its progress scores of Negroes were killed and many others were wounded. The riot, which cost a number of lives variously estimated between 300 and 500, was finally suppressed by the police and militia. Property damage caused by pillaging and fire was estimated at as high as two and a half million dollars.

Draga (drä'gä). b. 1867; d. in June, 1903. Wife of Alexander I, king of Serbia. The widow of an engineer, Draga Mashin was a member of the entourage of the queen-mother of King Alexander when he fell in love with her. Rightly or wrongly it was generally supposed that she was an adventuress whose past conduct had not measured up to conventional moral standards, so that the young king's insistence on marrying her caused widespread indignation. Alexander's political course at this time also raised enemies, especially in the army, and a conspiracy took form under the leadership of a brother of Draga's first husband. On June 10, 1903, soldiers directed by the conspirators invaded the royal palace, shot Alexander and Draga (and also repeatedly stabbed Draga), and assassinated the prime minister and other officials of the government. The long and implacable feud between the Obrenovich dynasty, represented by Alexander I, and the Karageorgevich line, unquestionably had something to do with these events, which forever extinguished the Obrenovich power, and restored the Karageorgeviches to the throne in the person of Peter I.

Dragerton (drā'gėr.ton). Unincorporated community in E central Utah, in Carbon County. 3,453 (1950).

Drago (drä'gō), Luis María. b. at Buenos Aires, May 6, 1859; d. there, June 9, 1921. Argentine jurist and diplomat whose proposed corollary to the Monroe Doctrine (viz., that public debts of American states cannot be collected through armed intervention by European powers) was stated (1902) in a note to the U.S. State Department in connection with such intervention against Venezuela by Great Britain, Italy, and Germany. Largely based on the earlier Calvo Doctrine, which left jurisdiction over such disputes to the local authorities and ruled out international interference altogether, the Drago Doctrine was brought before the Hague Conference of 1907, but was put aside in favor of the less restrictive Porter proposition, which looked towards arbitration of claims but did not rule out force.

Drago Doctrine. Doctrine of international law propounded (1902) by the Argentine foreign minister Luis María Drago, which bars the use of armed force by one nation against another to compel payment of public debts. Intended as a corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, the Drago Doctrine was motivated specifically by the Joint British, Italian, and German intervention against Venezuela in 1902. It applies, in a much narrower context, the broad principle of nonintervention enunciated (1868) in the Calvo Doctrine. Although placed before the Hague Conference in 1907 for consideration, the Drago Doctrine was set aside in favor of the less restrictive Porter proposition, which did not rule out force but maintained it as a last resort after arbitration.

Dragomirov (drä.gọ.mē'rọf), Mikhail Ivanovich. b. 1830; d. at Konotop, Russia, Oct. 28, 1905. Russian general. He served in the Russo-Turkish war, was wounded at Shipka Pass, and was later appointed director of the Academy of the General Staff. In 1889 he was appointed governor general of Kiev, Podolia, and Volhynia. He published various important works on tactics and military administration. He retired in 1904.

"Dragon Boat Festival." See Tuan Yang.

Dragonetti (drä.gō.nät'tē), Domenico. b. at Venice, April 7, 1763; d. at London, April 16, 1846. Italian double-bass player. Engaged at London for concerts and opera; met (1809) Beethoven at Vienna; friend of Haydn; composer of double-bass sonatas; led (1845) the double-bass section at the Bonn Beethoven festival.

Dragon in Shallow Waters, The. Novel by V. Sackville-West, published in 1921.

Dragonnades (drag.ọ.nādz'). Form of persecution inflicted by the government of Louis XIV upon the French Protestants in the period preceding the revocation of the edict of Nantes. It consisted in billeting troops upon the inhabitants as a means of converting them, license being given to the soldiery to commit all manner of misdeeds.

Dragon of Wantley (wont'li), The. Old ballad, preserved by Percy, which describes the victory over this dragon (who devoured damsels, houses, and trees) by More of More Hall, who provided himself with armor covered with spikes.

Dragon's Blood. Novel by Romer Wilson (Mrs. Edward J. O'Brien), published in 1926.

Dragon's Mouth (or Mouths). [Spanish, Boca de Dragón, Bocas del Dragón.] Sea passage of the Caribbean, between Trinidad and the South American mainland (Paria peninsula, Venezuela). It is said to have been so named by Columbus, who sailed through it in 1498. The channel contains several islands.

Dragontea (drä.gōn.tā'ä), La. Poem by Lope de Vega on the subject of Sir Francis Drake's last expedition and death. It consists of ten cantos of octave verse.

Draguignan (drä.gē.nyäṅ). [Latin, Forum Julii.] Town in SE France, the capital of the department of Var, situated in a hilly region, near the Nartuby River NW of Fréjus. There are a number of Roman remains, including an amphitheater and aqueduct, and the Gothic cathedral of Notre Dame. The town has textile and tanning industries, and is the center of an olive-growing region. There is some resort trade. 11,801 (1946).

Dragut (drä'göt). [Also, Torghud.] d. at Malta, July 23, 1565. Algerian corsair. He was a native of Asia Minor, and became a lieutenant of the Greek-born Algerian corsair Barbarossa II (called Khair ed-Din), on whose death in 1546 he became governor of Tripoli. He defeated (1560) the Spaniards at Gerbes and was killed at the siege of Malta.

Drake (drāk), Alexander Wilson. b. near Westfield, N.J., Sept. 4, 1843; d. Feb. 4, 1916. American wood engraver and draftsman on wood, art director of The Century Magazine from 1870 (Scribner's Monthly 1870–81). He studied art at the Cooper Institute and the National Academy of Design, New York, and was largely instrumental in founding and developing the American school of wood engraving. He was one of the founders of the Grolier Club at New York.

Drake, Benjamin. b. at Mays Lick, Ky., 1795; d. April 1, 1841. American lawyer and author; brother of Daniel Drake (1785–1852). He was a prolific contributor of articles, editorials, and stories to newspapers and journals, especially the Literary Gazette, Western Monthly Magazine, and Southern Literary Messenger; cofounder and editor (1826–34) of the Cincinnati Chronicle; publisher (1827) with E. D. Mansfield of Cincinnati in 1826, a statistical account; author of Tales and Sketches from the Queen City (1838), The Life and Adventures of Black Hawk, with Sketches of Keokuk, the Sac and Fox Indians, and the Late Black Hawk War (1838), Sketches of the Civil and Military Services of William Henry Harrison (1840, with C. S. Todd), and Life of Tecumseh and his Brother, the Prophet, with an Historical Sketch of the Shawanoe Indians (1841).

Drake, Charles Daniel. b. April 11, 1811; d. April 1, 1892. American lawyer and U.S. senator; son of Daniel Drake (1785–1852). A radical Republican leader in Missouri during the Civil War period, he agitated for immediate, uncompensated emancipation and was one of the principal drafters (1865) of the new Missouri constitution. As U.S. senator from Missouri (1867–70), he supported radical Reconstruction measures and participated in Andrew Johnson's trial. He was chief justice (1870–85) of the U.S. Court of Claims.

Drake, Daniel. b. at Plainfield, N.J., Oct. 20, 1785; d. at Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1852. American physician. He published Treatise on the Principal Diseases of the Interior Valley of North America (1850–54), and other works.

Drake, Edwin Laurentine. b. at Greenville, N.Y., March 29, 1819; d. at Bethlehem, Pa., Nov. 8, 1880. American oil industry pioneer. President (1858 et seq.) of the Seneca Oil Company, he was the first to tap an oil reservoir (at Titusville, Pa., 1859) beneath the earth's surface by drilling.

Drake, Sir Francis. b. probably at Tavistock, Devonshire, England, c1540; d. off Portobelo, Panama, Jan. 28, 1596. English naval hero. In 1567–68 he commanded a small vessel, the Judith, one of two which escaped from the destruction of Sir John Hawkins's fleet by the Spanish in the Gulf of Mexico. Under Elizabeth's commission as a privateer, he visited the West Indies and the Spanish Main in 1570 and 1571, and became convinced that the towns there would fall an easy prey to a small armed force. Accordingly, in 1572, he fitted out what was properly a freebooting expedition, England being then at peace with Spain. With only three vessels and 100 men he took the town of Nombre de Dios on the Isthmus of Panama and an immense treasure; but he was badly wounded in the attack, and his men abandoned both town and treasure. Soon after, he burned a Spanish vessel at Cartagena, in what is now Colombia, captured many ships, and intercepted a train loaded with silver on the isthmus. He also crossed to Panama, and was the first English commander to see the Pacific. From his return, in August, 1573, to September, 1576, Drake served under Walter Devereux, 1st Earl of Essex, in Ireland. In December, 1577, with the express purpose of penetrating to the Pacific through the Straits of Magellan, he started on another freebooting expedition with five ships and 166 men. Two ships were abandoned on the west coast of South America, and after the passage of the Straits of Magellan, which took 16 days, his ship became separated from the other two, which returned to England. Drake continued in the Golden Hind, obtained an immense booty on the Pacific coast of Spanish America, crossed the Pacific, and returned to England by way of the Cape of Good Hope, arriving in September, 1580, with a vast treasure. This was the first English circumnavigation of the globe. Queen Elizabeth knighted Drake on his own ship, and ordered that the Golden Hind be preserved as a monument. (It rotted and was broken up some hundred years later.) Drake was mayor (1581) of Plymouth. In 1584–85 he was a member of Parliament. From 1585 to 1586 he commanded a powerful expedition to the West Indies and the Spanish Main, in which he took and ransomed Santo Domingo and Cartagena, ravaged the coasts of Florida, and on his way back brought off the remnant of the English Virginia colony founded by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1585. In 1587 he made a descent on the coast of Spain, and in the Bay of Cádiz destroyed numerous unfinished vessels intended for the Spanish Armada, besides capturing a rich Portuguese East Indiaman. In July, 1588, as a vice-admiral, he commanded under Lord Charles Howard in the combat with the Spanish Armada, capturing a large Spanish galleon; and next year he was one of the commanders in a descent on the Spanish and Portuguese coasts, which proved unsuccessful. For several years thereafter he was engaged in peaceful pursuits, and in 1593 he was again elected to Parliament. In 1595 he commanded another West India expedition, which met with little success, and in which both he and Sir John Hawkins died.

Drake, Francis Marion. b. at Rushville, Ill., 1830; d. 1903. Union Army officer in the Civil War, railroad president, and governor of Iowa (1896–98).

Drake, Francis Samuel. b. at Northwood, N.H., Feb. 22, 1828; d. at Washington, D.C., Feb. 22, 1885. American historian; son of Samuel Gardner Drake (1798–1875) and brother of Samuel Adams Drake (1833–1905). He was the author of Dictionary of American Biography Containing Nearly Ten Thousand Notices (1872), List of Members of the Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati (1872), Memorials of the Society of the Cincinnati (1873), The Life and Correspondence of Henry Knox (1873), Indian History for Young Folks (1885), The Town of Roxbury (1878), and Tea Leaves, Being a Collection of Letters and Documents Relating to the Shipment of Tea to the American Colonies (1884); contributor to Justin Winsor's Memorial History of Boston; and editor (1884) of Schoolcraft's Indian Tribes of the United States.

Drake (drä'kę), Friedrich. b. at Pyrmont, Waldeck, Germany, June 23, 1805; d. at Berlin, April 6, 1882. German sculptor, best known from his portrait statues of Frederick William III and others.

Drake (drāk), Joseph Rodman. b. at New York, Aug. 7, 1795; d. there, Sept. 21, 1820. American poet. He was a New York physician who, with Fitz-Greene Halleck, his friend, published a series of witty poems under the name "Croaker and Co." in the New York Evening Post (1819). Drake was the author of the poems The Culprit Fay (1816) and The American Flag (1819). Halleck's eulogy to Drake, "Green be the turf above thee," is a tender tribute to a friend who died young. His collected works were published in 1935.

Drake, Nathan. b. at York, England, 1766; d. at Hadleigh, Suffolk, England, June 7, 1836. English physician and author. He practiced medicine at Hadleigh, in Suffolk, from 1792 until his death. His most notable work is Shakspere and his Times (1817).

Drake, Samuel Adams. b. at Boston, Dec. 19, 1833; d. at Kennebunkport, Me., Dec. 4, 1905. American historian; son of Samuel Gardner Drake (1798–1875) and brother of Francis Samuel Drake (1828–85). He was the author of Old Landmarks and Historic Personages of Boston (1873), Historic Fields and Mansions of Middlesex (1874), Nooks and Corners of the New England Coast (1875), The Heart of the White Mountains (1882), The Making of New England (1886), The Making of the Great West (1887), The Making of Virginia and the Middle Colonies (1893), The Making of the Ohio Valley States (1894), Our Colonial Homes (1894), and a novel, The Young Vigilantes, a Story of California Life in the Fifties (1904).

Drake, Samuel Gardner. b. at Pittsfield, N.H., Oct. 11, 1798; d. at Boston, June 14, 1875. American antiquary. He published Book of the Indians (1833), History and Antiquities of Boston (1856), Early History of New England (1864), Annals of Witchcraft in the United States (1869), History of the French and Indian War (1870), and others.

Drakenborch (drä'kęn.bôrĉh), Arnold. b. at Utrecht, Netherlands, Jan. 1, 1684; d. there, Jan. 16, 1748. Dutch philologist. He edited Silius Italicus (1717), Livy (1738–46), and others.

Drakensberg (drä'kęnz.bėrg). [Also: Drakenberge, Kathlamba, Quathlamba.] Range of mountains in SE Africa, in the Union of South Africa. It lies partly on the border between Cape of Good Hope province and Natal on one side and Basutoland and the Orange Free State on the other, and culminates in Champagne Castle (ab. 10,500 ft.) and Mont Aux Sources (10,761 ft.).

Drake's Bay (drāks). Indentation of the Pacific in W California, in Marin County NW of San Francisco.

Drama (drä'mą). Nomos (department) in N Greece, situated in Macedonia. Capital, Drama; area, 1,349 sq. mi.; pop. 119,009 (1951).

Drama. Town in N Greece, the capital of the nomos (department) of Drama, situated between the Struma and Nestos rivers, ab. 78 mi. NE of Salonika: railroad station on the line from Salonika to Istanbul. The environs are very fertile and grow much tobacco. Drama is the seat of a bishopric. 32,895 (1951).

Drama of Exile, A. Poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning, published in 1844.

Dramatic Poesy, An Essay of. Work by Dryden (1668), written in the form of a dialogue between four friends: Neander (Dryden), Lisideius (Charles Sedley), Crites (Sir Robert Howard), and Eugenius (Charles, Lord Buckhurst, afterward 6th Earl of Dorset).

Drammen (drăm'ęn). City in S Norway, the capital of the fylke (county) of Buskerud, situated at the mouth of the Drammen River, at the N end of Drammen Fjord, a branch of the Oslo Fjord, SW of Oslo. It has a harbor and shipyards and is the center of the Norwegian lumber trade, with large lumberyards, sawmills, paper, pulp, and cellulose factories; there are also breweries. It is a modern town; the old town was destroyed by fire in 1866 and 1870. Drammen was occupied by the Germans in 1940 during World War II. 26,994 (1946).

Drammen River. [Also: Drams (drăms); Norwegian, Drammenselv (drăm'ęns.elv) (elv = "river").] River in S Norway, the outlet of Lake Tyrifjord. It flows into the Drammen Fjord at Drammen. Length, ab. 163 mi.

Drancy (drăn.sē). Town in N France, in the department of Seine, NE of Paris. During World War II, it was used by the Germans as one of the chief assembly points for political deportees and Jews, who were shipped from there to extermination camps in Germany and E Europe. 42,166 (1946).

Dranesville (drānz'vil). Village in Fairfax County, Va., ab. 21 mi. NW of Washington, D.C. Here, on Dec. 20, 1861, part of the Army of the Potomac under Ord defeated the Confederates under Stuart.

Drangiana (dran.ji.ā'nạ). [Also, Drangiane (-ān').] In ancient geography, a region in C Asia, in what is now SW Afghanistan and E Iran; the modern name is Seistan.

Drang nach Osten (drăng' năch ŏs'tęn). German phrase, meaning in literal translation, the "push or impulse toward the East." The phrase has been used to describe the eastward movement of German migration and conquest from the 10th to the 18th centuries. The expression has also been used to characterize German desires for expansion into the Balkans and Turkey under William II. During World War I it was used to describe the policies culminating in the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. Hitler considered the eastward trend of Germany the inevitable course for the achievement of the German domination of the Continent.

Draper (drā'pėr). Unincorporated community in N North Carolina, in Rockingham County: manufactures include bedding, curtains, rugs, and woolen goods. 3,629 (1950).

Draper, Andrew Sloan. b. at Westford, N.Y., June 21, 1848; d. April 27, 1913. American educator. He was New York state superintendent of public instruction (1886–92), superintendent of schools (1892–94) at Cleveland, Ohio, president (1894–1904) of the University of Illinois, commissioner of education (1904 et seq.) on the New York state board of regents; member (1902 et seq.), later chairman, U.S. board of Indian commissioners.

Draper, Henry. b. in Prince Edward County, Va., March 7, 1837; d. at New York, Nov. 20, 1882. American scientist, especially noted for his labors in celestial photography; son of John William Draper.

Draper, John. b. Oct. 29, 1702; d. Nov. 29, 1762. American printer and publisher. He succeeded (1733) his father-in-law, Bartholomew Green, as publisher of the Boston News-Letter, the oldest colonial newspaper, and was the printer of Jeremiah Gridley's Weekly Rehearsal and Ames Almanac.

Draper, John William. b. at St. Helen's, near Liverpool, England, May 5, 1811; d. at Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y., Jan. 4, 1882. American chemist, physiologist, and historian, noted for researches in spectrum analysis and photography. He emigrated to America in 1832, graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1836, was appointed professor of chemistry in the University of New York in 1837, and was president of its medical college (1850–73). He continued to lecture at the university until 1881. He wrote Text Book on Chemistry (1846), and on Natural Philosophy (1847), Human Physiology (1856), History of the Intellectual Development of Europe (1862), History of the American Civil War (1867–70), and Scientific Memoirs (1878).

Draper, Lyman Copeland. b. at Hamburg, Erie County, N.Y., Sept. 4, 1815; d. at Madison, Wis., Aug. 26, 1891. American antiquary. He was corresponding secretary of the state historical society of Wisconsin at Madison, Wis. (1853–87), with the exception of two years (1858–59) when he was state superintendent of instruction, and was the editor of Collections of the State Historica-Society (1853–87).

Draper, Margaret. [Maiden name, Green.] fl 1750–1807; d. at London. American publisher; wife of Richard Draper. She continued after her husband's death (1774) the publication of The Massachusetts Gazette and Weekly News-Letter, in partnership (until the Revolutionary War) with John Boyle and then with John Howe, until the evacuation of Boston by the British.

Draper, Richard. b. Feb. 24, 1726/7; d. June 5, 1774. American publisher and printer; son of John Draper (1702–62). He continued publication (after 1762) of his father's paper, the Boston Weekly News-Letter, changing its name (1763) to The Massachusetts Gazette and Weekly News-Letter, in partnership with John Boyle.

Draper, Ruth. b. at New York, Dec. 2, 1889—. American monologuist. Performed (1918) in U.S. army camps in France; toured U.S. (1924–28), South Africa (1935), Far East (1938), South America (1940), Canada and U.S. (1940–41); commands repertory of 36 original monologues and 57 characters. She translated (from the Italian of Lauro de Bosis) the poetic drama Icaro.

Draper, Sir William. b. at Bristol, England, 1721; d. at Bath, England, Jan. 8, 1787. English army officer. He took the degree of B.A. at King's College, Cambridge, in 1740, and was subsequently fellow of his college. In 1744 he entered the army, and in 1762 commanded, with the rank of brigadier general, a successful expedition against Manila. He published in 1769 a letter, dated Jan. 26 of that year, defending the Marquis of Granby against the aspersions of "Junius," which led to a spirited controversy. He was promoted to major general in 1772. The correspondence between Draper and "Junius" was published separately under the title of The Political Contest (1769).

Drapier's Letters (drā'pi.ėrz). Series of letters published in 1724 by Jonathan Swift, under the pseudonym M. B. Drapier. They were directed against the acceptance in Ireland of a copper coinage the patent for supplying which had been accorded to William Wood, who with the duchess of Kendal, the king's mistress (who obtained him the privilege), was to divide the profit arising from the difference between the real and the nominal value of the halfpenny (about 40 percent). Owing to the public excitement raised by these letters the patent was canceled. Wood was compensated with a pension, and Swift gained a popularity which he never lost till his death. A large reward was offered at the time for the discovery of the author.

Drau (drou). German name of the Drava.

Draupadi (drou'pä.dē). In Hindu legend, daughter of Drupada, king of Panchala, and wife of the five Pandu princes. She plays an important part in the story of the Mahabharata.

Drava (drä'vä). [German, Drau (drou); French, Drave (dråv); Hungarian, Dráva (drā'vô); Latin, Dravus (drā'vus).] River in Austria and Yugoslavia which rises in East Tyrol province, Austria, traverses the provinces of Carinthia and Styria and N Yugoslavia, forms the boundary between Hungary and Yugoslavia, and joins the Danube ab. 14 mi. E of Osijek. Its chief tributary is the Mur. Length, ab. 450 mi.; navigable for steamers ab. 95 mi.

Draveil (drȧ.vey'). Town in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, situated on the Seine River, between Paris and Corbeil. It belongs to the metropolitan region of Paris. 10,510 (1946).

Dravida (drā'vi.dą). Region in which the Tamil language is spoken, extending from Madras to Cape Comorin, in S Union of India.

Dravidian (drą.vid'i.ąn). Pre-Aryan group of people in India, comprising the majority of the inhabitants. Their descendants, now of Negroid admixture, comprise a large percentage of the population of S India.

Dravidian. Group of languages spoken by some 60 million people, mainly in south India. They are known not to be related to the Indo-European languages spoken in northern India or to any other linguistic stock. The principal Dravidian languages are Tamil, Malayalam, Telugu, and Kanarese. One Dravidian language, Brahui, is geographically isolated from the others, being spoken by about 200,000 people in Baluchistan, in W Pakistan.

Dravosburg (drą.vōs'bėrg). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County, on the Monongahela River near Pittsburgh. 3,786 (1950).

Dravus (drā'vus). Latin name of the Drava.

Drawcansir (drô'kan.sėr). In Buckingham's burlesque The Rehearsal, a boasting and vainglorious bully. Almanzor, Dryden's favorite hero, was parodied in this character. The name became a synonym for a braggart.

Drax (draks), Reginald Aylmer Ranfurly Plunkett-Ernle-Erle-. See Plunkett-Ernle-Erle-Drax, Reginald Aylmer Ranfurly.

Drayton (drā'tọn), John. b. near Charleston, S.C., June 22, 1766; d. at Charleston, S.C., Nov. 27, 1822. American politician and jurist, twice governor of South Carolina; son of William Henry Drayton (1742–79). Lieutenant governor (1798–1800), of South Carolina; governor (1800–04, 1808–10); influential in establishment (1801) of South Carolina College (now University of South Carolina); judge (1812–22) of U.S. court for district of South Carolina. Author of Letters written during a Tour through the Northern and Eastern States of America (1794), A View of South Carolina, as Respects her Natural and Civil Concerns (1802), and editor of a collection of his father's manuscripts, Memoirs of the American Revolution, from its Commencement to the Year 1776, Inclusive; as Relating to the State of South-Carolina and Occasionally Referring to the States of North-Carolina and Georgia (2 vols., 1821).

Drayton, Michael. b. at Hartshill, Warwickshire, England, 1563; d. at London, Dec. 23, 1631. English poet. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, and his epitaph is said to be by Ben Jonson. His chief works are Idea; the Shepherd's Garland (1593), a pastoral sequence; Idea's Mirror (1594), a sonnet sequence; Mortimeriados (1596; this afterward appeared with many alterations as The Barons' Wars, 1603); England's Heroical Epistles (1597); Poems, Lyric and Pastoral (c1606, containing "The Ballad of Agincourt" and "To the Virginian Voyage"); Poly-Olbion (1613–22), a description of England both topographical and legendary; Nimphidia, the Court of Faery (1627), a light-touched fairy poem; and The Muses' Elysium (1630).

Drayton, Percival. b. in South Carolina, Aug. 25, 1812; d. at Washington, D.C., Aug. 4, 1865. American naval officer; son of William Drayton (1776–1846). Although a member of a South Carolina family, he sympathized with the Union cause, and participated (1861) in DuPont's expedition against Port Royal, S.C., which was defended by his brother, General Thomas F. Drayton (1808–91) and other Confederate relatives. Commanding the Passaic, he attacked Fort McAllister and participated in DuPont's attack on Fort Sumter; on the Hartford, he fought at Mobile Bay under Farragut.

Drayton, Thomas Fenwick. b. in South Carolina, Aug. 24, 1808; d. at Florence, S.C., Feb. 18, 1891. American planter, railroad president, and Confederate officer in the Civil War; son of William Drayton (1776–1846). President (1853–61) of the Charleston and Savannah Railroad; commissioned (1861) brigadier general in the Confederate provisional army; in command of Port Royal, S.C. (1861) when it was attacked by Union ships under DuPont, one of which was commanded by his brother, Percival Drayton (1812–65).

Drayton, William. b. in South Carolina, March 21, 1732; d. May 18, 1790. American jurist. Chief justice (1767–76) of the province of East Florida; suspended (1776) because he advocated extension of local self-government; reinstated (1776); suspended again (1777). Appointed (1789) first judge of the U.S. court for the district of South Carolina after service as associate justice of the state supreme court.

Drayton, William. b. at St. Augustine, Fla., Dec. 30, 1776; d. May 24, 1846. American lawyer and congressman (1825–33) from South Carolina. Judge and recorder (1819–23) of the city court of Charleston; elected as a Union Democrat to Congress, where he fought the tariff but opposed nullification; chief organizer of Union party in South Carolina; president (1841 et seq.), Bank of the United States.

Drayton, William Henry. b. at Drayton Hall, on the Ashley River, S.C., in September, 1742; d. at Philadelphia, Sept. 3, 1779. American patriot; cousin of William Drayton (1732–90). He became chief justice of South Carolina in 1776, and in the same year delivered to the grand jury a charge which gave great impetus to the cause of independence. He was a member of the Continental Congress from 1778 until his death.

Drdla (dėrd'lă), Franz. b. at Saar, Moravia (now part of Czechoslovakia), Nov. 28, 1868—. Czech violinist and composer. He studied at the Prague and Vienna conservatories and played in the Vienna court opera orchestra. His compositions include Souvenir, Vision, and Serenade in A Major, dedicated to Kubelik, by whom it was first played.

Dreadnought (dred'nôt). British battleship, launched in 1906. It was of 17,900 tons displacement; length, 490 ft.; beam, 82 ft.; draft, 26½ ft.; had belt armor 11 inches thick; ten 12-inch guns; 5 torpedo tubes; 27,500 indicated horsepower; and a maximum speed of 21.85 knots. It gave its name to the class of heavy battleships before, during, and after World War I.

Dream, Chaucer's. Poem, probably spurious, added by Speght in 1598 to his edition of Chaucer. The proper title is The Isle of Ladies. (It is not the same as The Dream of Chaucer, which is genuine.)

Dream, The. Short poem by Byron, composed in 1816.

Dreamers, The. Three-act play about Robert Emmet, by Lennox Robinson, published in 1915.

Dream Life. Collection of essays by Ik Marvel (Donald G. Mitchell), published in 1851. It is the sequel to Reveries of a Bachelor (1850).

Dream of Eugene Aram (ū.jēn' ā'rąm), The. Poem by Thomas Hood, published in 1829.

Dream of Fair Women, A. Poem by Alfred Tennyson.

Dream of Fair Women, The. Autobiographical novel by Henry Williamson, published in 1924. It is the third volume of a tetralogy under the general title The Flax of Dream.

Dream of Gerontius (jē.ron'ti.us), The. Oratorio (Opus 38) by Sir Edward Elgar, based upon Cardinal Newman's poem of that title, first performed at the Birmingham Festival on Oct. 3, 1900.

Dream within a Dream, A. Poem by Edgar Allan Poe.

Drebbel (dreb'ęl), Cornelis van. b. at Alkmaar, Netherlands, 1572; d. at London, 1634. Dutch natural philosopher. He published De natura elementorum (1621) and others.

Dred, A Tale of the Great Dismal Swamp (dred). Novel by Harriet Beecher Stowe, published in 1856, showing the state of alarm and misery in which the slaveowners as well as slaves lived. Dred is a runaway Negro living in the Dismal Swamp. A new edition, called Nina Gordon, was published in 1866.

Dred Scott Case. [Formally cited as Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 Howard 393 (1857).] In American history, a celebrated decision by the U.S. Supreme Court, which derived its importance from its bearing on the constitutionality of the Missouri Compromise of 1820. Dred Scott, a Missouri slave who had been taken to Wisconsin in the territory covered by the Missouri Compromise, and had therefore sued (1848) for his freedom, was sold to a citizen of another state. He then transferred his suit from the state to the federal courts, under the power given to the latter to try suits between citizens of different states; and the case came by appeal to the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court, rendered in 1857, put Scott out of court on the ground that under the Constitution a slave, or the descendant of a slave, could not be a citizen of the U.S. or have any standing in federal courts. The opinion of chief justice Roger B. Taney also attacked the validity of the Missouri Compromise, on the ground that one of the constitutional functions of Congress was the protection of property, that slaves were recognized by the Constitution as property, and that Congress was therefore bound to protect slavery in the territories.

Drees (drās), Willem. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, July 5, 1886—. Dutch statesman, prime minister (1948 et seq.) of the Netherlands. He attended a commercial school at Amsterdam, and entered the employ of the Twentsche Bank. Chairman (1911–31) of the Hague branch of the Social Democratic Labor party; stenographer (1917–19) of the states general; official in The Hague municipality and in the province of South Holland; member (1933–40) of the second chamber of the states general; imprisoned by the Germans at Buchenwald and St. Michielsgestel (1940–41). He was minister of social affairs in the Schermerhorn cabinet.

Dreiherrnspitze or Dreiherrn Spitze (drī'hern shpit'se). One of the chief peaks of the Hohe Tauern, in the Austrian Alps, SW of the Grosse-Venediger. Elevation, ab. 11,480 ft.

Drei Pintos (drī pin'tos), Die. Unfinished opera by Carl Maria von Weber, composed c1821 with a libretto by Hell; rearranged by Carl von Weber and completed by Gustav Mahler; the latter conducted its first performance, at Leipzig, on Jan. 20, 1888.

Dreiser (drī'sėr), Theodore Herman Albert. b. at Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 27, 1871; d. at Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 28, 1945. American novelist and editor, notable as a writer of naturalistic fiction. He was editor of Smith's Magazine (1905–06) and Broadway Magazine (1906–07); editor in chief (1907–10) of Butterick publications, including The Delineator; and editor until 1934 of The American Spectator. He was the author of Sister Carrie (1900), Jennie Gerhardt (1911), The Financier (1912; revised ed., 1927), The Titan (1914), The Genius (1915), A Hoosier Holiday (1916), Free And Other Stories (1918), Twelve Men (1919), The Color of a Great City (1923), An American Tragedy (1925), Chains (1927), Dawn (1931), Tragic America (1932), The Bulwark (1946), The Stoic (1947) and other works. He published the tragedy The Hand of the Potter (1919), and was author of Moods (1926), a book of verse, and Dreiser Looks at Russia, published (1928) after a visit to Russia in 1927. Dreiser was often attacked for his lack of style, but his novels, remarkably complete in wealth of detail and powerful because of the stories they told, were widely read. Sister Carrie was removed from sale by its publisher; Jennie Gerhardt was attacked for its supposed immorality. Frank Cowperwood, central figure of The Financier and The Titan, is an accurate picture of the grasping businessman and his environment. An American Tragedy, his greatest success, is the story of a youth whose weakness and inability to resist the forces surrounding him bring him to destruction. Dreiser is a naturalist rather than a realist, depicting human beings swept along by events stronger than mere humanity and broken or elevated by chance or by some natural law that the author cannot fathom.

Drelincourt (drə.lan.kör'), Charles. b. at Sedan, France, July 10, 1595; d. at Paris, Nov. 3, 1669. French Protestant clergyman. He was the author of Consolations de l'âme fidele contre les frayeurs de la mort (1651).

Drente (dren'tə). [Also, Drenthe.] Province of the Netherlands, in the NE part, bounded by Groningen on the N and NE, Germany on the E, Overijssel on the S, and Friesland and Overijssel on the W. It is one of the poorer provinces of the Netherlands; much of the soil is either sandy or swampy and the population density is not high. Agriculture and livestock raising are the principal occupations. Capital, Assen; area, 1,030 sq. mi.; pop. 285,079 (est. 1950).

Drepanum (drep'a.num). Ancient name of Trapani, Italy.

Drescher (dresh'ėr), Martin. b. at Wittstock, Germany, 1863; d. in the U.S., 1920. American poet who wrote in German. After studying law at Göttingen he entered the Prussian civil service, but came to America in 1891 and from his early American experiences emerged an impassioned Marxist. He was editor of the Detroit weeklies Der Herold and Der arme Teufel. He published volumes of verse (Gedichte, 1909; Stille und Sturm, 1913; New York und die Welt, 1913; Krieg, Gedichte der Zeit, 1914) and an autobiography (Vom Sturm gepeitscht. Skizzen und Geschichten aus einem Zigeunerleben, 1913).

Dresden (drez'den). City in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly the capital of the free state of Saxony, situated on both sides of the Elbe River, ab. 65 mi. SE of Leipzig. Before World War II, the most important industry was cigarette manufacture, with many large and small enterprises; next in importance were the chemical and pharmaceutical industry, the manufacture of photochemical and photographic articles (Zeiss-Ikon), and the manufacture of chocolates and candies; there were also glass, porcelain, and majolica factories, paper mills, and machine shops. Dresden is now the center of cigarette manufacture in Eastern Germany and an important railroad junction and river port. It is the seat of a Lutheran bishopric and has an institute of technology, a music conservatory and dramatic academy, and an art academy (all three institutions of excellent reputation), and a number of other educational institutions and vocational schools. Its art gallery possesses works by Italian, Dutch, and Flemish masters (including the famous Sistine Madonna by Raphael) and well-known collections of porcelain, arms, coins, and jewelry. Before World War II Dresden was one of the most beautiful cities of Germany, dominated by the high cupola of the Frauenkirche (1726–43), a masterpiece of German baroque by Georg Bähr. The Catholic Hofkirche (Court Church) was erected (1738–55) in the baroque style of Rome by Gaetano Chiaveri. The Zwinger, a collection of buildings around a central courtyard, started in 1711 in the purest rococo style by Daniel Pöppelmann, was completed (1847–56) in the same style by Gottfried Semper. Other baroque and rococo buildings were the old Rathaus (city hall), the Neustädter Rathaus, the Neustädter Hauptwache, the Japanese Palais (by Pöppelmann), the Palais on the Zinzendorf Street, the Prinzen Palais, and the Johanneum. The former royal Schloss (castle) is a 16th-century building, renovated at the end of the 19th century. Other structures, such as the opera house, the new city hall, and others, are good examples of 19th and 20th century architecture, fitted into the general picture. The Brühl'sche Terrasse lined the banks of the Elbe River. Almost all these buildings are gone. The Frauenkirche is completely destroyed; the Hofkirche, Schloss, and Zwinger are largely ruined. The same may be said of large parts of the city; it is doubtful whether the unique flavor of Dresden's architecture will ever be restored.

History. Originally a Slavic fishing village, the German town of Dresden grew around a castle of the margraves of Meissen, but remained small until it became the residence of the rulers of Saxony of the Albertine line of the house of Wettin at the end of the 15th century. Lutheranism was introduced in 1539. The period of architectural activity and court splendor started in the reign of Johann Georg II in the middle of the 17th century and continued on a larger scale in the 18th century in the reign of August II and III, who at the same time were kings of Poland; Dresden was then one of the most grandiose courts of Europe. In the Seven Years' War Dresden surrendered to Prussian troops in 1756, was reconquered in 1759, and was bombarded by the Prussian army under Frederick II in 1760. It became Napoleon's chief arsenal and headquarters after his retreat from Russia; one of his last victories was won in the battle of Dresden (Aug. 26–27, 1813). The fortifications were razed after 1817. Steamship traffic on the Elbe River was introduced in 1836 and one of the first German railroads reached the town in 1839. Dresden was at this time the seat of a school of painting and architecture. A bloody revolution took place here in the spring of 1849, gravely damaging some of the buildings; it was suppressed. In 1851, a conference of the German states was held here on the initiative of Austria and Prussia. In 1866 the city was occupied by Prussian troops without a fight; the transition from monarchy to republic in 1918 was also bloodless. The city experienced devastating air raids in World War II; it was occupied by Russian forces on May 8, 1945. The population, mostly Protestant, declined between 1939 and 1946 by 27.7 percent. 467,966 (1946).

Dresden, Treaty of. Treaty concluded on Dec. 25, 1745, between Prussia, Austria, and Saxony, ending the second Silesian war. Frederick the Great was confirmed in the possession of Silesia.

Dresden Codex. See under Codex.

Dresden Diamond. [Also, Dresden Green Diamond.] Diamond which was at one time in the collection belonging to the Saxon crown. It weighs approximately 40 carats and has a greenish tinge.

Dresser (dres'ėr), John Alexander. b. at Richmond, Quebec, Canada, June 27, 1866—. Canadian geologist and petrographer, geologist of the Canadian Geological Survey from 1909. He has been lecturer on geology at McGill University since 1907.

Dresser, Paul. [Surname originally Dreiser.] b. 1857; d. 1911. American song writer; brother of Theodore Dreiser. With no pretensions to high literary or musical quality, some of his songs, sentimental and melodious, caught the popular fancy. Two which swept the country were On the Banks of the Wabash, Far Away, and The Blue and the Gray. The last-named work was exceedingly popular during the Spanish-American War (1898).

Dressler (dres'lėr), Marie. [Original name, Leila Koerber.] b. at Cobourg, Ontario, Canada, Nov. 9, 1871; d. July 28, 1934. American actress. She was leading comedienne (1906 et seq.) with the Weber company at New York, where she played the part of Tillie Bob in Tillie's Nightmare, which she repeated (1916) in the motion picture Tillie's Punctured Romance, co-starring with Charles Chaplin. Other films in which she appeared are Anna Christie, Emma, Caught Short, Reducing, Min and Bill, Politics, Prosperity, Dinner at Eight, Tugboat Annie, and The Late Christopher Bean.

Dreux (drė). Medieval county in N France, W of Paris, whose chief town was Dreux.

Dreux. [Ancient names, Durocasses, Drocae.] Town in W France, in the department of Eure-et-Loir, situated on the Blaise River near its junction with the Eure River, ab. 45 mi. W of Paris. It is a center for trade in grain, poultry, and other agricultural products and has tanning, metallurgical, hat, shoe, and food (beer, liquor, cider, biscuits) industries. The church of Saint Pierre has a beautiful Renaissance bell tower. The chapel of Saint Louis, the burial place of the house of Orléans, built in the beginning of the 19th century, was damaged during World War II. 14,184 (1946).

Dreux, Battle of. In French history, name given to the defeat (Dec. 19, 1562) by Montmorency, with ab. 15,000 men, of an equal number of Huguenots under Condé, who was taken prisoner.

Drew (drö), Daniel. b. at Carmel, N.Y., July 29, 1797; d. Sept. 18, 1879. American railroad capitalist and speculator, noted for his role in the so-called Erie War. Starting out as a cattle drover and horse trader in New York state, he soon rose to a prominent position as a cattle buyer. Moving to New York in 1829, he entered (1834) the steamboat business, running boats on the Hudson River in competition with Cornelius Vanderbilt. He also set up a steamboat line on Lake Champlain and for many years controlled the Stonington Line on Long Island Sound. With his earnings he formed (1844) the Wall Street house of Drew, Robinson and Company, later becoming an independent operator known for his shrewdness. He sustained his first serious defeat in 1864, when he lost out to Vanderbilt and John Tobin in the Harlem Railroad corner; the stock manipulations cost Drew a half-million dollars. In alliance with James Fisk and Jay Gould, he carried out the notorious "Erie War" (1866–68) against Vanderbilt and his group. The affair, marked by duplicity, violence, court proceedings, and corruption, startled the country with its demonstration of the power wielded by reckless men in defiance of public responsibility. He was later betrayed in a financial deal by his confederates, Gould and Fisk, and after the panic of 1873 saw his fortune disappear. His bankruptcy schedule filed in 1876 indicated that his liabilities exceeded one million dollars. See The Book of Daniel Drew, by Bouck White (1910).

Drew, Georgiana Emma. See Barrymore, Georgiana Emma Drew.

Drew, John. b. at Dublin, Sept. 3, 1827; d. at Philadelphia, May 21, 1862. American actor; husband of Louisa Drew. He made his first appearance in 1845 at New York, and in 1852 at Philadelphia, where he became a great favorite. In 1853 he became (with William Wheatley) manager of the Arch Street Theatre. He played in England in 1855, in California in 1858, in Australia in 1859, and made his last appearance in 1862.

Drew, John. b. at Philadelphia, Nov. 13, 1853; d. at San Francisco, July 9, 1927. American actor, noted for his creations of high comedy roles; son of John Drew (1827–62) and Louisa Drew (1820–97). His first appearance on the stage was in a farce, Cool as a Cucumber, produced in 1873 at the Arch Street Theatre at Philadelphia. He went (1875) to New York to act with Augustin Daly's company, making his first appearance with that group as Bob Ruggles in The Big Bonanza, produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. He later appeared in Shakespearian roles and then joined his brother-in-law, Maurice Barrymore, in a barnstorming tour that took him to Texas. Drew rejoined Daly's company in 1879, remaining with it for the next 14 years, during which time he established his reputation, particularly in Shakespearian parts played opposite Ada Rehan. His first appearance as a star was opposite Maude Adams in Charles Frohman's New York production (1892) of The Masked Ball, an adaptation by Clyde Fitch. For the next 23 years, until Frohman was lost with the Lusitania, Drew played under Frohman's management in plays like The Bauble Shop and The Liars, by Henry Arthur Jones, Rosemary, by Louis N. Parker and Murray Carson, The Tyranny of Tears, by C. Haddon Chambers, and The Mummy and the Humming Bird, by Captain Marshall, being supported in the latter by his nephew, Lionel Barrymore. He played (1921–23) in The Circle, by Somerset Maugham, and later appeared in several revivals, particularly Pinero's Trelawney of the Wells, which he played with an all-star company. He was the author of My Years on the Stage (1923). See A Splendid Gypsy: John Drew, by Peggy Wood (1927).

Drew, Louisa. [Maiden name, Lane.] b. at London, Jan. 10, 1820; d. at Larchmont, N.Y., Aug. 31, 1897. American actress; wife of John Drew (1825–62). She married Henry Hunt, a singer, in 1836, and after separating from him married George Mossop, an Irish actor, who died in 1849. In 1850 she married John Drew. She went on the stage very young, came to America in 1828, and acted in all the important cities in the country. In 1861 she became sole manager of the Arch Street Theatre at Philadelphia.

Drew, Samuel. b. at St. Austell, Cornwall, England, March 6, 1765; d. at Helston, Cornwall, England, March 29, 1833. English Methodist clergyman and theologian. He wrote Essay on the Immateriality and Immortality of the Soul (1802), Essay on the Identity and General Resurrection of the Body (1809), and others.

Drewrys Bluff (drö'riz). [Also, Drury's Bluff.] Point on the James River, near Fort Darling, ab. 8 mi. S of Richmond, Va. Here, on May 16, 1864, the Confederates under Beauregard repulsed the Union forces under Butler. Union loss (May 12–16), 3,012; that of the Confederates, 2,500.

Drews (dröz), Arthur. b. at Ütersen, Holstein, Germany, Nov. 1, 1865; d. at Achern, Germany, July 19, 1935. German philosopher, professor (1898 et seq.) at Karlsruhe, who, influenced by Eduard von Hartmann and G. W. F. Hegel, propagated the so-called Konkreter Monismus (concrete monism). He is remembered as author of Die Christusmythe (1909–11), denying the historical existence of Jesus. Among his other books are Die deutsche Spekulation seit Kant (1893), Das Lebenswerk E. v. Hartmanns (1907), Der Monismus (1909), and Die Entstehung des Christentums aus dem Gnostizismus (1924).

Drexel (drek'sel), Anthony Joseph. b. at Philadelphia, Sept. 13, 1826; d. at Carlsbad, Germany (now Karlovy Vary, Czechoslavakia), June 30, 1893. American banker and philanthropist; son of F. M. Drexel (1792–1863). He became (1847) a member of Drexel and Company which, upon his father's death, came under his direction and that of his older brother, Francis. The firm's expansion after the Civil War, and its emergence as an investment brokerage firm, were largely due to his judgment and foresight. He took over the sole direction of the firm in 1885, when his brother Francis died. He made many gifts to charitable and church institutions. A part owner of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, he participated in establishing the Childs-Drexel Home for Aged Printers at Colorado Springs, Colo. His outstanding contributions, totaling some three million dollars, were made to Drexel Institute at Philadelphia, which he founded.

Drexel, Francis Martin. b. at Dornbirn, in the Austrian Tyrol, April 7, 1792; d. June 5, 1863. American banker. He founded (1837) the banking house of Drexel and Company at Philadelphia.

Dreyer (drī'ėr), John Louis Emil. b. at Copenhagen, Feb. 13, 1852; d. 1926. Danish astronomer, who worked in Ireland. He went to Ireland in 1874 to become astronomer of the observatory of the earl of Rosse at Birr, served as assistant astronomer of the observatory of the University of Dublin from 1878 to 1882, and from the latter date to 1916 was director of the observatory at Armagh, studying particularly the formation of nebulae and the motions of stars. He edited the Second Armagh Catalogue of 3,300 Stars (1886), and prepared a New General Catalogue of Nebulae and Clusters of Stars (1888). As a historian of his chosen science he wrote a History of the Planetary Systems from Thales to Kepler (1906), and edited the works of Sir William Herschel and the earlier volumes of the collected writings of Tycho Brahe.

Dreyer, Max. b. at Rostock, Germany, Sept. 25, 1862—. German dramatist and novelist. His greatest success was Der Probekandidat (1899), a play in which a brave young teacher tries to tell the truth about evolution and loses his job and financée. His humor at the expense of ruling houses in Das Tal des Lebens (1902) brought the ban of the Prussian censor, an act which helped the popularity of the play elsewhere. He is the author also of the novels Nachwuchs (1917), Das Gymnasium von St. Jürgen (1925), and Der Weg durchs Feuer (1930). For several years he taught in a Gymnasium (advanced secondary school), and for a decade he edited the Berlin Tägliche Rundschau, and has done best when drawing on these experiences.

Dreyfus (drā'fus, drī'-; French, drā.füs), Alfred. b. at Mulhouse, in Alsace, Oct. 9, 1859; d. at Paris, July 12, 1935. French army officer of Jewish descent, central figure in the celebrated Dreyfus affair. He was convicted (1894) by a secret military tribunal of having divulged state secrets to a foreign power, and was sentenced to penal servitude for life. He was imprisoned on Devil's Island, French Guiana. The so-called bordereau (a list of papers supposedly to be turned over by Dreyfus to the Germans), the principal piece of evidence in Dreyfus's conviction, was sufficient evidence to sway the anti-Semitic military court. However, in 1896 Colonel Picquart, of army intelligence, discovered, and in 1897 Dreyfus's brother Mathieu made public, evidence indicating that not Dreyfus but Major Marie Charles Ferdinand Walsin Esterhazy was the writer of the bordereau. The case rapidly became a public scandal and liberals and republicans sided against militarists and royalists in an attempt to reopen the case and obtain justice for Dreyfus. Such men as Émile Zola (convicted in 1898 for printing his pro-Dreyfus series of articles J'accuse, which summed up the evidence against the army), Jaurès, Anatole France, and Clemenceau attacked the rightists, who included Déroulède and Barrès. To support their case, the anti-Dreyfus forces made use of manufactured evidence, building a house of cards that tumbled with the suicide in prison of Lieutenant Colonel Henry, of army intelligence, who with Esterhazy was actually responsible for the bordereau. Dreyfus was accorded a second trial at Rennes (Aug. 7–Sept. 9, 1899), and was recondemned and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, but was pardoned by President Loubet for by this time it was obvious that the case was not being tried on its merits. The decision of the court of cassation, the supreme appeals court of France, announced on July 12, 1906, quashed the verdict of the Rennes tribunal and completely vindicated Dreyfus. Restored (1906) to military rank as a major, he was decorated with the Legion of Honor, served in the French army in World War I, and retired as a lieutenant colonel after holding the temporary rank of brigadier general. Subsequent revelations (1930) indicated the absolute guilt of Major Esterhazy in forging the documents originally ascribed to Dreyfus. The Dreyfus case was used by the anticlerical party in France to further their aim of complete separation of church and state; on the other hand, the antirepublicans made every attempt, including armed resistance to the government, to use the affair to discredit the republic.

Dreyschock (drī'shok), Alexander. b. at Zack, in Bohemia, Oct. 15, 1818; d. at Venice, April 1, 1869. Czech pianist and composer. Professor of the pianoforte (1862 et seq.) at the conservatory of St. Petersburg, director of the imperial school of theatrical music, and court pianist.

Dreyse (drī'zę), Johann Nikolaus von. b. at Sömmerda, Prussia, Nov. 20, 1787; d. Dec. 9, 1867. German mechanician, inventor of the muzzle-loading needle gun (1827) and of the breech-loader (1836).

Dr. Faustus (fôs'tus, fous'-). See Doctor Faustus.

Dr. Grimshawe's Secret (grim'shôz). Prose romance by Nathaniel Hawthorne. It was left in an unfinished state, not being published until 1882 when it was edited by his son, Julian. The setting is a town in New England, and the time is the early part of the 19th century. The plot centers around an English estate which, since the time of Charles I, has had a bloody footstep on its threshold, a mark left by the last heir when he suddenly disappeared.

Dr. Heidegger's Experiment (hī'dę.gėr.z). Short story by Nathaniel Hawthorne, included in his Twice-Told Tales (1837). The theme of the story is the old legend of the famous Fountain of Youth, which Ponce de Leon searched for.

Dr. Heidenhoff's Process (hī'den.hofs). Psychological novel (1880) by Edward Bellamy. It was highly praised by William Dean Howells, who regarded it as "one of the finest feats in the region of romance" that he knew. Like its author's later Miss Ludington's Sister (1884), it deals with psychic material.

D'ri and I (drī). Novel by Irving Bacheller, published in 1901. The story involves the experiences of a hired man, Darius Olin, and Ramon Bell, son of Olin's employer.

Driburg (drē'bůrk). Resort town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, ab. 11 mi. E of Paderborn: mineral springs. Pop. about 4,000.

Driebergen-Rijzenburg (drē'ber"ċhęn.rī'zęn.bėrċh). Town in C Netherlands, in the province of Utrecht, E of the city of Utrecht. The town has beautiful villas and parks; agriculture and the raising of meat cattle prevail in the district. 11,300 (1939).

Driesch (drēsh), Hans Adolf Eduard. b. at Kreuznach, Germany, Oct. 28, 1867; d. at Leipzig, Germany, April 17, 1941. German biologist and philosopher. From 1891 to 1900 he was engaged in research at Trieste and at the zoölogical station at Naples. Originally a disciple of Haeckel, he later became an opponent of philosophical mechanism and formulated his own system of dynamic vitalism and individuality. He served as professor of philosophy at Heidelberg (1911 et seq.), Cologne (1920 et seq.), and Leipzig (1921 et seq.). Author of Analytische Theorie der organischen Entwicklung (1894), Geschichte des Vitalismus (1905), Leib und Seele (1916; 3rd ed., 1923), Das Problem der Freiheit (1917), Metaphysik (1924), Parapsychologie (1932; 2nd ed., 1943), and Die Maschine und der Organismus (1935).

Driesche (drēs'ċhę), Jan van den. See Drusius, Johannes.

Drieu La Rochelle (drē.ė lȧ ro.shel), Pierre. b. at Paris, Jan. 3, 1893; committed suicide after the Allied liberation of France, 1945. French poet, novelist, and editor. He was the author of poems, including Interrogation (1917) and Fond de Cantine (1920); of novels, such as L'Homme couvert de femmes (1925) and Une femme à sa fenêtre (1930). Early a member of such diverse groups as the Communists, surrealists, and Action Française, he later joined the Parti Populaire Français of Jacques Doriot. He wrote a novel, Gilles (1939), about fighting for France, and accepted the editorship (1940) of the Nouvelle Revue Française directly after the French defeat by the Germans in World War II.

Driffield (drif'ēld). Urban district and market town in NE England, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 36 mi. E of York, ab. 216 mi. N of London by rail. 6,888 (1951).

Drift. Novel by James Hanley, published in 1930.

Driftless Area. Extensive area mostly in W central and SW Wisconsin, but extending also into NW Illinois, NE Iowa, and SE Minnesota, which was not covered by any of the recent continental glaciations. It is hillier than the surrounding glaciated areas, and is traversed by deep valleys, of which the largest are those of the lower Wisconsin and the Mississippi rivers. The highest elevations in the region are Rib Mountain, near Wausau, Wis. (1,940 ft.) and West Blue Mound, ab. 20 mi. W of Madison, Wis. (1,716 ft.). Area, ab. 15,000 sq. mi.

Drilo (drī'lō). Ancient name of the Drin.

Drin (drēn). [Also: Drini (drē'nē); ancient name, Drilo.] River which flows from Yugoslavia through N Albania and empties into the Adriatic near Lesh (Alessio). Length, ab. 175 mi.

Drina (drē'nä). [Latin, Drinus.] River in Yugoslavia which rises in Montenegro, flows generally N between Serbia and Bosnia-Hercegovina, and joins the Sava. Length, ab. 170 mi.

Drinkwater (dringk'wô.tėr, -wot.ėr), John. b. at Leytonstone, Essex, England, June 1, 1882; d. at London, March 25, 1937. English dramatist and poet. He worked in the insurance business at Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere, and before turning to full-time writing took part in founding (1907) the Pilgrim Players, an amateur dramatic group which later became the Birmingham Repertory Theatre. Among his historical plays are Abraham Lincoln, a Play (produced 1918), Mary Stuart (published 1921, produced 1922), Oliver Cromwell, a Play (published 1921, produced 1923), and Robert E. Lee, a Play (published and produced 1923). Among his other plays are Rebellion: a Three Act Play in Verse (1914), Bird in Hand (1927), and Midsummer Eve (1932). His biographical and critical works include William Morris, a Study (1912), Swinburne, a Study (1913), The Pilgrim of Eternity—Byron (1925), Charles James Fox (1928), Pepys (1930), and Shakespeare (1933). Among his works of poetry are Poems (1903), Poems of Men and Hours (1911), Cromwell and Other Poems (1913), Poems 1908–14 (1917), Seeds of Time (1921), From an Unknown Isle (1924), Christmas Poems (1931), and Summer Harvest (1933). He wrote two autobiographical volumes, Inheritance, The First Volume of an Autobiography (1931) and Discovery, the Second Volume (1932).

Drioton (drē.o.tôṅ), Étienne Marie. b. at Nancy France, 1889—. French ecclesiastic and Egyptologist He served as professor (1920 et seq.) at the Institut Catholique de Paris. Among his works is Introduction à l'étude des hiéroglyphes (Introduction to the Use of the Hieroglyphs; with Sottas, 1922).

Drisler (dris'lėr), Henry. b. on Staten Island, N.Y., Dec. 27, 1818; d. at New York, Nov. 30, 1897. American classical scholar, lexicographer, and educator. In 1843 he was appointed tutor in Columbia College (later Columbia University), and was continuously connected with that institution during the rest of his active life, becoming professor of Greek in 1867, and dean of the faculty of arts in 1889. In 1894 he resigned and was made professor emeritus. In 1867 and 1888–89 he was acting president of the university. He reëdited Liddell and Scott's edition of Passow's Greek lexicon (1851), and was associate editor of the seventh revised Oxford edition, published in 1883.

Drittes Reich (drit'ęs rīch'). See Third Reich.

Driver (drī'vėr), Samuel Rolles. b. at Southampton, England, Oct. 2, 1846; d. Feb. 26, 1914. English scholar, regius professor of Hebrew and canon of Christ Church College in the University of Oxford from 1883. He was one of the revisers of the English translation of the Old Testament (1876–84). Among his works are Isaiah (1893), An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament (1897), and commentaries on Joel and Amos (1897), Daniel (1901), Deuteronomy (1902), The Minor Prophets (1905), Job (1905), Genesis (1909), and Three Papers on the Higher Criticism, with A. F. Kirkpatrick (1905).

Dr. Johns (jonz). Novel by Ik Marvel (Donald Grant Mitchell), published in 1866.

Dr. Lavendar's People (lav'ęn.dėrz). Collected short stories (1903) by Margaret Deland. They are studies of American character in American village life, and belong to the "local-color" school. They are written in the romantic and sentimental tradition which Edgar Lee Masters rebelled against in his Spoon-River Anthology (1915).

Drobisch (drō'bish), Moritz Wilhelm. b. 1802; d. 1896. German educator, mathematician, and philosopher. He shared and practiced the educational theories of Johann Friedrich Herbart. His principal works were Neue Darstellung der Logik (New Exposition of Logic, 1836), Grundlehren der Religionsphilosophie (Fundamentals of Religious Philosophy, 1840), and Empirische Psychologie (Empirical Psychology, 1842).

Drocae (drō'sē). An ancient name of Dreux, town.

Droch (drok). Pseudonym of Bridges, Robert.

Drogheda (drô'ę.dą). [Irish, Droichead Átha.] Urban district, seaport, and manufacturing center in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Louth, situated on the river Boyne ab. 4 mi. from its mouth, ab. 27 mi. N of Dublin. It has cotton textile manufactures. The port handles imports of coal and general cargo. During the 14th century, Drogheda was one of the four ports in Ir land from which export of staple goods was permitted. Until 1898 it formed with the surrounding district (9 sq. mi.) a county. "Poynings's Law" was passed here in 1494. The town was defended (1641–42) against O'Neill, was stormed by Cromwell and the garrison massacred (September, 1649), and surrendered to William III after the battle of the Boyne (1690). Pop. 16,773 (1951).

Drogheda, Statute of. See Poynings's Law.

Drogio (drō'ji.ō). Name given by the late 14th-century Venetian explorer Antonio Zeno to a country said to be S and W of Estotiland. It was of vast extent, and has been thought to include Nova Scotia and New England.

Drogobych (dro.gô'bich). [Polish, Drohobycz (drô.hô'bich).] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 40 mi. SW of Lvov. It has considerable trade, and salt-works. 32,000 (est. 1940).

Droichead Átha (drô'ęd ô'hą). Irish name of Drogheda.

Droichead Banndan (drô'ęd ban'dąn). Irish name of Bandon, Irish Republic.

Droitwich (droit'wich). [Also, Droitwich Spa.] Municipal borough, market town, and spa in W England, in Worcestershire, situated on the river Salwarpe, ab. 6 mi. NE of Worcester, ab. 126 mi. NW of London by rail. It is famous for its salt springs and saline baths, known since Roman times, and formerly had salt mines, now no longer worked. 6,453 (1951).

Drôme (drōm). Department in SE France, bounded by the department of Isère on the N, the departments of Isère and Hautes-Alpes on the E, the department of Basses-Alpes on the SE, and the department of Vaucluse on the S, and separated by the Rhone River from the department of Ardèche on the W. It contains the westernmost ranges of the Alps, sloping down to the fertile Rhone valley. There are pastures and forests in the mountains, and orchards, olive groves, and vineyards in the valley. Its wines are famous. There are various industries, among which the leather industry of Romans is notable. The important railroad line from Lyons to Marseilles runs through the department. The American Seventh Army and a French army advanced through Drôme in 1944. Capital, Valence; area, 2,532 sq. mi.; pop. 268,233 (1946).

Dromina (drom'i.nạ). Novel (1909) by Monsignor Count Francis Browning Drew Bickerstaffe-Drew under the pseudonym John Ayscough. Based on a religious theme, it is set against the historical background of the 1820's. The Dauphin, son of Louis XVI, is a leading character.

Dromio of Ephesus (drom'i.ō; ef'ę.sus) and Dromio of Syracuse (sir'ą.kūs). In Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, twin brothers, servants respectively of Antipholus of Ephesus and Antipholus of Syracuse. The Dromio of Ephesus is a stupid servant, the Dromio of Syracuse a witty one.

Dromore (drǫ.mōr', drō'môr). Urban district and market town in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, in County Down, situated on the river Lagan ab. 15 mi. SW of Belfast. The town has a cathedral. 2,176 (1937).

Drona (drō'nạ). In Hindu legend, the teacher of the military art to the Kaurava and Pandava princes. In the great war of the Mahabharata he sided with the Kauravas, and after the death of Bhishma became their commander in chief.

Dronfield (dron'fēld). Urban district in N central England, in Derbyshire, ab. 6 mi. NW of Chesterfield, ab. 151 mi. NW of London by rail. 7,628 (1951).

Drontheim (drôn'hām). Former spelling of Trondheim, Norway.

Dropsie (drop'si), Moses Aaron. b. at Philadelphia, March 9, 1821; d. July 8, 1905. American lawyer, educator, and benefactor. After receiving training in the Jewish faith, and working as a watchmaker, he took up the study of law at the age of 27, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. He served as president (1862–82) of the Lombard and South Streets Railway, and became (1888) president of the Green and Coates Streets Passenger Railroad Company. He was secretary and president (1848–92) of the Hebrew Education Society of Philadelphia, served as president of the board of trustees of the Maimonides College of Philadelphia, the first Jewish college in America, and became president (1893) of Gratz College, the first Jewish teachers college in America. His entire estate was willed for the foundation of a college which others named the Dropsie College for Hebrew and Cognate Learning.

Droste-Hülshoff (dros'te.hüls'hof), Baroness Annette Elisabeth von. b. at Hülshoff, near Münster, Prussia, Jan. 10, 1797; d. at Meersburg, on Lake Constance, Germany, May 24, 1848. German poetess. Her story Die Judenbuche (1842) tells with sternness and realism of the Westphalian country from which she derived much of her material. Her poetry (including Gedichte, 1838, and Das geistliche Jahr, 1852), is filled with the atmosphere of the same region.

Droste zu Vischering (tsö fish'e.ring), Baron Klemens August von. b. at Münster, Prussia, Jan. 21, 1773; d. Oct. 19, 1845. German Roman Catholic prelate. He studied at the University of Münster and belonged to the learned circle of Baron von Fürstenberg. Ordained priest in 1798, he was elected coadjutor bishop in 1807, and six months later succeeded von Fürstenberg as administrator of the diocese. In 1813 Napoleon replaced him by Baron von Spiegel, without the Pope's knowledge, but he was restored in 1815. He clashed with the Prussian government and later withdrew to private life. Elected archbishop of Cologne in 1835, he again came into conflict with the government because he supported Pope Gregory XVI in the condemnation of Hermes's teachings, and in other matters. He was arrested on Nov. 20, 1837, but freed in April, 1839, after John Gorres's defense of him in Athanasius. The accusation made against him in the Darlegung (exposé) was retracted by Frederick William IV. In 1844 he refused the cardinalate offered him by the Pope. Among his writings is Über den Frieden unter der Kirche und den Staaten (Münster, 1843).

Drouais (drö.e), François Hubert. b. at Paris, 1727; d. there, 1775. French painter, portraitist of royalty; son of Hubert Drouais (1699–1767) and father of Jean Germain Drouais (1763–88). His father was his first instructor; even more important for his future career, however, he was a pupil of François Boucher. His early work in portraiture won him membership in the French Academy in 1758 and brought him to the favorable attention of Louis XV, with the result that he painted portraits of all members of the royal family, of Mme. du Barry and Mme. de Pompadour, and of other personages at the French court, especially its beautiful women. One of his portraits of Mme. de Pompadour is in the Museum at Lyons, and others of his works are in the Louvre at Paris.

Drouais, Hubert. b. at La Roque, Normandy, France, 1699; d. at Paris, 1767. French painter, especially of miniatures; father of François Hubert Drouais (1727–75). He studied in the studios of several fashionable painters and became one himself, being especially successful with his miniatures. He was received into the French Academy in 1730.

Drouais, Jean Germain. b. at Paris, Nov. 25, 1763; d. at Rome, Feb. 13, 1788. French historical painter, a pupil of Jacques Louis David; son of François Hubert Drouais.

Drouet (drö.e), Jean Baptiste. b. at Ste.-Menehould, Marne, France, Jan. 8, 1763; d. at Mâcon, France, April 11, 1824. French revolutionist. He caused the arrest of Louis XVI at Varennes (June 21, 1791), and was a member of the Convention in 1792 and of the Council of Five Hundred in 1795.

Drouet, Jean Baptiste, Comte d'Erlon. b. at Reims, France, July 29, 1765; d. at Paris, Jan. 25, 1844. Marshal of France. He distinguished himself in the Napoleonic wars, particularly at Jena in 1806 and at Friedland (Pravdinsk) in 1807. He served (1834–45) as governor general of Algeria.

Drouyn de Lhuys (drö.añ dę lü.ēs), Édouard. b. at Paris, Nov. 19, 1805; d. there, March 1, 1881. French diplomat and politician. He was minister of foreign affairs (Dec. 20, 1848–June 2, 1849; Jan. 10–24, 1851; July 28, 1852–May 3, 1855; October, 1862–Sept. 1, 1866).

Drown (droun), Thomas Messinger. b. at Philadelphia, March 19, 1842; d. Nov. 16, 1904. American chemist. He was professor of chemistry (1874–81) at Lafayette College, professor of analytical chemistry (1885 et seq.) and later, professor in charge of the chemistry and chemical engineering departments at M.I.T. As director (1887 et seq.) of the Massachusetts analytical laboratories, he took a chief part in studying the state water supplies. He was manager (1871–73), secretary (1873–83), and president (1897) of the American Institute of Mining Engineers; president (1895–1904) of Lehigh University.

Droylsden (droilz'den). Urban district in NW England, in Lancashire, situated on the Rochdale Canal ab. 5 mi. E of Manchester, ab. 188 mi. NW of London by rail. 26,365 (1951).

Droysen (droi'zen), Johann Gustav. b. at Treptow (Trzebiatów), Pomerania, Prussia, July 6, 1808; d. at Berlin, June 19, 1884. German historian, professor at Berlin from 1859. His works include translations of Aeschylus (1832) and Aristophanes (1836), Geschichte Alexanders des Grossen (1833), Geschichte des Hellenismus (1836–43), Geschichte der preussischen Politik (1855–85), and others.

Droz (droz), Antoine Gustave. b. at Paris, June 9, 1832; d. Oct. 22, 1895. French novelist. His works include Monsieur, madame, et bébé (1866), Entre nous (1867), Le Cahier bleu de Mlle. Cibot (1868), Une Femme gênante (1875), Tristesses et sourires (1884), and L'Enfant (1885).

Droz, François Xavier Joseph. b. at Besançon, France, Oct. 31, 1773; d. at Paris, Nov. 5, 1850. French moralist and historian. He published De la philosophie morale (1823) and Histoire du règne de Louis XVI (1839–42).

Droz, Henri Louis Jacquet. b. at La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, Oct. 13, 1752; d. at Naples, Italy, Nov. 18, 1791. Swiss mechanician; son of Pierre Jacquet Droz.

Droz, Pierre Jacquet. b. at La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, July 28, 1721; d. at Biel, Switzerland, Nov. 28, 1790. Swiss mechanician, especially noted for the construction of a writing automaton.

Dr. Thorne (thôrn). Novel (1858) by Anthony Trollope. It is the third of the series known as the "Chronicles of Barsetshire."

Drude (drö'dę), Oskar. [Full name, Karl Georg Oskar Drude.] b. at Brunswick, Germany, June 5, 1852; d. at Dresden, Germany, Feb. 1, 1933. German botanist; stepbrother of P. K. L. Drude. He was professor of botany (1879–1921) in the Technische Hochschule at Dresden, and established a system of geographical subdivisions of the earth based upon climate zones and phytogeographical features.

Drude, Paul Karl Ludwig. b. at Brunswick, Germany, July 12, 1863; d. at Berlin, July 5, 1906. German physicist; stepbrother of Oskar Drude. He was educated at the universities of Göttingen, Freiburg, and Berlin; served as professor of physics at the University of Leipzig (1894–1900), the University of Giessen (1900–05), and the University of Berlin; edited (1900 et seq.) Annalen der Physik. He made investigations in electromagnetic oscillation and the theory of anomalous dispersion. Author of Physik der Äthers (1894) and Lehrbuch der Optik (1900).

Druentia (drö.en'sha). Latin name of the Durance.

Druid (drö'id), Dr. Welsh tutor of Lord Abberville, in Cumberland's play The Fashionable Lover.

Druid, The. A pseudonym of Dixon, Henry Hall.

Druid Circle, The. Play (1947) by John van Druten.

Druids (drö'idz). Ancient Celtic priests, ministers of religion, poets, teachers, and judges of Gaul, Britain, and Ireland. The chief seats of the Druids were in Wales, Brittany, and the regions around what are now the communities of Dreux and Chartres in France, although probably the Druids existed as a class among all the Celtic peoples of Europe and the British Isles. They are believed to have possessed some knowledge of geometry, the physical sciences, and the like. They superintended the affairs of religion and morality and performed the office of judges. They were not a hereditary class; their knowledge was transmitted orally; as a result, all direct knowledge of the Druids died out with them, and our principal sources of information are such writers as Caesar. They are said to have had a common superior, who was elected by a majority of votes from their own members, and who enjoyed his dignity for life. A yearly general meeting supposedly was held in Gaul, perhaps near the present Chartres. The oak and the mistletoe were held by them in the highest veneration; their places of worship were in oak groves; the cutting of the mistletoe, according to Pliny, was performed by a priest clad in white using a golden knife, and was signalized by the sacrifice of two white bulls at the spot. The Continental Druids, who opposed Roman conquest of Gaul, were wiped out as a result of Rome's victory, but they remained longer in the British Isles, succumbing eventually to Christianity's advance. As a result, they appear in the literature that has come down to us as sorcerers and magicians, surrounded by an aura of evil power. They probably performed human sacrifice, and one of their duties was divining the future, but the mystery of their belief and practice has attached to them strange rites at Stonehenge, England, and Carnac, Brittany, which, so far as is now known, are Stone Age relics with no connection to Druidism. The Druids were succeeded by the bards and fili (poets); some remnants of Druid powers are seen in the legendary attributes of the poets Merlin and Taliesin; much of the Druid glamour is attached to the Celtic saints. Cathbad, the Druid teacher of Cuchulain, is prominent in the Ulster cycle of Irish legend, in such tales as The Cattle-Raid of Cooley.

Druids. Members of a society called the United Ancient Order of Druids, founded at London in 1781 for the mutual benefit of the members, which later had numerous lodges, called groves, in America, Australia, Germany, and elsewhere.

Drum (drum), Hugh Aloysius. b. at Fort Brady, Mich., Sept. 19, 1879; d. at New York, Oct. 3, 1951. American infantry officer and business executive. Served in Philippines (1898–1901, 1908–10) and on Mexican border (1914); assistant chief of staff (1917) to General Pershing in France; chief of staff (1918–19) of U.S. First Army in Europe; promoted (1922) to brigadier general; served as assistant chief of staff (1923–26) of U.S. army, in charge of operations and training; appointed inspector general (1930) and deputy chief of staff (1933) of U.S. army; promoted (1931) to major general; commanded (1935–37) Hawaiian department; promoted (1939) to lieutenant general; chief (1940–43) of eastern defense command and First Army; appointed (1944) chairman of New York State Veteran's Commission; president (1944 et seq.) of Empire State, Inc.

Drumcairn (drum.kārn'), Lord. A title of Hamilton, Sir Thomas (1563–1637).

Drumclog (drum.klog'). Place in Lanarkshire, Scotland, ab. 16 mi. SE of Glasgow. Here, on June 1 (by the old style calendar), 1679, the Scottish Covenanters defeated the Royalists.

Drumheller (drum'hel.er). City in Alberta, Canada, ab. 88 mi. NE of Calgary, in the SE central part of the province: the largest coal-producing city in the province. With the development of the coal resources several industries have sprung up in the city. It is connected by rail with Calgary and other points to the E and W. 2,601 (1951).

Drumlanrig (drum.lan'rig), Viscount of. A title of Douglas, Sir William.

Drummer, or the Haunted House, The. Play by Addison. It was first played in March, 1716, and not known to be Addison's till Steele published the fact, after the author's death.

Drummond (drum'ǫnd), Henry. b. Dec. 5, 1786; d. at Albury, Surrey, England, Feb. 20, 1860. English politician and general writer. He was for many years partner in Drummond's Bank, London, was member of Parliament for Plympton Earle, Devonshire (1810–13) and for West Surrey from 1847 until his death, founded the professorship of political economy at Oxford in 1825, and was one of the founders of the Catholic Apostolic Church, in which he held the rank of apostle, evangelist, and prophet. Among his works are Condition of Agricultural Classes (1842) and History of Noble British Families (1846).

Drummond, Henry. b. at Stirling, Scotland, 1851; d. at Tunbridge Wells, England, March 11, 1897. Scottish clergyman and author. He was appointed lecturer on natural history and science at the Free Church College, Glasgow, in 1877. He was the author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World (1883), Tropical Africa (1888), and others.

Drummond, James. [Titles: 4th Earl and 1st titular Duke of Perth.] b. 1648; d. at St.-Germain, France, March 11, 1716. Scottish nobleman. He was appointed chancellor of Scotland by Charles II in 1684, and was retained in office on the accession of James II, whose chief agent he became in the Roman Catholic administration of Scotland. He was banished on the deposition of James.

Drummond, James. [Titles: 5th Earl and 2nd titular Duke of Perth.] b. 1675; d. at Paris, 1720. Scottish nobleman; son of James Drummond (1648–1716), 4th Earl of Perth. He participated in the Jacobite rising of 1715–16 in Scotland, during which he conducted an unsuccessful expedition against Edinburgh Castle and led the cavalry at the battle of Sheriffmuir. He escaped from Montrose with the Pretender in 1716.

Drummond, James. [Titles, 6th Earl and 3rd titular Duke of Perth.] b. in Scotland, May 11, 1713; d. aboard ship en route to France, May 13, 1746. Scottish Jacobite soldier under Prince Charles Stuart during the Jacobite rising (1745); son of James Drummond (1675–1720), 5th Earl of Perth. He assumed the title of duke although his father's attainder had made it void, joined the Young Pretender at Perth (1745) and led the left wing at the battle of Culloden (1746), and died on a French ship during the escape to France.

Drummond, Sir James Eric. [Title, Lord Perth.] b. Aug. 17, 1876; d. at Rogate, England, Dec. 15, 1951. English diplomat, second secretary general of the League of Nations. He was private secretary to Prime Minister Asquith (1912–15), private secretary to foreign secretaries Sir Edward Grey and Lord Balfour (1915–19), and secretary general of the League of Nations (1919–33). He was British ambassador to Italy in the period 1933–39; in House of Lords after 1941 and deputy leader of the Liberal Party after 1946.

Drummond, John. [Title, 4th Duke of Perth.] d. at the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom, Netherlands, 1747. Scottish Jacobite soldier under Prince Charles Stuart; son of James Drummond (1675–1720). As a member of the French army, he was sent with the Royal Scots regiment to join the Young Pretender in Scotland (1745); contributed greatly to victory at Falkirk (1746) and prevented retreat from Culloden (1746) from becoming rout.

Drummond, Lake. Lake in SE Virginia, in the middle of the Dismal Swamp.

Drummond, Thomas. b. at Edinburgh, Oct. 10, 1797; d. at Dublin, April 15, 1840. British engineer, inventor (1825) of the Drummond light (which was actually an early limelight). It was used in connection with a trigonometrical survey of Great Britain then being carried out by the Royal Engineers (of which Drummond was a member). From 1835 to the year of his death Drummond served as undersecretary of state for Ireland.

Drummond of Hawthornden, William. b. at Hawthornden, near Edinburgh, Dec. 13, 1585; d. there, Dec. 4, 1649. Scottish poet; son of John Drummond (1553–1610), 1st Laird of Hawthornden. He took the degree of M.A. at the University of Edinburgh in 1605, and studied law (1607–08) at Bourges and Paris. On succeeding his father, John Drummond, as laird of Hawthornden in 1610, he retired to his estate, and devoted himself to literature and mechanical experiments. He published Tears on the Death of Meliades (1613), Poems (1616), Notes of Ben Jonson's Conversations, Flowers of Zion, and Cypress Grove (1623).

Drummond, William. [Title, 1st Viscount of Strathallan.] b. c1617; d. at end of March, 1688. Scottish soldier. Royalist commander (1651) of a brigade at the battle of Worcester, where he was captured; served (1653) under the Earl of Glencairn in the Highlands; served (1655–65) in Russian service as lieutenant general and governor of Smolensk; appointed (January, 1666) major general of the forces in Scotland with a seat on the council; in collaboration with Dalyell, he was credited with introducing to Scotland a method of torture by the thumbscrew which he had seen used in Russia.

Drummond, Sir William. b. in Scotland, c1760; d. at Rome, March 29, 1828. British diplomat and writer. He was the author of Origines, or Remarks on the Origin of several Empires, States, and Cities (1824–29).

Drummond, William Henry. b. near Mohill, County Antrim, Ireland, April 13, 1854; d. at Cobalt, Ontario, Canada, April 6, 1907. Canadian physician and poet, known as "the poet of the habitant." He moved to Canada in his youth and was educated there. He began the practice of medicine in the province of Quebec, where he came in close contact with the French-Canadian voyageurs and habitants, about whom most of his poems were written. Later he removed to Montreal, and for some years was professor of medical jurisprudence at Bishop University. His works include The Habitant, and Other French-Canadian Poems (1897), Phil-o-rum's Canoe and Madeleine Vercheres (1898), Johnnie Courteau (1901), The Voyageur, and Other Poems (1905), and The Great Fight (1908).

Drummond Island. Westernmost island of the Manitoulin group in Lake Huron. It belongs to Chippewa County, in Michigan.

Drummondville (drum′ənd.vil). Capital of Drummond County, Quebec, Canada, situated on the St. François River, ab. 60 mi. NE of Montreal: large paper mills and related industries. 14,341 (1951).

Drummossie Moor (dru.mos′i). See Culloden Moor.

Drumont (drü.môⁿ), Édouard Adolphe. b. at Paris, May 3, 1844; d. there, Feb. 6, 1917. French politician and writer, noted as a bitter anti-Semite. He aroused public attention with a brochure, La France juive (1886), in which he violently attacked Jews and republican political leaders. His newspaper, La Libre Parole, founded in 1892, became the chief spokesman for anti-Semitism in France. He was a deputy (1898–1902) for one term.

Drumright (drum′rīt). [Former name, Fulkerson.] City in N Oklahoma, in Creek County, in a petroleum-producing area. 5,028 (1950).

Drums. Historical novel by James Boyd, published in 1925.

Drum-Taps. Collection of poems by Walt Whitman, published in 1865 and followed by the volume Sequel to Drum-Taps (1865–66). Both works were included in the 1867 edition of Leaves of Grass.

Drunken Parliament, The. Nickname of the Scottish Parliament which met in 1661.

Drury (drö′ri), Robert. Hero of Defoe's Madagascar: or, Robert Drury's Journal, during Fifteen Years Captivity on that Island, published in 1729. Most of the story is clearly fictitious, and the real Robert Drury could not have been the narrator, but Defoe, using every available oral or printed account of Madagascar, produced a book so accurate in many details that it is often cited as an authority on the island.

Drury Lane. Street in London, near the Strand, with which it communicates through Aldwych. It was one of the great arteries of the parish of Saint Clement Danes, an aristocratic part of London in the time of the Stuarts. It takes its name from Drury House, built by Sir William Drury in the time of Henry VIII, and is probably best known for the Drury Lane Theatre.

Drury Lane Theatre. One of the principal theatres of London, situated on Russell Street near Drury Lane. It was opened under Killigrew's patent in 1663, rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren and reopened in 1674, and reopened in 1794 and 1812.

Drury's Bluff. See Drewrys Bluff.

Druses (drö′zez). [Also, Druzes.] People and religious sect of Syria and Lebanon, living chiefly in the mountain regions of Lebanon and the Anti-Liban and the district of Hauran, including the formerly autonomous region of Jebel ed Druz. The only name they themselves acknowledge is Unitarians (Muahidin); the name by which they are commonly known to others comes probably from Ismail Darazi, their first apostle in Syria. Their religion, a monotheistic and messianic form of Mohammedanism, is based on the belief that al-Hakim, sixth of the Fatimid caliphs of Egypt and North Africa, who reigned from 996 to 1021 and declared his own divine nature, was the last appearance to man of the Deity. In his next incarnation, Hakim or the Deity will lead the believers to the establishment of their faith over the world. Darazi, who accepted al-Hakim's divinity, fled from Egypt to Syria, where he converted the hillmen to this belief. The Druse religion is separate and different from the orthodox Mohammedan belief and their customs are separate from those of their neighbors, whether Moslem or Christian. They have been in conflict with these neighbors since the formation of the sect, most notably with the Maronites, a Christian group, whom the Druses several times in the 19th century raided and massacred. These disorders were the pretext for French intervention in Syria in the 19th century, which culminated in the French mandate over the area after World War I. The Druses, though their regional autonomy in the Jebel ed Druz was recognized in 1921, led an uprising against the French in 1925. The Druses supported the Free French in World War II and, in the republic proclaimed in 1944, the Druses gave up their autonomy in the Jebel ed Druz to stand on equality with other Syrian nationals

Drusilla (drö.sil′ạ). d. 79 A.D. In the New Testament, a daughter of Herod Agrippa I, wife first of Azizus, king of Emesa, and then of Felix, procurator of Judea. She is mentioned in Acts, xxiv. 24.

Drusilla. Daughter of Germanicus and Agrippina, and sister and mistress of Caligula.

Drusilla. Daughter of Caligula by his wife Caesonia.

Drusilla Livia. See Livia Drusilla.

Drusius (drö′si.us), Johannes. [Dutch, Jan van den Driesche.] b. at Oudenarde, in Flanders, June 28, 1550; d. at Franeker, in Friesland, Feb. 12, 1616. Dutch Orientalist and exegete.

Drust (drůst). See under Tristan.

Drusus (drö′sus), Marcus Livius. d. probably 109 B.C. Roman politician. He was tribune of the plebs conjointly with Gaius Gracchus in 122, his election having been procured by the senate, whose members were alarmed at the democratic innovations of the latter. In collusion with the senate he opposed his veto to the bills brought forward by his colleague, and introduced instead bills of similar import, but making more extravagant concessions, which were passed by the senate. He was consul in 112, and while governor of Macedonia, which he obtained as his province, defeated the Thracian Scordisci and reached the Danube.

Drusus, Marcus Livius. d. at Rome, 91 B.C. Roman politician; son of Marcus Livius Drusus (d. 109 B.C.). He became in 91 tribune of the plebs, whose favor he won by largesses of grain and by the introduction of a bill providing for a new division of the public lands. This bill, together with another which restored to the senate the places on the juries of which it had been deprived by Gaius Gracchus, was passed by the comitiae, but declared null and void by the senate. He was assassinated as he was about to bring forward a proposal to bestow Roman citizenship on the Italians (that is to say, on the people of Italy as a whole and not simply those who lived in the city of Rome). His death gave the signal for the outbreak of the Social War.

Drusus, Nero Claudius. [Called "Drusus Senior"; surnamed Germanicus.] b. 38 B.C.; d. in Germany, 9 B.C. Roman general; brother of Tiberius. He was the son of Livia Drusilla by Tiberius Claudius Nero, and was born shortly after the marriage of his mother with the emperor Augustus. He was adopted, together with his brother Tiberius, by the emperor, and at an early age married Antonia, the daughter of Mark Antony. He subdued a revolt in Gaul in 13, and, starting in 12 from the left bank of the Rhine, undertook four campaigns in Germany proper, in the course of which he led the Roman armies to the Weser and the Elbe. He died on the way back, in consequence of a fall from his horse.

Drusus Caesar (drö′sus sē′zạr). [Called "Drusus Junior."] b. c13 B.C.; d. 23 A.D. Son of Tiberius and Vipsania. He quelled a mutiny of the legions in Pannonia in 14, was consul in 15, was appointed governor of Illyricum in 16, was consul in 21, and in 22 was invested with the tribunicia potestas, whereby he was declared heir apparent to the throne. He was poisoned by Tiberius's favorite Sejanus, who aspired to the succession.

Druzes (drō'zęz). See Druses.

Dryander (drü.än'dėr), Jonas. b. in Sweden, 1748; d. at London, Oct. 19, 1810. Swedish botanist. He catalogued (1796–1800) the library of Sir Joseph Banks. He was also librarian to the Royal Society.

Dryasdust (drī'az.dust), Rev. Dr. Prosy parson who is supposed to write the introductory letters to several of Sir Walter Scott's novels. He also writes the conclusion to Redgauntlet. The name was used by Carlyle as a synonym for dreary platitude (especially in historical writing).

Drybob (drī'bob). In Thomas Shadwell's comedy The Humorists, a fantastic coxcomb and would-be wit.

Dryburgh Abbey (drī'bur.ō). Highly picturesque ruin ab. 4 mi. SE of Melrose, Scotland, whose fragments exhibit excellent Norman and Early English architectural details. It contains the tomb of Sir Walter Scott.

Dryden (drī'dėn), John. b. at the vicarage of Aldwinkle All Saints, Northamptonshire, England, probably on Aug. 9, 1631; d. at London, May 1, 1700. English poet, critic, and dramatist. He was graduated from Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1654. In 1663 he married Lady Elizabeth Howard, the sister of his friend Sir Robert Howard, and in 1664 he achieved his first independent stage success with The Rival Ladies. Originally a Parliamentarian (he mourned Cromwell's death in 1658 with his Heroic Stanzas), he went ever to the Royalist side, writing (1660) his Panegyric on the Coronation to celebrate the coronation of Charles II. He was poet laureate and historiographer royal from 1670 to 1688. In 1679 he had a quarrel with John Wilmot, 2nd Earl of Rochester, who is believed thereupon to have caused him to be cudgeled in the street by masked bravoes. The unsettled state of public feeling created by allegations of "popish plots" (which induced him to write the series of satires of which Absalom and Achitophel was the first) brought down upon him a storm of libels. He was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1685, but his sincerity has been impugned. His critical writings, among the most distinguished in English, were numerous and on various subjects. The most famous of these are An Essay of Dramatic Poesy (1668) and the prefaces to the Virgil (1697), and the Fables (1700). He was the first to recognize fully the greatness of Shakespeare and Chaucer. He wrote many prologues, epilogues, epistles, and dedications, and after his conversion to Roman Catholicism employed his pen in defense of his faith. His chief poems are Heroic Stanzas (1659), Astraea Redux, celebrating the Restoration (1660), Annus Mirabilis (1667), Absalom and Achitophel, considered by some the greatest satire in English verse (1681; the second part with Tate, 1682), Mac Flecknoe, or a Satyr upon the True-Blew-Protestant Poet, T.S. (1682), an attack on Thomas Shadwell, Religio Laici, in defense of Anglicanism (1682), The Hind and the Panther, in defense of Roman Catholicism (1687), The Works of Virgil (1697), Alexander's Feast; or the Power of Music (1697), Fables Ancient and Modern (1700); also translations of Juvenal, Ovid, and others. His chief plays include The Indian Emperor, or, The Conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards (1665), Almanzor and Almahide, or the Conquest of Granada (1670), Aurengzebe (1675), and All for Love: or, the World well Lost (1678). Other notable plays were Marriage à la Mode (1673), Amboyna (1673), and The Spanish Friar (1681). His complete works were edited by Scott in 18 volumes (1808), and revised (1882–93) by George Saintsbury. See his biography by George Saintsbury in the "English Men of Letters" series (1881).

Dryden, John Fairfield. b. at Temple Mills, Me., Aug. 7, 1839; d. Nov. 24, 1911. American industrial insurance pioneer, cofounder of the Prudential Insurance Company. After studying industrial insurance for wage earners, he formed (1875) at Newark, N.J., the Prudential Friendly Society, the name of which was changed (1878) to The Prudential Insurance Company. He served (1902–07) as U.S. senator from New Jersey, and was the author of Addresses and Papers on Life Insurance and Other Subjects (1909).

Dryfesdale (drīfs'dāl), Jasper. In Sir Walter Scott's novel The Abbot, the revengeful old steward at Lochleven Castle, who endeavors to poison Queen Mary and her attendants.

Drygalski (drē.gäl'skē), Erich von. b. at Königsberg, in East Prussia, Feb. 9, 1865—. German explorer. He conducted an expedition to Greenland (1891–93) and was the leader of an expedition to the Antarctic (1901–03). In the latter he reached the vicinity of Kaiser Wilhelm II Land (named by him), where his ship was frozen fast in the ice (Feb. 12, 1902); here he spent a year in scientific observation. He became professor extraordinary of geography at the University of Berlin in 1899.

Dryope (drī'ō.pē). In Greek mythology, a shepherdess. She was the playmate of the Hamadryads, and was changed by them into a poplar. By Apollo she was the mother of Amphissus.

Drystan (dris'tän). See under Tristan.

Dry Tortugas (drī tôr.tō'gaz). Group of coral keys in the Gulf of Mexico included in Monroe County, Florida. A penal station was established on one of them, at Fort Jefferson, during the Civil War.

Dschagga (jäg'ä). See Chaga.

Dschurdschewo (jör'je.vô). See Giurgiu.

D.S.O. See Distinguished Service Order.

Duab (dō.äb'). See Doab.

Duacum (dū.ā'kum). Latin name of Douai.

Duala (dö.ä'lä). See also Douala.

Duala. [Also: Diwala, Douala, Dwala.] Bantu-speaking people of C Africa, living at the mouth of the Cameroon River, in the vicinity of Douala in E (French) Cameroun. In Douala they have mixed with the Ewondo, Bamileke, Basa, and other peoples. Their population is estimated at ab. 23,000 (by I. Dugat, in Inventaire ethnique du Sud-Cameroun, 1949).

Duane (dū.ān'), Alexander. b. at Malone, N.Y., Sept. 1, 1858; d. June 10, 1926. American ophthalmologist; son of James Chatham Duane (1824–97). He was the author of "Some New Tests for Insufficiencies of the Ocular Muscles," in the New York Medical Journal (1889), "Paralysis of the Superior Rectus and its Bearing on the Theory of Muscular Insufficiency," in the Archives of Ophthalmology (1884), A New Classification of Motor Anomalies of the Eye (1897); contributor to G. E. de Schweinitz and B. A. Randall's An American Text-Book of Diseases of the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat (1899), to W. C. Posey and W. G. Spiller's Eye and Nervous System (1906), and to J. E. Week's A Treatise on Diseases of the Eye (1910); translator (1892) of Ernst Fuch's Textbook of Ophthalmology.

Duane, James. b. at New York, Feb. 6, 1733; d. at Schenectady, N.Y., Feb. 1, 1797. American jurist. He was appointed (1774) to the committee of correspondence, one of the groups whose duty it was to inform and be informed about the activities of patriots in the other colonies. He served (1774–83) as member of the Continental Congress, assisting in the drafting of the Articles of Confederation. During the Revolutionary War he was one of those conservatives who opposed independence for the colonies, but his patriotism, though attacked, was real. He served as first mayor (1784–89) of New York City after the Revolution, and was first federal judge (1789–94) for the district of New York. He served in the Poughkeepsie Convention, where he advocated the ratification of the federal constitution by New York.

Duane, James Chatham. b. at Schenectady, N.Y., June 30, 1824; d. Nov. 8, 1897. American military and civil engineer; grandson of James Duane (1733–97). Graduate (1848) of U.S. Military Academy; in engineer corps, participated (1858) in Utah expedition under Johnston; during Civil War, with McClellan's Army of the Potomac, made notable contribution with his organization of engineer battalion and equipment; McClellan's chief engineer before Antietam and from 1863 to 1865; brigadier general and chief of engineers (1886–88) U.S. Army; member after 1888 of Croton Aqueduct Commission.

Duane, William. b. near Lake Champlain, N.Y., May 17, 1760; d. Nov. 24, 1835. American journalist, author, and politician, noted for his part in the early political controversies of the American Republic. He learned the printer's trade in Ireland, where he was taken in 1765, and went to India in 1787, founding the Indian World at Calcutta. His agitation against the East India Company contributed to his deportation and the confiscation of his property. After a stay in England, he settled at Philadelphia, where he joined Benjamin Franklin Bache in issuing the Aurora. Upon Bache's death (1798), Duane became editor, converting the Aurora into the leading Jeffersonian organ. His powerful and brilliant attacks led to his arrest in 1799, but he was acquitted of the charge of instigating a seditious riot by circulating petitions for the repeal of the Alien Law. Later in the same year he was indicted under the Sedition Law; however, after successive postponements, the charge was finally dismissed when Jefferson became president. His journalistic exposures sometimes brought him physical injury at the hands of his enemies. His outstanding contribution was his exposure of the Ross Election Bill, by which the Federalists hoped to prevent Jefferson's election. He edited the Aurora until 1822, and served as an adjutant general in the War of 1812. He became (c1824) prothonotary of the supreme court of Pennsylvania for the eastern district, holding the post until his death. His works include Military Dictionary (1810), An Epitome of Arts and Science (1811), Handbook for Riflemen (1813), Handbook for Infantry (1813), and A Visit to Colombia in the Years 1822 & 1823 (1826).

Duane, William. b. at Philadelphia, Feb. 17, 1872; d. at Devon, Pa., March 7, 1935. American physicist. He was an assistant (1893–95) in physics, Tyndall fellow (1895–97), assistant professor (1913–17), and professor (1917 et seq.) of biophysics at Harvard University; professor (1898–1907) of physics at the University of Colorado. After engaging (1907–12) in research at the Curie Radium Laboratory of the University of Paris, he utilized his investigations into the composition of matter and the mechanics of radiation to develop techniques and machinery for the therapeutic use of x-rays and radium, especially in the attempted cure of cancer (for which he was awarded the John Scott medal (1922), the Comstock prize (1922), and in 1923 the first Leonard prize).

Duane, William John. b. at Clonmel, Ireland, May 9, 1780; d. at Philadelphia, Sept. 26, 1865. American lawyer and politician; son of William Duane (1760–1835). Dŭane was a prominent lawyer and a leading politician at Philadelphia; he also served in the Pennsylvania legislature. He was appointed secretary of the treasury by President Jackson in 1833, but was dismissed in the same year for refusing to remove the government deposits from the Bank of the United States without authority from Congress.

Duarte (dwär'tā). Province in E Dominican Republic. Capital, San Francisco de Macorís; area, 1,090 sq. mi.; pop. 165,433 (1950).

Duarte (dū.är'te). Brave but vainglorious man in John Fletcher and Philip Massinger's Custom of the Country. Colley Cibber introduces him in a somewhat modified form in his Love Makes a Man, taken from the former play.

Dubail (dü.bây'), Auguste Yvon Edmond. b. at Belfort, France, April 15, 1851; d. at Paris, Jan. 7, 1934. French general, whose mission (1911) to Russia resulted in the French-Russian staff plans put into effect at the outbreak of World War I. He was briefly chief of the general staff (1911), was (1914–16) a leading officer of the general staff during World War I until appointed (1916) military governor of Paris, and was named (1918) grand chancellor of the Legion of Honor.

Duban (dü.bäṅ), Jacques Félix. b. at Paris, Oct. 14, 1797; d. at Bordeaux, France, Dec. 20, 1870. French architect. In 1834 he took over the construction of the École des Beaux-Arts. He restored the chateaux of Blois and Dampierre, and carried forth improvements at Fontainebleau and Chantilly. From 1848 to 1854 he was architect of the Louvre, completing the restoration of several of the galleries. He became inspector general of public buildings.

du Barry (dū bar'ī; French, dü bȧ.rē), Comtesse. [Original name, Marie Jeanne Bécu; sometimes (but incorrectly), Marie Jeanne Gomard de Vaubernier.] b. in Champagne, France, Aug. 19, 1746; guillotined at Paris, Dec. 7, 1793. Mistress of Louis XV after 1769. The illegitimate daughter of a seamstress, she went c1762 to Paris, worked in a milliner's shop, and under the name Mlle. Lange became a prostitute and mistress of Jean, Comte du Barry, a professional gambler. They soon schemed to have her placed at court and, through the king's valet de chambre, had her introduced to Louis. She became the king's mistress (her beauty and wit were remarked upon by the many famous persons who came to know her), was married to du Barry's brother Guillaume, and with this front of respectability was presented at court as the Comtesse du Barry. She exercised great influence over the king, slowly overcame his attachment to his family and advisers, and placed her own friends in power. She, through the triumvirate of the duc d'Aiguillon (reputedly her lover), René Nicolas de Maupeou, and the abbé Joseph Marie Terray, ruled the king and kingdom; the duke Étienne François de Choiseul, the leading French diplomat of the day, was dismissed through her influence; a mansion was built for her near Versailles. When the king died (1774) she was ordered to an abbey by Louis XVI, but instead she took up residence at her mansion with her lover, the count de Cossé-Brissac, after the queen interceded for her. In 1792 she made a trip to England to pawn some jewelry, and in 1793 was arrested as having conspired against the Republic, was tried before the Revolutionary Tribunal, and, still arguing her innocence of any crime, was carried off to the guillotine.

Dubawnt (dö.bônt'). River in N central Canada, in S Northwest Territories, rising NE of Lake Athabaska, and flowing generally NE through numerous large lakes to Baker Lake, at the head of Chesterfield Inlet, Hudson Bay. The lower course is in a barren tundra region. Length, ab. 580 mi.

Dubawnt Lake. Lake in Canada, in the Northwest Territories, on the border between the Mackenzie and the Keewatin districts. It is drained by the Dubawnt River and Chesterfield Inlet into Hudson Bay. Elevation, ab. 500 ft.; area, ab. 1,600 sq. mi.

Dubbhe or Dubhe (döb'e). The second-magnitude star α Ursae Majoris, the northern of the "two pointers" in the Dipper which indicate the direction of the polestar.

du Bellay (dü be.lā). See Bellay.

Dubhe (döb'e). See Dubbhe.

Dubh-linn (dův'lin). An Irish name of Dublin, Irish Republic.

Dubinsky (du.bin'ski), David. b. at Brest, in Byelorussia, Feb. 22, 1892—. As a boy he worked in his father's bakery shop, and as a member of the bakery workers' union was so active in agitation that while only 16 years of age he was banished to Siberia. Escaping, he made his way to the U.S. in 1911, became a cloak cutter, and promptly joined the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union. An able organizer, he rose through the grades of officialdom in this union to its presidency, which he has held since 1932. Leadership of the I.L.G.W.U., with its large membership and well-filled treasury, gave him importance in the American labor movement, so that he became vice-president and a member of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in 1934; but being an advocate of industrial rather than craft unionism, in 1936 he led the I.L.G.W.U. into the Committee of Industrial Organizations (later the Congress of Industrial Organizations), and in that same year helped launch the American Labor Party in New York State. In 1942, believing that the A.L.P. was too much under Communist influence, to which he has always been vigorously opposed, he became a founder and vice-chairman of the Liberal Party, which like the A.L.P. exists only in New York. In 1945 he led his union back into the A.F.L. and was elected again to that organization's executive council. A supporter of the economic and social program which in the time of President Franklin D. Roosevelt was known as the New Deal, Dubinsky in 1947 was one of the principal founders of Americans for Democratic Action, a nation-wide body dedicated on the one hand to social progress and on the other hand to opposition to Communism. From the first he supported the foreign policies of the Truman administration, including the European Recovery Plan.

Dubious Battle, In. See In Dubious Battle.

Dubis (dū'bis). Latin name of the Doubs River.

Dublin (dub'lin). City in C Georgia, county seat of Laurens County, ab. 48 mi. SE of Macon: shipping point for hardwood lumber and agricultural products. 10,232 (1950).

Dublin. [Irish, Dubh-linn, meaning "Black Pool."] Maritime county in Leinster province, in the Irish Republic. It is bounded on the NW and N by County Meath, on the E by the Irish Sea, on the S by County Wicklow, and on the W by County Kildare. The coastline is generally irregular, Dublin Bay being the principal indentation. The surface of the county is mostly flat, except in the south, where the Wicklow Mountains rise to elevations of 2,000 ft. and more. Little of the land is under cultivation, livestock raising being the principal occupation. Potatoes are the chief crop where agriculture is carried on. The city of Dublin is the administrative center of the county as well as the capital of the Irish Republic. Area, ab. 356 sq. mi.; pop. 691,428 (1951).

Dublin. [Irish: Bhaile (or Baile) Átha Cliath, also Dubh-linn, meaning "Black Pool."] City and county borough, market town, seaport, and the commercial and industrial center of the Irish Republic, whose capital it is. Dublin is in Leinster province, in County Dublin, situated on Dublin Bay, at the mouth of the river Liffey, at the confluence with the river Dodder. It is the eastern terminus of the Grand and Royal canals, which connect the port with the river Shannon. It is also the terminus of an extensive road and rail network which converges on the city from all over Ireland, and is the leading seaport of all Ireland. During the 14th century, Dublin was one of the four ports in Ireland from which export of staple goods was permitted by Edward III. Its most important modern exports consist of livestock, sent mostly to England and Wales. Other exports are ales, stout, and porter, foodstuffs, and hides and skins. Dublin has the largest imports of coal in the Irish Republic. The city has a variety of industries, clothing manufacture employing the greatest number of the population, but brewing is the largest single industry. One of the largest breweries in the world is here. Other industries include distilleries, ironworks, shipyards, and mineral water bottling-works. A flourishing silk industry was developed here during the late 18th century by French Huguenot immigrants, and the manufacture of silk poplins has survived. The city contains Dublin Castle, the University of Dublin (Trinity College), the Roman Catholic University College, the Bank of Ireland (formerly the Parliament House), the Custom House, Phoenix Park, and the Four Courts. It was probably the ancient Eblana of Ptolemy. It was seized by the Danes in the 9th century, and was taken (1171) by Richard de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, known as Strongbow. Its castle was commenced in 1205. A massacre of the English residents by the native Irish occurred on Black Monday (Easter Monday) in 1209. The city was occupied by William III in 1689 after the battle of the Boyne. It was the scene of a conspiracy by the United Irishmen in 1798, of Robert Emmet's insurrection in 1803, of the Phoenix Park political assassinations, on May 6, 1882, and of the 1916 uprising known as the Easter Rebellion. 521,322 (1951).

Dublin. [Former name, Doublin.] City in C Texas, in Erath County, NW of Austin: trading center for agricultural products and livestock. 2,761 (1950).

Dublin, University of. [Also, Trinity College.] Leading educational institution in Ireland, said to have been founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1591. The chief front, toward College Green, is ornamented with Corinthian columns and pilasters and a pediment. The extensive buildings enclose several quadrangles or "squares." The chapel has a Corinthian portico; the decorations of the fine library are also Corinthian. The campanile, which stands alone, is a circular, domed, Corinthian belvedere, surmounted by a lantern, and resting on a rusticated basement pierced by arches. It has schools of law, medicine, divinity, science, economics, music, education, engineering, and arts. The library contains some 490,000 volumes.

Dublin Bay. Inlet of the Irish Sea, in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Dublin. The city of Dublin lies at its head. Length, ab. 7 mi.; width, ab. 6 mi.

Dublin Castle. Fortification of the 13th century, in the city of Dublin, Irish Republic. It has been restored and used as an official residence.

Dubliners (dub'lin.ėrz). Collection of sketches and short stories dealing with Dublin life and character, by James Joyce, published in 1914. Among the stories are "Counterparts," "The Dead," and "Ivy-Day in the Committee Room."

Dübner (düb'nėr), Johann Friedrich. b. at Hörselgau, near Gotha, Germany, Dec. 20, 1802; d. near Paris, Dec. 13, 1867. German classical philologist and critic. He was professor at the Gymnasium (advanced secondary school) at Gotha (1826–31), and in 1832 went to Paris to take part in the editing of Henri Estienne's (known as Stephanus's) Thesaurus linguae Graecae.

Dubno (döb'nô). Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic; an important rail and road junction in a wheat and corn growing area. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Duboc (dö'bok), Julius. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Oct. 10, 1829; d. at Dresden, Germany, June 11, 1903. German philosopher and publicist. He was the author of Die Psychologie der Liebe (1874), Das Leben ohne Gott (1875), Der Optimismus als Weltanschauung (1881), and Die Lust als sozialethisches Entwicklungsprinzip (1900).

Du Bois (dö' bois, dö bois'). City in W Pennsylvania, in Clearfield County, ab. 48 mi. NW of Altoona, on Sandy Lick Creek, in a farming and coal-mining region: railroad repair shops; manufactures of metal products. It was settled in 1865. Pop. 11,497 (1950).

Dubois (dü.bwä), Antoine, Baron. b. at Gramat, Lot, France, 1756; d. at Paris, in March, 1837. French surgeon, noted as an obstetrician. He accompanied Napoleon in the Egyptian campaign. Dubois delivered Marie Louise in 1811 when she bore Napoleon II. He wrote very little but was famed for his clear explanations in his teaching.

Dubois (dö'bois, dö.bois'), Augustus Jay. b. at Newton Falls, Ohio, April 25, 1849; d. Oct. 19, 1915. American engineer. A graduate of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, he became professor of mechanical engineering there in 1877, and professor of civil engineering in 1884, holding that chair until his death. He is credited with important contributions to engineering theory, and his books, Elements of Graphical Statistics and Their Application to Framed Structures (1875), Stresses in Framed Structures (1883), and Elementary Principles of Mechanics (3 vols., 1894–95), have been widely used. In a series of papers contributed to the Century Magazine in the years 1889 through 1894, Dubois drew analogies between basic principles of morals and of mechanics. His highly original thesis, supported by his customary logic, was again expounded in The Yale Review in 1913.

Dubois (dü.bwä), Eugène. [Full name, Marie Eugène François Thomas Dubois.] b. 1858; d. 1941. Dutch anatomist and physical anthropologist. He discovered the first skeletal remains of Pithecanthropus erectus (which he named) in Java in 1891–92. The genus, sometimes called Java man, is intermediate between man and the anthropoid apes, though possibly not in a direct line of descent.

Dubois, Guillaume. b. at Brives-la-Gaillarde, Corrèze, France, Sept. 6, 1656; d. at Versailles, France, Aug. 10, 1723. French cardinal and statesman. He was councilor of state in 1715 under the regency of Philippe, Duc d'Orléans, during the minority of Louis XV, negotiated the triple alliance between England, France, and Holland in 1717, and was prime minister in 1722.

duBois (dü.bwä'), Guy Pène. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Jan. 4, 1884—. American painter, writer, and illustrator; cousin of Raoul Henri Pène du Bois. He studied under Chase, DuMond, and Henri, later exhibiting widely in the U.S. and winning many prizes. His work is represented in the Metropolitan Museum and Whitney Museum at New York, the Phillips Memorial Gallery at Washington, the Detroit Institute of Art, the Pennsylvania Academy of Art, the Toledo Museum, and many other large institutions. Among his better-known works are The Doll and the Monster, Carnival Interlude, Beach Scene, Soldier and Peasant, The Race Track, Yvonne in the Purple Coat, Waiter, People, and Along the River. He also wrote for the New York American, was an art critic for the New York Evening Post and the New Yorker, edited Arts and Decora- tion, and wrote an autobiographical volume, Artists Say the Silliest Things.

Dubois (dü.bwä), Jean Antoine. b. at St.-Ramèz, Ardèche, France, 1765; d. at Paris, Feb. 7, 1848. French missionary. He published Description of the Character . . . of the People of India (London, 1816), and Pantchatantra, ou les cinq ruses, fables de Wichnou-Sarma (1826).

Dubois (dü.bwä′, dō.bois′), John. b. at Paris, Aug. 24, 1764; d. at New York, Dec. 20, 1842. French-American bishop of the Roman Catholic Church and missionary in Maryland. He founded Mount St. Mary's College, at Emmettsburg, Md., in 1809. He was consecrated third bishop of New York in 1826.

Dubois (dü.bwä), Paul. b. July 18, 1829; d. May 23, 1905. French sculptor and painter.

Dubois, Paul Antoine. b. at Paris, Dec. 7, 1795; d. there, in December, 1871. French obstetrician; son of Antoine Dubois.

Dubois, Paul Charles. b. at La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, Nov. 28, 1848; d. at Bern, Switzerland, Nov. 4, 1918. Swiss neurologist and pioneer psychotherapist. He was a pupil of B. Naunyn and H. I. Quincke, became Privatdocent of clinical medicine (1876) at Bern and professor of neuropathology in 1902. He worked on electrotherapy and designed a Volta-galvanometer. He dedicated his later work to psychotherapy, which he put upon a definite basis in his important work Les Psychonévroses et leur traitement moral (1904), involving explanation to the patient of his condition and coöperation by the patient in the treatment. He was cofounder of the Société Suisse de Neurologie and of the Schweizer Archiv für Neurologie und Psychiatrie. Author of De l'influence de l'esprit sur le corps (1901), Die Einbildung als Krankheitsursache (1907), L'Éducation de soi-même (1908), and Pathogenese der neurasthenischen Zustände (1909).

duBois (dü.bwä′), Raoul Henri Pène. b. Nov. 29, 1912—. American painter and stage designer, most noted for his stage settings and costumes for musical comedies and extravaganzas; cousin of Guy Pène duBois. He designed costumes and scenery for Too Many Girls, DuBarry Was a Lady, Two for the Show, Billy Rose's Aquacade at the New York World's Fair (1940), and the ballet Ghost Town for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo.

Dubois (dü.bwä), Théodore. [Full name, Clément François Théodore Dubois.] b. Aug. 24, 1837; d. at Paris, June 11, 1924. French composer and teacher. He became (1877) organist at the Madeleine, succeeding Camille Saint-Saëns, and was professor (1871 et seq.) of harmony at the Paris Conservatory, of which he was also director (1896–1905). His compositions include the operas La Guzla de l'Emir (1873) and Aben Hamet (1884); among his oratorios are Le Paradis perdu (1878), and Les Sept Paroles de Christ (1867).

Du Bois (dō bois′), William Edward Burghardt. b. at Great Barrington, Mass., Feb. 23, 1868—. American educator, editor, and author. Of Negro ancestry, he received a B.A. (1890) and Ph.D. (1895) from Harvard. He was professor of economics and history at Atlanta University (1897–1910), editor of Crisis (1910–32) and Phylon Quarterly Review (1940–44), and professor of sociology (1932 et seq.) and department head (1933–44) at Atlanta. He is the author of The Suppression of the Slave Trade (1896), The Philadelphia Negro (1899), The Souls of Black Folk (1903), John Brown (1909), The Negro (1915), Darkwater (1920), Black Reconstruction (1935), Color and Democracy (1945), The World and Africa (1947), and other books; and editor of Atlanta University Studies of the Negro Problem (1897–1911) and Encyclopedia of the Negro (1933–45).

Du Bois-Reymond (dü bwä′rā.môn′), Emil. b. at Berlin, Nov. 7, 1818; d. there, Dec. 26, 1896. German physiologist; brother of P. D. G. Du Bois-Reymond. He became professor of physiology at the University of Berlin in 1855, and in 1867 was elected perpetual secretary of the Academy of Sciences at Berlin. He is best known for his researches and discoveries in animal electricity and the functions of the nerves. His works include Untersuchungen über tierische Elektrizität (1848–84), Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur allgemeinen Muskel- und Nervenphysik (1875–77), and others.

Du Bois-Reymond, Paul David Gustav. b. at Berlin, Dec. 2, 1831; d. at Tübingen, Germany, April 7, 1889. German mathematician and philosopher, known especially for his contributions to the theory of functions; brother of the physiologist Emil Du Bois-Reymond. He was educated at the University of Berlin and taught at the universities of Heidelberg, Tübingen, and Freiburg. His works include Beiträge zur Interpretation der partiellen Differentialgleichungen mit drei Variabeln (1864), Abhandlungen über die Darstellung der Functionen durch trigonometrische Reihen (1876), Die allgemeine Functionentheorie (1882), and Über die Grundlagen der Erkenntnis in den exacten Wissenschaften (1890).

du Bos (dü bos), Charles. b. at Paris, 1882; d. 1939. French literary critic. His work is largely collected in Approximations (7 vols., 1922–37) and his Journal (2 vols., 1932). He was especially successful as interpreter of English and American literature.

Dubos (dü.bos), Jean Baptiste. b. at Beauvais, France, in December, 1670; d. at Paris, March 23, 1742. French critic, historian, and diplomat. His works include Réflexions critiques sur la poésie et la peinture (1719) and Histoire critique de l'établissement de la monarchie française dans les Gaules (1734).

Dubos (dü.bos′, dü.bō′), René Jules. b. at St.-Brice, Seine-et-Oise, France, Feb. 20, 1901—. American bacteriologist, noted for his researches in internal medicine. He received a B.S. (1921) from the Institut National Agronomique, Paris, and a Ph.D. (1927) from Rutgers. He was naturalized (1938) as a U.S. citizen. He has been associated (1927 et seq.) with Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, of which he is a member (1941 et seq.). He was professor of comparative pathology and tropical medicine (1942–44) at Harvard Medical School, and discovered a method of production of a substance from certain soil bacteria that is useful in treating bacterial infections. He is the author of The Bacterial Cell (1945).

Dubosc (dü.bosk′). In The Lyons Mail (formerly Stirling's The Courier of Lyons), a brutal highwayman who murders the courier and robs the mail. His extraordinary likeness to the mild and noble-minded Lesurques causes the latter to be arrested for the crime. Henry Irving was successful in the dual part, playing both characters.

Dubossary (dö.bo.sä′ri). [Also: Dubosari, Dubossari.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 120 mi. NW of Odessa, situated on the Dniester River: long known for its wine. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Dubourg (dü.bör), Antony. A pseudonym of Lacroix, Paul.

Dubovka (dö.bôf′ka). Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Stalingrad oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Volga River, ab. 35 mi. N of Stalingrad. Wood and paper industries are important. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Dubrae (dū′brē) or Dubris (dū′bris). Latin names of Dover, England.

Dubray (dü.brā), Vital Gabriel. b. at Paris, Feb. 27, 1818; d. there, Oct. 4, 1892. French sculptor, a pupil of Ramey. His best-known works are 16 reliefs in bronze for the memorial to Joan of Arc at Orléans, and portraits of Napoleon III, Josephine, and others.

Dubrovnik (dö′brôv.nik). [French, Raguse; Italian, Ragusa.] Seaport city in SW Yugoslavia, in the southernmost strip of the federative unit of Croatia, in the former banovina (province) of Zetska and the former Austrian crownland of Dalmatia, situated on the Adriatic Sea halfway between the Peljesac peninsula and the Gulf of Kotor, ab. 38 mi. NW of the city of Kotor. Famous for its beautiful location and sunny climate, Dubrovnik has a harbor which is deep enough for large vessels. It has railroad connection with the interior of the country. The city exports mineral products, olive oil, and agricultural commodities. Massive walls of medieval fortifications, imposing towers, a cathedral, mint, and palace of the rectors were all built under Venetian influence. The city was settled in the 7th century by Slavic fugitives from Epidaurum who fled before the Avars. It was a bishopric from the 11th century on, and was long under Venetian sovereignty, but was intermittently occupied by Byzantines, Normans, and Serbs; later it was under Hungarian and Turkish rule. In the 15th century it was a flourishing maritime state allied to Venice, then a republic under Turkish sovereignty. It was occupied by the French in 1806, incorporated into Austria in 1814, and into Yugoslavia in 1918. Because of its relative independence Dubrovnik preserved the culture and literature of the Yugoslavs during the centuries of Turkish overlordship and became the seat of a literary renaissance movement in the 19th century. The city was occupied by the Italians during World War II. 16,060 (1948).

Dubs (dŭps), Jakob. b. at Affoltern, near Zurich, Switzerland, July 26, 1822; d. at Lausanne, Switzerland, Jan. 13, 1879. Swiss statesman and jurist, president of the Swiss Confederation in 1864.

Dubsky (dŭp'skē), Marie, Countess. See Ebner-Eschenbach, Marie, Baroness von.

Dubufe (dü.büf), Claude Marie. b. at Paris, c1790; d. there, April 21, 1864. French painter.

Dubufe, Édouard. b. at Paris, March 30, 1820; d. at Versailles, Aug. 11, 1883. French historical and portrait painter; son of Claude Marie Dubufe. He was a pupil of his father and of Delaroche.

Dubufe, Édouard Marie Guillaume. b. at Paris, May 16, 1853; d. May 27, 1909. French painter; son of Édouard Dubufe.

Dubuisson (dü.bwē.sôṅ), Paul Ulrich. b. at Laval, France, 1746; guillotined at Paris, March 23, 1794. French dramatist. He was a revolutionist, a follower of Hébert, whose fate he shared.

Dubuque (du.būk'). City in E Iowa, county seat of Dubuque County, on the Mississippi River: trading center for an agricultural area. Manufactures include lumber and metal products, tractors, and chemicals. Shipbuilding is also important. It is the seat of Wartburg Theological Seminary, the University of Dubuque, Loras College, Clarke College, and Saint Raphael's Cathedral. It was settled in the 1830's as a lead-mining center, and named for Julien Dubuque, who is buried nearby. 49,671 (1950).

Dubuque (du.būk'; French, dü.bük), Julien. b. at St. Pierre les Brecquets, Quebec, Jan. 10, 1762; d. March 24, 1810. First white settler of Iowa. He traveled on the western frontier, settling (1785) at Prairie du Chien, Wis. After securing (1788) from the Fox Indians the sole rights to lead mines on the Iowa side of the Mississippi River, he developed a large Indian trade north from St. Louis. Dubuque, Iowa, was named for him.

Duc (dük), Joseph Louis. b. at Paris, Oct. 25, 1802; d. Jan. 22, 1879. French architect. His chief work is the Palace of Justice at Paris.

Duca Minimo (dö'kä mē'nē.mō). Pseudonym of D'Annunzio, Gabriele.

Du Camp (dü käṅ), Maxime. b. at Paris, Feb. 8, 1822; d. there, Feb. 9, 1894. French author, journalist, traveler, and artist. He was one of the founders of the Revue de Paris (1851; suppressed in 1858), and contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes. Among his works are Souvenirs et paysages d'Orient (1848), Le Nil (1854), and Paris: ses organes, ses fonctions, sa vie (1869–75).

Du Cange (dü käṅzh) or Ducange, Sieur. [Title of Charles du Fresne or Dufresne.] b. at Amiens, France, Dec. 18, 1610; d. at Paris, Oct. 23, 1688. French philologist and historian. He was the author of Histoire de l'empire de Constantinople sous les empereurs français (1657), Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (1678), Historia Byzantina (1680), and Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae graecitatis (1688).

Ducange, Victor Henri Joseph Brahain. b. at The Hague, Netherlands, Nov. 24, 1783; d. at Paris, Oct. 15, 1833. French novelist and dramatist. His works include Agathe (1819), Valentine (1821; an attack on the Royalists which brought a six months' imprisonment), Léonide (1823), and Marc Loricot (1832). He was several times imprisoned.

Ducarel (dü.kȧ.rel'), André Coltée. b. in Normandy, France, c1713; d. at London, May 29, 1785. English antiquary. His chief work is Anglo-Norman Antiquities (1754–67).

Ducas (dū'kąs), Constantine X. See Constantine X.

Ducas, Joannes (or John) III. See John III (of the Byzantine Empire).

Ducas, Michael. fl. in the second half of the 15th century. Byzantine historian. He wrote a history of the Byzantine Empire for the period between 1341 and 1462 (first printed at Paris in 1649).

Ducas, Michael VII. See Michael VII Ducas.

Ducasse (dü.kȧs), Jean Baptiste. b. at Bern, Switzerland, c1640; d. in France, in July, 1715. French naval commander. In 1691 he was made governor of the French colony in Santo Domingo. He attacked and laid waste the English settlements in Jamaica in 1694. His own colony was ravaged by the English in 1695, and in 1697 he commanded the land forces in the expedition which sailed from Santo Domingo and took Cartagena (in Colombia). In August, 1702, he fought against the English fleet of Benbow for four days, Benbow finally retiring. He served in Spain during the War of the Spanish Succession, and commanded the naval forces in the attack on Barcelona in 1714.

Ducasse, Jean Jules Amable Roger. [Also, Jean Jules Amable Roger-Ducasse.] b. at Bordeaux, France, April 18, 1873—. French composer. He was a pupil of Fauré at the Paris Conservatory, and received the second Prix de Rome in 1902. He has written a Suite Française for orchestra, a string quartet, a set of variations for harp and orchestra, a pastoral for organ, and a number of songs and piano pieces.

Du Casse, Pierre Emmanuel Albert, Baron. b. at Bourges, France, 1813; d. at Paris, March 15, 1893. French soldier and military writer. He was placed on the general staff in 1854, and for a time was adjutant to Prince Jérôme Napoléon. He published numerous works on military affairs and on French military history.

Ducato (dō.kä'tō), Cape. See Doukato, Cape.

Duccio di Buoninsegna (dōt'chō dē bwô.nēn.sā'nyä). Sienese painter. He is first heard of in 1282, and was then a master at Siena. His famous altarpiece in the cathedral of Siena was begun in 1308, and on its completion was conveyed, like the Rucellai Madonna of Cimabue, from the workshop to the church in solemn procession to the sound of bell and drum.

Duce (dö'chā), Il. See Mussolini, Benito.

Du Chaillu (dü chȧ.yü), Paul Belloni. b. probably at Paris (although some sources claim New Orleans), July 31, 1835; d. at St. Petersburg, April 30, 1903. African explorer. The son of a French trader in the territory of Gabon, W central Africa, he made (1851) some exploratory tours in the vicinity of his father's trading establishment and became acquainted with the customs of the Mpongwe. In 1855 he came to America, which he made his home. Under the auspices of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, he undertook a four-year botanical and zoölogical exploration of the Ogowe River basin in what is now French Equatorial Africa. His accounts of the gorillas and Obongo dwarfs were contradicted by Gray and Barth, but later explorations confirmed them. In 1861 he published his Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa. In 1863 he started on a second exploration; he visited the Ngunye Falls and Ashango Land, and returned in 1865. His principal works are A Journey to Ashango Land (1867), My Apingi Kingdom (1870), The Country of the Dwarfs (1872), and The Land of the Midnight Sun (1881). This last book was the result of a several years' stay in Sweden and Lapland.

Duchamp (dü.shäṅ), Gaston. See Villon, Jacques.

Duchamp, Marcel. b. at Blainville, France, July 28, 1887—. French cubist, dadaist, and surrealist painter whose work Nude Descending a Staircase (1912) caused a sensation at the New York Armory Show of 1913; brother of Raymond Duchamp-Villon and Jacques Villon. He was one of the organizers of several groups of modern artists at both Paris and New York, including the Société Anonyme and the Society of Independent Artists. From 1916 to 1920, he was involved in the dada movement; in 1920 he gave up painting for chess, but later was associated with the surrealists. A list of his important works includes Nude Descending a Staircase, The Bride Stripped Bare by Her Bachelors, Monte Carlo Share, Young Man in a Train, The King and Queen Surrounded by Quick Nudes, and The Candy Crusher.

Duchamp-Villon (dü.shäṅ.vē.yôṅ), Raymond. b. at Damville, France, Nov. 5, 1876; d. in France, Oct. 7, 1918. French cubist painter and sculptor; brother of Marcel Duchamp and Jacques Villon. He was first strongly influenced by Auguste Rodin. In 1912, he produced his first piece of cubist sculpture, The Lovers, in which the separation of the planes, which Jacques Lipschitz further developed in his work, is clearly seen. He died in 1918 as a result of gassing during World War I. His best works are usually considered to be Song, Torso of a Man, Baudelaire, The Lovers, The Horse, and Woman Seated.

du Châtelet (dü shä.tle), Gabrielle Émilie le Tonnelier de Breteuil, Marquise. b. at Paris, Dec. 17, 1706; d. at Lunéville, France, Aug. 10, 1749. French author and scholar; mistress of Voltaire.

Duchcov (dōн'tsôf). [German, Dux.] Town in Czechoslovakia, in N Bohemia, situated at the foothills of the Krusnehory Mountains (Erzgebirge), between Teplice-Šanov and Most. It has lignite mines, glassworks, and other industries. There is a municipal museum and the former Waldstein Chateau, which contains Wallenstein souvenirs. The population, formerly predominantly German, is now entirely Czech but has declined from 13,040 (1930) to 8,229 (1947).

Duché (dö.shā'), Jacob. b. at Philadelphia, Jan. 31, 1738; d. Jan. 3, 1798. American clergyman of the Anglican Church. He was assistant rector (1759–75) of Christ Church and Saint Peter's at Philadelphia, of which he was later rector (1775–77). At first an enthusiastic supporter of the Revolutionary cause, he was made chaplain of the Continental Congress. However, he turned Loyalist (1776) and was forced to sail (1777) for England. He returned to America in 1792. He was the author of numerous published sermons, among them two patriotic sermons, The Duty of Standing Fast in Our Spiritual and Temporal Liberties (1775) and The American Vine (1777), and the letters of "Caspipina," originally in the Pennsylvania Packet, published (1774) as Observations on a Variety of Subjects, Literary, Moral and Religious, and Discourses on Various Subjects (2 vols., 1779).

Duchemin (dü.shmaṅ), René. b. 1875—. French banker and industrialist, chairman of the French employers' association before World War II. He was at various times regent of the Bank of France, a president of the Chemical Industries Group, and president of the Etablissements Kühlmann chemical concern. He held numerous directorships in railway, mining, and industrial concerns.

Duchenne (dü.shen), Guillaume Benjamin Amand. b. at Boulogne, France, Sept. 17, 1806; d. at Paris, Sept. 17, 1875. French physician, a pioneer in electro-therapy. In 1833 he began experimenting with the therapeutic use of electricity, in which thereafter he specialized. He is considered the pioneer in this field, and in the description and treatment by it of locomotor ataxia and other muscular diseases and nervous disorders.

Duchesne (dü.shen), André. b. at Île-Bouchard, in Touraine, France, 1584; d. May 30, 1640. French historian. He published numerous works, among them Historiae Normannorum scriptores antiqui (1619) and Historiae Francorum scriptores (1636–49).

Duchesne, Jean Baptiste Joseph. b. at Gisors, Eure, France, Dec. 8, 1770; d. there, March 25, 1856. French enamel and miniature painter.

Duchesne, Le Père. See Hébert, Jacques René.

Duchesne, Louis Marie Olivier. b. at St.-Servan, Brittany, France, Sept. 13, 1843; d. April 21, 1922. French Roman Catholic priest, historian, and educator. The history of the Christian church was his especial interest, and in connection with his investigations of that history in the early centuries he pursued his researches (1874–76) at Mount Athos and in Asia Minor. Following his publication in 1877 of his dissertations, De Macario magnete and Étude sur le Liber pontificalis, he was appointed to the professorship of church history at the Catholic Institute in Paris, a chair which he held for eight years, applying modern scientific critical methods to an extent previously unknown in that field, to the alarm of some of the more conservative theologians. In 1885 he became a lecturer at the École Pratique des Hautes Études, and subsequently for many years directed the French School of Archaeology at Rome, during this time also serving as president of a papal commission on the revision of the breviary. The Bulletin Critique, devoted to disseminating knowledge of historical criticism among French churchmen, was founded by Duchesne in 1880. In 1886–92 appeared his edition of the Liber pontificalis.

Duchesne, Rose Philippine. b. at Grenoble, France, Aug. 29, 1769; d. at St. Charles, Mo., Oct. 18, 1852. Roman Catholic religious, founder of the first house (in the U.S.) of the Society of the Sacred Heart. Educated by the Visitation nuns, she attempted reëstablishment, after the French Revolution, of a community near Grenoble, which she had entered. Received by Mother Barat into the Society of the Sacred Heart (1804), she came to America in 1818, settling her community first at New Orleans and then at St. Charles, Mo., whence other communities of the Society spread through the country. She was beatified in 1940.

Duchess, The. Pseudonym of Hungerford, Margaret Wolfe.

Duchess of Devonshire (dev'ọn.shir). Portrait by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The figure is shown in full length, wearing a plumed turban, and about to descend a flight of steps.

Duchess of Devonshire. Portrait by Thomas Gainsborough, stolen from Agnew's galleries, London, in 1876, and recovered in 1901. The duchess is represented standing in a garden walk, and wearing a broad-brimmed plumed hat.

Duchess of Malfi (mal'fi), The. Tragedy by John Webster, played c1613, and printed in 1623. There is a dramatic version of the story among Lope de Vega's works, and it forms the subject of one of Bandello's Novelle; Webster's direct source was the 23rd tale in William Painter's Palace of Pleasure (1566). It is Webster's most popular play, the one oftenest read, and the most original. The crime for which the duchess is reduced by her family to insanity and death is her secret marriage with her steward, whom she loved.

Duchess of Wrexe (reks), The. Novel by Hugh Walpole, published in 1914. The first volume of a trilogy, it is noted as an example of Walpole's skill in characterization; it was followed by The Green Mirror (1917) and The Captives (1920).

Duchies of Parma and Piacenza (pär'mạ; pyä.chen'tsä). See Parma, Duchy of.

Ducis (dü.sē), Jean François. b. at Versailles, France, Aug. 22, 1733; d. there, March 31, 1816. French dramatic poet, best known as an adapter of Hamlet and others of Shakespeare's plays to the French stage. One of his original works is Abufar (1795). He was elected to the French Academy in 1778, taking Voltaire's seat.

Duck (duk). River in C Tennessee, rising SE of Murfreesboro, and flowing generally W to join the Tennessee River ab. 65 mi. W of Nashville. The river is noted for fishing, and flows through a fertile agricultural valley. Length, ab. 220 mi.

Duckinfield (duk'in.fēld). See Dukinfield.

Duckworth (duk'wėrth), Sir John Thomas. b. at Leatherhead, Surrey, England, Feb. 28, 1748; d. at Devonport, England, Aug. 31, 1817. English admiral. He commanded a vessel under Lord Howe in the action with the French off Ushant, on June 1, 1794. He directed the operations which led to the surrender of the French under Rochambeau in Santo Domingo. He was promoted to vice admiral in 1804. Duckworth defeated a French squadron off Santo Domingo, on Feb. 6, 1806. In 1810 he was promoted admiral; was created a baronet in 1813; and was commander in chief at Newfoundland from 1810 to 1813.

Duclaux (dü.klō), Mary. See Darmesteter, Mary.

Duclaux, Pierre Émile. b. at Aurillac, France, June 24, 1840; d. 1904. French biochemist; second husband (married 1901) of Mary Darmesteter. He served as professor at Clermont-Ferrand, at Lyons, and at the Sorbonne, and was a member (1888 et seq.) of the French Academy of Sciences, and director (1895 et seq.) of the Pasteur Institute. Among his works are Sur l'iodure d'amidon (1872), Etudes sur la nouvelle maladie de la vigne dans le sud-est de la France (1873–75), and Ferments et maladies (1882).

Duclos (dü.klō), Charles Pinot. b. at Dinan, in Brittany, France, Feb. 12, 1704; d. at Paris, March 26, 1772. French historian and man of letters. His earliest works were romances. He also published Considérations sur les mœurs de ce siècle (1749) and Mémoires secrets des régnes de Louis XIV et de Louis XV (1791). As secretary of the French Academy he supervised the publication of the 4th edition (1762) of its celebrated dictionary.

Duclos, Jacques. b. at Louey, Hautes-Pyrénées, France, Oct. 2, 1896—. French political leader, a member of the central committee of the French Communist party since 1926. Named to the party's political bureau in 1931, he became its secretary in the same year, and was named (1936) to the Communist International and to the Communist Information Bureau in 1947. He was a deputy (1926–32, 1936–40) under the Third Republic and served under the Fourth Republic in the Constituent Assemblies (1945–46) and the National Assembly (1946). He resigned (January, 1948) the vice-presidency of the National Assembly.

Ducommun (dü.ko.mĕn), Élie. b. 1833; d. 1906. Swiss journalist, pacifist, and Nobel prize winner. Long the editor of Revue de Genève and a contributor to many leading periodicals, in 1891 he organized the International Bureau of Peace, with its headquarters at Bern, and devoted his energies and talents to the pacifist cause. In 1902 he was awarded, jointly with Charles Albert Gobat, the Nobel prize for peace.

Ducornet (dü.kôr.ne), Louis César Joseph. b. at Lille, France, Jan. 10, 1806; d. at Paris, April 27, 1856. French historical and portrait painter, a pupil of Gérard. He was born without arms, and used his feet to paint.

Du Croisy (dü krwȧ.zē). Lover in Molière's Les Précieuses Ridicules. He and La Grange, his friend, send their valets, disguised as le Marquis de Mascarille and le Vicomte de Jodelet, to make love to les précieuses, Madelon and Cathos, and teach them that fine phrases do not make a gentleman.

Ducrot (dü.krō), Auguste Alexandre. b. at Nevers, France, Feb. 24, 1817; d. at Versailles, France, Aug. 16, 1882. French general. He received command of the 1st division of the 1st army corps under MacMahon at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian War (1870), served at the battle of Wörth, and was taken prisoner at Sedan. He went to Pont-à-Mousson on parole, but fled to Paris where he took command of the second army. He made unsuccessful sorties (Sept. 19, Oct. 21, and Nov. 30–Dec. 4, 1870, Jan. 19, 1871) against the German lines around Paris. He was given command of the 8th army corps by Thiers in September, 1872, and held the post until 1878.

Ducrotay de Blainville (dü.kro.tā dę blaṅ.vēl), Henri Marie. b. at Arques, near Dieppe, France, Sept. 12, 1778; d. near Paris, May 1, 1850. French naturalist. He published Faune française (1821–30), De l'organisation des animaux (1822), and Ostéographie (1839–49).

Duddell (du.del'), William Du Bois. b. 1872; d. Nov. 4, 1917. English electrical engineer and inventor. After years of apprenticeship and research, he opened an office in London as a consulting engineer. He made important discoveries in connection with electric arcs, invented the Duddell galvanometer or oscillograph, and was a pioneer contributor to the development of radio-telegraphy. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society.

Duddon (dud'ọn). Small river in NW England, on the Cumberland-Lancashire border, flowing into the Irish Sea ab. 20 mi. NW of Lancaster. It is celebrated in the poetry of Wordsworth. Length, ab. 20 mi.

du Deffand (dü de.fäṅ), Marquise. See Deffand, Marquise du.

Dudelange (düd.läṅzh). [German, Düdelingen (dü'dę-ling.ęn).] Town in Luxembourg, situated in the "Red Earth" district, near the French border, ab. 10 mi. S of the city of Luxembourg. It is surrounded by the iron-ore mines of the "Minette," which are part of the Lorraine-Luxembourg field, and has metallurgical and other industries and blast furnaces. 12,680 (1945).

Duden (dö'dęn), Konrad. b. at Wesel, Germany, Jan. 3, 1829; d. at Sonnenberg, Germany, Jan. 8, 1911. German lexicographer. In accordance with a resolution adopted at a joint meeting of the major German, Austrian, and Swiss printers' associations at Konstanz in 1902, he compiled Rechtschreibung der Buchdruckereien deutscher Sprache (1903), designed to unify German orthography. It was followed by Orthographisches Wörterbuch der deutschen Sprache, whose eighth edition (1905) was combined with the second edition of the "Buchdrucker-Duden" (1907) as Rechtschreibung der deutschen Sprache und der Fremdwörter (1915; known as Duden's ninth edition). The tenth edition (1929) adopted the title Der grosse Duden. In the course of time Duden's orthography was adopted as standard (partly by legislation, partly through usage) in all German-speaking states and countries. Duden's name became a household word and has been used for other reference works (a grammar, also a picture dictionary with parallel French, English, and Spanish volumes), all published by the Bibliographisches Institut at Leipzig.

Dudeney (död'ni), Mrs. Henry. [Maiden name, Alice Whiffin.] b. Oct. 21, 1866; d. 1945. English popular novelist. Some of her many novels are A Man with a Maid (1897), The Maternity of Harriott Wicken and Folly Corner (both 1899), Spindle and Plough (1903), The Story of Susan (1903), The Wise Woods (1905), The Orchard Thief (1907), Married When Suited (1911), Set to Partners (1913), The Secret Son (1915), Traveller's Samples (1916), and The Head of the Family (1917).

Duderstadt (dö'dĕr.shtät). Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated on the Hahle River, ab. 14 mi. E of Göttingen. Manufactures include electrical and precision instruments, machine tools, paper, toys, artificial wool, and cigars. It is the center of a fertile agricultural district. The Gothic Church of Saint Cyriacus, built in the 14th century, the monumental Rathaus (town hall), dating from the 15th and 16th centuries, remains of old fortifications, and numerous gabled houses contribute to preserve a medieval architectural character. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. The town belonged to the ecclesiastical territories of Quedlinburg and Mainz until 1802, became part of Westphalia in 1808, of Hanover in 1816, and of Prussia in 1866. The town suffered no damage during World War II. 11,511 (1950).

Dudevant (düd.väṅ), Baroness Amadine Aurore Lucie Dupin. See Sand, George.

Dudevant, Maurice. See Sand, Maurice.

Dudley (dud'li). County borough, market town, and manufacturing center in W England, in Worcestershire, ab. 8 mi. NW of Birmingham, ab. 120 mi. NW of London by rail. It has manufactures of hardware. Dudley was formerly a mining center for a high grade of coal, but the reserves have been exhausted. The ruins of Dudley Castle are nearby. 62,536 (1951).

Dudley. Town in S Massachusetts, in Worcester County, near the border of Connecticut. 5,261 (1950).

Dudley, Ambrose. [Title, Earl of Warwick.] b. in England, c1528; d. at Bloomsbury, London, Feb. 20, 1590. English soldier; son of John Dudley (c1502–53). He was convicted of treason for support (1553) of Lady Jane Grey (his sister-in-law), but was pardoned (1554). Under Mary Tudor he led English troops in support of the Spaniards at the siege of St.-Quentin (1557). He was sent by Elizabeth to help the Protestants at Le Havre (1562), and forced to expel the French there because of a plot on his life (1563). When he was besieged by the French he was ordered by Elizabeth to capitulate. He was a privy councilor (1573), and participated in the trial of Mary, Queen of Scots (1586).

Dudley, Benjamin Winslow. b. in Spottsylvania County, Va., April 12, 1785; d. at Lexington, Ky., Jan. 20, 1870. American surgeon, especially noted as a lithotomist.

Dudley, Charles Benjamin. b. at Oxford, N.Y., July 14, 1842; d. Dec. 21, 1909. American chemist, employed (1875–1909) by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. His researches were a contributory factor in persuading the officials of that railroad to buy materials by specifications, thus materially increasing both safety and efficiency of operation.

Dudley, Charles Edward. b. at Johnson Hall, Staffordshire, England, May 23, 1780; d. at Albany, N.Y., Jan. 23, 1841. American politician, U.S. senator from New York from 1829 to 1833. Dudley Observatory at Albany was founded by his widow.

Dudley, Edmund. b. c1462; executed at London, Aug. 18, 1510. English politician. He was educated at Oxford and at Gray's Inn, is said to have been made a privy councilor at 23, and was chosen speaker of the House of Commons in 1504. He was employed as a fiscal agent by Henry VII, and incurred popular odium by the rigor with which he enforced the extortionate claims of the crown. On the death of Henry VII in 1509, he was beheaded on the charge of treason, in company with Sir Richard Empson, another of Henry VII's fiscal agents.

Dudley, Lord Guildford. Executed at London, Feb. 12, 1554. English nobleman; son of John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, and brother of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. He married Lady Jane Grey on May 21, 1553. He was implicated in his father's ill-starred attempt to place Lady Jane on the throne on the death of Edward VI (July 6, 1553), and was executed on the charge of treason.

Dudley, Irving Bedell. b. Nov. 30, 1861; d. Nov. 27, 1911. American diplomat. He was ambassador to Brazil (1906–11) and minister to Peru (1897–1906).

Dudley, John. [Titles: Duke of Northumberland, Earl of Warwick, Viscount Lisle.] b. c1502; beheaded Aug. 22, 1553. English politician and soldier; son of Edmund Dudley, and father of Robert Dudley, 1st Earl of Leicester. He was made Viscount Lisle, warden of the Scottish marches, and great admiral by Henry VIII in 1542, and was created Earl of Warwick and high chamberlain of England on the accession of Edward VI in 1547. He was regent jointly with Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, but permitted Somerset, who had great influence with the new king, to be named protector without opposing him. He was instrumental in defeating the Scots at Pinkie (1547) but worked against Somerset until in 1549 he overthrew Somerset, and assumed the chief control of the government. His policies were much less popular than Somerset's and, when in 1551 a movement to bring Somerset back was begun in Parliament, he had Somerset arrested, tried, and executed (1552). He was created Duke of Northumberland in 1551. With the object in view of transferring the crown from the Tudors to his own family, he persuaded Edward VI to grant letters patent excluding Edward's sisters, Mary and Elizabeth, from the succession and appointing Edward's cousin, Lady Jane Grey, heir presumptive to the crown, whereupon he married (1553) Lady Jane to his son, Guildford Dudley. At the death (1553) of Edward, he found himself unable to prevent the accession of Mary, and was executed for treason.

Dudley, Joseph. b. at Roxbury, Mass., Sept. 23, 1647; d. there, April 2, 1720. American politician. He took part in the battle with the Narragansetts (King Philip's War) in 1675. He was one of the commissioners for the united colonies of New England (1677–81), and was appointed president of New England in 1686 until Sir Edmund Andros's arrival. He was appointed chief justice of the colonial supreme court in 1687, was chief justice of New York (1690–93), and governor of Massachusetts (1702–15).

Dudley, Paul. b. Sept. 3, 1675; d. at Roxbury, Mass., Jan. 25, 1751. American jurist; son of Joseph Dudley. He graduated at Harvard in 1690, and studied law at the Temple in London. He was made chief justice of Massachusetts in 1745. He is known chiefly as the founder of the Dudleian Lecture on religion at Harvard College, for which he bequeathed 100 pounds. He published several papers on New England natural history in the London Royal Society's Transactions.

Dudley, Plimmon Henry. b. at Freedom, Ohio, May 21, 1843; d. Feb. 25, 1924. American civil engineer, consulting engineer on rails, tires, and structural steel of the New York Central lines from 1880. He invented the dynagraph (telling of conditions in a railroad car in motion), the track-indicator, and the stremmatograph (giving stresses in the rails as a train passes), and designed the first 5-inch and 6-inch steel rails used in the U.S.

Dudley, Robert. [Title, Earl of Leicester.] b. June 24, 1532; d. at Cornbury, Oxfordshire, England, Sept. 4, 1588. English courtier, politician, and general; son of John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, and brother of Guildford Dudley. He participated in the attempt of his father and brother to place Lady Jane Grey on the throne at the death of Edward VI in 1553, and was in consequence sentenced to death on the charge of treason in 1554, but was pardoned later in the same year. On the accession in 1558 of Elizabeth, whose affections he had gained during the ascendancy of his father at the court of Edward VI, he became her chief favorite, and intrigued, though unsuccessfully, to obtain the consent of the great nobles to a marriage, in the interest of which project he was said to have procured the murder of his wife Lady Amy (Amy Robsart) in 1560. He was created Earl of Leicester in 1564, presumably in order to facilitate his marriage to Mary, Queen of Scots, but she married Lord Darnley in 1565 and the projected scheme came to nothing. In 1575 he entertained Queen Elizabeth with great magnificence at Kenilworth, which had been given to him by Elizabeth some years earlier. In 1576 Walter Devereux, 1st Earl of Essex, died in Ireland, according to rumor poisoned at Leicester's instigation, and in 1578 Leicester married Lettice (born Lettice Knollys), Essex's widow. This marriage, unlike an earlier liaison with Lady Douglas Sheffield, came to Elizabeth's notice; her displeasure almost resulted in his going to the Tower. In 1585 he was appointed to the command of the English army sent to the aid of the States-General against the Spaniards. He was made governor of the provinces in revolt; this, however, exceeded the authority granted him by Elizabeth and he was forced to apologize to her. After a defeat at Sluys and as a result of disagreements with the States-General, he was recalled in 1587. He was, however, restored to favor on his return, and in 1588 was appointed lieutenant and captain general of the queen's armies and companies to resist the expected Spanish invasion. He died suddenly soon after the routing of the Spanish Armada. Leicester was a patron of the arts and especially of the drama; the Earl of Leicester's company of players were licensed by the queen to play at London in 1574; this was the company that later included the Burbages and Shakespeare and for which the first London theater, the Theatre, was built in 1576.

Dudley, Samuel William. b. at New Haven, Conn., Oct. 18, 1879—. American mechanical engineer. He received a Ph.B. (1900) and an M.E. (1903) from Yale. He was associated (1905–21) with the Westinghouse Air Brake Company. He has served as professor of mechanical engineering (1921 et seq.), department head (1923–46), and dean (1936 et seq.) at the Yale School of Engineering.

Dudley, Thomas. b. at Northampton, England, 1576; d. at Roxbury, Mass., July 31, 1653. Colonial politician; father of Joseph Dudley. He came to Massachusetts as deputy governor to John Winthrop in 1630. He was four times governor (1634–35, 1640–41, 1645–46, 1650–51), and deputy governor 13 times. He was a strict Puritan and clashed several times with Winthrop and often with other leaders of the colony who had, he felt, left the path of orthodoxy.

Dudley, William Russel. b. at Guilford, Conn., March 1, 1849; d. at Los Altos, Calif., June 4, 1911. American botanist, assistant professor at Cornell University (1876–92) and professor at Stanford University (1892–1908). He published works on local botany, A Manual of Histology (1894, with M. B. Thomas), and others.

Dudley Diamond. Diamond found in Africa in 1868, and bought from Nie Kirk, the master of the man who found it, by Hunt and Roskell for 12,000 pounds. The earl of Dudley bought it from them for 30,000 pounds. It is heart-shaped, extremely brilliant, and weighs 44½ carats cut; originally it weighed 88½ carats.

Dudone (dō.dō'nā). [English, Dudon.] Knight in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

Dudu (dō.dō'). In Byron's Don Juan, a pensive beauty of 17.

Dudweiler (dōt'vī.lėr). Town in the Saar territory, formerly Saarland, Germany, situated on the Sulzbach, a tributary of the Saar River, ab. 4 mi. NE of Saarbrücken. It belongs to the metropolitan area of Saarbrücken, and has coal mines, iron foundries, and manufactures of mining cars and machinery. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic, with a large Protestant minority. Prior to 1919 Dudweiler belonged to the Rhine Province, Prussia. 24,601 (1939).

Duel after the Masquerade. Painting by Jean Léon Gérôme, in the Walters Art Gallery at Baltimore. The duelists and their seconds have come direct from a masked ball; one, dressed as a clown, has been severely wounded, and his adversary, an Indian, hurries away, attended by a harlequin, to his carriage.

Duellist, The. Comedy by William Kenrick, produced in 1773. Three editions were printed in the same year.

Duellists, The. Play by Douglas Jerrold, written in 1818. It was rechristened More Frightened than Hurt, was played at the Sadler's Wells Theatre (April 30, 1821), was afterward translated into French, played in Paris, retranslated by Kenney, and played at the Olympic as Fighting by Proxy. It contained much sparkling dialogue and a good plot of the low-comedy kind.

Duenna (dū.en'ą), The. Comedy interspersed with songs, a musical mélange, though sometimes called an opera, by Richard Brinsley Sheridan, produced c1775. The plot was taken from Wycherley's comedy The Country Wife. Linley, Sheridan's father-in-law, wrote the music for the songs. It was acted 75 times in one season.

Duer (dū'ėr), John. b. at Albany, N.Y., Oct. 7, 1782; d. on Staten Island, N.Y., Aug. 8, 1858. American jurist; son of William Duer (1747–99). He published Law of Representations in Marine Insurance (1845), Law and Practice of Marine Insurance (1845–46), and Duer's Reports.

Duer, William. b. in Devonshire, England, March 18, 1747; d. May 7, 1799. American Revolutionary patriot, merchant, and financier. After service with the British army, he went to the West Indies to manage his portion of the plantations inherited from his father; while visiting New York in 1768, he made several investments, including the purchase of a large timber holding near Saratoga, N.Y., on which he set up sawmills. After returning to England in 1773, he settled in New York state. He was (1775) a delegate to the Provincial Congress, a delegate (1776) to the New York constitutional convention, and a member (1776) of the Committee of Public Safety. He served (1777–79) as a New York delegate to the Continental Congress, and was a member of the Board of War and a signer of the Articles of Confederation. His influence was instrumental in causing the failure of the Conway Cabal's plan to remove Washington from his command. He was (1777–86) the first judge of common pleas of Charlotte (now Washington) County, N.Y., played a large part in founding (1784) the Bank of New York, and was appointed (1786) secretary to the Board of the Treasury. He became (1786) a member of the New York Assembly and was (1789–90) assistant secretary of the U.S. Treasury. Involved in land and other speculations, he was imprisoned for debt in 1792 and died in prison.

Duer, William Alexander. b. at New York, Sept. 8, 1780; d. May 30, 1858. American jurist, president of Columbia College (1829–42); son of William Duer (1747–99) and brother of John Duer. He wrote Constitutional Jurisprudence of the United States (1856), and others.

Duero (dwā'rō), Marqués de. Title of Concha, Manuel de la.

Duero. Spanish name of the Douro.

Duesenberg (dū'zen.bėrg), Frederick S. b. at Lippe, Germany, c1877; d. at Johnstown, Pa., July 26, 1932. American racing driver and automobile manufacturer. He arrived in the U.S. at the age of eight. He won Indianapolis racing prizes with an automobile equipped with a patented (1913) rotary valve motor. He organized (c1917) Duesenberg Motors Corp.

Duessa (dū.es'ą). Loathsome old woman, in Spenser's Faerie Queene, who under the guise of Fidessa, a young and beautiful woman, typifies the falsehood and treachery of the Church of Rome. She also represents Mary, Queen of Scots, as the type of Catholic hostility to Elizabeth. She deceives and nearly ruins the Red Cross Knight; but all her ignominy and loathsomeness are laid bare by Arthur, who is sent by Una to the rescue. She is taken from Ariosto's Alcina, and the scene where the "false Duessa" is stripped of her disguise is literally translated from the Orlando Furioso.

Dufaure (dü.fōr), Jules Armand Stanislas. b. at Saujon, Charente-Maritime, France, Dec. 4, 1798; d. at Paris, June 28, 1881. French statesman. He was minister of the interior (Oct. 13–Dec. 20, 1848; June 2–Oct. 31, 1849); minister of justice (Feb. 19, 1871–May 24, 1873; March 11, 1875–Aug. 12, 1876); and premier (March 9–Dec. 2, 1876; Sept. 14, 1877–Feb. 1, 1879).

Dufay (dü.fā), Guillaume. b. at Hainault, Belgium, c1400; d. at Cambrai, France, Nov. 27, 1474. Flemish composer and contrapuntist, originator of improvements in musical notation, such as the use of white notes.

Duff (duf), Alexander. b. at Moulin, Perthshire, Scotland, April 25, 1806; d. at Edinburgh, Feb. 12, 1878. Scottish missionary in India, belonging to the Church of Scotland, later to the Free Church. He wrote India and India Missions (1839), and other works.

Duff, Douglas Ainslie Grant. See Ainslie, Douglas.

Duff, Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant. See Grant Duff, Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone.

Duff Cooper (kö'pėr, kùp'ėr), Alfred. See Cooper, Alfred Duff.

Duff Cooper, Lady Diana. See Cooper, Lady Diana Duff.

Duffel (duf'ęl). Town in N Belgium, in the province of Antwerp, situated on the Nèthe River, ab. 10 mi. SE of Antwerp. It became known originally for its manufacture of coarse woolen cloth called "duffel," and now has distilleries and metallurgical and paper factories. 12,003 (1947).

Dufferin (duf'ėr.in), Countess of. A title of Sheridan, Lady Helen Selina.

Dufferin and Ava (ä'vą), 1st Marquis of. See Blackwood, Frederick Temple Hamilton-Temple.

Duff-Gordon (duf'gôr'dọn), Lady Lucie (or Lucy). [Maiden name, Austin.] b. at Westminster, London, June 24, 1821; d. at Cairo, Egypt, July 14, 1869. English writer, best known as a translator from the German (Niebuhr, Von Ranke, and Sybel). She resided in Egypt from 1862. She married Sir Alexander Duff-Gordon in 1840.

Duffy (duf'i), Sir Charles Gavan. b. at Monaghan, Ireland, April 12, 1816; d. at Nice, France, Feb. 9, 1903. Irish journalist, historian, editor, and poet, political leader in Ireland and Australia. He began his career as a journalist at 17, writing for the Northern Herald and the Vindicator, Belfast papers, and for the Dublin Morning Register, and later was one of the founders (1842), with John Dillon and Thomas Davis, of the Nation, a Dublin weekly which became the organ of the Young Ireland party. He was one of the leaders of the movement to popularize Irish letters; he published the series "The Library of Ireland," shilling books of Irish poetry and the like; in 1891 he was chosen first president of the Irish Literary Society. He was associated politically with Daniel O'Connell but broke with O'Connell over the latter's moderation. After serving in Parliament (1852–55) for New Ross and failing in his aim to gain some unity on the land problem, he left Ireland for Australia, where he was elected to the Victoria parliament. He was minister of land and works (1857, 1862), prime minister of Victoria (1871–73), and speaker of the house (1877–80). He returned to Europe in 1880, spending the rest of his life in southern France. He was the author of Young Ireland (1880–83), A Bird's-Eye View of Irish History (1882), The League of North and South: An Episode in Irish History (1886), Thomas Davis: An Irish Patriot (1890), A Fair Constitution for Ireland and Conversations With Carlyle (both 1892), Revival of Irish Literature (1894), and Short Life of Thomas Davis (1895), My Life in Two Hemispheres (1898), autobiography, and Lays of the Red Branch (1901). He edited the anthology The Ballad Poetry of Ireland (1845).

Duffy, Francis Patrick. b. at Cobourg, Ontario, Canada, May 2, 1871; d. June 26, 1932. Roman Catholic priest. One of 11 children in a family where poverty made hard work the rule, his sickliness saved him from labor in a mill or factory and permitted him to study for the priesthood. He completed his studies after coming to the U.S., and was ordained in 1896. Two years later he was assigned as chaplain of the "Fighting 69th" regiment of the New York National Guard, then mobilizing for service in the Spanish-American War. In the pest-ridden camp at Montauk Point, Long Island, he contracted typhoid fever. After intervening years of parochial service, Duffy again accompanied the 69th when it was called into national service along the Mexican border in 1916. When the U.S. entered World War I, the 69th became the 165th regiment, a unit of the Rainbow Division, and Francis Patrick Duffy, accompanying it to the fronts, not only earned the Distinguished Service Cross, the cross of the Legion of Honor, the Croix de Guerre and other medals, but the affection of countless soldiers, the esteem of chaplains of other faiths, and nation-wide fame. In 1920 he was appointed pastor of Holy Cross Parish in the Times Square neighborhood of New York City, where he served until his death. In 1921, at the silver jubilee of his ordination, he was presented with a purse of $25,000 raised by a committee which included President Harding, Governor Miller of New York, General Pershing, Cardinal Hayes, and many leading citizens. A statue of Duffy, unveiled in 1937, on which occasion President Roosevelt wrote of him as "a great Samaritan, a great Catholic, a great soldier," stands in Times Square, New York.

Dufour (dü.fôr), Guillaume Henri. b. at Konstanz, Baden (now in Germany), Sept. 15, 1787; d. at Contamines, near Geneva, Switzerland, July 14, 1875. Swiss general, cartographer, and military writer. He suppressed (1847) the Sonderbund insurrection, and superintended preparation of a topographical map of Switzerland (published 1842–65). He wrote Mémoires sur l'artillerie des anciens et sur celle du moyen âge (1840), and others.

Dufour, Jean Marie Léon. b. at St.-Sever, Landes, France, 1782; d. there, April 18, 1865. French entomologist.

Dufour, Pierre. A pseudonym of Lacroix, Paul.

Dufourspitze (dü.fôr'shpit"sę). Highest peak of Monte Rosa, in the Alps on the Swiss-Italian border.

Dufoy (dü.foi'). Impertinent French servant in Etherege's comedy The Comical Revenge, or Love in a Tub. He is the subject of the comical revenge, being fastened in a wooden tub with holes for the head and arms by some women, as a punishment for his boasting and railing against their sex.

Dufrénoy (dü.frā.nwȧ), Ours Pierre Armand Petit. b. at Sevran, Seine-et-Oise, France, Sept. 5, 1792; d. at Paris, March 20, 1857. French mineralogist and geologist. He was the collaborator of Élie de Beaumont in the preparation of a general geological map of France (published 1841), and author of various geological monographs.

du Fresne or Dufresne (dü fren), Charles. See Du Cange or Ducange, Sieur.

Dufresne, Charles George. b. at Millemont, France, Nov. 23, 1876—. French cubist painter, water-colorist, and engraver, who was also associated with Guillaume Appollinaire's movement, called orphism. He educated himself, and did not start to paint until he was 30; before then, he had been employed by an engraver and medallist. He has exhibited at the salons of the Société Nationale from 1910, and the Salon des Indépendants. He spent two years (1910–12) at Algiers, and since then his work has had an exotic flavor. He has designed stage settings and costumes also, including those for Antar. Other works are The Card Party, Pastorale, The Temptation of Saint Anthony (water colors), The Dream, Still Life, Hunter and Odalisque, The Blue Corsage, The Repose, Scene of Colonial Life, and Hunting Scene.

Dufresnoy (dü.fre.nwȧ), Charles Alphonse. b. at Paris, 1611; d. at Villiers-le-Bel, near Paris, 1665. French painter and poet, author of a Latin poem De arte graphica (1668).

Dufresny (dü.fre.nē), Charles Rivière. b. at Paris, 1654; d. there, Oct. 6, 1724. French dramatist; descendant of "La Belle Jardinière," a mistress of Henry IV. He wrote a number of comedies, some of them in collaboration with Regnard.

Dufy (dü.fē), Jean. b. at Le Havre, France, March 12, 1888—. French painter and water-colorist, whose works have been strongly influenced by those of his brother, Raoul. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts at Le Havre. His work is very decorative and whimsical, and he has painted many circus scenes, jazz scenes, flowers, and seascapes. A list of his better-known paintings includes At the Circus, At the Bal Tabarin, Clowns, Port of Le Havre, Landscape, Flowers and Fruits, House in the Flowers, and Boats at Le Havre.

Dufy, Raoul. b. at Le Havre, France, June 3, 1877; d. near Avignon, France, March 23, 1953. French painter, lithographer, and decorator, considered by many to have been among the most original and fresh of contemporary artists. With a great economy of line and simplification of representation, he painted sweeping, motion-filled, decorative scenes. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts, and first began to paint academic works. Soon he changed his style and painted many lively, brilliantly colored scenes of the races, views of Le Havre, and Trouville. His illustrations for Guillaume Apollinaire's Bestiaire (1911) were his first successes. Later he did illustrations for many other books, including Apollinaire's Poet Assassinated and Mallarmé's Madrigals. He also executed many lithographs in color, including a series entitled The Sea. Among his best-known works are The Sea at Le Havre, Trouville, Races at Ascot, Boulevard at Nice, Regatta at Le Havre, The Park at St.-Cloud, Panorama of Paris, Antibes, and Nude with Raised Arms.

Du Gard (dü gȧr), Roger Martin. See Martin du Gard, Roger.

Dugdale (dug'dāl), Richard Louis. b. at Paris, 1841; d. 1883. American sociologist. Brought to this country by his English parents in 1851, at an early age he developed an interest in social work, which at that time was far from well organized or well financed. In 1874 the New York Prison Association employed him to report on conditions in a number of county jails, and he came upon the data showing that in certain of these institutions a large percentage of the inmates, year by year, were members of a certain family, to which he gave the fictitious name of Juke. In one of the Prison Association reports (1875) his observations and deductions were published under the title, The Jukes: a Study in Crime, Pauperism, Disease, and Heredity. This was issued in book form together with Further Studies of Criminals (1877). The depressing facts revealed by Dugdale, together with his theory of inherited familial degeneracy, made worse and perpetuated by close inbreeding, aroused exceptionally wide interest, but his conclusions, in the main, are no longer accepted. The discovery in 1911 of his original manuscript, which revealed the real name of the "Juke" family, enabled a later sociologist to report on the family's record 40 years later, under the title, The Jukes in 1915. From 1868 Dugdale was a member of the executive committee of the New York Prison Association, and in 1880 he became the first secretary of the Society for Political Education. He was active in many sociological and civic groups and movements.

Dugdale, Sir William. b. at Shustoke, Warwickshire, England, Sept. 12, 1605; d. there, Feb. 10, 1686. English antiquary. He wrote Monasticon Anglicanum (1655–73), Antiquities of Warwickshire (1656), History of St. Paul's Cathedral (1658), Baronage of England (1675–76), and others.

Duggan (dug'ạn), Eileen May. b. at Tua Marina, Marlborough, New Zealand —. New Zealand poet. Her works include New Zealand Bird Songs (1929), Poems (1937), and New Zealand Poems (1940).

Duggar (dug'ạr), Benjamin Minge. b. at Gallion, Ala., 1872—. American botanist. He was graduated (Ph.D., 1898) from Cornell, studied in Italy, Germany, and France, was research professor of plant physiology (1912–27) at the Missouri Botanical Garden and Washington University, and served (1927–43) as professor of physiology and economic botany at the University of Wisconsin. As consultant (1944) in mycological research and production to the Lederle Laboratories, Inc., he developed aureomycin. Among his works are Fungous Diseases of Plants (1909), Plant Physiology (1911), and Mushroom Growing (1915).

Dugi Otok (dö'gē ô'tôk). [Also: Dugi; full name, Ostrvo (= island) Dugi Otok; Italian, Isola Lunga (or Grossa).] Island in W Yugoslavia, in the federative unit of Croatia, ab. 10 mi. W of Zadar: fisheries, vineyards, and olive culture. Pop. ab. 4,000.

Dugmore (dug'mōr), Arthur Radclyffe. b. 1870—. English naturalist and animal photographer and painter. He has exhibited his big-game paintings in England and the U.S. He is the author of such books as Bird Homes (1900), Nature and the Camera (1902), Camera Adventures in the African Wilds (1910), and Through the Sudan (1938).

Duguay-Trouin (dü.gā.trö.aṅ), René. b. at St.-Malo, France, June 10, 1673; d. at Paris, Sept. 27, 1736. French naval officer and general. From 1691 to 1697 he commanded a privateer, and in the latter year entered the French navy. Among his noted deeds were the capture of an English convoy in 1707, and the capture and sack of Rio de Janeiro (September, 1711). He subsequently served with the army, attaining the rank of lieutenant general.

Dugué (dü.gā), Charles Oscar. b. at New Orleans, May 1, 1821; d. at Paris, Aug. 29, 1872. American Creole poet. He was the author of Philosophie morale (1847), Essais poétiques (1847), Mila ou la mort de La Salle (1852), and Le Cygne ou Mingo (1852). His best-known poem Home, appeared in 1872.

Du Guesclin or Duguesclin (dü.ge.klaṅ), Bertrand. b. near Rennes, in Brittany, France, c1320; d. at Châteauneuf-de-Randon, in Languedoc, France, July 13, 1380. French military commander, constable of France, distinguished in the campaigns against the English and Pedro el Cruel (Peter the Cruel of Castile and León). After having made a soldier's reputation for himself in tournaments and in fighting for Charles de Blois, he helped in the defense of Rennes, besieged (1356–57) by Henry of Lancaster. He was captured at Melun in 1359 by Sir Robert Knollys, but covered himself with glory. At Cocherel in 1364 he beat the forces of Navarre and captured Jean de Grailly, the Captal de Buch, Navarre's most famous soldier. At Auray the same year, Charles de Blois was killed and Du Guesclin was captured by Sir John Chandos. He was ransomed for 100,000 crowns, since his aid, as France's leading soldier, was necessary to preserve internal order. The Treaty of Bretigny (1360) had brought a temporary pause in the Hundred Years' War and bands of discharged soldiers, the so-called free companies, were pillaging the country. Du Guesclin organized them into an army and took them into Spain to fight for Henry of Trastamara (later Henry II of Castile) against Pedro el Cruel, but after success in 1366, he was defeated by Edward, the Black Prince of England, Pedro's ally, at Navarrete. He was again ransomed and in the battle of Montiel (1369) defeated Pedro and put Henry on the throne. Under Charles V of France he fought (1370–79) in the campaigns to clean the English out of southern and western France, winning for the French throne Poitou, Guienne, Auvergne, and Brittany. He died in a campaign to suppress disorders in Languedoc.

Duhalde (dö.äl'dā), Alfredo. b. at Río Bueno, Chile, 1898—. Chilean politician and agriculturist, leader of the Radical Party. He was national deputy (1924–30), ambassador (1939) to Peru, minister of national defense (1940, 1942), vice-president (1944–46) of Chile, acting president (Jan. 17–June 27, 1946), and president (June 27–Oct. 17, 1946).

Du Halde (dü åld), Jean Baptiste. b. at Paris, Feb. 1, 1674; d. there, Aug. 18, 1743. French Jesuit and geographer. He was the author of Description géographique . . . de la Chine et de la Tartarie chinoise (1735).

Duhamel (dü.ȧ.mel), Georges. b. at Paris, June 30, 1844—. French poet, novelist, dramatist, and physician. Early a member (1906–07) of the Abbaye group of poets he emerged as a dramatist with La Lumière (1911; Eng. trans., The Light, 1914) and Dans l'ombre des statues (1912; Eng. trans., In the Shadow of Statues, 1914); turned to fiction with Vie des Martyrs (1917; Eng. trans., The New Book of Martyrs, 1918) and Civilisation (1918; Eng. trans., 1919). Since World War I most of his effort has been expended on two cyclical novels, Le Cycle de Salavin (4 vols., 1920–32; Eng. trans., Salavin, 1936 et seq.) and La Chronique des Pasquier (10 vols., 1937–41; Eng. trans., The Pasquier Chronicles, 1937 et seq.). He has been a member of the French Academy since 1938.

Duhamel, Jean Marie Constant. b. at St.-Malo, France, Feb. 5, 1797; d. at Paris, April 29, 1872. French mathematician, author of Cours d'analyse (1840–41), Cours de mécanique (1845), and Des méthodes dans les sciences du raisonnement (1866–72).

Duhamel du Monceau (dü.ȧ.mel dü môṅ.sō), Henri Louis. b. at Paris, 1700; d. there, Aug. 12, 1781. French authority on botany and agriculture. He wrote De la physique des arbres (1758).

Duhm (dōm), Bernhard. b. at Bingum, Germany, Oct. 10, 1847; d. at Basel, Switzerland, Aug. 31, 1928. German Protestant theologian. He was known for his Biblical criticism. He was the author of Das Geheimnis in der Religion (1896), Das kommende Reich Gottes (1910), Israels Propheten (1916), and Die Psalmen (1922).

Duhr (dör). The third-magnitude star δ Leonis, on the rump of the animal. It is sometimes also called Zosma and Zubra.

Dühring (dü'ring), Eugen Karl. b. at Berlin, Jan. 12, 1833; d. in Germany, Sept. 21, 1921. German political economist and philosophical writer, a disciple of Henry C. Carey. He published Kritische Geschichte der Nationalökonomie und des Sozialismus (1871), and others.

Duhring (dūr'ing), Louis Adolphus. b. at Philadelphia, Dec. 23, 1845; d. May 8, 1913. American dermatologist. Receiving his medical degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1866, he went to Vienna and took up the special study of dermatology. Returning to Philadelphia, he established in 1870 the Dispensary for Skin Diseases, with which he remained connected until 1890. In 1871 he began lecturing on skin ailments at the University of Pennsylvania, and for many years he was consulting dermatologist at the Philadelphia Hospital. Before his time little attention had been paid to skin troubles by the American medical profession. The disease dermatitis herpetiform is sometimes called "Duhring's Disease," he having been the first to demonstrate its true character. He was the author of Atlas of Skin Diseases (1876), Practical Treatise on Diseases of the Skin (1877), and Cutaneous Medicine (1895–98).

Duhshasana (dö.shä'sạ.nạ). In Hindu legend, one of the hundred sons of Dhritarashtra. When the Pandavas lost their wife Draupadi in gambling with Duryodhana, Duhshasana dragged her by the hair and otherwise ill-used her; for this Bhima vowed he would drink his blood, a vow performed on the 16th day of the great battle between the Pandavas and the Kauravas.

Duida (dwē'ᴛʜä). [Spanish, Cerro Duida.] Precipitous mountain in S Venezuela, near the Orinoco River. Elevation, ab. 8,500 ft.

Duilius (dū.il'i.us), Gaius (or Caius). fl. in the 3rd century B.C. Roman general, consul in 260 B.C. He defeated the Carthaginians near Mylae (modern Milazzo), on the N coast of Sicily, in 260. This was the first naval success gained by Rome. Duilius, a land officer placed in charge of the fleet by necessity, decided to fight the naval engagement as a land battle, and by using grappling hooks and boarding planks, won his battle.

Duinkerken (doin'ker.kẹn), Anton Van. [Pseudonym of W. J. M. A. Asselbergs.] b. 1903—. Dutch author, journalist, and professor, notable as a leader in the Roman Catholic literary movement and for his studies on Roman Catholic poetry in the Netherlands in former times. His works on modern problems of art and society include Hedendaagsche ketterijen (Present Heresies, 1929), Katholiek Verzet (Catholic Resistance, 1932), and Verscheurde Christenheid (Christianity, 1937). His poetry includes Hart van Brabant (Heart of Brabant, 1937).

Duisberg (düs'berk), Carl. b. at Barman, Germany, Sept. 29, 1861; d. at Leverkusen, Germany, March 19, 1935. German industrialist. He joined the Bayer chemical firm in 1884, and in 1900 became a member of its executive board; organized the I. G. Farben chemical trust, becoming its chairman in 1925; chairman of the National Association of German Industry.

Duisburg-Hamborn (düs'bürk.häm'bôrn; Anglicized, döz'bėrg.ham'bôrn). [Also, Duisburg.] City in W Germany, in the Land (state of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated at the junction of the Rhine and Ruhr rivers, ab. 15 mi. N of Düsseldorf. It includes a number of formerly independent towns, such as Ruhrort, Meiderich, Neudorf, and Laar. Duisburg and Hamborn were combined in 1929. It is the largest river port of Europe, consisting of numerous separate harbor-basins, with repair and loading facilities, warehouses, and railroad connections. The Netherlands seaports, notably Rotterdam, are reached via the Rhine River, the German North Sea ports via the Rhine-Herne Canal, which connects with the Dortmund-Ems Canal. The chief export is the coal of the Ruhr basin; the chief imports are iron ore, lumber, grain, and petroleum. The city has large industrial enterprises including blast furnaces, iron foundries, rolling mills, zinc and copper mills, shipyards, construction works, machine, tool, and boiler factories, chemical, tar, soap, and oil industries, petroleum refineries, gasworks, cotton spinning and weaving mills, shoe, paper, and tobacco manufactures, sugar refineries, flour mills, breweries, and distilleries. There are a number of educational institutions, among which are nautical, commercial, industrial, and mining schools. The city was occupied by Belgian troops in the period 1921–25. During World War II it was frequently bombed (1943–45), with intense damage to town, port areas, and industries. The churches also suffered some damage. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic, with a large Protestant minority; the decline in the period 1939–46 was 21.4 percent. 356,408 (1946), 410,783 (1950).

Duitschland (doits'länt). Dutch name of Germany.

Duiveland (doi'vẹ.länt). Island, properly the E part of the island of Schouwen, in the province of Zealand, Netherlands.

Dujardin (dü.zhàr.dañ), Édouard Émile Louis. b. at St.-Gervais, France, Nov. 10, 1861—. French poet, dramatist, and critic. He is the author of various studies of Mallarmé, Laforgue, James Joyce, and others. His novel Les Lauriers sont coupés (1887) is sometimes regarded as an early example of the stream-of-consciousness technique in fiction.

Dujardin, Félix. b. at Tours, France, April 5, 1801; d. at Rennes, France, April 8, 1860. French naturalist, professor (1839 et seq.) at Rennes. He is best known for his investigations on the Infusoria.

Dujardin, Karel. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, c1625; d. at Venice, Nov. 20, 1678. Dutch painter and etcher, particularly known for his landscapes.

Dukas (dü.kȧ), Paul. b. at Paris, Oct. 1, 1865; d. 1935. French music critic and composer. He was a pupil at the Paris Conservatory, winning the second Prix de Rome. His works include the opera Ariane et Barbe Bleue, with text by Maeterlinck (1907), a symphony (1897), a piano sonata (1901), overtures, and the symphonic poem The Sorcerer's Apprentice (1897).

Duke (dūk), Benjamin Newton. b. near Durham, N.C., April 27, 1855; d. at New York, Jan. 8, 1929. American businessman and philanthropist, notable (with his brother James Buchanan Duke) as a pioneer in the manufacturing and marketing of cigarettes in the U.S. A director (1890 et seq.) of the American Tobacco Company, he engaged also in banking, railroading, real estate, cotton manufacturing, and development of hydroelectric power. His personal fortune is estimated to have reached 60 million dollars. Gifts totaling more than two million dollars were given (1898 et seq.) to Trinity College (now Duke University) following the college's decision (1892) to move to Durham, N.C., in accordance with Duke's wish.

Duke, James Buchanan. b. near Durham, N.C., Dec. 23, 1856; d. Oct. 10, 1925. American tobacco magnate and civic benefactor. Together with his brother, Benjamin Newton Duke, he began as an itinerant vendor of packaged tobacco in North Carolina; at the age of 18 he became a member of W. Duke and Sons, which in 1881 began making cigarettes, subsequently manufactured with vastly increased efficiency by the Bonsack machine which he helped improve. He made his start towards his fortune by halving the price of a package of cigarettes two months before a lowered government impost became effective. In 1884 he established a branch factory at New York, embarking on an advertising program and expanding his trade; by 1889 half the U.S. output of cigarettes came from his machines. In 1890, as the result of a merger, he became president of the American Tobacco Company, which soon consolidated with other companies turning out a variety of tobacco products. In the field of plug tobacco, he became (1898) president of the Continental Tobacco Company, helped form (1900) the American Snuff Company, the American Cigar Company in 1901, and went into retail operations with the United Cigar Stores Company. The Consolidated Tobacco Company, organized in 1901, was later dissolved and the chief properties reorganized as the American Tobacco Company, which in turn was ordered by a U.S. Supreme Court decree (1911) to be dissolved. At about this time his properties comprised 150 factories representing a capitalization of 502 million dollars. In 1905 the Southern Power Company was organized with his aid. In 1924 he set up a trust fund, of which the chief portion was used to aid Duke University.

Duke Humphrey's Walk (hum'friz). See Paul's Walk.

Duke Jones (jōnz). Novel by Ethel Sidgwick, published in 1914. It is a sequel to her novel A Lady of Leisure (1914).

Duke of Exeter's Daughter (ek'sẹ.tėrz). Name given to the rack which the Duke of Exeter introduced as an engine of torture in the Tower of London in 1447.

Duke of Guise (gēz), The. Tragedy by Dryden and Lee, published in 1682. It was an attack on Shaftesbury and Monmouth. In The Vindication, by Dryden alone, he did what he could to excuse himself.

Duke of Milan (mi.lan'), The. Tragedy by Philip Massinger, produced in 1623. It is a variation of the theme of Shakespeare's Othello. The duke is a passionate, weak man, without Othello's noble traits.

Duke of Stockbridge (stok'brij), The. Novel by Edward Bellamy, published as a serial in 1879 and completed after his death. It is based on the events of Shays's Rebellion.

Duke of York Island (yôrk). Mountainous island in Antarctica, lying in the S part of Robertson Bay and along the N coast of Victoria Land, in ab. 71°37′ S., 170°03′ E. It was first charted in 1899 by the British Antarctic Expedition (1898–1900), under the command of C. E. Borchgrevink.

Duke of York Islands. [Former German name, Neu-Lauenburg.] Group of islands in the Australian mandated territory of New Guinea, in St. Georges Channel ab. 20 mi. E of Rabaul, New Britain. There are eight inhabited islands, with numerous coastal villages, coconut plantations, and Methodist missions. Before World War I the islands were a German colony. Area, ab. 23 sq. mi.

Dukes (dūks), Ashley. b. at Bridgewater, Somersetshire, England, May 29, 1885—. English dramatist and theater manager. He has been drama critic (1900–14, 1919–25) on various publications, director (1933 et seq.) of the Mercury Theatre, and supervisor (1945 et seq.) of theatrical productions in the British zone of Germany. His plays include One More River (1927), Matchmaker's Arms (1930), and translations and adaptations of Jew Süss (1929), The Dumb Wife of Cheapside (1929) from Rabelais, and Mandragola (1939) from Macchiavelli; author also of Modern Dramatists (1911), The Youngest Drama (1923), and Drama (1926).

Dukesborough Tales (dūks'bur''ō). Sketches of Georgia provincial life by Richard Malcolm Johnston, published in 1871 as a revision of his Georgia Scenes (1864). They were issued under the pseudonym Philemon Perch.

Duke Sebastian (sẹ.bas'chạn). Central character in The Edwardians (1930), a novel of English life and character in the period of Edward VII, by V. Sackville-West.

Duke's Mistress, The. Play by James Shirley, produced in 1636.

Duke's Motto, The. Adaptation of Paul Féval's play Le Bossu, by John Brougham, produced in 1863.

Duke's Theatre. London theater which was built in 1660. It was destroyed in 1666 in the great fire, and rebuilt in 1671 by Sir Christopher Wren. It stood until 1720, and was on the site of the Salisbury Court Theatre.

Duketown (dūk'toun). See under Calabar.

Dukhobors (dö'kō.bôrz). [Also: Doukhobors; original Russian, Dukhobortsy, meaning "spirit wrestlers."] Religious sect originating among the Russian peasantry. The movement may have begun as early as the closing years of the 17th century, but attracted little attention until about the middle of the 18th, when it became widespread in the Dnieper region. The sect's rejection of both church and state brought persecution, but in 1801 its members were permitted to settle near the Sea of Azov, where they flourished until disorders in the colony and their resistance to military conscription led to their removal to a barren region of Transcaucasia. Here again they built up a flourishing agricultural settlement, but in 1895 their active opposition to war and militarism led to their forcible dispersal and to the exile of their leader Peter Veregin to Siberia. It seems to have been about this time that Orthodox Christians began to apply to them, contemptuously, the name they are now generally known by, though their own name for themselves, in English, means "Christians of the Universal Brotherhood." Count Tolstoy, whose pacifist principles agreed with theirs and may have been in part derived from them, took up their cause and aroused in other countries an agitation against their persecution, with the result that in 1898 the Russian government permitted them to emigrate. Most of them in the following year settled in the province of Manitoba, Canada. They acquired land not as individuals but as communities, and their agricultural industry and skill again made a wilderness to yield abundance. They developed, however, a tendency toward sudden fanaticisms. Thus a few years after settling in Canada they decided that all use of animals and animal products was sinful; they turned their cattle loose and took the place of their horses in drawing the plow and hauling their produce to market; they refused to pay taxes and resisted arrest by going nude. A rumor spreading among them that Jesus would appear at Winnipeg, 300 miles from their nearest village, thousands of them set out for that city in October, 1902, afoot in sub-zero weather, and had to be rounded up by the police and forcibly sent home. Peter Veregin, who had been detained in Siberia when his followers first migrated, was eventually allowed to go to Canada, but the Dukhobor settlements, while they continued to prosper, also continued to be frequently disturbed, and in 1924 Veregin was assassinated. His son, also Peter Veregin, came from Russia to assume leadership, and under his guidance more stable conditions were brought about. At his death in 1939 he left a document advising the Dukhobors to give up communal living, to obey the law, but to hold to their faith. Though probably more than one-third of their potential membership has drifted away, there are still upward of 10,000 of the sect in Canada. The essence of their creed is that God dwells within every man, and since, therefore, everyone's acts are guided by God, neither church nor rulers are needed; writing and reading are superfluous; the Bible has no authority; marriage is a matter which needs neither sanction nor ceremony; Christ was only a man without sin, and other men without sin who may follow Him are His equals in authority.

Dukinfield (duk'in.fēld). [Also, Duckinfield.] Municipal borough and manufacturing town in W England, in Cheshire, situated on the river Tame ab. 7 mi. E of Manchester, ab. 184 mi. NW of London by rail. It is a cotton-spinning center. 18,445 (1951).

Dulac (dü.lák'), Edmund. b. at Toulouse, France, Oct. 22, 1882—. English portraitist, designer, caricaturist, and decorator, who designed the coronation stamp (1937), and the cameo portrait stamp of King George VI, as well as other stamps and bank notes.

Dulaim (dö.līm'). Liwa (province) in W Iraq, bordered by Syria, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia: a very dry desert area. Most of the population live in trading towns or are migratory herders. The province is crossed by two oil pipe lines. Capital, Dulaim; area, 17,488 sq. mi.; pop. 193,294 (1947).

Dulany (dụ.lā'ni), Daniel. b. in Queen's County (now County Laoighis), Ireland, 1685; d. at Annapolis, Md., Dec. 5, 1753. Lawyer and politician in colonial America. He was a representative (1722 et seq.) from Annapolis in the Maryland legislative assembly, judge of the admiralty (1734 et seq.), and a member (1742–53) of the governor's council. He championed codification in English statute of rights guaranteed in Maryland charter with his pamphlet The Rights of the Inhabitants of Maryland to the Benefit of the English Laws (1728).

Dulany, Daniel. b. at Annapolis, Md., June 28, 1722; d. at Baltimore, March 17, 1797. American lawyer and politician; son of Daniel Dulany (1685–1753). He was a member (1751 et seq.) of the Maryland legislative assembly, and secretary of the province (1761–74). An upholder of the "No Taxation without Representation" plea after the passage of the Stamp Act, he wrote a pamphlet entitled Considerations on the Propriety of Imposing Taxes in the British Colonies, for the Purpose of raising a Revenue, by Act of Parliament (1765). Always in opposition to radical factions, however, he soon lost popularity when he refused to support the American Revolution.

Dulaure (dü.lōr), Jacques Antoine. b. at Clermont-Ferrand, France, Sept. 3, 1755; d. at Paris, Aug. 19, 1835. French archaeologist and historical writer, a member of the National Convention. He was the author of Histoire civile, physique et morale de Paris (1821–22).

Dulcamara (döl.kä.mä'rä), Doctor. Charlatan (bass) in Donizetti's opera L'Elisir d'Amore.

Dulce (dol'sā). [Spanish, Río Dulce.] River in NW Argentina which rises in the province of Tucumán, becomes salty, and is finally lost in the salt marshes of Lake Porongos. In its lower course it is called the Saladillo.

Dulce, Gulf of. [Spanish, Golfo Dulce.] Arm of the Pacific Ocean, off the SW coast of Costa Rica.

Dulce Gulf. See Izabal, Lake.

Dulce y Garay (döl'thā ē gä.rī'), Domingo. [Title, Marquis of Castell-Florit.] b. at Sotés, Logroño, Spain, May 7, 1808; d. at Amélie-les-Bains, France, in December, 1869. Spanish general and administrator. He took part in the Carlist war, and aided the revolution of 1854, being then captain-general of Catalonia. From December, 1862, to May, 1866, he was captain-general of Cuba, and distinguished himself by his activity in suppressing the slave trade. He was again captain-general of Cuba in June, 1869, but the success of the insurrection and his ill health forced him to resign.

Dulcigno (döl.chē'nyō). Italian name of Ulcinj.

Dulcinea del Toboso (dul.sin'ē.ạ del tō.bō'zō; Spanish, döl.thē.nā'ä del tō.bō'sō). Lady beloved by Don Quixote in Cervantes's romance. Her real name was Aldonza Lorenzo, but Don Quixote was of the opinion that Dulcinea was more uncommon and romantic (from the Spanish dulce, meaning "sweet"); and, as she was born at Toboso, he made her a great lady on the spot with the del.

Dulcy (dul'si). Play (1921) by Marc Connelly and George S. Kaufman. Dulcy, a stupid woman with good intentions, voluntarily lends her aid toward furthering one of her husband's business deals. Despite her mistakes, the negotiations end successfully, and Dulcy is credited with the acumen she totally lacks. The original for Dulcy, who is the central character of this satirical comedy, appeared originally in "The Conning Tower," when this newspaper column was still being written by Franklin Pierce Adams (F.P.A.).

Dulheggia (dul.hej'ạ). See Dhu-l-Hijja.

Dulkaada (dul.kä'dạ). See Dhu-l-Kada.

Dülken (dül'kẹn). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated near the Dutch border, ab. 20 mi. NW of Düsseldorf. It has linen, cotton, and silk textile industries (specializing in velvets, ribbons, and sewing thread), and also metallurgical industries and a sugar refinery. In World War II the town was occupied by Allied troops in March, 1945. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 18,842 (1950).

Dulles (dul'ẹs), John Foster. b. at Washington, D.C., Feb. 25, 1888—. American lawyer and U.S. secretary of state (1953 et seq.) under President Dwight D. Eisenhower. He practiced (1911 et seq.) law at New York. In 1918–19 he was American commission counsel at the peace negotiations following World War I, and served (1919) on the reparations commission and the supreme economic council. He was U.S. representative (1933) at the Berlin debt conferences, a member of the U.S. delegation at the San Francisco conference on world organization (1945), and a member of the Moscow meeting (1947) of the foreign ministers' council. After serving as U.S. senator from New York for a short period (1949), he was chosen (1950) delegate to the U.N. Assembly. He was adviser to the State Department (1950–52), resigning in the campaign year so that he might be free to criticize U.S. foreign policy. He is the author of War, Peace and Change, and War or Peace (1950).

Dullin (dü.laṅ), Charles. b. at Yonne, Savoie, France, May 12, 1885; d. at Paris, Dec. 11, 1949. French actor and director. He began his theatrical career as Smerdiakov in Jacques Copeau's production (1911) of The Brothers Karamazov, was associated with Copeau at the experimental Vieux Colombier theater (1913–19), opened his own Atelier theater in 1921 with great success, and afterward figured as one of the four foremost directors in France.

Dulong (dü.lôṅ), Pierre Louis. b. at Rouen, France, Feb. 12, 1785; d. at Paris, July 19, 1838. French physicist and chemist, professor of physics (1820 et seq.) at the École Polytechnique at Paris and permanent secretary (1832 et seq.) of the Academy of Sciences. With A. T. Petit he announced (1819) the law (Dulong and Petit's law) that the product of the specific heat of an element in the solid state multiplied by its atomic weight is approximately constant for all elements.

Duluth (du.löth'). City and lake port in E Minnesota, county seat of St. Louis County, on Lake Superior at the mouth of the St. Louis River: third largest city of Minnesota, and twin city of Superior, Wis. Duluth is the leading Great Lakes port, shipping iron ore, wheat, coal, lumber, and other products; it is also a railroad center and has manufactures of iron and steel. 104,511 (1950).

Duluth or Du Lhut (dü.lüt), Daniel Greysolon, Sieur. b. in France, 1636; d. near Lake Superior, 1709. French pioneer in America, for whom Duluth, Minn., is named. He came to Canada c1672, and became a trader and a leader of bushrangers. He established the sites of Detroit and Fort William, helped in the Canadian war against the Senecas (1687), and against the Iroquois (1689). He commanded Fort Frontenac in 1695.

Dulwich (dul'ij). District in SE London, in the County of London, in Camberwell metropolitan borough, ab. 4 mi. SE of London Bridge station, London. It is the seat of Dulwich College, founded by Edward Alleyn and opened in 1619. The college contains a noted picture gallery.

Duma (dö'mä). [Also: Wadoma, Waduma.] Subgroup of the Bantu-speaking Shona of SE Africa, inhabiting SE Southern Rhodesia.

Dumaguete (dö.mä.gā'tā). Town in the Philippine Islands, the capital of Negros Oriental province, on Negros island. It is situated on the E coast, near the S entrance to the Strait of Tañon. 9,366 (1948).

Dumain (dū.mān'). French lord in attendance on the King of Navarre, in Shakespeare's Love's Labor's Lost.

Dumanoir (dü.mȧ.nwȧr), Philippe François Pinel. b. in Guadeloupe, West Indies, July 31, 1806; d. at Pau, France, Nov. 16, 1865. French playwright, noted particularly as a writer of sketches for vaudeville.

Dumaran (dö.mä.rän'). Island in Palawan province, in the Philippine Islands. It is situated E of the N part of Palawan island, from which it is separated by Dumaran Channel. It is high and well wooded. Area, 125 sq. mi.; pop. 2,409 (1939).

Dumarchey (dü.mȧr.shā), Pierre. Original name of Mac Orlan, Pierre.

Dumarsais (dü.mȧr.se), César Chesneau. [Also, Du Marsais.] b. at Marseilles, France, July 17, 1676; d. at Paris, June 11, 1756. French grammarian and writer on philosophy, author of Traité des tropes.

Dumas (dö'mas). Town in SE Arkansas, in Desha County, ab. 75 mi. SE of Little Rock, in a cotton-producing area. 2,512 (1950).

Dumas. City in NW Texas, county seat of Moore County, ab. 48 mi. by road N of Amarillo, on the high plains of NW Texas. It was first a cattle center, then developed wheat agriculture, and has recently become an industrial center with the discovery of large oil and gas fields. There are carbon black plants, a helium plant, a zinc smelter, and an oil refinery. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 2,117 (1940), 6,127 (1950).

Dumas (dü.mȧ), Alexandre. [Original name, Alexandre Davy de la Pailleterie.] b. at Jérémie, Haiti, March 25, 1762; d. at Villers-Cotterets, Aisne, France, Feb. 26, 1806. French general; son of Marquis Alexandre Davy de la Pailleterie and a Negress; father of Alexandre Dumas (1802–70). He was distinguished in the wars of the Revolution and of the Directory, and was called by Napoleon "the Horatius Cocles of the Tyrol." He commanded the French cavalry in the Egyptian expedition.

Dumas, Alexandre (dü.mȧ; Anglicized, dö'mä, dö.mä'). [Called Dumas père (per).] b. at Villers-Cotterets, Aisne, France, July 24, 1802; d. in his son's home, at Puys, near Dieppe, France, Dec. 5, 1870. French novelist and dramatist. His full name, now never used, is Alexandre Dumas-Davy de la Pailleterie. He is generally called Dumas père in order to distinguish him from his son, Dumas fils. Dumas was educated by a priest and became a clerk in the office of a local lawyer, later working as a law clerk at Crépy. In 1822 or 1823 he went to Paris, where he met the great French actor Talma, and where, through the aid of General Foy, he was taken into the service of the duke of Orléans. At about this time he began to write dramatic pieces with his Swedish friend Adolphe de Leuven. In 1823 he began an affair with Marie Catherine Labay, a French dressmaker, by whom he had a son, Alexandre, who was to become almost as famous as himself. In 1825 he wrote an Elegy on the Death of General Foy. He made his first success as a romantic dramatist with Henry III and His Court, which was produced at the Comédie Française on Feb. 11, 1829. It won him the friendship of Hugo, whose Hernani was hailed as a triumph of romanticism a year later, of de Vigny, and a promotion from the duke of Orléans, who made him librarian of the Palais Royal. At the Odéon in March, 1830, he duplicated the success of Henry III with Christine, a poetic play in five acts, with a prologue and an epilogue. The year 1831 saw the production of three more plays, Napoleon Bonaparte (at the Odéon on Jan. 10), Antony (at the Porte St.-Martin, May 3), a psychological drama whose Byronic hero is largely a self-portrait, and, at the same theater, Richard Darlington (Dec. 10), suggested by Scott's Chronicles of the Canongate. It is also the year in which Dumas admitted his paternity and acknowledged his son. In 1832 Dumas left Paris for political reasons. In 1840 he married Ida Ferrier, an actress; however, they did not live long together, the wife going to Italy shortly after the marriage. In February, 1847, he opened his own theater, the Historique, which he had founded for the production of his own plays, with a dramatization of his novel Queen Margot. In 1851 he was at Brussels, and in 1853, back at Paris, he was publishing Le Mousquetaire, a daily newspaper devoted to art and literature. Written almost entirely by Dumas, it contained his Memoirs, and lasted until 1857, when it became a weekly, the Monte-Cristo, that lived for three years. In 1858 he was in Russia, and in 1860 in Sicily with Garibaldi. He lived at Naples for four years and then returned to Paris. In 1868 his daughter, Madame Petel, came to live with and take care of him. Dumas was a terrific worker and he turned out a staggering amount of work, so much that it was not physically possible for all of it to be the product of one man working alone. He was aided by a group of authors, who gathered material for him under his direction, wrote it up according to his own plans, given to them in outline form, and he then supervised their work, revised it, and largely rewrote it in its final form. It is also believed that some novels bearing his name on the title page are the work of other hands. Dumas's novels are: The Chevalier d'Harmenthal and its sequel, The Regent's Daughter (1843, 1845), dealing with France in 1718–19, and Louis XV, Cardinal d'Alberoni, the duke of Orléans (the regent), and his daughter, Mademoiselle de Chartres, among the leading characters; Ascanio (1844), dealing with Paris and Fontainebleau in 1540, with Cellini and Francis I dominating the story. One of his best-known and most popular works is The Count of Monte Cristo (1844–45), the story of a brave sailor, Edmond Dantes, and of his friends and enemies. A period of 40 years (1625–65) is covered in the trilogy The Three Musketeers, Twenty Years After, and The Vicomte de Bragelonne (1844, 1845, 1848–50, the last in 26 vols.); 18th-century France, in the period 1770–93, is covered in a series of five romances, Memoirs of a Physician (1846–48), The Queen's Necklace dealing with one of the most famous affairs in French history, The Taking of the Bastille (1852, Ange Pitou in French), The Countess of Charny (1853–55, in 19 vols.), and Le Chevalier de Maison Rouge (1846). Some of the characters who walk through the pages of this quintet are Louis XV, du Barry, Swedenborg, John Paul Jones, Voltaire, Rousseau, Diderot, Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, Lafayette, Mesmer, Robespierre, Marat, Madame de Staël, Rouget de Lisle, Thomas Paine, Guillotin (of the beheading machine), Napoleon, as a second lieutenant, Necker, Cagliostro, and Danton. Marguerite de Valois (1845) begins with the Saint Bartholomew Massacre and ends with the death of Charles IX and the crowning of Henry III. Agénor de Mauleon (1846) is a picture of Spain and France in the second half of the 14th century, with Don Pedro (called "the Cruel," king of Castile and León), Queen Blanche, Charles V of France, Edward, the Black Prince, and Pope Urban V as characters. Chicot the Jester (1846, La Dame de Monsoreau) and The Forty Five Guardsmen (1848, also The Forty Five, Les Quarante-cinq in French) are connected stories dealing with Henri III, Catherine de Médicis, Henry of Navarre, and Cardinal de Lorraine. The Black Tulip (1850), set in 17th-century Holland, tells the story of the horrible murder of the de Witt brothers, John and Cornelius. Olympe de Clèves (1852) is a picture of court life in the 18th century and the story of a beautiful actress. The Companions of Jehu (1857) shows us Napoleon as first consul, Josephine, his brothers Lucien and Joseph, Fouché, and the Chouan leader Georges Cadoudal. The She-Wolves of Machecoul (1859) has a 19th-century setting, the time being the period 1832–43, the theme the attempted Vendean rebellion of the duchess of Berry, and some of the characters Louis XVIII, Louis Philippe, and La Rochejacquelein. The Neapolitan Lovers and Love and Liberty (both 1864) deal with Naples and Sicily in 1798–99, and center around the career of Luisa San Felice, heroine of the Neapolitan Revolution. Nelson, King Ferdinand, Cardinal Ruffo, Sir William Hamilton, and his wife and Nelson's mistress Emma Hamilton are some of the historical characters. The Whites and the Blues (1868), with France at the end of the 18th century, shows us Napoleon,Madame de Staël, Madame Recamier, Constant, Talleyrand, Fouché, Murat, and Junot. The Two Dianas (1846–47) deals with France in the reigns of Henry II and Francis II, whose deathbed scene is described. Other characters are Diane de Poitiers, Catherine de Médicis, Mary Stuart (Mary, Queen of Scots), Marguerite de Valois, Queen Mary of England, Charles IX, and Philip II of Spain. Its sequel is The Page of the Duke of Savoy (1855), in which many of the same characters appear, as well as the duke of Guise, Coligny, Cardinal de Lorraine, and Cardinal Pole. Among those who are known to have helped Dumas, in lesser or greater degree, are Auguste Maquet, Paul Lacroix (who had many pseudonyms), Paul Bocage, J. P. Mallefille, and Pier Angelo Fiorentino, who, with Maquet, assisted him in writing Monte Cristo. All of The Two Dianas is believed to be the work of François Paul Meurice, although his name is not on the title page. In addition to his novelistic output, huge even with all allowances made for as much aid as he may have received, Dumas wrote Louis XIV and his Century (4 vols., 1845) and his interesting Memoirs (20 vols., 1852–54). His complete works were published at Paris (1860–64) in 277 volumes. Two English authors who knew how to tell a story, Thackeray and Stevenson, were Dumas enthusiasts and found reading his romances a pleasure that was not spoiled by repetition.

Dumas, Alexandre. [Called Dumas fils (fēs).] b. at Paris, July 27, 1824; d. there, Nov. 27, 1895. French dramatist, novelist, social reformer, and member of the French Academy, to which he was elected on Jan. 30, 1874; son of Alexandre Dumas (1802–70). He is usually referred to as Dumas fils to distinguish him from his father. The little formal schooling he had was made unhappy by the cruel insults and the callous jokes of his school fellows about his illegitimate birth, and, as his later writings show, it left wounds that never healed. As a poet he wrote La Chronique (1842) and Péchés de jeunesse (1847), and as an essayist, Tue-la, Monsieur Alphonse (1874), La Question du divorce (1880), and La Recherche de la paternité (1883), but it is not as a poet or a writer of essays on moral topics that he is remembered. Like his father, he wrote plays and novels, but, unlike his father, he is remembered chiefly for one play, La Dame aux camélias, whereas the name of the elder Dumas calls to mind half a dozen novels. His dramas include Le Demi-Monde (1855), a comedy of manners, La Question d'argent (1857), a "stock exchange" play, as its title suggests, Le Fils naturel (1858), and Le Père prodigue (1859), the very names of which are suggestive, one referring to his own condition, and the other to his father's mode of life. L'Ami des femmes (1864), Une Visite de noces, and La Princesse Georges (both 1871) are problem plays. He again uses the stage as a platform for the discussion of social and moral issues in Les Idées de Madame Aubray (1867), in which he develops the thesis that the seducer is morally bound to marry his victim, in La Femme de Claude (1873), which defends the right of the husband to slay a wife who has violated her marriage vows, and in L'Étrangère (1876), in which the husband is the wrongdoer. With six of the leading French actors (Coquelin, Got, and Mounet-Sully, Sarah Bernhardt, Sophie Croizette, and Madeleine Brohan) in the latter play, its success was assured. Other plays that came from his pen are La Princesse de Bagdad (1881), Denise (1885), and Francillon (1887). As a patriotic Frenchman, alive to the suffering and the weakness of his country, he wrote Nouvelle lettre de Junius (1870) and two Lettres sur les choses du jour (1872). His novels are Césarine (1848), Le Docteur Servan, Antonine, and Tristan le Roux (all 1849), Henri de Navarre and Trois hommes forts (both 1850), L'Affaire Clémenceau, mémoire de l'accusé (1866), in which he anticipates the thesis of La Femme de Claude and also that of a prose pamphlet, L'Homme-Femme (1872). His most famous work, La Dame aux camélias, is both a novel (1848) and a play (1849, but not produced, because of censorship regulations, until 1852). It is a sentimental but moving portrait of a Paris courtesan, Marguerite Gautier, who has had many love affairs but has never known love until she meets Armand Duval. At his father's request she gives him up, in order to "save" him and his career. When the father realizes his mistake, it is too late. Marguerite dies, happy in the knowledge that Armand is at her side and happy in his love. Camille, as the heroine is called from her extreme fondness for the flower (the play is usually called Camille in English translation), is one of a long line, if not the first, of long-suffering ladies who are victims of consumption, a condition that has romantic possibilities that the romantic writer has not neglected. Marguerite was based on a well-known Parisian woman, known to Dumas, and it is believed that she was his mistress. The Italian actress Eleonora Duse was the first to play the role, which has since been played by many English, American, and European artists, on the stage, the screen, and the air. The appeal of the play, of the heroine's story as Dumas tells it (in both forms), and of her character, has been discussed by critics and students of art and human nature in an attempt to discover the secret of the success of what is, after all, a rather conventional story. Dumas's interest in and extreme preoccupation with questions of morality and ethics has been considered strange in view of his own background and that of his father, but, from the psychological viewpoint, it is probably that very background, a personal matter with him, that accounts for and explains the interest.

Dumas, Jean Baptiste André. b. at Alais, Gard, France, July 14, 1800; d. at Cannes, France, April 11, 1884. French chemist and physiologist, professor of organic chemistry in the École de Médecine at Paris. He published Traité de chimie appliqué aux arts (1828–45), and various other works.

Dumas, Guillaume Mathieu, Comte. b. at Montpellier, France, Dec. 23, 1753; d. at Paris, Oct. 16, 1837. French general and historian, author of Précis des événements militaires (1816–26).

Du Maurier (dū môr'i.ā), Daphne. [Title, Lady Browning.] b. at London, May 13, 1907—. English novelist and biographer; second daugher of Sir Gerald Du Maurier. She married (1932) lieutenant general Sir F. A. M. Browning of the Grenadier Guards. She is the author of a biography of her father, Gerald, a Portrait (1934), and of The du Mauriers (1937). Her novels include The Loving Spirit (1931), Jamaica Inn (1936), Rebecca (1938), Frenchman's Creek (1941), Hungry Hill (1943), The King's General (1946), The Parasites (1950), My Cousin Rachel (1952), and Kiss Me Again, Stranger (1953).

Du Maurier, George Louis Palmella Busson. b. at Paris, March 6, 1834; d. at London, Oct. 8, 1896. English artist and novelist. He was educated at Paris, and went to England at the age of 17, studying later at Paris with Gleyre. He was noted for his illustrations in Punch and other periodicals. He wrote and illustrated Peter Ibbetsen (1892), Trilby (1894), and The Martian (1897). The hypnotist Svengali in Trilby is his most famous character.

Du Maurier, Sir Gerald. b. March 26, 1873; d. at London, April 11, 1934. English actor-manager; son of George Louis Palmella Busson Du Maurier, and father of Daphne Du Maurier. He made his debut (1894) in An Old Jew, and toured with Forbes-Robertson and later with Beerbohm Tree. He was well known as a philanthropist. He performed in Trilby, The Seats of the Mighty, Escape, and other plays, including Shakespearian revivals.

Dumbarton (dum.bär'tọn). Royal burgh, seaport, and market town in W central Scotland, county seat of Dumbartonshire, situated at the confluence of the rivers Leven and Clyde, ab. 13 mi. NW of Glasgow, ab. 416 mi. N of London by rail. It has a shipbuilding industry and a linen trade. Dumbarton Castle is here. 24,563 (est. 1948).

Dumbarton Castle. Fortress overhanging the river Clyde, at Dumbarton, Scotland, on a rocky eminence 240 ft. high. It has been called the Gibraltar of Scotland.

Dumbarton Oaks Conference (dum'bär.tŏn ōks'). Meeting (Aug. 21–Oct. 7, 1944) of representatives of Great Britain, the U.S., and the U.S.S.R. (China replaced the U.S.S.R. after Sept. 29) at a mansion ("Dumbarton Oaks") in the District of Columbia. The purpose of the meeting was to prepare a basic draft for a proposed world organization. Guided largely by draft proposals of the U.S. State Department, a text was written that afterwards (1945) formed the basis of the United Nations Charter at San Francisco. The main question on which agreement was not reached at Dumbarton Oaks was the veto problem; this was not settled until the Yalta and San Francisco conferences.

Dumbartonshire (dum.bär'tŏn.shir) or Dumbarton (dum.bär'tŏn). [Also: Dunbartonshire, Dunbarton.] Maritime and inland county in W central Scotland, consisting of a main portion and an exclave. The main portion is bounded on the N by Perthshire, on the NE and E by Stirlingshire, on the SE by Lanarkshire, on the S by Renfrewshire and the Firth of Clyde, and on the W by Loch Long and Argyllshire. The detached portion is contained between Stirlingshire on the N and Lanarkshire on the S. The surface in the northern portion, between Loch Long and Loch Lomond, is mountainous; southward, toward the Firth of Clyde, it is low-lying and level. There is much industry along the banks of the rivers Clyde and Leven; shipbuilding is particularly important along the Clyde. The county produces some coal, slate, and ironstone. Dumbarton is the county seat; area, ab. 241 sq. mi.; pop. 164,263 (1951).

Dumbiedikes (dum'bi.dīks). Awkward Scottish laird in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Heart of Midlothian. He wants to marry Jeanie Deans, but on being refused promptly marries another.

Dum-Dum (dum'dum). [Also, Dumdum.] Town and military station 4½ mi. NE of Calcutta, West Bengal, Union of India: site of a major airport. Pop. ab. 20,000.

Duméril (dü.mā.rēl), André Marie Constant. b. at Amiens, France, Jan. 1, 1774; d. at Paris, Aug. 2, 1860. French physician and zoölogist. He was the author of Erpétologie générale (1835–51).

Duméril, Auguste Henri André. b. at Paris, Nov. 30, 1812; d. there, Nov. 12, 1870. French naturalist; son of André Marie Constant Duméril. He wrote Histoire naturelle des poissons (1865–70).

Du Mez (dü.mā'), Andrew Grover. b. at Horicon, Wis., April 26, 1885—. American pharmaceutical chemist. Associated (1917–26) with U.S. Public Health Service hygienical laboratory; dean (1926 et seq.) of University of Maryland school of pharmacy; first to prepare emetine bismuthous iodide as remedy for amoebic dysentery. Editor of The Yearbook of the American Pharmaceutical Association (1921–34), Pharmaceutical Abstracts (1935–41), and other publications.

Dumfries (dum.frēs'). Royal burgh, river port, and manufacturing town in S Scotland, county seat of Dumfriesshire, situated on the river Nith, ab. 15 mi. NW of Annan, ab. 332 mi. N of London by rail. It has manufactures of tweeds, hosiery, and farm machinery. Dumfries was famous in early border warfare. The tomb of Robert Burns and the house where he died in 1796 are here. Dumfries is the principal town in S Scotland. Maxwelltown is a suburb. 27,128 (est. 1948).

Dumfriesshire (dum.frēsh'shir) or Dumfries (dum.frēs'). Maritime county in S Scotland. It is bounded on the N by Lanarkshire, Peebleshire, and Selkirkshire, on the NE by Roburghshire, on the SE by Cumberland (in England), on the S by Solway Firth, on the SW and W by Kirkcudbrightshire, and on the NW by Ayrshire. The coastline is low and sandy. Dumfriesshire contains the valleys of Eskdale in the eastern part, Annandale in the center, and Nithsdale in the west. The leading occupation is the rearing of livestock. Lead, coal, red sandstone, and limestone are worked. The county has manufactures of tweeds. County seat, Dumfries; area, ab. 1,075 sq. mi.; pop. 85,656 (1951).

Dumiat (dùm.yät'). Arabic name of Damietta.

Dümichen (dü'mē.ċhen). Johannes. b. at Weissholz, in Silesia, Oct. 15, 1833; d. at Strasbourg, Feb. 7, 1894. German Egyptologist. He was appointed professor of Egyptology at Strasbourg in 1872, and published Bauurkunde der Tempelanlagen von Dendera (1865), Geographische Inschriften altägyptischer Denkmäler (1865–85), Altägyptische Kalenderinschriften (1866), Historische Inschriften altägyptischer Denkmäler (1867–69), Resultate einer auf Befehl Sr. Majestät des Königs Wilhelm von Preussen 1868 nach Ägypten gesendeten archäologisch-photographischen Expedition (1871), and others.

Dummer (dum'ėr), Jeremiah. b. at Newbury, Mass., Sept. 14, 1645; d. May 25, 1718. American silversmith, engraver, and portrait painter. In his 14th year he began an eight-year apprenticeship under John Hull, after which he established his own workshop, prospered, and became a leading citizen of Boston, an officer in the militia and the incumbent successively of several public offices. He was a most accomplished craftsman, with excellent taste, and some of the most admirable silverware of that period came from his shop. Exhibitions of his work in recent times at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York revived appreciation of his accomplishments. Little is known of his work as an engraver except that he executed plates for the printing of money for Connecticut. That he also painted portraits seems to have been known to few in his own day and was forgotten until in modern times several such paintings, including a self-portrait and one of his wife, and bearing his name as painter, were discovered. It seems probable that he was the first native-born American portraitist.

Dummer, Jeremiah. b. at Boston, c1680; d. at Plaistow, England, May 19, 1739. American scholar; son of Jeremiah Dummer (1645–1718). He was agent for Massachusetts in England (1710–21) and wrote Defence of the New England Charters (1728).

Dümmler (düm'lėr), Ernst. b. at Berlin, Jan. 2, 1830; d. at Friedrichroda, Germany, Sept. 11, 1902. German historian. He served as professor (1858 et seq.) at the University of Halle, also as president of the central directorate of the Monumenta Germaniae historica. Author of Geschichte des ostfränkischen Reiches (History of the East-Frankish Empire, 1862–65).

Dumnorix (dum'nō.riks). Killed in Gaul, 54 B.C. A chief of the Aedui; brother of Divitiacus. Pardoned once by Caesar for permitting hostile forces through his territory, he led his cavalry from the Roman camp as Caesar prepared the British invasion and was captured and killed.

Dumont (dū'mont). Borough in NE New Jersey, in Bergen County near Paterson. 13,013 (1950).

Du Mont, Allen Balcom. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Jan. 29, 1901—. American radio and television engineer. He graduated (1924) from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and, after a period with Westinghouse (1924–28) and De Forest Radio (1928–31), established (1931) his own company in Passaic, N.J., to manufacture cathode ray equipment. He invented the so-called magic eye tube for visual radio tuning. The commercial development of television is in large part due to his pioneering work in cathode ray tube improvements.

Dumont (dü.môn), Henri. b. near Liége, Belgium, c1610; d. at Paris, May 8, 1684. Belgian church composer. He was organist (1639–84) at St. Paul's, Paris, where he also directed (1665 et seq.) the court chapel.

Dumont, Jean. d. at Vienna, 1726. French publicist and historical writer. He was the author of Nouveau voyage au Levant (1694) and Mémoires politiques pour servir à la parfaite intelligence de l'histoire de la paix de Ryswick (1699).

Dumont, Pierre Étienne Louis. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, July 18, 1759; d. at Milan, Italy, Sept. 29, 1829. Swiss scholar, literary coadjutor of Mirabeau. He was a disciple of Bentham, whose system he expounded in Traité de la législation (1802), Théorie des peines et des récompenses (1811), Tactique des assemblées legislatives (1815), Preuves judiciaires (1823), and De l'organisation judiciaire (1828).

Dumont d'Urville (dür.vēl), Jules Sébastien César. b. at Condé-sur-Noireau, Calvados, France, May 23, 1790; killed near Paris, May 8, 1842. French navigator and rear admiral. He took part (1819–20) in an expedition to the Greek archipelago and the Black Sea, and circumnavigated the globe as commander of two expeditions (Astrolabe, 1826–29, and Zelée, 1837–40); on the second he discovered the Adélie Coast and other points in Antarctica. He wrote narratives of his voyages.

Dumoulin (dü.mö.laṅ), Charles. [Latinized surname, Molinaeus.] b. at Paris, 1500; d. 1566. French jurist. He became a Calvinist, and for a time had to live in exile in Germany, but eventually returned to France. He was involved in many controversies, being at times attacked by Calvinists as well as by Catholics. Denouncing feudal privileges, and exalting the monarch as the sole source of legal authority, he had an influence of considerable importance at that historical momnet of transition. Friends and opponents alike acknowledged his eminence as a jurisconsult. Perhaps his two most important works were Sommaire du livre analytique des contrats, usures, rentes constituées intérêts et monnoyes and Extricatio labyrinthi dividui et individui.

Dumoulin Islets (du.mö'lin, dü.mö.laṅ'). Group of about 10 small islets in Antarctica, paralleling the coast directly W of Point Géologie, along the Adélie Coast, in ab. 66°37′ S., 140°10′ E. The French expedition under J. S. C. Dumont d'Urville landed on one of these islets in 1840.

Dumouriez (dü.mö.ryā), Charles François. b. at Cambrai, France, Jan. 25, 1739; d. at Turville Park, near Henley-on-Thames, England, March 14, 1823. French general. He served in the Seven Years' War, obtained the rank of captain in 1763, served as quartermaster general in the expedition against Corsica in 1768, was sent by the duc de Choiseul to Poland on a secret mission in 1770, and was promoted to major general in 1788. At the beginning of the French Revolution he joined the Jacobins and pronounced in favor of political reform without abandoning his loyalty to the court, and in 1792, after Mirabeau's death, joined the Girondins and held separately for a short period the ministries of foreign affairs and of war. He was subsequently appointed to the command of the north as lieutenant general under Marshal Nicolas Luckner, and in conjunction with François Christophe Kellermann inflicted a decisive defeat (Sept. 20, 1792) on the Prussian troops at Valmy. He conducted an expedition (1792–93) against the Austrian Netherlands, in the course of which he gained a victory over the Austrians at Jemappes (Nov. 6, 1792) and occupied Brussels, but was defeated at Neerwinden (March 18, 1793). Estranged from the republican party by the execution of the king, he was recalled by the Convention, but instead of returning to France he fled to the Austrian camp, and passed the rest of his life in exile, intriguing with French royalists and advising in the military campaigns against Napoleon.

Dun (dun), Robert Graham. b. at Chillicothe, Ohio, Aug. 7, 1826; d. Nov. 10, 1900. American mercantile credit specialist. Joined (1850) the mercantile agency of Tappen and Douglass; became owner (1859), changing name first to Dun, Boyd and Company and later to R. G. Dun and Company (now Dun and Bradstreet, Inc.). The original firm supplied credit ratings of country merchants for New York wholesale houses and expanded widely as business and communication facilities improved. A weekly report of business conditions, Dun's Review, was started in 1893.

Duna (dö'nô). Hungarian name of the Danube.

Duna (dö'nä). Tartar name of the Don, U.S.S.R.

Düna (dü'nä). German name of the Dvina, in W U.S.S.R.

Dünaburg (dü'nä.bürk). German name of Daugavpils.

Dunaföldvár (dö'nô.fėld'vär). [Also, Duna-Földvár.] Town in C Hungary, on the W bank of the Danube River ab. 48 mi. S of Budapest. It has flour mills, potteries, and hemp and flax processing plants. 11,256 (1948).

Dunagiri (dö.na.gir'i). Peak in N Union of India, in N Uttar Pradesh state (United Provinces), in the main range of the Himalayas ab. 12 mi. NW of the great peak of Nanda Devi. Elevation, ab. 23,182 ft.

Dunai or Dunay (dö.nī'). Russian name of the Danube.

Dunaj (dö'nī). Czech name of the Danube.

Dunajec (dö.nä'yets). River in S Poland, rising on the N slopes of the High Tatra Mountains, and flowing generally NE to join the Vistula ab. 36 mi. E of Kraków. It twists through a scenic mountain valley and cuts through several chalk ridges before emerging onto the plain of the Vistula. Length, ab. 129 mi.

Dunant (dü.näṅ), Jean Henri. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, May 8, 1828; d. at Heiden, Switzerland, Oct. 30, 1910. Swiss philanthropist, founder of the Red Cross and winner (1901) with Frédéric Passy of the first Nobel peace prize. While visiting (1859) the battlefield of Solferino, in Italy, he observed the lack of an adequate ambulance corps, and thereafter applied himself to urging measures for the relief of the wounded in wartime. His efforts, sustained by his countrymen, resulted in the conference which adopted the Geneva Convention (an international agreement setting up a code for the treatment in wartime of prisoners of war and the sick and wounded) in 1864 and established the International Red Cross. Having devoted his whole fortune to the cause, he was forced to support himself by teaching, but received a pension from the empress of Russia. His Souvenir de Solferino (1862) made a deep impression on the public. He published also Fraternité et charité internationale en temps de guerre (1864), and other works.

Dunărea (dö'nu.ryä). Rumanian name of the Danube.

Dunav (Serbo-Croatian, dö'näv; Bulgarian, dö'näf). Serbo-Croatian and Bulgarian name of the Danube.

Dunbar (dun.bär'). Royal burgh, seaport, and holiday resort in SE Scotland, in East Lothian, situated on the North Sea near the mouth of the Firth of Forth, ab. 11 mi. NE of Haddington, ab. 364 mi. N of London by rail. The ruins of Dunbar Castle, celebrated in Scottish history, are here. It was besieged by the English in 1336. Dunbar was formerly an important herring fishery center, but the trade has now practically disappeared. The town is becoming a popular seaside resort. At the battle of Dunbar (1296) Edward I of England defeated John Baliol, a result of the victory being Edward's declaration of himself as king of Scotland. Dunbar is notable in history also as the place from which Edward II embarked in 1314 after his defeat at Bannockburn, and as the place from which Mary, Queen of Scots, eloped with Bothwell in 1567. Cromwell's forces inflicted a crushing defeat here on the Scots on Sept. 3, 1650. Pop. 3,888 (est. 1948).

Dunbar (dun'bär). City in W West Virginia, in Kanawha County, in an oil and gas producing area. The city manufactures glassware, farm machinery, and enamelware. 8,032 (1950).

Dunbar (dun.bär'), Agnes. [Title: Countess of Dunbar and March; called "Black Agnes."] b. c1312; d. 1369. Scottish heroine, noted for her successful defense of Dunbar Castle in 1337–38. She was given the epithet "Black Agnes" because of her dark skin.

Dunbar, Battle of. Battle (April 27, 1296) at Dunbar, Scotland, in which the Scots under John Baliol were defeated by the English under John de Warenne, Earl of Surrey and Sussex, with the result that Baliol resigned the crown of Scotland, and that the government was placed in the hands of an English regent. This name is also given to the battle between the Parliamentary army under Cromwell and the Scottish Royalists under Leslie, which was fought at Doon Hill near Dunbar, on Sept. 3, 1650, and in which the Scots were totally defeated.

Dunbar (dun'bär), Charles Franklin. b. at Abington, Mass., July 28, 1830; d. Jan. 29, 1900. American economist, first professor of political economy (1869–1900) at Harvard University.

Dunbar, Paul Laurence. b. at Dayton, Ohio, June 27, 1872; d. there, Feb. 9, 1906. American Negro author and poet. He was engaged in journalistic work at Dayton and New York, and was employed in the Congressional Library at Washington. Among the better known of his works are Oak and Ivy (1893), Majors and Minors (1895), Lyrics of Lowly Life (1896), Lyrics of the Hearthside (1899), The Strength of Gideon (1900), The Fanatics (1901), The Sport of the Gods (1902), a novel; Lyrics of Love and Laughter (1903), and Lyrics of Sunshine and Shadow (1905).

Dunbar (dun.bär'), William. b. probably in East Lothian, Scotland, c1460; d. c1525. Scottish poet. He was a Franciscan who did diplomatic service in France for James IV of Scotland and was afterward attached to the court as laureate. He is one of the Scottish Chaucerian school. His works include The Thrissil and the Rois

(The Thistle and the Rose, 1503), a prothalamium in honor of James IV and Margaret Tudor; The Golden Targe, a dream allegory on beauty and love; Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins, Merle and Nightingale, The Two Maryit Wemen and the Wedo, a lusty discourse that outdoes Chaucer's wife of Bath; and Lament for the Makaris, an elegy on the poets (makers) who preceded him.

Dunbarton (dun.bär'ton) or Dunbartonshire (dun.bär'ton.shir). See Dumbartonshire.

Dunblane (dun.blān'). Police burgh and market town in C Scotland, in Perthshire, situated on Allan Water, ab. 5 mi. N of Stirling, ab. 422 mi. N of London by rail. It has a noted cathedral, restored in the period 1889–93, one of a very few Scottish specimens of Gothic architecture. The town was formerly the seat of a bishop. 2,895 (est. 1948).

Duncan (dung'kan). City in S Oklahoma, county seat of Stephens County, in a petroleum, livestock, and farming area. It has a plant where oil-well equipment is manufactured and is a processing center for petroleum, cotton, and cottonseed and a marketing center for dairy products. 15,325 (1950).

Duncan. Unincorporated community in NW South Carolina, in Greenville County. 3,950 (1950).

Duncan I (of Scotland). King of Scotland. He succeeded to the throne c1034 on the death of his grandfather Malcolm II, and was assassinated by Macbeth, near Elgin, in 1040 or 1039. He appears in Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Duncan, Adam. [Title, 1st Viscount Duncan of Camperdown.] b. at Lundie, Scotland, July 1, 1731; d. in Scotland, Aug. 4, 1804. British admiral. He gained the victory of Camperdown over the Dutch fleet, on Oct. 11, 1797.

Duncan, Sir Andrew Rae. b. 1884; d. March 30, 1952. British statesman. Member (1940 et seq.) of Parliament; president (1940, 1941–42) of the Board of Trade; minister (1940–41, 1942–45) of supply.

Duncan, Donald Bradley. b. in Michigan, Sept. 1, 1896—. American naval officer. He served as deputy and chief of staff to the commander in chief of the U.S. Pacific fleet with the rank of vice-admiral. He was deputy chief (1947) for naval operations for air, and was appointed (March, 1947) to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. He was assigned (1948) as commander of the U.S. navy second task fleet and became (1951) vice-chief of naval operations.

Duncan, Isadora. b. at San Francisco, May 27, 1878; d. at Nice, France, Sept. 14, 1927. American esthetic dancer, noted for her creative interpretations of music and poetry, danced in bare feet with the dancer clad in flowing scarves. Together with the other children in her family, she became interested in the dance at a very early age, and with her sister, Elizabeth, taught dancing at San Francisco. At New York, she was for two years a member of Augustin Daly's company. Leaving for England with members of her family, she studied Greek art at the British Museum, making great sacrifices, almost to the point of privation, but learning much that later influenced her dancing. Coming under the sponsorship of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, she soon became noted among a small but influential circle at London and Paris, and made a Continental tour as a member of Loie Fuller's company. She and her family spent a year at Athens, where they made an unsuccessful effort to establish a temple of dancing. On various occasions after 1906 she went on tour, rendering her unique interpretations of Chopin's Marche Funèbre, the Marseillaise, and Tschaikowsky's Marche Slav, among others. An advocate of free love, she bore two children out of wedlock, in 1905 and 1908; one was fathered by Edward Gordon Craig, the theatrical designer, and the other by a millionaire admirer who often gave her financial aid. The two children were drowned in an accident (1913) in France. A later child by an Italian sculptor was still-born. She toured South America in 1916 and the U.S. in 1917; when her attempt to set up her school at Athens was frustrated, she accepted the invitation of the Soviet authorities to establish it at Moscow. While in Russia, she married the revolutionary poet Sergei Yesenin, who committed suicide in 1925. She departed from Russia in 1924, and lived at Paris and Nice, experiencing difficult times. She died in an accident, when a long scarf she was wearing was caught in the moving wheels of an automobile. She wrote My Life (1927) and The Art of the Dance (1928).

Duncan, James. b. in Kincardinshire, Scotland, May 5, 1857; d. Sept. 14, 1928. American labor leader and first vice-president (1900–28) of the American Federation of Labor, for many years an associate of Samuel Gompers. Arrived (1880) in U.S.; delegate (1898) to the British Trade Union Conference; representative (1911) of the American Federation of Labor at an international conference at Budapest; U.S. envoy extraordinary (1917) with the Root mission to Russia; member (1919) of the American Labor mission to the Peace Conference at Paris.

Duncan, John. b. at Gilcomston, near Aberdeen, Scotland, 1796; d. at Edinburgh, Feb. 26, 1870. Scottish Hebraist and clergyman of the Presbyterian Church.

Duncan, Norman. b. at Brantford, Ontario, Canada, July 2, 1871; d. Oct. 18, 1916. Canadian educator and author. He was on the staff of the New York Evening Post (1897–1901), and was professor of rhetoric at Washington and Jefferson College (1902–06) and adjunct professor of English literature at the University of Kansas (1907–10). He published The Soul of the Street (1900), Doctor Luke of Labrador (1904), Dr. Grenfell's Parish (1905), The Mother (1905), Every Man for Himself (1908), The Suitable Child (1909), The Measure of a Man (1911), and others.

Duncan, Sir Patrick. b. Dec. 21, 1870; d. at Pretoria, South Africa, July 17, 1943. South African lawyer and politician, who served (1937–43) as governor general of the Union of South Africa. Entered (1894) British colonial service; treasurer (1901), colonial secretary (1903–06), and acting lieutenant governor (1906) of the Transvaal Colony; minister of interior, public health, and education (1921–24), and minister of mines (1933–36) of the Union of South Africa.

Duncan, Robert Kennedy. b. at Brantford, Ontario, Canada, 1869; d. 1914. American industrial chemist and educator. A graduate of the University of Toronto, he spent the years 1901–1906 in Europe, during some of that time studying radioactivity in the laboratory of the Curies. While professor of industrial chemistry (1906–10) at the University of Kansas, he originated the plan of industrial fellowships to promote research with the purpose of making chemistry more serviceable to industry. The results of this innovation led to an offer of the chair of industrial chemistry at the University of Pittsburgh, which he held from 1910 to 1914, and to the establishment at that university, in 1913, of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research. Duncan was the author of The New Knowledge (1905), The Chemistry of Commerce (1907), and Some Chemical Problems of Today (1911).

Duncan, Thomas. b. at Kinclaven, Perthshire, Scotland, May 24, 1807; d. at Edinburgh, May 25, 1845. Scottish historical and portrait painter. Among his best-known works are Charles Edward Asleep and Charles Edward and the Highlanders Entering Edinburgh.

Duncansby Head (dung'kanz.bi). [Also, Duncansbay Head (-bā).] The NE extremity of Scotland, near John o' Groat's House.

Duncan's Camp. See under Birnam Hill.

Dunce Boy, The. Play (1925) by Lula Vollmer.

Dunciad (dun'si.ad), The. Satirical poem (1728–42; published in four books, 1743) by Alexander Pope, directed against various contemporary writers. The goddess of dullness elects Lewis Theobald poet laureate of that realm. Owing to a quarrel between Colley Cibber and Pope, the latter substituted Cibber for Theobald in the fourth part, published in 1742. The bestowal of the laureateship on Cibber may have added to Pope's venom.

Duncker (dung'kėr), Karl. b. at Berlin, March 25, 1781; d. there, July 15, 1869. German publisher at Berlin.

Duncker, Maximilian Wolfgang. b. at Berlin, Oct. 15, 1811; d. at Ansbach, Bavaria, Germany, July 21, 1886. German historian; son of Karl Duncker. He was professor at Halle (1842–57) and at Tübingen (1857–59). In the latter year he entered the service of the government. His works include Origines Germanicae (1840), Geschichte des Altertums (1852–57; 5th ed., 1878–83), and others.

Dundalk (dun.dôk'). [Irish, Dún Dealgan.] Urban district, market town and seaport in Leinster province, Irish Republic, county seat of County Louth, situated on the river Castletown near its influx to Dundalk Bay, ab. 46 mi. N of Dublin. Its port exports oats and livestock, and imports coal. Industries of the town include breweries and distilleries, flour mills, linen mills, and tobacco factories. The workshops of the Great Northern Railway are here. Dundalk is the county seat of County Louth, and a customs station. It was here that Sir John de Bermingham, at the head of 15,000 troops, met (1318) the Scots under Edward Bruce. After a short combat, the Scots were decisively defeated and Edward Bruce killed. 19,661(1951).

Dundalk Bay. Large bay in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Louth. Dundalk urban district and Dundalk harbor are at its head. Width at entrance, ab. 10 mi.

Dundas (dun'dąs). Town in Wentworth County, Ontario, Canada, situated ab. 6 mi. W of Hamilton, which is on Burlington Bay at the W extremity of Lake Ontario. 6,846 (1951).

Dundas (dun.das', dun'dąs), Sir David. b. at Edinburgh, 1735; d. Feb. 18, 1820. British army officer. He was appointed (1809) commander in chief of the army to succeed the duke of York, a position which he held until 1811, a period during which the victories of Talavera de la Reina and Bussaco were achieved in the Peninsular War. He devised a system for the British infantry and cavalry patterned after the Prussian code of tactics. Adopted by the duke of York, the system provided unity of action.

Dundas, Henry. [Titles: 1st Viscount Melville, Baron Dunira.] b. at Edinburgh, April 28, 1742; d. May 28, 1811. British statesman. He was lord advocate of Scotland from 1775 to 1783. He was an intimate friend and trusted lieutenant of Pitt, during whose first administration he was home secretary (1791–94) and secretary of war (1794–1801). In 1802 he was raised to the peerage as Viscount Melville by Addington, and in 1804, on the accession of Pitt's second ministry, was appointed first lord of the admiralty. He was impeached in 1806 on the charge of appropriating public money, but was acquitted by the House of Lords. During the impeachment he resigned his position in the cabinet.

Dundas, Henry. [Title, 3rd Viscount Melville.] b. 1801; d. near Edinburgh, Feb. 1, 1876. Scottish soldier; eldest son of Robert Saunders Dundas (1771–1851). Appointed (Nov. 28, 1841) colonel and aide-de-camp to the queen for his vigorous suppression of the Canadian rebellion (1837–38), during which he repulsed a group of American brigands near Prescott, in Ontario; second in command during the siege and capture of Multan, in India; commanded (1856–60) the forces in Scotland; general (Jan. 1, 1868).

Dundas, Robert. [Called Lord Arniston the elder.] b. 1685; d. 1753. Scottish jurist, noted for reintroducing "guilty" or "not guilty" as possible jury verdicts. He was solicitor general of Scotland (1717–20), lord advocate (1720), and dean of the Faculty of Advocates (1721); member of Parliament (1722); subsequently (1748–53) lord president of session.

Dundas, Robert. [Called Lord Arniston the younger.] b. July 18, 1713; d. at Edinburgh, Dec. 13, 1787. Scottish judge; son of Robert Dundas (1685–1753). Educated at Edinburgh University and studied Roman law at Utrecht and Paris; solicitor general for Scotland (1742–46); lord advocate (1754); member of Parliament for Midlothian (1754); lord president (1760 et seq.). His popularity declined in the celebrated Douglas peerage case when, on July 7, 1767, he cast his vote against Archibald (Stuart) Douglas, rendering a decision that was reversed by the House of Lords two years later.

Dundas, Robert Saunders. [Title, 2nd Viscount Melville.] b. in Scotland, 1771; d. near Edinburgh, June 10, 1851. English politician; son of Henry Dundas (1742–1811). Member of Parliament for Hastings (1794) and for Rye (1796); privy councilor and president of board of control in cabinet of duke of Portland (1807). He became Irish secretary (1809), but left it for former position in board of control (1809). Under Lord Liverpool he was first lord of the admiralty (1812–27); Melville Sound was named after him for his interest in arctic exploration.

Dundas Strait (dun'dąs). Strait which separates Melville Island from Cobourg Peninsula in the N part of Northern Territory, Australia.

Dundee (dun.dē'). City, royal burgh, seaport, market town, and manufacturing center in E Scotland, in Angus, situated on the N bank of the Firth of Tay at the foot of the Sidlaw Hills, ab. 18 mi. NE of Perth, ab. 452 mi. N of London by rail. Its industries include shipbuilding (especially of cargo craft), textile machinery manufactures (especially machinery for the jute, hemp, and linen trades), jute, hemp, and linen manufactures, fruit-preserving and confectionery trades (especially marmalade manufactures, for which it is noted), and linoleum and plastics manufactures. Dundee ranks second in Scottish commerce and is the most important center of jute manufactures in the British Isles. The jute trade began c1830. Imports consist chiefly of raw jute and flax, and linen yarns. Docks are extensive, occupying ab. 2 mi. of the riverside. Dundee is the seat of a university college, founded in 1882 and united with the University of St. Andrews in 1896. During the Reformation it was called the "Scottish Geneva." It was stormed by the marquis of Montrose in 1645, and by Monk in 1651. Dundee is the fourth largest city in Scotland. 177,333 (1951).

Dundee. Former name of Aberdeen, Miss.

Dunderberg (dun'dėr.bėrg). See Donderberg.

Dundonald (dun.don'ąld), 10th Earl of. Title of Cochrane, Thomas.

Dundreary (dun.drir'i), Lord. Indolent, foolish, and amusing Englishman in Tom Taylor's comedy Our American Cousin. To this part originally only 47 lines were given; but E. A. Sothern, to whom it was assigned, introduced various extravagances to suit himself. He became famous in it, and the whole play hinged on it. The side-whiskers called Dundrearies are named for the character.

Dundrennan Abbey (dun.dren'ąn). Ancient monastery near Kirkcudbright, Scotland. Now in ruins, it was built in 1140.

Dundrum Bay (dun'drum, dun.drum'). Inlet of the Irish Sea, in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, in County Down. Width, ab. 10 mi.

Dunedin (dun.ē'din). City in W Florida, in Pinellas County, on the Gulf of Mexico ab. 5 mi. N of Tampa. It is a tourist resort; vegetables and citrus fruits are produced in the area. 3,202 (1950).

Dunedin. Seaport on South Island, New Zealand, on Otago Harbor at the S end of the Canterbury Bight. It was founded in 1848. Gold was discovered in its neighborhood in 1861. Otago University, a branch of New Zealand University, is located here, and includes a school of mines. Pop., with suburbs, 95,457 (1951).

Dunellen (dun.el'ęn). Borough in C New Jersey, in Middlesex County: printing establishments. 6,291 (1950).

Dunes, Battle of the. Victory gained by the allied French and English under Turenne, who were besieging Dunkerque, France, over the Spaniards under Don John of Austria, on the dunes near Dunkerque, on June 4, 1658.

Dunfermline (dun.fėrm'lin). City, royal burgh, and manufacturing town in E Scotland, in Fifeshire, ab. 13 mi. NW of Edinburgh, ab. 410 mi. N of London by rail. Dunfermline is situated on the Fifeshire coal field, and is an important industrial town whose manufactures include iron and brass, soaps and dyes, rayon and linen textiles, and tobacco. It has long been noted for its damasks. The town has a famous Benedictine Abbey dating from the 11th century. It was a burial place for many of the Scottish kings (11th to 14th centuries); among them, Robert I (Robert the Bruce), who is buried underneath the pulpit of the abbey church. Dunfermline was formerly a royal residence. Here Charles II signed the Covenant in 1650. Pop. 44,710 (1951).

Dunfermline, 1st Baron. Title of Abercromby, James.

Dungannon (dun.gan'ọn). Urban district and market town, in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, in County Tyrone ab. 34 mi. W of Belfast. It was the ancient seat of the O'Neils (or O'Neills). 4,345 (1947).

Dungannon, Baron of. See O'Neill, Hugh.

Dungarvan (dun.gär'vąn). Urban district, market town, and seaport in Munster province, Irish Republic, in County Waterford, situated on the river Colligan at its influx to Dungarvan Harbour, ab. 25 mi. SW of Waterford. 5,426 (1951).

Dungarvan Harbour. Inlet of St. George's Channel, in Munster province, Irish Republic, in County Waterford. Dungarvan urban district is at its head. Length, ab. 4 mi.; width at entrance, ab. 2 mi.

Dungeness (dunj'nes'). Low headland in SE England, at the S extremity of Kent, ab. 11 mi. SE of Rye.

Dungi (dŭn'gē). [Also, Shulgi.] fl. about the 21st century B.C. Mesopotamian king. His capital was in Ur. Many temples are extant undertaken by him and his father and predecessor in the third dynasty of Ur, Ur-Nammu (Urgur or Ur-Engur), who called themselves "Kings of Ur, Kings of Shumir (Shinar) and Akkad (Accad)."

Dunglison (dung'gli.son), Robley. b. at Keswick, England, Jan. 4, 1798; d. at Philadelphia, April 1, 1869. American physician and medical writer, author of Dictionary of Medical Science and Literature (1833).

Dunheved (dŏn'he"ved). Ancient name of Launceston, England.

Dunhill (dun'hil), Thomas Frederick. b. at London, Feb. 1, 1877; d. 1946. English composer. He studied at the Royal College of Music, London, and was assistant music master (1899–1908) at Eton College. His compositions include the comic operas Happy Families and Tantivy Towers (1931), the latter based upon an A. P. Herbert libretto. The opera Enchanted Garden was awarded publication (1925) by the Carnegie Trust. He also wrote a symphony in A minor.

Duni (dō'nē), Egidio Romoaldo. b. at Matera, Italy, Feb. 9, 1709; d. at Paris, June 11, 1775. Italian composer of operas, commonly considered a founder of the opéra bouffe. His most famous work is Ninette à la cour.

Dunira (dun.ir'ạ), Baron. See Dundas, Henry.

Dunk (dungk), George Montagu. [Title, 2nd Earl of Halifax; called "Father of the Colonies."] b. in England, Oct. 5, 1716; d. there, June 8, 1771. English politician, called "Father of the Colonies" for his work in extending American trade; son of George Montagu (d. 1739). He took the name of Dunk on marrying an heiress of that name. For his aid in founding the colony of Nova Scotia when president of the Board of Trade (1748–61), the city of Halifax was named after him (1749). He was nominated lord lieutenant of Ireland (1761) and created first lord of the admiralty and made secretary of state (1762), and was a member of the triumvirate with Sir Charles Wyndham, 2nd Earl of Egremont, and George Grenville (1763), but the ministry was dismissed (1765). Under his nephew Frederick North, Lord North, he became lord privy seal (1770).

Dunkards (dung'kạrdz). [Also: Dunkers or (sometimes) Tunkers.] Popular name, derived from the German word meaning "to dip," of a sect of German Baptists, which by various secessions has become divided into several denominations. Founded in 1708 by Alexander Mack, a miller, at Swartzenau on the Oder, they became the objects of persecution, and a group of them led by Peter Becker migrated to Pennsylvania and settled in Germantown (now part of Philadelphia) in 1719. Subsequently they established other communities in Pennsylvania, and in small numbers spread to the West and to Canada. Their first church was erected at Germantown in 1723, and there they set up a press which printed the first German Bible in America. Becker's followers organized as the Church of the Brethren, and this denomination, also known today as Conservative Dunkers, remains the largest, with more than 1,000 churches and upward of 180,000 members, governed by regional conferences and an annual general conference; it supports colleges, home and foreign missions, and a publishing house. The first schism occurred in 1728, when the German Seventh Day Baptists (not identical with the Seventh Day Baptist Church), established the famous Ephrata Cloisters, famous for music and artistic crafts, where communal living was practiced; but celibacy also being a rule of this group, it has almost disappeared, its decline not checked even by the abandonment of celibacy and of community of goods. Another secession led to the setting up, in 1848, of the Church of God, whose members, now thought to number less than 1,000, are known as New Dunkers. A third separation occurred in 1881, resulting in the denomination known as Old German Baptist Brethren, or Old Order Dunkers, who have several score of churches and a membership approaching 4,000; while the Brethren Church, or Progressive Dunkers, the outcome of a fourth schism, in 1882, claims upward of 17,000 members. The Dunkards try to live simply and strictly by the precepts and examples of the Holy Scriptures as they understand them, carried into all the affairs of life, and to reject all vanity and all worldly ways for which they can find no Biblical authority. Excepting the Progressives, they dress severely, shun dancing and other frivolities, permit no musical instruments in their homes, forbid their members to make, sell or use intoxicants, to seek higher education, or to engage in politics. They were also among the earliest opponents of slavery. They practice "trine immersion," each candidate for church membership being "dipped" three times as the names of the Holy Trinity are invoked. The divisions of the sect were occasioned by the revolt of some groups against too strict insistence upon, and by others against too much relaxation of, these austerities. The Progressives, while holding to the concept of conforming life to the Bible, have lifted many of the primitive restrictions, notably in matters of education and of dress.

Dunkeld (dun.keld'). Registration district and market town, in C Scotland, in Perthshire, situated on the river Tay ab. 13 mi. NW of Perth, ab. 456 mi. N of London by rail. It was a seat of the Culdees from the 8th to the 12th century. The cathedral, built in the 14th and 15th centuries, is roofless except the choir, which has been restored and serves as the parish church. There is a square western tower, with turrets. Pop. of registration district, 751 (1931).

Dunkerley (dung'kėr.li), William Arthur. See Oxenham, John.

Dunkerque (dun'kėrk; French, dœn.kerk). [Former French spelling, Dunquerque; English, Dunkirk; German, Dünkirchen; Eng. trans., "Church on the Dunes."] Town in N France, in the department of Nord, situated on the Strait of Dover, at the junction of a number of canals, near the border of Belgium. It is the fourth largest port in France, exporting the industrial products of the department of Nord and importing the raw materials which these industries consume. It is also an important fishing port, particularly for herring, and has shipyards and naval construction works, and linen, jute, cotton, metallurgical, and chemical industries. The center of the town is surrounded by old ramparts. It has a museum and a number of historic churches and houses. The Hôtel de Ville was built (1896–1901) after plans by Louis Cordonnier. Dunkerque belonged originally to the counts of Flanders, and the population still retains a Flemish dialect along with French. The town was often besieged, belonging successively to England, Burgundy, Spain, and France. It fell again to England in 1658, but was sold to France by Charles II in 1662. It was fortified by Vauban. Among its naval heroes was Jean Bart. The British besieged it unsuccessfully in 1793. It suffered bombardment in World War I. At the beginning of World War II, it saw the spectacular evacuation (May 28–June 4, 1940) of more than 330,000 British, Belgian, and French soldiers. Later in World War II it was subjected to damaging air bombardments, in the course of which a large part of the town, including the Church of Saint Eloi, was destroyed. 10,575 (1946).

Dunkerque, Battle of. Military operation in World War II after the fall (May 28, 1940) of Belgium and the subsequent collapse of the Allied lines. The British expeditionary forces were cut off and pinned against the Channel coast. Their removal from the beaches near Dunkerque was one of the great military evacuations of history. Using virtually every ship which could make the Channel crossing, over 330,000 men were rescued (May 28–June 4) despite constant air and artillery attack. In addition to 30,000 men who were killed by strafing and in rear-guard defense, the British lost much valuable materiel, as well as several destroyers and small craft.

Dunkerque, Treaty of. A 50-year Anglo-French treaty of alliance, of largely military significance, signed on March 4, 1947. It provides for common consultation and action to forestall a German policy of aggression or "an initiative likely to make possible such a policy." It also pledged the signatories to consult on economic relations between the two countries.

Dunkers (dung'kėrz). See Dunkards.

Dunkery Beacon (dung'kėr.i). See under Exmoor.

Dünkirchen (dün'kir.ċhęn). German name of Dunkerque.

Dunkirk (dun'kėrk). City in E Indiana, in Blackford and Jay counties. 3,048 (1950).

Dunkirk. City in SW New York, in Chautauqua County, on Lake Erie ab. 35 mi. SW of Buffalo. Manufactures include oil-refinery machinery, boilers, radiators, shovels, and silk. 18,007 (1950).

Dunkirk. English name of Dunkerque.

Dún Laoghaire (dön la'ri). [Former names, Kingstown, Dunleary (dun.lir'i).] Borough, seaport, and resort in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Dublin, situated on Dublin Bay ab. 7 mi. SE of Dublin. It is now included within the boundaries of the city of Dublin, and forms the lower port of that city. The port was built in 1817. It is the headquarters of several yacht clubs and is the terminus of the passenger and mail steamer line from Holyhead, Wales. 47,963 (1951).

Dunlap (dun'lap), John. b. at Strabane, County Tyrone, Ireland, 1747; d. Nov. 27, 1812. American printer and publisher. He came (c1757) to America, and was owner (after 1766) of a bookselling and printing shop in Philadelphia. He was publisher (1771 et seq.) of a weekly newspaper, The Pennsylvania Packet, or the General Advertiser, which became (1784) the first daily newspaper in the U.S. In his office were printed the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

Dunlap, William. b. at Perth Amboy, N.J., Feb. 19, 1766; d. at New York, Sept. 28, 1839. American playwright, theater manager, painter, and historian. He early displayed an aptitude for drawing and studied under the painter Benjamin West at London, where he developed an interest in the theater which he manifested upon his return to America. His first successful play (1789) was a comedy, The Father; or American Shandyism (reprinted as The Father of an Only Child). His other plays include Leicester (produced in 1794); the first Gothic-type plays written in America, Fontainville Abbey (produced in 1795) and Ribbemont; or, the Feudal Baron (produced in 1796); André (produced in 1798); and The Italian Father (produced in 1799). In 1796 he bought an interest in the Old American Company, at that time the only theatrical firm in New York, of which he became (1798) the sole director and manager. After producing many successful plays adapted from the French and German, he fell into difficulties and was forced into bankruptcy (1805). He devoted himself to painting for a time, and in 1806 became general assistant to T. A. Cooper, manager of the Park Theatre. He left this post in 1811 to resume painting and for a brief time in 1813 managed a magazine, the Monthly Recorder. Again in financial straits, he found relief after his appointment (1814) as assistant paymaster-general to the state militia, a post he held until 1816, when he again took up portrait painting. In 1826 he helped to found the National Academy of Design, of which he was vice-president (1831–38) and in which he held a professorship of historical painting for some years. His later years saw the writing of his most important works, the History of the American Theatre (1832) and the History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts of Design in the United States (2 vols., 1834). His other works include Memoirs of George Fred. Cooke, Esq., Late of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden (1813), Life of Charles Brockden Brown (1815), Thirty Years Ago; or, the Memoirs of a Water Drinker (1836), A History of New York, for Schools (1837), and History of the New Netherlands, Province of New York, and State of New York, to the Adoption of the Federal Constitution (2 vols., 1839–40).

Dun-le-Roi (dėn.lę.rwä). See Dun-sur-Auron.

Dunloe (dun.lō'), Gap of. Mountain pass in Munster province, Irish Republic, in County Kerry, ab. 6 mi. SW of Killarney. It passes between Macgillicuddy's Reeks on the W and Purple Mountain on the E, at a maximum elevation of 795 ft. It is noted for its grand and rugged beauty. Length, ab. 4 mi.

Dunlop (dun'lop, dun.lop'), Cape. [Also: Dunlop Point, Rocky Point.] Rocky headland in Antarctica, lying ab. 13 mi. S by SE of Cape Roberts, along the Wilson Piedmont Glacier of Victoria Land, in ab. 77°12′ S., 163°25′ E. It was first charted by the British Antarctic Expedition (1908–09).

Dunlop, John Boyd. b. at Dreghorn, Scotland, Feb. 5, 1840; d. at Dublin, Ireland, Oct. 23, 1921. Scottish veterinary surgeon, remembered chiefly for his invention of the pneumatic tire (c1887), first used on tricycles, later on bicycles and automobiles. One of the biggest tire manufacturers of Britain was named after him the Dunlop Rubber Company, Ltd.

Dunlop, John Colin. b. in Scotland, 1785; d. there, 1842. Scottish author and critic. He published History of Fiction (1814), adversely criticized by Hazlitt in the Edinburgh Review; History of Roman Literature, from the Earliest Period to the Augustan Age (1823–28), Memoirs of Spain during the Reigns of Philip IV and Charles II (1834), and Selections from the Latin Anthology, Translated into English Verse (1838).

Dunlop Island. [Also, Terrace Island.] Island in Antarctica, triangular in shape, lying along the Wilson Piedmont Glacier of Victoria Land, and NE of Cape Dunlop, in ab. 77° 12′ S., 163°27′ E.

Dunmail Raise (dun.māl'). Pass in NW England, situated on the Cumberland-Westmorland border, in the Lake District. It is on the route between Ambleside and Keswick. Elevation, ab. 780 ft.

Dunmore (dun'mōr, dun.mōr'). [Former name, Bucks-town.] Borough in NE Pennsylvania, in Lackawanna County: anthracite coal mining; manufactures of silk yarn. Settled in 1783, it was renamed in 1840. Pop. 20,305 (1950).

Dunmore, Earl of. Title of Murray, John (1737–1808).

Dunmow (dun'mō). Rural district in SE England, in Essex, situated on the river Chelmer ab. 40 mi. NE of London by rail. It includes the villages of Great Dunmow and Little Dunmow. 18,214 (1951).

Dunmow. Local name for Great Dunmow.

Dunmow Flitch. Flitch of bacon awarded to any married pair who could take oath at the end of the first year and a day of their married life that there had not only been no jar or quarrel, but that neither had ever wished the knot untied. The custom, it is said, was originated in the priory of Little Dunmow, England, by Robert Fitzwalter, in 1244. The first recorded presentation of the bacon is dated 1445 (Chartulary of Dunmow Priory). Similar customs exist elsewhere, in England, Brittany, and other parts of Europe.

Dunn (dun). Town in C North Carolina, in Harnett County: marketing center for an agricultural area. 6,316 (1950).

Dunn, Beverly Wyly. b. at Clinton Parish, La., 1860; d. at New York, May 10, 1936. American army officer and ordnance expert who invented the high explosive known as "explosive D" or "dunnite." A graduate (1883) of the U.S. Military Academy, he organized (1908) the Bureau of Explosives for the American Railway Association, and retired (1911) from the army to serve (until 1934) as a member of it. He was one of the official investigators of the Black Tom explosion of July 30, 1916, at Jersey City, N.J., and reëntered the U.S. army for the duration of World War I. He developed one of first time-fuses for high-explosive shells.

Dunn, Gano. b. at New York, Oct. 18, 1870; d. there, April 10, 1953. American electrical engineer, noted for dynamo designs, and work on hydroelectric development and power distribution in factories. He was a U.S. delegate and executive committee member at an international conference (1936) on the use and development of electric power. He was a member (1939–41) of the U.S. Patent Office advisory committee, and (during World War II) a special consultant on power and steel to the U.S. Office of Production Management.

Dunn, Joseph. b. at New Haven, Conn., 1872; d. there, April 9, 1951. American linguist. Graduated from Yale, he studied in France and Germany, and in 1904 was named professor of Celtic language and literature at the Catholic University of America. Author of A Grammar of the Portuguese Language (1927).

Dunn, Samuel Orace. b. at Bloomfield, Iowa, March 8, 1877—. American editor and transportation authority.

He was the editor of Railway Age Gazette and Railway Age (1908 et seq.). He is the author of such books as American Transportation Question (1912) and Government Ownership of Railways (1913).

Dún na nGall (dön′ nąng ôl′). Irish name of County Donegal.

Dunne (dun), Finley Peter. b. at Chicago, July 10, 1867; d. April 24, 1936. American journalist and humorist, best known for his creation of "Mr. Dooley." He was a reporter for various Chicago newspapers from 1885 to 1891, city editor (1891–92) of the Times, on the staffs of the Evening Post and Times-Herald (1892–97), and editor (1897–1900) of the Journal (all at Chicago). His Mr. Dooley essays, in the form of dialogues (or rather monologues), first appeared in the Evening Post. The witty dialect series took the public fancy with apt commentary on the national scene, the foibles of the day, and the like. His works include Mr. Dooley in Peace and in War (1898), Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of his Countrymen (1898), Mr. Dooley's Philosophy (1900), Mr. Dooley's Opinions (1901), Observations by Mr. Dooley (1902), Dissertations by Mr. Dooley (1906), Mr. Dooley Says (1910), and Mr. Dooley: On Making a Will and Other Necessary Evils (1919).

Dunne, John William. b. 1875; d. Aug. 24, 1949. British airplane designer and philosopher. He designed and constructed (1906–07) the first British military airplane, and propounded the philosophical theory of "Serialism" through such books as An Experiment With Time (1927), The Serial Universe (1934), and The New Immortality (1938). His theories of time have influenced a number of writers, including W. Somerset Maugham and J. B. Priestley.

Dunnet Head (dun′ęt). Promontory in N Scotland, in Caithness-shire, ab. 8 mi. NE of Thurso. It is the most northerly point on the Scottish mainland. (John O'Groat's House, ab. 11 mi. E of Dunnet Head, is commonly said to be the most northerly point, but Dunnet Head lies ab. 2 mi. farther north.) Elevation, 346 ft.

Dunning (dun′ing), John. See Ashburton, 1st Baron.

Dunning, William Archibald. b. at Plainfield, N.J., May 12, 1857; d. Aug. 25, 1922. American historian. Serving for most of his professional life as a teacher of history at Columbia University, he was that institution's first Lieber professor of history and political science (1904–22), and a pioneer specialist in the history of the Reconstruction era. He was a cofounder and president (1913) of the American Historical Association, and editor (1894–1903) of the Political Science Quarterly. His works include Essays on the Civil War and Reconstruction (1898), A History of Political Theories; Ancient and Mediaeval (1902), From Luther to Montesquieu (1905), Reconstruction, Political and Economic, 1865–1877 (1907), The British Empire and the United States (1914), and From Rousseau to Spencer (1920).

Dunnottar Castle (du.not′ar). Ruined castle in Kincardineshire, Scotland, situated near the North Sea 1½ mi. S of Stonehaven. The existing structure dates from 1392.

Dunnville (dun′vil). Town in Ontario, Canada, situated on the Grand River a few miles from where it enters Lake Erie. It is the trading center for a rich farming area. 4,478 (1951).

Dunois (dü.nwȧ), Jean. [Title, Comte de Dunois; called the "Bastard of Orléans."] b. at Paris, Nov. 23, 1402; d. at St.-Germain-en-Laye, near Paris, Nov. 24, 1468. Natural son of the brother of Charles VI, Louis, Duke of Orléans (1372–1407), and Mariette d'Enghien, celebrated for his military prowess and his gallantries. He first came into prominence at Montargis in 1427, when he raised the siege and defeated the English. At the "battle of the herrings" near Rouvray in 1429 (when the French attacked an English wagon train, and the English defended themselves from behind barrels of herring) he was wounded, but that same year succeeded in holding out at Orléans until Joan of Arc arrived to drive off the English and defeat them at Patay. He carried on the fight after she was killed and by 1436 had retaken Paris. In 1440 he was for a time in league with the nobles against Charles VII in the Praguerie, but after the truce of 1444 was broken campaigned vigorously against the English. He took (1449–51) Harfleur, Honfleur, Cherbourg, Blaye, Bordeaux, and Bayonne, driving the English out of northern France altogether and restricting them in the west. Charles made him a prince of the royal blood, but Louis XI, when he came to the throne in 1461, stripped him of his honors. Dunois joined the League of the Public Good, a group of nobles in revolt against Louis's attempt to consolidate an absolute monarchy, and negotiated the compromising peace of Conflans. He is introduced in Scott's Quentin Durward and in the first part of Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Dunoon (dun.ön′). Police burgh and seaside resort in W central Scotland, in Argyllshire, situated on the W bank of the Firth of Clyde ab. 27 mi. W of Glasgow. It has no direct rail connections for passengers, being reached by rail to Glasgow, ab. 401 mi. N of London; thence by steamer. 10,020 (est. 1948).

Dunoyer de Segonzac (dü.nwȧ.yā dę sę.gôn.zȧk), André Albert Marie. b. at Boussy-St.-Antoine, France, July 6, 1884—. French painter, etcher, and water-colorist. He was educated at the École des Beaux-Arts and the Julian Academy, both at Paris, and elsewhere. From 1907 to 1920 he exhibited at the Salon des Indépendants and the Salon d'Automne; by 1910 his own personal style began to be formulated with such paintings as The Drinkers. Although familiar with all of the important art movements in France, he has remained independent of them. He has worked chiefly in the provinces of France, mainly in the South, painting, illustrating books, and making etchings. Among his most important works are The Village, Nude, Bathers, The River, The Bridge at Joinville, The Bread of Fantasy, and The Tree (oils); Landscape at Morin, Gardens at St.-Cloud, Nude, and Eight Illustrations of War (etchings); Isadora Duncan, Notes Taken at The Front, and Scheherazade are some of the books he has illustrated.

Dunquerque (dėn.kerk). Former French spelling of Dunkerque.

Dunraven and Mount-Earl (dun.rā′ven; mount.ėrl′), 3rd Earl of. A title of Quin, Sir Edwin Richard Windham Wyndham-.

Dun Rig (dun rig′). Mountain in S Scotland, situated on the Peebleshire-Selkirkshire boundary. Elevation, ab. 2,433 ft.

Dunrobin Castle (dun.rob′in). Seat of the duke of Sutherland, near Golspie, Scotland. The present building is comparatively modern, although it incorporates the remains of an 11th-century stronghold.

Duns (dunz, duns). [Also, Dunse.] Police burgh and market town in S Scotland, in Berwickshire, ab. 13 mi. W of Berwick-upon-Tweed, Northumberland (England), ab. 356 mi. N of London by rail. Duns is the county seat of Berwickshire and the largest town in the county. 1,958 (est. 1948).

Dunsany (dun sā′ni), Lord. [Full name, Edward John Moreton Drax Plunkett; title, 18th Baron Dunsany.] b. July 24, 1878—. Irish poet and dramatist; nephew of Sir Horace Curzon Plunkett (1854–1932). As a member of the Coldstream Guards, he served in the Boer War and in World War I. He was Byron professor of English literature at Athens University, Greece. His many poems and tales include The Gods of Pegana (1905), Evil Kettle (1926), Fifty Poems (1929), Travel Tales of Mr. Jorkens (1931), My Talks With Dean Spanley (1936), Patches of Sunlight (1938), Mirage Water (1938), and Rory and Bran. He achieved early acclaim as a dramatist with Glittering Gates (produced 1909 by W. B. Yeats at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin); among his other plays are The Gods of the Mountain (1911), A Night at an Inn (1916), If (1921), Cheezo, The Laughter of the Gods, and Lord Adrian (1933). Dunsany's stories and plays are fantasies dealing with the supernatural and supernatural beings; his style is simple yet deals in the paradoxes of human existence.

Dunsinane (dun.si.nān′, dun′si.nān). [Also: Dunsinane Hill, Dunsinnan.] One of the Sidlaw Hills, in C Scotland, in Perthshire, ab. 8 mi. NE of Perth. Here, in 1054, Siward, Earl of Northumberland, defeated Macbeth. The ruins of an ancient fortress, locally known as Macbeth's Castle, are here. Elevation, ab. 1,012 ft.

Duns Scotus (dunz skō′tus), John. [Called Doctor Subtilis.] b. at Duns, Scotland, c1265; d. at Cologne, Germany, Nov. 8, 1308. Scholastic theologian, one of the most influential in the history of medieval Europe. He was the founder of the scholastic system called Scotism, which long contended for supremacy among the schoolmen with the system called Thomism, founded by Thomas Aquinas. Nothing is known with certainty concerning his personal history. According to the commonly accepted tradition, he was born c1265 at Duns (or Dunse), Berwickshire, Scotland (hence his surname Scotus, or Scot), was a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, became a Franciscan friar, was chosen professor of theology at Oxford in 1301, removed in 1304 to Paris, where, in a disputation on the Immaculate Conception of Jesus Christ by the Virgin Mary he displayed so much ingenuity and resource as to win the title of Doctor Subtilis, and where he rose to the position of regent of the university. He died at Cologne, Germany, on Nov. 8, 1308, while on a mission in the interest of his order. His name, Duns, Dunse, or Dunce, came to be used as a common appellative, meaning "a very learned man," and, being applied satirically to ignorant and stupid persons as being as sensible as the extreme scholastics, gave rise to "dunce" in its present sense. Scotism, the movement he founded, was an extreme form of realism and anti-intellectualism. Instead of the middle of the road between faith and reason sought by Saint Thomas Aquinas, Duns Scotus restricted the sphere of rational thought, thus eventually driving the wedge between philosophy and religion that emancipated the philosophers from strict adherence to religious subjects, an effect opposite to the one Scotus attempted to achieve. The argument concerning the Immaculate Conception found the Thomists on one side and the Scotist Dominicans on the other; the latter were joined by the Franciscans, the Jesuits, and the Sorbonne theologians; the feud was dissolved with the publication (in 1854, after five and one half centuries of argument) of the papal bull Ineffabilis Deus of Pope Pius IX. Scotus held that true knowledge could be reached only through revelation from God. As a corollary to this, he held that the existence of God was essentially unprovable (it must be presupposed) and that God's nature was incomprehensible to man.

Dunstable (dun'stą.bl). Municipal borough and market town in E central England, in Bedfordshire, ab. 35 mi. NW of London by rail. Its industries include printing, straw plaiting, and the manufacture of straw hats. A considerable development and growth of population has occurred in Dunstable since 1933. Dunstable Downs, a part of the Chiltern Hills, are nearby; they are a popular week-end resort, and have recently become noted as a gliding center. 17,108 (1951).

Dunstable or Dunstaple (dun'stą.pl), John. d. Dec. 24, 1453. English composer, chief of the early school of contrapuntists, said to have been the inventor of true counterpoint.

Dunstan (dun'stan), Saint. b. near Glastonbury, England, 924 or 925 A.D.; d. at Canterbury, England, May 19, 988 A.D. Archbishop of Canterbury. He was the son of Heorstan, a West Saxon noble, and was brought up at the abbey of Glastonbury and at the court of Ethelstan. But the scorn of his friends and the influence of the bishop of Winchester, to whom he fled, combined with a grave illness, made him take monastic vows. He was appointed abbot of Glastonbury by Edmund not later than 945. He became the chief adviser of Edred (reigned 946–955), but was banished by Edred's successor, the young king Edwig (955–959), whose ill will he incurred by refusing to consent to a marriage upon which the young king had set his heart, and by rudely bringing him back to the banqueting hall when, at his coronation, he left it for the society of the lady of his choice. Dunstan went to Flanders. He was recalled by Edwig's successor, Edgar (reigned 959–975), by whom he was created archbishop of Canterbury in 959 and restored to political power. He retained his influence at court during the reign of Edward (975–978), but appears to have lost it on the accession of Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready) in 978. Dunstan's civil policies were aimed at integrating the Danes and the English as a nation; in this civil area and ecclesiastically his basic tenet was the rule of law. He fostered the strict Benedictine rule and campaigned against simony. His feast day is May 19.

Dunstan, Guy Mainwaring. Original name of Morton, Guy Mainwaring.

Dunster (dun'stėr), Henry. b. in Lancashire, England, 1609; d. at Scituate, Mass., Feb. 27, 1658 or 1659. First president of Harvard College. He was inaugurated in 1640 and resigned in 1654.

Dun-sur-Auron (dėn.sür.ō.rôn). [Also, Dun-le-Roi.] Town in central France, in the department of Cher, situated on the Auron River and the Canal du Berry, ab. 17 mi. SE of Bourges. It has coal mines. It is a town of medieval character, with a beautiful Romanesque church and a number of industries. 3,676 (1946).

Dunton (dun'tọn), John. b. at Graffham, Huntingdonshire, England, May 4, 1659; d. 1733. English bookseller and author. In 1694 Dunton printed The Ladies Dictionary described as "a Compleat Directory to the Female-Sex in all Relations, Companies, Conditions, and States of Life." He wrote Life and Errors of John Dunton (1705), and Letters from New England (published in 1867).

Düntzer (dün'tsėr), Johann Heinrich Joseph. b. at Cologne, Germany, July 12, 1813; d. there, Dec. 16, 1901. German literary historian and philologist. He became (1846) librarian of the Roman Catholic Gymnasium (advanced secondary school) at Cologne. He published numerous critical works on Goethe, Homer und der epische Cyclus (1839), and others.

Dunwich (dun'ich). Civil parish and village in E England, in East Suffolk, situated on the coast of the North Sea ab. 4 mi. SW of Southwold, ab. 90 mi. NE of London. It was the seat of the bishopric of East Anglia, said to have been founded c630, and was important in the early Middle Ages. Successive inroads of the sea have destroyed churches and other buildings, leaving only a small village. 174 (1931).

Dunwoody (dun'wůd.i), Robert. Central character in The Wayward Man (1927), a novel by St. John Ervine.

Dupanloup (dü.pän.lō), Félix Antoine Philibert. b. at St.-Félix, near Chambéry, France, Jan. 3, 1802; d. Oct. 11, 1878. French prelate. He was made bishop of Orléans in 1849, was elected deputy to the National Assembly in 1871, and became a life senator in 1875.

Duparc (dü.pårk), Marie Eugène Henri Fouques. b. at Paris, Jan. 21, 1848; d. 1933. French composer. He studied under César Franck and helped found the Société Nationale. His compositions include the symphonic poem Lenore, the nocturne Aux Étoiles, the three-voice motet Benedicat vobis Dominus, and Feuilles Volantes, for piano, as well as many songs for which he is chiefly remembered.

Dupaty (dü.pą.tē), Charles Marguerite Jean Baptiste Mercier. b. at La Rochelle, France, May 9, 1746; d. at Paris, Sept. 17, 1788. French jurist. He was the author of Réflexions historiques sur les lois criminelles (1788).

Dupe (dūp), Lady. Old lady in Dryden's comedy Sir Martin Mar-all.

Duperrey (dü.pe.rā), Louis Isidor. b. at Paris, Oct. 21, 1786; d. Sept. 10, 1865. French naval officer and scientist. He served as hydrographer in the Uranie, under de Freycinet, who made explorations (1817–20) in the North Pacific, and commanded (1822–25) the Coquille in a scientific expedition to Oceania and South America. He determined the positions of the magnetic poles and the figure of the magnetic equator. He contributed the volumes on hydrography and physical science to Voyage autour du monde, exécuté par ordre du roi sur la corvette La Coquille pendant les années 1822, 1823, 1824, et 1825 (1826–30).

Duperron (dü.pe.rôn), Jacques Davy. b. at St.-Lô, France, Nov. 15, 1556; d. at Paris, Sept. 5, 1618. French cardinal, instrumental in converting Henry IV to Catholicism.

Dupes, Day of. Name given to Nov. 11, 1630, when the enemies of Richelieu were foiled in their intrigues against him with Louis XIII. Richelieu, apparently ruined in the eyes of the king, had an interview with him and emerged completely in favor again.

Dupetit-Thouars (dü.ptē.twår), Abel Aubert. b. at Saumur, France, Aug. 3, 1793; d. at Paris, March 17, 1864. French rear admiral; nephew of L. M. A. Dupetit-Thouars. He circumnavigated the globe (1837–39), extended a French protectorate over Tahiti and the Marquesas islands in 1842, and over the entire Society group in 1843.

Dupetit-Thouars, Louis Marie Aubert. b. at Bournois, near Saumur, France, Nov. 5, 1758; d. at Paris, May 11, 1831. French botanist and traveler. He visited (1792–1802) Mauritius, Madagascar, and Réunion.

Dupin (dü.paṅ), André Marie Jean Jacques. [Called "Dupin the Elder."] b. at Varzy, Nièvre, France, Feb. 1, 1783; d. at Paris, Nov. 18, 1865. French lawyer and politician; brother of François Pierre Charles, Baron Dupin. He was president (1832–40) of the Chamber of Deputies, and in 1849 was elected to the assembly. Author of Principia Juris Civilis (5 vols., 1806).

Dupin, François Pierre Charles, Baron. b. at Varzy, Nièvre, France, Oct. 6, 1784; d. at Paris, Jan. 18, 1873. French mathematician and politician who published numerous books on geometry and military matters; brother of André Marie Jean Jacques Dupin. He was educated at the École Polytechnique and entered the maritime service, becoming minister of marine in 1834 and a senator in 1852. He was elected to the Academy of Sciences (1832) and served as councilor of state (1831). In mathematics he is remembered for the "Dupin indicatrix" of differential geometry. His books include Développements de géométrie (1813), Voyages dans la Grande-Bretagne (1820–24), Applications de géométrie (1825), and Forces productives des nations (1851).

Du Pin or Dupin (dü.paṅ), Louis Ellies. b. June 17, 1657; d. June 6, 1719. French Catholic clergyman and church historian. He studied at the Sorbonne, and taught at the Collège de France, becoming known for his notes on the works and teachings of the Church Fathers. Bossuet attacked him in 1692, condemning him for audacity as a critic and demanding his censure by ecclesiastical authority.

Dupleix (dü.pleks), Joseph François, Marquis. b. at Landrecies, Nord, France, Jan. 1, 1697; d. at Paris, Nov. 10, 1763. French general, governor general (1742–54) of the French East Indies. The son of a director of the French East India Company, he made his reputation as administrator of Chandernagor after 1730; in 1742 he was appointed governor general of the French establishments in India. His subsequent attempts to expand French influence in India brought him into conflict with Robert Clive, whose military abilities were greater than Dupleix's. Dupleix made treaties with various native princes and organized native troops on a European basis. He clashed with Bertrand François Mahé, Comte de la Bourdonnais. La Bourdonnais had captured (1746) Madras and when he wished to return it to the English was ordered not to by Dupleix, his nominal superior. Dupleix successfully defended Pondichéry against the English siege in 1748, a siege which ended with the news of the signing (in Europe) of the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle between the British and the French. He then began diplomatic maneuvers to control large areas in India, the Coromandel Coast, the Carnatic, and the Deccan. But Clive resisted and the French government, not wishing to antagonize the English, superseded Dupleix rather than risk war, and he returned to France in 1754. There he discovered that neither the company nor the government would recompense him for the large personal fortune he had spent in trying to extend French interests; he died in poverty.

Duplessis (dü.ple.sē), Georges Victor Antoine Gratet-. b. at Chartres, France, March 19, 1834; d. March 26, 1899. French critic and historian of art, custodian of the department of prints in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris. He published numerous works.

Duplessis, Maurice Le Noblet. b. at Three Rivers (Trois Rivières), Quebec, Canada, April 20, 1890—. Canadian politician. He was elected (1927) to the Quebec legislature and by 1933 had risen to the leadership of the Quebec Conservative Party. In 1936, after forming a new political party, Union Nationale, Duplessis won a striking victory at the polls and overthrew a Liberal Party ascendancy in Quebec politics that had lasted for four decades; he became premier, attorney general, and president of council in the provincial government. A vigorous advocate of French-Canadian autonomy, Duplessis established a strict regime which, because of such stringent legislation as the "Padlock Law" of 1937 that attempted to prevent the dissemination of radical literature, was accused of incipient fascism. Such accusations, combined with Duplessis's determination to maintain local rule and customs in the face of a growing federal power in Canada, caused his defeat at the polls in 1939, when he campaigned on an antimilitary platform. From 1939 to 1944 he was leader of the opposition, but in 1944 scored a crushing victory over his opponents and again became premier. He was reëlected in 1948 and 1952.

Duplessis-Mornay (-môr.nā). See Mornay, Philippe de.

Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443 (1921) (dir'ing). U.S. Supreme Court decision holding that a secondary boycott by a labor union constituted unlawful interference with interstate commerce and hence did not come under the protection of the Clayton Antitrust Act. It applied the principle of equity to labor unions and effectively weakened the anti-injunction provisions of the Clayton Act. The majority opinion was written by Justice Pitney; Justice Brandeis wrote a dissenting opinion, concurred in by Justices Clark and Holmes.

Duplin Moor (dup'lin). See Dupplin Moor.

Duployé (dü.plwä.yā), Émile. b.1833; d. 1912. French inventor of a shorthand system. The Duployé stenographic method, which he developed and which is named for him, has been (and still is) widely used in France.

Dupnica or Dupnitsa (döp'nē.tsä). Former name of Marek.

Du Ponceau (dū pon'sō; French, dü pôṅ.sō), Pierre Étienne. [Also, Peter Stephen Duponceau.] b. at Île-de-Ré, France, June 3, 1760; d. at Philadelphia, April 1, 1844. French-American lawyer and philologist. He published Memoir on the Indian Languages of North America (1835), and others.

Dupong (dü.pôṅ), Pierre. b. Nov. 1, 1885—. Luxembourg statesman and lawyer. He studied at the universities of Berlin, Fribourg (Switzerland), and Paris; member of parliament; minister of finance and social welfare (1926–37); prime minister since 1937. During World War II he was in Canada with the government-in-exile until September, 1944, when he resumed his functions in Luxembourg.

du Pont (dū.pont', dū'pont). Name of a family prominent since the latter part of the 18th century in American industrial, financial, and political life. It may be said to have been established, as an American family, by Éleuthère Irénée du Pont and Victor Marie du Pont, who were the sons of Pierre Samuel du Pont de Nemours, a figure of considerable importance in the history of France during the latter part of the 18th century. The spelling of the name now preferred, and generally used, by all members of the family is "du Pont"; the spellings "Du Pont" or "DuPont" are seldom, if ever, used by the du Ponts themselves (except at the beginning of a sentence or in other situations requiring a capital letter), although they have wide usage in American general reference books.

Dupont (dū.pont'). Borough in E Pennsylvania, in Luzerne County, in an anthracite coal mining area. 4,107 (1950).

du Pont (dū.pont', dū'pont), Éleuthère Irénée. b. at Paris, June 24, 1771; d. at Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1834. American manufacturer, founder of the du Pont powder works in Delaware; son of Pierre Samuel du Pont de Nemours (1739–1817). In 1788 he was placed under Lavoisier in the laboratory of the royal powder works at Essonne, and after the French Revolution managed his father's printing-house at Paris. When the establishment was suppressed in 1797, he left (1799) with his father, some relatives, and his own family for America, where he conceived the idea of setting up an American gunpowder works. In 1801 he secured the necessary designs and machinery in France and, with the backing of funds supplied largely by his father's company, which had originally contemplated land exploitation, he established a powder works on a farm near Wilmington, Del. He settled there in 1802, supervised the erection of the mills, and by 1804 had powder ready for sale. Transactions with the U.S. government netted the company good profits, and its operations were further stimulated by the War of 1812. He became the chief maker of powder for the U.S. government, and also supplied South American countries. The name E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company is borne by the vastly expanded modern successor to this original company.

du Pont, Henry. b. at Eleutherian Mills, Wilmington, Del., Aug. 8, 1812; d. Aug. 8, 1889. American soldier and manufacturer of explosives; son of Éleuthère Irénée du Pont (1771–1834). Graduated (1833) from West Point, he was for a time on duty in the Creek Indian country of Alabama but resigned (1834) his commission to become active in his father's gunpowder works. In 1850, in partnership with his brother and their nephew Irénée du Pont, he became head of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company. He was responsible for expanding the operations of the firm, buying (1859) mills on Big Wapwallopen Creek, Luzerne County, Pa., for the manufacture of blasting powder, purchasing controlling interests in the Hazard Powder Company and in the California Powder Works in 1876, and working out, during the post-Civil War years, a method of making special cakes of large-grain powder for big guns. During the Civil War he served as major general of the Delaware armed forces and sold powder to the Union army and navy. He undertook the manufacture of Hercules powder in 1876.

du Pont, Henry Algernon. b. near Wilmington, Del., July 30, 1838; d. Dec. 31, 1926. American soldier, industrialist, and legislator; elder son of Henry du Pont. Graduated (1861) from West Point, he took part in many Civil War actions, chiefly as a commander of Union artillery. Promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1864, he received the Congressional Medal of Honor for distinguished services and extraordinary gallantry at Cedar Creek. Leaving the service in 1875, he became (1878) a member of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company and was instrumental in securing the charter for incorporation (1899), after which he became a vice-president. He became (1879) president of the Wilmington and Northern Railroad and as a member (1906–17) of the U.S. Senate was chairman of the military affairs committee from 1911 to 1913. His writings include The Early Generations of the Du Pont and Allied Families (1923), Campaign of 1864 in the Valley of Virginia (1925), and Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, a Biography (1926).

du Pont, Irénée. b. Dec. 21, 1876—. American industrialist; great-grandson of Éleuthère Irénée du Pont (1771–1834). Educated at Massachusetts Institute of Technology; associated (1903 et seq.) with E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company as vice-president and chairman of executive committee (1914–19), president (1919–26), and vice-chairman of board and chairman of finance committee (1926–40).

Dupont (dü.pôṅ) or Dupont de l'Eure (dü.pôṅ dẹ lėr), Jacques Charles. b. at Neubourg, Eure, France, Feb 27, 1767; d. on his estate, Rouge Pierre, in Normandy, France, March 3, 1855. French politician. He became president of the imperial court at Rouen in 1811, was a member (1817–48) of the Chamber of Deputies, was minister of justice for about six months in 1830, and was president of the provisional government formed in February, 1848.

du Pont (dū.pont', dū'pont), Lammot. b. Oct. 12, 1880; d. July 24, 1952. American industrialist; great-grandson of Éleuthère Irénée du Pont (1771–1834). He joined (1902) E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, and has served as vice-president in charge of miscellaneous manufacturing (1917 et seq.), president (1926–40), and chairman (1940–48) of the company.

Dupont (dü.pôṅ), Pierre. b. at Lyons, France, April 23, 1821; d. there, July 24, 1870. French lyric poet. He was a collaborator (1842–47) on the dictionary of the French Academy. His works include Les Deux Anges (1842; crowned by the Academy), Les Bœufs (1846), Le Chant des nations, and Le Chant des ouvriers.

du Pont (dū.pont', dū'pont), Pierre Samuel. b. at Wilmington, Del., Jan. 15, 1870—. American industrialist; great-grandson of Éleuthère Irénée du Pont (1771–1834). He joined (1890) E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company as chemist, and became a director and member of the company's finance committee.

du Pont, Samuel Francis. b. at Bergen Point, N.J., Sept. 27, 1803; d. at Philadelphia, June 23, 1865. American naval officer; son of Victor Marie du Pont. Appointed a midshipman by President Madison in 1815, he did not see active sea duty until 1817, when he embarked on a series of cruises that took him to European and South American waters. Promoted (1826) to lieutenant, he became a commander in 1842, served (1849) on Secretary of the Navy George Bancroft's board on the organization of the Annapolis naval school, and during the Mexican War served chiefly in the vicinity of Lower California. In the years between the wars he served on various tours of duty, and was promoted to the rank of captain in 1855, in which year he commanded the frigate Minnesota on a cruise to China. He became (1860) commandant of the Philadelphia navy yard, later served as the senior member of the Commission of Conference, which prepared naval operations plans, and in September, 1861, became commander of the South Atlantic blockading squadron, leading the successful Union expedition against Port Royal. Promoted to the rank of rear admiral in 1862, he later led operations along the southern coast. Heading a fleet of ironclads in 1863, he directed the unsuccessful attack upon the defenses of Charleston; relieved at his own request, he left active duty and performed his final service for the navy as a member of a naval board (1865) passing upon promotions for officers.

du Pont, Thomas Coleman. b. at Louisville, Ky., Dec. 11, 1863; d. Nov. 11, 1930. American industrialist and senator; great-grandson of Éleuthère Irénée du Pont (1771–1834). He was associated (1883 et seq.) with Kentucky coal and iron mining interests, was president (1902–15) of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, and served as U.S. senator (1921–28).

du Pont, Victor Marie. b. at Paris, Oct. 1, 1767; d. at Philadelphia, Jan. 30, 1827. American manufacturer and merchant; son of Pierre Samuel du Pont de Nemours (1739–1817). A member of the French diplomatic service, he served as attaché (1787 et seq.) to the first French legation in the U.S., as second secretary of legation (1791–92) and, in 1795, as first secretary of legation, later becoming consul for the Carolinas and Georgia and consul general in the U.S. However, he was not accredited by President John Adams as holder of this latter post because of existing differences between the U.S. and France. Returning to France, he joined his family and again embarked for America, where he settled at Alexandria, Va., and devoted his efforts to furthering the land company organized by his father and to an independent mercantile firm bearing his own name. Both this and a later land-development venture failed, and he subsequently removed to Wilmington, Del., where he became manager of woolen mills established by his brother, Éleuthère Irénée. He later became a director of the Bank of the United States and a member of the Delaware legislature.

Dupont de l'Étang (dü.pôṅ dẹ lā.täṅ), Comte Pierre. b. at Chabanais, Charente, France, July 14, 1765; d. at Paris, March 7, 1840. French general, distinguished at Marengo and other battles, and especially at Friedland (1807). He capitulated at Bailén in 1808.

du Pont de Nemours (dü pôṅ dẹ nẹ.mör; Anglicized, dū pont' dẹ nẹ.mör'), Pierre Samuel. b. at Paris, Dec. 14, 1739; d. near Wilmington, Del., Aug. 6, 1817. French political economist and politician. He assisted (1774–76) Turgot, was a deputy to the States-General in 1789, and became a member of the Council of the Ancients in 1795. He emigrated (1799) to the U.S., returned to France in 1802, and again went to the U.S. in 1815. He wrote Physiocratie, ou constitution naturelle du gouvernement le plus advantageux au genre humain (1768) and Philosophie de l'univers (1796).

Duport (dü.pôr), Jean Pierre. b. at Paris, Nov. 27, 1741; d. at Berlin, Dec. 31, 1818. French cellist. He was a member (1773–1811) of the orchestra and leader (1787–1806) of concerts at the Berlin court.

Düppel (düp'ėl). German name of Dybbøl.

Düppel, Lines of. In European history, name given to a chain of Danish fortifications W of Sønderborg on the island of Als (German, Alsen). They were stormed by the Prussians on April 18, 1864. They took their name from the town of Dybbøl (German, Düppel).

Dupplin Moor (dup'lin). [Also, Duplin Moor.] Moor in Perthshire, Scotland, ab. 7 mi. SW of Perth. Here Edward Baliol defeated (1332) the Scottish Royalists under the earl of Mar.

Duprat (dü.prȧ), Antoine. b. at Issoire, Puy-de-Dôme, France, Jan. 17, 1463; d. at Rambouillet, France, July 9, 1535. French cardinal and politician. He became chancellor and prime minister in 1515.

Duprat, Pascal Pierre. b. at Hagetmau, Landes, France, March 24, 1815; d. Aug. 17, 1885. French politician and journalist. He took part in the February revolution in 1848, founded with Lamennais Le Peuple Constituant, opposed the coup d'état in 1851, and was arrested and obliged to leave France. He was a member of the National Assembly in 1871, and, later, of the Chamber of Deputies Sent as ambassador to Chile in 1883, he died on the return journey.

Duprato (dü.prä.tō), Jules Laurent. b. at Nîmes, France, 1827; d. at Paris, in May, 1892. French composer. He won the prix de Rome in 1848, and became professor of harmony at the Paris Conservatory in 1866. Among his operas are Les Trovatelles (1854), Pâquerettes (1856), Salvator Rosa (1861), and Le Cerisier (1874).

Dupray (dü.prā), Louis Henri. b. at Sedan, France, Nov. 3, 1841; d. in April, 1909. French military painter.

Dupré (dü.prā'), August. b. at Mainz, Germany, Sept. 6, 1835; d. at Sutton, England, July 15, 1907. Analytical chemist. He studied at Darmstadt, Giessen, and Heidelberg, went to London in 1855, was lecturer on chemistry (1864–97) at Westminster Hospital, became chemical referee to the medical department of the Local Government Board in 1871, and was also chemical adviser to the explosives department of the Home Office. Besides publishing many papers on scientific subjects, he collaborated with others in writing The Nature, Origin, and Use of Wine and a Manual of Inorganic Chemistry.

Dupré, Ernest Pierre. b. at Marseilles, France, 1862; d. at Deauville, France, Sept. 2, 1921. French physician. He was an intern under L. Landouzy and A. M. E. Chauffard, and later a pupil of J. M. Charcot, J. J. Déjerine, and E. Brissaud. In 1918 he became professor of psychiatry at Paris. He wrote a monograph on paralysis and on the history of psychopathy. Author of Le Méningisme (1894), La Mythomanie (1905), Le Langage musical (1911), Anthropologie psychique, and Pathologie de l'imagination et de l'émotivité (1925).

Dupré, Giovanni. b. at Siena, Italy, March 1, 1817; d. at Florence, Jan. 10, 1882. Italian sculptor. Among his works are Abel and Cain (Pitti Palace, Florence), Sappho, Giotto, and the Cavour monument at Turin.

Dupré, Jules. b. at Nantes, France, April 5, 1812; d. at L'Isle-Adam, France, Oct. 6, 1889. French landscape painter. He was originally a porcelain painter in his father's factory. He received a second-class medal at the Exposition Universelle in 1867, a second-class medal in 1883, and a medal of honor at the Exposition Universelle in 1889. He spent his winters at Paris from 1876 to 1882. He was the first and last of the group of Fontainebleau artists of 1830, also called the Romantic or Natural School (including Rousseau, Delacroix, Corot, Diaz, Millet, Troyon, and others). His studio was for some years in the Abbey of Saint Pierre in the forest of Fontainebleau, and afterward at L'Isle-Adam. Several of his pictures are in the Luxembourg Museum, one at Lille, and a number are owned in the U.S.

Duprez (dü.prā), Caroline. [Married name, Madame Van den Heuvel.] b. at Florence, 1832; d. at Pau, France, April 17, 1875. French opera singer; daughter of G. L. Duprez.

Duprez, Gilbert Louis. b. at Paris, Dec. 6, 1806; d. Sept. 23, 1896. French tenor singer and composer. He published L'Art du chant (1845), La Mélodie (1873), and Souvenirs d'un chanteur (1888).

Dupuis (dü.pwē), Adolphe. b. at Paris, Aug. 16, 1824; d. at Nemours, France, Oct. 25, 1891. French actor.

Dupuis, Charles François. b. at Trie-le-Château, Oise, France, Oct. 16, 1742; d. at Issur-Tille, Côte-d'Or, France, Sept. 29, 1809. French scholar and man of letters. He was the author of L'Origine de tous les cultes, ou la religion universelle (1795).

Dupuy (dü.pwē), Charles Alexandre. b. at Le Puy, Haute-Loire, France, Nov. 5, 1851; d. at Ille-sur-Têt, Pyrénées-Orientales, France, July 23, 1923. French political leader, best known for his cool behavior during a bomb attack (Dec. 9, 1893) upon the French Chamber of Deputies, over which he was presiding. "Gentlemen, the session continues," he said, calming the meeting. He was professor of philosophy at the lycée (state-maintained secondary school) of Le Puy (1876) and of St.-Étienne (1880), and inspector of the academy at Ajaccio (1884). He entered politics in 1885, and was minister of public instruction under Ribot in 1892, president of the council and minister of the interior (1894, 1898–99), president of the Chamber of Deputies and minister of the interior (1893–94), and senator from Haute-Loire (1900–09). He was also premier (1893, 1894–95, 1898–99).

Dupuy, Jean. b. at St.-Palais, Gironde, France, Oct. 1, 1844; d. at Paris, Dec. 31, 1919. French political leader and journalist, during World War I member of the war committee of the French cabinet. He was editor of the newspapers Le Siècle and Le Petit Parisien, was a deputy and a senator, and held the posts of minister of agriculture, commerce, and public works. He built up Le Petit Parisien into a mass-circulation newspaper.

Dupuytren (dü.pwē.tran), Guillaume, Baron. b. at Pierre-Buffière, Haute-Vienne, France, Oct. 6, 1777; d. at Paris, Feb. 8, 1835. French surgeon and anatomist.

Duque Job (dö'kā нōb), El. Pseudonym of Gutiérrez Nájera, Manuel.

Duquesne (dụ.kān'). City in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County, on the Monongahela River ab. 1 mi. NW of McKeesport: manufactures of steel. It was named for Fort Duquesne. 17,620 (1950).

Duquesne (dü.ken; Anglicized, dụ.kān'), Abraham, Marquis. b. at Dieppe, France, 1610; d. at Paris, Feb. 2, 1688. French naval commander, distinguished in the wars against the Spanish and Dutch. He defeated the combined Spanish and Dutch fleets under De Ruyter off the Sicilian coast on April 21, 1676.

Duquesne (dụ.kān'), Fort. Fort erected by the French in 1754 on the site of what is now Pittsburgh, Pa. It was the initial objective of General Edward Braddock's ill-fated expedition (1755) and was taken by the English in 1758 after being abandoned by the French, and renamed Fort Pitt.

Duquesne University. Accredited coeducational institution of higher learning, conducted by the Roman Catholic Order of the Holy Ghost, at Pittsburgh, Pa. Known at first as Pittsburgh Catholic College of the Holy Ghost, it began offering instruction in 1878, was incorporated in 1882, and raised to university status under its present title in 1911. With an enrollment of about 5,000, it comprises a college of liberal arts and sciences, schools of law, pharmacy, business administration, education, music, and nursing, and a graduate school.

Duquesnoy (dü.ke.nwȧ), François. [Called François Flamand.] b. at Brussels, Belgium, 1594; d. at Leghorn, Italy, July 12, 1646. Dutch sculptor, son of an excellent sculptor from whom he received his first lessons. At an early age he made the figure of Justice on the portal of the Chancellerie at Brussels, and two angels for the door of the Jesuit church. In 1619 he was sent by the archduke Albert to study at Rome. He is especially famous for the children which he executed in marble and bronze, but more frequently in ivory, for drinking cups and the like.

Du Quoin (dö koin'). City in S Illinois, in Perry County ab. 70 mi. N of Cairo: coal-mining community. It was named for Jean Baptiste Du Quoigne, an Indian chief of the Kaskaskia tribe. 7,147 (1950).

Dura (dū'ra). See Dura-Europos.

Durack Range (dū'rak). Range of mountains in the N part of Western Australia, running S from Joseph Bonaparte Gulf.

Dura Den (dū'ra den'). Small glen in E Scotland, in Fifeshire, ab. 3 mi. E of Cupar. It is noted for the fossil fish found in its sandstone.

Dura-Europos (dū'ra.ụ.rō'pos). [Also, Dura.] Ancient city on the Euphrates founded around a rock fortress by a satrap of the Seleucid empire about the end of the 4th century B.C. It developed into an important town as the river station for caravans on the route from Palmyra to the East, and its walls were ab. 70 ft. high and ab. 2 mi. long. It belonged to the Parthian empire, and was taken by the Romans in 165 A.D. It remained on the border of Roman conquests, and was abandoned by them about the middle of the 3rd century A.D. Emperor Gordian III was killed here in a soldiers' revolt in 244 A.D. The ancient city site was discovered (in SE Syria at Salahiya, ab. 27 mi. NE of the Iraq border) by British troops in March, 1921, and has since been excavated by many expeditions, yielding rich archaeological discoveries.

Durán (dö.rän'), Agustín. b. at Madrid, Oct. 14, 1789; d. there, Dec. 1, 1862. Spanish critic and littérateur. He wrote Sobre la decadencia del teatro español (1828), and edited old Spanish romances and comedies.

Duran (dü.räñ), Carolus-. [Original name, Charles Auguste Émile Durand.] b. at Lille, France, July 4, 1837; d. 1917. French genre and portrait painter, a pupil of Souchon. He studied at Paris, and afterward in Italy and Spain. He painted portraits, especially of women, with great success, and was also a sculptor. He received medals in 1866, 1869, 1870, 1878, and 1879.

Durance (dü.räns). [Latin, Druentia.] River in SE France which joins the Rhône ab. 3 mi. SW of Avignon.

Durand (dụ.rand'). City in C Lower Michigan, in Shiawassee County near Flint: railroad and manufacturing center. 3,194 (1950).

Durand (dü.räñ), Alice Marie Céleste. See Gréville, Henry.

Durand (dụ.rand'), Asher Brown. b. at Jefferson Village, near Newark, N.J., Aug. 21, 1796; d. there, Sept. 17, 1886. American engraver and painter, noted for his pastoral landscapes. In 1812 he was apprenticed to a steel engraver, Peter Maverick, becoming the latter's partner in 1817; his accomplishment in the field was so outstanding that he was selected to engrave John Trumbull's painting "The Signing of the Declaration of Independence. Durand, in the meantime, set up his own establishment, and completed the Trumbull engraving in 1823, later producing a series of engravings, notably that of John Vanderlyn's Ariadne, which added to his reputation. Much of his work, remarkable for its craftsmanship, was devoted to engraved portraits of leading contemporaries. He also did engravings after the work of popular painters for such gift-books as The Talisman, The Atlantic Souvenir, The Token, and The Gift. In 1836 he abandoned the burin for the brush, and spent the remainder of his career as a painter, doing his best work as a painter of nature scenes drawn from New York and the New England states. With Thomas Cole, he is accounted as having established the American school of landscape painting. He was a charter member of the National Academy of Design and was its president from 1845 to 1861.

Durand, Edward Dana. b. at Romeo, Mich., Oct. 18, 1871—. American economist and statistician. Secretary (1900–02) of U.S. industrial commission; director (1909–13) of U.S. census; professor of economics (1913–17) at University of Minnesota; staff member (1917–19) of U.S. food administration in Europe; adviser (1919–21) to Polish food minister; chief economist (1930–35) and member (1935 et seq.) of U.S. tariff commission. Author of Finances of New York City (1898), The Trust Problem (1915), Industry and Commerce of the United States (1930), and other works.

Durand (dü.räñ), Nicolas. See Villegaignon, Chevalier de.

Durand (dụ.rand'), William Frederick. b. at Bethany, Conn., March 5, 1859—. American mechanical engineer, notable for work in hydrodynamic and aerodynamic science. Served (1880–87) in U.S. navy engineering corps; professor of mechanical engineering at Michigan State (1887–91) and Stanford (1904–24); professor of marine engineering (1891–1904) at Cornell. Author of Fundamental Principles of Mechanics (1889), Resistance and Propulsion of Ships (1898), Practical Marine Engineering (1901), Motor Boats (1907), Hydraulics of Pipe Lines (1921), and other works; general editor of Aerodynamic Theory (6 vols., 1934).

Durandana (dū.ran.dä'na). [Also: Durandal (dū'ran.däl), Durenda, Durendal, Durindana.] Sword of Orlando (Roland). It possessed magic qualities, was made by the supernatural smiths, and was once owned by Hector. In the French Roland poems, it is called Durendal or Durandal and was presented to Roland by Charlemagne.

Durandarte (dö.rän.där'tā). Legendary Spanish hero whose exploits are related in old Spanish ballads and in Don Quixote. He was the cousin of Montesinos, and was killed at the battle of Roncesvalles. One of the ballads, a fragment, can be traced to the Cancionero of 1511, and one, Durandarte, Durandarte, to the old Cancioneros Generales.

Durandus (dū.ran'dus), Guilelmus. [Also: Durantus; French, Guillaume Durand; Italian, Duranti or Durantis; called "the Speculator."] b. at Puimisson, near Béziers, France, 1237; d. at Rome, Nov. 1, 1296. French prelate and jurist. He wrote Speculum judiciale (1271; revised 1287, 1291), a fundamental source on the history of western liturgy, and Rationale divinorum officiorum (c1286), the first non-Biblical book to be printed (1459).

Durango (dụ.rang'gō). City in SW Colorado, county seat of La Plata County, on the Animas River: marketing center for agricultural produce. 7,459 (1950).

Durango (dö.räng'gō). State in N Mexico, lying between Chihuahua on the N, Coahuila on the E, Zacatecas on the SE, Jalisco and Nayarit on the S, and Sinaloa on the W. Capital, Durango; area, 47,691 sq. mi.; pop. 629,502 (1950).

Durango. [Full name, Victoria de Durango; former name, Guadiana.] City in N Mexico, capital of Durango state, near the foot of the Sierra Madre Occidental. The center of a mining region, it has metal foundries, and textile, glass, tanning, sugar-refining, and flour-milling industries. Iron ore for the iron and steel industry of Monterrey is mined just N of the city. Elevation, ab. 6,200 ft.; pop. 33,412 (1940).

Duranius (dụ.rā'ni.us). Latin name of the Dordogne River.

Durant (dụ.rant'). City in S Oklahoma, county seat of Bryan County: marketing center for livestock, cotton, grain, potatoes, hay, and peanuts; processing center for wild pecans, cottonseed, and bois d'arc (Osage orange). It is the seat of Southeastern State College and the Oklahoma Presbyterian College for Girls. Denison Dam is nearby. 10,541 (1950).

Durant, Henry. b. at Acton, Mass., June 18, 1802; d. Jan. 22, 1875. American Congregational clergyman, first president (1870–72) of the University of California. Ordained (1833) pastor of Congregational Church, Byfield, Mass.; moved (1853) to California and immediately aided the founding of Contra Costa Academy in Oakland; obtained charter (1855) for College of California which the legislature incorporated (1868) into the newly established University of California.

Durant, Henry Fowle. [Original name, Henry Welles Smith.] b. at Hanover, N.H., Feb. 20, 1822; d. Oct. 3, 1881. American lawyer, founder (1870) of Wellesley College. Graduate (1842) of Harvard; admitted (1843) to the bar; practiced (1843–48) at Lowell, Mass., and (1848–63) at Boston, changing his name (1851) because of many lawyers named Smith in Boston. He abandoned the law (1863) upon the death of his son, and conducted revivalist meetings in Massachusetts. After serving as a trustee of Mount Holyoke College, he obtained a charter (1870) for Wellesley College, of which he was treasurer (1870–81).

Durant, Thomas Clark. b. at Lee, Mass., Feb. 6, 1820; d. at North Creek, N.Y., Oct. 5, 1885. American railroad promoter, vice-president (1863–69) of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Constructor with Henry Farnam of the Michigan Southern Railroad and other roads in the Midwest. As vice-president of the Union Pacific Company, he subscribed or guaranteed three fourths of the original capital. When funds seemed insufficient, he obtained the charter of the Crédit Mobilier (which undertook to complete the road) and served as its president (1863 et seq.). A struggle for control of the enterprise developed with the Ames brothers of Boston, and he lost (1867) his Crédit Mobilier directorate. He remained a Union Pacific director, however, and drove through to completion of construction, which was achieved on May 10, 1869, when the Union Pacific tracks westward met the Central Pacific tracks coming eastward. He was ousted by the Ames group from his Union Pacific connections a little more than two weeks thereafter.

Durant, Will. [Full name, William James Durant.] b. at North Adams, Mass., Nov. 5, 1885—. American educator and writer. Professor of Latin and French (1907–11) at Seton Hall College; director (1914–27) New York's Labor Temple School; professor of philosophy (1935 et seq.) at the University of California at Los Angeles. He is the author of Philosophy and the Social Problem (1917), The Story of Philosophy (1929), Adventures in Genius (1931), On the Meaning of Life (1932), The Story of Civilization (1935), The Life of Greece (1939), Caesar and Christ (1944), The Age of Faith (1950), and other books.

Durant, William Crapo. b. at Boston, Dec. 8, 1861; d. at New York, March 17, 1947. American auto industrialist. He founded (1886) the Durant-Dort Carriage Company at Flint, Mich., and successively organized the Buick Motor Car Company (1905), the General Motors Company (1908), and the Chevrolet Motor Company (1915). He acquired (1915) the controlling interest in General Motors, holding it until 1920, and in 1921 organized Durant Motors, Inc. He subsequently became a director of the Industrial Rayon Corporation.

Durante (dö.rän'tā). Original prename of Dante.

Durante, Francesco. b. at Frattamaggiore, Italy, March 15, 1684; d. at Naples, Italy, Aug. 13, 1755. Italian composer of sacred music. In 1742 he succeeded Porpora at the Conservatory of Santa Maria di Loreto at Naples, where he died.

Durante (dū.ran'ti), James Francis. [Known as Jimmy Durante; nicknamed "Schnozzola."] b. at New York, Feb. 10, 1893—. American actor. Noted for his large nose and for his mangling of polysyllabic words, Durante has been a successful comedian in several mediums: stage, motion pictures, vaudeville, phonograph records, radio, and television. He is possibly best remembered as a night-club entertainer in the team of Clayton, Jackson, and Durante, but his musical-comedy appearances (Strike Me Pink, Red, Hot, and Blue, Jumbo, and others) and his radio (especially as the partner of Garry Moore) and television programs have made him known to a much wider audience.

Duranty (dū.ran'ti), Walter. b. at Liverpool, England, May 25, 1884—. American journalist and author. Staff member (1913–39), Moscow correspondent (1921–35), and roving correspondent (1934–39) of New York Times; awarded Pulitzer prize for reporting (1932) and O. Henry short-story prize (1929) for his tale of Russia The Parrot. Author of I Write as I Please (1935), One Life, One Kopek (1937), The Gold Train (1938), The Kremlin and the People (1942), Search for a Key (1943), USSR (1944), Stalin and Co. (1949), and other books.

Durão (dö.rouñ'), José de Santa Rita. b. at Cata Preta (now Santa Rita Durão), Minas Gerais, Brazil, c1720; d. at Lisbon, Portugal, Jan. 24, 1784. Brazilian poet, chiefly remembered for his epic poem Caramurú (1781). He was an Augustinian monk, a graduate and a professor of the University of Coimbra, and is believed to have lived for nine years in Italy.

Duras (dü.räs). See under Bonhomme Richard.

Durazno (dö.räz'nō). Department in C Uruguay. Cattle are raised here. Capital, Durazno; area, 5,527 sq. mi.; pop. 97,140 (est. 1947).

Durazno. [Also, San Pedro del Durazno.] City in S Uruguay, capital of Durazno department. Cattle and grain are raised in the surrounding area. Pop. ab. 27,000.

Durazzo (dö.rät'tsō). Italian name of Durrës, city.

Durazzo (dö.rät'sō). Facetious and lively old man in Philip Massinger's play The Guardian. He is the guardian of Caldoro.

Durban (dėr'ban). [Also, D'Urban.] [Former name, Port Natal.] City in S Africa, in Natal province, Union of South Africa, situated near Natal Bay on the E coast of the Union, ab. 295 mi. from Capetown by sea and 812 mi. and 494 mi. by rail from Capetown and Johannesburg respectively. It ranks with Capetown as a chief port of the country; further expansion of the city is planned. It is the port nearest to the gold fields of the Witwatersrand and the coal fields of the Transvaal, and is the terminus of the railway to the interior. It was renamed for Sir Benjamin D'Urban. 369,579, including 128,382 Europeans (1948).

D'Urban (dėr'ban), Sir Benjamin. b. 1777; d. at Montreal, Canada, May 25, 1849. English soldier and colonial administrator in Africa. He served (1808–13) against the French in the Peninsula War and became a major-general in the Portuguese army (holding at the same time the rank of colonel in the British army). He was subsequently lieutenant governor of and commander in chief in British Guiana (1821–25) and Barbados (1825–29). During his term (1842–47) as governor of and commander in chief in the Cape of Good Hope colony he occupied (1843) Natal as a measure to counter heavy Boer immigration. The city of Durban, formerly Port Natal, was renamed for him. He died while in command of British forces in Canada.

Durbin (dėr'bin), John Price. b. in Bourbon County, Ky., Oct. 10, 1800; d. at Philadelphia, Oct. 19, 1876. American clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, president of Dickinson College (1834–45). He was secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1850–72). He wrote Observations in Europe (1844), Observations in Egypt (1845), and others.

Durbunga (dur.bung'ga). See Darbhanga.

Durden (dėr'dęn), Dame. Notable housewife in a famous English song; hence the nickname given to the careful and conscientious Esther Summerson in Charles Dickens's Bleak House.

Durdles (dėr'dlz), Stony. "A stone-mason, chiefly in the gravestone, tomb, and monument way, and wholly of their color from head to foot," in Charles Dickens's Mystery of Edwin Drood. He is usually drunk, and has wonderful adventures in the crypt of the cathedral.

Düren (dü'rẹn). [Ancient name, Marcodurum.] City in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Roer River ab. 23 mi. SW of Cologne. It has large paper, machine, and cloth manufactures, a sugar refinery, and dairies. Buildings of interest include a library, theater, and museum of art and antiquities. There were before World War II various medieval buildings, most of which were damaged; the Church of Saint Anna (13th–16th centuries) and the Rathaus (city hall) were completely destroyed. Düren was an important city under the Frankish kings and under Charlemagne. It came in 1238 under the rule of the counts of Jülich, was burned down by the army of the emperor Charles V in 1543, fell to France in 1801, and to Prussia in 1814. Heavy fighting occurred around Düren between December, 1944, and March, 1945, in World War II. The population, chiefly Roman Catholic, declined in the period 1939–46 by 37.2 percent. 27,653 (1946), 35,234 (1950).

Durenda (dü.rẹn.dä) or Durendal (dū'rẹn.däl). See Durandana.

Dürer (dü'rėr), Albrecht. b. at Nuremberg, Germany, May 21, 1471; d. there, April 6, 1528. German painter, draftsman, and engraver, of Hungarian descent. The son of an able goldsmith, he learned that craft before entering the studio of the painter Michel Wohlgemut in 1486. Later he studied with Martin Schongauer at Colmar, and visited Venice, studying with most interest the works of Mantegna and Bellini, before setting up his own studio at Nuremberg in 1497. His principal achievements at this time were in the field of portraiture. In 1505 he went to Venice again, and stayed two years. Back at Nuremberg, his period (1505–20) of greatest activity ensued, during which especially he brought to superbly powerful perfection his drawings, copper engravings, and woodcuts. Nuremberg at that time was a center of intellectual activity; Humanism and Protestantism were in the air. Dürer, though he was patronized by, and painted the portraits of, the emperors Maximilian I and Charles V, was also a friend of Luther and Melancthon. It is believed, however, that he remained a Catholic, and the Christian tradition, certainly gave him by far the greater number of his subjects, as shown by his numerous paintings, engravings, and woodcuts deriving from the stories of the Fall, the Nativity, the Flight into Egypt, the Passion, and the lives of the early Christian saints and martyrs. Although it was said by some Italian painters that if he had been an Italian, Dürer would have been the greatest of Italian artists, his work in all media is almost wholly Gothic in derivation, markedly different from the pictures of the Italian High Renaissance. His portraits of this period are solid, shrewd, uncompromisingly realistic; his copperplates and woodcuts are full of energy, crowded with invention, often grim, sometimes grotesque. Contrasting with all this vehemence and exuberance are many painted landscapes and drawings of small animals or patches of grass and flowers, of a calm and touching beauty. In 1521 he visited the Netherlands; he was received with enthusiasm and respect, and he improved the opportunity to learn from the works of the Van Eycks, whose influence is evident in some of the work of his own last years, especially in the Four Evangelists, which some consider his masterpiece. Others give that title to his Adoration of the Magi at Florence. But it is perhaps a futile critical exercise to try to name as a masterpiece any particular creation of one whose work was all masterly. Dürer was not, certainly, one of the great colorists, but as a draftsman, as a portraitist, and as a designer, he is among the very greatest in the history of art. That his accomplishments were the reflection of a keen intelligence is shown by his writings on perspective and other aspects of graphic technique, and by his autobiographical writings. The most notable Dürer paintings known today are Virgin and Child with Saints Anthony and Sebastian and a Crucifixion, at Dresden; Martyrdom of the Ten Thousand and a Madonna, at Venice; Virgin Crowned by Two Angels and a portrait of Hieronymous Holzschuher, at Berlin; Adoration of the Magi, in the Uffizi at Florence; A Young Man, and portraits of Oswald Krell and Michel Wohlgemut, at Munich; and self-portraits at Leipzig, Madrid, and Munich. There are extensive collections of his drawings and engravings at Vienna, Berlin, London, Florence, Milan, and the Louvre at Paris.

Durey (dü.rā), Louis. b. at Paris, May 27, 1888—. French impressionistic composer. He joined (1917) a group of composers including Honegger, Auric, Milhaud, Poulenc, and Taillefere, which became known (with Durey) as "The Six." Among his compositions are the orchestral work Pastorale, the choral work Éloges, the opera Judith, and Neige, for piano.

Durfee (dėr'fē), Job. b. at Tiverton, R.I., Sept. 20, 1790; d. there, July 26, 1847. American jurist and philosophical writer, chief justice of the Rhode Island supreme court (1835–47). He wrote Panidea (1846) and others.

Durfee, William Franklin. b. at New Bedford, Mass., Nov. 15, 1833; d. Nov. 14, 1899. American engineer, a pioneer in the modern steel industry. With a natural talent for mechanics, developed under his father's instruction and at the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard University, at the age of 20 he set up at New Bedford as an engineer and architect. A few years later he had a brief political career, being elected in 1861 to the state legislature, where he proposed a resolution calling upon Congress to repeal "all laws which deprive any class of loyal subjects of the Government from bearing arms for the common defense." The purpose of this was to open the way for the employment of Negro troops in the Civil War, and it was probably the first definite step taken in a Northern legislature toward that end. In 1862 he went to the iron-bearing region along Lake Superior to investigate the qualities of its ores with a view to their refinement by the methods proposed by William Kelly, and in September, 1864, he supervised the construction of a mill at Wyandotte, Mich., where with apparatus of his design the first steel produced by this process in the U.S. (called Bessemer steel, after Sir Henry Bessemer, whose process resembled Kelly's) was turned out. At Wyandotte Durfee also established the first laboratory in America for the systematic study of the problems of steelmaking. He also built a steel mill at Milwaukee, Wis., and a copper refinery at Ansonia, Conn., which was the first such plant in the U.S. to make use of gaseous fuel. Durfee, who was exceptionally well read in the history of engineering, contributed papers to technical periodicals, and accumulated a valuable collection of books which is now in the library of the Engineering Societies at New York.

D'Urfey (dėr'fi), Thomas. [Called Tom D'Urfey.] b. in Devonshire, England, 1653; d. at London, Feb. 26, 1723. English dramatist and humorous poet. His songs, which appeared for the most part in his successul and (at the time) greatly admired plays, were published as Wit and Mirth; or Pills to Purge Melancholy (1719–20).

Durga (dör'gä). See also Parvati.

Durga. In Hindu mythology, one of the malignant forms of Devi, the wife of Shiva.

Durham (dur'ạm). Administrative and geographical county in NE England. It is bounded on the N by Northumberland, on the E by the North Sea, on the S by Yorkshire, on the SW by Westmorland, and on the W by Cumberland. The surface in the W portion (in the region of the Pennines) consists of fertile valleys enclosed by hill ranges; the E part is more level, except in the NE, where it is undulating. Wheat, barley, oats, and root crops are raised. Durham is famous for its shorthorn Durham cattle. It has important coal fields, mostly worked in the S portion of the county. Other minerals are salt, lead, zinc, and limonite (except for salt, all are little worked now). Industries include shipbuilding, iron and steel production, chemical manufactures, and woolen and worsted manufactures. Durham is the county seat; area of geographical county, ab. 1,016 sq. mi.; of administrative county, ab. 974 sq. mi.; pop. of administrative county, 902,821 (1951).

Durham. [Middle English, Durem, Duresme; old English, Dūnholm, Dunholme.] Municipal borough, market town, and episcopal city in NE England, county seat of Durham, situated on the river Wear ab. 15 mi. S of Newcastle, ab. 254 mi. N of London by rail. Durham stands on the historical routeway from England to Scotland. Its industries include iron and steel production, coal mining, shipbuilding, chemical manufactures, and machine shops. On a rocky peninsula, almost surrounded by the river Wear, the old city contains a castle founded in 1072 by William the Conqueror and rebuilt by Bishop Hugh of Puiset a hundred years later. The interior possesses many features of interest, as the beautiful Norman arcade, door, and gallery, the Norman chapel beneath the 14th-century keep, the 14th-century refectory, and a 17th-century carved staircase of oak. The castle is now occupied by the University of Durham (founded by Cromwell in 1646, later dissolved, and reëstablished in 1832). The cathedral of Durham is a monument of great intrinsic importance, which is enhanced by its imposing position on the brink of a steep hill above the river Wear. The west front is flanked by two massive square towers, and a tower of similar form rises high over the crossing. The present church was founded at the end of the 11th century, and was practically completed by the middle of the 12th. A 12th-century knocker on the door was a place of sanctuary for fugitives who clung to it. The Lady Chapel or Galilee is later, and the curious east transept called the Nine Altars, at the eastern extremity of the choir, is of the early 13th century. The cloister is in Perpendicular style. The Norman interior is exceedingly impressive. The piers of the nave are alternately cylindrical and square, with engaged shafts; the former are covered with zigzag and other line patterns. The altar screen and episcopal throne date from the 14th century, the stalls from the 17th. The eastern or Nine Altars transept is architecturally beautiful, and is very skilfully joined to the older work. The Galilee chapel, projecting in front of the western façade, has four interior walls resting on round chevron-molded arches which spring from slender clustered columns, the whole supporting the roof in a manner rather Saracenic than Northern. The dimensions of the cathedral are 510 by 80 ft., length of transepts 170 ft., height of vaulting 70 ft., of central tower 214 ft. The old monastic buildings are still almost complete, and are of high interest. Durham was possibly a Roman station. It became the seat of the old Bishopric of Lindisfarne in 995, and its bishops were, in the Middle Ages, nearly independent rulers over the palatinate of Durham. 19,283 (1951).

Durham. Town (in New Hampshire the equivalent of township in many other states) and unincorporated village in SE New Hampshire, in Strafford County, ab. 10 mi. NW of Portsmouth. It is the seat of the University of New Hampshire, founded (1866) as a branch of Dartmouth, from which it was separated in 1890. Settled in 1635, Durham suffered from Indian attacks during King Philip's War and later. It was the home of General John Sullivan, whose house still stands. Pop. of town, 4,770 (1950); of village, 4,172 (1950).

Durham. City in C North Carolina, county seat of Durham County, NW of Raleigh: a leading center for the manufacture of cigarettes. Among its other products are silk hosiery, bricks, cotton textiles, and tobacco-packing machinery. It is the seat of Duke University and the North Carolina College for Negroes. 71,311 (1950).

Durham, 1st Earl of. Title of Lambton, John George.

Durham, Battle of. See under Neville's Cross.

Durham, Simeon (or Symeon) of. See Simeon (or Symeon) of Durham.

Durham, University of. University at Durham, England, reëstablished in 1832 (the university traces its origin, with a considerable interruption, to an order issued by Cromwell in 1646). It comprises the Durham division of eight colleges situated at Durham, and the Newcastle division (King's College, including the medical school) at Newcastle. The combined libraries have a total of some 256,000 volumes.

Durham Book, The. [Also: Durham Gospels, Saint Cuthbert's Book.] Latin text of the gospels with an interlinear gloss in Northumbrian Saxon.

Durham Letter. Letter written in 1850 by Lord John Russell, British prime minister, to the bishop of Durham, denouncing the newly established Roman Catholic hierarchy in England and Wales, and the ritualistic tendencies in the Church of England.

Durham Station. In U.S. history, a place (now partly included in the city of Durham) in North Carolina, ab. 29 mi. NW of Raleigh. Here, on April 26, 1865, the Confederate general J. E. Johnston surrendered with 29,924 men to General W. T. Sherman.

Duria Major (dū'ri.ạ mā'jọr). Latin name of the Dora Baltea.

Duria Minor (mī'nọr). Latin name of the Dora Riparia.

Durindana (dū.rin.dä'nạ). See Durandana.

Düringsfeld (dü'rings.felt), Ida von. b. at Militsch, in Silesia, Nov. 12, 1815; d. at Stuttgart, Württemberg, Germany, Oct. 25, 1876. German poet and novelist. Her works include Skizzenaus der vornehmen Welt (1842–45) and Antonio Foscarini (1850).

Durius (dū'ri.us). Latin name of the Douro.

Dürkheim (dürk'hīm). [Also, Bad Dürkheim.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Bavarian Palatinate, on the Isenach River at the slopes of the Hardt Mountains, ab. 13 mi. W of Mannheim. Situated in the largest wine-growing community in Germany, it is a center of the Palatinate wine trade; besides wine cellars, it has canneries and small industries. It is a health resort, visited for its grape-cures and its saline thermal springs, by people with intestinal and liver diseases. The castle church dates from the 15th century, the Stadthaus (town hall) from the 18th century. The name of Dürkheim appears in records as early as 742. It belonged from the Middle Ages to the counts of Leiningen. During the 17th and 18th centuries it was occupied several times by the French. The population is predominantly Protestant. 10,615 (1950).

Durkheim (dür.kem), Émile. b. 1858; d. 1917. French sociologist and philosopher, a student of national economics, folk psychology, and cultural anthropology. Durkheim centered his attention on social or moral aspects of group life. He founded a school of sociology which emphasized a particular type of coercive and external social fact as the data of scientific sociological research. He served as editor of the French sociological journal Année Sociologique from 1896 to 1913. His important works were De la division du travail social (1893, translated as The Division of Labor in Society, 1933), Les Règles de la méthode sociologique (1895, translated as The Rules of Sociological Method, 1938), Le Suicide (1897), and Les Formes élémentaires de la vie réligieuse (1912, translated as The Elementary Forms of Religious Life, 1915).

Durkin (dėr'kin), Martin P. b. at Chicago, March 18, 1894—. American labor leader, U.S. secretary of labor (1953 et seq.) under Eisenhower. A steamfitter by trade, he became his union's business manager in 1921 and later president of the national union. He served (1933–41) as Illinois state director of labor. During World War II he was a member of the national war labor board.

Durlach (dör'läċh). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Baden, American Zone, situated on the Pfinz River ab. 3 mi. E of Karlsruhe. It was formerly the capital of Baden-Durlach. Industries include machine, bicycle, and leather manufactures and a factory for dental instruments. It is a marketing center for a fruit and vegetable growing suburban district. For administrative and census purposes it is part of Karlsruhe.

Durmitor (dör'mi.tôr). [Also: Durmitar (-tär), Dormitor (dôr'-).] Highest summit in the mountains of Montenegro, Yugoslavia. Elevation, ab. 8,294 ft.

Durnovaria (dėr.nọ.vâr'i.ạ). Latin name of Dorchester, Dorsetshire, England.

Dürnstein (dürn'shtīn). [Also: Dürrenstein, Tirnstein.] Village in E Austria, in the province of Lower Austria, beautifully situated on the N bank of the Danube River, at the entrance to the Wachau region, W of Krems. It is overlooked by the ruins of a medieval castle, destroyed by the Swedes in 1645. Here, in 1193, Richard I of England (Richard Coeur-de-Lion), on his way back from the Holy Land, was kept prisoner by Leopold VI of Austria, his opponent in the Crusade. The present parish church, founded in 1410, was rebuilt (1720–33) in Austrian baroque style. 605 (1946).

Durobrivae (dū.rọ.brī'vē). Latin name of Rochester, England.

Duroc (dü.rok), Géraud Christophe Michel. [Title, Duc de Friuli.] b. at Pont-à-Mousson, near Nancy, France, Oct. 25, 1772; d. near Markersdorf, Saxony, Germany, May 22, 1813. French general and diplomat. He became (1796) aide-de-camp to Napoleon, whom he accompanied to Egypt in 1798. He took a prominent part in the overthrow (1799) of the Directory, and was employed by the first consul in diplomatic missions to Berlin, St. Petersburg, Stockholm, and Copenhagen. He accompanied Napoleon in the campaigns of 1805–06 and 1807, and was mortally wounded by the emperor's side near Markersdorf. He was a favorite officer of Napoleon.

Durocasses (dū.rọ.kas'ēz). An ancient name of Dreux, town.

Durocher (dur.ō'chėr), Leo (Ernest). b. 1906—. American baseball player and manager. A light-hitting member of the New York Yankees of the Babe Ruth-Lou Gehrig period, Durocher did not become notable as a player until he played with the St. Louis Cardinals, the Gas-House Gang, in the early 1930's, when his competitive spirit was given full rein. Durocher became noted for his will to win at almost any cost and, as manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, whom he led to a National League championship in 1941, he was famous for his arguments with umpires. He became (1948) manager of the New York Giants, intracity rivals of the Brooklyn team. In 1951, leading his team from an almost hopeless position behind the league-leading Dodgers, Durocher, the game's leading exponent of "percentage" baseball, overcame a 13½ game disadvantage in winning 37 of the remaining 44 games, finished the regular season in a tie with the Dodgers, and in a three-game playoff series, climaxed by a game won in the ninth inning by a home run, won the league pennant.

Durocornovium (dū''rọ.kôr.nō'vi.um). A Latin name of Cirencester.

Durocortorum (dū''rọ.kôr.tō'rum). An ancient name of Reims.

Duronceray (dü.rôṅs.rā), Marie Justine Benoîte. See Favart, Madame.

Durovernum (dū.rọ.vėr'num). Latin name of Canterbury, England.

Dürrenberg (dür'ẹn.berk). [Also, Bad Dürrenberg.] Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the Saale River W of Leipzig. It is a health resort with strong saline springs, visited by people suffering from nervous and respiratory diseases. The population is predominantly Protestant. 13,823 (1946).

Dürrenstein (dür'ẹn.shtīn). See Dürnstein.

Durrës (dör'ṛes). One of the ten prefectures of Albania, in the W part. Capital, Durrës; pop. 77,890 (1930).

Durrës. [Italian, Durazzo; Serbo-Croatian, Drač; ancient Greek, Epidamnos; Latin, Epidamnus, Dyrrhachium.] Seaport in W Albania, capital of Durrës prefecture, situated on the Adriatic Sea. It was founded by Corcyreans c625 B.C., and became the terminus of a great Roman road. Caesar was repulsed here by Pompey in 48 B.C., and here Robert Guiscard defeated the emperor Alexius I Comnenus in 1081, and took the city in 1082. It was part of the Turkish Empire from the 16th century until 1912. Pop. 8,739 (1930).

Dürrheim (dür'hīm). [Also, Bad Dürrheim.] Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Baden, French Zone, situated in the Black Forest N of Donaueschingen. It is a health resort with saline thermal springs, visited by people suffering from rheumatism and respiratory and nervous diseases, and also has small industries. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 2,180 (1947).

Dur Sharrukin (dör shär.rö.kēn'). See under Khorsabad.

Durtain (dür.tañ), Luc. b. at Paris, 1881—. French poet, novelist, and critic. He is the author of various "cosmopolitan" novels including Quarantième étage (1927).

Duruma (dö.rö'mä). [Also, Waduruma.] One of nine Bantu-speaking peoples of E Africa known collectively as Nyika. They inhabit a district in SE Kenya, and their population is estimated at ab. 33,000 (by I. Schapera, Some Problems of Anthropological Research in Kenya Colony, 1949).

Duruy (dü.rü.ē), (Jean) Victor. b. at Paris, Sept. 11, 1811; d. there, Nov. 25, 1894. French historian and statesman, minister of public instruction (1863–69). He became a senator in 1869. His works include Histoire des Romains (1843–44), Histoire de France (1852), Histoire de la Grèce ancienne (1862), Histoire moderne (1863), and Histoire des Grecs (1887–89). Several of his works form part of the Histoire universelle (1846 et seq.) published under his direction.

Durvasas (dör'vä.säs). In Hindu legend, a sage noted for irascibility. Many fell under his curse. In Kalidasa's drama Shakuntala he curses Shakuntala for keeping him waiting at the door, and so causes the separation between her and king Dushyanta.

D'Urville Wall (dėr'vil). Great glacier-cut wall of granite in Antarctica, several thousand feet high, in Victoria Land, in ab. 75°18′ S., 162°00′ E. It was discovered by the British Antarctica Expedition (1908–09), under the command of Sir Ernest Shackleton, who named this feature for J. S. C. Dumont D'Urville, French naval commander and explorer who made a voyage of discovery (1837–40) in the South Seas.

Durward (dėr'wąrd), Quentin. Young archer of the Scottish Guard in Sir Walter Scott's novel Quentin Durward. After many adventures he marries Isabelle de Croye.

Duryea (dûr'yā, dûr'i.ā). Borough in E Pennsylvania, in Luzerne County: anthracite coal mining; manufactures of silk textiles. 6,655 (1950).

Duryea (dûr'yā), Charles Edgar. b. near Canton, Ill., Dec. 15, 1861; d. at Philadelphia, Sept. 28, 1938. American manufacturer who is credited with developing (1895 the first modern U.S. automobile and many automotive devices. Built (1892) gasoline motorcar; organized (1895) Duryea Motor Wagon Company, Springfield, Mass.; sold first car in 1896; founded (1900) Duryea Power Company for automobile manufacture. His other contributions include a spray carburetor (1892) and pneumatic tires for automobiles.

Duryée (dûr'yā), Abram. b. at New York, April 29, 1815; d. Sept. 27, 1890. American officer, with the Union army in the Civil War. An officer (1833–59) of various regiments of the militia, he organized (1861) a voluntary regiment known as "Duryée's Zouaves" which served at Big Bethel, Federal Hill, and in other engagements during the Civil War; appointed (1861) brigadier general; brevet major general of volunteers after the war. He was later (1873) police commissioner of New York City.

Duryodhana (dör.yō'dą.ną). Eldest son of Dhritarashtra, and leader of the Kaurava princes in the great war related in the Mahabharata. Upon the death of his brother Pandu, Dhritarashtra took his five sons, the Pandava princes, to his own court, and had them educated with his hundred sons. Jealousies sprang up, and Duryodhana took a special dislike to Bhima from his skill in the use of the club. He poisoned Bhima, who was restored to life by the Nagas. He was the occasion of the exile of the Pandavas. After their return he won in gambling from Yudhishthira everything he had, including his own freedom and that of his brothers, and his wife Draupadi. The result of the gambling was a second exile of 13 years. In the great battle he fell by the hand of Bhima, who had vowed to break his thigh in consequence of the insult to Draupadi.

Duse (dö'zā), Eleonora. [Sometimes spelled Eleanora.] b. in a railway carriage between Venice and Vigevano, Italy, Oct. 3, 1859; d. at Pittsburgh, Pa., April 21, 1924. Italian tragic actress. Her early life was full of hardships and was saddened by the death of her mother when she was 14. The same year (1872) in Verona, she played Juliet with great success. In 1879, the important manager Cesare Rossi engaged her for his company. Her repertoire soon included Divorçons, Fedora, La Locandiera, and Theodora. She toured South America in 1885, and in 1892 she electrified Vienna with her performance in La Dame aux Camélias. She made her debut in the U.S. in 1893. In 1895, while playing at London, she engaged in a historic contest with Sarah Bernhardt; both played Sudermann's Magda and invited the critics to make their choice. (George Bernard Shaw declared Duse far superior.) In 1899, Duse began her romantic and artistic association with the Italian playwright Gabriele D'Annunzio, having acted in his plays La Città morta and La Gioconda. In 1902, she came to America with her D'Annunzio dramas, having added Francesca di Rimini to her repertoire. She retired prior to World War I, but in 1921 she returned to the stage after a 12-year absence; in 1923 she played a series of matinees at London, and then gave eight performances at New York at the Metropolitan Opera House. Duse is considered by many to have been the greatest tragic actress of the modern theater, and perhaps her most important contribution was her playing of Ibsen's heroines (Nora in A Doll's House, Rebecca West in Rosmersholm, and Hedda Gabler) throughout Europe and America; among her best roles were Juliet, Francesca da Rimini, Camille, and Fernande.

Dushenka (dö'shin.ką). Romantic poem by the 18th-century Russian poet I. F. Bogdanovich, published in 1775.

Dushman (dösh'mąn), Saul. b. at Rostov, Russia, July 12, 1883—. American physical chemist. He arrived (1891) in the U.S. and was associated (1912 et seq.) with the General Electric Company's research laboratory at Schenectady, N.Y. He was later (1922–25) director of research at the Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N.J., and returned (1928) to Schenectady as assistant director of the main research laboratory. He is the author of High Vacuum (1923), Elements of Quantum Mechanics (1937), and other works.

Dushrattu (dösh.rät'tö). [Also, Tushrattu.] King of Mitanni mentioned in the Tel-el-Amarna tablets. From his diplomatic correspondence with the Egyptian king Amenhotep III (of the XVIIIth dynasty, c1500 B.C.), it appears that there existed an old friendship between Egypt and Mitanni, and that Amenhotep had married Dushratt'u's daughter.

Dushyanta (dösh.yän'tą). In Hindu mythology, a king of the lunar race, and descendant of Puru and husband of Shakuntala, by whom he had a son Bharata. The loves of Dushyanta and Shakuntala, her separation from him, and her restoration through the discovery of his lost ring in the belly of a fish, form the plot of Kalidasa's drama Shakuntala.

Dussek (dö'sek), Jan Ladislav. b. at Czaslau, in Bohemia, Feb. 9, 1761; d. at St.-Germain, near Paris, March 12, 1812. Bohemian pianist and composer. After successfully touring the Continent as a virtuoso (1782 et seq.), he made his debut at London in 1790; subsequently he became court musician to the prince von Ysenburg. Among his patrons were Talleyrand and Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia. He composed many sonatas, concertos, waltzes, rondos, quartets, and variations.

Düsseldorf (düs'ęl.dôrf). City in W Germany, the capital of the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the E bank of the Rhine River ab. 21 mi. NW of Cologne. It is a river port and an important industrial center, with large machine, metallurgical, electrical, and chemical industries (including Vereinigte Stahlwerke, Mannesmann Rohrenwerke, and Rheinische Metallwaren und Maschinenfabrik); there are also flour mills, sawmills, sugar refineries, paper and leather manufactures, and active trade in metals, scrap, machines, chemicals, lumber, grain, fodder, and livestock. Cultural institutions include a medical school, an art academy, libraries, archives, theaters, an art museum, an arts and crafts museum, a museum of natural history, and a museum of social science and economics. Düsseldorf is the seat of a number of artistic and scholarly societies and also of a number of central industrial administrations, particularly of the German iron and steel industry and of the trade-union movement. It is a modern city with beautiful parks and promenades. There are some old buildings, including the Church of Saint Lambert (12th and 13th centuries), the Church of Saint Andrew (1622–29), the Maximilian Church (1659–1737), the Reformed Church (1684), and the baroque monument to the prince-elector Johann Wilhelm. 420,909 (1946), 500,516 (1950).

History. Düsseldorf was given municipal privileges by Count Adolph of Berg in 1288, and from 1511 was a royal residence. It came in 1609 under the rule of the palatinates of Neuburg of the house of Wittelsbach. It prospered in the reign of the prince-elector Johann Wilhelm (1690–1716), who founded the art gallery which in 1805 was transferred to Munich, to become an integral part of the Bavarian art collections. The art academy was founded by the prince-elector Carl Theodor in 1767. The city was occupied by France in 1795 and was chiefly under French rule until it fell to Prussia in 1814. It was the seat of an influential school of painting and sculpture in the 19th century. The poet Heinrich Heine was born here. Düsseldorf was occupied by the French after World War I (March 8, 1921–Aug. 25, 1925). In World War II it was frequently bombed; grave damage was done in the city and to many public buildings, including the above-mentioned churches. Fighting occurred here in March and April, 1945; the city was occupied on April 17, 1945.

Dussera (dus'ėr.ạ). See Dasara.

Dust Bowl. Name given (1933) to that part of the high plains of the U.S. between a line near the 100th meridian, on the E, and the Rocky Mountains, on the W. More particularly, it applies to the high plains of the Southwest. Intense dust storms and drought prevailing in the first half of the 1930's brought the term into popular use.

Duster, A Gentleman With a. Pseudonym of Begbie, Harold.

Dustin (dus'tin), Hannah. [Maiden name, probably, Emerson.] b. at Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 23, 1659; date of death not known. American pioneer, captured (1697) by Indians and taken to a river island (now called Dustin's Island) near Concord, Mass. She escaped by killing nine of the Indians, returning with the scalps of her victims as proof of the adventure.

Dutch (duch). 1. Nationals of the kingdom of the Netherlands, the native speakers of the Dutch language; the Low Germans. 2. By extension, the nationals of Germany, the native speakers of the German language; the High Germans.

Dutch. Language spoken in the Netherlands, a Germanic language, sometimes called the Hollandish language (which differs very slightly from Flemish, spoken in parts of the adjoining kingdom of Belgium). It is called distinctively Low Dutch. Also, popularly still and formerly, the term is applied sometimes to the language spoken by the Germans, German or High German. This language was formerly and is still occasionally called distinctively High Dutch.

Dutch Borneo (bôr'nē.ō). See under Borneo.

Dutch Courtezan, The. Comedy by John Marston, printed in 1605.

Dutch Guiana (gē.ä'nạ). See Surinam.

Dutch Harbor. Port in SW Alaska, ab. 1 mi. N of the village of Unalaska, in the E Aleutian Islands. Once an important trading center and center of the fur-sealing industry, Dutch Harbor is now a naval air base, and its trade functions have transferred to Unalaska. It was bombed by Japanese planes in 1942. The harbor is a natural bay ab. 2 mi. long.

Dutchman's Fireside (duch'mạnz), The. Novel by James Kirkel Paulding, published in 1831.

Dutch Republic, The Rise of the. See Rise of the Dutch Republic, The.

Dutch River. See under Don, England.

Dutch Wars. Name applied collectively to three distinct conflicts (1652–54, 1664–67, 1672–78) in the 17th century. The Dutch and the English had long been competitors as carriers of commerce in European waters and to the East and the West Indies. In more recent years, they had also become bitter rivals in the Spitsbergen fisheries. Under the doctrine of the freedom of the seas the Dutch claimed the right to carry goods to France, with which England was embroiled in an undeclared war; against this the English set up, and exercised, the right of search and seizure. The English Navigation Act of 1651, banning Dutch trade with English colonies, brought matters to a head. Cromwell's government had ample funds confiscated from the Royalists, and the English navy was under unified control; the Dutch were dependent for their naval power on the money earned by their commerce, and its effectiveness was hampered by the fact that five provincial admiralties had a say in its use. After many naval actions, in which victory lay variously with the Dutch under Admiral Maarten Tromp and with the English under Admiral Robert Blake, the Dutch were defeated in a major engagement on July 31, 1653, and when peace was concluded by the Treaty of Westminster in April, 1654, the Dutch were constrained to accept English terms. Ten years later English and Dutch rivalry for the privilege of seizing and selling Africans into slavery led to English operations against Dutch trading posts in Africa and to English occupation of New Amsterdam in America. In June, 1664, the Dutch were worsted off Lowestoft, England. But the ravages of the plague retarded English operations until 1666, when several naval engagements were fought with varying fortune. In June, 1667, a Dutch fleet under Admiral De Ruyter sailed up the Thames almost to London, inflicting great damage on English shipping, and in July the Peace of Breda was signed, by which the Dutch ceded New Netherlands, while the English gave them back Surinam and modified the Navigation Laws to Dutch advantage. The attempt of Louis XIV of France to seize the Spanish Netherlands in the War of Devolution (1667–68) led the Dutch and the English, so lately enemies, to become allies, along with Sweden, to balk Louis's plans. But by secret treaty in 1670, England and France became allies, with a view to another assault upon the Netherlands. Operations began in 1672 with English harassments of Dutch convoys, and presently the French attacked by land, being stopped before Amsterdam only by the opening of the dikes. Dutch resistance hardened under the leadership of William of Orange, and the emperor, Spain, Brandenburg, and Denmark entered the conflict as allies of the Netherlands. The war was very unpopular in England, and in 1674 Charles II and the Dutch came to terms of peace. Hostilities between the French and the allies continued with varying fortunes until 1678, when the Treaty of Nijmegen, substantially favorable to the Dutch, was signed.

Dutch West India Company. Commercial and colonizing association (1623–1791) originally chartered in the Netherlands in 1621. Among the important grants it received from the Dutch government were the exclusive right of trading with a large part of the coasts of America and Africa, the authority to plant colonies and build forts, the privilege of employing soldiers and fleets, the power to make treaties, and license to attack the commerce and colonies of Spain and Portugal. It absorbed the United New Netherland Company, which was already engaged in trading around the lower Hudson River. At first the company's efforts were chiefly concerned with settling colonies in Brazil, but in 1654 the Portuguese colonists drove the Dutch out of that region. Thereafter operations in New Netherlands were pressed more vigorously, only to come to nothing with the capture of that colony by the English in 1664. The company continued its operations in the West Indies, in Guiana, and along the Gold Coast of Africa, and its powerful fleets made many descents on the coasts of Spanish and Portuguese America, captured many ships of those nationalities, and obtained vast amounts of booty. But its wars were expensive, it lost some of its colonies, and as a losing venture it was dissolved in 1674. A new company under the same name was formed in 1675, and existed until 1791, but it never greatly prospered.

Dutens (dü.tăñ), Louis. b. at Tours, France, Jan. 15, 1730; d. at London, May 23, 1812. French antiquary, numismatist, and writer. He published Recherches sur l'origine des découvertes attribuées aux modernes (1766) and Mémoires d'un voyageur qui se repose (1806), and edited Leibnitz's works (1769).

Dutertre (dü.tertr), Jean Baptiste. b. at Calais, France, 1610; d. at Paris, 1687. French Dominican missionary and author. He served in the army and navy before joining the Dominicans in 1635. From 1640 to 1657 most of his time was spent in the French West Indies, where he witnessed many events of the Carib wars. His Histoire générale des îles Saint Christophe, de la Guadeloupe . . . (1654) was enlarged and republished as Histoire générale des Antilles habitées par les Français (4 vols., 1667–71).

Dutra (dō'trą), Eurico Gaspar. b. at Cuiabá, Brazil, May 18, 1885—. Brazilian soldier, politician, and president (1946–51) of Brazil. He was commissioned (1910) a second lieutenant of cavalry, was appointed (1935) general in command of the 1st military area, served (1936–45) as minister of war, and organized (1944) Brazilian forces which fought in Italy.

Dutrochet (dü.tro.she), René Joachim Henri. b. at Néon, in Poitou, France, Nov. 14, 1776; d. at Paris, Feb. 4, 1847. French physiologist and physicist. He wrote Nouvelles recherches sur l'endosmose et l'exosmose (1828).

Dutton (dut'ọn), Clarence Edward. b. at Wallingford, Conn., May 15, 1841; d. at Englewood, N.J., Jan. 4, 1912. American geologist. After service in the Civil War as a captain, he joined the U.S. Geological and Geographical Survey, studying (1875–85) the plateau region of Utah and Arizona. He was the author of Report on the Geology of the High Plateau of Utah (1879–80), Tertiary History of the Grand Canyon District (1882), Mount Taylor and the Zuñi Plateau (1886), and Earthquakes in the Light of the New Seismology (1904).

Dutton, Edward Payson. b. at Keene, N.H., Jan. 4, 1831; d. at Ridgefield, Conn., Sept. 6, 1923. American publisher, noted for the distribution in America of the "Everyman" series of reprints of English-language classics. He was a member (1852–58) of the firm of Ide and Dutton, Boston booksellers, until he bought out (1858) Ide's interests and reorganized the firm as E. P. Dutton and Company, of which he became president. In 1864 he acquired the retail business of Ticknor and Fields at Boston. He also took over the General Protestant Episcopal Sunday School Union and Church Book Society of New York, and in 1869 moved the headquarters of his firm to New York, where it still remains.

Dutton, Joseph Everett. b. 1874; d. 1905. English biologist. In 1901, in the course of work in Africa, he made the important discovery of the type of flagellate infusorians which, in the human blood, cause sleeping sickness.

Dutuit Collection (dü.twē'). Collection of works of art and historic interest in the possession of the city of Paris.

Duun (dön), Olav. b. at Namdalen, Norway, Nov. 21, 1876; d. Sept. 13, 1939. Norwegian novelist, noted for his series Juvikfolke (The People of Juvik, 1918–23), an epic of farmers and fisher folk in his native community, which reflects at the same time the culture conflict of old and new and the problems of individual conscience.

Duval (dō.val'), Claude. b. at Domfront, in Normandy, France, 1643; executed at Tyburn, London, Jan. 21, 1670. Highwayman in England. His adventures as a highwayman and as a gallant form the subject of a number of novels and ballads.

Duval (dü.vàl), Jean Jacques. See Esprémesnil or Éprémesnil, Jean Jacques Duval d'.

Duval, Jules. b. at Rodez, Aveyron, France, 1813; killed in France, Sept. 20, 1870. French political economist. He was the author of Histoire de l'émigration européene, asiatique et africaine au XIXème siècle (1862).

Duval, Paul. See Lorrain, Jean.

Duval (dū.val'), William Pope. b. near Richmond, Va., 1784; d. at Washington, D.C., March 19, 1854. American frontiersman, Congressman, and territorial governor. As a youth of 15 or 16 years he left home for the frontier country of Kentucky, studied law, set up in practice at Bardstown in 1804, entered politics, and was elected to the U.S. Congress for the term 1813–15. In 1821 by appointment of President James Monroe he became the first judge of the superior court of East Florida, and in the following year he was named the first civil governor of the territory. He effected the peaceable transfer of the Seminole Indians to the southern part of the peninsula. He governed ably until 1833, but as the population of the territory grew, and with it the desire for statehood, Duval came to be regarded as a symbol of rule from Washington, and so many conflicts arose that President Andrew Jackson removed him from his office. He helped write the constitution of the state of Florida in 1838, and failed by one vote only to be elected president of the constitutional convention. He was a state senator (1839–42), a member (1845) of the commission to define the northern boundary of Florida, and an unsuccessful candidate (1848) for Congress. William Pope Duval was the model of two characters in early American fiction, namely Ralph Ringwood in Washington Irving's Wolfert's Roost, and Nimrod Wildfire in the romance of that name, by James K. Paulding.

Duveen (dū.vēn'), Joseph. [Title, 1st Baron Duveen of Millbank.] b. at Hull, England, Oct. 14, 1869; d. May 25, 1939. English art dealer. His father and other members of his family being dealers in pictures, objects of art, and antiques, he entered the business as a young man and eventually became sole proprietor of the firm of Duveen Brothers. A salesman of almost uncanny sagacity and persuasiveness, possessing remarkable self-confidence and audacity, he operated in the grand manner, making art-dealing a sensational, and highly lucrative, business. Employing Bernard Berenson to expertize his purchases, he acquired during his career many of the greatest works of Italian Renaissance painters and of 18th-century English artists, which he sold chiefly to wealthy American collectors, often at fabulous prices. The fact that a picture had been for a time in the Duveen collection, and was bought from Duveen, gave it such enhanced prestige that men like Henry Clay Frick, Andrew Mellon, Henry E. Huntington, Joseph E. Widener, Samuel H. Kress, and William Randolph Hearst cheerfully paid prices which netted him sometimes hundreds of thousands of dollars profit on a single work. He is credited with having inspired Andrew Mellon to provide the funds for the establishment of the National Gallery of Art at Washington and to leave his collection, housed in that gallery, to the nation. For his benefactions to the National Gallery and the Tate Gallery at London, and to British painters, particularly through the British Artists Exhibitions Organization, and in recognition of his endowment of a professorship of the history of art at the University of London, he was knighted in 1919, made a baronet in 1926, and created 1st Baron Duveen of Millbank in 1933. His book Thirty Years of British Art was published in 1930.

Duveke (dü'vę.kę). See Dyveke.

Duveneck (dū'vę.nek), Frank. [Original name, Frank Decker.] b. at Covington, Ky., Oct. 9, 1848; d. at Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 3, 1919. American painter, etcher, sculptor, and teacher. He began his career as an apprentice to ecclesiastical decorators at Covington and Cincinnati, and at the age of 22 left for Munich, Germany, where he became a student at the Royal Academy. His talents won him a promotion to Wilhelm Dietz's painting class; while at Munich, he painted his well-known Whistling Boy. He returned to America in 1873, established a reputation with the paintings he exhibited at the Boston Art Club in 1875, and returned to Munich, where he spent most of his time until 1878, when he established his own school of painting. Following the death of his wife (1888), he settled at Cincinnati, where he was dean of the faculty at the Cincinnati Art Academy. A signal honor was conferred upon him in 1915, when a special gallery at the San Francisco Panama-Pacific Exposition was devoted to an exhibition of his works and a special medal awarded to him by an international jury.

Duvergier de Hauranne (dü.ver.zhyā dę ō.rán), Jean. b. at Bayonne, France, 1581; d. at Paris, Oct. 11, 1643. French Jansenist theologian, abbé of Saint Cyran. He became director of Port Royal in 1636.

Duvergier de Hauranne, Prosper. b. at Rouen, France, Aug. 3, 1798; d. in the Château Herry, near Samerques, Cher, France, May 19, 1881. French royalist politician and publicist. He was imprisoned by Napoleon in 1851, and banished for a brief period. He published Histoire de gouvernement parlementaire en France (1857–72).

Duverney (dü.ver.nā), Guichard Joseph. b. Aug. 5, 1648; d. Sept. 10, 1730. French anatomist.

Duvernois (dü.ver.nwà), Clément. b. at Paris, April 6, 1836; d. there, July 8, 1879. French politician and publicist.

Duvernois, Henri. [Pseudonym of Henri Simon Schwabacher.] b. at Paris, March 4, 1875; d. there, Jan. 30, 1937. French playwright and novelist. He was the author of several hundred short stories, novels, skits, comedies for the stage, and radio scenarios, and is familiar to American readers because of the appearance of his short stories, in translation, in mass circulation weeklies in the U.S.

Duvernoy (dü.ver.nwà), Georges Louis. b. at Montbéliard, France, Aug. 6, 1777; d. at Paris, March 1, 1855. French naturalist, a collaborator of Cuvier.

Duveyrier (dü.vā.ryā), Anne Honoré Joseph. [Pseudonym, Mélesville.] b. at Paris, Nov. 13, 1787; d. there, in November, 1865. French dramatist, a collaborator of Scribe and others; brother of Charles Duveyrier.

Duveyrier, Charles. b. at Paris, April 12, 1803; d. there, Nov. 10, 1866. French dramatic author; brother of A.H. J. Duveyrier. He was a firm believer in the social theories of Saint-Simon.

Duveyrier, Henri. b. at Paris, Feb. 28, 1840; d. by suicide at Sèvres, France, April 25, 1892. French explorer and geographer; son of Charles Duveyrier. He made a preliminary tour to the Sahara (March-April, 1857) and published valuable contributions to Berber ethnology and linguistics (1859). In 1858 he undertook, in the service of the French government, his exploration of the Sahara, which lasted until 1861. He did much to extend French influence. In 1874 he made another expedition to the south of Tunis and in 1876 he was sent on a political mission to Morocco. Most of his works are found in German and French scientific journals. His principal book is Exploration du Sahara (1864).

Duvieusart (dü.vyė.zàr), Jean. b. at Frasnes-lez-Gosselies, Hainaut, Belgium, April 10, 1900—. Belgian politician. He served as mayor (1927–42) of his native town, deputy for the province of Hainaut (1933–36), and member of the house of representatives (1940 et seq.). A leader of the Christian Social Party, he was minister of economic affairs (1947–50, 1952 et seq.) and served as premier from June to August, 1950, resigning after the abdication of Leopold III, whom he had supported.

du Vigneaud (dū vēn'yō), Vincent. b. at Chicago, May 18, 1901—. American biochemist, notable for his researches on hormones, insulin, amino acids, proteins, and vitamins, and on sulfur in bodily chemistry. He received his B.S. (1923) from the University of Illinois and his Ph.D. (1927) from the University of Rochester. He has been a professor of biochemistry and department head (1932–38) at George Washington University medical school, and professor of biochemistry (1938 et seq.) at Cornell University medical college.

Dux (dùks). German name of Duchcov.

Duxbury (duks'ber''.i, -bėr.i). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Plymouth County, on the coast of Plymouth Bay ab. 31 mi. SE of Boston. It was founded early in the 17th century by members of the Plymouth Colony. In its Old Burying Ground is the grave of Miles Standish (1584–1656). 3,167 (1950).

Duyckinck (dī'kingk), Evert Augustus. b. at New York, Nov. 23, 1816; d. there, Aug. 13, 1878. American author. He edited (1840–42) Arcturus, a literary journal, and published (1848–53) the Literary World. He prepared, conjointly with his brother George, a Cyclopedia of American Literature (2 vols., 1855; supplement 1865).

Duyckinck, George Long. b. at New York, Oct. 17, 1823; d. there, March 30, 1863. American biographer and critic; brother of Evert Augustus Duyckinck.

Duyse (doi'zę), Prudens van. b. at Termonde, Belgium, Sept. 17, 1804; d. at Ghent, Belgium, Nov. 13, 1859. Flemish poet and essayist, curator of the archives at Ghent. His poems were collected in Vaderlandsche Poezy (1840), Het Klaverblad (1848), and others.

Dvina (dvē.nä'). [Also: Northern Dvina; Russian, Severnaya Dvina.] Large river in NW U.S.S.R., traversing the Arkhangelsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic. It is formed by the confluence of the Vichegda and Sukhona rivers and flows generally NW to the White Sea at Arkhangelsk. It is navigable for its entire length, and is important also for logging and fishing. Great quantities of timber are floated down to supply the lumbering industry of Arkhangelsk. The Dvina system is linked by canals to the Kama and to the upper Volga via the Sheksna. Area of drainage basin, ab. 139,700 sq. mi.; length, ab. 470 mi.

Dvina. [Also: Southern Dvina, Western Dvina (Russian, Zapadnaya Dvina); Lettish, Daugava; German, Düna.] River in W U.S.S.R., which rises in the Kalinin oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic and flows into the Gulf of Riga ab. 5 mi. N of Riga. Length, 500–600 mi.; navigable to Vitebsk.

Dvina Gulf. [Also: Dvina Bay, Gulf of Dvinsk; Russian, Dvinskaya Gruba (dvēn'ska.ya gō.bä'); former (English) names, Archangel Bay, Gulf of Archangel.] Arm of the White Sea near Arkhangelsk (Archangel), in N U.S.S.R.

Dvinsk (dvēnsk). Russian name of Daugavpils.

Dvořák (dvôr'zhäk), Antonín. [Also, Anton Dvorak.] b. at Nelahozeves, in Bohemia, Sept. 8, 1841; d. at Prague, May 1, 1904. Czech composer. In 1873 his hymn Die Erben des Weissen Berges, for chorus and orchestra, brought him before the public. He soon received a state stipend. He conducted his Stabat Mater at London in March, 1884, and in the autumn of the same year at the Worcester musical festival. He was director (1892–95) of the National Conservatory of Music at New York, and director (1901–04) of the Conservatorium at Prague. Among his works are the operas King and Collier (produced in 1874), The Pigheaded Peasants (1874), Vanda (1876), The Peasant a Rogue (1877), Dimitrije (1882), and The Devil and Kate (1888); he also composed Slavonic Dances (1878) for duo piano, vocal duets, The Spectre's Bride, a cantata (1885), St. Ludmila, an oratorio (1886), Requiem Mass (1891), symphonies including From the New World (produced at New York, 1893, and usually known as the New World Symphony), concertos, string quartets, songs, impromptus, intermezzos, chamber music, and others. He introduced two original Bohemian forms, the dumka (elegy) and the furiant (a scherzo), in his symphonies and chamber music.

Dvorsky (dvôr'ski), Michael. See Hofmann, Josef.

Dvůr Králové nad Labem (dvōr' krä'lô.ve näd lä'bem). [Also: Dvůr Králové; German, Königinhof, Königinhof an der Elbe.] Town in Czechoslovakia, in NW Bohemia, situated on the Labe (Elbe) River between Jaromer and Vrchlabí, ab. 64 mi. NE of Prague. There is a considerable textile industry, and also a machine factory and a brewery. Here, on June 29, 1866, the Prussians defeated the Austrians. In 1818, a document was found here, which has become known as Královédvorský Rukopis (German, Königinhofer Handschrift), supposedly dating from the 13th century and containing the origins of Czech literature. The document was soon recognized as a forgery but continued to play a great role in the Czech cultural revival during the 19th century. 13,675 (1947).

Dwala (dwä'lä). See Duala.

Dwarka (dwär'kä). [Also: Dwaraka, Jigat.] Town in Bombay state, Union of India, at the mouth of the Gulf of Kutch, celebrated as the residence of Krishna, and a sacred Hindu city. It is a famous place of pilgrimage and a port of call on the Bombay-Karachi route. Steamers lie at some distance from shore and the trade is chiefly local. Pop. ab. 9,000.

Dweller of the Threshold, The. In Edward Bulwer-Lytton's novel Zanoni, a powerful and malignant being:

> Whose form of giant mould
> No mortal eye can fixed behold.

Dwiggins (dwig'inz), William Addison. b. at Martinsville, Ohio, 1880—. American type designer, book designer, and calligrapher. As an advertising artist and layout man, he perceived the need of type faces expressly suggestive of the modern machine age, and he designed a number of types to meet that need. In An Investigation into the Physical Properties of Books (1919) he animadverted severely on the state of things in American book design at that time. This led to his employment by the publisher Alfred A. Knopf to design a number of books which had the effect of greatly improving book design in the U.S. He did much also to revive interest in calligraphy. Some of his writings on the graphic arts have been collected under the title of Mss. by W A D (1949). His Layout in Advertising has been since its publication in 1928 an immensely influential work.

Dwight (dwīt). Village in N central Illinois, in Livingston County, ab. 55 mi. SW of Chicago. 2,843 (1950).

Dwight, Harrison Gray Otis. b. at Conway, Mass., Nov. 22, 1803; killed in a railroad accident in Vermont, Jan. 25, 1862. American Congregational clergyman, missionary to the Armenians.

Dwight, Henry Otis. b. at Constantinople, June 3, 1843; d. at Roselle, N.J., June 20, 1917. American writer and editor; son of Harrison Gray Otis Dwight. Secular agent (1867–74) in Turkey for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; correspondent (1875–92) in Turkey for the New York Tribune. Author of Turkish Life in War Time (1881), Treaty Rights of American Missionaries in Turkey (1893), Constantinople and Its Problems (1901), The Blue Book of Missions (1905, 1907); editor of Sir James Redhouse's Turkish and English Lexicon (1890) and the Encyclopaedia of Missions (1904).

Dwight, John. b. 1637 or c1640; d. 1703. English potter, remembered for his petition of 1671 for a patent in which he claimed the discovery of the mystery hitherto attached to the making of transparent earthenware, commonly known as porcelain or china, or Persian ware. Whether the porcelain Dwight referred to was porcelain as later made is not certain, but he did bring the manufacture of stoneware to perfection. It is certain that Dwight did make some ware similar to porcelain, and also statues or figures. His wares are now in the British Museum and the South Kensington Museum.

Dwight, John Sullivan. b. at Boston, May 13, 1813; d. there, Sept. 5, 1893. American music critic and editor. He was graduated (1832) from Harvard, was among the organizers (1837) of the group which later became the Harvard Musical Association, and was an active member of the Transcendental Club, becoming (1841) a teacher of music and Latin at Brook Farm. He contributed articles on music and other subjects to the Harbinger, the Boston Daily Chronotype, and Sartain's Magazine, and for a time in 1851 was music editor of the Boston Commonwealth. He edited (1852–81) Dwight's Journal of Music, took a leading role in founding (1865) the Boston Philharmonic Society, was president (1873–93) of the Harvard Musica Association, and aided in establishing (1876) a professorship of music at Harvard.

Dwight, Mabel. b. at Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1876—. American etcher, painter, and lithographer, perhaps best known for her lithographs, which have been collected by museums and institutions at Paris, Berlin, and London, as well as in the U.S. She was educated at the Hopkins School of Art, San Francisco, and has exhibited widely in the U.S. and Europe. She has also done many water colors of the American scene. The Metropolitan Museum, Whitney Museum, and Brooklyn Museum at New York, Boston Museum, Fogg Art Museum at Cambridge, Mass., Art Institute of Chicago, Detroit Museum, Berlin Museum, Victoria and Albert Museum at London, and the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris have collected her works, among which are The Ferry Boat, Life Class, Sacco and Vanzetti, Circus Act, Barnyard, Nova Scotia, The Ocean, and Scene from Green Pastures.

Dwight, Sereno Edwards. b. at Greenfield Hill, Conn., May 18, 1786; d. at Philadelphia, Nov. 30, 1850. American Congregational clergyman and author; son of Timothy Dwight (1752–1817). He was president of Hamilton College (1833–35), and wrote Life of Edwards (1830) and The Hebrew Wife (1836), and edited Jonathan Edwards's works (1829).

Dwight, Theodore. b. at Northampton, Mass., Dec. 15, 1764; d. at New York, June 12, 1846. American journalist and politician; brother of Timothy Dwight (1752-1817). He served as a Federalist representative from Connecticut in the 9th Congress (Dec. 1, 1806–March 3, 1807), was secretary of the Hartford Convention in 1814, and founded (c1817) the New York Daily Advertiser, with which he was connected until 1835.

Dwight, Theodore. b. at Hartford, Conn., March 3, 1796; d. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Oct. 16, 1866. American author; son of Theodore Dwight (1764–1846). He wrote History of Connecticut (1841).

Dwight, Theodore William. b. at Catskill, N.Y., July 18, 1822; d. at Clinton, N.Y., June 29, 1892. American jurist; grandson of Timothy Dwight (1752-1817). He was graduated from Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y., in 1840, and was professor of municipal law (1858–91) at Columbia College. He published Argument in the Court of Appeals in the Rose Will Case (1863) and Cases extracted from the Report of the Commissioners of Charities in England, and the Disposition of Property for Charitable Uses (1864).

Dwight, Thomas. b. at Boston, Oct. 13, 1843; d. Sept. 9, 1911. American surgeon and anatomist. He received his M.D. (1867) from the Harvard Medical School, and was thereafter an instructor in comparative anatomy (1872–77, 1880–83) at Harvard, succeeding (1883) Oliver Wendell Holmes as Parkman professor of anatomy. He was the author of The Intracranial Circulation (1867), which won the Boylston prize, The Structure and Action of Striated Muscle Fibers (1873), The Anatomy of the Head, with . . . Plates Representing Frozen Sections (1876), Frozen Sections of a Child (1881), Notes on the Dissection and Brain of the Chimpanzee "Gumbo" (1895), Description of the Human Spine Showing Numerical Variations (1901), and Thoughts of a Catholic Anatomist (1911).

Dwight, Timothy. b. at Northampton, Mass., May 14, 1752; d. Jan. 11, 1817. American Congregational minister, educator, and writer. A grandson of Jonathan Edwards, he was a child prodigy, able to read the Bible before the age of four. He graduated (1769) from Yale, served as principal of the Hopkins Grammar School at New Haven, and was a tutor (1771–77) at Yale, where he also received his master's degree (1772). Licensed to preach (1777) by a committee of the Northern Association of Massachusetts, he was appointed later in the same year as chaplain of a Connecticut brigade in the Continental Army, resigning from the post in 1779. Returning to Northampton, he became active in politics and sat (1781–82) in the state legislature. In 1783 he took a pastorate at the Greenfield Hill Congregational Church, where he was ordained later in the same year. The successor to Ezra Stiles, he was (1795–1817) president of Yale College, where he also served as professor of theology and taught several other subjects; he founded the medical department at Yale and liberalized campus life. In addition, he helped organize the Missionary Society of Connecticut, the Andover Theological Seminary, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. A stern Calvinist, he expounded his views in Theology, Explained and Defended (5 vols., 1818–19), originally delivered as sermons to Yale students. He also wrote A Discourse on the Genuineness, and Authenticity of the New Testament (1794) and The Nature, and Danger, of Infidel Philosophy (1798). A Federalist in politics, he wrote The Duty of Americans, at the Present Crisis (1798) and the Discourse . . . on the Character of George Washington, Esq. (1800). His first publication, A Dissertation on the History, Eloquence, and Poetry of the Bible (1772) is the acknowledged fountainhead of the literary school known as the Connecticut (or Hartford) Wits. The Conquest of Canaan (1785) was styled by Dwight as the first American epic poem. His other poetical works include Greenfield Hill (1794) and The Triumph of Infidelity, a Poem (1788). Important as a historical source is his Travels in New England and New York (4 vols., 1821–22).

Dwight, Timothy. b. at Norwich, Conn., Nov. 16, 1828; d. May 26, 1916. American scholar; grandson of Timothy Dwight (1752–1817). He was graduated at Yale College in 1849, studied divinity at Yale (1851–55) and at Bonn and Berlin (1856–58), became professor of sacred literature and New Testament Greek in the divinity school at Yale in 1858, was appointed president of Yale College in 1886 (resigned 1899), and was a member of the New Testament Revision Company. He published The True Ideal of an American University (1872), among others.

Dwinger (dving'ĕr), Edwin Erich. b. at Kiel, Germany, April 23, 1898—. German novelist. He experienced World War I at its worst: he was captured by the Russians, held prisoner in Siberia, then fought under Kolchak against the Bolsheviks, and finally escaped to Germany five years after he had left it. In the trilogy Die Armee hinter Stacheldraht (1929; Prisoner of War, 1930), Zwischen Weiss und Rot (1930; Between White and Red, 1932), and Wir rufen Deutschland (1932), written in diary form, he has set forth the unspeakable horrors he felt and saw. The first volume particularly is considered by many to be one of the most unforgettable of the books about World War I.

Dwyfor (dŭ.ē'vôr), 1st Earl of. Title of Lloyd George, David.

Dyak (dī'ak). [Also: Dayak, Dajak.] Collective term for the pagan natives of Borneo, including these distinct tribal groupings: Land Dyak (SW), Ngadju Dyak (SE), Iban or Sea Dyak (W), Bahau (E), and Klamatan (Sarawak and British North Borneo). They number between one and one-and-a-half million. Their languages all belong to the Malayo-Polynesian stock.

Dyar (dī'ar), Harrison Gray. b. at New York, Feb. 14, 1866; d. at Washington, D.C., Jan. 21, 1929. American entomologist. He was custodian of Lepidoptera (1897–1929) at the U.S. National Museum, which now houses his large collection. His most important work was research on the mosquito, and he published The Mosquitoes of North and Central America (4 vols., 1912–17), with Frederick Knab and L. O. Howard, and The Mosquitoes of the Americas (1928). He was also publisher of a monthly journal, Insecutor Inscitiae Menstruus, and editor (1904–07) of the Journal of the New York Entomological Society.

Dyar, Mary. See Dyer or Dyar, Mary.

Dyardanes (dī.är.dā'nēz). An ancient name of the Brahmaputra.

Dyamond (dī'a.mond). See Diamond.

Dyangeh (dyäng'ge). See Dinka.

Dyarse (dyär'se). See Yarse.

Dybbøl (dŭb'ėl). [German, Düppel.] Village in S Jutland, Denmark, opposite Sønderborg, ab. 28 mi. NE of Schleswig. The allied German troops were defeated here by the Danes on May 28, 1848, and again on June 5. The redoubts were stormed by the Saxons and Bavarians on April 13, 1849, and by the Prussians on April 18, 1864. Pop. ab. 1,000.

Dyce (dīs), Alexander. b. at Edinburgh, June 30, 1798; d. at London, May 15, 1869. British literary critic and Shakespearian scholar; cousin of William Dyce. He received a B.A. at Oxford in 1819, entered the ministry c1822, abandoned the clerical profession in 1825, and devoted himself to literature. He edited a number of English classics, including the works of William Collins (1827), George Peele (1828–39), John Webster (1830), Robert Greene (1831), James Shirley (1833), Thomas Middleton (1840), Beaumont and Fletcher (1843–46), and Christopher Marlowe (1850), but is chiefly known for his edition of Shakespeare (1857; revised 1866). He was one of those exposing John Payne Collier's inventions in Elizabethan literature. Dyce was a founder of the Percy Society, dedicated to publishing old poetry in English.

Dyce, William. b. at Aberdeen, Scotland, Sept. 19, 1806; d. at Streatham, England, Feb. 14, 1864. British historical painter, founder of the Pre-Raphaelite movement in the English school of painting; cousin of Alexander Dyce. He graduated with the degree of M.A. at the University of Aberdeen in 1822, and exhibited his first picture, Bacchus Nursed by the Nymphs of Nyssa, at the Royal Academy, London, in 1827; he painted a Madonna and Child in the Pre-Raphaelite style in 1828. He lived as a portrait painter at Edinburgh (1830–37), was headmaster of the School of Design at Somerset House, London (1840–43), and was appointed professor of fine arts in King's College, London, in 1844. He designed the fresco Baptism of Ethelbert for the House of Lords in 1846. He published Theory of the Fine Arts (1844), The National Gallery, its Formation and Management (1853), and others.

Dyche (dīch), Thomas. d. c1735. English schoolmaster, compiler of grammars, vocabularies, and dictionaries. Master of Stratford Bow school (after 1710); convicted of libel (1719) for his exposure of the peculations of John Ward of Hackney. Compiler of Vocabularium Latiale (1708 or 1709), A Guide to the English Tongue (1709), The Spelling Dictionary (1725), and A New General English Dictionary (3rd ed., 1740).

Dyer (dī'ėr), Sir Edward. d. 1607. English poet and courtier. He was employed in several embassies by Queen Elizabeth, by whom he was knighted in 1596. He was a friend of Raleigh and Sidney, and wrote a number of pastoral odes and madrigals. He is known chiefly as the author of a poem descriptive of contentment, beginning "My mind to me a kingdom is" (set to music in William Byrd's Psalmes, Sonets, and Songs, 1588).

Dyer, Eliphalet. b. at Windham, Conn., Sept. 14, 1721; d. there, May 13, 1807. American lawyer. He was a member (1747–62) of the Connecticut general assembly, and subsequently (1762–84) of the governor's council. An associate justice (after 1766) of the superior court of Connecticut, he was also a delegate (1774 et seq.) to the Continental Congress. Earlier (1754) he was an organizer of the Susquehanna Company to lay out a Connecticut settlement in the Wyoming Valley, west of what was then New York province. After years of adjudication with Pennsylvania, the case was argued by Dyer before a congressional committee, and the title was awarded to Connecticut (although these and other western lands were ultimately lost by Connecticut).

Dyer, George. b. at London, March 15, 1755; d. there, March 2, 1841. English scholar. He graduated at Cambridge University in 1778, and subsequently became pastor of a dissenting congregation at Cambridge. Having abandoned the clerical profession, he settled in 1792 at London, where he devoted himself to literature. His chief works are History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge (1814) and Privileges of the University of Cambridge (1824).

Dyer, Isadore. b. at Galveston, Tex., Nov. 2, 1865; d. Oct. 12, 1920. American dermatologist and leprologist. He was an associate professor of dermatology (1905–08), and later full professor and dean (1908–20), at Tulane University, Louisiana. He was a founder and first president (1894) of the Louisiana Leper Home (later the National Leprosarium). He was the author of The Art of Medicine and Other Addresses, Papers, etc. (1913); editor (1896–1920) of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal and coeditor (1914–16) of the American Journal of Tropical Diseases and Preventative Medicine.

Dyer, John. b. at Aberglasney, Carmarthenshire, Wales, c1700; d. July 24, 1758. English poet. He became vicar of Calthorp, Leicestershire, in 1741, and subsequently held several church posts in Lincolnshire. He published Grongar Hill (1726), which with James Thomson's The Seasons is generally recognized as the first of the romantic pastoral poems, Ruins of Rome (1740), and The Fleece (1757).

Dyer or Dyar, Mary. Hanged at Boston, June 1, 1660. Quaker martyr. A Quaker intent on visiting her fellow Quakers imprisoned at Boston, she was twice banished from the Massachusetts colony on pain of death, and, when she returned again, was hanged on Boston Common.

Dyer, Nehemiah Mayo. b. at Provincetown, Mass., Feb. 19, 1839; d. Jan. 27, 1910. American naval officer, with the Union navy in the Civil War. He served on the Metacomet at Mobile Bay, was commissioned lieutenant and lieutenant commander during 1868, and as captain (1897) in command of the Baltimore participated in Dewey's victory at Manila Bay. He retired (1901) as a rear admiral.

Dyer, Reginald Edward Harry. b. at Simla, India, Oct. 9, 1864; d. at Long Ashton, Bristol, England, July 23, 1927. British general now generally held to have been immediately responsible for the "Amritsar Massacre" of 1919 in India. He entered the British army in India in 1885, and thereafter participated in many operations against Indian and Burmese objectors to British rule, and rose to command of an infantry brigade at the time of World War I. On April 13, 1919, he ordered troops under his command to fire on an assemblage of about 5,000 men, women, and children who had gathered for a religious observance in the Jalianwala Bagh, a public garden in the Punjab city of Amritsar. The casualties were nearly 400 killed and about 1,200 wounded. By General Dyer's further order, no one was allowed throughout the day to give medical aid, water, or other help to the wounded. When it became evident that these procedures had awakened profound anger throughout India, and caused unfavorable comment around the world, a commission of inquiry was set up. It heard General Dyer, who had been promoted to a higher command, admit that the gathering in the Jalianwala Bagh had no political character and had been entirely unarmed and peaceful (he is said to have regretted, however, that he had not had still more shot, the better to further his primary purpose of quelling anti-British activity in the Punjab). The commission censured the general; the commander in chief in India permitted him to resign; his admirers gave him a handsome sword; and he passed his last years in scientific studies, particularly concerning military aircraft. "Remember Amritsar" became an Indian nationalist slogan, and most historians now believe that Dyer's exploit actually therefore did much to hasten the eventual withdrawal of the British from India.

Dyer, Samuel. b. at London, 1725; d. there, Sept. 15, 1772. English translator, a friend of Samuel Johnson. He matriculated (1743) at Leiden, and intended originally to enter the ministry, but took up literary work at London. Member of the club organized (1749) by Johnson which met at the King's Head in Ivy Lane; translated lives of Pericles and Demetrius for Tinson's edition of Plutarch's Lives (1758); joined Johnson's Literary Club (1764) and became a friend of Edmund Burke; credited by Sir Joshua Reynolds and Malone with the authorship of the Letters of Junius.

Dyer, Thomas Henry. b. at London, May 4, 1804; d. at Bath, England, Jan. 30, 1888. English historian. He was for some time employed as a clerk in the West India House, and eventually devoted himself wholly to literature. He wrote History of Modern Europe (1861–64), A History of the City of Rome (1865), and others.

Dyerma (dyer'mä). See Djerma.

Dyersburg (dī'ėrz.bėrg). City in W Tennessee, county seat of Dyer County, in a cotton area: manufactures of cotton textiles. 10,885 (1950).

Dying Alexander (al.eg.zan'dėr). Name given to a sculptured head, held to be a Greek original of Hellenistic date, very remarkable for the intensity of its expression of pain, and of admirable execution.

Dying Gaul (gôl), The. [Formerly called The Dying Gladiator.] Ancient statue of the Pergamene school, in the Capitoline Museum, Rome. The warrior, nude, sits on the ground with bowed head, supporting himself with his right arm. The statue is considered especially fine in the mastery of anatomy displayed, and in its characterization of the racial type. It is thought possibly to have been commissioned by Attalus as a monument to his victories over the Gauls.

Dyk (dik), Viktor. b. at Psovka, Czechoslovakia, 1877; d. at Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, 1931. Czech poet, dramatist, and novelist. As a young journalist he edited and wrote for periodicals of the anti-Austrian Radical Progressive Party, and throughout his life, nationalist sentiment dominated his work. In 1917 he was imprisoned by the Austrian authorities, but after the attainment of Czechoslovak independence he became a member of parliament and eventually a senator. He is esteemed chiefly as a poet, one of his best-known works being The Window, which was inspired by his prison experiences. Some of his short stories, of a romantic turn, are much admired, but some critical opinion holds that his novels are weak in construction and too verbose. As a dramatist he was successful both with historical plays and with satirical comedies.

Dykes (dīks), John Bacchus. b. at Hull, England, March 10, 1823; d. at St. Leonards, England, Jan. 22, 1876. English composer of church music, notably hymns such as Nearer, My God, to Thee, The Day is Past and Over, and Jesus, Lover of My Soul. He was an editor of Hymns, Ancient and Modern.

Dykh-Tau (dich.tou'). Peak in SW U.S.S.R., in the C Caucasus Mountains, ab. 50 mi. SE of Mount Elbrus. It is a sharp peak with mountain glaciers. Elevation, ab. 17,053 ft.

Dykstra (dik'strą), Clarence Addison. b. at Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 25, 1883; d. at Laguna Beach, Calif., May 6, 1950. American educator. He was professor of political science (1909–18) at Kansas. He served as commissioner (1923–26) and director of personnel and efficiency (1926–30) in the Los Angeles department of water and power, and was chosen city manager (1930–37) of Cincinnati, Ohio. He was president (1937–44) of the University of Wisconsin, served (1940–41) as U.S. selective service director while on leave of absence from Wisconsin, and was provost (1944 et seq.) of the University of California.

Dymoke (dim'ọk), Robert. d. April 13, 1546. English soldier; son of Sir Thomas Dymoke (c1428–1471). He acted (1484, 1502, and 1509) as sheriff of Lincolnshire, was champion at the coronations of Richard III, Henry VII, and Henry VIII, and distinguished himself at the siege of Tournai.

Dymoke, Sir Thomas. b. c1428; beheaded at London, 1471. English soldier, attached to the Lancastrian faction in the Wars of the Roses. He aided his brother-in-law Sir Robert Wells in raising a force (1471) in Lincolnshire in support of Henry VI. Captured by Edward IV at Edgecote, he was taken to London and beheaded.

Dymond (dī'mọnd), John. b. in Canada, May 3, 1836; d. March 5, 1922. American sugar planter. Broker (1863 et seq.) with Dymond and Lally at New York; New Orleans office (opened 1866) to trade in sugar, molasses, and coffee led to purchase of two sugar plantations on the Mississippi River. As manager of the plantations, he innovated many devices for the improvement of sugar-cane growing.

Dymond, Jonathan. b. at Exeter, England, Dec. 19, 1796; d. May 6, 1828. English author. He followed the occupation of a linen-draper at Essex, where in 1825 he founded an auxiliary society of the Peace Society. His chief work is Essays on the Principles of Morality (1829).

Dynamo. Play (1929) by Eugene O'Neill. An electrical dynamo displaces God in the hierarchy of the universe, assuming the role of a cruel, relentless potentate.

Dynasts, The. Poem by Thomas Hardy, published in three parts, in 1903, 1905, and 1908. This is a gigantic epic drama (130 scenes in 19 acts) dealing with the Napoleonic wars, with interspersed lyrics and philosophical comments by supernatural spirits and choruses. In spite of its formal and stylistic defects, The Dynasts has been acclaimed as the greatest work, at least in its conception, produced by any English poet since Milton's Paradise Lost.

Dyola (dyō'lä). See Diola.

Dyoor (dūr). See Lwo.

Dyoula (dū'lä). See Diula.

Dyrrhachium (di.rā'ki.um). A Latin name of Durrës, city.

Dysart (dī'ząrt). Seaport, incorporated (1930) in Kirkcaldy royal burgh, in E Scotland, in Fifeshire, situated on the N bank of the Firth of Forth, ab. 2 mi. NE of Kirkcaldy proper. The port exports coal from the Fifeshire coal field.

Dyscolus (dis'kō.lus), Apollonius. See Apollonius Dyscolus.

Dysmas (diz'mąs). See Dismas.

Dyson (dī'sọn), Sir Frank Watson. b. in Ashby de la Zouch, England, 1868; d. at sea en route to South Africa from Australia, May 25, 1939. British astronomer, who served as astronomer royal of Scotland (1905–10) and of England (1910–33). Member of eclipse expeditions to Portugal (1900), Sumatra (1901), and Sfax, Tunisia (1905); verified (1919) Einstein theory of effect of gravitation on light; president of International Astronomical Union.

Dyson, William Henry. b. at Alfredton, Victoria, Australia, Sept. 23, 1880; d. at London, Jan. 21, 1938. Australian cartoonist and satirical etcher. He gained great fame in England after 1910, especially as staff cartoonist for the Labourite Daily Herald (1912–16), where his satirical work on British complacency took the public fancy. He reached the peak of his popularity during World War I. He was associated (1925–30) with the Melbourne Herald, but returned to London and the Daily Herald, to which he contributed until his death.

Dyushambe (dū.shām'bę). Former name of Stalinabad.

Dyveke (dü'vę.kę). [Also: Duveke, Duiveke; Latin, Columbula, meaning "Little Dove."] b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, 1491; d. probably by poison, 1517. Mistress of Christian II of Denmark. Christian met her (1507) at Bergen, Norway, where her mother kept a small inn. She accompanied him to Oslo as his mistress, a relationship which she maintained even after his elevation to the throne in 1513, and his marriage (1515) to Isabella, sister of the emperor Charles V. She has been made the subject of an 18th-century tragedy, and of various novels and poems.

Dza-chu (dzä'chö'). Tibetan name of the Mekong.

Dzaudzhikau (dzou.jē.kou′). [Former names, Ordzhonikidze, Ordjonikidze, Vladikavkaz.] City in the U.S.S.R., capital of the North Ossetian Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic, in the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Terek River at the base of the Caucasus Mountains. Zinc, lead, silver, and copper are mined here and a large sulfuric acid plant is located in the city. It is a railroad terminus, a fortress, and an important center of transit trade. 127,172 (1939).

Dzerzhinsk (dzer.zhinsk′). [Former name, Rastyapino.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Gorki oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 25 mi. W of Gorki. It has dye factories and cotton and linen mills. 103,415 (1939).

Dzerzhinsky (dzer.zhin′ski), Felix Edmundovich. b. at Vilna, Lithuania (then a part of the Russian empire), 1877; d. in July, 1926. Russian political agitator and politician. He joined the Social Democratic Party in 1895, was banished to Siberia in 1897, escaped in 1899, was arrested again in 1900, escaped again in 1902, took a hand in the unsuccessful revolution of 1905, was again banished, and returned in 1912 only to be arrested once more and sentenced to prison at hard labor. Released in the early days of the revolution of 1917, he became a member of the group which planned the successful Bolshevik coup in November of that year, and in December was assigned to organize the Cheka, or secret police. In 1919 he was named commissar of the home department, and subsequently became commissar of transport, and finally head of the supreme economic council.

Dzhambul (jäm.böl′). [Former name, Aulie-Ata, Auliye-Ata.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic: a fast-growing city producing foodstuffs and textiles. 62,723 (1939).

Dzhibkhalantu (jēp.ĸä.län.tö′). [Also: Jibhalanta; Mongolian, Uliassutai, Ulasutai.] City in the Mongolian People's Republic, ab. 400 mi. W of Ulan Bator, the capital. It is a trading center and caravan meeting-place on one of the important trade routes from the W part of the country to the U.S.S.R. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Dzhugashvili (jö.gą.shvē′li), Joseph Vissarionovich. See Stalin, Joseph Vissarionovich.

Dzierzon (je′zhôn), Johann (or Jan). b. Jan. 16, 1811; d. Oct. 26, 1906. Polish-German apiculturist, noted as the discoverer of parthenogenesis in the drones of the honeybee. He also devised the Dzierzon hive (with cupboard opening at one end). He was the author of Theorie und Praxis des neuen Bienengreundes (1848), Rationelle Bienenzucht (1861; Eng. trans., Dzierzon's Rational Beekeeping, 1882), and Der Zwillingsstock (1890).

Dzierżoniów (jer.zhô′nyöf). [German, Reichenbach.] Town in S Poland, in the województwo (province) of Wrocław, formerly in Silesia, Germany, situated on the slopes of the Eulengebirge and on the Peile River ab. 32 mi. SW of the city of Wrocław (Breslau). It has cotton textile mills, livestock markets, and grain trade. Jewish textile workers' coöperatives from Poland settled here after World War II. There are various educational institutions. Here, on Aug. 16, 1762, Frederick the Great defeated the Austrians under Laudon; and here a convention (called the Convention of Reichenbach) was signed, on July 27, 1790, by which the emperor Leopold agreed not to annex Turkish territory, while Prussia gave up plans for annexations in Poland. A treaty was concluded here, on June 15, 1813, by which Great Britain agreed to subsidies for Russia and Prussia in the war against Napoleon. The town became part of Poland as a result of the decisions made at the Potsdam Conference (or Berlin Conference) in 1945. Pop. 17,253 (1939), 16,646 (1946).

Dzugashvili (dzō.gą.shvē′li), Joseph Vissarionovich. See Stalin, Joseph Vissarionovich.

Dzungaria (zùng.gār′i.ą). [Also: Songaria, Soongaria, Sungaria, Zungaria; sometimes called the "Northern Circuit."] Name given to a former province of Ili, in the Chinese empire, S of the Altai, W of Mongolia, and E and S of Asiatic Russia; also sometimes restricted to a part of this province. It was the nucleus of a Mongol kingdom, that of the Songares, in the 17th and 18th centuries. It is now a part of the Chinese province of Sinkiang.

Dzungarian Alatau (zùng.gār′i.ąn ä.lä.tou′). Mountain range in the U.S.S.R., in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic, Asiatic Russia, on the boundary between that government and the Chinese province of Sinkiang. Elevation (average), ab. 13,000 ft.; length, ab. 350 mi.

Dzungarian Basin. [Also, Dzungaria.] Basin in NW China, in the province of Sinkiang. Bordered on the S by the Tien Shan mountain range and on the N by the Altai range, it is a desert region similar to the more moist parts of the Gobi. Length, ab. 450 mi.; width, ab. 200 mi.

Dzyubin (dzyö′bin), Eduard Georgiyevich. See Bagritski, Eduard.

E

Ea (ā′ä). One of the supreme gods of the Sumerians and Babylonians, enumerated in the first triad (with Anu and Enlil) of the 12 great gods. He was the god of the ocean and the subterranean springs. As god of the people he was also "lord of profound wisdom" and counsel, patron of sciences and arts, creator, bringer of culture, healer, and god of fertility.

Eabani or Ea-bani (ā.ä.bä′nē). See Enkidu.

Each and All. Poem by Ralph Waldo Emerson, published in 1839.

Eachard (ēch′ąrd), John. b. in Suffolk, England, c1636; d. at Cambridge, England, July 7, 1697. English divine and satirical writer. He was chosen master of Catharine Hall, Cambridge University, in 1675, and vice-chancellor of the University in 1679 and 1695. He wrote The Grounds and Occasions of the Contempt of the Clergy and Religion (1670, published anonymously), and others.

Eadbert (ed′bėrt) or Eadberht (ad′berċht), Saint. d. 698. Bishop of Lindisfarne in 688, the successor of Saint Cuthbert.

Eadburga (ed′bėr.gä) or Eadburgh (ad′börċh). [Also, Eadburh (ad′börċh).] fl. c800. Daughter of Offa, king of Mercia, and wife of Brihtric (Beorhtric), king of the West Saxons. She attempted to poison a favorite of Brihtric, but the cup was accidentally drained by her husband. She fled to Charlemagne, who appointed her abbess of a nunnery, a post from which she was later dismissed for immorality. She is said to have died a beggar in the streets of Pavia.

Eadfrid (ed′frid) or Eadfrith (ad′frith). d. 721. Bishop of Lindisfarne from 698 to 721.

Eadgar (ed′gąr, ad′gär). See Edgar.

Eadgar the Ætheling (ath′ę.ling). See Edgar (or Eadgar) Ætheling.

Eadgyth (ad′yüth). See Edith.

Eadie (ē′di), John. b. at Alva, Stirlingshire, Scotland, May 9, 1810; d. at Glasgow, June 3, 1876. Scottish theologian and Biblical critic, appointed professor of Biblical literature in the United Secession Divinity Hall in 1843. He wrote commentaries on Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, and Galatians (1854–69), Bible Cyclopaedia (1848), The English Bible: an external and critical History of various English Translations of Scripture . . . (1876), and others.

Eadmer (ed′mėr). See Edmer.

Eadmund (ed′mund). See Edmund.

Eadred (ed′ręd). See Edred.

Eadric Streona (ed′rik strā′ǫ.nä). See Edric or Eadric Streona.

Eads (ēdz), Hervey Lauderdale. b. near South Union, Ky., April 28, 1807; d. there, Feb. 13, 1892. American bishop and theologian, author of works on Shakerism, and an outstanding leader of that sect in Kentucky. He was a relative of James Buchanan Eads, American engineer and inventor.

Eads, James Buchanan. b. at Lawrenceburg, Ind., May 23, 1820; d. at Nassau, Bahama Islands, March 8, 1887. American engineer and inventor, noted for his work on the Eads Bridge across the Mississippi at St. Louis. After working as a clerk during his early years, he became (1838) a purser on a Mississippi River steamboat. Patenting his invention of a diving bell, he left his job as purser to enter steamboat salvaging, in which he used his diving bell to good effect. After an unsuccessful venture in glass manufacturing at St. Louis, he resumed salvaging and became an authority on river control. Called to Washington by President Lincoln in 1861, he recommended to the Union government means of employing the Western rivers for war operations, and undertook to construct, in what was virtually record time, the fleet of steam-powered, armor-plated gunboats which he had proposed. He built a total of 14 armored vessels featuring ordnance inventions patented by him. His best-known achievement was the construction (1867–74) of a steel and masonry bridge across the Mississippi at St. Louis, incorporating engineering features that conquered difficulties which had been pronounced insuperable by prominent authorities of the day. His reputation as a hydraulic engineer was established with his river control work (completed 1879) at South Pass in the Mississippi, whereby he was able to control the placement of the river's sediment so as to keep the channel clean. He also contributed his knowledge to the improvement of harbor facilities at Liverpool, Toronto, Tampico, and Veracruz. He was awarded (1884) the Albert Medal by the British Society for the Encouragement of Art, Manufacture, and Commerce. Shortly before his death he clashed with Ferdinand de Lesseps over the place for the proposed canal across Central America. Eads favored a route across the isthmus of Tehuantepec, which (in comparison with the Panama route) would have considerably shortened the New York-to-San Francisco voyage, and he was working on this plan when his final illness forced him to stop.

Eadward (ed'wąrd) or Eadweard (ad'werd). See Edward.

Eadwig (ad'wēy'). See Edwy or Eadwig.

Eadwine (ad'wi.ne) or Eadwin (ad'win). See Edwin or Eadwine or Eadwin.

Eagle (ē'gl), Solomon. Pseudonym of Squire, J. C.

Eagle Grove. City in N Iowa, in Wright County near Fort Dodge. 4,176 (1950).

Eaglehawk (ē'gl.hôk). Mining town in SE Australia, in Victoria state, ab. 100 mi. NW of Melbourne. For administrative and census purposes it is part of Bendigo.

Eagle Island. See Achill.

Eagle Lake. City in SE Texas, in Colorado County, near the Colorado River ab. 60 mi. SW of Houston. It is a railroad junction and rice-milling center. 2,787 (1950).

Eagle of the Doctors. Epithet of Ailly or Ailli, Pierre d'.

Eagle; or Dartmouth Centinel (därt'muth sen'ti.nęl), The. Newspaper published (1793–99) at Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H. Among its contributors were Royall Tyler and Joseph Dennie.

Eagle Pass. [Spanish, El Paso del Aguila.] City in SW Texas, county seat of Maverick County, on the Rio Grande and the Mexican border: tourist resort. It is the site of a former U.S. military camp (which was called Camp Eagle Pass). The town was established in 1850 and called El Paso del Aguila. The site of nearby Fort Duncan, abandoned since the close of the Indian wars, is of some historical importance from its association with the Confederate cavalry unit under Joseph Shelby which withdrew across the Rio Grande River into Mexico on July 4, 1865, rather than surrender. (Shelby threw the unit's battle flag into the river in order to keep it from falling into Union hands, and thus led some historians to make occasional reference to the site as "the grave of the Confederacy.") 7,276 (1950).

Eaglesham (ē'gl.shąm), 9th Lord of. Title of Montgomerie, Sir John.

Eagle's Nest. Rock, ab. 1,200 ft. in height, among the Killarney Lakes in County Kerry, Ireland.

Eagle That Is Forgotten, The. Poem by Vachel Lindsay, published in General William Booth Enters into Heaven and Other Poems (1913). It celebrates the memory of John Peter Altgeld, governor of Illinois.

Eahfrith (aċh'frith). See Aldfrith.

Eaker (ā'kėr), Ira Clarence. b. at Field Creek, Llano County, Tex., April 13, 1896—. American air-force officer who commanded the first heavy-bomber mission over Europe in World War II. He transferred (1917) from the U.S. ground forces to the air corps. In 1926 he flew on a good-will tour of South America. He was chief pilot of the army plane, Question Mark, which set the world endurance flight record (1929). He completed (1936) the first transcontinental flight on instruments. Advanced to brigadier general (January, 1942), he was appointed chief (July, 1942) of the U.S. bomber command in Europe, promoted (September, 1942) to major general, and appointed (February, 1943) head of the U.S. army air force in Europe. He was promoted (September, 1943) to lieutenant general, and commanded (1944–45) the Mediterranean allied air forces. He was chief (1945–47) of U.S. army air staff.

Eakins (ā'kinz), Thomas. b. at Philadelphia, July 25, 1844; d. June 25, 1916. American painter, sculptor, and teacher. He attended the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts and in 1866 went to Paris, where he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts for three years. During a stay in Spain beginning in 1869, he came under the influence of Velázquez, Goya, Ribera, and other Spanish masters, some of whose traits were later apparent in Eakins's canvases. Returning (1870) to Philadelphia, where he spent the remainder of his career, he took up the study of anatomy at Jefferson Medical College, developing a knowledge and interest which appear in his later studies, the Clinic of Dr. Agnew and the Clinic of Dr. Gross. The latter, completed in 1875, is by some critics accounted his finest work, and reflects, as do many of his other works, his profound realism and his mastery of the human structure. In 1873 he began teaching at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, where for many years he was chief instructor and of which he ultimately became dean. Among his other well-known paintings are: The Writing Master, Between Rounds, Biglen Brothers Turning the Stakeboat, Pair-Oared Shell, Chess Players, The Thinker, and a number of portraits. The chief collection of his paintings is at the Pennsylvania Museum at Philadelphia. His sculpture includes work on the soldiers and sailors monument at Brooklyn, N.Y., and on the battle monument at Trenton, N.J.

Ealdfrith (ald'frith). See Aldfrith.

Ealdred (ald'red). See Aldred.

Ealdred's Gate. See Aldersgate.

Ealhwine (alċh'wi.ne). Anglo-Saxon name of Alcuin.

Ealing (ē'ling). Municipal borough in SE England, in Middlesex, ab. 6 mi. W of Paddington station, London. It was the birthplace of Thomas Huxley. 187,306 (1951).

EAM. Initials of Greek words meaning "National Liberation Front." This was the largest political organization for resistance during the Axis occupation of Greece in World War II. Founded in 1941, it was replaced by the rebel "Free Greek Government" in 1947. At the outset it was an alliance of various left-wing parties, with Communists most numerous in the leadership and least so in the rank and file. A combination of maneuvering by the Communists and violent opposition from the British forced it constantly further to the left, until finally it was almost purely Communist. The ELAS was its fighting force.

Eames (āmz), Emma. b. at Shanghai, China, Aug. 13, 1865; d. at New York, June 13, 1952. American operatic soprano. She made her debut in Gounod's Romeo and Juliet at the Opéra, Paris, in 1889. She married Julian Story on Aug. 1, 1891, and divorced him in 1907; married (1911) Emilio de Gogorza, a baritone with whom she appeared in recitals until her retirement in 1914.

Eames (ēmz), Henry Purmort. b. at Chicago, Sept. 12, 1872—. American pianist and teacher. He studied under Clara Schumann and Paderewski in Europe, toured (1895–97) the U.S. and Europe as a concert pianist, founded the Omaha School of Music, was vice-president and director (1912–20) of the piano and orchestra department of the Cosmopolitan School of Music, Chicago, and was president (1916–17) of the Society of American Musicians.

Eames, Wilberforce. b. at Newark, N.J., Oct. 12, 1855; d. at New York, Dec. 6, 1937. American librarian and bibliographer. He was associated (1885–95) with the Lenox Library until its merger with the New York Public Library. He was the author of articles on bibliographies of the Bay Psalm Book (1885), of Ptolemy's Geography (1886), of Sir Walter Raleigh (1886), and of Captain John Smith (1927), and of the books List of Editions of the Margarita Philosophica (1886), The First Year of Printing in New York (1928), and Bibliography of Amerigo Vespucci (1935).

Eames, William S. b. at Clinton, Mich., Aug. 4, 1857; d. March 5, 1915. American architect. He studied at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris, and at Rome, and practiced his profession at St. Louis from 1882. He was deputy commissioner of public buildings at St. Louis (1881–83). U.S. representative at the International Congress at Madrid in 1904, and president (1904–05) of the American Institute of Architects.

Eanfled (en'fled) or Eanflæd (an'flad). b. April 17, 626; date of death not known. Daughter of Edwin, king of Northumbria, and wife of Oswy, king of Northumbria. She was baptized in infancy by Bishop Paulinus, and was the first Northumbrian to receive the rite.

Earby (ir'bi). Urban district and manufacturing town in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 7 mi. SW of Skipton, ab. 230 mi. N of London by rail. It has cotton manufactures. 5,384 (1951).

Eardwulf (ard'wůlf) or Eardulf (ar'důlf). d. 810. King (796–810) of Northumbria. He was driven from the throne in 808, but was restored in 809.

Earhart (ār'härt), Amelia. [Married name, Putnam.] b. at Atchison, Kan., July 24, 1898; d. probably in July, 1937. American aviator, notable for making the first unaccompanied flight by a woman across the Atlantic (1932) and over the Pacific (1935) from Hawaii to California. She gave up teaching (1927) in Massachusetts in order to take part as the first woman in a transatlantic flight (June, 1928) with Wilmer Stutz and Louis Gordon from Newfoundland to Burry Port, Wales. She was aviation editor (1928–30) of Cosmopolitan Magazine, and vice-president (1930–31) of Ludington Airlines, Inc. She was lost (1937) while flying over the Pacific on a round-the-world flight. She married (1931) George Palmer Putnam, who edited her book Last Flight (1938); she was the author also of 20 hrs. 40 min. (1928).

Earine (ē.ar'i.nē). In Ben Jonson's The Sad Shepherd, a beautiful shepherdess.

Earle (ėrl), Alice Morse. [Mrs. Henry Earle.] b. at Worcester, Mass., April 27, 1853; d. at Hempstead, Long Island, N.Y., Feb. 16, 1911. American writer on colonial history. Among her works are The Sabbath in Puritan New England (1891), Customs and Fashions in Old New England (1893), Colonial Dames and Goodwives (1895), Colonial Days in Old New York (1896), Home Life in Colonial Days (1898), Child Life in Colonial Days (1899), Stage Coach and Tavern Days (1900), Old-time Gardens (1901), Sundials and Roses of Yesterday (1902), and Two Centuries of Costume in America (1903).

Earle, John. b. at York, England, c1601; d. at Oxford, England, Nov. 17, 1665. English divine, appointed bishop of Worcester in 1662, and translated to the see of Salisbury in 1663. He wrote various poems (On the Death of Beaumont, 1616, Hortus Mertonensis, written while a fellow of Merton College) and Microcosmographie, or a Peece of the World Discovered in Essayes and Characters (1628, published anonymously), a humorous work which enjoyed great popularity.

Earle, John. b. at Churchstow, Devonshire, England, Jan. 29, 1824; d. at Oxford, England, Jan. 31, 1903. English scholar. He graduated at Oxford in 1845, became a fellow of Oriel College in 1848, was appointed professor of Anglo-Saxon in 1849 for five years, and was college tutor in 1852. He was presented to the rectory of Swanswick, near Bath, in 1857, and was prebend of Wanstow in Wells Cathedral in 1871 and rural dean of Bath from 1873 to 1877. He was reëlected professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford in 1876, the professorship having been made permanent. Among his works are Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel (1865), The Philology of the English Tongue (1866), Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon (1866), English Plant Names . . . (1880), Anglo-Saxon Literature (1884), A Hand Book to the Land Charters . . . (1888), English Prose . . . (1890), and others.

Earle, Pliny. b. at Leicester, Mass., Dec. 17, 1762; d. there, Nov. 29, 1832. American inventor. His chief invention was a machine for making cards for cotton and wool carding.

Earle, Pliny. b. at Leicester, Mass., Dec. 31, 1809; d. at Northampton, Mass., May 17, 1892. American physician and writer on the treatment of the insane; son of Pliny Earle (1762–1832). He was appointed professor of psychology in Berkshire Medical Institution at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1852, and was superintendent of the Massachusetts State Hospital for the Insane from 1864 to 1885, when he retired. Author of A Visit to Thirteen Asylums for the Insane in Europe (1839) and The Curability of Insanity (1887).

Earle, Ralph. b. at Worcester, Mass., May 3, 1874; d. Feb. 13, 1939. American naval officer and educator. As rear admiral he headed (1916–19) the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department and originated several ordnance projects, such as the 14-inch naval railway batteries in France during World War I. Retiring (1925) from the navy, he assumed the presidency (1925–39) of Worcester Polytechnical Institute. He was the author of Life at the U.S. Naval Academy (1917) and Practical Interior Ballistics (1917).

Earle, Thomas. b. at Leicester, Mass., April 21, 1796; d. at Philadelphia, July 14, 1849. American lawyer and writer; son of Pliny Earle (1762–1832). He practiced his profession at Philadelphia many years, was an influential member of the state constitutional convention in 1837, and was the vice-presidential candidate of the Liberty Party in 1840.

Earlington (ėr'ling.tọn). City in W Kentucky, in Hopkins County, in a coal-mining area: railroad junction. 2,753 (1950).

Earlom (ėr'lọm), Richard. b. at London, 1743; d. there, Oct. 9, 1822. English mezzotint engraver.

Earlston (ėrl'stọn). [Former name, Erceldoune or Ercildoune.] Parish and market town in SE Scotland, in Berwickshire, ab. 38 mi. by road SE of Edinburgh. The ruin of the "Rhymer's Castle" of Thomas Learmont (c1220–1294), an early Scottish poet called Thomas of Erceldoune or Thomas the Rhymer, is here. Textiles are woven, and there is a market. 1,689 (1931).

Earlston, Thomas of. See Thomas the Rhymer.

Early (ėr'li), Jubal Anderson. b. in Franklin County, Va., Nov. 3, 1816; d. at Lynchburg, Va., March 2, 1894. American Confederate soldier. Graduated (1837) from West Point, he was on duty in Florida against the Seminoles and resigned his commission as lieutenant in 1838. He studied law, was admitted to the bar (1840), and, until the Civil War, based his practice at Rocky Mount, Va. He was a member (1841–42) of the state legislature and served in the Mexican War. Although opposed to secession, he joined the Confederate army, took part as a colonel in the first battle of Bull Run, was promoted to brigadier general and served with the Army of Northern Virginia, attaining the rank of major general in 1863 and that of lieutenant general in 1864, having served in the Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and Wilderness campaigns. As the commander of a corps, he was ordered (1864) to the Shenandoah Valley, where he exercised an independent command. He defeated Lew Wallace at Monocacy, but his attempt to take Washington (July 11–12, 1864) was unsuccessful, and he devoted his later efforts to harrying the Maryland and Pennsylvania areas. In September and October, 1864, he was driven back by Sheridan at Winchester and Cedar Creek, and in March, 1865, his command was virtually wiped out at Waynesboro by Custer. Relieved of his command by Lee, he set out westward to carry on the fight with Confederate forces in Mississippi, but upon learning of the surrender of the latter contingents went to Mexico and then to Canada, where he published A Memoir of the Last Year of the War for Independence in the Confederate States of America (1866). He took up his law practice at Lynchburg, Va., in 1869 and later served as president of the Southern Historical Society.

Early, Stephen. [Full name, Stephen Tyree Early.] b. at Crozet, Va., Aug. 27, 1889; d. at Washington, D.C., Aug. 11, 1951. American journalist. He was a member of the United Press (1908–13) and Associated Press (1913–17, 1920–27) staffs at Washington. He served as assistant secretary (1933–37) and secretary (1937–45) to President F. D. Roosevelt, and secretary and special assistant to President Harry Truman (1945–49). In 1949 he was appointed undersecretary of defense.

Early Autumn: A Story of a Lady. Novel by Louis Bromfield, published in 1926 and awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1927.

Early English Text Society. Society founded in 1864 by F. J. Furnivall (1825–1910) and directed by him. Its object was the promotion of the study of early English. It rendered valuable service to literature in the publication of specially prepared editions of early English works.

Early History of Jacob Stahl (jā'kọb stäl, yä'kop shtäl), The. See History of Jacob Stahl, The Early.

Early Hours, The. Novel by Marmaduke Pickthall, published in 1921.

Earn (ėrn). River in C Scotland, in Perthshire. It is the outlet of Loch Earn. The river flows E from Loch Earn to the river Tay ab. 6 mi. SE of Perth. Length, ab. 46 mi.

Earn, Loch. Lake in C Scotland, in Perthshire, situated ab. 26 mi. W of Perth. Length, ab. 7 mi.; width, less than 1 mi.

Earth. The planet inhabited by man, the fifth largest of the bodies revolving about, and third in order from, the star called the Sun. It has an equatorial diameter of 7926.68 mi. but its diurnal revolution imposes an ellipsoidal figure and there is a polar "flattening," or oblateness, amounting to 26.7 mi. Its mass may be computed as 6.6 times 10^{21} tons, and its mean density as 5.52 times that of water. Of the 196,950,000 sq. mi. of surface, 57,470,000 sq. mi. is land, and the remaining 70.8 percent of area is water. If all irregularities were smoothed Earth would be wholly covered by an ocean with a uniform depth of 10,200 ft. Life is possible on this globe because of the energy supplied by the Sun, at a rate equivalent to 1.71 times 10^{14} kilowatts per second, although the Sun may be said to be, for all ordinary purposes, some 93 million mi. distant from the Earth. One complete rotation is accomplished in a sidereal day, which is 3 minutes 55.91 seconds shorter than the mean solar day of common use. This rotation is about an axis inclined 23 degrees and 27 minutes to the pole of the ecliptic, or orbit, causing, with the revolution around the Sun in 365.2422 days, the seasonal changes. Its orbital velocity is 18.49 mi. per second. The Earth has one satellite, the Moon.

Earth Horizon. Autobiography by Mary Austin, published in 1932.

Earthly Paradise, The. Collection of narrative poems (1868–71) by William Morris.

Easdale (ēz'dāl). [Also, Eisdale.] Small island in W Scotland, in Argyllshire, situated in the Firth of Lorne, ab. 11 mi. SW of Oban. It is important for its slate quarries. The island measures less than 1 mi. in length and width.

Easley (ēz'li). City in NW South Carolina, in Pickens County: trading and manufacturing center for cotton. 6,316 (1950).

East (ēst), Sir Alfred. b. at Kettering, England, Dec. 15, 1849; d. at London, Sept. 29, 1913. English landscape painter and etcher, closely identified with the conservative tradition of the Royal Academy. He began to study art in 1872 at Glasgow; later he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts and the Julian Academy at Paris, under Bouguereau and others. Soon he exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy; in 1889 he received a gold medal at Paris; subsequently he exhibited at Brussels, Munich, Berlin, Vienna, Venice, Rome, and The Hague. His work is represented in museums at Birmingham, Budapest, Chicago, Leeds, Milan, Pittsburgh, Sydney, and Zurich, among others. His principal works include Hayle, a View of Lelant (Birmingham), The Valley of Gold (Leeds), and The Valley of Cambounes, Berkshire (Sydney).

East, Edward Murray. b. at Du Quoin, Ill., Oct. 4, 1879; d. Nov. 9, 1938. American biologist. He was associated (1900–05) with the University of Illinois Agricultural Experimental Station, assistant professor (1909–14) and professor (1914–26) of experimental plant morphology, and professor (1926 et seq.) of genetics at Harvard University, and an investigator (1908–18) of methods of breeding tobacco for the U.S. Department of Agriculture. He wrote Heterozygosis in Evolution and Plant Breeding (1912), Inbreeding and Outbreeding (1919), Mankind at the Crossroads (1923), and Heredity and Human Affairs (1927), and edited Biology in Human Affairs (1931).

East, Far. See Far East.

East, Middle. See Middle East.

East, Near. See Near East.

East, the. In Biblical geography, the countries SE, E, and NE of Palestine, such as Moab, Ammon, Arabia Deserta, Assyria, and others.

East, the. One of the four great prefectures into which the Roman Empire was divided in its later history. It comprised the dioceses of Asia, Pontus, the East, and Egypt, and the diocese of Thrace (from the Aegean Sea to the Danube River).

East, the. Diocese in the prefecture of the East, in the later Roman Empire. It was somewhat more comprehensive than Syria.

East, the. The countries comprised in the Byzantine (or Eastern) Empire.

East, the. In Church history, the church in the Byzantine (or Eastern) Empire and countries adjacent, especially those on the east, as "the West" designates the church in the Western Empire.

East, the. In modern use, Asia; the Orient.

East, the. Popular designation of the states of the U.S. lying along the Atlantic seaboard, especially those north of Maryland. The term was also commonly once (but is now infrequently) applied to the New England states: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

East Abington (ab'ing.tọn). Former name of Rockland, Mass.

East Africa (af'ri.kạ), British. See British East Africa.

East Africa, German. See German East Africa.

East Africa, Italian. See Italian East Africa.

East Africa, Portuguese. See Mozambique.

East African (af'ri.kạn) or East Africa Protectorate. Former name of Kenya.

East Ahmedpur (ä.med.pör'). See Ahmedpur.

East Alton (ôl'tọn). Village in SW Illinois, in Madison County: important ammunition-manufacturing center. 7,290 (1950).

East Anglia (ang'gli.ạ). Ancient English kingdom, corresponding to the modern counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. Redwald was its first historical king (c593–617); its last under-king was Edmund (killed 870). It formed later a part of the Danelaw, and was one of the four earldoms of Canute.

East Anglian (ang'gli.ạn). General term for the dialects of England spoken in the eastern districts (those NE of London).

East Angus (ang'gus). Town in SE Quebec, Canada, situated on the Coaticook River, ab. 14 mi. E of Sherbrooke. 3,714 (1951).

East Aurora (ô.rō'rạ). Village in W New York, in Erie County: manufactures of toys. It was the home of Elbert Hubbard and until 1939 the headquarters of the Roycrofters, a handcraft group founded by Hubbard. 5,962 (1950).

East Avon (ā'vọn, av'ọn). See Avon River, S and W England.

East Bakersfield (bā'kėrz.fēld). Unincorporated community in S central California, in Kern County near Bakersfield. 38,177 (1950).

East Barnet (bär'nẹt). [Also, East Barnet Valley.] Urban district in E central England, in Hertfordshire, ab. 2 mi. SE of Barnet, ab. 8 mi. NW of King's Cross station, London. It is included in the London "Green Belt Scheme." 40,414 (1951).

East Bengal (ben.gôl', beng-). Province of Pakistan, comprising the E portion of this divided country, bounded on the N, E, and W by the Union of India, on the S by the Bay of Bengal, and on the SE by Burma; composed of the eastern territories of the former province of Bengal (divided between India and Pakistan in 1947) and the former Assam district of Sylhet. Most of the inhabitants are Moslem farmers whose chief crops are jute, rice, sugar, and tea. The province is short on cereals and is subject to many floods from the mouths of the Ganges and Brahmaputra rivers. The chief port is Chittagong. Capital, Dacca; area, 54,501 sq. mi.; pop. 41,932,329 (1951).

East Borneo (bôr'nẹ.ō). Region in the Republic of Indonesia, in the island and province of Borneo, formerly (1946–50) a daerah (autonomous area) of the United States of Indonesia, located in the NE section of what was formerly Dutch Borneo.

Eastbourne (ēst'bôrn, -bo̤rn). County borough and seaside resort in SE England, in East Sussex, situated on the English Channel ab. 3 mi. E of Beachy Head, ab. 66 mi. SE of London by rail. It was formerly a fishing village, growing rapidly during the 19th century after the building of the railroad. It is now connected with London by fast train service. 57,801 (1951).

East Bridgewater (brij'wô.tėr, -wot.ėr). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Plymouth County: residential community. 4,412 (1950).

East Cape. [French, Cap Est.] Cape in the Indian Ocean, on the NE coast of Madagascar, at the easternmost point of the island.

East Cape. Cape at the E extremity of the North Island of New Zealand.

East Cape. [Also: Cape Dezhnev (or Dezhneva); Russian, Mys Dezhneva, formerly Mys Vostochny.] Cape in the U.S.S.R., in the Khabarovsk krai (territory) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, Siberia: the easternmost headland in Asia, projecting into Bering Strait. Although still widely known as East Cape or the Russian equivalent (Mys Vostochny), it was officially renamed in 1898 for the navigator who discovered it.

Eastcheap (ēst'chēp). Originally, the E market place of the City of London, located at the junction of Watling Street and Ermine Street. It was quite large, including the site of modern Billingsgate and Leadenhall markets. Eastcheap is now a small street running E and W near the N end of London Bridge.

Eastchester (ēst'ches''tėr). Town in SE New York, in Westchester County. It includes the villages of Bronxville and Tuckahoe, chiefly residential suburbs of New York with some small industries at Tuckahoe. Formerly larger in extent, it included what is now the city of Mount Vernon. 27,174 (1950).

East Chicago (shi.kô'gō, -kä'-). City in Indiana, in Lake County, on Lake Michigan ab. 17 mi. SE of Chicago: heavy concentration of industries, with manufactures of steel, cement, chemicals, coke, petroleum products, lead, zinc, gypsum, railway equipment, and tinplate. 54,263 (1950).

East China Sea (chī'nạ). [Also: Eastern Sea; Chinese, Tung Hai; Japanese, To Kai.] That part of the Pacific Ocean which is included between China, Formosa, the Ryukyu Islands, and the Yellow Sea. Area, ab. 482,000 sq. mi.; greatest depth, ab. 10,500 ft.

East Cleveland (klēv'lạnd). City in NE Ohio, in Cuyahoga County, ab. 3 mi. NE of Cleveland: suburb of Cleveland. It was incorporated as a city in 1911. Pop. 40,047 (1950).

East Columbus (ko̤.lum'bus). Unincorporated community in C Indiana, in Bartholomew County. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 2,723 (1940).

East Conemaugh (kon'ę.mô). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Cambria County, ab. 26 mi. SW of Altoona: coal mines. 4,101 (1950).

East Coolgardie Gold Field (kōl.gär'di). Mining area in SW Australia, in S central Western Australia, ab. 380 mi. by rail E of Perth. Gold was discovered here in 1892, and rapid settlement and development followed. In 1903 a water main 351 mi. in length was completed from Mundaring Weir, near Perth, which supplies about 2 billion gallons of water annually to the gold fields. The East Coolgardie field, surrounding the town of Kalgoorlie, is the richest in Australia, and has produced over half the total output of Western Australia. Area, ab. 632 sq. mi.

East Cowes (kouz). Former urban district, now a part of Cowes urban district, in S England, in the Isle of Wight (an administrative county of the geographical county of Hampshire), situated on the river Medina, at its influx to the Solent, opposite West Cowes. Near it is the former royal residence of Osborne, now a convalescent home. 4,604 (1931).

East Dereham (dir'ạm). [Also, Dereham.] Urban district and market town in E England, in Norfolk, ab. 16 mi. W of Norwich, ab. 125 mi. NE of London by rail. It is an East Anglian market town producing fences and poultry runs, and was formerly a textile center producing worsteds. 6,441 (1951).

East Detroit (dē.troit'). City in S Lower Michigan, in Macomb County: residential suburb of Detroit. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 8,584 (1940), 21,461 (1950).

East End or East-End. Name popularly given to that part of London which lies east of the Bank of England (here taken to represent the center of the city). It coincides roughly with Stepney, Poplar, Shoreditch, and Bethnal Green metropolitan boroughs. Whitechapel district and the Limehouse district are also in the East End. The term East End began to appear at the end of the 17th century, with the development of the fashionable West End. Shipbuilding was important here in the 19th century. Stepney and Poplar metropolitan boroughs have some of the docks of the port of London, and Stepney has considerable manufactures of clothing. Shoreditch and Bethnal Green have manufactures of furniture. Fur dressing and furriery are also important in parts of the East End.

Easter (ēs'tėr). Christian festival, commemorating the resurrection of Jesus Christ: probably adapted from the Jewish Passover or Pesach (from which the common European name, Pascua or one of its variants, is derived) and taking its English name from a pagan Teutonic goddess of springtime who was celebrated in a spring festival. Easter falls on the first Sunday following the first full moon after the vernal equinox (about March 21), but many disputes about the date existed in the early days of the Church. The date of Easter affects the dates of all other movable feasts in the Christian calendar. Easter is preceded by the 40 days of Lent; the paschal season lasts 50 days, until Whitsunday. Popularly, the custom of distributing colored eggs is a feature of the festival.

Easter Anstruther (an'struтн.ėr). See Anstruther.

Easter Island. [Spanish, Isla de Pascua.] Island in the E Pacific, ab. 2,000 mi. W of Chile: noted for its gigantic prehistoric statues. It belongs to Chile, and is administered as part of Valparaíso province.

Eastern Aden Protectorate (ā'dẹn, ä'-). See under Aden Protectorate.

Eastern Alps (alps). See Alps, Eastern.

Eastern Bengal and Assam (ben.gôl', beng-; as.sam'). Former province of British India, formed from Assam and the E part of Bengal in October, 1905. It consisted of the territories formerly governed by the chief commissioner of Assam, to which were added the Dacca and Chittagong divisions, with the districts of Rajshahi, Dinajpur, Jalpaiguri, Rangpur, Bogra, Pabna, and Malda. It was bounded on the N by the Himalayas, on the E by Burma, on the S by Burma and the Bay of Bengal, and on the W by Bengal. The capital of the province was Dacca city, and the seaport Chittagong. The imperial proclamation at Delhi, on Dec. 12, 1911, provided for the disappearance of the province as a separate lieutenant-governorship.

Eastern Colorado (kol.o̤.rad'ō̤, -rä'dō). See Colorado River, Texas.

Eastern Cordillera (kôr.dil'ėr.ạ). English name of Cordillera Oriental.

Eastern Empire or Eastern Roman Empire (rō'mạn). See Byzantine Empire.

Eastern Front. See under World War I and World War II.

Eastern Ghats (gôts, gäts) or Ghauts (gôts). See under Ghats.

Eastern Karelia Dispute (kạ.rē'li.ạ, -rēl'yạ). Dispute, between Russia and Finland over the autonomous territory of Eastern Karelia (in the E part of what is now the Karelo-Finnish Soviet Socialist Republic, or Karelia), which broke out in November, 1921. Claiming mistreatment of inhabitants by the Russians, Finland appealed to the Council of the League of Nations, which in turn appealed to the Permanent Court for an advisory opinion. The court did not give a decision, because of Russia's refusal to appear before it, and the matter was dropped.

Eastern Manych (mä.nich'). See Manych, Eastern.

Eastern Polder. See Oostelijke Polder.

Eastern Province. [Former name, Stanleyville; French, Province Orientale.] Province in NE Belgian Congo, bounded on the N by French Equatorial Africa and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, on the E by Uganda, on the S by Kivu province, and on the W by Equator province. There are gold mines in the NE part. Capital, Stanleyville; area, ab. 204,160 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 2,300,000.

Eastern Province. Province in NE Ceylon, in a hilly and mountainous area. Mica and zircons are mined in the hills; fishing is important in the coastal villages. Capital, Trincomalee; area, 3,840 sq. mi.; pop. 279,112 (1946).

Eastern Province. Province of Uganda protectorate, British East Africa, occupying the area N of Lake Victoria and immediately W of Kenya. It is divided into the districts of Busoga, Mbale, and Teso. Capital, Jinja; area (exclusive of open water), 11,698 sq. mi.; pop. (adult males) 320,000 (est. 1947).

Eastern Province. English name of Simat-i-Mashriqi.

Eastern Question. Name given collectively to the several problems or complications in the international politics of Europe growing out of the presence of the Turkish power in the SE, particularly in the latter half of the 19th century.

Eastern Region. See Oriente, Ecuador.

Eastern Samoa (sạ.mō'ạ). See American Samoa.

Eastern Sea. See East China Sea.

Eastern Shore. The part of Maryland which lies E of Chesapeake Bay.

Eastern Wei (wā). See under Northern Dynasties.

Eastern Zone. See German Democratic Republic.

Easter Rebellion. See under Sinn Fein.

East Flanders (flan'dẽrz). [Flemish, Oost Vlaanderen; French, Flandre Orientale.] Province of Belgium, bounded by the Netherlands on the N, Antwerp and Brabant on the E, Hainaut on the S, and West Flanders on the W. Apart from some sandy stretches in the central part, it is almost entirely composed of a fertile, low-lying, intensely cultivated, and densely populated plain, yielding abundant harvests of agricultural and horticultural products and offering good pasturage. It also contains textile and other manufactures. It is watered by the Lys, Dender, and Schelde rivers, and is connected with the sea by a network of canals. The population is entirely Flemish. It was part of the independent countship of Flanders in the Middle Ages. Capital, Ghent; area, 1,147 sq. mi.; pop. 1,226,602 (est. 1949).

East Friesland (frēz'lạnd). [German, Ostfriesland.] Region in NW Germany, in the W part of the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone; formerly part of the province of Hanover, Prussia. It is bounded on the W by the Netherlands, on the N by the North Sea, and includes the adjacent islands (E Frisian Islands) in the North Sea. Originally it included the Dutch province of Groningen and the N part of Oldenburg in Germany. It became part of Prussia in 1744, of the Netherlands in 1807, of Hanover in 1815, and again of Prussia in 1866. Most of the region consists of fertile lowlands, some of it reclaimed from swamps. Livestock raising is important.

East Frisian Islands (frizh'ạn). See under Frisian Islands.

East Gaffney (gaf'ni). Unincorporated community in N South Carolina, in Cherokee County near Gaffney. 4,289 (1950).

East Gary (gãr'i). Town in NW Indiana, in Lake County. 5,635 (1950).

East Gastonia (gas.tō'ni.ạ, -tōn'yạ). Unincorporated community in W North Carolina, in Gaston County near Gastonia. 3,733 (1950).

East Germany. See German Democratic Republic.

East Godavari (gō.dä'vạ.rē). See under Godavari.

East Goths (goths). See Ostrogoths.

East Grand Forks. City in NW Minnesota, in Polk County, on the Red River: sugar-beet refineries. 5,049 (1950).

East Grand Rapids. City in S Lower Michigan, in Kent County near Grand Rapids. 6,403 (1950).

East Greenwich (gren'ich). Town in C Rhode Island, county seat of Kent County: manufactures of textiles and textile machinery; shipping point for shellfish. It was incorporated in 1677. Pop. 4,923 (1950).

East Grinstead (grin'sted, -stẹd). Urban district and market town in SE England, in East Sussex, ab. 14 mi. NE of Horsham, ab. 30 mi. S of London by rail. 10,845 (1951).

East Griqualand (grē'kwạ.land, grik'wạ-). See Griqualand East.

East Ham (ham). County borough, seaport, manufacturing town, and residential center in SE England, in Essex, situated on the N bank of the river Thames, ab. 2 mi. SW of Barking, ab. 6 mi. E of Fenchurch Street station, London. East Ham is an eastern suburb of London. Its urban development is continuous with the County of London. The N portion of East Ham is mainly residential in character. The S part (fronting on the river Thames) has important industrial developments and contains major portions of the Royal Albert Dock and the King George V Dock (London's most modern). They are a part of the largest single enclosed dock system in the world. 120,873 (1951).

East Hampton (hamp'tọn). Town in C Connecticut, in Middlesex County, on Pine Brook River: important for the manufacture of bells. 4,000 (1950).

Easthampton (ēst.hamp'tọn). Town in C Massachusetts, in Hampshire County, ab. 12 mi. NW of Springfield: manufactures of yarn, thread, elastic, and buttons. It is the seat of Williston Academy. 10,694 (1950).

East Hampton (hamp'tọn). Town (in New York the equivalent of township in many other states) and village in SE New York, in Suffolk County, on Long Island: resort and residential community. Settled c1648, it was the home (1799–1810) of Lyman Beecher, and the birthplace of John Howard Payne. Pop. of town, 6,325 (1950); of village, 1,737 (1950).

East Harbor. Former name of Ambrose Channel.

East Hartford (härt'fọrd). Town in N Connecticut, in Hartford County, on the bank of the Connecticut River, opposite Hartford: important for the manufacture of airplane engines and parts. 29,933 (1950).

East Haven (hā'vẹn). Town in S Connecticut, in New Haven County, on Farm River E of New Haven: truck-gardening and residential community. 12,212 (1950).

East Hempstead (hemp'stẹd, hem'-). Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Nassau County, on Long Island. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 2,881 (1940).

East Hills. Residential village in SE New York, in Nassau County on Long Island: an eastern suburb of New York City. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population grew from 343 (1940) to 2,547 (1950).

East India (in'di.ạ). See India, Further.

East India Company. Name of various mercantile associations formed in different countries in the 17th and 18th centuries for the purpose of conducting under the auspices of their governments a monopoly of the trade of their respective countries with the East Indies: 1. The Danish East India Company was organized in 1618. It was dissolved in 1634, reorganized in 1670, and finally dissolved in 1729, when its possessions, the chief of which was Tranquebar on the Coromandel coast of India, were ceded to the government. 2. The Dutch East India Company was formed by the union of several smaller trading companies on March 20, 1602. It received from the state a monopoly of the trade on the further side of the Strait of Magellan and of the Cape of Good Hope, including the right to make treaties and alliances in the name of the States General, to establish factories and forts, and to employ soldiers. It founded Batavia in Java on the site of a native city in 1619, and in the middle of the 17th century held the principal seats of commerce throughout the Indian archipelago, including Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, and Borneo, and had flourishing colonies in South Africa. It was dissolved and its territories transferred to the state on Sept. 12, 1795. 3. The British (English) East India Company, composed originally of London merchants, was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth on Dec. 31, 1600, under the title of the "The Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading with the East Indies." It obtained from the court of Delhi, India, in 1612 the privilege of establishing a factory at Surat, which continued to be the chief British station in India until the organization of Bombay. In 1645 it received permission of the natives to erect Fort St. George at Madras. In 1661 it was invested by Charles II with authority to make peace and war with infidel powers, erect forts, acquire territory, and exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction in its settlements. In 1668 it obtained a grant of the island of Bombay, which formed part of the dower of Catharine of Portugal. In 1675 it established a factory on the Hooghly River in Bengal, which led to the foundation of Calcutta. In 1749 it inaugurated, by the expulsion of the rajah of Tanjore, a series of territorial conquests which resulted in the acquisition and organization of British India. As the result of Robert Clive's military exploits (1751 et seq.) the English company ousted the French almost completely in India. Clive's administration (1764–67) in Bengal helped establish British control in the peninsula on a solid basis. A government board of control was established by Parliament in 1784, the company's trade monopoly was ended in 1813, and in 1858 the company relinquished altogether its functions of government to the crown. 4. The French East India Company was founded by Colbert in 1664. It established a factory at Surat, India, in August, 1675, and acquired Pondichéry, which became the capital of the French possessions on the Coromandel coast. It was dissolved on Aug. 13, 1769, when its territories were ceded to the crown. 5. The Swedish East India Company was formed at Göteborg, Sweden, in 1741, and was reorganized in 1806.

East Indian Archipelago. See Malay Archipelago.

East India United Service Club. London club established in 1848.

East Indies (in'dēz). [Formerly sometimes East Indias: so called in distinction from the newly discovered countries in America, supposed at first to be remoter parts of India, and called the West Indies or West Indias.] Vague collective name applied in the past to India, Farther India, and the Malay Archipelago. It has come to be limited in general usage to the Malay Archipelago, including chiefly, as political units, the Republic of Indonesia, the British possessions in Borneo and New Guinea, and sometimes also the Philippine Islands.

East Indonesia (in.dō.nē'zha). [Also, Indonesia Timoer.] Former negara (state) of the United States of Indonesia, formed in December, 1946, and comprised of the eastern group of the former Netherlands East Indies, i.e., the islands E of Borneo, including Bali, Flores, Lombok, Soembawa, Celebes, the Moluccas, Salajar, the Sangihe group, Ceram, Soemba, the W part of Timor, and other small islands. Its capital was Makassar. With the formation (1950) of the Republic of Indonesia this unit was replaced by the three provinces of Celebes Moluccas, and Lesser Sunda Islands. The proposal t add Netherlands New Guinea remained unsettled in 1952.

East Islip (ī'slip). Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Suffolk County, on Long Island. 2,834 (1950).

East Java (jä'va, jav'a). [Also, Djawa-Timur.] Province of the Republic of Indonesia, formerly (1946–50) a negara (state) of the United States of Indonesia, located in approximately the E third of the island of Java; under Dutch rule it was a province of the Netherlands Indies. Capital, Surabaya; area, ab. 18,503 sq. mi.; pop. 18,622,960 (1951).

East Keansburg (kēnz'bėrg). Unincorporated community in E New Jersey, in Monmouth County, on Raritan Bay. 2,596 (1950).

East Khandesh (kan'desh). See under Khandesh.

Eastlake (ēst'lāk). Residential village in NE Ohio, in Lake County E of Cleveland. 7,486 (1950).

Eastlake, Sir Charles Lock. b. at Plymouth, England, Nov. 17, 1793; d. at Pisa, Italy, Dec. 24, 1865. English painter, critic, and designer. He lived at Rome (1817–30) and at London (1830–55), was keeper of the National Gallery (1843–47), was president of the Royal Academy from 1850 until his death, and was knighted in 1850. Though popular in his day for paintings of religious and historical subjects, such as Pilgrims in Sight of Rome (1828), and of "banditti" and other Mediterranean types sketched on his travels, he was more influential in his selection of works for the National Gallery, as a critic (with several works on art, including a translation of Goethe's Theory of Colors, 1840), and as a designer, especially of stained glass. His emphasis, in his books and designs, was on the intrinsic decorative possibilities of the materials themselves and on the spirit rather than the exact forms of former great periods of art, especially the Gothic, which in his time was being slavishly and sentimentally copied by many architects and designers. His style, often called Eastlake Gothic, is associated with that of William Morris as part of a wholesome trend away from earlier 19th-century eclecticism.

Eastland (ēst'land). City in C Texas, county seat of Eastland County, NW of Austin, in a petroleum region. 3,626 (1950).

East Lansdowne (lanz'doun). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Delaware County near Philadelphia. 3,527 (1950).

East Lansing (lan'sing). City in S Lower Michigan, in Ingham County, twin city of Lansing: residential community and seat of the Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 5,839 (1940), 20,325 (1950).

Eastlawn (ēst'lôn). Unincorporated community in SE Lower Michigan, in Washtenaw County near Ann Arbor. 4,127 (1950).

Eastleigh (ēst'lē). Municipal borough and industrial town in S England, in Southampton (an administrative county of the geographical county of Hampshire), ab. 73 mi. SW of London by rail. It is a railway construction and repair center. 30,557 (1951).

East Liverpool (liv'ėr.pöl). [Former names: Fawcett's Town, Liverpool.] City in E Ohio, in Columbiana County, on the Ohio River ab. 35 mi. NW of Pittsburgh: a leading center for the manufacture of pottery. Among its other products are barrels and steel. It was settled in 1798. Pop. 24,217 (1950).

East Loch Tarbert (loch tär'bėrt). See Tarbert, West Loch and East Loch.

East London (lun'dọn). [Former name, Port Rex.] Seaport in Cape of Good Hope province, Union of South Africa, situated at the mouth of the Buffalo River ab. 150 mi. E of Port Elizabeth. It is connected by rail with the interior and is ab. 888 mi. from Capetown and 664 mi. from Johannesburg. Its chief exports are wool, citrus fruits, and meat and dairy products, all produce of the area back of the port. 78,530, including 39,646 Europeans (1946).

East Longmeadow (lông'med'ō). Town in S Massachusetts, in Hampden County, near the Connecticut River: apple growing and poultry farming; formerly important for the quarrying of sandstone used in brownstone buildings. 4,881 (1950).

East Los Angeles (los an'je.lęs, -lēz; ang'ge.lęs; lōs). Township in S California, in Los Angeles County near Los Angeles. 81,664 (1950).

East Lothian (lō'тнi.ạn). [Former names, Haddington, Haddingtonshire.] Maritime county in S Scotland. It is bounded on the N by the Firth of Forth, on the NE and E by the North Sea, on the S by Berwickshire, and on the W by Midlothian. The Lammermuir Hills are in the S portion, reaching an elevation of 1,750 ft. From here the surface slopes with little interruption to the coast. The principal industries are fishing, agriculture, and coal mining. The county also has dairy and pig farms. Crops raised are chiefly potatoes, wheat, turnips, and barley. About two thirds of the total area of the county is under cultivation or in pasture. County seat, Haddington; area, ab. 267 sq. mi.; pop. 52,240 (1951).

East Lyme (līm). Town in SE Connecticut, in New London County: residential community. 3,870 (1950).

Eastmain (ēst'mān). River in N Quebec, Canada, which flows into the E side of James Bay. Length, ab. 375 mi.

East Main (mān). Name given at one time to a portion of the Northwest Territories, Canada, lying E of Hudson Bay and W of Labrador proper. It is now part of the province of Quebec.

Eastman (ēst'mạn). City in C Georgia, county seat of Dodge County: center for a cotton and pecan producing area. 3,597 (1950).

Eastman, Charles Alexander. [Indian name, Ohiyesa.] b. at Redwood Falls, Minn., 1858; d. 1939. American physician and author, of Sioux Indian parentage. He was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1887 and from the Boston University School of Medicine in 1890. In 1891 he married the poet Elaine Goodale. He was government physician at the Pine Ridge Agency in South Dakota (1890–93), was in charge of the Indian work of the Young Men's Christian Association (1894–97), and served as attorney for the Santee Sioux at Washington, D.C. (1897–1900) and as government physician at Crow Creek, S.D. (1900–03). He published Indian Boyhood (1902), Red Hunters and the Animal People (1904), Old Indian Days (1907), Wigwam Evenings (1909), The Soul of the Indian (1911), and others.

Eastman, Charles Gamage. b. at Fryeburg, Me., June 1, 1816; d. at Burlington, Vt., Sept. 16, 1860. American poet and journalist. He was for many years proprietor and editor of the Vermont Patriot, published at Montpelier, Vt. In 1848 he published a volume of poetry.

Eastman, George. b. at Waterville, N.Y., July 12, 1854; committed suicide at Rochester, N.Y., March 14, 1932. American inventor, industrialist, and pioneer in the manufacture of photographic supplies. He secured (1879) patents for a photographic coating process on dry plates and opened a business with Henry A. Strong. After the perfection of flexible paper-backed film, he organized the Eastman Dry Plate and Film Company. Successive developments included the various models of Kodak cameras (from 1888), transparent and daylight-loading film, color film, and film for motion pictures. With the profits from his expanding firm, he contributed millions of dollars to such organizations as the Rochester Dental Dispensary, the Eastman School of Music, the University of Rochester, and others.

Eastman, John Robie. b. at Andover, N.H., July 29, 1836; d. Sept. 26, 1913. American astronomer. He was assistant astronomer (1862–65) and professor of mathematics (1865–98) at the Naval Observatory, editor (1872–82) of observatory publications, and author of Second Washington Catalogue of Stars (1898) and History of the Town of Andover, N.H., 1851–1906 (1910).

Eastman, Joseph Bartlett. b. at Katonah, N.Y., June 26, 1882; d. March 15, 1944. American transportation official. Received B.A. (1904) from Amherst; engaged in community welfare work; secretary of Boston's Public Franchise League; served (1915–19) on Massachusetts Public Service Commission; member (1919 et seq.) of Interstate Commerce Commission; served (1933–36) as federal coördinator of transportation; director (December, 1941–44) of Office of Defense Transportation.

Eastman, Max. [Full name, Max Forrester Eastman.] b. at Canandaigua, N.Y., Jan. 4, 1883—. American editor, writer, and translator. He edited The Masses (1913–17) and The Liberator (1918–22), and has been a roving editor (1941 et seq.) of the Reader's Digest. He is the author of Enjoyment of Poetry (1913; revised ed., 1921), Journalism Versus Art (1916), Understanding Germany (1916), Marx and Lenin, the Science of Revolution (1926), Enjoyment of Laughter (1936), The End of Socialism in Russia (1937), Marxism, Is It Science? (1940), Enjoyment of Living (1947), and other books; his poetry includes Colors of Life (1918), Kinds of Love (1931), and Lot's Wife (1942). He has translated (from the Russian) Pushkin's Gabriel (1929) and works by Leon Trotsky including The Real Situation in Russia (1928), The History of the Russian Revolution (3 vols., 1932–33), and The Revolution Betrayed (1937); compiled and narrated a film history of the Russian Revolution entitled From Czar to Lenin (1937).

Eastman, Seth. b. at Brunswick, Me., Jan. 24, 1808; d. at Washington, D.C., Aug. 31, 1875. American brigadier general. He was employed (1850–55) in the bureau of the commissioner of Indian affairs to illustrate the work entitled History, Condition and Future Prospects of the Indian Tribes of the United States, published (1850–57) by order of Congress.

East Marion (mar'i.ọn, mār'-). Unincorporated community in W North Carolina, in McDowell County near Marion and E of Asheville. 2,901 (1950).

East Mauch Chunk (môk' chungk'). Borough in E Pennsylvania, in Carbon County, on the Lehigh River. 3,132 (1950).

East McKeesport (mạ.kēz'pōrt). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County: residential community near Pittsburgh. It was incorporated in 1895. Pop. 3,171 (1950).

East Meadows. Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Nassau County, on Long Island. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 3,145 (1940).

East Moline (mō.lēn'). City in NW Illinois, in Rock Island County: important center for the manufacture of farm implements. It is informally part of a larger metropolitan area called the "Quad Cities." 13,913 (1950).

East Northport (nôrth'pōrt). Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Suffolk County, on Long Island. 3,842 (1950).

Easton (ēs'tọn). Town in C Maryland, county seat of Talbot County, near the Tred Avon River: agricultural trading center; manufactures include clothing, lumber, and canned goods. Its Friends' Meeting House (c1682) is one of the oldest wooden churches in the U.S. 4,836 (1950).

Easton. Town in SE Massachusetts, in Bristol County, ab. 25 mi. SW of Boston. It has iron manufactures. 6,244 (1950).

Easton. City in E Pennsylvania, county seat of Northampton County, at the confluence of the Lehigh and Delaware rivers, ab. 52 mi. N of Philadelphia: railroad and industrial center. Manufactures include textiles, metal products, and hosiery. It is the seat of Lafayette College. Settled in the mid-18th century, it was incorporated as a city in 1887. Pop. 35,632 (1950).

Easton, Nicholas. b. in England, 1593; d. at Newport, R.I., Aug. 15, 1675. Colonial governor of Rhode Island. He came from Wales in 1634, and resided successively at Ipswich (Massachusetts), Newbury (Massachusetts), Hampton (New Hampshire), and Newport (Rhode Island). He was governor of the united colonies of Rhode Island and Providence (1650–52).

East Orange (or'ạnj). City in NE New Jersey, in Essex County: suburb of Newark. Manufactures include electric motors, generators, and machinery. It is the seat of Upsala College and a college of physical education and hygiene. 79,340 (1950).

East Palestine (pal'ẹs.tīn). City in NE Ohio, in Columbiana County: manufactures include pottery, automobile tires, electrical refractories, and high-pressure steel tanks. The town was established in 1828. Pop. 5,195 (1950).

East Patchogue (pạ.chôg'). Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Suffolk County, on Long Island. 4,124 (1950).

East Paterson (pat'ėr.sọn). Borough in NE New Jersey, in Bergen County: industrial suburb of Paterson; textile manufactures. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 4,937 (1940), 15,386 (1950).

East Peoria (pē.ō'ri.ạ). City in N Illinois, in Tazewell County, across the Illinois River from Peoria: important for the manufacture of tractors. 8,698 (1950).

East Pittsburgh (pits'bėrg). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County, ab. 3½ mi. NE of McKeesport: manufactures of electrical equipment, iron, and dynamos. 5,259 (1950).

East Point. City in NW Georgia, in Fulton County: industrial suburb of Atlanta. 21,080 (1950).

Eastport (ēst'pōrt). City in E Maine, in Washington County, on Moose Island in Passamaquoddy Bay. It is the easternmost city of the U.S. Sardine canning and herring, haddock, and cod fishing are the most important industries. 3,123 (1950).

Eastport. Unincorporated community in C Maryland, in Anne Arundel County, on Chesapeake Bay. 4,594 (1950).

East Prairie (prār'i). City in SE Missouri, in Mississippi County ab. 140 mi. SE of St. Louis, in a grain and cotton producing region. 3,033 (1950).

East Providence (prov'i.dẹns). Town in N Rhode Island, in Providence County: industrial suburb of Providence. Manufactures include baking powder, refined petroleum, and dairy products. It was settled by Roger Williams in 1636. Pop. 35,871 (1950).

East Prussia (prush'ạ). [German, Ostpreussen.] Former province of Germany, separated in 1919 from the main portion of Prussia by the Polish Corridor. It was bordered on the W by the free state of Danzig and by Poland, on the S and SE by Poland, on the NE by Lithuania, and on the NW by the Baltic Sea. The coastal region has two large lagoons, separated from the Baltic Sea by sand spits, which have dunes as high as 200 ft. Much of the interior is rolling, and in the S and SE is the Masurian Lake region with some 3,300 lakes in a hilly morainic region. The greatest elevation is in the SW, ab. 1,024 ft. The climate is continental, with warm summers and cold winters. Originally largely forested, East Prussia developed into a rich agricultural region, with many great landed estates; about half the total population was employed in agriculture and forestry, with farming specialized in dairying and stock raising. Fishing is carried on both in the sea and in the lakes. Amber is still an important product of the Samland district. East Prussia was established by the Teutonic Knights in the 13th century and was the original heart of the duchy of Prussia, founded in 1525. In the period 1708–11 it was devastated by the plague, and recolonized by Protestants from Salzburg, the Palatinate, and Switzerland. Ermeland belonged to Poland until 1772, when it was annexed to East Prussia. East Prussia was the stronghold of the Junkers, the old Prussian military aristocracy, whose great estates occupied much of the province. In World War I Russian armies invaded East Prussia, but were decisively defeated in the battle of Tannenberg in August, 1914. In 1919 a strip of territory N of the Memel River was made an independent territory similar to Danzig, and detached from East Prussia. In World War II, East Prussia was conquered and occupied by Soviet armies in early 1945, and the province was divided between Poland and the U.S.S.R., with the larger portion going to Poland. The population of East Prussia was predominantly German, with a considerable proportion of Polish population in the S border regions. The German population was expelled after World War II and the area has been resettled by Slavs. Area, 14,283 sq. mi. (before 1939); pop. 2,333,301 (1939).

East Punjab (pun.jäb′, pun′jäb, -jab). See Punjab state, Union of India.

East Retford (ret′fȯrd). [Called, locally, Retford.] Municipal borough and market town in N central England, in Nottinghamshire, situated on the river Idle and the Chesterfield Canal, ab. 19 mi. NW of Newark, ab. 139 mi. N of London by rail. 16,312 (1951).

East Ridge. Town in SE Tennessee, in Hamilton County, near Chattanooga. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 2,939 (1940), 9,645 (1950).

East Riding of Yorkshire (rīd′ing; yȯrk′shir). See Yorkshire, East Riding of.

East River. Strait between Manhattan and Long Island, connecting Long Island Sound with Upper New York Bay, and separating the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx on the W from Brooklyn and Queens on the E. Length to the entrance of the Harlem River, ab. 9 mi.; to Fort Schuyler (at Throg's Neck, on Long Island Sound), ab. 16 mi. Width between Manhattan and Brooklyn, ½ to ¾ mi.

East Rochester (roch′es″.tėr, -ȩs.tėr). Village in W New York, in Monroe County: piano factories. 7,022 (1950).

East Rockaway (rok′a.wā). Village in SE New York, in Nassau County, on Long Island. 7,970 (1950).

East Rockport (rok′pōrt). Former name of Lakewood, Ohio.

East Rutherford (ruŦH′ėr.fȯrd). [Former name, Boiling Springs Township.] Borough in NE New Jersey, in Bergen County: suburb of Rutherford. 7,438 (1950).

East Sea. See under Dead Sea.

East Side, Lower. See Lower East Side.

East St. Louis (sānt lō′is). City in SW Illinois, in St. Clair County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis: the most important bauxite-processing center in the U.S. It is also a major meat-packing center. 82,295 (1950).

East Stroudsburg (stroudz′bėrg). Borough in E Pennsylvania, in Monroe County, in an agricultural and summer resort area. 7,274 (1950).

East Suffolk (suf′ok). [Also, Suffolk East.] Administrative county of the geographical county of Suffolk, in E England. It is a highly developed agricultural region and has important fisheries, especially at Lowestoft. A high proportion of the land is under crops and relatively little under pasture. There has been much land reclaimed from the sea. Ipswich is the county seat; area, ab. 858 sq. mi.; pop. 321,849 (1951).

East Sussex (sus′iks). [Also, Sussex East.] Administrative county in SE England, part of the geographical county of Sussex. It has many seaside resorts; however, it is primarily an agricultural county. Lewes is the county seat; area, ab. 781 sq. mi.; pop. 618,083 (1951).

East Syracuse (sir′a.kūs). Village in C New York, in Onondaga County, near Syracuse. 4,766 (1950).

East Thomaston (tom′ȩs.tọn). Village in W Georgia, in Upson County. Peaches are raised in the surrounding region. 3,082 (1950).

East Tirol (tir′ol). [German, Ost-Tirol.] Territorial exclave of the Austrian province of Tirol, bounded by the provinces of Salzburg and Carinthia on the N and E and by Italy on the S and W. It was created by the cession of the S part of Tirol to Italy in 1918. The principal place is Lienz.

East Tualaty Plains (tō.ä′la.ti). A former name of Hillsboro, Ore.

East Turkistan or Turkestan (tėr.ki.stan′, -stän′). See under Sinkiang.

Eastview (ēst′vū). Suburb of the city of Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, situated on the right bank of the Ottawa River, a few mi. E of the city. 13,799 (1951).

Eastward Ho! Comedy written chiefly by George Chapman and John Marston, with contributions by Ben Jonson. It was written and acted during the winter of 1604–05, and was entered upon the Stationers' Register on Sept. 4, 1605. The authors were imprisoned for satirizing the Scots in this play, and sentenced to have their ears and noses split, feeling at the time about the Scots being especially sensitive because the new king, James I, was a Scot. Jonson, though not responsible for the obnoxious passages, gave himself up with his friends. The play was revived in 1751 as The Prentices, and in 1775 as Old City Manners.

Eastwick (ēst′wik), Edward Backhouse. b. 1814; d. at Ventnor, England, July 16, 1883. English Orientalist, diplomat, and author. After taking a degree at Oxford, he served with the East India Company in Kathiawar and Sind, India, and as professor of Hindustani (1845) at the East India College at Haileybury. At the closing of this school he was employed (1859) in the India Office, and later was secretary of legation in Persia (1860) and a member of the commission for a Venezuelan loan (1864, 1867). He translated Saadi's Gulistan (Rose Garden, 1852) and other Oriental classics, and also wrote on his experiences as a diplomat.

East Windsor (win′zȯr). Town in N Connecticut, in Hartford County: marketing and processing point for shade-grown tobacco. 4,859 (1950).

East Windsor. Former industrial suburb of Windsor, Ontario, Canada, annexed to Windsor in 1935. It was first incorporated in 1913, and had several large automobile factories. 16,200 (1931).

Eastwood (ēst′wůd). Urban district in N central England, in Nottinghamshire, ab. 9 mi. NW of Nottingham, ab. 136 mi. N of London by rail. It has coal mines, and is noted as the place where the old Midland railway (later absorbed into the London, Midland, and Scottish system) was begun. 9,896 (1951).

Easy (ē′zi), Sir Charles. The "careless husband" in Colley Cibber's comedy of that name.

Eaton (ē′tọn). Village in SW Ohio, county seat of Preble County: residential community. It was established in 1806, and named for William Eaton (1764–1811). 4,242 (1950).

Eaton, Amos. b. at Chatham, N.Y., May 17, 1776; d. May 10, 1842. American natural scientist. He was a public lecturer (1817 et seq.) on botany and geology in New England and New York, and was professor of natural history (1820 et seq.) at Castleton, Vt., Medical School; senior professor (1824–42) at Rensselaer College (now Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute). He was the author of A Manual of Botany for the Northern States (1817).

Eaton, Daniel Cady. b. at Fort Gratiot, Mich., Sept. 12, 1834; d. at New Haven, Conn., June 29, 1895. American botanist; grandson of Amos Eaton. He graduated in 1857 from Yale, in which institution he became professor of botany in 1864. He published "Ferns of the Southwest" (United States Geological Survey, Vol. VI, 1878) and Ferns of North America (1878–79).

Eaton, Dorman Bridgman. b. at Hardwick, Vt., June 27, 1823; d. Dec. 23, 1899. American lawyer, civil service official, and author. He practiced law at New York (until 1870) with William Kent. An ardent advocate of the merit system and the abolition of the spoils system, he was appointed (1873) by Grant chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission. When the funds for the commission were suspended (1875), Eaton traveled to England to study the civil service system as it was being applied in that country. He drafted the Pendleton Act of 1883 establishing a permanent civil service system, and was reappointed chairman (1883, 1885) of the Civil Service Commission. His study of city administration is embodied in The Government of Municipalities (1899). He bequeathed funds for the Eaton professorship of the science of government at Harvard and the Eaton professorship of municipal science at Columbia. He was the author of The Civil Service in Great Britain: A History of Abuses and Reforms and their Bearing Upon American Politics (1880).

Eaton, George W. b. at Henderson, Huntingdon County, Pa., July 3, 1804; d. at Hamilton, N.Y., Aug. 3, 1872. American educator and Baptist clergyman. He was president of Madison University (now Hamilton) from 1856–1868, and of Hamilton Theological Seminary from 1861 to 1871.

Eaton, John Henry. b. June 18, 1790; d. at Washington, D.C., Nov. 17, 1856. American politician and lawyer, remembered for his association with Andrew Jackson. He attended the University of North Carolina, studied law, and settled (c1808–09) at Franklin, Tenn. He served for a time in the War of 1812 and began his connection with Andrew Jackson by marrying Myra Lewis, a ward of Jackson. He helped write The Life of Andrew Jackson, Major General in the Service of the United States (1817 and in 1818 was appointed to the U.S. Senate, serving until his resignation in 1829, when he became Jackson's secretary of war. Eaton's second wife, Peggy O'Neill (or O'Neale), became the center of a battle, waged as a war in Washington society, between the Jackson forces and their opponents. The affair contributed to the reshuffling of the cabinet, from which Eaton resigned in 1831. He became (1834) governor of Florida and served (1836 et seq.) as minister to Spain.

Eaton, Nathaniel. b. c1609; d. at London, 1674. First headmaster of Harvard College; brother of Theophilus Eaton and Samuel Eaton. He was appointed in 1637. In 1639 he was fined 100 marks for gross brutality to one of his ushers, Nathaniel Briscoe, whereupon he fled to Virginia, leaving debts to the amount of 1,000 pounds.

Eaton, Peggy. See O'Neill, Margaret.

Eaton, Samuel. b. at Crowley, Great Budworth, Cheshire, England, c1596; d. Jan. 9, 1665. Anglican clergyman; brother of Theophilus Eaton and Nathaniel Eaton. He emigrated (1637) with his brothers to New Haven, becoming the colleague of John Davenport, whom he assisted in establishing a local church, and returned (1640) to England.

Eaton, Theophilus. b. 1590; d. at New Haven, Conn., Jan. 7, 1658. First governor of the colony of New Haven; brother of Nathaniel Eaton and Samuel Eaton. He came in 1637 from London to New England with John Davenport, whom he assisted in the purchase of Quinipiak from the Indians as a site for the colony of New Haven, which was planted in 1638. In 1639 he was elected governor of the colony, which post he retained until his death.

Eaton, Walter Prichard. b. at Malden, Mass., Aug. 24, 1878—. American author and drama critic who served (1933–47) as associate professor of playwriting at Yale. Graduated (1900) from Harvard, he joined (1902) the drama department of the New York Herald-Tribune and also was drama critic for the New York Sun. He has taught at Columbia, the Cambridge School of Drama, and the University of Miami, and has served as a member of the drama jury of the Pulitzer prize committee. His works include The American Stage of Today (1908), The Man Who Found Christmas (1913), The Idyl of Twin Fires (1915), Plays and Players (1916), Green Trails and Upland Pastures (1917), Ten Years of the Theatre Guild (1929), The Drama in English (1930), Wild Gardens of New England (1935), and The Runaway Place. He is also the author of a book of verse, Echoes and Realities (1918), and wrote in collaboration with David Carb the play Queen Victoria (1923).

Eaton, William. b. at Woodstock, Conn., Feb. 23, 1764; d. at Brimfield, Mass., June 1, 1811. American naval officer and state department official, consul at Tunis from 1799 to 1803. He was subsequently appointed U.S. naval agent to the Barbary States, and during the Tripolitan War organized a movement among the natives to restore the brother of the reigning bey to the Tripolitan throne. With the assistance of the American squadron he took Derna in 1805, and was about to march on Tripoli when peace was concluded between the U.S. and the reigning bey. Eaton, Ohio, was named for him.

Eaton, Wyatt. b. at Philipsburg, Quebec, Canada, May 6, 1849; d. at Newport, R.I., June 7, 1896. American figure and portrait painter. He studied at the National Academy of Design at New York, and with Gérôme at Paris.

Eaton Rapids. City in S Lower Michigan, in Eaton County on the Grand River: center of a sheep-raising area. 3,509 (1950).

Eatonton (ē'tǫn.tǫn). City in N central Georgia, county seat of Putnam County, ab. 65 mi. SE of Atlanta in a farming region. It was the birthplace of Joel Chandler Harris. 2,749 (1950).

Eatontown (ē'tǫn.toun). Borough in E New Jersey, in Monmouth County ab. 38 mi. E of Trenton. Fort Monmouth, a large training post for the U.S. Army Signal Corps, is nearby. 3,044 (1950).

Eau Claire (ō klār'). Town in C South Carolina, in Richland County: residential suburb of Columbia. It is the seat of Columbia College and a Lutheran seminary. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 3,508 (1940), 9,238 (1950).

Eau Claire. City in W Wisconsin, in Eau Claire and Chippewa counties, on the Eau Claire and Chippewa rivers ab. 83 mi. SE of St. Paul: county seat of Eau Claire County. Manufactures include furniture, sashes, doors, books, kitchen utensils, farm machinery, stationery, mill tools, refrigerators, automobile tires and accessories, and sewer pipe. It is the seat of a state teachers college. In the early 19th century it was a lumbering center. 36,058 (1950).

Eaux-Bonnes (ō.bon). [Also, Les-Eaux-Bonnes.] Village in SW France, in the department of Basses-Pyrénées, situated in mountainous surroundings near the Sourde River, ab. 28 mi. S of Pau. It is a health resort, having thermal springs considered useful in the treatment of various ailments. It is also a tourist and winter-sport center. 462 (1946).

Éauze (ā.ōz). Town in SW France, in the department of Gers, ab. 29 mi. NW of Auch. It is on the site of the Roman Elusa. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Ebal (ē'bal), Mount. [Arabic, Jebel Eslamiyah.] Mountain (3,084 ft.) in Palestine, forming the N side of the fertile valley in which lies Nablus, the ancient Shechem. From Ebal the curse for disobedience to the law was pronounced, the blessing for obedience being given from Mount Gerizim, which lies opposite on the S side of the valley. Upon Ebal Joshua erected the first altar to Jehovah after conquering Canaan. Deut. xvii. 13.

Ebb and Flood. Novel by James Hanley, published in 1932.

Ebbinghaus (eb'ing.hous), Hermann. b. 1850; d. 1909. German psychologist. He received his degree from Bonn in 1873 and during the next seven years, while still independent of a formal university connection, he began his experimental studies of memory; he became docent at Berlin in 1880, and in 1885 published the results of his original studies of memory in Über das Gedächtnis (Eng. trans., 1913). Since Ebbinghaus's pioneering work, the field of memory and learning has been one of the most active fields of psychology. He showed how repetitions could be used as a measure of learning, and how the difference between the number of repetitions required for original learning and the number required for relearning (the "saving" of repetitions) could be used as a measure of retention. He pointed out the relation between memory and (1) the number of items in the list, (2) the position of the items in the list, (3) the number of repetitions of the list, and (4) the time elapsed since the original learning of the list. The latter relationship is described in his famous "Forgetting Curve." He invented the nonsense syllable (two consonants separated by a vowel) for the study of memory. In 1894 he became professor at Breslau. He invented (1897) the now common completion test in an early attempt to measure the intelligence of children. He helped found, with Arthur König, the Zeitschrift für Psychologie und Physiologie der Sinnesorgane (1890). His other books are Grundzüge der Psychologie (1897, 1902) and Abriss der Psychologie (1908). In the latter is his famous opening sentence "Psychology has a long past, but only a short history."

Ebbsfleet or Ebbs Fleet (ebz′flēt″). Hamlet in SE England, in Kent, situated on Pegwell Bay, in the Isle of Thanet, ab. 4 mi. SW of Ramsgate. It was the landing place of Hengist and Horsa in 449, and of Saint Augustine in 597.

Ebbw Vale (eb′ö). Urban district and industrial center in W England, in Monmouthshire, situated on the river Ebbwfawr ab. 5 mi. NW of Abertillery, ab. 155 mi. W of London by rail. Its industries include steel and tinplate manufactures. 29,205 (1951).

Ebco von Repgow (ep′kō fon rep′gō) or Repkow (rep′kō). See Eike von Repgow or Repkow.

Ebe (ā′bę), Gustav. b. at Halberstadt, Germany, Nov. 1, 1834; d. cMay 15, 1916. German architect. His work was typical of the so-called "Grunder-Barock" (an architectural style) palace representative of the 1870's and 1880's, using the forms of the German late Renaissance style in designs for private residences. He was awarded the first prize for the Vienna Rathaus (city hall), but his design was not executed. He is best known for the Palais Rudolf Mosse (built 1882–84) at Berlin, the house of the well-known newspaper owner.

Ebel (ā′bęl), Hermann Wilhelm. b. at Berlin, May 10, 1820; d. at Misdroi, Pomerania, Prussia, Aug. 19, 1875. German philologist, especially distinguished in Celtic philology. He became (1872) professor at Berlin. His chief work is a revision of Zeuss's Grammatica celtica (1871).

Ebeling (ā′bę.ling), Adolf. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Oct. 24, 1827; d. July 23, 1896. German writer. He traveled in Brazil, lived at Paris as a teacher and newspaper correspondent until 1870, and then lived successively at Düsseldorf, Cologne, Metz, Cairo, and again at Cologne. His works include Lebende Bilder aus dem modernen Paris (1866–76), Bilder aus Cairo (1878), and others.

Ebeling, Christoph Daniel. b. at Garmissen, near Hildesheim, Germany, Nov. 20, 1741; d. at Hamburg, Germany, June 30, 1817. German geographer. He contributed to Büsching's Erdbeschreibung the volumes on America (1794–1816).

Ebelsberg (ā′bęls.berk). [Also, Ebersberg.] Village in C Austria, in the province of Upper Austria, situated on the Traun River SE of Linz. Here the French defeated the Austrians in 1809. After World War II, it was the site of a Displaced Persons camp. It is now incorporated in the city of Linz.

Ebenezer (eb.ę.nē′zėr). In Biblical history, a stone set up by Samuel, after a defeat of the Philistines, as a memorial to divine aid.

Ebenezer Scrooge (skröj). See Scrooge, Ebenezer.

Eben Holden, a Tale of the North Country (hōl′dęn). Novel by Irving Bacheller, published in 1900.

Ebensburg (eb′ęnz.bėrg). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, county seat of Cambria County, in a bituminous coal mining area. It was settled by Welsh immigrants c1800 and was made county seat in 1805. Pop. 4,086 (1950).

Ebensee (ā′bęn.zā). Village in C Austria, in the province of Upper Austria, situated at the influx of the Traun River into the Traunsee, between Gmunden and Ischl. It has a factory for the production of soda. The saltworks, constructed in 1607, are supplied with brine from Ischl and Hallstadt. During the Nazi occupation of Austria a concentration camp was located here. 10,329 (1951).

Eber (ē′bėr). See Heber.

Eberbach (ā′bėr.bäċh). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Baden, American Zone, formerly part of Baden, situated on the Neckar River SE of Mannheim: wine and lumber trade; metallurgical and textile industries. It is an old town; above it is the Stolzeneck castle which in the 12th century belonged to the Hohenstaufen domain. 11,038 (1950).

Eberhard (ā′bėr.härt). d. at the battle of Andernach on the Rhine, 939. Duke of the Franks (or Franconia) and brother of Conrad I of Germany.

Eberhard I. [Titles: 5th Count and 1st Duke of Württemberg.] b. Dec. 11, 1445; d. Feb. 24, 1496. First Duke of Württemberg, 1495. He consolidated the country, framed its constitution, and established (1477) the University of Tübingen.

Eberhard, Johann August. b. at Halberstadt, Prussia, Aug. 31, 1739; d. Jan. 6, 1809. German philosopher, professor at Halle (1778 et seq.). He published Neue Apologie des Sokrates (1772) and others.

Eberhard, Konrad. b. at Hindelang, Bavaria, Germany, Nov. 25, 1768; d. at Munich, March 13, 1859. German sculptor. His most notable works were collected at Munich.

Eberl (ā′bėrl), Anton. b. at Vienna, June 13, 1766; d. there, March 11, 1807. German pianist and composer, a friend of Mozart. He was Kapellmeister (choir leader) from 1796 to 1800 at St. Petersburg.

Eberle (eb′ėr.li), Abastenia St. Leger. b. at Webster City, Iowa, April 6, 1878; d. 1942. American sculptor. She was a student at the Art Students League of New York, and of George Grey Barnard, and won awards from the National Academy of Design (1910), the Panama-Pacific Exposition (1915), the National Sculpture Society (1931), and others. Among her works are Mowgli (in the Metropolitan Museum), Little Mother (Art Institute of Chicago), Hurdy Gurdy (Detroit Institute of Arts), Girl on Roller Skates (Whitney Museum of American Art), and others.

Eberle (ā′bėr.lę), Adolph. b. at Munich, Jan. 11, 1843; d. Jan. 24, 1914. German genre and animal painter. He was a student of Karl von Piloty in the Academy at Munich, and lived most of his life at that city. His work has been exhibited at Vienna, where he won a medal in 1873, at Dresden, Hamburg, Munich, New York, and elsewhere. Among his better-known works are Provisions of the Hunt, Pastorale, Temptation, and Fish Story.

Eberle (eb′ėr.li), Edward Walter. b. at Denton, Tex., Aug. 17, 1864; d. at Washington, D.C., July 6, 1929. American naval officer. A graduate (1885) of the U.S. Naval Academy, he was a lieutenant (j.g.) on the Oregon during that vessel's famous Spanish-American War cruise around Cape Horn and in the battle of Santiago. As a flag lieutenant (1903–05) in the Atlantic fleet, he drew up the first naval wireless procedures and codes; superintendent (1915–17) U.S. Naval Academy; chief of naval operations (1923–27); retired (1928) as rear admiral.

Eberle (ā′bėr.lę), Johann Ernst. See Eberlin, Johann Ernst.

Eberle (eb′ėr.li), John. b. at Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 10, 1787; d. at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 2, 1838. American physician and medical writer.

Eberlein (ā′bėr.līn), Gustav. b. at Spiekershausen, near Hann-Munden, Germany, July 14, 1847; d. at Berlin, Feb. 5, 1926. German sculptor. Beginning his career as a neoclassicist, as in his Dornauszieher (1880) at the Berlin National Gallery, he later turned toward neobaroque expression influenced by R. Begas. Among his best-known works are his monuments of the emperor Wilhelm I (1890) at Mannheim, Richard Wagner (1901) at Berlin, and Goethe (1902) at Rome. He is represented in America by his monument (1910) at Buenos Aires in honor of the 100th anniversary of Argentina's independence.

Eberlin (ā′bėr.lin) or Eberle (ā′bėr.lę), Johann Ernst. b. at Jettingen, Bavaria, Germany, March 27, 1702; d. at Salzburg, Austria, June 21, 1762. German church composer and court organist (1754 et seq.) at Salzburg. He composed oratorios, motets, and masses, and wrote toccatas and fugues for the organ.

Ebers (ā′bėrs), Emil. b. at Breslau, Dec. 14, 1807; d. at Beuthen (Bytom), in Silesia, 1884. German painter.

Ebers, Georg Moritz. b. at Berlin, March 1, 1837; d. at Tutzing, Bavaria, Germany, Aug. 7, 1898. German Egyptologist and novelist. He first studied jurisprudence at Göttingen, then Oriental languages and archaeology at Berlin. In 1865 he became docent in Egyptian language and antiquities at the University of Jena; in 1870 he was called to Leipzig as professor in the same field. His first work was Ägypten und die Bücher Moses (Egypt and the Books of Moses, 1867–68). In 1869–70 he made a journey to Egypt, which was repeated in 1872–73, when he discovered the so-called Papyrus Ebers, an ancient medical treatise which he found at Thebes and published in 1874 under the title Papyrus E., ein hieratisches Handbuch der Ägyptischen Medizin. Durch Gosen zum Sinai (Through Goshen to Sinai) appeared in 1872; Ägypten in Wort und Bild (Egypt in Word and Picture) in 1878. Among his romances, principally historical novels set in Egypt and meant to popularize knowledge about Egypt, are Eine Ägyptische Königstochter (An Egyptian Princess, 1864), Uarda (1877), Homo Sum (1878), Die Schwestern (The Sisters, 1880), Der Kaiser (The Emperor, 1881), Serapis (1885), Die Nilbraut (The Bride of the Nile, 1887), and Joshua (1889).

Ebers, Karl Friedrich. b. March 25, 1770; d. at Berlin, Sept. 9, 1836. German composer and arranger. Of his works, consisting of four operas, cantatas, dances, overtures, and symphonies, only the drinking song Wir sind die Könige der Welt has survived.

Ebersbach (ā'bėrs.bäċh). Town in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Saxony, situated near the source of the Spree River and the border of Czechoslovakia, E of Dresden: textile and lumber industries. Its Protestant church (built in 1738) has one of the finest organs in Saxony. 11,315 (1946).

Ebersberg (ā'bėrs.berk). See Ebelsberg.

Eberswalde (ā'bėrs.väl.dę). City in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Brandenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Brandenburg, Prussia, situated near the Berlin-Stettin Canal, ab. 28 mi. NE of Berlin. Industries include iron foundries, railroad repair shops, lumber mills, and brick factories. It is the seat of an academy of forestry and has a museum of forestry as well as a local museum. Parts of the medieval town walls have been preserved. The Church of the Magdalen dates from the 14th century, the Rathaus (town hall) from the 18th century. Nearby, in 1914, important prehistoric finds were made, consisting of numerous golden utensils and artefacts. The pieces were placed in the Berlin Museum für Vorgeschichte. The population of Eberswalde decreased in the period 1939–46 by 21.1 percent. 30,186 (1946).

Ebert (ā'bėrt), Adolf. b. at Kassel, Prussia, June 1, 1820; d. July 1, 1890. German Romance philologist, professor at Leipzig from 1862.

Ebert, Friedrich. b. at Heidelberg, Germany, Feb. 4, 1871; d. at Berlin, Feb. 28, 1925. First president of the German Reich (Weimar Republic). Ebert was a saddlemaker but early in life became a Social Democratic journalist and functionary; as a union leader at Bremen he became a member of the party's executive board (1905). Elected to the Reichstag in 1912, he became party leader in 1913, and induced the party to vote for war credits at the outbreak of World War I. He opposed strikes as a means of bringing about peace. In September, 1918, he entered the cabinet of Maximilian, commonly called Prince Max of Baden, and was offered the chancellorship; he accepted (Nov. 9) and formed a cabinet of three Majority Socialists and three Independent Socialists. He insisted on early elections for a constitutional assembly and was appointed Reichspresident by this body, on Feb. 11, 1919. His tenure was extended by the Reichstag until June, 1925. He served with distinction and tact under extremely difficult conditions. Both the leftist Spartacist revolt and the rightist Kapp putsch were suppressed by him, but his attempts to tread a middle path came under attack from extremists, especially those of the right who resented a plebeian head of the government. His untimely death has been attributed by some to unfounded attacks on his patriotism.

Ebert, Friedrich Adolf. b. at Taucha, near Leipzig, Germany, July 9, 1791; d. at Dresden, Germany, Nov. 13, 1834. German bibliographer. He was librarian at Wolfenbüttel (1823), and later (1825) at Dresden. His principal work is Allegemeines bibliographisches Lexikon (1821–30).

Eberth (ā'bėrt), Karl Joseph. b. at Wurzburg, Bavaria, Germany, 1835; d. 1926. German bacteriologist, pathologist, anatomist, and professor at Zurich and Halle universities. He studied medicine at Wurzburg under Kolliker and Virchow, two of the greatest names in 19th-century anatomy and pathology. He went to Zurich in 1874, and to Halle in 1881. He is noted for his many contributions to pathology and bacteriology, and for identification of the typhoid fever bacillus in 1880. "Eberth's bacillus" is named in his honor.

Eberton (eb'ėr.tọn). Former name of West York, Pa.

Eberwein (ā'bėr.vīn), Karl. b. at Weimar, Germany, Nov. 10, 1786; d. 1868. German composer and violinist; brother of Traugott Maximilian Eberwein. He was a member and conductor of the court orchestra at Weimar. His works include operas, chamber music, and incidental music to some of Goethe's dramas Eberwein, Traugott Maximilian. b. at Weimar, Germany, Oct. 27, 1775; d. at Rudolstadt, Germany, Dec. 2, 1831. German composer and violinist; brother of Karl Eberwein. He was a member (1797 et seq.) and Kapellmeister (choir leader) (1817 et seq.) of the Rudolstadt court orchestra. His works include operas, symphonies, chamber works, concertos, and cantatas.

Ebingen (ā'bing.ẹn). City in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Hohenzollern, French Zone, formerly in the Schwarzwald Kreis (district) of Württemberg, situated ab. 35 mi. S of Stuttgart. Manufactures include tools, precision instruments, musical instruments, leather, and shoes. 17,076 (1950).

Ebionites (ē'bi.ọn.īts). Party of Judaizing Christians which appeared in the Church as early as the 2nd century A.D., and disappeared about the 4th century. They agreed in the recognition of Jesus as the Messiah, the denial of his divinity, belief in the universal obligation of the Mosaic law, and rejection of Paul and his writings. The two great divisions of Ebionites were the Pharisaic Ebionites, who emphasized the obligation of the Mosaic law, and the Essenic Ebionites, who were more speculative and leaned toward Gnosticism.

Ebisu (e.bē.sö). [Also, Yebisu.] Japanese Shinto deity of good fortune, whose image is often found in farmhouses and on plaques in shops, in association with Daikoku; one of the Seven Gods of Happiness.

Eblana (eb'lą.nạ). See under Dublin city, Irish Republic.

Eblis (eb'lis). [Also, Iblis.] In Arabian mythology, the chief of the evil spirits; the devil; a fallen prince of the angels. Beckford introduces him in Vathek.

Ebner (āb'nėr), Anton Gilbert Victor. [Title, Ritter von Rosenstein.] b. at Bregenz, Vorarlberg, Austria, Feb. 4, 1842; d. at Vienna, March 20, 1925. Austrian histologist. A pupil of E. W. von Brücke and A. Rollet, he was assistant (1868–70) at the physiological laboratory at Graz, privatdocent of histology and embryology (1870–73) at the University of Innsbruck, and full professor (1873 et seq.) at the University of Graz. He is remembered for his description (1890) of the fibrils in the dentin and cementum of the teeth (Ebner's fibrils), the serous glands of the tongue, called Ebner's glands (1873), and for a method for decalcifying bones (1875). Author of Über den Bau der Aortenwand (1870), Untersuchungen über den Bau der Samencanälchen und die Entwicklung der Spermatozoiden (1871), Die acinösen Drüsen der Zunge und ihre Beziehungen zu den Geschmacksorganen (1873), Untersuchungen über das Verhalten des Knochengewebes im polarisierten Lichte (1874), Über den feineren Bau der Knochensubstanz (1875), Mikroskopische Studien über Wachsthum und Wechsel der Haare (1876), Strittige Fragen über den Bay des Zahnschmelzes (1890), and, with A. von Kölliker, Handbuch der Gewebelehre des Menschen (1902).

Ebner-Eschenbach (āb'nėr.esh'ẹn.bäċh), Marie, Baroness von. [Maiden name, Marie, Countess Dubsky.] b. at the castle of Zdislavic, near Ungarisch-Hradisch (Uherské Hradiště), in Moravia, Sept. 13, 1830; d. at Vienna, March 12, 1916. Austrian author, the outstanding woman writer in Austrian literature. Her work describes with great skill and insight the life and mores of the Viennese nobility and of the Bohemian country folk, peasantry, and landed gentry. She is unquestionably one of the great masters of the 19th-century novelle. Perhaps her most important long work is the novel Das Gemeindekind (1887; Eng. trans., The Child of the Parish, 1893). Among her numerous short stories Lotti die Uhrmacherin (Lotti the Watchmaker, 1881), Krambambuli (1913–15), and Der Kreisphysikus (The District Doctor, 1913–15) could be singled out as particularly successful.

Eboe (ē′bō). See Ibo.

Eboli (e′bō.lē). [Ancient name, Eburum.] Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Salerno, situated near the Sele River, ab. 45 mi. SE of Naples. The surrounding district produces principally livestock, and also excellent wines and olive oil; there are extensive fisheries .A huge medieval castle is among the tourist attractions; the ruins of ancient Paestum, including beautiful Greek temples, are nearby. In the Middle Ages, the town was favored by the emperor Frederick II because of its adherence to the Hohenstaufen cause. Considerable damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 14,727 (1936); of town, 12,057 (1936).

Éboli (ā′ʙō.lē), Princesa de. [Title of Ana de Mendoza.] b. 1540; d. at Pastrana, Spain, Feb. 2, 1592. Daughter of Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, viceroy of Peru, and (according to some authorities) mistress of Philip II of Spain. She married in 1559 the favorite Rui Gómez de Silva, prince of Eboli. While mistress of the king she maintained similar relations with the minister Antonio Pérez (some sources dispute the probability of the liaison with Philip). She was, in consequence of a political intrigue, betrayed by Juan de Escobedo, the secret agent at the court of Don John of Austria. Escobedo being murdered soon after by Pérez, she was suspected of complicity in the crime, and was banished from court in 1579. She figures as one of the characters in Schiller's Don Carlos.

Ebon (eb′ọn). Island in the Ralik Chain, Marshall Islands, the most southerly of the group. It is an important commercial port and the site of an American mission station.

Ebora Cerealis (eb′ọ.rạ sir.i.ā′lis). Roman name of Évora, city.

Eboracum (eb.ọ.rā′kum). Latin name of York, England.

Éboué (ā.bwā), Félix Adolphe. b. at Cayenne, French Guiana, Dec. 26, 1884; d. at Cairo, Egypt, May 17, 1944. French colonial official, best known for bringing (August, 1940) the support of the Chad region, of which he was governor, under the Free French regime of General Charles de Gaulle. He was later governor general (December, 1940–May, 1944) of French Equatorial Africa. A Negro, he was particularly interested in the cultural life of the Ubangi region, where he served for 23 years.

Ebrard (ā′brärt), Johann Heinrich August. b. at Erlangen, Bavaria, Germany, Jan. 18, 1818; d. there, July 23, 1888. German clergyman of the Reformed Church, and theological and miscellaneous writer.

Ebro (ā′ʙrō). [French, Èbre (ebr); Latin, Iberus.] River in Spain which rises in the province of Santander and flows into the Mediterranean. It is a source of irrigation water and hydroelectric power. Saragossa is situated on it. Length, ab. 500 mi.

Ebrodunum (eb.rọ.dū′num). Ancient name of Embrun.

Ebudae (ẹ.bū′dē). An ancient name of the Hebrides.

Ebura (eb′ụ.rạ). An ancient name of the Eure River.

Eburacum (eb.ụ.rā′kum). An ancient name of York, England.

Eburodunensis (eb″ụ.rọ.dö.nen′sis), Lacus. Ancient name of Neuchâtel, Lake of.

Eburodunum (eb″ụ.rọ.dū′num). Ancient name of Yverdon.

Eburum (eb′ụ.rum). Ancient name of Eboli.

Ebusus (eb′ụ.sus). Ancient name of Iviza, island.

Eça (ā′sạ), Matias Aires Ramos da Silva de. Full name of Aires, Matias.

Ecbasis captivi (ek′bạ.sis kap.tī′vī). Title of the oldest known medieval beast epic, composed by a monk of Toul c940 in Latin hexameters. It tells of an erring calf that falls into the clutches of a wolf and is rescued by the coöperation of other animals. It is an allegory of temptation, sin, and salvation. The genre of which this is the precursor reached its peak in the satirical Reynard epic of the 12th and 13th centuries.

Ecbatana (ek.bat′ạ.nạ). Ancient name of Hamadan.

Eccard (ek′ärt), Johann (or Johannes). b. at Mühlhausen, in Thuringia, 1553; d. 1611. German musician, noted as a composer of church music. In 1589 he was made Kapellmeister (choir leader) to the margrave of Brandenburg at Königsberg, and in 1608 was given the same position under the elector at Berlin. He wrote both sacred music and songs.

Ecce Homo (ek′sē hō′mō, ek′e). Name given (from the words of Pilate) to representations of Christ with the crown of thorns. Among the best-known paintings of this subject is one by Titian (1543), in the art museum at Vienna. Christ, bleeding and crowned with thorns, is led out from the palace above a flight of steps by soldiers. Below are a mocking company of soldiers and people, in which a portrait of the sultan Suleiman is conspicuous.

Ecce Homo: A Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ. Work by John Robert Seeley of Cambridge, England. It was first published anonymously in 1865. It created much excitement among various Protestant denominations, and elicited a number of replies.

Ecclefechan (ek.l.feċh′ạn, -fek′ạn). Village in S Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, ab. 13 mi. E of Dumfries, ab. 319 mi. N of London by rail. It is noted as the birthplace and burial-place of Thomas Carlyle. The population is variously given in the 1931 census as 614 to 988, depending upon the exact limits of the various types of districts listed.

Eccles (ek′lz). Municipal borough and manufacturing town in NW England, in Lancashire, situated on the river Irwell, ab. 4 mi. W of Manchester, ab. 187 mi. NW of London by rail. It is an outlying suburb of Manchester, and has manufactures of cotton. 43,927 (1951).

Eccles, Marriner Stoddard. b. at Logan, Utah, Sept. 9, 1890—. American banker and economist. Active as banker and business executive in Utah (1914–34); governor (1934–36) of Federal Reserve Board; chairman (1936–51) of governing board of Federal Reserve System; member (1942–46) of U.S. Economic Stabilization Board; member (1947 et seq.) of United Nations Investment Commission. Author of Beckoning Frontiers (1951), a survey of contemporary U.S. financial history.

Ecclesfield Urban (ek′lz.fēld ėr′bạn) or Ecclesfield. Civil parish, containing parts or the whole of four wards of Sheffield, in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 168 mi. N of London by rail. It has iron and steel manufactures. 10,950 (1931).

Eccleshall (ek′l.shạl, -shôl). Market town in C England, in Staffordshire, ab. 7 mi. by road NW of Stafford. It is noted for a fine early English church, and the ruins of a castle, built in 1315, which was the residence of the bishops of Lichfield until 1867. Pop. 3,532 (1931).

Ecclesiastes (ẹ.klē.zi.as′tēz). [Also, The Preacher.] Book of the Old Testament, traditionally ascribed to Solomon, but probably of later date (perhaps as late as 200 ʙ.c.). It is one of the so-called wisdom books of the Bible, expanding on the themes "all is vanity" and the impermanence of man and man's works. The text seems to have been confused by an editor, but the general lightly cynical pessimism has led some modern critics to assume Greek influence. Ecclesiastes is included in both the Jewish and the Christian canon.

Ecclesiasticus (ẹ.klē.zi.as′ti.kus). Latin name of a book of the Greek Bible (Septuagint), apocryphal in the Authorized Version, but declared canonical by the Council of Trent (1545–64); it is entitled Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach, and was probably written in the first third of the 2nd century. The Hebrew original, which had been lost, was rediscovered as separate fragments (published 1896–1900) but is in mutilated form. The book, part of the Biblical wisdom literature, is mainly proverbial and extols the value of wisdom.

Ecclesiazusae (ẹ.klē″zi.ạ.zō′sē). Comedy of Aristophanes, exhibited in 392 ʙ.c. In it the women meet in parliament (whence the name), and decide to take control of the state, with community of goods and husbands.

Eccleston (ek′lz.tọn), Samuel. b. in Kent County, Md., June 27, 1801; d. at Georgetown, D.C., April 21, 1851. American prelate of the Roman Catholic Church. He became archbishop of Baltimore in 1834.

Ecco von Repgow (ek′ō fon rep′gō) or Repkow (rep′kō). See Eike von Repgow or Repkow.

ECE. See United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

Ecgberht (eg′berċht). See Egbert or Ecgberht.

Echegaray y Eizaguirre (ā″chā.gä.rī′ ē ā.thā.gēr′rā), José. [Often called the "Spanish Ibsen."] b. at Madrid, 1832; d. 1916. Spanish professor of mathematics, engineer, statesman, and dramatist. Rooted in the Romantic school, he combined the thesis play with the honor drama of the 17th-century Spanish dramatist Calderón. His El Gran Galeoto (Eng. trans., The World and his Wife, 1881) was acclaimed in Europe and the U.S. as one of the greatest plays of the 19th century. He was made professor of mathematics in the Engineering College of Madrid in 1858, became a member of the Academy of Sciences in 1866, and was the author of a number of mathematical works of recognized value. He became a member of the Cortes in 1868, was minister of commerce, education, and finance (1868–74), withdrew from political life in 1874, and was again minister of finance in 1905. Among his best-known works are La Esposa del vengador (1874), La Última Noche (1875) O locura o santidad (1877), En el seno de la muerte (1879), Mariana (1892), El Hijo de Don Juan (1892), Mancha que limpia (1895), and El Loco dios (1900). Many of his plays have been translated into other languages. In 1904 he received, with Mistral, the Nobel prize for literature.

Echenique (ā.chā.nē'kā), José Rufino. b. at Puno, Peru, 1808; d. at Arequipa, Peru, Oct. 18, 1879. Peruvian general and statesman, president (1851–55) of Peru. He served under Santa Cruz, but after the defeat at Yungay (January, 1839) he gave his allegiance to Gamarra. In 1843 he was one of the leaders of the revolt against Vivanco. He was elected president of Peru (April 20, 1851). Revolts against him, beginning in 1853, resulted in his defeat by Castilla and exile (January, 1855). He returned in 1862, aided in the defense of Callao in 1866, and was again a presidential candidate in 1872.

Echeverría (ā"chā.ber.rē'ä), Esteban. b. at Buenos Aires, 1805; d. at Montevideo, Uruguay, 1851. Argentine poet who, despite his strong advocacy of cultural independence for America, is generally credited with the introduction of European romanticism into Spanish-American letters following a sojourn (1826–30) in France. His political activities forced him to spend the last 11 years of his life in exile. Author of Elvira o la novia de la Plata (1832), Los Consuelos (1834), Rimas (1837; containing "La Cautivo," his famous poem of the Pampas), La Guitarra (1842), and others. His complete works (1874) fill five volumes.

Echeverría, Francisco Javier. b. in Jalapa, Mexico, July 25, 1797; d. at Mexico City, Sept. 17, 1852. Mexican financier. He was secretary of the treasury (1834, 1838, 1839–41). In 1839 he succeeded in funding the Mexican debt. He was acting president for a short time in 1841.

Echidna (ē.kid'nạ). In Greek mythology, a monster half maiden, half serpent; daughter of Chrysaor and Callirrhoe (or of Phorcys and Ceto), and by Typhon mother of the Chimaera, the Hydra of Lernea, and Cerberus, and by Orthus, of the Sphinx and other monsters. She was slain while asleep by the many-eyed Argus.

Echinades (ē.kin'ạ.dēz). In ancient geography, a group of islands W of Acarnania in Greece, formed in and near the mouth of the Achelous River and now reunited, in part, to the mainland.

Echmiadzin (ech"mē.ä.dzēn'). Monastery in SW U.S.S.R., in W Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 12 mi. by road W of Erivan. It was founded in the 4th century A.D., in the period of the establishment of Christianity as the state religion of Armenia. It was a great center of Armenian culture which flourished about the 7th century. The monastery has a collection of 8,000 ancient Armenian manuscripts, and a historical and ethnographic museum. Echmiadzin is the residence of the katholikos, or primate of Armenia.

Echo (ek'ō). In Greek mythology, a nymph who by her prattling prevented Hera from surprising her husband Zeus in the company of the nymphs. The goddess punished her by condemning her never to speak first and never to be silent when any one else spoke. She pined away to a bodiless voice (echo) for love of Narcissus. According to another explanation, she repulsed Pan's advances and he caused her to be torn to pieces by maddened shepherds. Ge (the earth mother) hid the pieces, which still respond to sounds.

Echo, The. Verse satire by the Connecticut Wits, published (1791–1805) in the American Mercury and printed as an independent work in 1807. It expressed the Federalist point of view in politics.

Echo Canyon. Deep and precipitous canyon in the Wasatch Mountains, in N Utah, now traversed by a railroad. In the first part of the 19th century a trail through the canyon was used by emigrants on their way to the West, notably by the Donner Party in 1846 and by the Mormons under Brigham Young on their way to Salt Lake City in 1847.

Echo Lake. Name of various small sheets of water: 1. A lake in New Hampshire, in the Franconia Notch. 2. A lake near North Conway, N.H.

Echt (echt). Town in SE Netherlands, in the province of Limburg, ab. 20 mi. NE of Maastricht: agricultural community. 10,573 (1939).

Echtermeyer (ech'tėr.mī.ėr), Ernst Theodor. b. at Liebenwerda, Germany, 1805; d. at Dresden, Germany, May 6, 1844. German literary critic, coeditor with Arnold Ruge (1802–80) of Hallische Jahrbücher für deutsche Wissenschaft und Kunst (1838–41) and editor of Auswahl deutscher Gedichte (1836), which the original publishers (Buchhandlung des Waisenhauses at Halle) have kept in print for more than a century. The 48th (centennial) edition brought the total of copies distributed to 360,000.

Echternach (ech'tėr.näch). Town in Luxembourg, on the Sauer River, ab. 18 mi. NE of the city of Luxembourg. It is an ancient town, with remnants of medieval fortifications. There are potteries and distilleries. The yearly religious dancing-procession, held at Whitsuntide, is celebrated. It is said to have originated in an effort to prevent a return of an epidemic which visited the place in the 8th century. The town formed the southern anchorage of the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge (Battle of the Ardennes), Dec. 16–31, 1944; almost all of the buildings were damaged. 3,141 (1948).

Echuca (e.chö'kạ). Town in SE Australia, in Victoria state, at the junction of the Campaspe and Murray rivers ab. 110 mi. N of Melbourne. 4,491 (1947).

Écija (ā'thē.hä). [Ancient names: Astigi or Astigis, Augusta Firma.] City in S Spain, in the province of Sevilla, situated on the Genil River, ab. 47 mi. NE of the city of Seville. Long famous for its shoemakers, it also manufactures olive oil, soap, straw hats, and pottery. It is the seat of a bishopric. The medieval walls are in ruins, but the gateways, the church towers with their glazed tiles, and the balconied mansions still recall the Moorish period. It was a flourishing Roman colony in ancient times, and there are remains of Roman structures. 34,944 (1940).

Eck (ek), Johann. [Original surname, Mayr (or Maier), and hence sometimes written, in full, Johann Maier von Eck.] b. at Eck (now Egg), in Swabia, Nov. 15, 1486; d. at Ingolstadt, in Bavaria, Feb. 10, 1543. German Roman Catholic theologian, a notable opponent of Luther and the Reformation. He attended Heidelberg, Tübingen, Cologne, and Freiburg universities, mastering a wide variety of subjects and joining the Humanist movement. He taught theology at Freiburg (1506–10), was ordained priest in 1508, and became pro-chancellor of Ingolstadt in 1512, where he taught for 32 years. He wrote much and became an authority on disputed theological issues. He was named papal legate, and acted as ecclesiastical counselor to the Bavarian dukes. In 1539 he published a German version of the Bible.

Eck, Johann Friedrich. b. at Mannheim, Germany, 1766; d. at Bamberg, Germany, c1809. German violinist and composer of violin music. He was a member (1778–88) of the Munich court orchestra and subsequently operatic conductor there until 1801.

Eckardt (ek'ärt), Julius von. b. at Wolmar (Valmera), Russia, Aug. 1, 1836; d. at Weimar, Germany, Jan. 20, 1908. German journalist and consular official. Eckardt left his native Russia because of the government's Russification campaign. As a German journalist he became a vigorous defender of Chancellor Caprivi's policies. From 1900 to 1907 he was a member of the German consular service.

Eckart (ek'ärt), Dietrich. b. at Neumarkt, in the Palatinate, Germany, March 23, 1868; committed suicide at Berchtesgaden, Bavaria, Germany, Dec. 12, 1923. German journalist, poet, and playwright; intimate friend of Adolf Hitler and editor (1921–23) of the Nazi party paper, Völkischer Beobachter. A follower of Count Joseph Arthur de Gobineau and of Houston Stewart Chamberlain, he deeply influenced Hitler's ideas. He died shortly after his prison sentence (imposed for his part in the Beer Hall Putsch) had been commuted, and the National Socialist party glorified him as a martyr and one of Germany's greatest men of letters. His plays include Heinrich der Hohenstaufe (1915) and Lorenzaccio (1918). Among his essays Der Bolschewismus von Moses bis Lenin (1925) may be mentioned. His song Sturm, Sturm, Sturm . . . has the refrain "Deutschland erwache!" which became a Nazi war cry.

Eckart or Eckardt, Johannes. See Eckhart or Eckart or Eckardt, Johannes.

Eckart, the Trusty. See Eckhardt or Eckart, the Trusty.

Eckener (ek'ẹ.nẹr), Hugo. b. at Flensburg, Germany, Aug. 10, 1868—. German aeronautical engineer and airship pilot. He was educated at the universities of Graz and Berlin, and received the Ph.D. at the University of Freiburg. He became (1905) assistant to Count Zeppelin, was named (1909) manager of the Zeppelin factory, became (1912) director of the Deutsche Luftschiff A.G. (DELAG), served in the German navy during World War I, and subsequently became a partner and president of the Zeppelin company. He made the first transatlantic airship flight (1924), piloting the ZR-3 (later known as the Los Angeles) from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to Lakehurst, N.J. He commanded the Graf Zeppelin, in which he made a global flight (1929) and crossed the Atlantic many times, and designed many airships, including the Hindenburg (destroyed in an explosion at Lakehurst in 1937).

Eckermann (ek'ėr.män), Johann Peter. b. at Winsen, Germany, Sept. 21, 1792; d. at Weimar, Germany, Dec. 3, 1854. German writer, a friend and literary executor of Goethe. He is known chiefly for his Gespräche mit Goethe (1836–48).

Eckernförde (ek'ėrn.fėr.dẹ). Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, British Zone, formerly in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, situated on a land tongue on Kiel Bay, NW of Kiel. It is a seaport, and has fisheries, fish-smoking establishments, canneries, and metallurgical, rubber, furniture, and paperware manufactures. A battle between a Danish naval unit and Schleswig-Holstein coastal batteries took place here in 1849. The population is predominantl Protestant; an increase in population of 95.7 percent, due to the large influx of East German refugees, occurred in the period 1939–46. Pop. 24,394 (1946), 23,356 (1950).

Eckersberg (ek'ėrs.berg), Kristoffer Vilhelm. b. at Varnæs, near Aabenraa, Denmark, Jan. 2, 1783; d. at Copenhagen, July 22, 1853. Danish historical and marine painter.

Eckersley (ek'ėrz.li), Peter Pendleton. b. at Puebla, Mexico, Jan. 6, 1892—. English communications engineer. Studied (1912–15) at Manchester University; wireless equipment officer (1915–19) in the Royal Flying Corps; headed (1919–23) the experimental section of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company's designs department. As head engineer (1923–29) of the British Broadcasting Corporation, he was the first regular broadcaster (1921–22) in Britain and the first to introduce (1925) a high-power long-wave sending station; planner of the British scheme of regional alternating broadcasting programs; author of The Power Behind the Microphone (1941).

Eckert (ek'ėrt), Karl Anton Florian. b. at Potsdam, Germany, Dec. 7, 1820; d. at Berlin, Oct. 14, 1879. German composer, instrumentalist, and conductor. He was Kapellmeister (choir leader) at Stuttgart (1860–67) and subsequently at Berlin. His works include three operas, such as Das Fischermädchen, church music including the oratorio Ruth, chamber music, and a symphony.

Eckert, Thomas Thompson. b. at St. Clairsville, Ohio, April 23, 1825; d. at Long Branch, N.J., Oct. 20, 1910. American telegrapher and business executive. He organized the Union military telegraph service in 1862; brevetted brigadier general in 1865; assistant secretary of war (1866–67); became president of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company in 1875, president of the American Union Telegraph Company in 1880, vice-president and general manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company in 1881, and president in 1893.

Eckford (ek'fọrd), Henry. b. at Irvine, Scotland, March 12, 1775; d. at Constantinople, Nov. 12, 1832. American shipbuilder. He came to New York in 1796, was employed by the U.S. government to construct ships of war on the Great Lakes during the War of 1812, was appointed naval constructor in the U.S. navy yard at Brooklyn in 1820, and in 1831 became chief naval constructor for the Ottoman Empire.

Eckhardt (ek'härt) or Eckart (ek'ärt), the Trusty. [Also: Eckehart; German, der getreue Eckart.] Old man in German traditional lore, in the legend of Frau Holle or Holda (Venus). He appears in the Mansfeld country on the evening of Maundy Thursday with a white staff to save the people from the Wild Hunt, the furious host which travels in Holle's train. His duties differ in different traditions. Sometimes he is the companion of Tannhäuser, and has even been considered to be the same person. He is also said to be in the service of Holle, and to sit outside the Venusberg to warn passing knights of the dangers therein, to which the enamored Tannhäuser has abandoned himself. He is also a knight captured by the Wild Hunt and doomed to abide at the Venusberg till the judgment. He appears as a knight in the Harlungen Saga and the Nibelungenlied.

Eckhart (ek'härt) or Eckart or Eckardt (ek'ärt), Johannes. [Called Meister Eckhart.] b. at Hochheim, near Gotha, in Thuringia, c1260; d. probably at Cologne, c1328. German Dominican, founder of German mysticism. He was prior (1314) at Strasbourg and then at Cologne. He was accused of heresy in 1326, but denied the charge and appealed to Pope John XXII, who declared in 1329 (in the bull In Coena Domini, March 27) that Eckhart's doctrines were partly heretical. His philosophy, very influential on later thinkers, holds that all existence is in God, that creation is eternal because God has neither past nor future, but only the present. This apparently pantheistic philosophy is related, though no direct linkage or borrowing is known, with Plotinus and Neoplatonism, with Mahayana Buddhism, and with Vedanta.

Eckhout (ek'hout), Gerbrand van den. See Eeckhout or Eckhout, Gerbrand van den.

Eckmühl (ek'mül). See Eggmühl.

Eckmühl (dek.mül), Prince d'. A title of Davout, Louis Nicolas.

Eckstein (ek'shtīn), Ernst. b. at Giessen, Germany, Feb. 6, 1845; d. at Dresden, Germany, Nov. 18, 1900. German journalist and author of humorous verse epics and prose stories. He was for a time on the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, then was editor of Deutsche Dichterhalle and the comic weekly Der Schalk.

Eclectic Magazine, The. Literary journal published monthly (1819–1907) at New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. It was initially brought out under the title The Philadelphia Register and National Recorder and became known as The Eclectic Magazine in 1844.

Eclympasteyre (e.klim.päs.tā'rẹ). Name given by Chaucer in The Book of the Duchess to the heir of Morpheus, the god of sleep.

> Morpheus, and Eclympasteyre
> That was the god of slepes heyre.

Ecnomus (ek'nō.mus). Hill near the modern town of Licata, on the S coast of Sicily. Here the Carthaginians defeated (311 B.C.) the Syracusan tyrant Agathocles. Near here the Roman fleet defeated (256 B.C.) the Carthaginians.

École d'Arcueil (ā.kol dàr.kėy'). Group of contemporary French composers established (1923) at the home of its leader, Erik Satie. Among its members are Henri Sauguet, Maxime Jacob, Henri Cliqué-Pleyel, and Roger Désormière.

École des Beaux-Arts (ā.kol dā bō.zàr). French national school of fine arts at Paris, located on the Quai Malaquais. It was founded in 1648 and represented a merging of three academies of painting, sculpture, and architecture, a department of engraving being added later. It is free, coeducational, and is not limited to French students (although these naturally form the largest part of its student body). Admission is secured through satisfactory completion of a rigorous examination. The age limits are from 15 to 30. A grand prize, the Prix de Rome, is competed for annually by the students, and is their main objective. It was created by Louis XIV in 1666. It entitles the winner to a four-year scholarship at the French Academy of Art, at Rome, an annual income of 4,000 francs, and exemption from military service. The faculty of the École consists of the most distinguished French artists, who are allowed to teach students privately at their own studios. The original name of the school, École Académique, was changed to its present one in 1793. The old Hôtel de Conti and the Hôtel Chamay were purchased, respectively, in 1860 and 1885 for use as studios.

École des Femmes (lā.kōl dā fäm), Critique de l'. [Eng. trans., "Critique of the School of Wives."] Brilliant short play by Molière, as a satirical reply to the critics of his L'École des femmes. It was produced on June 1, 1663.

École des Femmes, L'. [Eng. trans., "The School of Wives."] Comedy by Molière, produced on Dec. 26, 1662.

École des Maris (lā.kōl dā mȧ.rē), L'. [Eng. trans., "The School of Husbands."] Comedy by Molière, produced in 1661. Sganarelle, as the guardian of a young girl, is the hero of this play, the plot of which is partly taken from Terence, Boccaccio, and Lope de Vega.

École Polytechnique (ā.kōl po.lē.tek.nēk). French school of technology, founded by decree of the Convention, on March 11, 1794. From its origin and object of its foundation it was devoted to instruction in purely scientific and technical branches, such as artillery, military and civil engineering, the building of roads and bridges, shipbuilding, and the like. There were at first 360 students, and the course was three years. The number was later decreased to 200, and the terms shortened to two years. After graduation the students choose between a military and a civil career. The military students go to the École d'Application at Fontainebleau for two years, after which they enter the army as lieutenants of artillery or engineers. The others enter various special schools at Paris, such as the École des Ponts et Chaussées, École Spéciale des Mines, École Centrale des Arts et Manufactures, and others.

Ecological Society of America. Organization founded in 1915 for the purpose of promoting the scientific study of organisms in relation to their environment. It publishes Ecology (quarterly), Ecological Monographs (quarterly), and a Bulletin (quarterly).

Econometric Society. Organization with U.S. and foreign membership, founded in 1930 for the purpose of advancing economic theory in relation to mathematics and statistics. It maintains headquarters at the University of Chicago and publishes Econometrica (quarterly).

Economic and Social Council, United Nations. See United Nations Economic and Social Council.

Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, United Nations. See United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East.

Economic Commission for Europe, United Nations. See United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

"Economic Royalists." Epithet applied by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to the businessmen and financiers who had opposed the economic legislation of his New Deal on the grounds that it constituted excessive government interference in private enterprise. In his Philadelphia speech accepting the Democratic nomination for a second term (1936), Roosevelt said: "The economic royalists complain that we seek to overthrow the institutions of America. What they really complain of is that we seek to take away their power. Our allegiance to American institutions requires the overthrow of this kind of power."

Economic Welfare, Board of. See Board of Economic Welfare.

Economites (ē.kon'ō.mīts). See Harmonists.

Economo (ā.kō'nō.mō), Constantin. [Title, Baron von Sanderff.] b. at Brăila, Rumania, Aug. 21, 1876; d. at Vienna, Oct. 21, 1931. Austrian psychiatrist. He worked with E. Kraepelin at Munich and with H. Nothnagel and J. Pal at Vienna. He was assistant (1906–19) to Wagner-Jauregg, and became privatdocent of psychiatry and neurology (1913) at the University of Vienna, where he was named professor in 1921. He founded a research institute and was the first to describe (1917) encephalitis lethargica epidemica. He described also the topography of the cerebral cortex (1925). Author of Die Encephalitis lethargica (1918; Eng. trans., Encephalitis lethargica; Its Sequelae and Treatment, 1931), The Cytoarchitectonics of the Human Cerebral Cortex (1929; original German ed., 1925), Über den Schlaf (1925), Die Pathologie des Schlafes (1926), and Zellaufbau der Grosshirnrinde des Menschen (1927).

Economy (ē.kon'ō.mi). Township in W Pennsylvania, in Beaver County, ab. 17 mi. NW of Pittsburgh. The borough of Ambridge, within the township, is the site of the third communal settlement, which was named Economy, founded (1825) by the Harmony Society. 2,905 (1950).

Écorcheurs (ā.kôr.shėr), Les. Bands of armed adventurers who, favored by the Hundred Years' War, ravaged France and Belgium in the 15th century, beginning c1435. Among their leaders were Villandras and Crabannes the Bastard. They were called Ecorcheurs, or flayers, probably because they "not only waylaid and plundered their victims, but stripped them of every vestige of clothing, leaving them nothing but their shirts."

Ecorse (ē.kôrs', ē'kôrs). City in S Lower Michigan, in Wayne County: manufactures of steel products. 17,948 (1950).

ECOSOC. See United Nations Economic and Social Council.

Écosse (ā.kos). French name of Scotland.

Écrins (ā.kraṅ), Barre (or Pic) des. See Barre des Écrins.

Ector (ek'tọr), Sir. [Also, Sir Hector.] In the Arthurian romances, a faithful knight who with his wife was entrusted with the upbringing of the infant Arthur. He was the father of Sir Kay.

Ector de Maris (dẹ mar'is), Sir. [Also: Sir Hector de Maris, Sir Ector de Mares, Sir Hector de Mares.] In Arthurian romance, the brother of Sir Lancelot. He mourned Lancelot's death with a bitter lament, and afterward went with Sir Bois and seven other knights to the Holy Land, where they died on a Good Friday.

Ecuador (ek'wạ.dôr; Spanish, ā.kwä.ᴛʜōr'). [Full name, República del Ecuador, meaning (originally) "Republic of the Equator."] Republic of South America, lying between Colombia on the N, Peru on the E and S, and the Pacific Ocean on the W. The country is traversed from N to S by the Andes, which form a continuous eastern range and a roughly parallel but much broken western range, containing some of the highest peaks in South America and numerous volcanoes. Between the mountains there are several high tablelands or basins. The coast regions and those E of the mountains are low, hot, and covered in great part with forest. The principal products and exports are cacao, rice, straw hats, coffee, bananas, nuts, and rubber. The inhabitants are whites (of Spanish descent), Indians, and mixed races. The executive is vested in a president elected for four years, and a unicameral congress or chamber of deputies. There are 17 provinces besides the Galapagos Islands (Archipiélago de Colón). The Roman Catholic was formerly the state religion, but now complete freedom of worship is granted. At the time of the Spanish conquest the greater part of Ecuador was subject to the Incas of Peru. It was conquered (1533–34) by the Spaniards, and under the name of Quito was a presidency attached to the viçeroyalty of Peru. The Spanish rulers being expelled (1822–23) with the aid of Bolívar, the country was united to the Colombian Confederation until 1830, when it seceded and adopted its present name. Since then it has suffered from political revolutions and from border disputes with Peru, the latest of which was settled in 1942. The present constitution was adopted in 1945. Capital, Quito; area, ab. 104,000 sq. mi.; pop. 3,076,933 (1950).

Ed (āt), Ida. Maiden name of Boy-Ed, Ida.

Edam (ē'dạm; Dutch, ā.dăm'). Town in W Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, situated near the Ijsselmeer (Zuider Zee) ab. 11 mi. NE of Amsterdam. It is the chief market for Edam cheese; the nearby village of Volendam has extensive fisheries. The Groote Kerk (church) has stained-glass windows and a chime of bells; other buildings of interest include an old town hall and a historical museum. 8,941 (1939).

Edcouch (ed'kouch). Town in S Texas, in Hidalgo County, in the Rio Grande valley near Brownsville: railroad junction. 2,925 (1950).

Edda (ed'ạ). Work written (in prose and verse) by Snorri Sturluson (1178–1241), containing the old mythology of Scandinavia and the old rules for verse-making; also, another work, a collection of ancient Icelandic poems. The name Edda (whether given by Snorri himself is not known) occurs in the inscription of one of the manuscripts of the work. Snorri's Edda as it was originally written consisted of three parts: the Gylfaginning (delusion of Gylfi), an epitome of the old mythology; Skaldskaparmal (art of poetry), an explanation of poetical expressions and periphrases; and Hattatal (list of meters), a laudatory poem on the Norwegian king Hakon Hakonsson, and Jarl Skuli, in which all forms of verse used in the old poetry are exemplified. To this was ultimately added a Formali (preface), and the Bragaroedhur (sayings of Bragi), describing the origin of poetry, and in some manuscripts Thulur, or a rhymed glossary of synonyms, list of poets, and similar material. The work was intended as a handbook of poets. In the year 1643 the Icelandic bishop Brynjulf Sveinsson discovered a collection of old mythological poems which was erroneously ascribed to Sæmund Sigfusson (1056–1133), and hence called from him Sæmundar Edda hins Frodha (The Edda of Sæmund the Learned). The poems that compose this Edda are of unknown origin and authorship. They are supposed to have been collected about the middle of the 13th century, but were composed at widely different periods down from the 9th century, to the first half of which the oldest is to be assigned; hence the name now given to this collection, the Elder or Poetic Edda, in distinction from the Younger or Prose Edda of Snorri, to which alone the name Edda legitimately belonged. The Elder Edda is usually considered to include 32 poems (some of them fragmentary).

Ed Dahra (ed dä'rạ). See Dahra.

Eddin (ed.dēn'), Nasir. See Nasir ed-din al-Tusi, Mohammed ibn-Mohammed ibn al-Hasan.

Eddington (ed'ing.tọn), Sir Arthur Stanley. b. at Kendal, England, Dec. 28, 1882; d. at Cambridge, England, Nov. 22, 1944. English mathematician, astronomer, and astrophysicist, noted for his association of mathematical concepts with the structure of the universe. He calculated the "Eddington number" which he supposed to represent the total number of particles in the universe. He studied at the universities of Manchester and Cambridge, did research at the Cavendish Laboratory, became chief assistant at the Royal Observatory, and in 1913 succeeded Sir George Darwin at Cambridge. He was elected to the Royal Society in 1914, and was president of the Royal Astronomical Society (1921–23), president of the Physical Society (1930–32), and president of the International Astronomical Union (1938 et seq.). He was knighted in 1930. His works include Stellar Movements and the Structure of the Universe (1914), Space, Time and Gravitation (1920), The Mathematical Theory of Relativity (1923), Internal Constitution of the Stars (1926), Stars and Atoms (1927), The Nature of the Physical World (1928), New Pathways in Science (1935), Relativity Theory of Protons and Electrons (1936), The Philosophy of Physical Science (1939), and The Combination of Relativity Theory and Quantum Theory (1943).

Ed Dirr (ed dir'). See El Dirr.

Eddy (ed'i), Clarence. b. at Greenfield, Mass., June 23, 1851; d. at Chicago, Jan. 10, 1937. American organist and composer. He studied at Berlin under Haupt, became (1874) organist of the First Congregational Church at Chicago, was named (1876) director of the Hershey School of Musical Art, and was chosen honorary member of the Accademia Santa Cecilia at Rome. His publications include The Church and Concert Organist (2 vols., 1882, 1885) and The Organ in Church (1887); he translated Haupt's Theory of Composition and Fugue.

Eddy, Manton Sprague. b. at Chicago, May 16, 1892—. American soldier. Commissioned a second lieutenant in 1916, he saw service in France in World War I, and afterward rose through the ranks to become a general officer. In World War II he commanded the 9th infantry division through the fighting in Tunis, Sicily, and France, and was appointed (1944) commander of the XII army corps, operating in France, Luxembourg, and Germany. He headed the Third Service Command in 1946, was chief of army information in 1947, and served as commanding general of the Leavenworth staff college in 1948. In 1950 he assumed command of the 7th army in Germany and in 1952 became commanding general of the U.S. army in Germany; later, when command of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization armies was divided, he headed the central army group of U.S. and French troops.

Eddy, Mary Baker. b. at Bow, near Concord, N.H., July 16, 1821; d. at Chestnut Hill, Boston, Mass., Dec. 3, 1910. Founder of Christian Science. Her full maiden name was Mary Morse Baker; she was of Scotch-English extraction and numbered among her ancestors members of the Continental Army in the Revolutionary War. She received her education at academies in Tilton and Plymouth, N.H., and also from private tutors. Her first church connection was with the Congregational Church. She married George Washington Glover, a building contractor, in December, 1843, and went with him to Charleston, S.C., and later to Wilmington, N.C., where she was left a widow in June, 1844. She returned to New Hampshire soon after, where her only child, George Washington Glover, was born in September. From early childhood she was not strong physically, and in her search for health she sought relief through various healing systems including allopathy, homeopathy, hydropathy, electricity, and various others, but without success. She regarded her discovery of Christian Science as resulting directly and immediately from an accident which occurred in Lynn, Mass., in 1866. While on her way to a meeting of Good Templars, she fell on an icy street and was severely injured. She was carried to a nearby residence where she was attended by a physician and cared for during the night. The next day she was removed to her home in the adjacent town of Swampscott in a critical condition. On the third day following the injury, when apparently near death, she asked for her Bible, opened it to Mat. ix. 2, and reading the account of the healing of the palsied man by Jesus, was herself healed and able to rise from her sickbed. She married Asa Gilbert Eddy on Jan. 1, 1877 (he died in 1882). She published the Christian Science textbook Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures in 1875, and organized the first Christian Science church in 1879. This church was dissolved, and in 1892 she organized The First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Boston (known also as The Mother Church). She established The Christian Science Journal in 1883, and in 1898 founded The Christian Science Publishing Society. Her writings, all published at Boston by the trustees under her will, include: Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures (1875; final revision, 1906), Miscellaneous Writings (1896), Retrospection and Introspection (1891), Unity of Good (1887), Pulpit and Press (1895), Rudimental Divine Science (1891), No and Yes (1891), Christian Science Versus Pantheism (1898), Messages to the Mother Church (for 1900, 1901, 1902), Christian Healing (1886), The People's Idea of God (1886), The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany (1913), Poems (1910), Christ and Christmas (1897), Church Manual (1895; final revision, 1908). Besides The Christian Science Journal (founded 1883), her Church periodicals comprise: the Christian Science Sentinel, the Christian Science Quarterly, The Herald of Christian Science (published in German, French, Scandinavian, Dutch, Spanish, and Braille in English).

Eddy, Sherwood. b. at Leavenworth, Kan., Jan. 19, 1871—. American official of Y.M.C.A. and writer. Served as Y.M.C.A. secretary for India (1896–1911) and Asia (1911 et seq.); Y.M.C.A. secretary with British army (1915–17) and U.S. army (1917–18). Author of India Awakening (1911), The New Era in Asia (1913), The Students of Asia (1915), With Our Soldiers in France (1917), Religion and Social Justice (1928), A Pilgrimage of Ideas (1935), Revolutionary Christianity (1939), Pathfinders of the World Missionary Crusade (1945), Is God in History? (1947), and other books.

Eddy, Spencer (Fayette). b. at Chicago, June 18, 1874; d. Oct. 7, 1939. American diplomat. He was attached to the American embassy at London (1899) and to that at Paris (1899–1901), was first secretary of legation at Constantinople (1901–03), at St. Petersburg (1903–06), and at Berlin (1906–07), and was minister to Argentina (1908–09). He became minister to Rumania, Serbia, and Bulgaria in 1909, but resigned from the diplomatic service in that year.

Eddy, William Abner. b. at New York, Jan. 28, 1850; d. at Bayonne, N.J., Dec. 26, 1909. American meteorologist. An accountant by profession, in 1890 he began experiments in kite-flying for scientific purposes. By means of kites with the necessary apparatus attached he secured records of temperature at varying heights (1891), photographs taken in mid air (1895), and facts concerning air currents, atmospheric electricity, and the like. In 1903 he experimented with model airplanes released from kites in mid air. He also devised instruments for recording tremors of the earth. Much of his work was done in connection with the U.S. Weather Bureau.

Eddystone (ed'i.stōn). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Delaware County near Philadelphia: locomotive works. A munitions center in World War I, it was the scene of a serious explosion (April 10, 1917) of unknown origin. 3,014 (1950).

Eddystone Rocks (ed'i.stōn, -stọn). Dangerous reef in the English Channel, S of Cornwall, ab. 14 mi. SW of Plymouth. On it a famous lighthouse was erected 1696–99, and has been rebuilt in 1706, 1756–59, and 1879–82. In the present structure the light (159,600 candle power) is 133 ft. above the sea, and can be seen for 17½ mi.

Ede (ā'dā). Large town in W Africa, in Western Provinces, Nigeria, connected by road with Lagos and other large centers in the SW corner of the country. 51,000 (est. 1950).

Ede (ā'dẹ). Commune and town, consisting of seven settlements, in E Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, ab. 13 mi. NW of Arnhem: agricultural and stock-raising district. 45,896 (est. 1951).

Edelinck (ā'dẹ.lingk), Gérard. b. at Antwerp, Belgium, Oct. 20, 1640; d. at Paris, April 2, 1707. Flemish copperplate and portrait engraver. At Antwerp he studied under Cornelisz Galle and Gaspard Huybrecht, and at Paris, in 1665, under François de Poilly. Louis XIV thought highly of his work, gave him a pension, and appointed him instructor at the Gobelins academy for training tapestry workers on the advice of its director, Le Brun, whose enthusiastic opinion confirmed his own. Edelinck was the first to use the lozenge shape in making prints. He is credited with 341 works, of which some of the best known are Combat of Four Knights, after da Vinci, the Holy Family, after Raphael, Penitent Magdalene, Christ Surrounded by Angels, Saint Louis Praying, Saint Charles Borromeo Before a Crucifix, all after Le Brun, and La Couseuse, after Guido Reni. He made portraits, over 200 altogether, of contemporaries including Philippe de Champagne (which he regarded as his best work), Santeuil, La Fontaine, Colbert, Descartes, Dryden, Louis XIV, and Le Brun. With Nanteuil and Masson he belongs to the trinity of famous portrait engravers in France. His brothers, Jean and Gaspard François, and his son, Nicolas, followed his profession.

Eden (ē'dẹn). In Biblical history, the name of the first abode of man, in the midst of which a garden, the garden of Eden (the "paradise"), was planted. The position of Eden is described in Gen. ii. 8ff. by four rivers that go out from it, and by the countries they surround or pass in their course. Of these two, the Euphrates and Tigris (Hebrew, Perath and Hiddekel), are the well-known rivers of Mesopotamia; the other two, Pishon and Gihon, have been identified with various streams. The hypothesis of Friedrich Delitzsch assumed that the narrator in Genesis thought Eden located near the city of Babylon and meant by the rivers Pishon and Gihon two canals; Delitzsch also attempted to identify the countries mentioned in this passage with territories in that region. Adam and Eve were banished from Eden for eating of the forbidden fruit. An enclosed garden of paradise appears in Persian myth; a tree of life in a gardenlike park is mentioned in Babylonian myth.

Eden. River in NW England, in Westmorland and Cumberland, rising on the E border of Westmorland and flowing into Solway Firth, ab. 8 mi. NW of Carlisle. Length, ab. 65 mi.

Eden, Anthony. [Full name, Robert Anthony Eden.] b. at Ferry Hill, Durham, England, June 12, 1897—. English diplomat; second surviving son of the 7th baronet of Windlestore Hall, Durham, descendant of the father of the 1st Baron Auckland (William Eden). He graduated (1922) from Oxford with a first class in Oriental languages, after having served (1915–19) in World War I with the King's Royal Rifle Corps, of which he was captain, and as general staff officer and brigade major. He was awarded the military cross. A member (1923 et seq.) of Parliament, he was parliamentary private secretary (1926–29) to Sir Austen Chamberlain, the then secretary of state for foreign affairs, parliamentary undersecretary (1931–33) in the Foreign Office, lord privy seal (1934–35) and member of the privy council. He was minister (1935) without portfolio for League of Nations affairs, secretary of state for foreign affairs (1935–38, 1940–45), for dominion affairs (1939–40), and for war (1940). From 1942 to 1945 he was leader of the House of Commons. He was chancellor (1945 et seq.) of the University of Birmingham. During his first term as secretary for foreign affairs, he negotiated (1937) with Count Ciano the "gentlemen's agreement" in regard to the Mediterranean, and acted as British representative (1937) to the nine-power conference over the Sino-Japanese conflict. He resigned (1938) his office after the conclusion of the Munich pact in protest against the administration of Neville Chamberlain. With the victory of the Conservatives in 1951, he again became foreign secretary.

Eden, Sir Ashley. b. at Hertingfordbury, Hertfordshire, England, Nov. 13, 1831; d. in India, July 9, 1887. English colonial official in India; grandson of the 1st Baron Auckland (William Eden). Appointed magistrate at Murshidabad (1856) and did much to avert mutiny there (1857); secretary to governor of Bengal (1860–71). When envoy to Bhutan (1863) was forced to sign disadvantageous treaty. Appointed first civil governor of British Burma (1871), served as lieutenant of Bengal (1877–82), and as member of secretary of state's council (1882–87).

Eden, Emily. b. at Westminster, London, March 3, 1797; d. at Richmond, Surrey, England, Aug. 5, 1869. English novelist, traveler, and travel writer. She was the seventh daughter of the 1st Baron Auckland (William Eden), and the sister of the 1st Earl of Auckland (George Eden). When her brother went to India as governor general, she accompanied him and, with a sister, Frances, stayed with him during his entire term (1835–42). This period of residence resulted in two books, Portraits of the People and Princes of India (1844, when she was back in England) and Up the Country: Letters Written to her Sister from the Upper Provinces of India by the Hon. Emily Eden (1866; other eds., 1867, 1872). She translated Hugo's tragedy Marion Delorme into English blank verse, and she wrote two gently satirical novels, The Semi-detached House (1859) and The Semi-attached Couple (1860), which have been paid the high compliment of being compared to Jane Austen. Successful in their day, they were reprinted in 1928 after being long forgotten.

Eden, George. See Auckland, 1st Earl of.

Eden, Martin. See Martin Eden.

Edén (e.dān'), Nils. b. at Piteå, Sweden, Aug. 25, 1871; d. at Stockholm, June 16, 1945. Swedish political leader and historian, who as premier (October, 1917–March, 1920) during and just after World War I favored trade relations with Germany and the other Central Powers. At first extremely conservative in his political attitude, he shifted toward an advance liberal position at about the time his parliamentary career began (1909). He sponsored social reforms and followed a vacillating policy toward Finland on the Aaland Islands question. He remained in the Riksdag (parliament) until 1924, serving also (1920 et seq.) as governor of Stockholm province. His important writings include Om centralregeringens organisation under den äldre Vasatiden (1523–94) (1899), Den svenska centralregeringens utveckling till collegial organisation . . . (1902), 1809 års revolution (2 vols., 1911), Peder Swarts Konung Gustaf I's krönika (1912), and Gustaf Wasas bref (1917).

Eden (ē'dẹn), Richard. b. c1521; d. 1576. English translator. He studied at Cambridge, held a position in the treasury (1544–46), and was appointed to a place in the English treasury of Prince Philip of Spain in 1554, a position which he soon lost, owing to an accusation of heresy. In 1562 he entered the service of a French nobleman, with whom he traveled extensively. Eden's name as a translator is appended to many books on geography, travels, navigation, and the like. Among these are A

Treatyse of the Newe India (1553, a translation of part of Munster's Cosmographia), which is the first intelligible description in English of America, and Decades of the Newe World (1555, mainly a translation of Peter Martyr's work).

Eden, William. See Auckland, 1st Baron.

Edenhall (ē'dən.hôl). Seat of the Musgraves of Cumberland, England, near Penrith.

Edenkoben (ā'dən.kō.bən). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Bavarian Palatinate, situated on the slopes of the Hardt Mountains, ab. 15 mi. SW of Speyer. It is a center of the Palatinate wine trade and has small industries. Above the town are the ruins of the Rietburg castle; in the vicinity is the villa Ludwigshöhe, built in 1846 for the Bavarian royal house. 5,433 (1946).

Edenton (ē'dən.tən). Town in NE North Carolina, county seat of Chowan County, near Albemarle Sound. It is a port for shad and herring fisheries and a marketing, processing, and shipping point for peanuts. Other important crops traded here include cotton, corn, soybeans, tobacco, cantaloupes, and watermelons. It was a major 18th-century shipbuilding center. Settled by Jamestown colonists in 1658, it achieved fame as the site of the first Revolutionary feminine "tea party," held on Oct. 25, 1774. Pop. 4,468 (1950).

Eder (ā'dər), Joseph Maria. b. at Krems, Austria, 1855; d. 1944. Austrian pioneer photochemist. His researches include the introduction, in 1884, of erythrosine for long wave-length sensitization of photographic plates, which for the next 50 years was used in orthochromatic films. He edited the Jahrbuch für Photographie und Reproduktionstechnik (1887–1911) and was research director (1888 et seq.) of the Teaching and Experimental Institute for Photography at Vienna (which became the Graphic Teaching and Experimental Institute in 1889).

EDES (e'ᴛʜes). Name, formed from the initials of Greek words meaning "Greek Democratic National Army," of the second most important (ELAS was first) of the guerrilla groups fighting in Greece during the Axis occupation in World War II. It was organized and led by Napoleon Zervas, and seems to have been at first liberal, though anticommunistic. It lasted from 1943 to 1946, and was always strongest in Epirus and Thessaly. Its internal warfare with ELAS was generally unsuccessful, and toward the end it was forced back to Corfu. Possibly as a result of this warfare, it became more and more rightist, eventually monarchist and strongly nationalistic.

Edessa (ē.des'ə). Ancient name of Urfa.

Edessa. [Also: Edhessa, Vodena; ancient name also Aegae.] Town in N Greece, the capital of the nomos (department) of Pella, situated ab. 48 mi. NW of Salonika. It was formerly the capital of the Macedonian kings. The modern town is a railroad station on the Salonika-Monastir line, and manufactures textiles; tobacco is grown in the vicinity. It is the seat of a bishopric. Philip II of Macedonia was assassinated here in 336 B.C. 15,415 (1951).

Edfelt (ed'felt), Johannes. [Full name, Bo Johannes Edfelt.] b. at Kyrkefalla, Västergötland, Sweden, 1904—. Swedish poet and literary critic. Edfelt went to college in the ancient town of Skara. Later he studied at the University of Uppsala, and worked as a teacher (1931–34). He is the literary critic for the Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter.

Edfu (ed'fō). [Also: Idfu; ancient name, Apollinopolis Magna; Coptic, Atbo.] Town in Upper Egypt, situated near the left bank of the Nile. The celebrated temple of Edfu is one of the most perfect existing examples of an ancient Egyptian religious edifice. It was begun by Ptolemy III Euergetes in 237 B.C. The entrance is a massive double pylon 250 ft. wide and 115 ft. high, from which the strong enclosing wall is carried around the temple. Within the pylon lies the great court with its peristyle of columns. Behind it lies the hypostyle hall, to the rear of which is a second hall with three ranges of four columns, from which opens the double vestibule of the isolated sanctuary, on the passage around which are placed, as was usual, a number of small chambers. The abundant sculptures, though in style mere imitations of the older Pharaonic work, are from their subjects both interesting and instructive. The length of the temple is 450 ft.

Edgar or Eadgar (ed'gär). [Called "the Peaceful."] b. 944; d. July 8, 975. King of England; son of Edmund I (Eadmund) and Aelfgifu. In 957 he was made king of Mercia and Northumbria by nobles dissatisfied with Edwy's rule. He ascended the throne in 959 as successor to his brother Edwy (Eadwig); for some reason, his coronation did not occur until 973. He ruled the whole nation (West Saxons, Northumbrians, and Mercians), and his quiet reign, under his adviser Dunstan, whom he made archbishop of Canterbury, gained for him the surname "the Peaceful." He is said to have ceded Lothian (northern Bernicia) to Kenneth of Scotland. He married twice; Ethelflaed, his first wife, was the mother of Edward, known as the Martyr, who reigned from 975 to 978; Aelfthryth, whom he married in 964, was the mother of Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready), who was on the throne from 978 to 1016. Edgar is said to have received the homage of eight kings soon after his coronation.

Edgar. In Shakespeare's King Lear, the son of the Earl of Gloucester.

Edgar, Sir John. Pseudonym of Sir Richard Steele, under which he conducted the theatrical journal The Theatre from January, 1720, until April, 1720.

Edgar (or Eadgar) Ætheling (ath'ə.ling). [Also, Edgar (or Eadgar) the Ætheling.] b. probably in Hungary, before 1057; d. in the first part of the 12th century. English prince; grandson of Edmund II (Edmund Ironside). In 1066, on the death of Harold, he was chosen by earl Morcar as successor to the English throne, but he relinquished his claim to William I (William the Conqueror) when the latter made it plain that he would fight for the crown. He nevertheless joined (1068, 1069) in two attempts to dethrone William. He went then to Scotland, where his sister; later known as Saint Margaret of Scotland, married Malcolm III, king of Scotland. After 1074 he lived in France, but in 1094 was allied with Malcolm in border warfare against the English in Northumbria. He helped place his nephew Edgar on the Scottish throne in 1097, unseating Donald III. In 1099 he went on the crusade with Robert II, Duke of Normandy; on his return he sided with Robert against Henry I of England but was captured (1106) at Tinchebrai, Normandy, when Henry defeated the barons. He was soon released and lived thereafter in obscurity, dying probably some quarter of a century later.

Edgar Huntly; or, Memoirs of a Sleep-Walker (hunt'li). Epistolary novel by Charles Brockden Brown, published in 1799.

Edgar, Master of Ravenswood (rā'vənz.wůd). See Ravenswood, Edgar, Master of.

Edgartown (ed'gär.toun). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Dukes County, on Martha's Vineyard ab. 74 mi. SE of Boston. Formerly a whaling port, it is now a summer resort. 1,508 (1950).

Edge (ej), Walter Evans. b. at Philadelphia, Nov. 20, 1873—. American journalist, politician, and diplomat. He founded the Atlantic City Daily Press and Atlantic City Evening Union, and served as governor (1917–19, 1944–47) of New Jersey, U.S. senator (1919–29) from New Jersey, and U.S. ambassador (1929–33) to France. He coöperated with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in negotiating the Franco-American accord of July 6, 1931.

Edgecote (ej'kōt). Place in Northamptonshire, England, ab. 17 mi. SW of Northampton. Here the Parliamentary forces under Robin of Redesdale defeated (July 26, 1469) the Royalists under the earl of Pembroke.

Edgefield (ej'fēld). Town in W South Carolina, county seat of Edgefield County, in a cotton-producing region ab. 55 mi. SW of Columbia: railroad junction. 2,518 (1950).

Edge Foreign Banking Act. Act of the U.S. Congress, drafted by Walter Evans Edge and passed in 1919, authorizing federally chartered foreign banking corporations under the control of the Federal Reserve Board to finance foreign trade. The directors must be American citizens and the majority of the stock under American control.

Edge Hill or Edgehill (ej'hil). Ridge in Warwickshire, C England, situated ab. 12 mi. S of Warwick. Here was fought (Oct. 23, 1642) the first battle of the English Civil War, between the Royalists under Charles I and the Parliamentarians under Robert Devereux, 3rd Earl of Essex. The result of the battle was indecisive.

Edge Hill. Unincorporated community in SE Pennsylvania, in Montgomery County near Philadelphia. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 2,681 (1940).

Edgemere (ej'mir). Unincorporated community in N Maryland, in Baltimore County. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 5,698 (1940).

Edgerton (ej'ėr.tọn). City in S Wisconsin, in Rock County ab. 20 mi. SE of Madison: trading, processing, and distributing center for tobacco. 3,507 (1950).

Edgerton, Harold Eugene. b. at Fremont, Neb., April 6, 1903—. American electrical engineer, chiefly known for his pioneering work in the field of stroboscopic photography. He received his B.S. from the University of Nebraska (1925) and his Sc.D. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (1931), serving thereafter (1932 et seq.) as a professor of electrical engineering at the latter institution. In collaboration with James R. Killian, Jr., he is the author of Flash! (1933).

Edgewater (ej'wô.tėr, -wot.ėr). Town in N central Colorado, in Jefferson County: western suburb of Denver. 2,580 (1950).

Edgewater. Borough in NE New Jersey, in Bergen County, on the Hudson River: tapestry manufacturing and automobile assembling plants. 3,952 (1950).

Edgewood (ej'wụd). Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County: eastern suburb of Pittsburgh. 5,292 (1950).

Edgeworth (ej'wėrth), Francis Ysidro. [Original name, Ysidro Francis Edgeworth.] b. at Edgeworthstown, County Longford, Ireland, Feb. 8, 1845; d. at Oxford, England, Feb. 13, 1926. Irish economist; a half-nephew of Maria Edgeworth; noted as an early exponent of strictly formal and mathematical treatment of economic theory. He was professor of political economy at the University of Oxford from 1891 to 1922, and served as first editor from its foundation in 1891 of the Economic Journal and president of the Royal Statistical Society (1912–14). He was the author of New and Old Methods of Ethics (1877), Mathematical Physics, an essay on the application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences (1881), Metretike, or the Method of Measuring Probability and Utility (1887); later contributions, of which there are many, appeared mostly in the learned journals.

Edgeworth, Maria. b. at Black Bourton, Oxfordshire, England, Jan. 1, 1767; d. at Edgeworthstown, County Longford, Ireland, May 22, 1849. English novelist, known especially for her Gothic tales; daughter of Richard Lovell Edgeworth, and aunt of Thomas Lovell Beddoes. She wrote, in conjunction with her father, Essays on Practical Education (1798) and Essay on Irish Bulls (1802). Her chief independent works are Castle Rackrent (1800), Belinda (1801), Moral Tales for Young People (1801), Popular Tales (1804), Tales of Fashionable Life (1809–12), Leonora (1806), The Absentee (1812), Patronage (1814), Ormond (1817), and Helen (1834). She was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, who acknowledged in the preface to Waverly his debt to Miss Edgeworth's novels of Irish life.

Edgeworth, Richard Lovell. b. at Bath, England, May 31, 1744; d. at Edgeworthstown, County Longford, Ireland, June 13, 1817. English author and inventor who made the first attempt at telegraphic communication father of Maria Edgeworth. His attempt at telegraphy is said to have stemmed from a desire to learn the results of horse races as quickly as possible. He also invented a velocipede, a land-measuring machine, sailing carriages, and was able to obtain government approval of a telegraph line between Dublin and Galway (1804). He became a friend of Thomas Day (1748–89) and Erasmus Darwin; visited Rousseau (1771) and presented his son to him (the son had been brought up according to child-raising precepts derived from Rousseau's Émile); enrolled (1798) a corps at Edgeworthstown against the Irish insurgents who attempted in that year (with French help) to achieve Irish independence. In addition to works on mechanical subjects and on education, he collaborated with his daughter Maria on Essays on Practical Education (1798), a modification of Rousseau's theories, and on Essay on Irish Bulls (1802).

Edhem Pasha (ed.hem' pä.shä'). b. 1851; d. 1909. Turkish army officer. He led (1877) a brigade at the siege of Pleven, and during the Greco-Turkish war (1897) was commanding general of the Turkish army. He was named minister of war in 1909.

Edhessa (e'тнe.sä). See Edessa.

Edib (e.dib'), Halidé. [Married name, Adnan-Adívar.] b. at Constantinople (Istanbul), 1884—. Turkish author, teacher, and feminine emancipationist. Active in the Young Turk movement, she joined (1919) the Nationalist Party, supported Mustafa Kemal's cause, and was an army officer (1922) in the war against Greece. Fleeing Turkey when she came under suspicion of organizing opposition to Kemal, she lectured in American and Indian universities, and later returned to her native country, where she became professor of English literature at the University of Istanbul. She is the author of Memoirs of Halidé Edib, The Turkish Ordeal, Turkey Faces West, Inside India (1937), and The History of English Literature (3 vols., 1940, 1944, 1948).

Edict by the King of Prussia (prush'ạ). Satire by Benjamin Franklin, published in 1773.

Edict of Amboise (äṅ.bwâz'). See Amboise, Edict of.

Edict of Milan (mi.lan'). See Milan, Edict of.

Edict of Nantes (nants, näṅt). See Nantes, Edict of.

Edict of Nemours (nẹ.mör'). See Nemours, Edict of.

Edict of Restitution. See Restitution, Edict of.

Edie Ochiltree (ē'di ō'ċhil.trē, ō'kil-, oċh'il-, ok'il-). See Ochiltree, Edie.

Edina (ẹ.dī'nạ). Village in SE Minnesota, in Hennepin County, near Minneapolis. 9,744 (1950).

Edinburg (ed'in.bėrg). Town in S central Indiana, in Bartholomew and Johnson counties, on the Blue River ab. 30 mi. S of Indianapolis. Manufactures include furniture and veneers. 3,283 (1950).

Edinburg. City in S Texas, county seat of Hidalgo County, SW of Corpus Christi: shipping center for fruits and vegetables, with a large car-icing plant. 12,383 (1950).

Edinburgh (ed'in.bur.ō). [Older spellings: Edinborow, Edinbro: Middle English, Edenborow; earlier Edwinesburch, Edwinesburg; popularly called "Auld Reekie."] City, royal burgh, seaport, and commercial, industrial, administrative, and cultural center of Scotland, in S Scotland, in Midlothian, situated on the S bank of the Firth of Forth ab. 42 mi. E of Glasgow, ab. 393 mi. N of London by rail. It is the capital of Scotland and of various departments of government, the military headquarters of Scotland, and the county seat of Midlothian. Its port, the parliamentary burgh of Leith, is included now within the limits of Edinburgh, and is the second-ranking port in Scotland. Leith has a shipbuilding industry and extensive imports. Edinburgh is an important publishing and literary center, having many trades associated with the industry. Other industries include brassworks, rubber factories, breweries, distilleries, and machinery manufactures. The city is noted for its picturesque situation on ridges near Calton Hill and Arthur's Seat. It grew up around Edinburgh Castle, dating from the 7th century, built in the middle of the city on a rock which falls 270 ft. on three sides. Edinburgh Castle was captured by Edward I in 1296 and remained in English hands until it was recaptured (1314) in the name of Robert I of Scotland (Robert Bruce) by Thomas Randolph, 1st Earl of Moray, and 30 men who surprised the English garrison. The exterior of the castle has been greatly modified, but much of the interior remains as of old, including some of the royal apartments and the Romanesque chapel. James VI of Scotland (later James I of England) was born in the castle in 1566. Here, in the castle, are preserved the royal regalia of Scotland. Adjoining the castle is the Scottish National War Memorial, containing a shrine and a gallery of honor which has a barrel-vaulted roof supported by octagonal columns, forming 12 bays, one for each of the Scottish regiments. The Parliament House is now occupied by the Supreme Law Courts. It is a large Renaissance building, with porticoes of Ionic columns over an arcaded and rusticated basement. The Parliament House includes the Advocate's Library. The great hall has a handsome roof of oak, and contains interesting portraits and statues. Edinburgh is the seat of a university, founded in 1582 by James VI. Also of note are the ruins of Holyrood Abbey, founded in 1128 by David I, and the adjoining Holyroodhouse, or Holyrood Palace, still used as a royal residence. Holyroodhouse has many associations with Mary, Queen of Scots. It was here that David Rizzio was murdered by the Scottish lords at the instigation of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley. Rizzio and Darnley are buried at Holyrood Abbey. The palace contains a picture gallery notable for its collection of 110 portraits of Scottish kings, painted in the 17th century by a Dutch artist. It was in this picture gallery that Prince Charlie (Charles Edward Stuart, the "Young Pretender" to the English throne) gave a ball, in 1745, while Edinburgh Castle held out against him. The National Gallery of Scotland, in Edinburgh, contains a valuable art collection, one of its best-known paintings being Christ in the House of Mary and Martha by Jan Vermeer. Saint Giles's Church (the cathedral) was founded in the 12th century, but the present structure is of the 15th. The interior has high nave-pillars and Gothic pointed arches. The transept is Norman, with massive piers supporting the tower. The fine recessed and sculptured west doorway is modern. Saint Mary's Episcopal Cathedral, the work of Sir George Gilbert Scott, was completed in 1879. It is a spacious structure in the Early English style, with an imposing central spire 295 ft. high. Other interesting structures in Edinburgh are the Scott monument, the Royal Institution, John Knox's house, Moray House (twice occupied by Cromwell) in the summer house of which the Treaty of Union between England and Scotland was signed, and various charitable and educational institutions. Edinburgh is famous for its colleges and schools. The city was fortified by the Northumbrian king Edwin (whence its name Edwinesburg) c617, succeeded Perth as the Scottish capital in 1437, was taken and sacked by the English in 1544 and again (by Cromwell) in 1650, and was occupied by the Young Pretender in 1745. Fragments of the old town wall still remain. Edinburgh is famous in the literary history of the last half of the 18th and first half of the 19th century, through its connection with Hume, Robertson, Dugald Stewart, Adam Smith, Burns, Scott, John Wilson (Christopher North), the Edinburgh Review, and others. It is often called the "modern Athens" or "Athens of the North," both from its topography and as a seat of learning, also "Queen of the North." 466,770 (1951).

Edinburgh, Duke of. [Title of Philip Mountbatten; additional titles, Earl of Merioneth, Baron Greenwich.] b. on the Greek island of Corfu, Ionian Islands, June 10, 1921—. Greek and Danish prince and English duke; husband of Queen Elizabeth II of England (who was Princess Elizabeth when he married her on Nov. 20, 1947). Queen Victoria was his great-great-grandmother, and Christian IX of Denmark his great-grandfather. His parents are the late Prince Andrew of Greece, and Princess Alice, sister of Viscount Mountbatten, former governor general of India. His grandfather, Prince Louis of Battenberg, became a British subject, an admiral in the Royal Navy, and changed the family name to its present one, Mountbatten, which is an English version of Battenberg. Philip's early education was obtained at Paris at the American Kindergarten, and at an American school at St.-Cloud, France. At the age of eight he was taken to England, continuing his education at the Cheam Preparatory School in Surrey, at the Salem School in Baden, Germany (where his failure to be properly impressed by the Nazi salute is said to have brought a sudden end to his stay), and in Scotland at the Gordonstoun School, near Moray Firth. In 1939 he began his naval studies at the Dartmouth (Devonshire) Naval College, the English equivalent of the U.S. naval academy at Annapolis. During World War II he saw sea service in the Mediterranean, first in 1940 as a midshipman on the Ramillies, in 1941 on the Valiant, which clashed with the Italian fleet at Cape Matapan, and in 1942 as sublieutenant and lieutenant on the Wallace. He was transferred to the Pacific in 1944 as first lieutenant on an English destroyer, and in September, 1945, he witnessed the signing of the Japanese surrender at Tokyo Bay. On Feb. 28, 1947, he became a British subject and also a commoner (giving up, as is required by British law, all his Greek and Danish titles). On July 9 of the same year, his engagement to Princess Elizabeth was officially announced. The day before the wedding, King George VI made him Duke of Edinburgh, the title by which he is now known, and also Earl of Merioneth and Baron Greenwich; on the same day he also made him a member of the Order of the Garter (founded by Edward III in 1348), and gave him the title of His Royal Highness (which makes him an equal of the dukes of Gloucester, Kent, and Windsor). He is also a field marshal, admiral of the fleet, and air chief marshal.

Edinburgh, Duke of. A title of Alfred, Prince.

Edinburgh, University of. Scottish seat of learning, founded in 1582 by James VI. It comprises the faculties of arts, science, divinity, law, and medicine. Its library contains over 400,000 volumes. Conjointly with the universities of St. Andrews, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, it formerly sent three members to Parliament.

Edinburgh Review. Literary and political review, founded at Edinburgh in 1802 by Francis Jeffrey, Sydney Smith, Henry Peter Brougham, and others.

Edinburghshire (ed'in.bur.ō.shir). Former name of Midlothian.

Edinger (ā'ding.ėr), Ludwig. b. at Worms, Germany, April 13, 1855; d. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, Jan. 26, 1918. German neurologist. He was assistant to A. Kussmaul (1877) and to F. Riegel (1880) at Giessen, where he became (1881) privatdocent. He lectured on neurology (1883–88) at Frankfort on the Main. He became the head of a special neurological department at the Senckenberg Institute at Frankfort, and full professor of neurology at the newly founded University of Frankfort. He described (1885) with C. F. O. Westphal, an accessory nucleus of the oculomotor nerve (the pupilloconstrictor center, known as the Edinger-Westphal nucleus).

Edington (ed'ing.tọn). [Former name, Ethandun.] Village in SW England, in Wiltshire, ab. 30 mi. by road SE of Bristol. It is noted as the site of a victory of Alfred over the Danes c879 A.D.

Edirne (e.dēr'ne). [Also: Edirneh, Edreneh; former name, Adrianople.] Il (province or vilayet) in European Turkey, NW of the Sea of Marmara: tobacco, fruit, and barley. Capital, Edirne; area, 2,920 sq. mi.; pop. 221,125 (1950).

Edirne. [Also: Edirneh, Edreneh; former name, Adrianople; ancient name, Uscudama; Roman, Adrianopolis, Hadrianopolis.] City in NW European Turkey, the capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Edirne, on the Maritsa River, near the borders of Greece and Bulgaria. A place of great strategic and commercial importance, it was founded by the Roman emperor Hadrian c125 A.D., on the site of an older city; it was the residence of the sultans from 1361 to 1453. It was besieged by the Avars in 586, stormed by the Bulgarians in 922, entered by the Crusaders in 1189, taken by the Turks in 1361, taken by the Russians under Dibich-Zabalkanski in 1829, again occupied by the Russians in January, 1878, and besieged by the Bulgarians in 1912. Baldwin I (of Jerusalem) was taken prisoner at Adrianople by the Bulgars in 1205. Its most notable building is the 16th-century mosque of the sultan Suleiman II (Suleiman the Magnificent). It is preceded by a fine portico of monolithic columns, and flanked by four slender fluted minarets ab. 200 ft. high. The span of the dome (106 ft.) is greater than that of Santa Sophia at Istanbul; it rests on four colossal porphyry columns. Pop. ab. 30,000.

Edison (ed'i.sọn), Charles. b. at Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N.J., Aug. 3, 1890—. American business executive and public official, U.S. secretary of the navy (1939–40); son of Thomas Alva Edison. He attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and later joined his father's ventures, becoming president and director of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and a director of its various affiliates. After serving with the National Recovery Administration and the Federal Housing Administration, he served (1937–39) as assistant secretary of the navy and as secretary of the navy from 1939 to 1940. He was Democratic governor of New Jersey from 1941 to 1944.

Edison, Thomas Alva. b. at Milan, Ohio, Feb. 11, 1847; d. at Menlo Park, N.J., Oct. 18, 1931. American inventor. He was born of a Dutch father and a Scottish mother. He had no formal education worthy of the name, his schooling being limited to 12 weeks at a Port Huron (Mich.) public school, but during his life he took out over a thousand patents for different inventions. At the age of 12 he was selling newspapers on the Grand Trunk Railway, on its line into Detroit. In his early teens he was a telegraph operator in various parts of Canada and the U.S. He began his inventing career in 1868 with an electrical vote-recording machine. During 1877–78 he invented a carbon telephone transmitter, and in 1877, a phonograph or speaking machine, which is probably one of the most famous products of his inventive mind. He is said to have given light to the world by his invention in 1879 (Oct. 21) of an incandescent lamp. In 1883 he took out a patent for "the Edison effect," which allows electricity to pass from a filament to a metal plate inside an incandescent lamp. In 1885 he devised a telegraphic system for communicating with moving ships and trains. Among his other inventions are the automatic telegraph repeater, the quadruplex and printing telegraph, which he soon followed with the sextuplex transmission method, the kinetoscope, which, like his phonograph, led to new ways of living and making a living, and spreading thought and news, the cinematograph, the electric pen, the microphone, the "Ediphone" for office dictation, the alkaline storage (the Edison) battery, and the mimeograph. During World War I he devoted his energies to working on naval and chemical problems connected with the national military effort. By April, 1928, he had been granted 1,033 patents. The French government made him a chevalier, and later an officer and a commander, of the Legion of Honor. Union College, Princeton, and the University of the State of New York gave him honorary degrees. It has been pointed out by some authorities that Edison was not a great scientist (in fact, not a scientist at all, by ordinary standards), but rather a man who had an amazing practical genius for compelling science to serve immediate utilitarian ends. The popular American saying that genius is "99 percent perspiration and 1 percent inspiration" has been attributed to him (and whether or not he actually coined it, the fact remains that it does certainly state the manner of his own dogged approach to the problems he faced). His life has been the subject of many biographies and at least two films have been made about him.

Edison Electric Institute. Organization founded in 1933 for the purpose of scientific research and operating methods in the production, transmission, and distribution of electricity. Its membership is composed of operating and holding companies. The organization maintains headquarters at New York and issues a monthly Bulletin and Electrical Research Statistics (monthly).

Edissa (e.dis'ạ). See Esther.

Edisto (ed'is.tō). River in South Carolina, formed by the union of a north and a south branch, and flowing into the sea by two channels ab. 25 mi. SW of Charleston. Length, over 150 mi.

Edith (ē'dith). [Also, Eadgyth.] d. at Winchester, England, Dec. 19, 1075. Anglo-Saxon queen. She was the daughter of Godwine, Earl of Wessex, and married Edward the Confessor in 1045, receiving Winchester and Exeter as her morning gift, i.e., the gift to the bride on the morning following consummation of the marriage. She is said to have planned the murder of Gospatric, one of the king's thanes, in 1064, at the instigation of her brother Tostig, Earl of Northumberland. She founded a church at Wilton, which was consecrated in 1065; and on the death (1066) of her husband retired to Winchester, in the quiet possession of which she was allowed to remain by William the Conqueror.

Edith. One of the principal characters in Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher's The Bloody Brother.

Edith. Maid of Lorn in Sir Walter Scott's poem The Lord of the Isles.

Edith Bellenden (bel'ẹn.dẹn). See Bellenden, Edith.

Edith Ronne Land (ron'i). That portion of Antarctica extending from the base of the Palmer Peninsula SE to Coats Land. It was discovered by the Ronne Antarctic Research Expedition (1947–48), under the leadership of Commander Finn Ronne.

Edith Swan-neck (swon'nek). fl. 11th century. Mistress of Harold II, king of the English, and mother, probably, of some of his children. By her aid the mutilated body of Harold was identified after the battle of Hastings (1066). She appears as a greatly idealized character in romance and poetry.

Edman (ed'mạn), Irwin. b. at New York, Nov. 28, 1896—. American philosopher and writer. He was graduated (B.A., 1917; Ph.D., 1920) from Columbia, where he was a lecturer (1918–20), instructor (1920–24), assistant professor (1925–31), associate professor (1931–35), and professor (1935 et seq.) of philosophy. His works include Human Traits and Their Social Significance (1920), Richard Kane Looks at Life (1926), Four Ways of Philosophy (1937), Philosopher's Holiday (1938), Arts and the Man (1939), and Philosopher's Quest (1947).

Edmands (ed'mạndz), John. b. at Framingham, Mass., Feb. 1, 1820; d. Oct. 17, 1915. American librarian. He was assistant (1851–56) in the Yale College Library, librarian (1856–1915) of the Mercantile Library at Philadelphia, and originator of a book classification system. His works include Subjects for Debates, with References to Authorities (1847), Explanation of the New System of Classification Devised for the Mercantile Library of Philadelphia (1878), Reading Notes on Luther (1883), Reading Notes on Wycliffe (1884), and The Evolution of Congregationalism (1916).

Edmer or Eadmer (ed'mėr). b. c1060; d. c1124. English monk and historian, of Canterbury. He was elected (1120) archbishop of St. Andrews through recommendation of Alexander I, king of Scotland, but the king would not allow Edmer to be consecrated by English primates. Edmer wrote a chronicle of contemporary events, Historia novorum, covering the period c1066–1122, and a Life of Saint Anselm, Anselm being one of his close friends.

Edmond (ed'mọnd). City in C Oklahoma, in Oklahoma County: trading center for an agricultural and oil-producing area. It is the seat of Central State College. 6,086 (1950).

Edmond Dantès (ed.môṅ däṅ.tes). See Dantès, Edmond.

Edmonds (ed'mọndz), Walter Dumaux. b. at Boonville, N.Y., July 15, 1903—. American novelist and short-story writer. He is the author of Rome Haul (1929), The Big Barn (1930), Erie Water (1933), Mostly Canallers (1934), Drums Along the Mohawk (1936), Chad Hanna (1940), The Matchlock Gun (1941), Wilderness Clearing (1944), In the Hands of the Senecas (1947), The Wedding Journey (1947), and other books.

Edmonton (ed'mọn.tọn). Capital of Alberta, Canada, on the North Saskatchewan River. It is the largest city in the province and the ninth largest in Canada; its growth has been extremely rapid. The city is the entryway to the vast Canadian northland and is the S terminus of the Alaska Highway. It is the site of one of the largest airports in the country and of numerous industries. The University of Alberta is situated here. The main line of the Canadian National Railway passes through the city. Pop., including suburbs, 173,075 (1951).

Edmonton. Municipal borough in SE England, in Middlesex, ab. 8 mi. N of Liverpool Street station, London. 104,244 (1951).

Edmund (ed'mund) or Eadmund, Saint. [Called Edmund the Martyr.] b. c840; killed by the Danes, 870. King (855–870) of East Anglia. Details of his life are legendary. He is supposed to have been a Saxon, born at Nuremberg, son of King Alkmund, and to have been adopted by Offa, whom he succeeded as king. In 870 he met the Danes at Hoxne and was defeated by them, dying on the field or, according to one story, being bound to a tree and beheaded, or shot with arrows, when he refused to forswear Christianity or acknowledge Danish overlordship.

Edmund, Saint. [Called Edmund Rich (rich) and Edmund of Pontigny (pon.tēn'yē, pôṅ.tē.nyē).] b. at Abingdon, England, Nov. 20, probably between 1170 and 1175; d. at Soisy, France, Nov. 16, 1240. Archbishop of Canterbury. He was the son of one Edward or Reinald Rich, studied and later lectured at Oxford and Paris, and in 1233 was appointed archbishop of Canterbury. He came forward as a champion of the national church against papal encroachment; but, finding himself unable to resist the appointment of 300 Italians to as many English benefices, abandoned his archiepiscopal see in 1240 and took refuge in the monastery of Pontigny, in France.

He died at Soisy, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health, and was canonized in 1247. His feast day is observed November 16.

Edmund. In Shakespeare's King Lear, a bastard son of the Earl of Gloucester.

Edmund or Eadmund I. [Called Edmund the Magnificent and the Deed-doer.] b. c922; killed at Pucklechurch, Gloucestershire, England, May 26, 946. King of the West Saxons and Mercians. He was the son of Edward the Elder, and half-brother of Athelstan, whom he succeeded in 940. He had fought at Brunanbuth for Athelstan, but after he became king he lost a large part of his kingdom to invaders from Ireland, but won it back in 944 or 945. He subdued Cumbria (945), which he bestowed on Malcolm I of Scotland. He was killed by a robber named Liofa while keeping the feast of Saint Augustine of Canterbury at Pucklechurch, Gloucestershire. The robber having entered the hall unbidden, the king ordered a cup-bearer to remove him, and when the robber resisted came to the cup-bearer's relief. In the struggle that ensued he was stabbed to death with a dagger. Edmund was married twice, to Ælfgifu, the mother of Edwy and Edgar, and to Ethelflæd.

Edmund or Eadmund II. [Called Edmund Ironside.] b. probably c989; d. probably at London, Nov. 30, 1016. King of the West Saxons. He was the son of Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready), whom he succeeded in April, 1016. After many victories over the Danes, he was defeated in a bloody battle at Assandun (Ashington) in Essex by Canute, with whom he was forced to divide his kingdom, provision being made, it is said, that the survivor should be sole king. He retained Wessex, Essex, East Anglia, and London, while Canute received Northumberland and Mercia. His death, which was probably due to natural causes, has been attributed by later tradition to poison administered by Edric Streona, his brother-in-law, at the instance of Canute. After his death Canute took possession of the whole kingdom.

Edmunds (ed'mundz), Albert Joseph. b. at Tottenham, near London, Nov. 21, 1857; d. Dec. 17, 1941. American librarian and Buddhist scholar. He came to the U.S. in 1885, and was cataloguer (1891–1936) for the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. His works include Marvellous Birth of the Buddhas (1899), Hymns of the Faith (1902), Buddhist and Christian Gospels (1902), A Dialogue Between Two Saviors (5th ed., 1931), Lucy Edmunds (1859–1935) in the Two Worlds (1935), and Leaves from the Gospel of Mark (1936).

Edmunds, George Franklin. b. near Richmond, Vt., Feb. 1, 1828; d. at Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 27, 1919. American lawyer and legislator, author of the act (1882) making polygamy illegal in U.S. territories and chief framer of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of 1890. He studied law privately in Vermont and at Washington, D.C., was admitted to the bar in 1849 and established his practice at Richmond, later moving it to Burlington. He served (1854–59) in the state legislature, and was speaker from 1857 to 1859; he was (1861–62) a member of the state senate and was president pro tempore; and in 1864 was appointed special counsel by Secretary of State Seward for the purpose of securing the extradition of the Confederate raiders on St. Albans, Vt. A Republican, he went to the U.S. Senate in 1866 to fill an unexpired term, and on the day (April 6) after being sworn in cast the deciding vote for the Civil Rights Bill which carried it over Johnson's veto. He was affiliated with the Radical Republicans during the Reconstruction period; in 1867, he was named chairman of the committee which arranged the rules of procedure for Johnson's trial. He served in the Senate until his retirement (1891), and was chairman of the committee on the judiciary (1872–91, with the exception of 1879–81). He secured the act of Jan. 29, 1877, which set up an electoral commission to supervise the disputed Tilden-Hayes contest of 1876 and was responsible for the Electoral Count Act of 1887. During his career in the Senate, he achieved a reputation with the law cases he handled before U.S. circuit courts and the U.S. Supreme Court. One of his outstanding cases, in which he won his argument against the unconstitutionality of the income tax, was Pollock v. The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company (decided 1895).

Edmunds, John. Felon, the principal character of the tale "The Convict's Return," in Charles Dickens's Pickwick Papers.

Edmundston (ed'mun.stǫn). County town of Madawaska County, New Brunswick, Canada, situated on the St. John River, ab. 190 mi. from the city of St. John: paper mills. The main line of the Canadian National Railways from Quebec passes through the town as does the main highway from C Canada. 10,753 (1951).

Edna (ed'nạ). Town in S Texas, county seat of Jackson County, NE of Corpus Christi, in a petroleum-producing region: residential community. 3,855 (1950).

Edo (ā'dō). [Also, Bini.] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting an area in the vicinity of the town of Benin in S Nigeria. Their population is estimated at ab. 500,000 (based on P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). They are divided into 19 subgroups including the Bini (also called Edo), Esa, Sobo, Isoko, and 15 other peoples known as Kukuruku. The Bini kingdom has its capital at Benin, which is also known as Edo. The Edo have exogamous patrilineal clans. They practice hoe agriculture, and, except in the case of the Sobo and the Isoko, their principal crop is yams.

Edo. A former name of Tokyo.

Edom (ē'dọm). [Also: Idumea, Seir.] In Biblical geography, the region in the lowland S of the Dead Sea, bounded on the W by the desert of Paran, and on the NE by the mountains of Moab: the modern Wadi el Araba and the surrounding mountainous country, extending S to the Gulf of Aqaba, and including the seaports Elath (Aqaba) and Eziongeber. The most important cities of this rugged barren territory were Bozrah, the capital, Maon, Phunon, and Sela, afterward called Petra, from which the whole district was named Arabia Petraea. The Edomites were descendants of Esau, the brother of Jacob, and were, therefore, designated as "brothers of Israel" (Num. xx. 14, Deut. ii. 4, 8), but became later the hereditary enemies of Israel; Saul attacked them (1 Sam. xiv. 47) and subdued them (2 Sam. viii. 13). After the division of the Israelitish kingdom they came under the supremacy of Judah, but made frequent and sometimes successful attempts to regain their independence. They were for the last time subjected by Uzziah about the middle of the 8th century B.C. Tiglath-Pileser III of Assyria made (c743) Kaus Malik, king of Edom, tributary. Esarhaddon (680–668) mentions Kaus Gabri of Edom among the tributary kings. In the time of Nebuchadnezzar II (605–562) Edom, still ruled by a king, was attacked by the Babylonians. During the captivity in Babylonia of the Judeans, the Edomites took possession of portions of Judea, while their own territory was occupied by Arabic tribes, the Nabathaeans, and was called, after the city of Petra, Arabia Petraea. The Hasmonean king John Hyrcanus took Dora and Morissa and forced the Edomites to accept Judaism c130 B.C. Afterward they became the rulers of the Jews in the person of Antipater and his descendants the Herodians. The last king of this race, Herod Agrippa II, died c100 A.D., but the name of Edom vanishes from history with the fall of Judea.

Édouard (ā.dwär). One of the central characters in Les Faux-monnayeurs (1926; Eng. trans., The Counterfeiters) by the French writer André Gide. In some respects, for instance his being a novelist engaged in writing a novel about the theme of counterfeiting, he may be taken to represent Gide.

Edred or Eadred (ed'rẹd). d. at Frome, England, Nov. 23, 955. King of England; youngest son of Edward the Elder and Eadgifu, and brother of Edmund I, whom he succeeded in 946. His government was controlled by his mother and Saint Dunstan; his reign was marked by revolts in Northumbria.

Edrei (ed'rē.ī). In the Old Testament, the capital of Og, king of Bashan. Near it Og was defeated by the Israelites. The city was with the territory assigned to the tribe of Manasseh. Josh. xiii. 31.

Edremit (e.dre.mēt'). [Also: Edremid; Biblical name, Adramyttium; Greek, Adramyti.] Town in W Turkey near the head of the Gulf of Edremit, an arm of the Aegean Sea, ab. 135 mi. SW of Istanbul: a trading center served by a railway and two highways. Olive oil, produced in several pressing plants, is the chief export. Pop. ab. 12,000.

Edremit, Gulf of. [Former name, Gulf of Adramyttium.] Arm of the Aegean Sea, on the W coast of Turkey, N of Mytilene. It separates the mainland of Turkey from the island of Mytilene, which belongs to Greece. Length, ab. 50 mi.; width, ab. 15 mi.

Edreneh (e.dre.ne'). See Edirne.

Edric or Eadric Streona (ed'rik strā'o.nä). Put to death by Canute, 1017. English nobleman, ealdorman of Mercia, chief adviser of Etheldred II (Ethelred the Unready). He married Ethelred's daughter, but his loyalties seem to have been with the Danes. He dissuaded both Ethelred and his son Edmund II from fighting against the Danes, and when Edmund did meet Canute at Assandun (Ashington) Edric's treachery caused the English to be defeated. It is also said that he poisoned Edmund. Canute made Edric earl of Mercia, but had him killed rather than risk his treachery.

Edrinus (ed'ri.nus), Lacus. Latin name of Idro, Lake.

Edrisi (e.drē'sē). See Idrisi.

Edschmid (āt'shmit), Kasimir. [Original name, Eduard Schmid.] b. at Darmstadt, Germany, Oct. 5, 1890—. German novelist, one of the most outspoken of the German expressionists. His Über den Expressionismus in der Literatur (1918) set forth his theories, which he has exemplified in numerous narratives including Das rasende Leben (1916), Die achatnen Kugeln (1920), Lord Byron; Roman einer Leidenschaft (1929; Eng. trans., Lord Byron; the Story of a Passion, 1930), and Afrika nackt und angezogen (1929).

Edstrom (ed'strom), David. b. at Hvetlanda, Sweden, March 21, 1873; d. Aug. 12, 1938. American sculptor, best known for his psychological sculptures and portraits. He studied at the Royal Academy of Fine arts, Stockholm, as well as in Italy, France, and the U.S., to which he had come in 1880. To save money enough to study, he worked in factories and at odd jobs, then earned his passage to Europe by stoking coal. His sculpture has been exhibited widely in Europe and the U.S. Among his better-known works are Fear, Pride, Envy, Caliban, The Cry of Poverty, the busts of Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden, Princess Patricia of Connaught, and the statue H. M. Whittier. He also wrote The Testament of Caliban, an autobiography, and articles on politics, art, and other topics for magazines and newspapers.

Edström (ed'strēm), Sigfrid. [Full name, Johannes Sigfrid Edström.] b. at Morlanda, Sweden, Nov. 21, 1870—. Swedish businessman, known for his leadership in international business and sports organizations. He was president of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, of the International Olympic Committee, and honorary president of the International Chamber of Commerce. He was employed (1893-97) by U.S. electrical manufacturing concerns, including the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Company and the General Electric Company, directed tramway companies at Zurich, Switzerland (1897–1900) and Göteborg, Sweden (1900–03), served (1903–33) as president of the Asea Electric Company, and was a director of numerous electrical and steel firms. He was a member of the American Institute of Electric Engineers and the Institute of Electrical Engineers (London), and was (1934) chairman of the Swedish Employers Association.

Education, United States Office of. Governmental agency established on March 2, 1867, by Congress, becoming in 1869 a bureau in the Department of the Interior. Its purpose is to collect, and to make available, statistics and various types of information dealing with schools and to make surveys of school systems, both state and national. These surveys, of which more than 200 have been made, include grade and high schools, colleges, universities, and Negro and land-grant colleges. Its chief publication is the Biennial Survey of Education, and its library, limited to educational works, is the largest of its kind in the country. Its head, appointed by the President, is called a commissioner, an office that has been held by Henry Barnard (the first one), John Eaton, William T. Harris, Elmer Ellsworth Brown (long associated with New York University), Philander P. Claxton, and George F. Zook.

Education of Henry Adams (hen'ri ad'ąmz), The. Autobiography of Henry Adams, privately printed in 1907 and posthumously published in 1918. It delineates the conflict which he felt between the individual and an impersonal, highly mechanized society. Adams interweaves portions of his personal history (told in the third person) with an analysis of lines of historical force drawn between the unity, as Adams conceived it, of the 13th century and the multiplicity of his own age. The work presents the author's theory of the law of acceleration in historical development. Some of the ideas are set forth in the earlier Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres (1904).

Edward or Eadward or Eadweard (ed'wąrd). [Called Edward the Elder.] d. at what is now Farndon, Northamptonshire, England, 924. King of the West Saxons; son of Alfred the Great, whom he succeeded in 901. He defeated his cousin Ethelwold, who disputed his title to the throne. On the death of his sister Ethelfleda (Elfleda), the widow of Ethelred, ealdorman of Mercia, he incorporated Mercia (which had long acknowledged the overlordship of the West Saxon kings) with Wessex. He completed the conquest of the Danelaw, begun by him with Ethelfleda's aid earlier, conquered East Anglia and Essex, and received the submission of Strathclyde and all the Scots. On this Scottish submission (denied later by the Scots) was based the claim of later English kings to Scotland. At his death he ruled Wessex, Kent, and Sussex by inheritance; Mercia, Essex, and East Anglia by conquest; and Northumberland, Wales, Scotland, and Strathclyde as overlord. He was succeeded by Æthelstan, his son by Ecgwyn; two sons by Eadgifu, his third wife, Edmund I and Edred, later reigned.

Edward or Eadward. [Called Edward the Martyr.] b. probably in 963; murdered March 18, 978. King of the West Saxons; son of Edgar, whom he succeeded in 975, and Ethelflæd. He was elected by the witan through the influence of Saint Dunstan, primate of England, in spite of the measures taken by his stepmother, Elfrida, to secure the crown for her son Ethelred. He was murdered by her order, according to tradition, and was succeeded by his stepbrother, Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready). His youth and popularity led to his recognition as a martyr as early as 1001.

Edward or Eadward. [Called Edward the Confessor.] b. at what is now Islip, Oxfordshire, England, c1004; d. Jan. 5, 1066. King of the West Saxons; son of Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready) and Emma of Normandy. He lived chiefly in Normandy during the Danish supremacy, and was elected to the throne of his father through the influence of Godwin, Earl of Wessex, on the death of Harthacnut, in 1042. He married Edith (Edgitha), daughter of Godwin, in 1045. Edward chose as chief advisers a number of Frenchmen and thus came into conflict with Godwin's power. His appointment of Robert of Jumièges as Archbishop of Canterbury, after the regular election of Godwin's relative Ælfric, caused a break with Godwin, and when, soon after, Dover offered resistance to Edward's brother-in-law Eustace II of Boulogne, Edward ordered Godwin to punish the town. This Godwin refused to do and, Edward threatening to try him for an old alleged crime, Godwin and his sons fled to France and Ireland. The next year (1052) Godwin raised a force and invaded England; Edward lacked support and restored Godwin to favor. He and his son Harold after him became the king's ministers while Edward applied himself to religious study. When his favorite, Tostig, Godwin's son, was faced with revolt in Northumbria in 1065, Edward was forced to submit to Tostig's removal. This and the realization that a struggle over the succession to the English throne among Harold, Harold III (Harold Haardraade) of Norway, Edgar Ætheling, and William of Normandy was due to break probably hastened his death. He died without issue, and was succeeded by his wife's brother Harold, whose title was disputed by William, Duke of Normandy. The so-called Laws of Edward the Confessor, compiled in 1070, were made from sworn statements of 12 men of each shire. He was canonized in 1161.

Edward. [Titles: 1st Duke of Cornwall and Prince of Wales, Prince of Aquitaine and Gascony; called the Black Prince; occasionally known also as Edward IV and Edward of Woodstock.] b. at Woodstock, England, July 15, 1330; d. at Westminster (now part of London), June 8, 1376. Eldest son of Edward III and Philippa of Hainaut. He was made (1333) Earl of Chester and became (1337) Duke of Cornwall, the first man in England to hold a dukedom. In 1346 he fought well in the victory at Crécy, and in 1347 at the siege of Calais. In 1355 and 1356 he led raiding expeditions out of Gascony, culminating in the brilliant victory (Sept. 19, 1356) at Poitiers, where King John II of France was captured; next year Edward led him in triumph through London. In 1361 he married Joan of Kent, a granddaughter of Edward I; their only son later ruled England as Richard II. Edward was given (July, 1363) all the English possessions in southern France and was made Prince of Aquitaine. He took up residence in France, but his preference for Englishmen in making appointments antagonized the French nobles despite Edward's many attempts to win them over. Pedro the Cruel of Castile and León, deposed by Henry of Trastamara, won Edward over to his plan of regaining his crown, and in 1367 Edward advanced into Spain at the head of an army. At Navarrete (Nájera) in April he defeated Bertrand du Guesclin and put Pedro back on the throne. During the summer he contracted a disease and returned with his army to France. His attempt to recoup by a special tax financial losses suffered in the Spanish adventure met with the resistance of the barons, who appealed to the French king at Paris. Edward refused to be ruled by the French, whereupon the king, Charles V, declared forfeit all the English lands in France. Fighting broke out and the Black Prince took Limoges (1369) and massacred the inhabitants, but, finding himself too ill to sit in the saddle, gave the defense of Gascony into the hands of his brother John of Gaunt, and returned to England. There he found it necessary to oppose the Lancastrian policies, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, having become in the old age of Edward III the great political power in England. Edward rallied to his side the clerical party, who were opposed by Lancaster, his aim principally being to insure the accession of his son Richard to the throne.

Edward I (of England). [Called Edward Longshanks.] b. at Westminster (now part of London), June 17 or 18, 1239; d. at Burgh-on-the-Sands, near Carlisle, England, July 7, 1307. King of England from 1272 to 1307. He was the son of Henry III and Eleanor of Provence. In 1254 he married Eleanor of Castile, half sister of Alfonso X of Castile. He took an active part in the struggle between his father and the barons, inflicting a decisive defeat on their leader, Simon de Montfort, at Evesham in 1265. He engaged (1270–72) in the seventh Crusade, and was returning from the Holy Land when he heard of his accession to the throne. He returned slowly, visiting his lands in Gascony, and reaching England in 1274, in which year he was crowned. In 1277 he began the conquest of Wales, which had become practically independent during the barons' wars, and in 1284, after defeating Llewelyn, annexed that country to England. He expelled the Jews from England in 1290. On the death (1290) of Margaret, the Maid of Norway, granddaughter and heiress of Alexander III of Scotland, the Scottish estates were unable to decide between the two chief claimants to the throne, John de Baliol and Robert Bruce, with the result that Edward was appointed arbitrator. He decided in favor of Baliol, whose homage he received. In 1294 he became involved in a war with France, Philip IV of France forming an alliance with Scotland. In 1296 he defeated the Scots at Dunbar, compelled Baliol to resign the crown, carried the Scotch coronation stone (the Stone of Scone) to London, and placed Scotland under an English regent, who was, however, defeated by the patriot Sir William Wallace at Stirling in 1297. Edward defeated the Scots under Wallace in the battle of Falkirk, on July 22, 1298. In 1303 he concluded the peace of Amiens with France, having married in 1299 Philip IV's sister, Margaret. Invading Scotland in 1303, he received the submission of Bruce, and in 1305 he ordered the execution of Wallace, who had been betrayed to the English. He died on the way to Scotland, where a new insurrection had placed Robert Bruce, grandson of the claimant against whom Edward had earlier decided, on the throne in 1306. Edward's reign is of great importance in the internal history of England. The statutes of Westminster (1275, 1285, 1290) revised the landholding system and limited the feudal political power; although the aim was to break altogether the barons' power, Edward was forced, through need of money to finance his foreign struggles, to grant exemptions from the rules and to confirm the charters granted by John and Henry III. The old King's Court was separated into three tribunals: the Court of Exchequer, the Court of King's Bench, and the Court of Common Pleas. The jurisdiction of the Royal Council (later the Star Chamber) was established. In 1279, the statute of mortmain was promulgated, forbidding the extension of clerical landholding without the king's consent. This was opposed by the clergy and they received backing from Pope Boniface VIII, whose bull Clericos Laicos (1296), though intended to stop Philip IV of France from taxing the clergy, was applied in 1297 in England when the English clergy refused to contribute to Edward's campaign against France. Edward then announced that he could no longer protect the church holdings against the possible inroads of the barons. But when the barons allied themselves with the clergy, Edward gave way, reaffirmed the charters, and signed further articles against arbitrary taxation without parliamentary consent. In 1295 Edward convened the so-called Model Parliament, with representation from all three estates (clergy, nobility, commons), the type after which later Parliaments were formed. Edward established the royal power over the clergy when Pope Clement V, an Englishman, permitted him to suspend (1306) Robert de Winchelsea, archbishop of Canterbury, one of the leading ecclesiastical opponents of the king. Edward's reign is marked by his victory over the barons and the clergy, his conquest of Wales, his victory over Philip IV of France, and his firm establishment of the royal power under law in England.

Edward II (of England). [Full name, Edward II of Caernarvon (or Carnarvon).] b. at Caernarvon, Wales, April 25, 1284; murdered at Berkeley Castle, near Gloucester, England, Sept. 21, 1327. King of England from 1307 to 1327. He was the fourth son of Edward I by his first wife, Eleanor of Castile. He was created (1301) the first Prince of Wales. On his accession to the throne he recalled his favorite, Piers Gaveston, who had been banished as being a bad influence on Edward by Edward I. He married Isabella of France in 1308. The insolence of Gaveston having aroused the anger of the barons, the favorite was banished through their influence in 1308, only to be shortly recalled by the king. In 1310, in consequence of the incompetence of Edward, who was completely under the ascendancy of Gaveston, the government was entrusted by the barons to 21 ordainers, who procured the passage of the ordinances of the Parliament of 1311, in accordance with which Gaveston was exiled, and provisions were made for annual Parliaments and for the reform of administrative abuses. In 1312 the barons brought about the execution of Gaveston, who had been again recalled by the king. In 1314 Edward was defeated by the Scots under Robert I (Robert the Bruce) at the battle of Bannockburn (June 24). The exile of his new favorites, the two Despensers, by Parliament in 1321 involved him in a war with the barons, who were defeated at the battle of Boroughbridge in 1322. In 1323, after an unsuccessful invasion of Scotland, he concluded a peace for 13 years with Bruce, whose assumption of the royal title of Scotland was passed over in silence. His queen, Isabella, having in 1325 been sent to France, accompanied by the prince Edward, heir to the throne, to negotiate with her brother Charles IV concerning the English fiefs in France, intrigued with Roger de Mortimer, her lover, and other disaffected barons, landed in England in 1326, captured Bristol, executed the Despensers, and imprisoned Edward. Edward, the prince, refused to become king as long as his father claimed the throne, so Edward II was deposed by Parliament, forced to resign his claim, and brutally murdered in Berkeley Castle.

Edward III (of England). [Called Edward of Windsor.] b. at Windsor, England, Nov. 13, 1312; d. at Shene (Richmond), England, June 21, 1377. King of England from 1327 to 1377. He was the son of Edward II and Isabella of France. On the deposition of his father, he was proclaimed king under a council of regency, the actual government being exercised by the queen and her favorite, Roger de Mortimer. He married (1328) Philippa of Hainaut, and in the same year concluded the treaty of Northampton with the Scots, in which Robert I (Robert Bruce) was recognized as king. In 1330 he took the government into his own hands, securing the execution of Mortimer and removing the queen-mother from any further influence. On the death of Robert I in 1329, Edward Baliol seized the Scottish crown, to the exclusion of Robert's young son David (1324–71), who, despite his years, was already Edward's brother-in-law. Baliol did homage to Edward, and a revolt of the nobles drove him across the border. Edward defeated the national party at Halidon Hill in 1333, and restored Baliol, who was soon driven out by the Scots. In 1337 he became involved in a war with France (the Hundred Years' War), whose throne he claimed in right of his mother. His claim brought him as allies the Flemings, who were subject to the French king; he made alliances with the emperor Louis IV and with other German princes. The naval victory at Sluys (1340) gave England control of the Channel. In 1346, at the battle of Neville's Cross, his army defeated the invading Scots under David II (Bruce), who had recovered the Scottish throne in 1342; the Scots, however, succeeded in maintaining their independence. He gained with his son, Edward the Black Prince, the victory of Crécy over the French in 1346, and reduced Calais in 1347, while the Black Prince gained the battle of Poitiers in 1356. In 1360 he concluded with the French the peace of Brétigny, by which he renounced the French crown and Normandy, Anjou, Maine, and Touraine, in return for the cession in full sovereignty to England of Aquitaine, Ponthieu, Guisnes, and Calais. He subsequently, in a war with Charles V, lost all his possessions in France, with the exception of Bordeaux, Calais, and Bayonne, due principally to the incompetence of John of Gaunt, who replaced the Black Prince, Edward, as steward of the English possessions in France. During his reign occurred several visitations of the Black Death (1348–49, 1361, and 1369). This plague, by halving the population of England, caused a social revolution that was stopped neither by an ordinance (1349) fixing wages and prices nor by the Statute of Laborers (1351) to force the unemployed to work at the fixed wages. This emancipation of labor from the feudal system was accompanied by a growth of class-consciousness reflected in such literary works as Piers Plowman and in the rapid spread of Lollardy. The reign of Edward III was also marked by a revolt against the papal authority and the establishment of national strictures on the power of the papacy, then resident at Avignon and under the influence of the French. This was only one aspect of the growth of national feeling: among other such manifestations was the establishment of the English language on an official basis in the courts, the schools, and Parliament, where until then French had held sway. The business class grew in importance and asserted its right to be heard. Parliament, obtaining the whip hand because of Edward's need of money for his wars, consolidated its position as a check on monarchal power. In his later years Edward turned over actual rule of the kingdom to Edward the Black Prince and then, in the latter's illness, to John of Gaunt. The latter, with the support of the king's mistress Alice Perrers, rallied to himself the forces of the court, and was opposed by the parliamentary and clerical factions. After the Black Prince's death, John of Gaunt was actual ruler of England until the accession of Richard II. Edward III had 12 children; of his seven sons, five grew to manhood and were of importance to history: Edward of Woodstock, the Black Prince; Lionel of Antwerp (the place names indicate where the princes were born), Duke of Clarence; John of Gaunt (i.e., Ghent), Duke of Lancaster, whose descendants formed the Lancastrian party in the later Wars of the Roses; Edmund of Langley, later 1st Duke of York, from whom the Yorkists took their name; and Thomas of Woodstock, later Duke of Gloucester.

Edward IV (of England). See also Edward, the Black Prince (1330–76).

Edward IV (of England). b. at Rouen, France, probably April 28, 1442; d. April 9, 1483. King of England from 1461 to 1483. He was the son of Richard Plantagenet, 3rd Duke of York, and Cecily Neville, daughter of the earl of Westmorland. He was known as the Earl of March previous to his accession, and played a prominent part in the struggle of his house (the house of York) with that of Lancaster for the possessions of the throne. In conjunction with the earls of Salisbury and Warwick, his uncle and his cousin, both named Richard Neville, he defeated the Lancastrians under Henry VI at Northampton in 1460, and took the king prisoner. His father, the duke of York, was defeated and killed at the battle of Wakefield later in the same year, whereupon Edward succeeded to the title, defeated the Lancastrians at the battle of Mortimer's Cross in 1461, and was proclaimed king at London on March 4, 1461. The early part of his reign was disturbed by constant attempts of the Lancastrians to regain the throne. In 1464 he secretly married Elizabeth Grey, daughter of Richard Woodville, Baron Rivers, and widow of Sir John Grey, a Lancastrian. This caused a revolution under the earl of Warwick, who joined forces with the Lancastrians and proclaimed the deposed and captive Henry VI king. Edward fled to France, but returned and suppressed the rising in the battles of Barnet (April 14, 1471) and Tewkesbury (May 4, 1471); in the former Warwick was slain and following the latter Henry VI died, probably murdered, in the Tower of London. Edward's reign thereafter was more or less peaceful, only the rivalry of his brothers, the dukes of Clarence and Gloucester, marring the domestic scene (this was ended with Clarence's murder in 1478) and a war with France in 1475 disturbing the peace. From the French war came a subsidy which enabled Edward to avoid going to Parliament for money. As a result Edward reverted to autocracy and attempted to live the life of a Renaissance despot. His profligacy was well known; Jane Shore is the most famous of his several mistresses.

Edward V (of England). b. in Westminster Abbey, London, Nov. 2 or 3, 1470; murdered in the Tower of London, 1483. King of England from April to June, 1483. He was the son of Edward IV by Elizabeth Woodville. He succeeded to the throne under the regency of his uncle Richard, Duke of Gloucester, who secretly put him and his brother to death and usurped the government as Richard III. The mystery surrounding the deaths of Edward and his younger brother Richard, Duke of York, has never successfully been solved, but there is little doubt that Richard III procured their deaths through Sir James Tyrell after the Tower's constable, Sir Robert Brackenbury, refused to kill them.

Edward VI (of England). b. at Hampton Court, England, Oct. 12, 1537; d. at Greenwich, near London, July 6, 1553. King of England from 1547 to 1553. He was the son of Henry VIII by his third queen, Jane Seymour, and succeeded to the throne under the regency of his uncle, Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, who was supplanted c1550 by John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland. During his reign occurred the publication of the 42 articles of religion (1553) and the introduction of the Book of Common Prayer (1549), compiled by Thomas Cranmer. Before his death he was induced by the duke of Northumberland to assign the crown to Northumberland's daughter-in-law, Lady Jane Grey, to the exclusion of Henry VIII's children Mary and Elizabeth.

Edward VII (of England). [Full name, Albert Edward; called the Peacemaker.] b. at London, Nov. 9, 1841; d. there, May 6, 1910. King of Great Britain and Ireland and emperor of India from 1901 to 1910; eldest son of Victoria. He married Princess Alexandria, daughter of Christian IX of Denmark, on March 10, 1863. In 1860 he made a tour of the U.S. and Canada, in 1862 of Egypt and Palestine, and in 1875–76 of British India, the latter visit laying the groundwork for Victoria's assumption (1877) of the title Empress of India. As king he fostered international agreements with France, Germany, Italy, Portugal, and Spain. He ascended the throne as Edward VII on Jan. 22, 1901. He died during the parliamentary crisis of 1910–11 over the veto power of the House of Lords, in which dispute he preserved a neutral stand. Edward was a popular king, and his genial taste for good food, wine, and other attributes of a gay life (including love affairs; he appeared as a witness not only in a divorce suit but in a libel suit in connection with an alleged instance of cheating in gambling) probably actually added to the affection in which he was held by most of his subjects (after the austerity of Victoria, his escapades had the effect of reminding the world that an English ruler could be, so to speak, more human without thereby becoming less royal). His horses won the Derby several times and his racing yacht was one of the best of the times. As Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, he was an ambassador of good will both internationally and domestically, making it evident that the king would participate in national life without necessarily attempting to direct political matters.

Edward VIII (of England). [Full name, Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David; known after his abdication as Duke of Windsor.] b. at White Lodge, Richmond, England, June 23, 1894—. King of England from Jan. 20 to Dec. 10, 1936 (324 days). The eldest son of King George V and Mary (Victoria Mary of Teck), he became Prince of Wales in 1911, making his investiture speech at Caernarvon Castle in Welsh. During World War I he served with the British Expeditionary Forces in France, Flanders, and Italy. Following the war, his travels in Canada, the U.S., Australia, the West Indies, South Africa, and Latin America made him a familiar figure in the British Empire and the world at large. On the death of George V in 1936 he succeeded to the throne, still unmarried. Later that year it became known that he was planning to marry Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, an American divorcee who was about to divorce her second husband. The proposed marriage was met with opposition from the cabinet, led by the Conservative Stanley Baldwin. The king insisting on his right to choose a wife and the king's ministers insisting that the king must accede to his subjects' wishes, a constitutional crisis developed that was resolved only with Edward's abdication. In a speech that has since become famous he declared that he could not "carry on the heavy burden of responsibility and discharge the duties of King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love." The abdication speech, delivered over the air on Dec. 11, has been many times reprinted in full, or quoted in part. He was succeeded by his brother, the duke of York, as George VI. On June 3, 1937 Edward, now known as Duke of Windsor, married Mrs. Simpson in France. He served for a short time in France in World War II and then was appointed governor of the Bahama Islands, a post he held from 1940 to 1945. Students of his character have called attention to apparent contradictions in his acts and utterances. His sympathies with miners and with other workers, and with the unemployed, are well known, but one of his best friends is Charles Bedaux, associated with a "speed-up" system that is highly unpopular with labor groups in England and elsewhere. When he left England in 1937 he found a welcome in the home of his friend, Baron Rothschild, but when he went to Germany, "to study labor conditions," he called on, and posed with, Hitler, Goebbels, and Goering. His story, told by himself, has been serialized and published in book form in A King's Story (1951).

Edward I. Play by George Peele, printed in 1593.

Edward II. Tragedy by Christopher Marlowe, entered on the Stationers' Register on July 6, 1593. It was probably written c1590, but was not published till 1598, after Marlowe's death.

Edward III. Tragedy attributed to Christopher Marlowe, founded on Holinshed's Chronicle, acted in 1590. It was entered on the Stationers' Register in 1595, was printed anonymously in 1596, and at one time was attributed to Shakespeare.

Edward IV. Play by John Heywood, printed in 1600.

Edward, Lake. [Also: Edward Nyanza; former name, Albert Edward Nyanza; native name, Muta Nzige.] Lake in E central Africa on the border between Uganda and the Belgian Congo, S of Lake Albert, and connected with the latter by the Semliki River. It was discovered by Henry M. Stanley in 1877 and revisited by him in 1888–89. Until 1909 it was known as Albert Edward Nyanza (it was named for the Prince of Wales, Albert Edward, and became Lake Edward when he ascended the throne as Edward VII). Area, 830 sq. mi.

Edward, Mount. Highest point in the Sweeney Mountains, in Antarctica, lying in the center of the group, which rises above the Joerg Plateau, in ab. 75°48′ S., 67°40′ W.

Edward Augustus (ô.gus'tus), Prince. [Additional title, Duke of Kent and Strathern.] b. at Buckingham House, London, Nov. 2. 1767; d. at Sidmouth, Devonshire, England, Jan. 23, 1820. Fourth son of George III of England, and father of Queen Victoria. On May 28, 1818, he married Victoria Mary Louisa, widow of Emich Charles, prince of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Hardenburg. Their only child, Victoria, was born at Kensington Palace, on May 24, 1819.

Edward Casaubon (kạ.sô'bọn), Rev. See Casaubon, Rev. Edward.

Edward Cuttle (kut'l), Captain. See Cuttle, Captain Edward.

Edwardes (ed'wạrdz), Sir Herbert Benjamin. b. at Frodesley, Shropshire, England, Nov. 12, 1819; d. at London, Dec. 23, 1868. English general and author, distinguished in the Sikh wars in India (1845–49). He published A Year on the Punjab Frontier (1851) and other works.

Edward Fairfax Rochester (fãr'faks roch'es''tẻr, -ȿs.tẻr). See Rochester, Edward Fairfax.

Edward Glendinning (glen.din'ing). See Glendinning, Edward.

Edwardians (ed.wär'di.ạnz), The. Novel of English life in the time of Edward VII, by V. Sackville-West, published in 1930.

Edward Longshanks (lông'shangks). See Edward I (of England).

Edward Murdstone (mẻrd'stōn, -stọn). See Murdstone, Edward.

Edward II of Caernarvon (or Carnarvon) (kär.när'vọn). See Edward II (of England).

Edward of Windsor (win'zọr). See Edward III (of England).

Edward of Woodstock (wůd'stok). See Edward, the Black Prince (1330–76).

Edward VII Peninsula. [Also, King Edward VII Land.] Peninsula of the mainland of Antarctica, extending NW from Marie Byrd Land, E of the Ross Shelf Ice, in ab. lat. 77°45′ S. and long. 156° W. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Edwards (ed'wạrdz), Albert. Pseudonym of Bullard, Arthur.

Edwards, Alfred George. b. at Llanymawddwy, Wales, Nov. 2, 1848; d. at St. Asaph, Wales, July 22, 1937. Welsh clergyman of the Anglican church and first primate (1920–34) of the Church of Wales. He received an M.A. from Oxford, entered the church in 1885, and was appointed (1889) Bishop of St. Asaph. He served as headmaster and headwarden of the College of Llandovery for 10 years, and retired in 1934.

Edwards, Amelia Ann Blandford. b. at London, 1831; d. at Weston-super-Mare, Somersetshire, England, April 15, 1892. English novelist and Egyptologist; cousin of Matilda Barbara Betham-Edwards (1836–1919). She showed talent for drawing and music, and in 1853 began to write for periodicals. After 1880 she devoted herself to archaeological studies. In 1883 she became the honorary secretary of the Egyptian exploration fund. A Thousand Miles up the Nile (1877) was illustrated from her own sketches. She also wrote A Summary of English History (1856), An Abridgment of French History (1858), and Pharaohs, Fellahs, and Explorers (1891).

Edwards, Bryan. b. at Westbury, Wiltshire, England, May 21, 1743; d. at Southampton, England, July 15, 1800. English West India merchant and historian. He lived in Jamaica, finally returning to England in 1792. He established a bank at Southampton, and in 1796 was elected to Parliament. He is best known for his History of the British Colonies in the West Indies, of which the first two volumes were published in 1793; later editions were greatly enlarged, the best being that of 1819. His Historical Survey of St. Domingo, first published in 1797, is generally appended to the later editions of the History.

Edwards, Clarence Ransom. b. at Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 1, 1860; d. at Boston, Feb. 14, 1931. American army officer. Graduated (1883) from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point; served in War Department as chief (1902–12) of its bureau of insular affairs; promoted to brigadier general (1912) and major general (1921) in regular army; headed (1915–17) U.S. troops in the Panama Canal Zone; after organizing (1917) the 26th division he commanded (1917–18) that group in France; commander (1917, 1918–20) of the northeastern department; became (1921) major general and head of 1st corps area headquarters at the Boston army base and served there until his retirement (1922).

Edwards, Eli. Pseudonym of McKay, Claude.

Edwards, George. b. at Stratford, Essex, England, April 3, 1693; d. at Plaistow, near London, July 23, 1773. English naturalist. He published a History of Birds (1745–51), Gleanings of Natural History (1758–64; 3 vols. additional to the History), and others.

Edwards, George Wharton. b. at Fair Haven (now part of New Haven), Conn., 1859; d. at Greenwich, Conn., 1950. American portrait and mural painter, and author. He was educated at Antwerp and Paris, studying under Eugène Féyén. From 1898 to 1903 he was art director for Collier's Magazine, and later was manager (1904–12) of the art department of the American Bank Note Company. He won medals at Boston in 1884 and 1890, for drawings, and repeated his success with paintings at the 1901 Buffalo Exposition and the 1902 South Carolina Exposition, also winning, in the latter year, honors at the Barcelona Exposition in Spain. His mural decoration Henrik Hudson is at the U.S. Military Academy. He was made a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor (1925), of the Belgian Order of the Crown and the Spanish Order of Isabella the Catholic (both 1927), and of the Royal Order of the Crown of Italy (1929). In 1920 he was awarded a medal of the Order of the King of Belgium, the honor being conferred by the king, and he was made a member of the National Academy of Design in 1930. He wrote Thumbnail Sketches (1886), P'tit Matinic Monotones (1887), Break o' Day and Other Stories (1889), Holland of Today (1909), Brittany and the Bretons (1910), Some Old Flemish Towns (1911), Marken and Its People (1912), The Forest of Arden (1914), Vanished Towers and Chimes of Flanders (1916), Vanished Halls and Cathedrals of France (1917), Alsace-Lorraine (1918), and Belgium, Old and New (1920). He illustrated Oliver Wendell Holmes's Last Leaf (1885), Austin Dobson's Sun Dial (1892), Spenser's Epithalamium (1895), Old English Love Songs (1896), Old English Ballads (1897), and R. H. Barham's Jackdaw of Rheims (1919). Other travel books that he wrote are London (1921), Paris (1924), Spain (1925), Rome (1928), and Constantinople (1930).

Edwards, Harry Stillwell. b. at Macon, Ga., April 23, 1855; d. Oct. 22, 1938. American journalist and author. He was assistant editor and editor of the Macon Telegraph (1881–87) and of the Evening News and Sunday Times (1887–88). In 1900 he became postmaster of Macon. Among his publications are Two Runaways, and Other Stories (1889), Sons and Fathers, for which he was awarded the 10,000-dollar prize in a contest sponsored by the Chicago Record (1895), The Marbeau Cousins (1898), His Defense, and Other Stories (1899), Fifth Dimension (1912), and Little Legends of the Land (1930).

Edwards, Henry Waggaman. b. at New Haven, Conn., in October, 1779; d. July 22, 1847. American lawyer; son of Pierpont Edwards (1750–1826) and grandson of Jonathan Edwards (1703–58). He was a U.S. congressman (1819–23), U.S. senator (1823–27), governor of Connecticut (1833–34, 1835–38). He favored abolition of the property qualification for voting, the division of the state into districts for the choice of national representatives, and a measure of governmental control over business interests.

Edwards, John. b. in Stafford County, Va., 1748; d. in Bourbon County, Ky., 1837. American planter and politician in Kentucky. Although twice (1782–83, 1785–86) a member of the Virginia House of Delegates, he favored separation from Virginia and statehood for Kentucky. He was active in framing the Kentucky constitution (1792), was the first U.S. senator (1792–95) from Kentucky, and was thereafter (1796–1800) a member of the Kentucky state senate.

Edwards, Jonathan. b. at East Windsor, Conn., Oct. 5, 1703; d. of smallpox, at Princeton, N.J., March 22, 1758. American theologian, philosopher, metaphysician, and college president. He was the fifth child and the only son of his parents. He was educated at home before he entered Yale at the age of 13, graduating (at the age of 17) at the top of his class. He read Latin at 6, wrote a pamphlet (The Nature of the Soul) at 10, a scientific essay (The Habits of Spiders) at 12, and at 14 read Locke's Essay Concerning Human Understanding, which is ordinarily regarded as a difficult book. After his graduation he spent two additional years at Yale studying theology. In 1722–23, he was pastor of a Presbyterian church at New York. In 1726 he was assistant minister to his grandfather, whose death, two years later, enabled him to become minister of one of the largest and richest churches in all Massachusetts. In July, 1727, he married Sarah Pierrepont, a girl of 17, who became the mother of their 12 children. He had loved her since meeting her four years previously, and his description of her, in a beautiful prose-poem, is one of his best-known and most popular pieces of writing. Its opening lines have been many times quoted: "They say there is a young lady [in New Haven] who is beloved of that Great Being who made and rules the world, and that there are certain seasons in which this Great Being, in some way or other invisible, comes to her and fills her mind with exceeding sweet delight, and that she hardly cares for anything except to meditate on Him. . . . She has a strange sweetness in her mind, and singular purity in her affections; is most just and conscientious in all her conduct; and you could not persuade her to do anything wrong or sinful, if you would give her all the world, lest she should offend this Great Being. . . . She will sometimes go about from place to place, singing sweetly, and seems to be always full of joy and pleasure, and no one knows for what. She loves to be alone, walking in the fields and groves, and seems to have some one invisible always conversing with her." From 1750 until his death he was a missionary to the Indians at Stockbridge, Mass. In the last year of his life, he was elected president of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton University). Appointed on Sept. 26, 1757, he served for less than three months, coming to Princeton early in January, 1758. He wrote Resolutions (1722–23), outlining a drastic spiritual program, A Narrative of Surprising Conversions (1735), A Personal Narrative (1739), describing his own conversion in 1719, A Treatise Concerning the Religious Affections (1742–43, 1746), collected sermons, Qualifications for Full Communion in the Visible Church (1749), Of Insects (1751), The Great Christian Doctrine of Original Sin Defended (1758), which claims that man is naturally bad, History of the Work of Redemption (1765), an unfinished work, a philosophical discussion of life, heaven, hell, and earth, that its author intended to be a masterpiece, and The Nature of True Virtue (1772). Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God (1741), a sermon preached at Enfield during "the Great Awakening," is famous for its vivid picture of man hanging over hell. His great work, the one by which he is remembered, is A Careful and Strict Enquiry into the Modern Prevailing Notions of that Freedom of the Will which is Supposed to be Essential to Moral Agency, Virtue and Vice, Reward and Punishment, Praise and Blame (1754), regarded as one of the greatest philosophical works written in America, as a masterpiece of logical reasoning, as the product of a tremendous intellect, and as one of the first American works to attract European attention. Edwards has been called "the greatest single figure produced by Puritanism and Calvinism," "the greatest American mind of the Colonial Period," "the most saintly American that ever lived," "the intellectual flower of New England Puritanism," and "one of the finest minds ever developed on the American continent." He has been compared to Saint Francis of Assisi, and as a mystic he has been contrasted with the practical Franklin.

Edwards, Jonathan. [Called the Younger.] b. at Northampton, Mass., May 26, 1745; d. at Schenectady, N.Y., Aug. 1, 1801. American Congregational clergyman; son of Jonathan Edwards (1703–58). He was president of Union College at Schenectady from 1799 to 1801.

Edwards, Justin. b. at Westhampton, Mass., April 25, 1787; d. at Virginia Springs, Va., July 23, 1853. American clergyman, author of various tracts on temperance, and other works.

Edwards, Matilda Barbara Betham-. See Betham-Edwards, Matilda Barbara.

Edwards, Ninian. b. in Montgomery County, Md., March 17, 1775; d. at Belleville, Ill., July 20, 1833. American lawyer and politician; nephew of John Edwards (1748–1837). He practiced law (1795 et seq.) in Kentucky, and was appointed (1807) chief justice of the Kentucky court of appeals. He served as governor (1809–18) of the Illinois Territory until it became a state and thereafter as U.S. senator (1818–24) from Illinois and governor (1826–30) of Illinois.

Edwards, Ninian Wirt. b. at Frankfort, Ky., April 15, 1809; d. Sept. 2, 1889. American lawyer, first superintendent of public instruction (1854–57) of Illinois; son of Ninian Edwards (1775–1833). He was attorney-general (1834–35) of Illinois and served in the state legislature as a representative (1836–40, 1848–51) and as a state senator (1844–48). As superintendent of public instruction, he secured passage (1855) of a school law which laid the basis for the state's school system. He was a friend of Abraham Lincoln; his wife's sister, Mary Todd, met (1839) Lincoln at Edwards's house, where they were eventually married. Author of History of Illinois from 1778 to 1883 and Life and Times of Ninian Edwards (1870).

Edwards, Pierpont. b. at Northampton, Mass., April 8, 1750; d. April 5, 1826. American lawyer and judge; son of Jonathan Edwards (1703–58). He practiced law (1771 et seq.) at New Haven, Conn., served (1777, 1784–85, 1787–90) in the Connecticut state legislature, and was a delegate (1787–88) to the Constitutional Convention. An early Jeffersonian Republican, he was a leader of that party in his state, and a member (1818) of the Connecticut constitutional convention which drafted the new state constitution. As judge (1806–26) of the Connecticut district court, he presided over the trials of clergymen and editors accused of libeling President Jefferson and the administration (although his jurisdiction was finally declared invalid on constitutional grounds by the Supreme Court).

Edwards, Richard. b. in Somersetshire, England, c1523; d. Oct. 31, 1566. English dramatist. In 1561 he was appointed master of the Children of the Chapel. He wrote a drama, Damon and Pythias (1571; reprinted by Dodsley), and a number of poems, some of which appeared in The Paradyse of Daynty Devises (1576).

Edwards Bello (ād.wärdz' bā'yō), Joaquín. b. at Valparaíso, Chile, May 10, 1887—. Chilean journalist, editor (1920 et seq.) of La Nación at Santiago. His sketches of his countrymen at home and abroad, especially of the common man, are noted for their realism. Author of El Roto (1920), El Chileno en Madrid (1928), and others.

Edwards v. California, 314 U.S. 160 (1941) (ed'wạrdz; kal.i.fôr'nyạ). Unanimous decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which invalidated a California law aimed at excluding paupers or indigent persons from the state. Justice James J. Byrnes, in delivering the court's opinion, declared that the California statute set up "an unconstitutional barrier" to interstate commerce. Two concurring opinions based the right of migration upon the privileges and immunities clause of the Constitution.

Edwardsville (ed'wạrdz.vil). City in SW Illinois, county seat of Madison County, ab. 17 mi. NE of East St. Louis; coal-mining community. It was platted in 1813 and named for Ninian Edwards, governor (1809–18) of Illinois Territory. 8,776 (1950).

Edwardsville. Borough in E Pennsylvania, in Luzerne County, ab. 3 mi. N of Wilkes-Barre, in an anthracite coal area. It was incorporated in 1884. Pop. 6,686 (1950).

Edward the Black Prince (ed'wạrd). See Edward (1330–76).

Edward the Confessor. See Edward or Eadward (c1004–1066).

Edward the Elder. See Edward or Eadward or Eadweard (d. 924).

Edward the Martyr. See Edward or Eadward (963–978).

Edward the Peacemaker. See Edward VII (of England).

Edwin or Eadwine or Eadwin (ed'win). b. probably in 585; d. 633. King of Northumbria (617–633); son of King Ælla of Deira. With the help of Redwald, king of East Anglia, he overcame Ethelfrith of Bernicia, who attempted to keep him from his throne, and when Redwald died inherited his lands too. He was the fifth Bretwalda (ruler of the British), and his overlordship extended over all seven kingdoms of Teutonic Britain except Kent. He was defeated and slain in the battle of Heathfield in 633 by the rebellious Mercians under Penda in alliance with Cadwallon of Wales. During his reign Christianity was introduced into Northumbria, Edwin being baptized in 627. He established Paulinus as bishop of York.

Edwin and Angelina (an.jẹ.lī'nạ). Ballad by Oliver Goldsmith, privately printed originally for the countess of Northumberland. The ballad was first published in The Vicar of Wakefield, and is also called "The Hermit."

Edwin and Angelina. Opera by Victor Pelissier, with a libretto by Elihu H. Smith, first performed at New York on Dec. 19, 1796. Although its production followed by eight months that of Benjamin Carr's The Archers, it was composed at an earlier date than the latter, and thus has a claim to being the first American opera.

Edwin and Emma (em'ạ). Ballad by David Mallet, written in 1760.

Edwin Clayhanger (klā'hang.ėr). See Clayhanger.

Edwy (ed'wi) or Eadwig (ad'wēy'). [Called Edwy the Fair.] b. c940; d. 959. Son of Edmund I and Ælfgifu. He became king of Wessex in 955, succeeding his uncle Edred. When at his coronation feast he retired to the company of his intended wife and her mother, his nobles grew angry and an open fight was prevented only when Saint Dunstan convinced Edwy that he must return to the table. In 957 he exiled Dunstan for his part in the affair. That year Mercia and Northumbria rebelled and chose Edgar as king, but Edwy died in 959 before fighting took place.

Eeckeren (āk'ẹ.rẹn). See Ekeren.

Eeckhout (āk'hout) or Eckhout (ek'hout), Gerbrand van den. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, Aug. 19, 1621; d. there, Sept. 29, 1674. Dutch painter, a pupil of Rembrandt.

Eecloo (āk'lō). See Eekloo.

Eeden (ā'dẹn), Frederik van. b. 1860; d. 1932. Dutch novelist, poet, playwright, and essayist. He attacked naturalism to promote idealistic conceptions of art. He tried to realize Tolstoyan and communistic theories in his colony "Walden" near Bussum (influenced by Thoreau), but the experiment was a failure; in connection with this colony he made a lecture tour of the U.S. in 1908. He was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1922. His first novel, De Kleine Johannes (Eng. trans., Little Johannes, 1885), a symbolic fairy tale, contrasted sharply with his psychoanalytic novels, such as Van de koele meren des doods (1900; Eng. trans., The Deeps of Deliverance) and De Nachtbruid (1909; Eng. trans., The Bride of Dreams). He wrote simple nostalgic verse (Ellen, 1891) as well as philosophic poetry typified by Het Lied van schijn en wezen (The Song of Appearance and Essence, 3 vols., 1895–1922). His dramatic poetry included De Broeders, tragedie van 't Recht (The Brothers, Tragedy of Justice, 1894), on a Faustian theme, and Lioba (1897). Other plays are Don Torribio (1887; Eng. trans., The King's Dream), Ysbrand (1908; trans. into English), Het Beloofde Land (The Promised Country, 1909), and 't Paleis van Circe (1910), all more or less satires on the failure of his reform experiment. In reaction to World War I he wrote a successful historical play on human and divine justice, De Heks van Haarlem (The Witch of Haarlem, 1915). English translations of his work can also be found in Coming After, by A. J. Barnouw, and Flowers From a Foreign Garden, by A. L. Snell.

Eekhoud (āk'hout), Georges. b. at Amsterdam, Netherlands, May 27, 1854; d. at Brussels, Belgium, May 28, 1927. Flemish novelist and poet. He wrote realistic portrayals of Flemish life. His books of poetry include Myrtes et cyprès (1876), Zigzags poétiques (1877), and Les Pittoresques (1879). Among his novels are Kees Dvorik (1883), Les Milices de Saint-François (1886), La Nouvelle Carthage (1888), Le Cycle patibulaire (1891), La Faneuse d'amour (1900), and Les Libertins d'Anvers (1913).

Eekloo (āk'lō). [Also, Eecloo.] Town in NW Belgium, in the province of East Flanders, ab. 12 mi. NW of Ghent, connected by canals with Ghent and with Zeebrugge. It has cotton, linen, and woolen textile manufactures. 16,903 (1947).

Eesti (ās'tē) or Eestimaa (ās'tē.mä). Estonian name of Estonia.

Efate (e.fä'te). [Also: Sandwich Island, Vaté, Vati.] One of the southern islands of the New Hebrides condominium, Pacific Ocean. It possesses the two finest harbors in the New Hebrides group. Length, 26 mi.; width, 14 mi.; pop. ab. 2,000.

Efe (ā'fā). [Also: Efeh (ā'fe), Ifi.] One of the eastern pygmy groups of C Africa, inhabiting the forests of NE Belgian Congo. They speak a Sudanic language.

Effen (ef′ən), Justus van. b. at Utrecht, Netherlands, 1684; d. at 's Hertogenbosch, Netherlands, 1735. Dutch journalist, translator, and diplomat. He was educated at the universities of Utrecht and Leiden, and taught the sons of Dutch noblemen. He obtained his knowledge of English life and manners in 1715–16 and again in 1727–28, when he was at London as secretary of the Dutch embassy. In 1711 he began to publish a weekly periodical in French, the language he usually wrote, called Le Misanthrope, which was an imitation of the Spectator papers of Addison and Steele, and from 1731 until his death he wrote another series of periodical essays, the Hollandsche Spectator, again imitating, with some degree of success, the style of the aforenamed famous English authors. From 1715 to 1718 he was the chief contributor to a review, the Journal Littéraire, published at The Hague. He translated Robinson Crusoe and Swift's Tale of a Tub into French, and was praised for his rendering. His second imitation of the Spectator is the only work he wrote in his native tongue, and it is considered his best.

Effie Deans (ef′i dēnz). See Deans, Effie (or Euphemia).

Effingham (ef′ing.ham). City in E Illinois, county seat of Effingham County, in a dairying and farming region. 6,892 (1950).

Effingham (ef′ing.ham, -ạm). Surname of characters in Homeward Bound (1838), Home as Found (1838), and other novels by James Fenimore Cooper.

Effingham (ef′ing.ạm), Earl of. Title held by various members of the Howard family.

Efik (ā′fēk). [Also, Fi.] Subgroup of the Semi-Bantu-speaking Ibibio peoples of W Africa, inhabiting SE Nigeria in the neighborhood of Calabar. Their population is estimated at ab. 30,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). With the Efik proper are included three related subgroups, the Effiatt, Odott, and Uwett.

Efros (ef′ros), Israel Isaac. b. in the Ukraine, Russia, 1891—. Jewish Semitic scholar, rabbi, and poet. He arrived in the U.S. in 1906, was graduated (Ph.D.) from Columbia, and was ordained (1915) to the rabbinate at the Jewish Theological Seminary. He was a founder (1918) of the Baltimore Hebrew College and Teachers Training School, on whose faculty he served until 1928, lecturer (1928 et seq.) and head (1934–40) of the Semitics department at the University of Buffalo. In 1940 he became associate professor at Hunter College, New York. He is the author of Space in Medieval Jewish Philosophy (1917), Philosophical Terms in the More Nebukim (1924), and others.

Efutu (e.fō′tō). [Also, Fetou.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting S Gold Coast, between Winneba and Accra.

Ega (ā′gạ). Former name of Tefé, Brazil.

Egadi Islands (eg′ạ.di). [Italian, Isole Egadi; ancient names, Aegates, Aegadian Isles.] Group of small islands W of Sicily, belonging to the province of Trapani. The chief islands are Favignana, Marèttimo, Levanzo, and Formica. Tuna fishing is an important occupation. The Romans defeated the Carthaginians in a naval battle near the islands in 241 B.C. Area, ab. 15 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 7,000.

Égalité (ā.gạ.lē.tā), Philippe. Name given during the French Revolution to Louis Philippe Joseph, Duc d'Orléans.

Egan (ē′gạn). Unincorporated community in NW Georgia, in Fulton County near Atlanta. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 3,032 (1940).

Egan, Maurice Francis. b. at Philadelphia, May 24, 1852; d. Jan. 15, 1924. American author and diplomat, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Denmark (1907 et seq.), important in the purchase (1916) of the Virgin Islands. He was editor of The Freeman's Journal (1881–88), professor of English literature at the University of Notre Dame (1889–95), and professor of the English language and literature in the Catholic University at Washington, D.C. (1895–1907). His works include Preludes (1880), Songs and Sonnets (1892), The Flower of the Flock (1894), The Chatelaine of the Roses (1897), From the Land of St. Lawrence (1898), The Leopard of Lancianus (1898), The Dream of Gerontius (1903), St. Martin's Summer (1905), The Ghost in Hamlet, and Other Essays (1906), The Wiles of Sexton Maginnis (1909), Everybody's Saint Francis (1912), and others.

Egan, Patrick. b. at Ballymahon, Ireland, Aug. 13, 1841; d. at New York, Sept. 30, 1919. American politician, diplomat, and one-time Irish nationalist. He helped organize (1869) the Home Rule League and was named (1879), with Charles Parnell and Thomas Brennan, to the Executive Council of the Irish National Land League, serving as treasurer and directing the entire anti-British movement until, threatened with arrest, he sailed (1883) to the U.S. A founder (1883) of the Irish National League of America and its president for two years (1884–86), he proved (1889) himself and Parnell innocent of complicity in the Phoenix Park murders. As an American, he is best remembered as minister (1889 et seq.) to Chile.

Egan, Pierce. b. at London, 1772; d. there, Aug. 3, 1849. English writer on sports; father of Pierce Egan (1814–80). He was the author of a monthly serial, Boxiana; or Sketches of modern Pugilism (1818–24), and of Life in London (1821), a serial illustrated by George and Isaac R. Cruikshank.

Egan, Pierce. b. at London, 1814; d. July 6, 1880. English novelist and artist; son of Pierce Egan (1772–1849). He wrote Wat Tyler (1851), Paul Jones (1842), The Snake in the Grass (1858), and other novels.

Egaña (ā.gä′nyä), Juan. b. at Lima, Peru, 1769; d. at Santiago, Chile, April 13, 1836. Chilean jurist, statesman, and author. A lawyer at Santiago, he took an active part in the revolution of 1810, and was a leading spirit in the first Chilean congress. He was imprisoned by the Spaniards in 1814 at Juan Fernández, Chile, was released in 1817, and shortly after was again a member of the Chilean congress and a planner of the constitution. Among his numerous published works, which have been collected in 10 volumes, are Tratados jurídicos, Descripción geológica y mineralógica de Chile, Memorias políticas, and Tratado de educación.

Egba (eg′bä). Subgroup of the Sudanic-speaking Yoruba of W Africa, inhabiting SW Nigeria, N of Lagos. Their population is estimated at ab. 190,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). Their king is the Alake of Abeokuta, which is their capital city.

Egbado (eg.bä′dō). Subgroup of the Sudanic-speaking Yoruba of W Africa, inhabiting SW Nigeria, W of Abeokuta. Their population is estimated at ab. 30,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926).

Egbert (eg′bėrt) or Ecgberht (ej′bėrht). b. c775; d. 839. King of Wessex (802–839). He received the submission of Mercia and Northumberland in 829, and became lord of all England. He was probably the son of a Kentish underking who was exiled from England to the court of Charlemagne by King Offa of Mercia and King Beorhtric of Kent. In 802 he returned and ascended the throne of Wessex. In 815 he attacked the West Welsh in Cornwall, and in 825 defeated Beornwulf of Mercia at Ellandum, thus obtaining the submission of Kent, Surrey, Sussex, and Essex. Soon after the East Anglians acknowledged him, and in 829 Mercia and Northumbria submitted, thus making him overlord of all the English. He engaged in battles with the Danes, and in 838 beat them and the West Welsh, their British allies, in Cornwall. He was succeeded by his son Ethelwulf.

Egede (ā′gẹ.dẹ), Hans. [Called the Apostle of Greenland.] b. at Senjen, Norway, Jan. 31, 1686; d. on the island of Falster, Denmark, Nov. 5, 1758. Norwegian missionary. He was stationed (1721–36) among the Eskimos of Greenland, where he founded (1721) the colony of Godthaab. He became (1740) superintendent of the Greenland mission, and resided many years at Copenhagen. He wrote several works on the history of Greenland.

Egede, Paul. b. at Vaagen, Norway, 1708; d. at Copenhagen, 1789. Norwegian missionary; son of Hans Egede. He was stationed (1734–40) in Greenland, succeeded his father as superintendent of the Greenland mission, and lived many years in Copenhagen. He completed a translation, begun by his father, of the New Testament into the Eskimo language. He also compiled a catechism and a ritual in that language.

Egedesminde (ā′gẹ.ᴛʜẹs.min″ẹ). [Native name, Ausiait.] Settlement in W Greenland, on a small low island ab.

42 mi. S of Godhavn. It was founded in 1759 as a Danish mission station. 712 (1945).

Eger (e'ger). [German, Erlau.] City in NE Hungary, situated between Budapest and Miskolc. It is the seat of an archbishopric, has a cathedral and a number of other noteworthy sacred and secular buildings, mainly from the 18th century. The Servitan Church was formerly a Turkish mosque; the minaret is preserved. There are theological and law academies, a library, and a museum of art. Eger is a commercial center, has sugar and cement factories, and is noted for its excellent red wines. The city was destroyed by the Mongols in 1242, defended against the Turks in 1552, but conquered by them in 1596. It fell to the Hapsburgs in 1687. Pop. 29,428 (1948).

Eger (ā'gėr). German name of Cheb; also of the Ohře.

Egerbrunnen (ā'gėr.brůn.ẹn). A German name of Františkovy Lázně.

Egerdir Lake (e.ger.dir'). See Eğridir Lake.

Egeri (ā'gẹ.rē). See Ägeri.

Egeria (ē.jir'i.ạ). [Also, Aegeria.] In Roman mythology, one of the Camenae, or nymphs of springs, by whom Numa was instructed with regard to the forms of worship he was to introduce.

Egeria. [Also, Aegeria.] An asteroid (No. 13) discovered at Naples by De Gasparis, Nov. 2, 1850.

Egerton (ej'ėr.tọn), Francis. [Title: 3rd Duke of Bridgewater; called the "Father of British Inland Navigation."] b. 1736; d. at London, March 3, 1803. British nobleman; last Duke of Bridgewater, younger son of the first duke by his second wife. He is notable as the projector of a canal from Worsley to Manchester (the first in England throughout its course entirely independent of a natural stream), and of one from Manchester to Liverpool.

Egerton, Francis. [Titles: 1st Earl of Ellesmere, Viscount Brackley; original surname, Leveson-Gower.] b. at London, Jan. 1, 1800; d. there, Feb. 18, 1857. English politician and man of letters; son of George Granville Leveson-Gower, Marquis of Stafford and Duke of Sutherland. He was a member of Parliament (1822–46), a lord of the treasury in 1827, undersecretary of state for the colonies in 1828, chief secretary for Ireland (1828–30), and secretary for war in 1830. He was created Viscount Brackley of Brackley and Earl of Ellesmere of Ellesmere in 1846, and was president of the Royal Asiatic Society in 1849 and of the Royal Geographical Society in 1854–55. He wrote Mediterranean Sketches (1843) and others.

Egerton, Francis Henry. [Title, 8th Earl of Bridgewater.] b. Nov. 11, 1756; d. at Paris, Feb. 11, 1829. English nobleman and clergyman, founder, by his will, of the Bridgewater Treatises.

Egerton, Hugh Edward. b. at London, April 19, 1855; d. at Oxford, England, May 21, 1927. English historian, a pioneer in the field of colonial history, first occupant of the chair of colonial history at Oxford founded (1905) by Alfred Beit. He was the author of Short History of British Colonial Policy (1897), Federation and Union within the British Empire (1911), and Causes and Character of the American Revolution (1923).

Egerton, John. [Title, 1st Earl of Bridgewater.] b. 1579; d. at Ashridge, England, Dec. 4, 1649. English politician; son of Sir Thomas Egerton. Served in Essex's Irish expedition (1599); created (1603) a Knight of the Bath by James I; created Earl of Bridgewater (1617); privy councilor (1626). He became lord lieutenant of Wales in 1631 (it was his taking up of this appointment that occasioned the writing and performance (1634) of Milton's Comus at Ludlow Castle).

Egerton, John. [Title, 2nd Earl of Bridgewater.] b. 1622; d. in England, Oct. 26, 1686. English politician; son of John Egerton (1579–1649).

Egerton, John. [Title, 3rd Earl of Bridgewater.] b. in England, Nov. 9, 1646; d. there, March 19, 1701. English politician; son of John Egerton (1622–86). He was a knight of the shire (1685) and later lord lieutenant of Buckinghamshire, but was removed (1687) from the latter office by James II for his lack of loyalty. He was reinstated (1688) by William III.

Egerton, Mount. Mountain peak in Antarctica, rising ab. 10 mi. S of Mount Hamilton and ab. 25 mi. W by NW of Cape Douglas, on the W side of the Ross Shelf Ice, in ab. 80°50′ S., 158°25′ E. Elevation, ab. 7,660 ft.

Egerton, Sir Thomas. [Titles: Baron Ellesmere, Viscount Brackley.] b. in Cheshire, England, c1540; d. at London, March 15, 1617. English jurist, lord chancellor of England from 1603 to 1617.

Egestorff (ā'gẹ.shtôrf), George. Pseudonym of Omteda, Baron Georg von.

Egeus (ẹ.jē'us). Father of Hermia in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

Egg (eg). See also Eigg.

Egg, Augustus Leopold. b. at London, May 2, 1816; d. at Algiers, Algeria, March 26, 1863. English painter of historical and genre scenes.

Egga (eg'ạ). Town in W Africa, in Northern Provinces, Nigeria, on the lower Niger River.

Egge (eg'ẹ), Peter Andreas. b. at Trondheim, Norway, April 1, 1869—. Norwegian novelist, known for his studies of repressed characters and the effects of small-town suspiciousness, especially in Jægtvig og hans Gud (Jaegtvig and his God, 1923), and in Hansine Solstad (1925).

Eggers (eg'ėrz), George William. b. at Dunkirk, N.Y., Jan. 31, 1883—. American art teacher, writer, lithographer, and water-colorist. He has served as director of several museums and as the head of the art department at the College of the City of New York. He was educated at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, then traveled in Europe. He taught at Pratt (1905–06), was head of the art department of Chicago Normal College (1906–16), was art editor of the Rocky Mountain News and Webster's New International Dictionary, and was director of the Art Institute of Chicago (1917–21), the Denver Art Museum (1921–26), and the Worcester, Mass., Art Museum (1926–30). He organized many exhibitions of American art in Europe, exhibited his own water colors in 1932, and is represented in the Art Institute of Chicago, the New York Public Library, and elsewhere. He wrote George Bellows and was coauthor of Teaching of Industrial Arts; he has also written many articles for art magazines, museum bulletins, and educational journals.

Eggertsville (eg'ėrts.vil). Unincorporated community in W New York, in Erie County near Buffalo. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 5,708 (1940).

Egg Harbor City (eg' här'bọr). City in S New Jersey, in Atlantic County: notable as a center for making wine and grapejuice. It is the site of the Atlantic County Agricultural Society fair grounds. 3,838 (1950).

Eggischhorn (eg'ish.hôrn). Mountain in the Alps, near the head of the Rhone valley, in the canton of Valais, Switzerland. Elevation, ab. 9,625 ft.

Eggleston (eg'l.stọn), Edward. b. at Vevay, Ind., Dec. 10, 1837; d. at Joshua's Rock, Lake George, N.Y., Sept. 2, 1902. American author; brother of George Cary Eggleston. In 1856 he became a Methodist preacher, and was editor at different times of periodicals such as The Little Corporal, The Sunday School Teacher, the New York Independent, and Hearth and Home. In 1879 he retired from the pastorate of the Church of the Christian Endeavor at Brooklyn, N.Y., and devoted himself entirely to literature. His chief works of fiction are The Hoosier Schoolmaster (1871), The End of the World (1872), The Mystery of Metropolisville (1873), The Circuit Rider (1874), Roxy (1878), The Hoosier Schoolboy (1883), The Graysons (1887), The Faith Doctor (1891), and Duffels (1893). He also wrote Household History of the United States (1888), History of the United States for Schools (1888), The Beginners of a Nation (1896), and The Transit of Civilization (1901).

Eggleston, Sir Frederic William. b. at Melbourne, Australia, Oct. 17, 1875—. Australian lawyer, politician, publicist, and public servant; knighted in 1941. He was educated at Melbourne and Cambridge universities, and became a member of the bar of the state of Victoria in 1897. He served in the Australian Imperial Forces in World War I, on the staff of the Australian delegation to Versailles in 1919, and as a member of the Victoria legislative assembly from 1920 to 1927; minister of water supply, and railways (1924–26); attorney general and solicitor general (1924–27); chairman of the Australian delegations to the imperial preference conferences of 1927, 1929, and 1936; chairman commonwealth grants committee (1933–41); minister to China (1941–44); minister to the U.S. (1944–46). His chief publications are Life of George Swinburne (1931), State Socialism in Victoria (1932), and Search for a Social Philosophy (1941). He is the editor of and a contributor to several volumes of essays on public affairs.

Eggleston, George Cary. b. at Vevay, Ind., Nov. 26, 1839; d. at New York, April 14, 1911. American journalist and author; brother of Edward Eggleston (1837–1902). He studied at Richmond College, Virginia, and began the practice of law in that state, but abandoned it to enlist in the Confederate army, in which he served throughout the Civil War. Later, at New York, he held editorial positions on various newspapers, among others the Evening Post (1875–81), the Commercial Advertiser (1884–89), and the World (1889–1900). He published many novels and other books, including A Rebel's Recollections (1874), Southern Soldier Stories (1898), A Carolina Cavalier (1901), Evelyn Byrd (1904), A Daughter of the South (1905), Two Gentlemen of Virginia (1908), Westover of Wanalah (1910), and The History of the Confederate War (2 vols., 1910).

Eggmühl (ek'mül). [Also, Eckmühl.] Village in S Germany, in Lower Bavaria, situated on the Grosse Laber River, ab. 13 mi. SE of Regensburg. Here, on April 22, 1809, Napoleon defeated the Austrians under the archduke Charles. For his part in the battle the French marshal Louis Nicolas Davout was created Prince d'Eckmühl.

Egham (eg'ạm). Urban district in SE England, in Surrey, situated on the river Thames ab. 2 mi. W of Staines, ab. 21 mi. W of Waterloo station, London. The district contains Runnymede, where the Magna Charta was signed, on June 15, 1215. Pop. 24,515 (1951).

Egilsson (ā'gils.sôn), Sveinbjørn. b. at Innri-Njardrik, Iceland, 1791; d. at Reykjavík, Iceland, Aug. 17, 1852. Icelandic philologist. His chief work is a Lexicon poëticum antiquae linguae septentrionalis (1854–60).

Eginhard (ā'gin.härt). See Einhard.

Egirdir Lake (e.gir.dir'). See Eğridir Lake.

Eglamore (eg'lạ.mōr) or Eglamour (-mör), Sir. Valiant knight and heroic champion of the Round Table, in the Arthurian cycle of romances. There is a ballad which recounts how he "slew a terrible huge great monstrous dragon."

Eglamour (eg'lạ.mör). In Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona, the agent for Sylvia's escape.

Eglantine (eg'lạn.tīn). In the story of Valentine and Orson, a romance of the Charlemagne cycle, the bride of Valentine and daughter of King Pepin.

Eglantine, Madame. In Chaucer's Prioress's Tale, the prioress.

> Full well she sang the servicè divine,
> Entunèd in her nose full seemèly.
> And French she spoke full fair and fetisly,
> After the school of Stratford-atte-Bow;
> For French of Paris was to her unknow.

Églantine (dā.glăñ.tēn), Philippe François Nazaire Fabre d'. See Fabre d'Églantine, Philippe François Nazaire.

Egleston (eg'l.stọn), Thomas. b. at New York, Dec. 9, 1832; d. Jan. 15, 1900. American mineralogist. He was a graduate (1854) of Yale. He submitted (1863) a Proposed Plan for a School of Mines and Metallurgy in New York City to the trustees of Columbia College, and the department was opened (1864) as the School of Mines, the first such specialized school in the U.S. Author of The Metallurgy of Silver, Gold and Mercury in the United States (2 vols., 1887, 1890).

Egli (eg'lē), Johann Heinrich. b. at Seegräben, Switzerland, March 4, 1712; d. at Zurich, Switzerland, Dec. 19, 1810. Swiss composer of church and secular music. He taught music at Zurich.

Eglinton (eg'lin.tọn), Earl of. Title held by various members of the Montgomerie family.

Eglinton, John. Pseudonym of Magee, William Kirkpatrick.

Egloff (eg'lof), Gustav. b. at New York, Nov. 10, 1886—. American chemist, notable for his achievements in petroleum chemistry. Research director (1917 et seq.) of Universal Oil Products Company, Chicago; influential in developing petroleum-refining industry in China; increased production of high-octane gasoline from crude oil by application of multiple-coil process; manufactured rubber from butane gas. Author of Earth Oil (1933), Isomerization of Pure Hydrocarbons (1942), The Physical Constants of Hydrocarbons (3 vols., 1939, 1940, 1946), and other works.

Eglon (eg'lon). In Old Testament history, a king of the Moabites who captured Jericho and occupied it for 18 years, during which he oppressed the Hebrews and obliged them to pay tribute.

Egmond (eg'mond, -mọnd; Dutch, ech'mônt). See under Alkmaar.

Egmont (eg'mont). Tragedy by Goethe, published in 1788.

Egmont (eg'mont, -mọnt), Earl of. Title held by various members of the Percevall family.

Egmont (eg'mont; Flemish, ech'mônt) or Egmond (eg'mond), Lamoral. [Titles: Count of Egmont and Prince of Gâvre.] b. at La Hamaide, Hainaut (now part of Belgium), Nov. 18, 1522; d. at Brussels, June 5, 1568. Flemish general and popular hero. He headed the embassy to England that arranged the marriage of Mary Tudor to Philip of Spain (later Philip II). He fought under the emperor Charles V in Algiers, Germany, and France, and led the cavalry for Philip II of Spain at St.-Quentin in 1557 in the victory over the French, and at Gravelines in 1558. The latter victory made an enemy of the duke of Alva, who advised against the battle. He was for a time governor of Flanders and Artois, and was a member of the council of state under the regent, Margaret of Parma. Although a Catholic and a courtier, he opposed the absolute government which Philip II attempted to introduce into the Netherlands under cover of religion. Although he abstained from any overt resistance to Philip, his sovereign, he was treacherously seized by the duke of Alva (Sept. 9, 1567), and executed in company with the Count of Horn after a mockery of a trial by the Council of Blood. The revolt of the Netherlands is usually considered as beginning with Egmont's death.

Egmont, Mount. Extinct volcano in New Zealand, situated in the SW corner of the North Island. It was discovered by Cook on Jan. 13, 1770, and named in honor of Count Egmont. 8,260 ft.

Egoist, The. [Full title: The Egoist: a Comedy in Narrative.] Novel by George Meredith, published in 1879. The central character is the vain and selfish Sir Willoughby Patterne, whose cunning exploitation of others to further his purposes finally leads to his own humiliation.

Egoryevsk (yi.gôr'yifsk). See Yegoryevsk.

Egremont (eg'rẹ.mont). Former urban district, now a parish and market town, in NW England, in Cumberland, situated on the river Ehen ab. 5 mi. SE of Whitehaven, ab. 208 mi. NW of London by rail. It is an iron-mining center. The ruins of Egremont Castle are W of the town. 6,017 (1931).

Eğridir Lake (eg.ri.dir'). [Also: Egerdir (or Egirdir) Lake; Turkish, Eğridir Gölü (gė.lü').] Lake in the il (province or vilayet) of Konya, Turkey, ab. 80 mi. N of the city of Antalya. Length, ab. 30 mi.

Egripo (eg'rē.pô). See Chalcis.

Egripo. Turkish name of Euboea.

Egripos (eg'rē.pôs). See Evripos.

Eguiara y Eguren (ā.gyä'rä ē ā.gō'ren), Juan José. b. at Mexico City, c1695; d. there, Jan. 29, 1763. Mexican author. He took orders, and was professor of theology and rector of the University of Mexico. His most important work is the Biblioteca mexicana, a bibliographical dictionary, of which only a part was printed (Mexico City, 1755). He also wrote numerous philosophical and theological treatises.

Egypt (ē'jipt). [Arabic, Misr; Biblical name, Mizraim; Latin, Aegyptus.] Country in NE Africa, famous for the great antiquity and former splendor of its civilization. It is bounded by the Mediterranean Sea on the N, and extends S, including the delta and the valley of the Nile River, to the second cataract of the Nile and the border of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. On the E it is bounded by Israel, the Gulf of Aqaba, and the Red Sea, and on the W by Libya. It includes the Sinai Peninsula, between the gulfs of Suez and Aqaba. The usual geographical divisions are the Nile valley region from Cairo south, called Upper Egypt, and the delta region, called Lower Egypt. Alexandria is the seaport.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. The country is administratively divided into five governorships (muhafzas) and 15 provinces (mudirias). The government is a hereditary monarchy ruled by a king with a parliament consisting of a chamber of deputies and a senate, and with a council of ministers appointed by the king but responsible to the parliament. Capital, Cairo; area, ab. 386,198 sq. mi.; pop. 19,087,304 (1947).

Terrain and Climate. Egypt proper (i.e., the settled area) consists practically of the delta and a narrow strip on each side of the Nile. The soil of this region has been celebrated for its productiveness, resulting from the inundations of the river, and it was long the granary of Rome. The rest of the country is mostly desert, inhabited by nomads. The highest elevations (ab. 8,000 ft.) are in the Sinai Peninsula; mountains near the Red Sea coast reach ab. 6,000 ft., and plateaus elsewhere in the desert regions average ab. 1,500 ft. The climate is semitropical, with moderate cold in the winter and temperatures up to 110° F. in the summer months, high humidity throughout the year but rain only during the winter, and occasional sand storms in the summer.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Egypt's economy is primarily agricultural, although recent years have seen considerable industrial development. The productivity of the Nile valley has been increased by the construction of the great dam at Aswan, completed in 1902; its height was increased in the period 1907–12. Cotton is by far the most important crop, amounting to about half of the nation's agricultural output. Rice, barley, and other cereals, sugar, legumes, flax, peanuts, and citrus fruits are also grown. Fish is exported. Mineral products include phosphates, oil, asbestos, chromite, and limestone. From its large cotton crop, Egypt makes yarns and textiles, the latter on both hand and mechanical looms. Woolen, rayon, and silk yarns and cloth are also made. Other industries include food processing, cigars and cigarettes, chemicals, and leather.

History. The history of ancient Egypt was given by Manetho under 31 dynasties. The dynasties are thus grouped by Breasted: the Old Kingdom (c3400–c2475 B.C.), dynasties I–VI; the Middle Kingdom (c2445–1580), dynasties IX–XVII; the New Kingdom or Empire (1580–1090), dynasties XVIII–XX. The first dynasty was founded by Menes c3400 B.C. During the early dynasties Memphis was the leading city, and in the time of the IVth dynasty occurred the building of the Pyramids (c2900–2800 B.C.). The construction of Lake Moeris and the Labyrinth are assigned to the XIIth dynasty. Thebes now became the center, and later the invasion of the Hyksos occurred (in the XVth dynasty). After a period of confusion and obscurity Egypt was united under the great Theban XVIIIth dynasty, and under this and the XIXth dynasty reached its highest point in extent and in the grandeur of its monuments. Among the great sovereigns were Thutmose III, Seti I, and Rameses II. The "Pharaoh" of the Exodus has frequently been identified with Merneptah or Meneptah of the XIXth dynasty, and the date stated approximately at c1300 B.C., but he is now dated at 1225–1215 B.C. With the next dynasty began the decline of the country's power. There were some revivals of power, and in the 7th and 6th centuries Greek settlements began, but in 527 B.C. Egypt was conquered by Cambyses, and this Persian dynasty ranks as the XXVIIth. From 406 B.C. native rulers again held power, but in 340 B.C. a short-lived Persian dynasty (the XXXIst and last of Manetho) began; this was overthrown in 332 B.C. by Alexander the Great. After his death Egypt was ruled by his general Ptolemy and Ptolemy's successors down to the death of the famous Cleopatra (Cleopatra VII or VI) in 30 B.C., when Augustus annexed it to the Roman Empire. Egypt was an important center of Christianity. In c640 it was conquered by the Saracens, and formed in later times part of the Ommiad and Abbasside empires. The Fatimites ruled it from 909 to 1171, and thereafter the Ayubites until 1250; they were succeeded by the Mamelukes, who in turn were overthrown by the Turks under Selim I in 1517. Egypt was invaded by Napoleon in 1798, but the French were expelled in 1801. In 1806 Mehemet Ali became pasha, and the country developed greatly. A successful war with Turkey was cut short in 1840 by the intervention of the European powers. In 1869 the Suez Canal was opened. From 1879 France and England exercised a joint supervision over the khedive, but a native revolt, begun under Arabi Pasha in 1881 and suppressed by England in 1882, was followed in 1883 by the abolition of the joint control, and the appointment of an English financial adviser. The Mahdists in the Sudan revolted (1881–85), and in spite of the resistance of Gordon at Khartoum and the campaigns of Wolseley and others the provinces S of the second cataract were lost. By the campaigns of 1896–99 the authority of the government was reëstablished. The predominant position of Great Britain was formally recognized by France in the Anglo-French agreement of April, 1904, and various decrees gradually removed all of the restrictions governing the management of finance. In 1914 Egypt was proclaimed a British protectorate, and the late khedive was deposed, to be replaced by Hussein Kamil (of the family of Mehemet Ali) who became sultan of Egypt. The protectorate terminated in 1922 and the sultan became king. Since then Egypt has been an independent state but with treaties of alliance with Great Britain. In 1936 a 20-year treaty was signed between the two nations providing for the withdrawal of all British troops except those needed to protect British interests in the Suez Canal. In 1947, at the request of the Egyptian government, negotiations were undertaken to change the terms of the treaty, and in 1948 Great Britain gave up all her rights in Egypt and withdrew her troops. However, Britain maintained her hold on the Suez Canal, and in 1951–52 fighting broke out between the British army units and Egyptian guerrillas, the Egyptians demanding withdrawal of the foreigners. The crisis deepened to the point where, in 1952, King Farouk was forced to abdicate in favor of his infant son. The resulting regency was strongly nationalistic.

Culture. The population, besides Egyptians and Europeans, includes Armenians, Nubians, Sudanese, Turks, Syrians, and others. The leading religion is Mohammedanism, but there are many Copts, and also other Christians, and Jews. The prevailing language is Arabic. In the 1947 census some 50,000 of the inhabitants were estimated to be nomads. Education is compulsory up to the age of 12; higher education is available in secondary schools, in a number of technical colleges, and in the University of Fuad I (founded 1908) at Cairo and the University of Farouk I (founded 1943) at Alexandria. Both universities are state-supported and coeducational.

Egypt. Diocese of the prefecture of the East, in the later organization of the Roman Empire.

Egypt Conference. Series of informal meetings on the U.S. battleship Augusta in February, 1945, between President Roosevelt and various Near Eastern leaders including King Farouk of Egypt, Ibn Saud of Arabia, and Haile Selassie of Ethiopia. No concrete decisions were made, these conferences having been intended by Roosevelt primarily as a gesture and an indication of the feeling on the part of the U.S. that it had a commitment in the Near East.

Egyptian Expedition (ē.jip'shan). Expedition undertaken by the French against Egypt in 1798–1801, with the ultimate object of attacking the British empire in India. It was commanded by Napoleon, sailed from Toulon with 35,000 men May 19, 1798; conquered Malta June 12, 1798; defeated the Mamelukes in the battle of the Pyramids July 21, 1798; captured Cairo July 22, 1798; suffered the loss of its fleet by the victory of Nelson at Abukir Aug. 1, 1798; and in 1799 invaded Syria, but was in the same year repulsed by the Turks and the English at Acre, and retreated to Cairo. In August, 1799, Napoleon returned to France, leaving in command Kléber, who was murdered in 1800, and was succeeded by Menou. Menou concluded a treaty with the English at Cairo in 1801, in accordance with which Egypt was restored to the Ottoman Empire, and the French army transported to France by the English fleet.

Egyptian Princess, An. [German, Ägyptische Königstochter.] Novel (1864) by Ebers. The scene is laid in Egypt and Persia about 522 B.C.

Egyptian Thief. Thyamis, the lover of Chariclea, referred to in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Ehard (ā'härt), Hans. b. at Bamberg, Germany, Nov. 10, 1887—. German politician. He served (1919–21, 1923–24) as public prosecutor at Munich, where he helped prosecute Hitler after the Beer Hall Putsch of November, 1923. He was appointed state secretary of the ministry of justice in 1945. A member of the Christian Social Union, he was elected (1947) to the Bavarian diet and became Bavarian minister president in December, 1947. He was elected chairman of the Christian Social Union in May, 1949.

Eheberg (ā'ę.berk), Karl Theodor von. b. at Munich, Germany, Jan. 31, 1855—. German political economist, notable in the field of the science of finance. He served as professor (1882 et seq.) at the University of Erlangen. Author of Finanzwissenschaft (Science of Public Finance, 1903) and Die Kriegsfinanzen (The War Finances, 1917).

Ehecatl (ā.ā.kä'tl). In Aztec religion, the wind god, one of the many forms of Quetzalcoatl.

Ehingen (ā'ing.ęn). Small town in Württemberg, SW Germany, on the Danube River ab. 15 mi. SW of Ulm.

Ehoue (ā'wā). See Ewe.

Ehrenberg (ā'rę.berk), Christian Gottfried. b. at Delitzsch, Prussia, April 19, 1795; d. at Berlin, June 27, 1876. German naturalist, especially noted for his studies of Infusoria. He wrote Die Infusionstierchen als vollkommene Organismen (1838) and Mikro-Geologie (1854).

Ehrenberg, Richard. b. at Wolffenbüttel, Germany, Feb. 5, 1857; d. at Rostock, Germany, Dec. 19, 1921. German economist. Originally a banker, he became a professor of economics in 1897, teaching first at the University of Göttingen, and later at Rostock. He did considerable writing on the history of free enterprise, his best-known work being Das Zeitalter der Fugger (3rd ed., 1922). He founded (1909) an institute for economic research.

Ehrenberg-Böhlitz (-bē'lits). Town in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Saxony, situated on the border between Saxony and Saxony-Anhalt, NW of Leipzig: a suburb of Leipzig. It has manufactures of musical instruments (Hupfeld-Zimmermann), and metallurgical and woodenware industries. The population is predominantly Protestant. 10,453 (1946).

Ehrenbreitstein (ā.rę.brīt'shtīn). Former town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Rhine River opposite Koblenz: noted for its fortress, located on a steep rock above the river. It was taken by the French in 1631, by the Imperialists in 1637, again by the French in 1799. It was modernized in the 19th and 20th centuries, but razed after World War I. In World War II the town was taken by the Allies on March 27, 1945. It is now incorporated into the city of Koblenz.

Ehrenburg (e'rę.börk), Ilya Grigoryevich. b. at Moscow, 1891—. Russian journalist, novelist, and poet who lived for many years in Western Europe. He began by writing imitative verse, later turning to facile tales which satirized communism and free enterprise alike. In the 1930's he began to picture Soviet life more sympathetically and soon his enthusiasm for it was complete. During World War II he became the most popular Soviet journalist and a semi-official spokesman for the regime. All of his writings, some of which were in verse, were directed to helping the war effort. In 1946 he visited the U.S. and subsequently recorded his unfavorable impressions of that country. Several of his novels, notably The Fall of Paris (1943) and Storm (1949), a panorama of the recent armed conflict, and some of his war and post-war sketches, are available in English.

Ehrencron-Kidde (ā'rę.krōn.kiтн'ę), Astrid. b. at Copenhagen, Jan. 4, 1871—. Danish novelist; wife of Harald Kidde. Several of her novels are romantic, warmhearted studies of folk types in the Swedish district of Värmland: these include the trilogy Brødrene Nystad (1925), Brødrehuset (1926), and Bjærgmandsgaarden (1927).

Ehrenfeld (ā'rę.felt). Commune in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia: a suburb of Cologne.

Ehrenfels (ā'rę.fels), Baron Christian von. b. at Rodaun, Austria, June 20, 1859; d. at Lichtenau, Austria, Sept. 8, 1932. Austrian philosopher who served (1896 et seq.) as professor at the University of Prague. While at Vienna he published his most important paper, "Über Gestaltqualitäten," (Vtljsch, f. wiss. Philos., 14 (1890) pp. 249–292). This concept of Gestaltqualität (form-quality), which anticipated the later school of Gestalt psychology, was a reaction against the then current elementism of W. Wundt. The concept held that form was not a combination of other qualities, but a new quality: a square was not simply a sum of the four lines (the Fundamente), but was a new quality that emerged from the foundation (the Grundlage) formed by the arrangement of the four lines. He was the author also of System der Werttheorie (1897, 1898), Sexualethik (1907), Kosmogonie (1916), and Die Religion der Zukunft (1929).

Ehrenstein (ā'rę.shtīn), Albert. b. at Vienna, Dec. 22, 1886—. Austrian writer, a typical representative of expressionism in the prose and lyric genres. He was also a translator and essayist.

Ehrhardt (ār'härt), Heinrich. b. at Zella-Mehlis, Germany, Nov. 17, 1840; d. there, Nov. 20, 1928. German industrialist. Originally a locksmith, he founded a metal products factory, and in 1901 became an arms manufacturer.

Ehrhardt, Hermann. b. at Diersburg, Germany, Nov. 29, 1881—. German naval officer. After World War I he organized a free corps which took part in the Kapp putsch of 1920; later founded a secret organization, Consul, which was involved in the assassination of both Erzberger and Rathenau. Arrested, he was allowed to escape; continued to plot against the Weimar Republic. In 1933 he joined the Nazi party.

Ehringsdorf Man (ā'ringz.dôrf). See under Neanderthal Man.

Ehrismann (ā'ris.män), Gustav. b. 1855—. German historian of literature, professor at Greifswald. He is especially known for his Geschichte der deutschen Literatur bis zum Ausgang des Mittelalters (1918 et seq.) and Der Geist der deutschen Dichtung im Mittelalter (1925).

Ehrlich (ār'liċh), Arnold Bogumil. b. at Włodawa, in what was then Polish Russia, Jan. 15, 1848; d. Nov. 5, 1919. Bible scholar. Studied at Leipzig; came (1878) to U.S. Author of Mikra ki-Pheschuto (3 vols., 1899–1901), Die Psalmen (1905), and Randglossen zur hebräischen Bibel (7 vols., 1908–14), considered today to be outstanding contributions to scholarly Bible interpretations.

Ehrlich, Heinrich. [Full name, Alfred Heinrich Ehrlich.] b. at Vienna, Oct. 5, 1822; d. Dec. 29, 1899. Austrian pianist and writer on music. Court pianist at Hanover; professor (1864–72) at the Berlin Stern Conservatorium; composed many piano pieces, such as Conzertstück in Ungarischer Weise. Author of Musikstudien beim Klavierspiel (1891).

Ehrlich, Paul. b. at Strehlen (Strzelin), in Silesia, March 14, 1854; d. at Homburg, Germany, Aug. 20, 1915. German biochemist. In 1910, he discovered the salvarsan arsenicals, famous pioneer chemotherapeutic agents, formerly of greatest importance in the cure of syphilis. Arsphenamine, number 606 in the series of chemicals tested, was later superseded by the less toxic neosalvarsan. Moreover, he conceived the "lateral chain theory," announced in 1897, which played an important part in the explanation of the facts of immunization, and for which he received half of the 1908 Nobel prize in medicine. He did important work on the staining of microscopical specimens, on the tubercle bacillus, and the like. He was head of the Koch Institute for Infectious Diseases (1890), director of the Institute for Serum Research at Dahlem (1896), which in 1899 became the Institute for Experimental Therapy at Frankfort on the Main, and professor at Frankfort (1914).

Éibar (ā'bär). Town in N Spain, in the province of Guipúzcoa, situated in the center of the Basque country, ab. 27 mi. W of San Sebastián: known for its long-established manufacture of arms and steel products. 11,772 (1940).

Eibenstock (ī'bẹn.shtok). Town in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Saxony, situated in the Erzgebirge, near the Zwickauer Mulde River, ab. 16 mi. SW of Zwickau: summer resort. Before World War II it had manufactures of curtains, lace, and embroidery, which had been introduced in 1775 to aid the starving population, and was noted for its tambour embroidery. It has a school for the textile industry. 8,250 (1946).

Eibergen (ī'ber.ċhẹn). Town in E Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, situated on the Berkel River near the German border, NE of Arnhem. It has agricultural markets, construction industries, and textile manufactures. 10,257 (1939).

Eibler (ī'blėr), Joseph Edler von. See Eybler or Eibler, Joseph Edler von.

Eichberg (īch'berk), Julius. b. at Düsseldorf, Germany, June 13, 1824; d. at Boston, Jan. 18, 1893. Composer and conductor. He was for some time a professor in the Conservatory at Geneva, Switzerland. In 1857 he went to New York, and in 1859 to Boston, where he was director of the orchestra at the Boston Museum for seven years. In 1867 he established the Boston Conservatory of Music, of which he remained the head until his death. He composed, among other works, four operettas: The Doctor of Alcantara, The Rose of Tyrol, The Two Cadis, and A Night in Rome.

Eichelberger (ī'kẹl.bėr.gėr), Robert Lawrence. b. at Urbana, Ohio, March 9, 1886—. American infantry officer. Graduate (1909) of U.S. Military Academy; served on Mexican border (1911), in Panama (1911–15), in Siberia (1918), and in Far East (1920–21); superintendent (1940–42) of West Point; appointed major general (1941) and lieutenant general (October, 1942); commanded forces in capture (January, 1943) of Buna, New Guinea, and at New Britain; participated (1944–45) in reoccupation of Philippines; commander (1946–49) under MacArthur of Allied and U.S. occupation forces in Japan. Author of Our Jungle Road to Tokyo (1950).

Eichelberger, William Snyder. b. at Baltimore, Sept. 18, 1865; d. at Buffalo, Feb. 3, 1951. American astronomer and mathematician. He taught (1890–96) mathematics and astronomy at Wesleyan University, and in 1900 he was appointed professor of mathematics at the U.S. Naval Academy. In 1900, 1901, and 1905, he was a member of U.S. eclipse expeditions to Pinehurst, N.C., Sumatra, and Daroca in Spain. From 1898 to 1929 he was with the U.S. Naval Observatory, and in 1929 he joined the staff of the Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester, N.Y. He was elected to scientific societies in England, Germany, and America. His chief work is Positions and Proper Motions of 1504 Standard Stars (1925), and he was coauthor (with Arthur Newton) of The Orbit of Neptune's Satellite and the Pole of Neptune's Equator (1926). With F. B. Littell, he compiled a catalogue of 23,521 stars.

Eichendorff (ī'ċhẹn.dôrf), Baron Joseph von. b. at Lubowitz (his father's estate), near Ratibor (Racibórz), in Silesia, March 10, 1788; d. at Neisse (Nysa), in Silesia, Nov. 26, 1857. German poet and novelist, considered to have been one of the best lyricists of the Romantic Movement in Germany. While studying at Halle (1805–06) and Heidelberg (1807–08) he associated with one or another of the romanticists. He served in the Wars of Liberation (1813 and 1815) and later was in government service at Breslau, Danzig, and Königsberg. While at Königsberg he interested himself in the restoration of Marienburg, ancient seat of the Teutonic Order. His novel Ahnung und Gegenwart (1815) touches on the contemporary Napoleonic war. His story Aus dem Leben eines Taugenichts (1826) is considered by many to be the gem of all German romantic narratives. His lyrics have in many cases attained the popularity of folk songs (In einem kühlen Grunde, O Täler weit und Höhen, Wem Gott will rechte Gunst erweisen, Wer hat dich, du schöner Wald, and others).

Eichhorn (īch'hôrn), Emil. b. at Röhrsdorf, Germany, Oct. 9, 1863; d. at Berlin, July 26, 1925. German politician. He served (1903–11) as a member of the Reichstag, joined (1918) the newly founded German Communist Party, and was chief (November, 1918–January, 1919) of the Berlin police; his removal by Ebert caused the street fighting in Berlin of January, 1919. He was a Communist member of the Weimar constitutional assembly (1919–20) and of the Reichstag (1920–25).

Eichhorn, Hermann von. b. at Breslau, Feb. 13, 1848; assassinated at Kiev, Russia, July 30, 1918. German general; a grandson, on the maternal side, of the German philosopher F. W. Schelling (1775–1854). He saw service during the campaigns of 1866 and 1870–71. During World War I he fought in the battle of the Masurian lakes (1915) and later that same year took Kovno and Grodno on the Russian front. From 1916 to 1918 he was in command of an army group; he became (1917) a general field marshal. While commanding at Kiev he was assassinated by Russian revolutionists.

Eichhorn, Johann Gottfried. b. at Dörrenzimmern, in Hohenlohe-Öhringen, Germany, Oct. 16, 1752; d. at Göttingen, Germany, June 27, 1827. German scholar, historian, and Biblical critic, professor at Göttingen (1788 et seq.). Among his critical works are Einleitung in das Alte Testament (1780–83) and Einleitung in das Neue Testament (1804–14).

Eichhorn, Karl Friedrich. b. at Jena, Germany, Nov. 20, 1781; d. at Cologne, Germany, July 4, 1854. German jurist; son of Johann Gottfried Eichhorn. His chief work is Deutsche Staats- und Rechts-geschichte (1808–23).

Eichler (īch'lėr), August Wilhelm. b. at Neukirchen, in Hesse, Germany, April 22, 1839; d. 1887. German botanist, professor of botany at the universities of Graz, Kiel, and Berlin. He is remembered chiefly for his system of classifying plants and for his descriptive studies of Brazilian plant life. He was trained at the University of Marburg (which is noted for its botanical gardens).

Eichrodt (īch'rōt), Ludwig. [Pseudonym, Rudolf Rodt.] b. at Durlach, Germany, Feb. 2, 1827; d. at Lahr, Germany, Feb. 2, 1892. German poet and jurist, best known for the characters Biedermaier and Treuherz, which he created in "Biedermaiers Liederlust," humorous poems published in Fliegende Blätter. Like his colleague and friend Viktor Scheffel, he cultivated the humor and sentimentality of academic life. There is a typical selection of his poetry in Lyrischer Kehraus (1869). He edited an anthology of light verse under the title Hortus deliciarum (1876–80).

Eichstädt (īch'shtet), Prince of. See Beauharnais, Eugène de.

Eichstätt (īch'shtet). [Also, Eichstädt.] Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Middle and Upper Franconia, situated on the Altmühl River ab. 38 mi. S of Nuremberg. It has small metallurgical, knitwear, and paperware industries. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic bishopric; the cathedral is a Gothic building, started in the 11th century and several times altered (the last 1881–1903). Other buildings are mostly in the baroque style; these include the churches of Saint Peter, of the Guardian Angel, and of Notre Dame, and the Benedictine Convent of Saint Walburga. The former episcopal residence is also in the style of the 17th and 18th centuries; the library there has more than 80,000 volumes and manuscripts. Above the town is the Willibaldsburg, a castle in the Renaissance style, erected in the 17th century according to designs by Elias Holl. Town and bishopric were founded (740) by Saint Boniface, who appointed an English monk, Saint Willibald, as the first bishop. The bishopric, during the Middle Ages one of the wealthiest in Germany, was secularized in 1802, became part of Bavaria in 1805, and was recreated in 1821. Pop. 10,883 (1950).

Eichwald (īch'vält), Karl Eduard. b. at Jelgava, in Courland, July 4 (by the Old Style calendar then still used in Russia), 1795; d. at St. Petersburg, Nov. 10, 1876. Russian naturalist, author of Zoölogia specialis (1829–31), Die Urwelt Russlands (1840–47), and others.

Eickemeyer (ī'kẹ.mī.ėr), Rudolf. b. at Altenbamberg, Bavaria, Germany, Oct. 31, 1831; d. Jan. 23, 1895. American inventor and manufacturer. He came (1850) to America after the failure of the 1848 revolution, and opened (1854) a repair shop at Yonkers, N.Y., where he invented and patented a "whip-stitch" for leather hatbands, a hat-blocking machine (1865), a hat-stretching machine, a machine to pounce hats, and other machinery which revolutionized the hat industry. He also perfected (1870) a differential gear for reaping and mowing machines. Experimentation in electricity and armatures resulted in his invention of the first symmetrical drum armature, the iron-clad dynamo, and the first direct-connected railway motor. His business was consolidated (1892) with the General Electric Company. He discovered the talents of, and was the first to employ, Charles P. Steinmetz.

Eider (ī'dėr). River in N Germany, in Schleswig-Holstein, which flows into the North Sea ab. 25 mi. N of the mouth of the Elbe. Length, ab. 115 mi.

Eidlitz (īd'lits), Leopold. b. at Prague, March 29, 1823; d. at New York, March 22, 1908. American architect. He was educated at the polytechnic school at Prague, and, after a course of study at Vienna, came to America and established himself at New York. He was associated with H. H. Richardson in the construction of the state capitol at Albany and designed a number of churches and other buildings in the Gothic style.

Eidsvoll (āts'vôl). [Also, Eidsvold.] Commune in SE Norway, in the fylke (county) of Akershus, ab. 40 mi. by road NE of Oslo. It is noted as the locality in which the earliest known Norse council, the Eidsivating, met. In 1814 an elected national assembly met here and drafted the Norwegian constitution of May 17, 1814, which is the basic law of Norway. The assembly building is preserved as a national monument on its original site at Eidsvolls Verk. Pop. ab. 11,000.

Eielsen (ā'ęl.sęn), Elling. b. at Voss, Norway, Sept. 19, 1804; d. at Chicago, Jan. 10, 1883. American religious leader and lay preacher. He preached widely throughout Norway, Sweden, and Denmark before emigrating (1839) to the U.S. Settling at the Fox River Settlement, La Salle County, Ill., he preached in the surrounding territory and in the "meeting-house" in his own home. He traveled (1859) to the Texas settlements, doing missionary work among the Missouri Potawatomi. He organized (1846) the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America.

Eifel (ī'fęl). Volcanic mountainous and picturesque region in W Germany, between the valleys of the Rhine, Moselle, and Roer. It is divided into the Schnee-Eifel and the Vorder-Eifel. Elevation of the Hohe Acht, 2,490 ft.

Eiffel (ī'fęl; French, e.fel), Alexandre Gustave. b. at Dijon, France, Dec. 15, 1832; d. at Paris, Dec. 28, 1923. French engineer. He took charge (1858) of constructing the iron bridge over the Garonne River at Bordeaux, and subsequently built the railroad bridge over the Douro at Oporto, Portugal, designed locks for the French Panama Canal Company, constructed the iron framework for Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty, and built the iron span over the Tardes near Montluçon. His most notable engineering feat was the Eiffel Tower, constructed (1887–89) on the Champ-de-Mars at Paris. He also built the Aerodynamics Laboratory (the first of its kind) at Auteuil, later presenting it to the French government, and made important researches in aerodynamics.

Eiffel Tower. Tower, 984 ft. high, built of iron framework, in the Champ-de-Mars at Paris, for the exhibition of 1889. The general form is that of a concave pyramid. The base consists of four inclined piers set at the angles of a square of 336 ft. The piers are connected on the sides of the square by huge arches. After rising ab. 600 ft., the four piers are merged into one. There are three platforms at different heights: the top one, over 900 ft. from the ground, is surrounded by a balcony and covered with a glass pavilion 54 ft. square. Above this rises the lantern, which is fitted for scientific observations.

Eigenbrakel (ī'ċhęn.brä.kęl). Flemish name of Braine-l'Alleud.

Eigenmann (ī'gęn.män), Carl H. b. at Flehingen, Germany, March 9, 1863; d. in California, April 24, 1927. American ichthyologist. He was professor of zoölogy (1891 et seq.) and dean of the graduate school (1908–27) at Indiana University and curator of fishes (1909–18) at the Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh. With his wife, Rosa Smith, whom he married in 1887, he studied South American catfishes, California fishes, and the blind fish of the Indiana and Kentucky caves. He was the author of Cave Vertebrates of America, a Study in Degenerative Evolution (1909), The Fresh-water Fishes of British Guiana (1912), The Fresh-water Fishes of Northwestern South America (1922), and The Fresh-water Fishes of Chile (1927).

Eiger (ī'gėr). One of the highest mountains of the Bernese Oberland, Switzerland, NE of the Jungfrau. Elevation, ab. 13,042 ft.

Eigg (eg). [Also, Egg.] Small island in the Inner Hebrides, in N Scotland, in Inverness-shire, lying between the Sound of Sleat on the E and the Sea of the Hebrides on the West, ab. 10 mi. N of Ardnamurchan Point. Length, ab. 5 mi.; greatest width, ab. 4 mi.

Eight, the. See under Society of Independent Artists.

Eighteen Hundred and Seven or Friedland (frēd'land). Large painting by Meissonier (1876), now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York. It represents a regiment of cuirassiers passing at a gallop in a grain field before Napoleon, who sits on a white horse at the left, attended by his marshals and staff.

Eighteenth Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution of the U.S. which, after failing to secure a two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives in 1914, was submitted to the states in 1917 and ratified in 1919. Its creation was the result of agitation for national prohibition led by temperance organizations. The amendment declared illegal the manufacture, transportation, sale, importation, or exportation of intoxicating beverages and sanctioned Congress and the states with concurrent powers for enforcement. The Volstead Act of 1919 defined the meaning of intoxicating beverages (more than 0.5 percent alcohol) and set up federal enforcement procedures. The act was vetoed by President Wilson but passed over the veto by Congress. The amendment was repealed by the Twenty-first Amendment in 1933.

Eighth of January, The. Play by Richard Penn Smith, produced and published in 1829.

Eight Immortals. [Chinese, Pa-Hsien.] Eight characters of Chinese legend, of very ancient origin, but interpreted as rebels against Sung-dynasty conventions. They are said to be immortal, and their nonsense is construed as great wisdom in that it defies man-made codes.

Eight Trigrams. [Chinese, Pa-Kua.] Eight combinations of lines, arranged in circular form. They consist of groups of three whole or divided lines. They are said to have been devised by the legendary emperor Fu Hsi, and figure prominently in the ancient Chinese Classic of Changes and are also used for purposes of divination. The above simple combinations were later increased to 64.

Eijkman (īk'män), Christiaan. b. at Nijkerk, Netherlands, Aug. 11, 1858; d. at Utrecht, Netherlands, Nov. 5, 1930. Dutch hygienist. He was director (1888–96) of the pathological institute at Weltevreden, in Java, and professor of hygiene (1898–1928) at the University of Utrecht. He was the first to produce a deficiency disease experimentally, in fowls (1893), discovering that a nutritional deficiency is responsible for beri-beri. He also discovered (1897–1900) that in removing the husks of the rice grain an important substance was lost in the polishing process; with this discovery he gave the first impulse to the theory of the avitaminoses (deprivation or deficiency diseases). In 1929 he was awarded (with Frederick G. Hopkins) the Nobel prize in medicine for the discovery of the antineuritic vitamin B_1 (thiamine). Author of Over gezondheid en ziekte in heete gewesten (1898) and Specifieke antistoffen (1901).

Eike von Repgow (ī'kę fon rep'gō) or Repkow (rep'kō). [Also spelled Eyke, Eiko, Ecco, or Ebco.] fl. first half 13th century. German nobleman and author of the Sachsenspiegel (c1223), the earliest effective codification of German (in contrast to Roman) law. It was written in Latin, but only the author's own translation into Low German prose is extant. It appeared in Dutch, Czech, and Polish adaptations, and served as the model for a later Schwabenspiegel, Frankenspiegel, Laienspiegel, Ritterspiegel, and many others. Luther called the Decalogue the Sachsenspiegel of the Jews. In his rhymed prologue, Eike explains that his book is called Sachsenspiegel ("mirror of the Saxons") because the Saxons can see in it their law as women see their faces in a looking glass.

Eikon Basilike (ī'kon ba.sil'i.kē). Book describing the sufferings of Charles I of England, published in 1649. It is usually attributed to Bishop Gauden.

Eikonoclastes (ī.kon.ō.klas'tēz). Pamphlet written by John Milton in answer to Gauden's Eikon Basilike.

Eil (ēl), Lower Loch. See under Linnhe, Loch.

Eildon Hills (ēl′dǫn). Three peaks in S Scotland, in Roxburghshire, situated ab. 1 mi. S of Melrose. The remains of a Roman camp, and a barrow, supposedly of Druidical origin, are here. The hills are famous in Scottish legend. Elevation of highest summit, 1,385 ft.

Eilean Molach (ā′lin mō.läch′). See Ellen's Isle.

Eileen Carmody (ī′lēn kär′mō.di). See Carmody, Eileen.

Eileithyia (ē.lē.thī′ą). An ancient name of El Kab.

Eilenburg (ī′lęn.bůrk). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the Mulde River ab. 14 mi. NE of Leipzig. Before World War II it had manufactures of cotton textiles, plastics, machinery, furniture, pianos, and candies. The Nikolaikirche (Church of Saint Nicholas) is a brick building dating from the 15th and 16th centuries; the Rathaus (town hall) dates from 1544. The town is named after the Ilburg, a frontier castle built for defense against the Slavs in the 10th century; it belonged to the house of Wettin from that time until 1815. The population is predominantly Protestant. 19,980 (1946).

Eilhart von Oberge (ī′härt fon ō′ber.gę). fl. c1180–1207. Medieval German poet from near Hildesheim, author of the first German version of the Tristan story. His Tristrant und Isalde (c1180), written in a Middle German dialect, had an unknown French source. Eilhart's epic exists in a fragment of 600 lines. However, there is a Czech translation, and also a German prose version printed in 1484. Eilhart is a forerunner of the so-called court poets.

Eilissos (ē.li.sôs′). Modern Greek name of the Ilissus.

Eilshemius (il.shē′mi.us), Louis Michel. b. at Arlington, N.J., Feb. 4, 1864; d. at New York, Dec. 29, 1941. American mystical painter, writer, and composer. He studied at Cornell University, then at New York and at the Julian Academy, Paris. He exhibited in France, Germany, and the U.S., having one-man shows at New York sponsored by the Société Anonyme, of which he was a member; he belonged also to the American Federation of Arts and the Modern Artists of America. He did not achieve recognition until he had become old and embittered. His work is represented in the Phillips Memorial Gallery at Washington, D.C., the Metropolitan Museum, Whitney Museum, and Museum of Modern Art at New York, Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Cleveland Museum, Luxembourg Museum at Paris, and Detroit Institute of Art. Among his better-known paintings are Green Valley, Children in Central Park, Nymphs Teasing, Contentment, Roma, Low Tide, Storm Clouds, Morning, The Stream, Before the Promenade, and Rose Marie.

Eily O'Connor (ī′li ō.kon′ọr). See O'Connor, Eily.

Eimbeck (īm′bek). See Einbeck.

Eimeo (ī.mā′ō). See Moorea.

Einaudi (ā.nou′dē), Luigi. b. at Carru, Italy, March 24, 1874—. Italian statesman and journalist. On the staff (1900–25) of the daily Corriere della Sera, he was later (1930–36) editor of the Riforma soziale, a review. He was appointed (1945) a governor of the Bank of Italy. After being appointed (1947) vice-president of the council of ministers, he was elected (May 11, 1948) president of the Italian republic.

Einbeck (īn′bek). [Also, Eimbeck.] Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated on the Ilme River near its junction with the Leine River, ab. 37 mi. S of Hanover. It has textile manufactures, breweries, and a sugar refinery. It is a picturesque old town, with its medieval fortifications still standing, and containing a number of ecclesiastical and secular buildings of the Gothic and Renaissance periods. The Church of Saint James dates from the 13th century, the Church of Alexander from the 14th century, the Church of Mary from the 15th century; the Rathaus (town hall) was erected in the period 1550–56. The town came under the rule of the house of Welf in 1272. It prospered in the Middle Ages because of its well-known breweries; it is said that the term "Bock," indicating a strongly brewed brown beer, is derived from the name Einbeck. Except for the Stiftskirche, which suffered some minor roof damage, the town and the above mentioned buildings remained intact during World War II. The population is predominantly Protestant. 17,759 (1950).

Eindhoven (īnt′hō.vęn). City in S Netherlands, in the province of North Brabant, situated near the confluence of the Dommel and Tongel rivers ab. 55 mi. SE of Rotterdam. It is a manufacturing town containing the Philips factories (electrical and radio equipment) and also machine, glass and plate glass, tobacco, button, stone, and paper factories and breweries. There are a number of industrial and residential suburbs. In World War II, it was the southernmost point reached by Allied air-borne troops in September, 1944; a large part of the center of the city was damaged or destroyed. 143,965 (est. 1951).

Eindhoven Landing. Air-borne attack (Sept. 17, 1944) by U.S. paratroops of General Lewis Brereton's First Allied Airborne Army. This landing sought to seize advance positions on the Meuse and Waal rivers in the Netherlands. Unlike its unfortunate counterpart further N at Arnhem this landing was coördinated (Sept. 22) with other advances of the Allied armies.

Einem (ī′nęm), Karl von. [Also, von Rothmaler.] b. at Herzberg, Germany, Jan. 1, 1853; d. at Mülheim, Germany, April 7, 1934. Prussian general. He organized the military expedition to China (1900), commanded the seventh army corps (1909 et seq.), and led the German third army in World War I.

Ein Feste Burg (īn fes′tę bůrk′). [Eng. trans., "A Mighty Fortress."] First words of a hymn by Martin Luther ("Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott"), a version of Psalm xlvi. The hymn was probably written in 1527. The tune seems to have appeared in Köphl's Psalmen und geistliche Lieder, probably in 1538. The form now used is by Johann Sebastian Bach (in his Cantata No. 80 and also in a choral prelude) and differs slightly from Luther's original. The words have also been modernized.

Einhard (īn′härt). [Sometimes called Eginhard.] b. in Austrasia, c770; d. at Seligenstadt on the Main, Germany, probably on March 14, 840. Frankish scholar and biographer of Charlemagne. He was of noble birth, and was educated at the monastery of Fulda. He removed not later than 796 to the court of Charlemagne, who appointed him minister of public works and sent him in 806 as imperial legate to Rome. He was retained in office by Louis le Débonnaire, to whose son Lothaire he became tutor in 817. He retired in 830 to Mulinheim (which he named Seligenstadt), where he erected a monastery. He was married to Imma, who was the sister of Bernhard, bishop of Worms, but who was supposed by later tradition to be a daughter of Charlemagne. He wrote a life of Charlemagne, Vita Caroli Magni. He may have been the architect of the cathedral at Aachen.

Einhorn (īn′hôrn), David. b. at Dispeck, Bavaria, Germany, Nov. 10, 1809; d. at New York, Nov. 2, 1879. American theologian, rabbi, reform leader, and abolitionist. He received a thoroughly orthodox training, which is interesting in view of the fact that he later became an outstanding liberal and radical. He was educated at the village school, at the Fürth Talmudic Academy, and at the universities of Erlangen, Würzburg, and Munich. For ten years, from 1832, when he was qualified to become a rabbi, he was given no appointment in Germany because his views were considered dangerous. In 1842 he was called to head a congregation, but immediately found that he had little in common with those he was supposed to guide and inspire. After nine long years of unspiritual strife and conflict he left Germany for Pest, in Hungary. Two months later, in 1851, his temple was closed by government orders. In 1855, after four years of enforced idleness, he came to the U.S. to become the leader of a congregation at Baltimore. With a courage that was a credit to his heart, although it may not have been diplomatic, he began (writing in German) to attack slavery, which did nothing to increase his popularity in a city where most of the population was certainly opposed to the Abolitionists. On April 19, 1861, the famous Baltimore Riot broke out, and two or three days later he was forced to flee at night, under police protection, in order to escape being attacked by an angry mob. His coreligionists, who had nothing against him on other grounds, made it clear that they were willing to have him if he would agree not to mention slavery or to attack it in his sermons, but Einhorn refused to compromise with his principles. He then went to Philadelphia, where he accepted the post of rabbi to the Keneseth Israel Congregation. In approval of his attitude on the question of slavery, the Union League of Philadelphia made him an honorary member. In 1866 he was at New York, as rabbi of the Congregation Adath Jeshurun, which became Congregation Beth El after merging with another group in 1874. It was the last position he held, and he kept it until July, 1879, four months before his death. His works were Das Prinzip des Mosaismus und dessen Verhältnis zum Heidenthum und Rabbinischen Judenthum (1854), a system of Jewish theology published at Leipzig before he left for America, and Ner Tamid, Die Lehre des Judenthums dargestellt fur Schule und Haus (1866). His sermons were published in book form in 1880. In 1856 he founded a German-language monthly, Sinai, which he developed into an organ for reform Judaism. It lasted until 1863, when (as he said) "it died in the battle against slavery." He also issued Olath Tamid (1856), a reform version of the orthodox Jewish prayer book, to which he added a German translation. In his day he was recognized as a leading spirit of reform Judaism in America.

Einhorn, Max. b. at Suchowol, near Grodno, Russia, Jan. 10, 1862—. American physician. He was graduated (1884) at Berlin, was a pupil of Paul Ehrlich, and went (1885) to New York, where he was professor (1896–1922) at the New York Post Graduate School. He invented many ingenious devices and instruments, such as gastrodiaphany, also called Einhorn's method (1889), stomach buckets (1890) and duodenal buckets (1908) facilitating studies on pancreatic secretion, and a form of fermentation saccharimeter. He introduced the concept of a functional disorder of secretion, achylia gastrica (1892), and described (1895) gastric ulcer. Author of Diseases of the Stomach (1895), Diseases of Intestines (1900), Practical Problems of Diet and Nutrition (1905), Lectures on Dietetics (1914), Duodenal Tube and Its Possibilities (1920), Methoden der künstlichen Ernährung (1922), and Diseases of the Stomach (1929).

Einigen (ī'ni.gẹn), Hans Müller-. See Müller, Hans.

Einsame Insel (īn'zä.mẹ in'zẹl). See Hebrides, The.

Einsiedeln (īn'zē.dẹln). Town in C Switzerland, in the canton of Schwyz. It is one of the most celebrated places of pilgrimage in Switzerland. The monastery was founded in the 9th century, and in 1294 received the standing of a principality from the German emperor Rudolph. The buildings date from the early 18th century, a good example of S German baroque architecture. Furniture, stucco decoration, and paintings were produced by the artist-brothers Adam of Bavaria. The library comprises more than 100,000 volumes, many incunabla, and medieval manuscripts. 8,392 (1941).

Einstein (īn'stīn; German, īn'sht'īn), Albert. b. at Ulm, Württemberg, Germany, March 14, 1879—. Theoretical physicist. He was naturalized (1894) as a Swiss citizen, worked as an engineer (1902–09) in the patent office at Bern, Switzerland, was professor of theoretical physics at the University of Zurich, Switzerland (1909–11), at the German University, Prague (1911–12), and at the Federal Institute of Technology, Zurich (1912–14). He was elected (1913) a member of the Prussian Academy of Sciences at Berlin, and in 1914 became a German citizen once more. He was professor of physics (1914–33) at the University of Berlin and director (1914–33) of the Kaiser Wilhelm Physical Institute, Berlin. At the age of 26, in 1905, he published three papers (all in Annalen der Physik), each of which became the source of a new branch of physics: (1) explanation of the law of the photoelectric effect on the basis of the light-quantum hypothesis; (2) theory of the "Brownian movement" of barely visible particles; and (3) the special theory of relativity, asserting the invariance of natural laws under Lorentz transformations, that is, that the transformation of coördinates in the equations discovered in 1895 by Hendrik Lorentz was relative to both bodies and did not require one fixed location and another moving relative to it. Among the results of this last theory is such a striking fact as the equivalence of mass and energy. For his theory of the photoelectric effect he was awarded (1922) the 1921 Nobel prize in physics. He announced his general theory of relativity (1913–16), aiming to express all laws of physics by "covariant" equations, i.e., by equations having the same mathematical form irrespective of system of reference or of space-time variables used. This theory predicted (1911) that light beams from stars must be bent in passing the edge of the sun, predicted (1907) the red-shift of light rays emitted by a source located in a strong gravitational field, and explained (1915) the exact value of the rotation of the perihelion of Mercury. The unified field theory (1929 et seq.) has as its newest development the combining of gravitational and electromagnetic effects (1950). Einstein contributed greatly to the development of the quantum theory with discoveries in the photoelectric effect in 1905, specific heat in 1907, the emission and absorption of radiation in 1917, and the Bose-Einstein statistics in 1924–25. He arrived (1933) in the U.S. and was naturalized (1940) as a U.S. citizen, all his German property being confiscated and his citizenship revoked (1934) by the Hitler government. He was appointed (1933) a life member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N.J., and there served as professor of theoretical physics (1933–45, emeritus since 1945). He was awarded (1935) the Medal of the Franklin Institute. He signed a letter to President Roosevelt (October, 1939) explaining the potentialities of atomic energy as a possible military weapon, thus providing the impetus for government atomic research. After the bombing of Hiroshima (1945) he became a militant advocate of world government as the only method to achieve and maintain international peace. He is the author of The Meaning of Relativity (1921; revised ed., 1945), Sidelights on Relativity (1922), Investigations on the Theory of the Brownian Movement (1926), Einheitliche Feldtheorie (1929), On the Method of Theoretical Physics (1933), The World As I See It (1934), and other works. He published, with Sigmund Freud, Why War? (1933), and, with Leopold Infeld, The Evolution of Physics (1938).

Einstein, Alfred. b. at Munich, Dec. 30, 1880; d. at El Cerrito, Calif., Feb. 12, 1952. German musicologist, professor of music (1939–50) at Smith College; cousin of Albert Einstein. He was editor of the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (1918 et seq.) and music critic of the Berliner Tageblatt (1927–33), left Germany in 1933, and came to the U.S. in 1939. Author of A Short History of Music (1936), Mozart: His Character and His Work (1945), The Italian Madrigal (1949), and others; one of his most important works is a revised edition (1937) of the Köchel listing of Mozart's compositions.

Einthoven (īnt'hō.vẹn), Willem. b. at Samarang, Java, May 21, 1860; d. at Leiden, Netherlands, Sept. 28, 1927. Dutch physiologist. Educated at the University of Utrecht, he was professor of physiology (1886–1927) at at the University of Leiden. His perfection of the string galvanometer, and associated researches, laid the groundwork for electrocardiography. He was awarded (1924) the Nobel prize for physiology and medicine.

Éire (ār'ẹ; Irish, ā'rẹ). Irish name of Ireland and, formerly, of the Irish Republic.

Eisdale (ēz'dāl). See Easdale.

Eiselsberg (ī'zẹls.berk), Baron Anton von. b. at Steinhaus, Upper Austria, July 31, 1860; d. Oct. 26, 1939. Austrian surgeon. He was assistant to Th. Billroth (1887), became privatdocent of surgery (1890) at the University of Vienna, was appointed full professor (1893) at the universities of Utrecht (1896) and Königsberg, and served (1901–31) at the First Surgical Clinic of the University of Vienna. He introduced an operation of the hypophysis (1907), an operation of pyloric exclusion, followed by gastroenterostomy (1889), produced experimentally (1892) tetany by excision of the thyroid of a cat and its relief by parathyroid transplants. He first removed an intramedullary tumor of the spinal cord, thus becoming a leader in neurosurgery. Author of Über Tetanie im Anschluss an Kropfoperationen (1890), Die Krankheiten der Schilddrüse (1901), Die Krankheiten und Verletzungen der Schilddrüse (1903), Die heutige Behandlung der Knochenbrüche (1905), Vorkommen und Behandlung der Tetania parathyreopriva (1908), Aus der Werkstatt des Chirurgen (1912), Die Chirurgie der Schilddrüse (1913), and Lehrbuch der Chirurgie A. V. Eiselsberg (1930); coeditor of Mitteilungen aus den Grenzgebieten der Medizin und Chirurgie.

Eisenach (ī'zẹ.näch). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Thuringia, situated at the junction of the Nesse and Hörsel rivers ab. 31 mi. W of Erfurt. Before World War II it produced automobiles, bicycles, agricultural machinery, electrical articles, textiles, and beer, and was known as a favorite residence of retired officials. It is a health resort, with sulfurous saline springs. There are a number of educational institutions and museums, a library, and a theater. Buildings of interest include several churches dating from the 12th and 13th centuries, the Rathaus (town hall) from the 16th and 17th centuries, and the former grand-ducal castle, from the 18th century, which contains an art gallery. Above the town is the Wartburg, a huge medieval castle and one of the best-preserved Romanesque buildings in Germany, former seat of the landgraves of Thuringia; Martin Luther lived there from May 4, 1521, to March 1, 1522. It contains collections of arms and murals by Moritz von Schwind. A famous student demonstration took place here in 1817. Erected in the 11th and 12th centuries, the castle was renovated in the 19th century. The city of Eisenach was after 1596 the residence of the princes of the Ernestine line of the house of Wettin; this line was united with the line of Weimar in 1741. The composer Johann Sebastian Bach was born at Eisenach. In World War II the city was occupied by American troops in April, 1945. Pop. 57,834 (1946).

Eisenberg (ī'zẹn.berk). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Thuringia, situated near the Weisse Elster River ab. 33 mi. SW of Leipzig. Before World War II it had manufactures of porcelain, pianos, and sausages. Buildings of interest include churches dating from the 15th and 17th centuries; the old Rathaus (city hall) was erected in 1559. The Christiansburg castle, a baroque building of the 17th century, serves as the new city hall. The city belonged at various times to the margraves of Meissen, the landgraves of Thuringia, and the house of Wettin. It passed in 1826 to Saxe-Altenburg and in 1919 to the free state of Thuringia. 15,299 (1946).

Eisenerz (ī'zẹn.erts). Town in E Austria, in the province of Styria, ab. 20 mi. NW of Bruck an der Mur: a station on the railroad to Leoben (Erzberg Railway). It is an old mining town. In the vicinity is the Erzberg ("ore mountain") which is so productive of spathic iron ore that it is possible to quarry it without the aid of mining operations. The Erzberg belongs to the Österreich-Alpine Montan Gesellschaft, which is now under government control. 12,759 (1951).

Eisenhower (ī'zẹn.hou.ėr), Dwight David. [Called "Ike."] b. at Denison, Tex., Oct. 14, 1890—. American statesman, soldier, and educator, 34th President of the United States, supreme commander of Allied forces in W Europe in World War II. A graduate of the U.S. Military Academy (1915), he served in the tank corps in World War I under George Patton. He was a member (1935–39) of the U.S. military mission to the Philippines under Douglas MacArthur. In 1941 he was appointed brigadier general and, after the U.S. entered World War II, chief of the operations division of the U.S. general staff. He was appointed (June, 1942) lieutenant general commanding the U.S. forces in the European theater, both these appointments resulting from his brilliant conduct of the Louisiana maneuvers of the army in 1941. During the North African invasion (November, 1942) he served as Allied commander in chief, and in February, 1943, he was appointed general in supreme command of the Allied forces in North Africa and the western Mediterranean. He directed the invasions (1943) of Sicily and Italy. As Allied commander in chief (December, 1943, et seq.) in the European theater, he directed the Normandy invasion (June, 1944) and the conquest of western Germany (by May, 1945). He was appointed (December, 1944; permanent 1946) general of the army. He was the U.S. member (1945) of the Allied Control Commission for Germany. In November, 1945, he was appointed U.S. army chief of staff. He was president (1948 et seq.) of Columbia University. In 1950 he was appointed supreme Allied commander in Europe, in command of the Atlantic Pact forces integrated command. Eisenhower, who had been widely mentioned as a possible candidate for the presidency in 1948, resigned his NATO post in 1952 to seek the Republican nomination. He easily won a first-ballot nomination at the Chicago convention in July, and in November, gaining the largest popular vote ever cast for a U.S. presidential candidate, defeated Adlai Stevenson for the presidency (442 electoral votes to 89); Eisenhower's splitting the "solid South," winning Florida, Virginia, Texas, and other traditionally Democratic states, helped bring to the White House the first Republican president since 1933. He is the author of Crusade in Europe (1948).

Eisenlohr (ī'zẹn.lōr), August. b. at Mannheim, Germany, Oct. 6, 1832; d. at Heidelberg, Germany, Feb. 24, 1902. German Egyptologist, professor of Egyptology at Heidelberg. He published Der grosse Papyrus Harris (1872) and others.

Eisenlohr, Wilhelm. b. at Pforzheim, Baden, Germany, Jan. 1, 1799; d. at Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany, July 10, 1872. German physicist, professor of physics (1840–65) at the polytechnic institute at Karlsruhe. His chief work is Lehrbuch der Physik (1836).

Eisenstadt (ī'zẹn.shtät). [Hungarian, Kis-Marton.] Town in E Austria, the capital of the province of Burgenland (in what was formerly the county of Ödenburg, Hungary), ab. 25 mi. S of Vienna. It contains a chief castle of the Esterhazy family, built (1663–72) by an Italian architect. The composer Haydn, who was court conductor to a member of the Esterhazy family, lived here from 1766 to 1778; he is buried in the crypt of the cemetery. Eisenstadt was the seat of a Talmudic academy (Yeshiva) in the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries. The historical collection of Sandor Wolf is now at Tel Aviv, Israel. There are new government buildings. The city was transferred in 1921 from Hungary to Austria. 5,388 (1951).

Eisenstein (ī'zẹn.shtīn), Ferdinand Gotthold. b. at Berlin, April 16, 1823; d. there, Oct. 11, 1852. German mathematician and professor at the University of Berlin, known for his work on the invariants of algebraic forms and on elliptic functions. His works include Théorèmes sur les formes cubiques (1841), Allgemeine Auflösung der Gleichungen der ersten vier Grade (1844), Allgemeine Untersuchungen über die Formen dritten Grades (1844), and Genaue Untersuchung der unendlichen Doppelproducte (1847).

Eisenstein (ī'zẹn.stīn; Russian, ā.zin.shtān'), Sergei Mikhailovich. b. in Russia, 1898; d. at Moscow, Feb. 10, 1948. Russian motion-picture director and producer, notable for his development of new film techniques, and acclaimed as one of the greatest directors of his time. Trained as civil engineer and architect; served (1918–20) in Bolshevik army as volunteer; staged plays for impresario Meyerhold; directed first film (The Strike) in 1924; worked at Paris and at Hollywood (1931); developed techniques of montage and dynamic progression through cutting and mounting film; pioneer in use of untrained actors to achieve "documentary realism." His productions include Potemkin (1926), Ten Days That Shook the World (1928), Old and New (1929), General Line, Alexander Nevsky (1939), Ivan the Terrible (part I, 1941), and the unfinished Thunder Over Mexico. Author of The Film Sense.

Eisernes Tor (ī'zėr.nęs tōr'). German name of the Iron Gate.

Eisfeld (īs'felt). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Thuringia, situated on the Werra River ab. 23 mi. SE of Meiningen. Before World War II it had manufactures of toys, china, and knitwear. It has a castle and a Gothic town church. 5,586 (1946).

Eisk (yā'ęsk). See Yeisk.

Eisleben (īs'lā.bẹn). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, ab. 39 mi. NW of Leipzig. Copper and silver mines are in the vicinity; the city has small industries and is the center of a horticultural and market-gardening district, with trade in flower and vegetable seeds. There are schools of mining, commerce, and agriculture. The reformer Martin Luther was born here and died here; the house where he was born (now a museum) and the house where he died have been preserved. There are various churches dating from the 15th and 16th centuries; the Rathaus (town hall) was built in the period 1519–30. Mining activities have been carried on here for centuries. The population is predominantly Protestant. The period 1939–46 saw an increase in population amounting to 25.9 percent. 29,095 (1946).

Eisler (īs'lėr), Rudolf. b. at Vienna, Jan. 7, 1873; d. there, Dec. 14, 1926. Austrian writer on philosophy. He was the author of Wörterbuch der philosophischen Begriffe (1899), Philosophenlexikon (1912), Handwörterbuch der Philosophie (1913), and Kantlexikon (1930).

Eislingen (īs'ling.ẹn). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Baden, American Zone, formerly in the free state of Württemberg, situated on the Fils River SE of Stuttgart: paper and lumber mills; metallurgical, textile, and leatherware manufactures. The population is predominantly Protestant. 13,399 (1950).

Eisner (īs'nėr), Kurt. b. at Berlin, May 4, 1867; assassinated by a political fanatic at Munich, Feb. 21, 1919. German politician and journalist. His early writings were published in the Frankfurter Zeitung, at which time he was associated with the National Socialists. Later he became a Social Democrat and was editor of the party paper, Vorwärts, from 1899 to 1905, when he was dismissed as a revisionist. He then became an editor at Nuremberg. At the outbreak of World War I he favored granting war credits. In 1917 he joined the Independent Social Democrats, and encouraged armament strikes for the enforcement of peace. Early in 1918 he was convicted of treason but was released in the fall of that year, later organizing the mass meetings at Munich (November 7) which helped overthrow the monarchy. He became president of the revolutionary government and opposed early elections. His publications accepting German war guilt and his Jewish descent increased his unpopularity. On his way to the Bavarian diet to proclaim the resignation of his government he was assassinated. Eisner's collected works were published in 1919.

Eissner (īs'nėr), Clara. See Zetkin, Clara.

Eist (īst), von. See Dietmar von Aist.

Eisteddfod (ā.steтн'vōd). Annual musical and literary festival and competition which originated in the triennial assembly of Welsh bards; the latter dates back to an early period. An Eisteddfod is mentioned as having been held in the 7th century. They are now held every year at various places in Wales. Concerts and competitions for prizes are still held; but, except that they take place in Wales and retain some ancient forms, they are no longer particularly national in character.

Eitherside (ē'тнėr.sīd, ī'-), Sergeant. Character in Macklin's Man of the World.

Eitherside, Sir Paul. In Ben Jonson's comedy The Devil is an Ass, a hard, unfeeling justice and superstitious wiseacre.

Eitner (īt'nėr), Robert. b. at Breslau, Oct. 22, 1832; d. at Templin, Germany, 1905. German teacher and musicologist. He was the founder (1868) of the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung at Berlin and editor (1869 et seq.) of its monthly publication, and also published the ten-volume Biographisch-bibliographisches Quellen-Lexikon der Musiker und Musikgelehrten (1900–04). He composed an opera, piano works, songs, and a cantata.

Eitorf (ī'tōrf). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Sieg River ab. 28 mi. SE of Cologne. It has woolen textile, metallurgical, and chemical industries, a cannery, and a sugar refinery. 11,611 (1950).

Ekaterinburg (yi.kä''tyi.rin.börk'). Former name of Sverdlovsk.

Ekaterinoslav or Ekaterinoslaff (yi.kä.tyi.rē.nọ.släf'). Former name of Dnepropetrovsk; see also Yekaterinoslav.

Ek Chuah (ek chü'ä). In Maya religion, the Black War captain. He had two aspects: as a war god he was malevolent, and as a god of the merchants he was friendly.

Ekekete (ā.kā.kā'tā). [Also, Quiquete.] One of the 13 independent kingdoms of the Mbundu, a Bantu-speaking people of SW Africa, living in C Angola.

Ekelöf (ā'kẹ.lėv), Gunnar. [Full name, Bengt Gunnar Ekelöf.] b. at Stockholm, 1907—. Swedish poet and critic.

Ekelund (ā'kẹ.lůnd), Vilhelm. [Full name, Otto Vilhelm Ekelund.] b. at Stehag, in Skåne, Sweden, 1880—. Swedish poet and essayist. Ekelund's significance is threefold: he may be regarded as the founder of modernist verse in Sweden, he is the country's most important aphorist, and he is a leading aesthetic philosopher in the classical tradition. The son of a blacksmith in southernmost Sweden, Ekelund attended college at Lund, and later studied at the university there. He held the Fröding literary fellowship (1926–33) and traveled widely. His poetry includes Vårbris (Spring Breeze, 1900), Syner (Visions, 1901), Melodier i skymning (Tunes in the Twilight, 1902), Elegier (Elegies, 1903), and Dithyramber i aftonglans (Dithyrambs in the Evening Glow, 1906). Among his collections of philosophical aphorisms Concordia Animi (1942) and Atticism-humanism (1943) are outstanding.

Ekeren (ā'kẹ.rẹn). [Also, Eeckeren.] Town in N Belgium, in the province of Antwerp, N of Antwerp, of which it is a suburb. 15,962 (1947).

Ekhmim (ech.mēm'). See Akhmim.

Ekhof (ek'hōf), Konrad. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Aug. 12, 1720; d. at Gotha, Germany, June 16, 1778. German actor, founder of a theatrical academy. He was the leading member of the company of the National Theater at Hamburg (1767 et seq.), which has become famous through Lessing's Hamburgische Dramaturgie, and codirector of the court theater at Gotha (1775 et seq.), which was the first permanent theater in Germany. In 1777 Ekhof acted with Goethe and Duke Karl August in a private performance at Weimar. As an exponent of realism and naturalness he has been compared with Garrick and may be called the founder of the modern German theater.

Ekiti (ā.kē'tē). Subgroup of the Sudanic-speaking Yoruba of W Africa, inhabiting SW Nigeria, NW of Benin. Their population is estimated at ab. 225,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). They are divided politically into several small, independent kingdoms.

Ekkehard (ek'ẹ.härt). Historical novel by Scheffel, published in 1855.

Ekkehard I of St. Gallen (sānt gal'ẹn). b. c910; d. at St. Gallen, Switzerland, 973. Swiss monk. He later became dean at the famous monastery of St. Gallen. He wrote an epic, Waltharius manu fortis, in Latin hexameters, which deals with the escape of Walter of Aquitaine and Hiltgunt of Burgundy from the court of Attila.

Ekket (e'ket). Subgroup of the semi-Bantu-speaking peoples of W Africa, inhabiting SE Nigeria. Their population is estimated at ab. 30,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926), including the related Ubium.

Ekman (āk'män), Frans Gösta Viktor. b. at Stockholm, Dec. 28, 1890; d. there, Jan. 12, 1938. Swedish actor. He became the leading man of the Swedish theater, playing a great variety of roles in both comedy and tragedy and appearing in all the important private and subsidized theaters of Sweden. He was especially successful in the roles of Hamlet, Shylock, and Fedya (in Tolstoy's Redemption).

Ekoi (e'koi). Semi-Bantu-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting SE Nigeria and S British Cameroons, NE of Calabar. Their population is estimated at ab. 90,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). They are divided into 25 subgroups: the Afitopp, Akaju, Akparabong, Ama, Ambele, Anyang, Assumbo, Atamm, Banyangi, Befang, Befun, Fjagham, Ekomm, Itung, Kwa, Manta, Nde, Ngom, Nkumm, Nnamm, Nsele, Obang, Olulumaw, Otutu, and Wetshu.

Ekron (ek'ron). [Modern name, Akir.] In Biblical geography, one of the five chief cities of the Philistines, situated ab. 12 mi. NE of Ashdod. It contained an oracle.

Ektag Altai (ek.täg' äl.tī'). See under Altai.

El Acola (el ak'ọ.lạ). See under Alula Borealis and Alula Australis.

Elagabalus (ē.lạ.gab'ạ.lus). [Also: Heliogabalus; as emperor called Marcus Aurelius Antoninus; original name, Varius Avitus Bassianus.] b. at Emesa (modern Homs), Syria, 205 A.D.; d. 222. Emperor of Rome. He was the son of Sextus Varius Marcellus and Julia Soæmias, and first cousin of Caracalla. He became while very young a priest in the temple of the sun god Elagabalus at Emesa. Being put forward as the son of Caracalla, he was proclaimed emperor by the soldiers in 218, in opposition to Macrinus who was defeated on the borders of Syria and Phoenicia in the same year. He gave himself up to the most infamous debauchery, and abandoned the government to his mother and grandmother. He adopted his cousin, Bassianus Alexianus, who succeeded to the throne as Severus Alexander. He was put to death at Rome by the praetorians.

Elah (ē'lą). In Biblical geography, the valley in which the Israelites were encamped when the duel between David and Goliath occurred; probably the modern Wadi Es-Sunt.

Elaine (ę.lān'). In the Arthurian legends: 1. The half sister of King Arthur. She bore a son, Mordred, to Arthur. 2. The daughter of King Pelles. She was the mother of Lancelot's son Sir Galahad. 3. The "lily maid of Astolat" who pined and died for Lancelot. Tennyson makes her story the subject of his Elaine. 4. The daughter of King Brandegoris, who bore a child to Sir Bors de Ganis. In Malory's Arthur the statement is so worded that Elaine may be the name of the child. 5. The wife of Ban of Benoic (Brittany), mother of Sir Lancelot. She was also called Elein.

El Alamein (el al.ą.mān'), Battles of. Name applied to several military operations in North Africa, in World War II. The term is often applied specifically to the great artillery and tank engagement in which the British Eighth Army, under General Montgomery, broke through the lines of the Italians and of the German Afrika Korps in the fall of 1942. In July, 1942, the Germans, under Rommel, had bypassed the defenses of El Alamein, and the British retained the position, although it was for a time cut off. On Oct. 19, 1942, the British counter-attacked with planes, artillery, and infantry. On Nov. 1 armored units followed and in one of the greatest tank battles of the war the Germans were forced to retreat many miles into Libya, having lost almost 90,000 men killed or taken prisoner.

El Alígero Clavileño (el ä.lē'hā.rō klä.bē.lā'nyō). See Clavileño, El Alígero.

Elam (ē'ląm). [Also, Susiana; ancient Greek, Elymaïs.] Ancient country and empire E of the lower Tigris, S of Media, and N of the Persian Gulf. It is a region of fertile and picturesque mountains, valleys, and ravines, the only flat tract being on the shores of the Persian Gulf; and was in very high antiquity the seat of a mighty empire of which Susa was the capital. The oldest historical information about Elam is that it subjugated Babylonia in the period c2300–2076 B.C. The Elamite dynasty is identical with the Median of Berosus, which ruled over Babylonia from c2300 to 2076 B.C. Among these Elamite kings is also very probably to be counted Chedorlaomer (Kudur-Lagamaru) of Gen. xiv. The next historical notice is that Elam was subdued by Nebuchadnezzar 1, king of Babylonia, c1130 B.C. From the 8th century B.C. on, Elam was connected with the rivalry between Assyria and Babylonia, supporting the latter against the former. Elam was defeated by Sargon in 721 and 710, and by Sennacherib in several campaigns, especially in a decisive battle on the Tigris c691. In 645 Assurbanipal destroyed Susa. Soon after this catastrophe Elam is met with under the dominion of Theispes. In union with Media and Persia it helped to bring about the fall of Assyria and Babylonia. It shared thenceforth the fate of the other Assyrian provinces, and had no history of its own. The ancient Elamites were not Semites. This is ascertained by the names of their kings, which are alien to all of the Semitic dialects, and by their representations on the monuments, which exhibit a type widely different from the Semitic. The enumeration of Elam among the sons of Shem in Gen. x. 22 may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that the Elamite valley was early settled by the Semites, who predominated over the non-Semitic element of the population, and also by the fact that the Elamites had for more than two centuries the upper hand in Semitic Babylonia. The name Elymaïs was used either as an equivalent of Elam or for a part of it.

El Arahal (el ä.rä.äl'). Town in S Spain, in the province of Sevilla, situated in the Andalusian plain SE of the city of Seville: agricultural trade center. 13,517 (1940).

El Araish or El Arish (el ä.rīsh'). Arabic name of Larache.

El 'Arish (el ä.rēsh'). [Ancient name, Rhinocolura.] Town in NE Africa, in Egypt, on the Mediterranean shore of the Sinai Peninsula, W of the Israel frontier. It is connected by railroad with Jerusalem and with points on the Suez Canal. It was taken by the French in 1799, and retaken in 1799. A convention was signed here (1800) between Kléber and the grand vizir. Pop. ab. 10,000.

ELAS. Initials of Greek words meaning "Greek Popular Liberation Army." This was the fighting branch of EAM, and the strongest and most effective of the various guerrilla groups operating during the Axis occupation of Greece in World War II. It achieved dominance by acquiring the largest share of captive Italian arms. Its political coloration led it into fights not only with occupation troops, but also with rival guerrilla forces, particularly the EDES, which was decisively defeated by it more than once. At the time of liberation ELAS resisted certain orders of the temporary government and of the British General Scobie, thus beginning the Greek civil war which was finally brought under control in 1949. Though theoretically disbanded in 1945, many of its members undoubtedly provided a nucleus for the rebel army led by Marcos Vafiadis and later by Yoannidis. From 1943 till the official disbanding of ELAS, the principal general was Sarafis, who was exiled, along with another important officer, Colonel Bakerdjis, in 1946.

El Ashmunein (el äsh.mö.nān'). Arabic name of Hermopolis Magna.

Elatea (el.ą.tē'ą). See Cithaeron.

Elath (ē'lath) or Eloth (-loth). [Arabic, Aqaba; ancient name also Aelana.] In Biblical geography, a town of Edom, situated at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba. It was taken by David, and was the headquarters of Solomon's fleet. It was fortified by Uzziah.

Elathasi (el.ą.thā'si). The fifth-magnitude star ζ Draconis. The name is of rare occurrence.

Elaver (ę.lā'vēr). Ancient name of the Allier River.

El-Azariyeh (el.ä.zä'ri.ye). Modern name of Bethany, Palestine.

Elâziğ (e.lä.zē'). [Also, Elâziz (-zēz').] Il (province or vilayet) in E Turkey, at the E end of the Anatolian plateau, W of Lake Van: a very hilly area devoted to subsistence crops and herding. It is the terminal of railway lines from Antalya and Ankara. Capital, Elâziğ; area, 5,858 sq. mi.; pop. 211,400 (1950).

Elba (el'bą). City in SE Alabama, a county seat (with Enterprise) of Coffee County, on the Pea River ab. 65 mi. SE of Montgomery, in a farming region. 2,936 (1950).

Elba. [Ancient names: Ilva, Aethalia.] Island in the Tyrrhenian Sea between the NE coast of Corsica and the coast of Tuscany, belonging to the province of Livorno, Italy. The chief town is Portoferraio. The surface is mountainous; wine and fruit are produced. There are deposits of iron ore, which have been worked since ancient times. Napoleon I was granted the island after his first abdication and resided here from May 1, 1814, until Feb. 26, 1815, when he left secretly for France. In World War II, French forces took the island from the Germans, June 17–19, 1944. Pop. 27,000 (est. 1931).

Elbasan (el.bä.sän'). [Also, Elbasani (-sä'nē).] One of the ten prefectures of Albania, in the C part. Capital, Elbasan; pop. 111,480 (1930).

Elbasan. [Also, Elbasani.] Town in C Albania, the capital of Elbasan prefecture, on the Shkumbi River: agricultural markets. 13,796 (1930).

Elbe (el'bę; Anglicized, elb). [Czech, Labe; Latin, Albis.] River in N Europe. It rises in the Riesengebirge, in Czechoslovakia, flows through Bohemia and Germany, generally in a NW direction, and empties into the North Sea ab. 65 mi. below Hamburg. Its chief tributaries are the Vltava (Moldau), Ohře (Eger), Mulde, Saale, and Havel (with the Spree). On its banks are Dresden, Torgau, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Hamburg. Length, ab. 725 mi.; navigable for ocean vessels to Hamburg, and for others to Mělník in Bohemia (over 500 mi.).

Elbe and Trave Canal (trä'vę). Canal in Germany joining the Elbe River at Lauenburg with the Trave River at Lübeck, thus connecting the North Sea with the Baltic. It is 41 mi. long, is 72 ft. broad, and has seven locks. It was completed in 1900 at a cost of nearly six million dollars.

El Bega (el bē.gä'). See Bika, El.

El Beni (el BĀ'nē). Full name of Beni.

Elberfeld (el'bėr.felt). Former city in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, on the Wupper River ab. 24 mi. NE of Cologne. It forms with Barmen (which adjoins it) one of the most important manufacturing centers in Europe. Among the manufactures of the two cities are ribbons, chemicals, lace, thread, silk, cotton, and others. Since 1929 both have been part of Wuppertal

Elbert (el'bėrt), Mount. Peak in C Colorado, in the Rocky Mountains ab. 13 mi. SW of Leadville. It is the highest peak in Colorado and the second highest in the U.S. The lower slopes are used for summer grazing. Elevation, ab. 14,431 ft.

Elberton (el'bėr.tǫn). City in N Georgia, county seat of Elbert County, ab. 69 mi. NW of Augusta: granite quarrying. 6,772 (1950).

Elbeuf (el.bėf). Town in NW France, in the department of Seine-Inférieure, situated on a bend of the Seine River, ab. 13 mi. SW of Rouen. It has important textile manufactures, particularly of cloth and printed cotton goods, which have been known since the 15th century. Elbeuf suffered severe damage in World War II, the entire center of the town being destroyed. 15,958 (1946).

El Bika (el bi.kä'). See Bika, El.

Elbing (el'bing). German name of Elbląg.

Elbingerode (el'bing.ę.rō"dę). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated in the Harz Mountains ab. 15 mi. SW of Halberstadt. It has stone quarries and lumber trade, and is known for its ruined castle. 4,291 (1946).

Elbistan (el.bi.stän'). [Also, Albistan.] Town in S central Turkey, on the Jihun River ab. 40 mi. NE of Maraş. The sultan Bibars defeated the Turks and Mongols here in 1277. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Elbląg (el'blôngk). [German, Elbing.] City in N Poland, in the województwo (province) of Gdańsk, formerly in East Prussia, Germany, situated near the Frisches Haff, ab. 34 mi. SE of Danzig. Before World War II it had shipyards, lumber mills, woodenware, foodstuff, machine, and cigar industries, and livestock markets. Since the war the manufacture of cloth and garments has been introduced and a new mechanical workshop has been put into operation. The city has several educational institutions, including a school of agricultural administration, a school of inland navigation, and schools for the local industries. The old town, with gabled houses of the 15th–18th centuries, was badly damaged in the fighting that took place here at the conclusion of World War II. The churches of Saint Nicholas, Mary, the Holy Ghost, and Saint George, all Gothic buildings, date from the 13th–14th centuries. The town was founded in 1237 by German settlers from Lübeck. It was a member of the Hanseatic League, left the Teutonic Order in 1454 to accept Polish rule, became part of Prussia in 1772, and was occupied in World War II by Russian forces after heavy fighting which took place from Jan. 26 to Feb. 7, 1945. It came under Polish administration as a result of the Potsdam Conference in 1945. The German inhabitants have emigrated. 85,952 (1939), 20,924 (1946).

Elbogen (el'bō.gęn). German name of Loket.

Elbogen, Ismar. b. at Schildberg, Posen, Germany, 1874—. German Jewish scholar and educator. Graduated from the University of Breslau and the Jewish theological seminary at Breslau; lecturer (1902–19) and professor (1919–34) of Biblical exegesis and Jewish history at the Lehranstalt für die Wissenschaft des Judentums at Berlin; came (1938) to the U.S., where he became research professor at several Jewish institutions of higher learning. He served on the editorial board of the Jüdisches Lexikon, the Encyclopaedia Judaica, and the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia. Author of Die Religionanschauungen der Pharisäer (1904), Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913), and Geschichte der Juden seit dem Untergang des jüdischen Staates (1919).

Elborus (el.bǫ.rös'). See Elbrus.

Elbow (el'bō). In Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, a constable, an inferior Dogberry.

Elbrus (el'brös). [Also: Elbruz, Elborus.] Highest mountain of the Caucasus, in the U.S.S.R., in the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic. Elevation, ab. 18,468 ft.

Elbsandsteingebirge (elp'zänt'shtīn.gę.bir"gę). German name of the Saxon Switzerland.

El Bukaa (el bů.kä'). See Bika, El.

Elburz (el.börz'). Range of mountains in N Iran, connected with the Caucasus and mountains of Armenia on the W, and with the Paropamisan Mountains on the E. They arch around the S shore of the Caspian Sea for a distance of ab. 450 mi. Highest summit, Mount Demavend.

El Buseira (el bů.sī'rą, -sā'rą). See Bozrah.

El Cajon (el kä.hōn'). City in S California, in San Diego County ab. 16 mi. E of San Diego. It is a local trade center in a region of fruit, truck, and poultry farming, and packs citrus fruit and vegetables for shipment. The area was once a Spanish rancho, opened for settlement in 1869. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 1,471 (1940), 5,600 (1950).

El Campo (el kam'pō). City in C Texas, in Wharton County, SE of Austin, in a petroleum-producing region: milling, trading, and shipping center for rice and cattle. 6,237 (1950).

El Caney (el kä.nā'). Village in Cuba, situated ab. 3 mi. NE of Santiago.

El Caney, Attack on. Military engagement at the village of El Caney, Cuba, flanking the San Juan position, which involved troops of opposing forces during the Spanish-American War. American infantry and artillery under General H. W. Lawton seized the village on July 1, 1898, in a move, timed with the frontal assault upon San Juan Hill, to open the road to Santiago.

El Capitan (el kap.i.tan'). Monolithic granite peak in Yosemite National Park, E central California, one of the most noted heights surrounding the Yosemite Valley. It rises ab. 3,604 ft. above the valley, and is the largest formation of its kind in the world.

El Centro (el sen'trō). City in S California, county seat of Imperial County, SE of Los Angeles. It is the second largest city below sea level in the U.S. (–52 ft. in elevation), and the chief storage and shipping center of the desert-reclaimed Imperial Valley. 12,590 (1950).

El Cerrito (el sę.rē'tō). City in W central California, in Contra Costa County, on San Francisco Bay NE of San Francisco. In the decade between the last two U.S. census its population more than doubled. 6,137 (1940), 18,011 (1950).

Elcesaites (el.sē'sā.īts). [Also, Elkesaites.] Party or sect among the Jewish Christians of the 2nd century. They derived their name from Elkasai or Elxai, either their founder or leader, or the title of the book containing their doctrines, which they regarded as a special revelation. Their belief and practices were a mixture of Gnosticism and Judaism. They were finally confounded with the Ebionites.

El Chaco (el chä'kō). See Chaco.

Elche (el'chā). [Ancient name, Ilici.] City in E Spain, in the province of Alicante, situated on the Vinalapó River ab. 13 mi. SW of Alicante. Manufactures include leather, shoes, sandals, and esparto fabrics. The city is famous for its grove of date palms, the northernmost stand of this tree; it trades in dates and palm fronds. Elche is an episcopal see, and the scene of an annual mystery play. Architecturally the town has an African atmosphere, with picturesque churches. A Roman colony in ancient times, it was held by the Moors from the 8th to the 13th century. The castle of Calandura is in the vicinity. 55,877 (1950).

Elchingen (el'ċhing.ęn). Village in S Germany, in Bavaria, situated near the Danube River ab. 7 mi. NE of Ulm. Here, on Oct. 14, 1805, the Austrians were defeated by Michel Ney (created afterward Duc d'Elchingen). The battle was followed by the capitulation of Ulm.

Elchingen, Duc d'. A title of Ney, Michel.

El Cid Campeador (el thēтн' käm"pā.ä.тнōr'). See Cid, the.

El Cobre (kō'вrā). See Cobre.

Elda (el'dä). Town in E Spain, in the province of Alicante, situated on the Vinalapó River ab. 18 mi. NW of Alicante. It is an agricultural market town, with manufactures of paper and esparto articles. The ruins of a Gothic castle are of interest. 20,050 (1940).

El Deán Funes (el dā.ān' fö'nās). See Funes, Gregorio.

Elder (el'dėr), Eliza. Maiden name of Brightwen, Eliza.

Elder Brother Society. See Brothers' Society.

Elder Knowell (nō'ẹl), the. See Knowell, the Elder.
Elder Loveless (luv'lẹs). See Loveless, Elder.
Elder Sister, The. Novel by Frank Swinnerton, published in 1925. It is a study of jealousy and the eternal triangle.
El Desdén con el desdén (el dez.dān' kōn el dez.dān'). See Desdén con el desdén, El.
El Dirr (el dir'). [Also: Ed Dirr, Dehr, Derr.] Village in NE Africa, in Upper Egypt, on the Nile River ab. 70 mi. N of Wadi Halfa: noted for a small rock temple of Rameses II.
El Divino (el dē.ʙē'nō). Epithet of Herrera, Fernando de.
Eldon (el'dọn). City in C Missouri, in Miller County near Jefferson City: marketing center for a farming region. Manufactures include cheese and men's clothing. 2,766 (1950).
Eldon, 1st Earl of. Title of Scott, John.
Eldora (el.dō'rạ). City in C Iowa, county seat of Hardin County, on the Iowa River, in a resort and farming region. 3,107 (1950).
El Dorado (el dọ.rā'dọ). City in S Arkansas, county seat of Union County: chief petroleum drilling and refining center in Arkansas. 23,076 (1950).
Eldorado (el.dọ.rā'dọ). City in SE Illinois, in Saline County: mining center. 4,500 (1950).
El Dorado (el dọ.rā'dọ). City in SE Kansas, county seat of Butler County, ab. 27 mi. NE of Wichita. Originally a cattle town, it is now a refining center for the state's richest oil-producing region. 11,037 (1950).
El Dorado (el dō.rä'ʜō). [Also, Manoa.] Legendary city of great wealth which, during the 16th and 17th centuries and part of the 18th, was supposed to exist somewhere in the N part of South America. Beginning c1532, a number of expeditions were made by the Spaniards in search of this phantom; the explorers suffered terrible hardships, and hundreds died. The conquest and settlement of New Granada resulted from the quest; the mountain regions of Venezuela, the Orinoco and Amazon rivers, and the great forests E of the Andes were made known to the world; and later in the 16th century the English, led or sent by Sir Walter Raleigh, penetrated into Guiana, obtaining a claim on that country which resulted in their modern colony. The story of El Dorado arose from a yearly ceremony of an Indian tribe near what is now Bogotá, Colombia. According to the story, the chief of the Guatavitá in the highlands of Bogotá (Colombia) was periodically smeared with oil or balsam, and then covered with gold dust until his whole body had a gilded appearance, after which he threw gold, emeralds, and other precious stones into a sacred lake and then bathed there. This ceremony ceased upon the conquest of the tribe of Guatavitá by the Chibchans, but the tradition of this extraordinary rite remained and gradually spread very far, though in a more or less distorted form. In common and poetical language the name El Dorado, originally applied to the ruler, has now been transferred to the city or country which was the object of the quest.
"El Dorado" (el dọ.rä'dō). Occasional nickname of California.
Eldorado Mines. See Port Radium.
Eldorado Springs (el.dọ.rā'dọ). City in SW Missouri, in Cedar County, ab. 60 mi. NE of Joplin, in the Ozark Plateau: mineral springs. 2,618 (1950).
Eldoret (el.dọ.ret'). Town in British East Africa, in Kenya, situated in the highlands of the W part of the colony. It is the chief commercial and administrative center for the Uasin Gishu Plateau, a fertile grassland region and one of the most healthful regions in the country. Nearby is a large forest which supports a mill industry. The plateau is occupied almost entirely by European farmers, some of them descendants of the original Boer settlers. The town is ab. 577 mi. NW of Mombasa on the Kenya-Uganda railway. European pop., 600 (1946).
Eldridge (el'drij), Paul. b. at Philadelphia, May 5, 1888—. American novelist, short-story writer, poet, and teacher. He was graduated (B.S., 1909) from Temple University and from the University of Pennsylvania (M.A., 1911), served (1913) as lecturer on American literature at the Sorbonne, and was a teacher of romance languages (1914 et seq.) in the New York City high-school system. Among his volumes of verse are Vanitas (1920), Our Dead Selves (1923), Cobwebs and Cosmos (1930), and I Bring A Sword (1945). His novels include If After Every Tempest (1941) and Madonna With the Cat (1942); with George Sylvester Viereck, he was the coauthor of My First Two Thousand Years (1928), Salome (1930), and The Invincible Adam (1932). He has also published collections of short stories, including And the Sphinx Spoke (1921), Irony and Pity (1926), One Man Show (1933), Virgins and Other Stories (1945), The Truth About Phyllis Warren (1945), and Men and Women (1946).
Eldsich (el.dzik'). A rarely used name for the third-magnitude star ι Draconis.
El Duque Job (el dö'kā ʜōʙ'). Pseudonym of Gutiérrez Nájera, Manuel.
Eleanor of Aquitaine (el'ạ.nọr; ak.wi.tān'). [Also: Eleanor of Guienne; French, Aliénor.] b. c1122; d. at Fontevrault, Maine-et-Loire, France, April 1, 1204. Queen of France and England. She was the daughter of William X, Duke of Aquitaine, and came into her inheritance on his death in 1137. She married the same year Louis of France, who within a month of the marriage became Louis VII of France. She accompanied him on the second Crusade and there, it is said (but without foundation) was improperly intimate with her uncle, Raymond of Antioch. In 1152, despite the fact that she had borne him two daughters, Louis divorced her (or had the marriage annulled) on the grounds of consanguinity. That same year she was married to the English prince, Henry of Anjou, bringing to him the possessions in Aquitaine. When he became king as Henry II in 1154, the stage was set for the long series of wars between England and France over the French territories of the English crown. Eleanor soon discovered that her husband was unfaithful and, though his affair with Rosamond Clifford occurred later, she soon grew to dislike him. In 1173 she backed her sons in their revolt against Henry and was kept under surveillance until Henry's death in 1189. She became a chief adviser to both Richard I and John. When John attempted to usurp the throne during Richard's absence on the third Crusade, she broke up the conspiracy and later reconciled the brothers. She was instrumental in ransoming Richard from his captivity in France. She saw to it that the succession passed to John and supported him against the claims of her grandson Arthur of Brittany. She was a patron of literature and maintained a brilliant court at Poitiers.
Eleanor of Brittany (brit'ạ.ni). [Called the Damsel of Brittany.] Daughter of Geoffroy, third son of Henry II of England (and hence a niece of King John). Geoffroy was the duke of Brittany through his wife Constance, the daughter and heiress of Duke Conan IV, and was succeeded by Eleanor's brother Arthur. She was imprisoned by John, and died in 1241.
Eleanor of Castile (kas.tēl'). d. at Grantham, England, in November, 1290. Sister of Alfonso X of Castile, and wife of Edward I of England.
Eleanor of Provence (pro.väns'). d. at Amesbury, England, 1291. Daughter of the Count of Provence, and wife of Henry III of England.
Eleatics (el.ẹ.at'iks). School of Greek philosophy founded by Xenophanes of Colophon, who resided in Elea, or Velia, in Magna Graecia. The most distinguished philosophers of this school were Parmenides and Zeno. The main Eleatic doctrines are developments of the conception that the One, or Absolute, alone is real.
Eleazar (el.ẹ.ā'zạr). In the Bible, the third son of Aaron, and his successor as high priest.
Eleazar. In Lust's Dominion, all or parts of which have been attributed to Christopher Marlowe, a lustful and revengeful Moor, passionately loved by the sensual Queen of Spain. In his villainies he resembles Barabas in Marlowe's Jew of Malta.
Eleazar. Famous magician in Alain René le Sage's Gil Blas.
Electoral Hesse (hes). See Hesse-Cassel.
Electra (ẹ.lek'trạ). City in C Texas, in Wichita County, NW of Dallas: oil wells; manufactures of drilling tools and oil-well machinery. 4,970 (1950).
Electra. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, who was the daughter of heaven.
Electra. In Greek legend, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, and sister of Orestes. The events of her life have been dramatized by Aeschylus, by Sophocles in his Electra, by Euripides in his Electra, and by various modern poets.

Electra. In Greek mythology, one of the seven Pleiades.

Electra. The fourth-magnitude star 17 Tauri.

Electre (ā.lektr). Highly ironic play (1937), based on the familiar Electra myth, by the French writer Jean Giraudoux (1882–1944). Beneath the Greek trappings are concealed the author's deep concern and discouragement over the state of Europe just before World War II.

Electrides (ē.lek'tri.dēz). In Greek legend, the Amber Islands (where the trees weep amber), situated at the mouth of the fabulous Eridanus (later identified with the Po River in Italy). See also Amber Islands.

Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard. Elegiac poem by Thomas Gray, published in 1751. It went through 11 editions in a short time, and has been many times pirated, imitated, and parodied. (In the course of the several generations since it was written it has also been so often misquoted, in print, that few scholars now have the temerity to insist that anyone can be sure of exactly what all the original words and spellings may have been.) It has also been translated into Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Italian, Portuguese, French, Russian, and German.

Eleia (ē.lī'ạ). See ancient Elis.

Elein (ē.lān'). See under Elaine, 5.

Elektra (ē.lek'trạ). Opera in one act by Richard Strauss, with a libretto by Hugo von Hoffmannsthal, first produced at Dresden on Jan. 5, 1909. Taken from the Greek drama, the work depicts Electra's grief at the death of her father, and her final rejoicing when his murder is avenged by her brother Orestes.

Elementary Forms of Religious Life, The. See Formes élémentaires de la vie religieuse, Les.

Elements (of Euclid) (ū'klid). Most popular mathematical work of all time, the earliest extant Greek treatise on mathematics, and the oldest scientific textbook still in actual use. It is a book on geometry, both plane and solid, and the theory of numbers, a compendium of mathematical knowledge of the time, arranged in logical order. It was composed by Euclid c300 B.C., was frequently copied in manuscript, and was first printed in 1482. Since that time over a thousand editions have appeared.

Eleonora (el''ē.ō.nō'rạ). Poem written by Dryden, in 1692, in memory of the Countess of Abingdon.

Eleonora. Story by Edgar Allan Poe (1842) in The Gift.

Eleonora of Este (es'tā). b. June 19, 1537; d. Feb. 10, 1581. Italian princess; a friend of Tasso.

Elephanta (el.ẹ.fan'tạ). [Hindustani, Gharapuri.] Small island in Bombay harbor, Union of India, ab. 6 mi. E of Bombay, famous for its caves with Hindu sculptures.

Elephantine (el''ẹ.fan.tī'nē). [Arabic, Geziret Aswan.] In ancient geography, an island in the Nile, opposite Syene (Aswan). From it came Egyptian kings of the Vth dynasty. It contains monuments of Thothmes III and Amenhotep III, and a Nilometer of Ptolemaic date.

El Escorial (el es.kō'ri.ạl; Spanish, el es.kō.ryäl'). [Also, Escorial de Arriba (dā är.rē'bä).] Town in C Spain, in the province of Madrid, situated in the Sierra de Guadarama, NW of Madrid. It is a summer resort, known for its hotels and parks, famous military and ecclesiastical schools, and palace of Don Carlos. The Augustinian monastery of San Lorenzo del Escorial is famous as the former summer and autumn residence of the kings of Spain. It forms a huge rectangle flanked by towers and containing gardens, terraces, church, monastery, library, and apartments for the king and the royal court. The building was erected in the period 1563–86, but many changes were effected afterward; the best architects of Spain and Italy participated in the work. The church contains murals by Luca Giordano and others and the tombs of many Spanish kings. The library contains over 140,000 volumes and manuscripts, among them valuable Latin and Arabic codices.

Elets (yi.lets'). See Yelets.

Eleusinian Mysteries (el.ū.sin'i.ạn). Religious ceremonies performed in ancient Greece in honor of Demeter, the Greek equivalent of the Roman Ceres, and her daughter, Persephone (the Roman Proserpine). They were held at Eleusis, in Attica, about 10 miles from Athens, and were the chief cause of its fame. At first initiation into the mysteries was limited to residents of Attica; later it was extended to all Greek citizens, and still later, Romans were admitted to the privileges of membership. Barbarians (which initially of course, included the Romans), murderers, and all who were guilty of serious crimes were barred. A candidate for initiation was proposed by an Athenian citizen who already belonged. The candidates were called mystae before full initiation, and epoptae, or seers, after. The mysteries were divided into two parts, the Lesser, held in Antestherion, corresponding more or less to February, and the Greater, in Boedromion, equivalent to part of the end of September and the beginning of October. The mysteries were regarded by the ancients themselves as having moral and ethical values in that they promised, or seemed to promise, life after death as a reward for goodness. Hadrian and Marcus Aurelius did not think it beneath them to accept initiation. Valentinian, the Christian emperor, allowed the Eleusinian mysteries after he had abolished all others, but Theodosius did away with them at the end of the 4th century.

Eleusis (ē.lō'sis). Deme (administrative division) of Attica, Greece, the seat of a very ancient cult of Demeter, and of the famous Eleusinian Mysteries. The most important monuments lay within the sacred enclosure, which consisted of a spacious terrace on the E slope of the acropolis, surrounded by a massive wall. The precinct was entered by two propylaea or monumental gateways in succession, and its chief building was the temple of the mysteries, whose unique architecture and successive transformations, as well as those of the entire precinct, have been revealed by the excavations of the Archaeological Society of Athens, carried out at intervals since 1882.

Eleusis, Bas-relief of. Ancient Greek work of high artistic importance in the National Museum, Athens. It represents Demeter, Kora, and Triptolemus, and is most delicate in execution and expression. It dates from the early 5th century B.C.

Eleuthera (ē.lō'thėr.ạ). Island in the Atlantic Ocean, E of Miami, Fla.: part of the Bahama Islands. It was settled in 1647 under a grant of Charles I of England. The major industries are fishing and vegetable farming. Length, ab. 80 mi.; pop. 6,430 (1943).

Eleutherius (el.ū.thir'i.us), Saint. [Also, Eleutheros (ē.lō'thėr.os).] b. at Nicopolis, in Epirus; fl. second half of 2nd century. Pope from 175 to 189. He was an opponent of the Montanists.

Eleutheropolis (ē.lō.thėr.op'ō.lis). [Modern name, Beit-Jibrin.] In ancient geography, a town in Palestine, ab. 22 mi. SW of Jerusalem.

Eleutherus (ē.lō'thėr.us). In ancient geography, a river of Phoenicia, the modern Nahr el-Kebir ("Great River"), N of Tripoli. On its banks Jonathan the Asmonean met and defeated Demetrius.

Elevation of the Cross. [Also, Raising of the Cross.] Subject of religious paintings, notably two of the 17th-century Flemish school: 1. Painting by Rubens (1610), in Antwerp cathedral, Belgium. The cross is being raised to position by a number of men pushing in front and others hauling by a rope behind. On the side panels are seen the holy women, soldiers, and the execution of the two thieves. 2. Painting by Van Dyck (1632), in the Church of Notre Dame at Courtrai, Belgium. Christ is already fixed on the cross, which is being put in position by four men, attended by soldiers.

El Faiyum (el fī.öm'). See Fayum, city.

El Fasher (el fä'shėr). Capital of Darfur province, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, in NE Africa. It is situated toward the N central part of the province and is the center of several caravan routes and roads. 23,250 (est. 1949).

Elfeld (el'felt). See Eltville.

El Ferrol del Caudillo (el fer.rōl' del kou.ᴛʜē'lyō). [Also, El Ferrol.] Town in NW Spain, in the province of La Coruña, situated on the Atlantic coast ab. 11 mi. NE of La Coruña. It has a good natural harbor and is an important naval base, with an arsenal, docks, large shipyards used for naval construction, and a marine academy and nautical school. There are fisheries, and linen and leather factories. Nearby is the submarine base of La Graña. The town was a mere fishing village prior to the construction of the arsenal in 1726, after the selection of the site by Charles IV. The British defeated the French fleet here in 1805, forcing the town to surrender; the French occupied it again in 1809. In the Spanish civil war it was occupied by Nationalist troops in 1936. It was the birthplace of Generalissimo Franco and was renamed after him. 77,030 (1950).

Elfrida (el.frē'dą). [Also, Ælfthryth.] b. c945; d. c1000. Anglo-Saxon queen, daughter of Ordgar, ealdorman of Devon, wife first of Aethelwald, ealdorman of the East Anglians, and, after his death, of King Edgar, by whom she was the mother of Ethelred II (Ethelred the Unready). She is said to have caused the murder of her stepson Edward, at Corfe, in order to secure the election of Ethelred.

El Fuerte (el fwer'tā). [Also: Fuerte, Villa del Fuerte.] Town in W Mexico, in Sinaloa state, on the Fuerte River. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Elgar (el'gar, -gär), Sir Edward William. b. at Broadheath, Worcestershire, England, June 2, 1857; d. at Worcester, England, Feb. 23, 1934. English composer, professor of music (1904 et seq.) at Birmingham University. He wrote the oratorios The Dream of Gerontius (1900), The Apostles (1903), and The Kingdom (1906). He also composed much for the orchestra, including The Enigma Variations (1899), the overtures Cockaigne and In the South, Symphony in A Flat (1908), Symphony in E Flat (1911), and Introduction and Allegro for solo quartet of strings and string orchestra; wrote several marches under the title Pomp and Circumstance. Of his earlier cantatas Light and Life, King Olaf, and Caractacus are the most notable. He was knighted in 1904, having composed the Coronation Ode (1902) for King Edward VII.

Elgar, Francis. b. at Portsmouth, England, April 24, 1845; d. Jan. 17, 1909. British naval architect. He was adviser in naval construction to the Japanese government (1879–81), director of dockyards at the British admiralty (1886–92), and connected with private shipbuilding firms from 1892. He wrote Ships of the Royal Navy (1873), and numerous technical papers.

Elgin (el'jin). City in NE Illinois, in Kane and Cook counties, on the Fox River ab. 35 mi. NW of Chicago: manufactures include watches, machinery, paper products, butter, and processed milk. It is the seat of the Elgin Academy, the Elgin Observatory, and the Elgin Watchmakers College, and also of a large religious publications house. 44,223 (1950).

Elgin (el'gin). City and royal burgh in N Scotland, county seat of Moray, situated on the river Lossie ab. 13 mi. W of Buckie, ab. 572 mi. N of London by rail. It contains a cathedral, founded in 1224 but greatly damaged by fire and partly rebuilt toward the end of the 14th century. The architecture is chiefly Early English style. The ornament is rich, and the tracery of special beauty. There are two western towers, and a good chapter house. 10,831 (est. 1948).

Elgin. City in S central Texas, in Bastrop County, ab. 20 mi. E of Austin, in a farming and oil-producing region: railroad junction. 3,168 (1950).

Elgin (el'gin). Former name of Moray or Morayshire.

Elgin, Earl of. Title held by various members of the Bruce family in Scotland.

Elgin Marbles. Collection of Greek sculptures comprising the bulk of the surviving plastic decoration of the Parthenon, and a caryatid and column from the Erechtheum, and recognized as containing the finest existing productions of Greek sculpture. The marbles, now in the British Museum, were brought from Athens between 1801 and 1803 by Thomas Bruce, the 7th Earl of Elgin. The Parthenon sculptures were executed under the direction of Phidias, c440 B.C. The collection includes remains of the pediment statues in the round, a great part of the frieze, in low relief, ab. 525 ft. long, which surrounded the exterior of the cella, and 15 of the metopes of the exterior frieze, carved in very high relief with episodes of the contest between the Centaurs and the Lapiths. Among the chief of the pediment figures are the reclining figure of Theseus, Iris with wind-blown drapery, and the group of one reclining and two seated female figures popularly called the "Three Fates."

Elginshire (el'gin.shir). Former name of Moray or Morayshire.

El Giza or El Gizeh (el gē'zę). See Giza, city.

El Goléa (el gō.lā'ą). Town and caravan station in S Algeria, in NW Africa, ab. 225 mi. S of Laghouat and 170 mi. SW of Ghardaïa. In 1891 it became an important French military post for the pacification of the Sahara. The oasis is important for its date palms and other fruit trees. It is on the main road crossing the Sahara. 6,279 (1948).

Elgon (el'gon), Mount. Extinct volcano in E Africa, on the border between Kenya and Uganda. It is 25 mi. E of Mbale, Uganda, and is the watershed between Lake Kyoga and Lakes Victoria and Rudolf. The mountain can be climbed easily. Elevation, ab. 14,140 ft.

Elgoni (el.gō'nē) or Elgonyi (el.gō'nyē). See Kony.

El Gran Presidente (el grän' prā.sē.ŦHen'tā). Epithet of Montes, Ismael.

El Greco (grek'ō). See Greco, El.

El Guayas (el gwä'yäs). See Guayas, province.

Elhanan (el.hā'nąn). In the Bible, according to 2 Sam. xxi. 19, the slayer of the brother of Goliath.

El Hasa (el has'ą, hä'są). See Hasa, El.

Eli (ē'lī). [Also, Heli.] In the Bible, a Hebrew judge and high priest. He failed to punish the sins of his two sons Hophni and Phinehas, and the destruction of his house ensued. At news of a defeat of the Israelites by the Philistines, in which his sons had been killed and the Ark of the Covenant taken, he fell backward from his seat and broke his neck. He was a judge of Israel for 40 years, and was 98 years old when he died. 1 Sam. 12, etc.

Eli. Oratorio by Sir Michael Costa, produced at the Birmingham Festival, Aug. 29, 1855.

Elia (ē'li.ą). Pseudonym of Charles Lamb in his essays contributed (1820 et seq.) to the London Magazine. They were collected as Essays of Elia in 1823, and Last Essays of Elia in 1833. The name was that of a clerk in the South Sea House, which Lamb remembered having heard there as a boy, and was at first used as a jest at the end of Recollections of South Sea House, the first of his essays. The Briget and James Elia of the essays are Mary and John Lamb, the brother and sister of the author.

Eliab (ę.lī'ab). Name of several persons mentioned in the Old Testament, including David's eldest brother. 1 Sam. xvi. 6.

Eliab. In Dryden and Tate's Absalom and Achitophel, Henry Bennet, Earl of Arlington.

Éliacin (ā.lyą.saṅ). Pseudonym of Hervieu, Paul Ernest.

Eliakim (ę.lī'ą.kim). In the Old Testament, the name of several persons, of whom the most notable is the son of Hilkiah and master of Hezekiah's household. 2 Kings, xviii. 18, etc.

Éliante (ā.lyäṅt). In Molière's comedy The Misanthrope, a reasonable, lovable girl; contrasted with Célimène, the coquette.

Elias (ę.lī'ąs). Greek name of Elijah.

Elidure (el'i.dör). Legendary king of Britain, mentioned in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia regum Britanniae.

Élie de Beaumont (ā.lē dę bō.mōṅ), Jean Baptiste Armand Louis Léonce. b. at Canon, Calvados, France, Sept. 25, 1798; d. there, Sept. 22, 1874. French geologist. He became professor of geology at the École des Mines in 1829, and at the Collège de France in 1832, and life secretary of the Academy of Sciences in 1853. He published Recherches sur quelques-unes des révolutions de la surface du globe (1829–30), Carte géologique de France (1843), Notices sur les systèmes de montagnes (1852), and other works.

Eliezer (el.i.ē'zėr, ē.li-). In the Old Testament, the name of several persons. The most notable are: 1. The chief servant of Abraham, called Eliezer of Damascus. Gen. xv. 2. 2. The second son of Moses and Zipporah. Ex. xviii. 4.

Eligius (ę.lij'i.us) or Éloi or Eloy (ā.lwà), Saint. b. near Limoges, France, c588; d. Dec. 1, 660. Bishop of Noyon-Tournai. He went to Paris in 610, and gained the favor of Clotaire II and Dagobert I both by his skill as a goldsmith and by his piety, which he displayed in founding churches and monasteries and in distributing alms to the poor. On the death of Dagobert in 639, he entered the priesthood and was chosen bishop of Noyon-Tournai in 640.

Elihu (ę.lī'hū). Name of several persons in the Old Testament, of whom the most notable is one of the friends of Job. He describes himself as the youngest of the interlocutors. Job, xxxii.–xxxvii.

Elijah (ē.lī'ja). [Greek, Elias.] Hebrew prophet of the 9th century B.C. An account of him is given in 1 Kings, xvii.–xxi., 2 Kings, i.–xi., and 2 Chron. xxi. 12–15. He appears before Ahab, king of Israel (who had given himself up to the idolatry of his Phoenician wife Jezebel), and predicts a great drought. Compelled to seek refuge in flight and concealment, he is miraculously fed by ravens in the torrent bed of the stream Cherith, and by the widow of Zarephath, whose dead son he restores to life. In the extremity of the famine he reappears before Ahab, before whom he calls down fire from heaven to consume a sacrifice to Jehovah, with the result that the king orders the extermination of the prophets of Baal, who are unable to call down fire to consume the offerings to Baal. Elijah then puts an end to the drought by prayers to Jehovah. Later he denounces Ahab and Jezebel for having despoiled and murdered Naboth, and is eventually carried to heaven in a chariot of fire. In the New Testament he is called Elias.

Elijah. Oratorio by Felix Mendelssohn, with words from the Old Testament. It was first performed at Birmingham, England, on Aug. 26, 1846.

Elijah Pogram (pō'gram). See Pogram, Elijah.

Elikon (e.lē.kôn'). See Helicon.

Elim (ē'lim). In Biblical geography, a station in the wanderings of the Israelites, noted for its fountains; not identified.

Elimberum (el.im.ber'um). Gallic name of Auch.

Elimelech (ē.lim'ē.lek). In the Old Testament, the husband of Naomi. Ruth, i. 1–3.

Elinor Barley (el'i.nor bär'li). Novelette by Sylvia Townsend Warner, published in 1930.

Elinor Dashwood (dash'wůd). See Dashwood, Elinor and Marianne.

Elío (ā.lē'ō), Francisco Javier. b. at Pamplona, Spain, March 4, 1767; d. at Valencia, Spain, Sept. 4, 1822. Spanish general. In 1805, having attained the grade of colonel, he was sent to the Río de la Plata, and given command of the forces operating against the English. In April, 1810, he was recalled to Spain, but returned at the end of the year as viceroy of Buenos Aires, appointed by the Spanish junta of the regency. The junta of Buenos Aires refused to recognize his commission, war followed, and Elío was besieged at Montevideo, but eventually arranged a treaty with the revolutionists by which both parties recognized the authority of Ferdinand VII and the unity of the Spanish nation, and agreed to refer their differences to the Spanish Cortes (Oct. 20, 1811). Elío was recalled to Spain two months after, and in 1812 and 1813 commanded against the French in Catalonia and Valencia, winning a series of brilliant victories. In 1814 he was made governor and captain-general of Valencia and Murcia. The revolution of 1820 caused his deposition and imprisonment. Some of his friends made an armed attempt to liberate him; the plot failed, and Elío, accused of instigating it, was found guilty by a court-martial and executed.

Eliocroca (ē''li.ō.krō'ka). Latin name of Lorca.

Eliot (el'i.ọt, el'yọt), Charles William. b. at Boston, March 20, 1834; d. at Northeast Harbor, Me., Aug. 22, 1926. American educator, president of Harvard, noted for his introduction of many progressive changes in the university's organization, administration, and curricula, and as editor of the well-known "five-foot shelf" of Harvard Classics. Graduated (1853) from Harvard, he became (1854) tutor in mathematics at that institution and served (c1858–63) as assistant professor of mathematics and chemistry. He became (1865) professor of chemistry at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and drew notice with his two articles on "The New Education: Its Organization," which were published (1869) in the Atlantic Monthly. As successor to Thomas Hill, he was inaugurated as president of Harvard on Oct. 19, 1869. During his notable administration, which continued until his resignation in 1909, Harvard added graduate schools of arts and sciences and the applied sciences and business administration, increased its revenue-bearing treasury some ten times over, made important reforms in the administrative structure, raised the standards of medical education, introduced the elective system for undergraduates, and liberalized the disciplinary regulations at Harvard College. He was a member (1910–16) of the Harvard board of overseers and a member of the general education board and trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation and Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Among his writings are: The Happy Life (1896), American Contributions to Civilization (1897), Educational Reform (1898), The Religion of the Future (1909), and A Late Harvest (ed. by M. A. DeWolfe Howe, 1924).

Eliot, Edward Granville. [Title, 3rd Earl of St. Germans.] b. in England, Aug. 29, 1798; d. there, Oct. 7, 1877. English diplomat. Envoy extraordinary (1834) to Spain during Carlist war where he concluded "Eliot Convention" for civilized treatment of prisoners. Member of Parliament (1837–45); chief secretary for Ireland (1841); and lord lieutenant (1852); postmaster general under Peel; viceroy of Ireland under Palmerston (1855) but shortly retired. Confidential adviser to Queen Victoria on family affairs.

Eliot, George. [Pseudonym of Mary Ann (or Marian) Evans.] b. at Arbury Farm, near Nuneaton, Warwickshire, England, Nov. 22, 1819; d. at Chelsea, London, Dec. 22, 1880. English psychological novelist, poet, and essayist. She is considered by some authorities the greatest of English women novelists and the equal of Dickens and Thackeray. She began her literary career by translating (1844–46) into English a life of Jesus written by the German theologian David Friedrich Strauss and as a contributor to and assistant editor of the Westminster Review (1850–53). Her career as a novelist opened (1857) with The Sad Fortunes of the Reverend Amos Barton, the beginning of Scenes from Clerical Life (1858). Her other major works include Adam Bede (1859), the story of an idealistic carpenter, The Mill on the Floss (1860), in which Tom and Maggie Tulliver represent the author and her brother Isaac, Silas Marner (1861), a long short-story rather than a novel, Romola (1863), an historical novel dealing with Florence in the days of Savonarola, and Middlemarch (1871–72), a psychological study of provincial life. Her lesser works, in the opinion of most modern critics, are Felix Holt, the Radical (1866), a political novel which has Gerald Massey, the English poet and radical, as its hero, Daniel Deronda (1876), her last fiction, a study of spiritual conflict and development, her poems How Lisa Loved the King (1867), The Spanish Gypsy (1868), and The Legend of Jubal (1870), and her satirical essays, Impressions of Theophrastus Such (1879). In 1854 she entered into a union (that lasted until his death) with the philosopher George Henry Lewes, who was unable to marry her because of the refusal of his wife to grant him a divorce. On May 6, 1880, she married an old friend, John Walter Cross, who later (1885–86) published George Eliot's Life as Related in Her Letters and Journals.

Eliot, George Fielding. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., June 22, 1894—. American soldier, military analyst, and author. Taken to Australia as a child, and educated there, he served (1914–18) with the Australian Imperial Force in World War I. Arrived in the U.S., he began his writing career in 1926 and held a commission (1922–30) in the U.S. military intelligence reserve. He has served as military and naval correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune (1939 et seq.) and military analyst (1939–46) for the Columbia Broadcasting System. Author of The Ramparts We Watch (1938), Bombs Bursting in Air (1939), Hour of Triumph (1944), The Strength We Need (1946), and other books.

Eliot, Sir John. b. at Port Eliot, on the Tamar, England, April 20, 1592; d. in the Tower of London, Nov. 27, 1632. English patriot. He was educated at Oxford, studied law at London, and in 1625, as a member of the first Parliament of Charles I, came into prominence by the vehemence and irresistible eloquence with which he supported the measures of the constitutional party. As the leader of the opposition in the second Parliament (1626) he was sent to prison, in company with Sir Dudley Digges, by the king; but was released, together with Sir Dudley, when Parliament refused to proceed to business without them. In the third Parliament (1628–29) he had a principal share in drawing up the Remonstrance and the Petition of Right. He was arrested on the dissolution of Parliament in 1629, and sentenced, on a charge of conspiracy against the king, to a fine of two thousand pounds, and to imprisonment until he should acknowledge his guilt.

Eliot, John. [Called the "Apostle of the Indians."] b. at Nasing, Essex, England, 1604; d. at Roxbury, Mass., May 21, 1690. Missionary to the Indians of Massachusetts. His principal work is a translation of the Bible into the Indian language (1661–63). He also wrote an Indian catechism (1653) and grammar (1666).

Eliot, John. b. at Boston, May 31, 1754; d. there, Feb. 14, 1813. American clergyman and biographer. He published the New England Biographical Dictionary (1809) and others.

Eliot, Sir John. b. at Lamesley, Durham, England, May 25, 1839; d. at Cavalaire, France, March 18, 1908. Anglo-Indian educator and meteorologist. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and was professor of mathematics at the Rurki Engineering College in India (1869–72) and at the Muir Central College at Allahabad (1872–74), professor of physics at the Presidency College, Calcutta, and also meteorological reporter to the government of Bengal (1874–86), meteorological reporter to the government of India and director-general of Indian observatories (1886–1903), and on his retirement in 1903 was made Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. Besides many papers on meteorological subjects, he published Handbook of Cyclonic Storms in the Bay of Bengal and The Climatological Atlas of India.

Eliot, T. S. [Full name, Thomas Stearns Eliot.] b. at St. Louis, Mo., 1888—. American-born poet and critic who became (1927) a naturalized British subject. His poetic commentaries on the civilization and spirit of his day (notably The Waste Land, 1922, which was awarded the Dial poetry prize), with their distinctive technique of ironic juxtaposition of ideal and reality, subtle allusions to direct or disguised quotations from a great variety of earlier literary works, and a poetic logic which eliminated the conventional transitions between images and episodes, profoundly influenced younger writers on both sides of the Atlantic. He was awarded the 1948 Nobel prize for literature. Educated at Harvard, the Sorbonne, and Oxford, he lived (1914 et seq.) in England, where he worked first as a bank clerk and then with the publishing firm of Faber and Gwyer (later Faber and Faber), and until 1939 edited The Criterion, a literary review. His earlier poetry, characterized by pessimism, includes Prufrock and Other Observations (1917), Poems (1919, which includes "Portrait of a Lady," "Sweeney Among the Nightingales," "Gerontion," and 21 other poems, The Hollow Men (1925), and Journey of the Magi (1927). He then developed a more limpid and meditative style, as in A Song for Simeon (1928), Animula (1929), and Marina (1930). After turning to Anglo-Catholicism he struck a note of quietist religious acceptance in Ash Wednesday (1930), The Rock (1934), and Four Quartets (1944), in all of which works he made use of the Anglican liturgy and such mystical writers as Saint John of the Cross in order to present a mood of restrained penitential hope and faith. He is the author also of the poetic dramas Murder in the Cathedral (1935), Family Reunion (1939), and The Cocktail Party (1949). His critical essays appeared in The Sacred Wood (1920), An Essay of Poetic Drama (1928), Dante (1929), Selected Essays (1932), The Use of Poetry and the Use of Criticism (1933), After Strange Gods (1934), Elizabethan Essays (1934), Essays Ancient and Modern (1936), The Idea of a Christian Society (1939), What is a Classic? (1945), and Notes toward the Definition of Culture (1949).

Eliott (el'i.ọt, el'yọt), George Augustus. [Title, 1st Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar.] b. at Stobs, Roxburghshire, Scotland, Dec. 25, 1717; d. at Aix-La-Chapelle (now Aachen, Germany), July 6, 1790. Scottish soldier. He was appointed (1775) governor of Gibraltar, which he defended (1779 et seq.) against the Spanish during a three-year siege, surviving a blockade and erecting defenses which withstood red-hot shot. He was made a Knight of the Bath and raised (1787) to the peerage as Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar.

Eliphalet (ē.lif'ạ.let). [Also, Eliphelet.] Name of several persons in the Old Testament, of whom the most notable are two sons of David.

Eliphaz (el'i.faz). In the Bible, the chief of the three friends of Job, surnamed the "Temanite." Job, ii. 11, etc.

Elis (ē'lis). [Also, Eleia.] In ancient geography, a country in the W part of the Peloponnesus, Greece, lying between Achaia on the N, Arcadia on the E, Messenia on the S, and the Ionian Sea on the W. It comprised three parts: Elis proper or Hollow Elis, Pisatis, and Triphylia. It contained the temple of the Olympian Zeus.

Elis. [Also, Ilia.] Nomos (department) in S Greece, situated on the Peloponnesus. It includes the provinces of Elis and Olympia. Capital, Pyrgos; pop. 187,867 (1951).

Élisa (ā.lē.zȧ). [Full title, Élisa ou le voyage au mont Bernard; Eng. trans., "Elisa, or the Journey to Mount Bernard."] Opera by Cherubini, words by Saint-Cyr, produced at Paris on Dec. 13, 1794.

Elisabeth (ē.liz'ạ.bẹth). See also Elizabeth.

Élisabeth de France (ā.lē.zȧ.bet dẹ fräṅs), Madame. [Full name, Élisabeth Philippine Marie Hélène; called Madame Élisabeth.] b. at Versailles, France, May 3, 1764; guillotined at Paris, May 10, 1794. French princess; sister of Louis XVI.

Élisabeth de France. French name of Elizabeth of Valois.

Élisabeth, ou Les Exilés en Sibérie (ā.lē.zȧ.bet ō lā.zeg.zē.lā äṅ sē.bā.rē). [Eng. trans., "Elizabeth, or the Exiles in Siberia."] Romance by Madame Cottin, published in 1806. The subject is the same as that of Xavier de Maistre's Jeune Sibérienne, a young girl going on foot from Siberia to St. Petersburg to beg for the pardon of her exiled father.

Elisabethville (ē.liz'ạ.bẹth.vil). Capital of Katanga province, Belgian Congo, in C Africa: the second largest city in the colony, and the center of its mining area. It is connected by rail with Capetown via the Rhodesias (2,305 mi.), to Lobito, Angola, via the Benguela Railway (1,309 mi.), and with Port Francqui via the Bas Congo-Katanga railroad (650 mi.). It is the headquarters of the Union Minière du Haut Katanga, the great mining and smelting company which runs most of the mines and associated enterprises in the Katanga region. The city is the main distribution center in the colony for heavy mining and industrial equipment. The town was founded in 1910 and named after Elizabeth, then queen of the Belgians. It is a modern city, with wide streets, high buildings, and most of the facilities for modern living. Pop. 103,352, including 7,793 Europeans (1950).

Elisabethville. Former name of Katanga province.

Elisabeth von Lothringen (ā.lē'zȧ.bet fon lōt'ring.ẹn). [Also, Elisabeth von Nassau (nä'sou).] b. in Lorraine, before 1400; d. at Saarbrücken, Germany, Jan. 17, 1456. German princess and author. After the death (1429) of her husband, Count Philip of Nassau-Saarbrücken, she undertook to adapt into German prose four French chansons de geste: Herpin (after Lion de Bourges), Loher und Maller, Sibille (both after lost French originals), and Hugo Scheppel. These are notable as marking the transition from medieval epics to the prose novel of modern times.

Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra (ā.lē.zȧ.bet'tä rā.jē'nä dēng.gēl.ter'rä). [Eng. trans., "Elizabeth, Queen of England."] Opera by Rossini, written in 1815 for the San Carlos at Naples, and produced at Paris on March 10, 1822.

Elisavetgrad (yi.lē.zạ.vet.grät'). A former name of Kirovograd.

Elisavetpol (yi.lē.zạ.vet'pọl). A former name of Kirovabad.

Élise (ā.lēz). In Molière's L'Avare (The Miser), the daughter of Harpagon, in love with Valère.

Elisena (el.i.sē'nạ). In the Spanish cycle of romances, a princess of Brittany; the mother of Amadis of Gaul.

Eliseus (el.i.sē'us). See Elisha.

Elisha (ē.lī'shạ). [Also, Eliseus.] fl. in the 9th century B.C. Hebrew prophet, the attendant and successor of Elijah. 1 Kings, xix. 15–21.

Elishah (ē.lī'shạ). In the Bible, in Gen. x. 4, the eldest son of Javan: identified with the Aeolians, with Sicily, and with the N coast of Africa.

Elisheba (ē.lish'ẹ.bạ). [Also, Elizabeth.] In the Bible, the wife of Aaron.

Elisío (ā.lē.zē'ō), Américo. Pseudonym of Bonifácio, José.

Elisir d'Amore (lā.lē.zēr' dä.mō'rā), L'. [Eng. trans., "The Elixir of Love."] Opera in two acts by Donizetti, with a libretto by Romani, first produced at Milan in 1832. The English version was called The Love Spell and was produced at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, in 1839. The comic work shows the effect of a supposed love philter (in reality a bottle of wine sold by the quack Dulcamara) on a group of simple villagers.

Elissa (ē.lis'ą). [Also, Elisa.] Under the name Dido, the heroine of the fourth book of Vergil's Aeneid. According to the tradition she was the daughter of King Matgen (or Belus), grandson of Eth-Baal of Phoenicia. She was married to her uncle Sicharbaal or Sicharbas (the Greek Acerbas and the Sychaeus of Vergil). After her husband was murdered by her brother Pygmalion, she set out at the head of Tyrian colonists to Africa. In Africa she bought as much land as could be enclosed in the hide of a bull, but by cutting the hide into thin strips managed to obtain a fairly large area on which she built the citadel around which Carthage grew up. To escape wedding the barbarian king Iarbas (Hiarbas) she erected a funeral pyre and stabbed herself upon it. According to Vergil her death was due to her despair at her desertion by Aeneas. In the popular mind she became confounded with Dido, a surname of Astarte as goddess of the moon, who was also the goddess of the citadel of Carthage.

Elissa. In the second book of Spenser's Faerie Queene, the eldest of three sisters who were always at odds. She is the sister of Medina and Perissa, and mistress of the rash Hudibras.

Eliud (ē.lī'ud). In the Bible, a Jew mentioned in the genealogy of Christ. He lived after the Babylonian exile.

Elizabeth (ē.liz'ą.bęth). See also Elisheba.

Elizabeth, Saint. In the Bible, the wife of Zacharias, a priest, the mother of John the Baptist, and a cousin of the Virgin Mary. She was childless until late in life, when an angel appeared to her husband and told him that she would give birth to a son. With her husband, Elizabeth is a saint of the Roman Catholic church, Nov. 5 being the day on which they are honored. Elizabeth is Greek for the Hebrew Elisheba, meaning "worshiper of God." Luke, i. 5–25.

Elizabeth (of Austria). [Full name, Elizabeth Amelie Eugenie.] b. at Possenhofen Castle, on Lake Starnberg, Munich, Dec. 24, 1837; stabbed to death at Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 10, 1898. Empress of Austria from 1854 to 1898, and queen of Hungary from 1867. She was a daughter of Maximilian Joseph, Duke of Bavaria, and Louisa Wilhelmina, whose father was Maximilian I. On April 24, 1854, she was married at Vienna to her cousin Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, who met her and her family in August, 1853, at Ischl, a watering-place in Upper Austria, and fell in love with her at first sight. She visited Hungary for the first time in 1857 and became its queen ten years later.

Elizabeth (of Belgium). b. July 25, 1876—. Queen of the Belgians (1909–34); mother of Leopold III. The daughter of Duke Charles Theodore of Bavaria, she married Prince Albert (later Albert I of Belgium) on Oct. 2, 1900. During World War I she remained with her husband at La Panne, near Ostend, where she served as a nurse in the Ocean Hospital. She was also instrumental in establishing many canteens and aid posts, and shared with Albert the well-merited affection of the Belgian people during and after the war.

Elizabeth (of Bohemia). [Full name, Elizabeth Stuart.] b. at Falkland, Scotland, in August, 1596; d. at London, Feb. 13, 1662. Queen of Bohemia; daughter of James VI of Scotland (James I of England) and Anne of Denmark, and wife of Frederick, elector palatine (later Frederick V of Bohemia). She was grandmother of George I of England. Both before and after her marriage she was the center of admiration for her beauty, earning the appellation "Queen of Hearts." Her misfortunes (defeat and deposition of her husband in 1620, the death of her son by drowning in 1629, her husband's death in 1632, the refusal of her son Charles Louis to support her, her rejection on all sides while living in the Netherlands) added to her romantic appeal. In 1661 she entered England despite Charles II's opposition to the move, and he had to grant her a pension.

Elizabeth (of England). [Also, Elizabeth I, Elizabeth Tudor; sometimes called the Virgin Queen.] b. at Greenwich Palace, London, Sept. 7, 1533; d. at Richmond, Surrey, March 24, 1603. Queen of England (1558–1603). She was the daughter of Henry VIII and his second wife, Anne Boleyn. Henry's marriage to Catherine of Aragon had been declared invalid by a court headed by Thomas Cranmer in 1533, and Henry married Anne Boleyn, one of the court ladies and a sister of one of Henry's former mistresses, Mary Boleyn. This marriage, secretly performed in January, 1533, was followed by Anne's coronation on Whitsunday, 1533; but while recognition of the marriage was official in England, Catherine and her adherents, including Pope Clement VII, refused to sanction the annulment of the previous marriage or the legitimacy of the issue of the new marriage. Thus, the right of Elizabeth to the throne was a live question throughout her reign and the many conspirators based their plots on what they considered a usurpation. In 1534, after the birth of Elizabeth, a parliamentary act of succession recognized the rights of Anne's issue as heirs to the throne; Elizabeth, who was to be Anne's only surviving child, became heir presumptive of England, taking place ahead of Mary, Catherine's child. In 1536, when Anne was tried and executed on a charge of adultery, Henry's second marriage was invalidated too; since this annulment constituted more than a divorce in that the offspring of the marriage were disowned, Elizabeth's claim to the English throne was afterwards called by many illegitimate, for the invalid marriage (the excuse for the annulment was that Anne Boleyn had been betrothed by contract to Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland) was regarded as never having taken place legally and no heirs from the marriage could legally be recognized. Soon after the execution of Anne and the immediately following marriage of Henry to Jane Seymour, a new act of succession established the issue of the Seymour marriage in line of title. Later, after Jane's death in 1537 as the result of the birth of a male heir (who became Edward VI), parliament passed an act (following Henry's will) that put the order of succession as it actually later occurred: Edward, son of Jane Seymour; Mary, daughter of Catherine of Aragon; and Elizabeth, daughter of Anne Boleyn. Since none of these rulers had children and since Henry had no further issue from his three remaining marriages, the line of succession of the Tudors was not complicated further, and after Elizabeth's death the crown passed to James VI of Scotland, who as great-great-grandson of Henry VII, had next claim to the throne of England through his mother, Mary Queen of Scots. The Tudor line died with Elizabeth and the Stuarts came to the English throne.

Early Years. Elizabeth's education as a child and young girl was by teachers who followed the new Humanism of Erasmus, Colet, and More. She and her half-brother Edward were taught together and both were brought up as Protestants, since Henry had broken with the Roman Catholic Church over the question of the divorce from Catherine of Aragon. But whereas Edward was a deeply religious youth, Elizabeth's religious persuasion was never very strong; during Mary's reign she did not antagonize the Roman Catholics; during her own reign she did not persecute them. Among her tutors were Roger Ascham (who later wrote The Scholemaster and who became Elizabeth's secretary) and William Grindal. She became expert in languages, learning not only Greek and Latin, but French, German, and Italian as well. She was an accomplished writer and an eloquent speaker; tradition is quite specific about her command both of the courtly and flowery language and of the vigorous and vulgar tongue of her times. Elizabeth seems to have been rather handsome and, after Edward's accession as Edward VI, she was courted by Thomas Seymour, brother of the Protector, Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset. Seymour, plotting to take his brother's place as the king's guardian, had married Catherine Parr, widow of Henry VIII, with whom Elizabeth lived after Edward became king. After Catherine Parr's death in 1548, Seymour openly tried to marry Elizabeth, but though it is possible that certain intimacies occurred, nothing came of the match. Seymour, was implicated in the plot that attempted to supersede the order of succession and place Lady Jane Grey on the throne and Elizabeth was severely questioned about the matter, but she was cleared of complicity; Seymour was executed. Elizabeth supported Mary Tudor's claim to the throne and when Mary came to London as queen after the suppression of the plot Elizabeth was at her side. Although she was not tied to the insurrection (1554) of Sir Thomas Wyatt to unseat Mary, who was about to make her unpopular marriage with Philip II of Spain, Elizabeth was nevertheless, as a danger to Mary's continuance on the throne, imprisoned in the Tower and later at Woodstock. She was afterwards received at court but spent most of her time until the end of Mary's reign in seclusion at Hatfield.

Accession and Consolidation. Mary died on Nov. 17, 1558, and Elizabeth, though opposed by Roman Catholics on the grounds of illegitimacy, came to the throne of England. The persecutions of Mary were fresh in the minds of the English and thus Roman Catholic objections to Elizabeth probably served only to strengthen her popular position. After a brief struggle with the English bishops over her position in the English church, Elizabeth saw to it that a bill of uniformity was passed in 1559 making her "Supreme Governor" (a compromise title in place of "Supreme Head") of the kingdom in religious matters. This compromise bill both placated the group that did not want to see a woman as head of the church and forestalled immediate action by the Roman Catholics and the Calvinists against her. Her coronation in 1559, however, was performed by the bishop of Carlisle, since the majority of the bishops refused to act. In choosing her privy council Elizabeth retained a number of people who had served under Mary, but she also appointed seven of her own people as advisers, including William Cecil (who was created Baron Burghley in 1571) as her secretary of state and Nicholas Bacon as lord privy seal and later as lord chancellor. There were no clerics on her privy council. Her principal subsequent appointment was of Francis Walsingham as Burghley's successor as secretary of state.

Foreign Policy. Elizabeth's reign was marked by the avoidance of war openly while at the same time it followed a policy of aggressive resistance to the spread of Spanish power and necessarily encouraged an atmosphere of extreme nationalism. The policy of the Tudors led them towards absolutism and Elizabeth early recognized that wars would mean expenditures heavier than the normal budget would allow, and that these expenditures would require the convening of parliament with its limiting power on the monarchy. Therefore, while her privateers waged unofficial war on Spain, returning huge fortunes to the royal coffers, officially England remained at peace for almost 30 years. Her armies and navies were only partly royal levies; a large proportion of her troops and ships were supplied by the great noblemen. Not until 1588 did open warfare really break out, and then nature and chance came to her defense by virtually destroying the Spanish Armada after it met (and was crippled by) the English. The later years of her reign were marked, however, by increasing taxes to support the war against Spain. Elizabeth came to the throne in the year that Calais was lost (January, 1588) to the French; English spirit and fortunes were at a low ebb. Her appointment of Cecil to handle her foreign affairs was a wise one. By the treaty of Cateau-Cambrésis (1559), France was to return Calais to England in eight years. England and Spain temporarily sided with one another; negotiations were going on for a marriage between Elizabeth and Philip II of Spain. Trouble now began over Scotland. Mary Stuart had married Francis of Valois, who came to the French throne in 1559 as Francis II. Mary claimed to be queen of both Scotland and England and issued orders to obtain Scottish conformity with the Roman Catholic Church. Elizabeth made an alliance with the Scottish reformers and, by July, 1560 (Treaty of Edinburgh), forced the withdrawal of the French from Scotland. Francis died in 1560 and Mary, returning to Scotland, became embroiled with the followers of John Knox. She married Lord Darnley and then, after his death, the earl of Bothwell, but eventually fled (1568) to England before the fury of the Scots and appealed to Elizabeth for sanctuary. Elizabeth, recognizing that she had her hands on a strong claimant to the English throne, kept Mary in custody for almost 20 years. Eventually, because of the many plots to free the Scots queen and to revive her claims to both thrones, Elizabeth permitted her execution in 1587. Before this, however, English alliance had swung from Spain to France. The marriage with Philip of Spain had fallen through and the activities of the Roman Catholics in England, supported by Philip, grew stronger and culminated in the rebellion in 1569 of the earls of Westmoreland and Northumberland. The piratical activities of Drake and Hawkins on the Spanish Main were a constant cause of friction, but Spain, faced with revolt in the Netherlands, could not afford an open break. Instead, Philip entered into further intrigue: the Ridolfi plot of 1571 was aimed at deposing Elizabeth (a papal bull had already deposed and excommunicated her) and placing Mary Queen of Scots on the throne along with Thomas Howard, the duke of Norfolk. The plot was exposed, Norfolk was executed, and Mary fell further into the queen's displeasure. The new reorientation of policy toward France was accompanied by marriage negotiations with the duke of Anjou (later Henry III of France) and François d'Alençon, but yet again the attempts to get the queen married came to nothing. When the Dutch revolted against Spain, Elizabeth supported them (treaty of alliance, 1577) and, therefore (after Elizabeth had returned the Spanish ambassador in 1586 for organizing plots against her), and also to put a halt to the increasingly serious raids of English mariners on his shipping, Philip determined to attack England. To this end he began gathering a fleet to carry soldiers to Britain. Francis Drake's daring raid on Cadiz in 1587 sank a sufficient number of ships to put off the invasion for a year, but in July, 1588, the Spanish Armada (the Invincible Armada) sailed with 25,000 troops and 30,000 seamen against England. It was supposed to pick up 25,000 more troops in the Netherlands before the invasion actually took place, but the English fleet under Charles Howard caught up with the Armada in the English Channel and for a week the 130 ships of the Armada were harried until on July 29 they were caught off Calais and scattered. The Spanish admiral, the duke of Medina-Sidonia, abandoned the plan to invade England and tried to get his ships back to Spain. The Channel was blocked and he sailed north around the British Isles. But the gale that had aided the English off Calais increased and the Armada was torn to bits off the Hebrides; fewer than half the ships ever got back to Spain. Now, after 30 years, Elizabeth found herself at war. In 1585, the earl of Leicester, Robert Dudley, had been sent to the Netherlands to aid the Dutch in their rebellion. In 1589 Drake raided Portugal (at the time a part of the Spanish king's domain) and raids were carried out against Cadiz (1596) and the Azores (1597). The Spanish war continued until the end of Elizabeth's reign. In 1597, the Irish rebelled; Robert Devereux, the earl of Essex, was sent to put down the revolt but he failed; not until 1603, after Charles Blount was appointed to the command there, was the rebellion suppressed.

Religion. Elizabeth's accession in 1558 followed a period of active suppression of Protestantism under Mary Tudor. The new queen was welcomed by the English who, with the rising feeling of nationalism, were turning against the rule of Rome in spiritual affairs. In 1559 two bills passed Parliament establishing the Church of England: the act of uniformity called for the use of the second Prayer Book (1552, by Thomas Cranmer) that made of the Roman Catholic Mass the Anglican Communion; the act of supremacy established Elizabeth as supreme governor in spiritual matters. Matthew Parker, who had been Anne Boleyn's chaplain, was appointed (1559) archbishop of Canterbury. Parker rewrote the 42 articles of convocation of Edward VI into the 39 articles (proclaimed by Elizabeth, 1563) and supervised the edition of the Bible known as the Bishop's Bible (1572). Elizabeth's policy, once the church had been cleared of ecclesiastics who refused to accept the acts of uniformity and supremacy, was one of toleration. Only the extreme Puritans (Brownists) and the Roman Catholics were not included in the new Anglican Church. Elizabeth supported the Calvinists in Scotland against the claims of the Roman Catholic Mary Queen of Scots, and under Elizabeth Protestantism was carried into Ireland. In 1570 Pope Pius V excommunicated her; she was faced, both before and after that, with several Roman Catholic plots to depose her and to bring Mary to the throne. The English Roman Catholics had set up a college at Douai in 1561 (located at Reims after 1571) from which missionary priests were sent to England to convert the English to Roman Catholicism and, incidentally, to support the plots against the queen. Among the famous priests who so acted were Edmund Campion (executed for conspiracy in 1581) and Robert Parsons (who later headed the English College at Rome). The controversy within the Anglican Church over Puritanism was carried even into Parliament, where members (like Peter and Paul Wentworth) agitated for reform. John Whitgift (later archbishop of Canterbury) and Thomas Cartwright (Cambridge professor of divinity, removed for his part in the argument) carried on a heated debate over conformity. The Martin Marprelate pamphlets of 1588–89 began a controversy concerning Whitgift's authority that ended with vigorous suppression of the pamphleteering.

Internal Policy. Elizabeth avoided, as long as she could, excess taxation, in the well-founded belief that thus she would avoid domestic unrest and would foster financial soundness within the country. Her avoidance of war was a result of this policy; when it was necessary to raise money, she sold royal lands rather than raise the tax burden. Her popularity, in fact, began to wane only after the beginning of the Spanish war in the late 1580's. Her shares of such matters as Drake's raiding voyage (1577–80) on Spanish shipping off South America were far from negligible. In 1560 and 1561 the coinage was standardized on a silver basis and in 1563 the Statute of Artificers set up a labor code that attempted to establish employment standards on a national basis, whereby unemployment would cease and wages would be regulated. This domestic policy culminated in the Elizabethan Poor Laws of 1597 and 1601 which made the parishes responsible for the care of the needy and imposed very heavy penalties for vagabondage. Elizabeth, true to the Tudor tradition, called few parliaments; in her more than 44 years on the throne only 13 parliaments were assembled. But even then Parliament made advances in these years; it grew from 308 to 372 members; it established its right to debate and legislate on matters only barely approaching those for which it was specifically called. Monopolies were granted by the crown in everything from foreign trade to domestic commodities, and while this helped in England's commercial and industrial expansion, it resulted in rising costs (as much as 400 percent) and the tyranny of arbitrary search and seizure. Elizabeth's later parliaments (1592, 1597, 1601) attempted to deal with the problems raised by these monopolies. In 1600 the East India Company, which in later years was to bring its richest empire to England, was chartered. A recurrent and a constant problem was Elizabeth's spinsterhood. Diplomatic marriages with Philip II of Spain or the French dukes of Anjou and Alençon were projected, but Elizabeth would not risk her hold on the throne by a foreign marriage. Despite certain rumored physical incapabilities (the legend that Elizabeth was really a man still has some currency), her liaisons with court favorites resulted in extreme jealousy on her part; perhaps her one real love was Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, but rumor made of him a wife-killer (Amy Robsart, his wife, had been killed in 1560, probably accidentally, when Leicester's marriage to Elizabeth was a strong possibility) and Elizabeth could not risk the scandal. Her affair with Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, towards the end of her life, ended unhappily with his rebellion and execution (1601). Elizabeth died, in 1603, the only English ruler of adult years since the Norman Conquest in 1066 who had not married. She recognized clearly the problem that would face the kingdom at her death and part of her reluctance to order the execution of Mary Queen of Scots is traceable to the fact that Mary's son, James VI of Scotland, was the logical successor to the English throne. On Elizabeth's death, he became James I of England.

The Elizabethan Age. The four and a half decades of Elizabeth's reign mark probably the most brilliant period in English history, and one of the top half dozen in world history. The long period of official peace with other nations built up about Elizabeth a colorful court whose energies were turned to other matters than war, although freebooting and soldiering expeditions by her military captains gave glamour to their names. Literature reached a golden age in this time, a period marked with Elizabeth's name, although much of the so-called Elizabethan literature (for example much of the body of dramatic literature) dates from the period of the first Stuart kings (1603–1642). Such poets as Spenser, Drayton, and Gascoigne, playwrights like Marlowe, Greene, Lyly, and Shakespeare, essayists, romancers, and critics of the stamp of Raleigh, Bacon, and Sidney make the period incomparable in its brilliance. Elizabeth's captains and advisers, the Cecils, Dudley, the Walsinghams, Raleigh, Hawkins, Drake, the Bacons, while not uniformly successful, were nevertheless instrumental in carrying out her policies. England became in Elizabeth's time a world power, not yet as strong as Spain but soon to surpass her; the English navy grew to be second to none; commerce expanded and colonies were established where such explorers as Frobisher and Drake had gone.

Elizabeth (of England). [Maiden name, Lady Elizabeth Angela Marguerite Bowes-Lyon.] b. in Hertfordshire, England, Aug. 4, 1900—. Queen mother of England; widow of King George VI, and mother of Elizabeth II; youngest daughter, of three, of Claude George Bowes-Lyon, 14th Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn. On April 26, 1923, in Westminster Abbey, she married George VI, who was then Albert Frederick Arthur George, Duke of York. She became queen consort on Dec. 11, 1936, when her husband mounted the throne following the abdication of Edward VIII (formerly Prince of Wales, and now Duke of Windsor). She was crowned queen of England on May 12, 1937. In May and June, 1939, when she and the king visited America they were the first reigning English monarchs to visit the U.S. (and Canada).

Elizabeth I (of England). See Elizabeth (of England) (1533–1603).

Elizabeth II (of England). [Full name, Elizabeth Alexandra Mary.] b. at Buckingham Palace, London, April 21, 1926—. Queen of England; daughter of George VI (1894–1952), who was the Duke of York when she was born, and Queen Elizabeth (now queen mother). As a princess and a future queen, she was educated privately by a governess, and by tutors. She speaks French and German fluently, and Spanish and Italian slightly less so. Following the custom of her father (who was born on Dec. 14), she will celebrate her official birthday, as distinct from her private one, on June 5.

Elizabeth (of Rumania). [Full name, Pauline Elizabeth Ottilie Luise; pseudonym, Carmen Sylva.] b. at Neuwied, Germany, Dec. 29, 1843; d. at Bucharest, March 2, 1916. Queen of Rumania (1881–1916); daughter of Prince Hermann of Wied, and wife of Carol I of Rumania, whom she married Nov. 15, 1869. Under her pseudonym she became a well-known writer, in Rumanian, German, French, and English. She published Sappho (1880), Hammerstein (1880), Stürme (Storms, 1881), Leidens Erdengang (Sorrow on Earth, 1882), and others. In 1882 she published in French Les Pensées d'une reine, revealing her name, and later Pelesch Märchen (1883), Le Pic aux regrets (Paris, 1884), Es Klopft (Some One Knocks, 1887; translated into French in 1889, with a preface by Pierre Loti), and Lieder aus dem Dimbovitzthal (The Bard of Dimbovitza, 1889), a collection of folk tales. She also collaborated with Madame Mite Kremnitz under the signatures "Ditto" and "Idem," in writing Aus zwei Welten (1882), Astra (1886), and other works.

Elizabeth (of Spain). [Spanish, Isabel; also, Isabella.] b. at Fontainebleau, France, Nov. 22, 1602; d. at Madrid, Oct. 6, 1644. Queen of Spain; daughter of Henry IV of France, and wife of Philip IV of Spain; mother of Maria Theresa, wife of Louis XIV of France.

Elizabeth. City in N New Jersey, county seat of Union County, near Newark Bay and Staten Island Sound, ab. 12 mi. SW of New York and adjoining Newark. It is a center for the refining of copper and oil; manufactures include soap, clothing, chemicals, iron and steel machinery, hardware, and sewing machines. 112,817 (1950).

Elizabeth. Borough in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County, on the Monongahela River, near Pittsburgh. 2,615 (1950).

Elizabeth. Novel by Frank Swinnerton, published in 1934.

Elizabeth. Pseudonym of Russell, Elizabeth Mary.

Elizabeth, Cape. Headland in Maine, projecting into the Atlantic ab. 8 mi. S of Portland.

Elizabeth, Mount. [Also, Mount Elisabeth.] Mountain in Antarctica, in the Queen Alexandra Range, rising

SW of Mount Anne at the head of the Ross Shelf Ice, in ab. 83°58′ S., 168°10′ E. Elevation, ab. 10,760 ft.

Elizabeth and Essex (es′iks). Biographical study by Lytton Strachey, published in 1928.

Elizabeth Bennet (ben′ət). See Bennet, Elizabeth.

Elizabeth Charlotte (shär′lọt). b. at Heidelberg, Baden, Germany, May 27, 1652; d. at St.-Cloud, France, Dec. 8, 1722. Palatine princess; second wife of Philip, Duke of Orléans (brother of Louis XIV of France).

Elizabeth Christine (kris.tē′nẹ). [Also, Elisabeth Christine.] b. Nov. 8, 1715; d. Jan. 13, 1797. Princess of Brunswick; wife of Frederick II of Prussia (Frederick the Great), whom she married on June 12, 1733.

Elizabeth City. Town in NE North Carolina, county seat of Pasquotank County, on the Pasquotank River ab. 39 mi. S of Norfolk: trading and shipping center for potatoes, cotton, corn, peanuts, soybeans, and fish; manufactures of cotton textiles and hosiery. It is the seat of a U.S. Coast Guard shipyard and air and supply base. It maintained an important West Indian shipping trade throughout the 18th and early 19th centuries. A naval victory was gained here, on Feb. 10, 1862, by a Union fleet under Commodore Rowan. 12,685 (1950).

Elizabeth Farnese (fär.nā′zā). b. Oct. 25, 1692; d. 1766. Queen of Spain and princess of Parma; wife of Philip V of Spain.

Elizabeth Islands. Group of 16 small islands, in SE Massachusetts, forming the town of Gosnold, Dukes County, lying between Buzzards Bay and Vineyard Sound.

Elizabeth of Bavaria (bạ.vār′i.ạ). See Isabeau of Bavaria.

Elizabeth of Hungary (hung′gạ.ri), Saint. [Also, Saint Elizabeth of Thuringia (thu.rin′ji.ạ).] b. at Pressburg (now Bratislava, Czechoslovakia), 1207; d. at Marburg, Germany, Nov. 19, 1231. Daughter of Andrew II of Hungary, and wife of Louis IV, landgrave of Thuringia, celebrated for her sanctity and charity to the poor. The death of her husband in 1227 left her with three infants and no income, since her brother-in-law drove her from her place as regent. She was offered the regency later, but renounced it to follow a life of penance and of nursing the sick. She is credited with several miracles.

Elizabeth of Valois (vạ.lwȧ′, val′wä). [Also: Isabella of Valois; French, Élisabeth de France; Spanish, Isabel.] b. at Fontainebleau, France, April 13, 1545; d. at Madrid, Oct. 3, 1568. Queen of Spain; daughter of Henry II of France and Catherine de Médicis, and wife of Philip II of Spain. She was betrothed to Philip's son, Don Carlos, but after the death of Mary Tudor, Philip's second wife, and the refusal of Elizabeth of England to marry Philip, she married the father in preference to the son.

Elizabeth Petrovna (pi.trôv′nạ). [Russian, Elizaveta Petrovna (yi.lē.zạ.ve′tạ).] b. Dec. 18, 1709; d. Jan. 5, 1762. Empress of Russia (1741–62); daughter of Peter I (Peter the Great) and Catherine I. She took part against Frederick the Great (Frederick II of Prussia) in the Seven Years' War, in the course of which her army entered Berlin (1760) and pressed him so hard that he would probably have been overcome by the Allies except for her timely (from Frederick's point of view) death. She founded the University of Moscow, and the Academy of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg.

Elizabeth Point. Headland on the SW coast of Africa, midway along the coast of South-West Africa. It forms the W side of the bay on which the port of Lüderitz is situated.

Elizabeth the Queen. Drama in blank verse by Maxwell Anderson, produced in 1930 and published in the same year. The plot involves the British queen's unwavering determination to place national interests before all personal considerations. When Lord Essex, the court favorite, lends his aid to intrigues against Elizabeth, she divests him of his military power and orders his execution.

Elizabethton (ẹ.liz′ạ.bẹth.tọn). City in NE Tennessee, county seat of Carter County, at the confluence of the Watauga and Dee rivers. Manufactures include rayon textiles, twine, lumber, boxes, overalls, and flour. 10,754 (1950).

Elizabethtown (ẹ.liz′ạ.bẹth.toun″). City in C Kentucky, county seat of Hardin County: trading center for livestock, tobacco, and grain. It was platted in 1793, and was the home of Thomas Lincoln, father of Abraham Lincoln. 5,807 (1950).

Elizabethtown. Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Lancaster County: marketing center for an agricultural area. Settled in 1732, it is the seat of Elizabethtown College. 5,083 (1950).

Elizabeth Town. Former name of Hagerstown, Md.

Elizabethtown. Former name of Moundsville, W.Va.

Elizabeth Tudor (tū′dọr). See Elizabeth (of England) (1533–1603).

Elizabeth Woodville (wůd′vil). b. probably in 1437; d. at Bermondsey (now part of London), June 8, 1492. Queen of Edward IV of England; daughter of Sir Richard Woodville, 1st Earl Rivers. After the death of her first husband, Sir John Grey, she married in 1464 Edward IV, by whom she became the mother of Edward V, who with another son, Richard, Duke of York, was murdered in the Tower, and of Elizabeth, queen of Henry VII.

El Jedida (el je.dē′dạ). Arabic name of Mazagan.

El Jezira (el je.zē′rạ). Arabic name of Blue Nile province.

El Jezireh (je.zē′re). See Jezireh, El.

El Jib (el jēb′). Arabic name of Gibeon.

Ełk (elk). [German, Lyck.] Town in E Poland, in the województwo (province) of Białystok, formerly in East Prussia, Germany, situated ab. 60 mi. NW of Białystok. It has livestock markets and a lumber industry. The castle once belonged to the Teutonic Order. In World War I, the town was occupied by the Russians from August to September, 1914. It came under Polish administration in 1945. Pop. 16,482 (1939); 6,104 (1946).

El Kab (el käb′). [Ancient names, Eileithyia, Hebent.] Place in NE Africa, on the right bank of the Nile River, in Upper Egypt, opposite and a little N of Edfu, on the railroad line from Cairo to Aswan, ab. 510 mi. S of Cairo. It is of interest for the ancient rock tombs and temples and the old city with its wall, which is now very much in ruins, believed to have been one of the oldest of Egyptian towns.

El Kahirah (el kä′hi.rạ). Arabic name of Cairo, Egypt.

El Kantara (kan′tạ.rạ). [Also, El Qantara.] Village in NE Egypt, on the Suez Canal ab. 27 mi. S of Port Said. It is a rail-ferry point on the only railway link between Egypt and the Levant.

El-Karidab (el.kar′i.dab). A very rarely used name for the third-magnitude star δ Sagittarii, more commonly called Kaus Media.

Elk City (elk). [Former name, Busch.] City in W Oklahoma, in Beckham County, in a dairy-farming region: trading and shipping center. 7,962 (1950).

El Kef or El Keff (el kef′). See Le Kef.

El Kerak (el ke′räk). [Also: Kerak; ancient names, Kir-Hareseth, Kir Moab, Kir of Moab; medieval name (in the crusades), Le Crac.] Town in W Jordan, ab. 48 mi. SE of Jerusalem. An ancient city, it once belonged to the Moabites. In 1167 it was held by the Christians. The castle of the Crusaders, built here c1131 by Foulques V, Count of Anjou, and king of Jerusalem, is one of the most imposing of medieval monuments. The walls and towers are lofty and massive; the passages, colonnades, cisterns, and moats are of great extent and interest. A subterranean chapel with frescoes is of unusual interest. Mesha sacrificed his son here (2 Kings, iii. 25–27). Pop. ab. 8,000.

Elkesaites (el.kē′sạ.īts). See Elcesaites.

El Khalil (el kä.lēl′, ċhä-). Arabic name of Hebron.

El Kharga (el kär′gạ, ċhär′-). See Kharga.

Elkhart (elk′härt). City in N Indiana, at the confluence of the Elkhart and St. Joseph rivers: important for the manufacture of musical instruments. The C. G. Conn Band Instrument Company factory is the largest of its kind in the world. Elkhart was the early home of Ambrose Bierce. 35,646 (1950).

Elkhorn (elk′hôrn). City in SE Wisconsin, county seat of Walworth County, ab. 40 mi. SW of Milwaukee. It is situated in a resort and farming region, and manufactures musical instruments. 2,935 (1950).

Elkhorn River. River in N and NE Nebraska, flowing generally SE across the prairies to join the Platte River ab. 20 mi. SW of Omaha. Length, ab. 330 mi.

Elkin (el'kin). Town in NW North Carolina, in Surry County, in an apple-producing region: manufactures of woolen blankets and wool textiles. 2,842 (1950).

Elkin, William Lewis. b. at New Orleans, La., April 29, 1855; d. at New Haven, Conn., May 30, 1933. American astronomer, director of the Yale Observatory from 1896 to 1910. He took part in investigations (1881–83) of the parallaxes of southern stars at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope.

Elkins (el'kinz). [Former name, Leadsville.] City in C West Virginia, county seat of Randolph County, ab. 92 mi. SE of Wheeling: railroad shops. Incorporated in 1890 and renamed for U.S. Senator Stephen B. Elkins, it was made county seat in 1900. It is the seat of Davis and Elkins College. 9,121 (1950).

Elkins, Stephen Benton. b. near New Lexington, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1841; d. Jan. 4, 1911. American legislator and capitalist, secretary of war (1891–93), noted as the author of the anti-rebate Elkins Act of 1903 and as joint framer of the Mann-Elkins Act of 1910, which widened the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He was graduated (B.A., 1860; M.A., 1868) from the University of Missouri and served in the Union army in the Civil War as a captain of militia in the 77th Missouri Infantry. Admitted to the bar in 1864, he moved to New Mexico, where he established his practice at Messilia. He served in the territorial legislature until 1866, when he was appointed territorial district attorney, holding that post until 1867. He was also attorney general of the territory in 1867, was U.S. district attorney (1867–70), and in 1872 was elected as Republican territorial delegate to the national Congress, serving in that post until 1877. He was vice-president and a promoter of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railroad (Western Maryland) and in 1890 moved to Elkins, W.Va., a town he had developed in connection with his railroad and financial interests. He was appointed (1891) secretary of war by Harrison and was (1895–1907) Republican U.S. senator from West Virginia.

Elkins Act. Act passed (1903) by the U.S. Congress prohibiting the giving or receiving of rebates in railroad shipping and providing penalties for nonobservance. Any deviation from published rates was considered a misdemeanor.

Elkins Park. Unincorporated community in SE Pennsylvania, in Montgomery County near Philadelphia. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 3,286 (1940).

Elk Island National Park (elk). Park in C Alberta, Canada, ab. 27 mi. by road E of Edmonton. It is the second largest animal reserve in Canada, established in 1913, and has large herds of buffalo, elk, deer, and moose. Area, ab. 75 sq. mi.

Elk Mountains and West Elk Mountains. Ranges of mountains in W Colorado, W of the Saguache range. Elevation of Castle Peak, 14,259 ft.

Elko (el'kō). City in NE Nevada, county seat of Elko County: chief trading center for a large cattle-producing area. It is also a vacation resort. 5,393 (1950).

Elkoyni (el.koi'nē). See Kony.

El Ksar el Kebir (el kẹ.sär' el ke.bir'). Arabic name of Alcazarquivir.

Elkton (elk'tọn). Town in NE Maryland, county seat of Cecil County, near the Delaware-Maryland-Pennsylvania border. Manufactures include flour, fertilizer, pulp, paper, and shirts. Once known as the Gretna Green of the eastern U.S., it was formerly a haven for eloping couples. 5,245 (1950).

Ella (el'ạ). See Alla or Ella.

Elland (el'ạnd). Urban district and manufacturing town in N central England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Calder ab. 9 mi. SW of Bradford, ab. 193 mi. N of London by rail. It has a cotton-textile industry and a worsted-spinning industry. 19,273 (1951).

Ellandun (el'ạn.dun). Place in Wiltshire, England, near Wilton, where Egbert, king of Wessex, defeated (825 or 823) the Mercians.

Ellasar (el'ạ.sär, el.lā'sär). Biblical name of Larsa.

Ellaury (ā.you'rē), José. b. in Montevideo, Uruguay, c1831; d. in December, 1894. Uruguayan statesman. He was a lawyer, took part in politics, and in March, 1874, was elected president. In February, 1875, he was deposed by a military revolution.

Ellenborough (el'ẹn.bur.ō), 1st Baron and 1st Earl of. Titles of Law, Edward.

Ellen Douglas (el'ẹn dug'lạs). See Douglas, Ellen.

Ellensburg (el'ẹnz.bėrg). [Former spelling, Ellen's Burgh.] City in C Washington, county seat of Kittitas County: distribution point for gold, coal, and agricultural and dairy products. It is the seat of the Central Washington College of Education. 8,430 (1950).

Ellen's Isle (el'ẹnz). [Also, Eilean Molach.] Wooded island in Loch Katrine, in C Scotland, in Perthshire ab. 8 mi. W of Callander. It is famous in early romance, and Scott makes it the favorite haunt of the Lady of the Lake.

Ellenville (el'ẹn.vil). Village in SE New York, in Ulster County, in the Shawangunk Mountains: resort center. 4,225 (1950).

Ellero (el'le.rō), Pietro. b. at Pordenone, Italy, Oct. 8, 1833; d. at Rome, 1933. Italian penologist. He taught at Milan and at Bologna (until 1889) and became deputy (1866) and senator (1889). He was the author of various texts and founder of L'Archivio giuridico.

Ellery (el'ėr.i), William. b. at Newport, R.I., Dec. 22, 1727; d. there, Feb. 15, 1820. American politician, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Ellesmere (elz'mir), 1st Earl of. A title of Egerton, Francis (1800–57).

Ellesmere, Baron. A title of Egerton, Sir Thomas.

Ellesmere Canal. Canal in N Wales and W England. In Wales it extends from Newtown (Montgomeryshire) on the river Severn, northward, paralleling the upper course of the river. It crosses a portion of Shropshire (England) past Whitchurch, and enters Cheshire, passing Nantwich and Chester, reaching the estuary of the river Mersey at Ellesmere Port. Length, ab. 69 mi.

Ellesmere Island. Northernmost island of the Arctic Archipelago, W of Greenland in the Arctic Ocean. Area, ab. 76,000 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 10.

Ellesmere Port. Urban district, seaport, and manufacturing center in W England, in Cheshire, situated on the river Mersey and the Manchester Ship Canal at its junction with the Ellesmere Canal, ab. 7 mi. N of Chester, ab. 191 mi. NW of London by rail. It is the first port of call on the Manchester Ship Canal, and the largest oil port in the United Kingdom. Its industries include chemical works, flour mills, paper mills, and galvanized sheet steel manufactures. The town has extensive residential areas. 32,594 (1951).

Ellespontos (e.lēs.pôn'tôs). A Greek name of the Dardanelles.

Ellet (el'ẹt), Charles. b. at Penn's Manor, Bucks County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1810; d. at Cairo, Ill., June 21, 1862. American engineer. He introduced the use of wire suspension-bridges into America, erecting one at Fairmount, Pa., in 1842, and another across the Niagara below the falls in 1847. He became a colonel of engineers in the Union army during the Civil War, and converted a fleet of Mississippi steamers into rams with which he sank or disabled several Confederate vessels off Memphis on June 6, 1862.

Ellet, Elizabeth Fries Lummis. b. at Sodus Point, N.Y., in October, 1818; d. at New York, June 3, 1877. American author; wife of William Henry Ellet. She wrote The Women of the American Revolution (1848) and others.

Ellet, William Henry. b. at New York, 1806; d. at New York, Jan. 26, 1859. American chemist; husband of Elizabeth F. L. Ellet.

El Libnan (el lēb.nän'). Arabic name of the Lebanon range.

Ellice Islands (el'is). [Also, Lagoon Islands.] Group of nine small coral islands in the South Pacific, N of the Fiji Islands, and NW of Samoa. They form part of the British crown colony of Gilbert and Ellice Islands. They were discovered by Captain Peyster, an American, in 1819. In 1892, Great Britain proclaimed a protectorate over the islands and, at the request of the native rulers, annexed them in 1915. Area, 14 sq. mi.; pop. 3,555 (est. 1945).

Ellichpur (el.ich.pör'). Former district in Berar, Union of India: now incorporated in the Amraoti district of Madhya Pradesh (Central Provinces). Area, 2,605 sq. mi.; pop. 988,524 (1941).

Ellichpur. Town in the Amraoti district, Madhya Pradesh (Central Provinces), Union of India, ab. 100 mi. W of Nagpur; trading center and a minor road junction. 26,082 (1941).

Ellicott (el'i.kŏt), Andrew. b. at Solebury, Pa., Jan. 24, 1754; d. Aug. 28, 1820. American surveyor and mathematician. Publisher (1782 et seq.) of The United States Almanack; Virginia member of commission (1784) to extend the Mason and Dixon Line; member of Pennsylvania commission to survey the western (1785) and northern (1786) state boundaries and the Ohio and Allegheny river islands (1788); member (1789) of commission to fix southwestern boundary of New York; surveyed (1791–93) Washington, D.C., site for the federal capital redrawing L'Enfant's plan for the city; surveyed town of Presqu'Isle (now Erie), Pa. (1794), and the U.S.-Florida Territory frontier (1796), and the Georgia-South Carolina boundary (1811). Professor of mathematics (1813–20), U.S. Military Academy, West Point.

Ellicott, Charles John. b. April 25, 1819; d. Oct. 15, 1905. English Biblical commentator, bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (1863–97) and of Gloucester (1897–1905). He was Hulsean lecturer at Cambridge University in 1859. His lectures appeared as On the Life of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and he also published, besides minor works, a series of Critical and Grammatical Commentaries on most of the Pauline epistles. He was for 11 years chairman of the scholars who produced the revised version of the New Testament.

Ellicott City. Unincorporated community in N Maryland, county seat of Howard County, on the Patapsco River, ab. 10 mi. W of Baltimore: manufactures doughnuts. Several fine 18th-century mansions are in the vicinity, including Doughoregan Manor, which was the home of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. 2,682 (1940); with the adjoining community of Oella, 3,364 (1950).

Ellinwood (el'in.wŭd). City in C Kansas, in Barton County, on the Arkansas River ab. 40 mi. NW of Hutchinson, in an oil-producing region. 2,569 (1950).

Elliot (el'i.ŏt, el'yŏt), Daniel Giraud. b. at New York, March 7, 1835; d. Dec. 22, 1915. American naturalist, honorary curator of zoölogy in the Field Columbian Museum, Chicago. He made extensive explorations in Canada, Alaska, South America, East Africa, Arabia, and elsewhere, and published about 20 volumes and several hundred papers on zoölogical (especially mammalogical and ornithological) subjects.

Elliot, Sir Gilbert. [Title, Lord Minto.] b. 1651; d. May 1, 1718. English judge. He was condemned to death (1685) for his active part in the Earl of Argyll's rising, but obtained royal pardon. Knighted and made clerk of privy council (1692); became judge of court of session with title of Lord Minto (1705).

Elliot, Sir Gilbert. [Title, 3rd Baronet of Minto.] b. in Scotland, in September, 1722; d. at Marseilles, France, Jan. 11, 1777. English politician and poet, friend of Hume; son of Sir Gilbert Elliot (1693–1766). He studied at the University of Edinburgh and at Leiden, was a member of Parliament (1754–77), and a lord of the admiralty (1756). He supported George III's harsh policy toward America and brought the king's influence to bear against a motion to allow colonies to tax themselves so that the motion was defeated.

Elliot, Jane or Jean. b. at Minto, Teviotdale, Scotland, 1727; d. March 29, 1805. Author of a single poem, The Flowers of the Forest (1756), at first believed, because of its genuine flavor, to be a true popular ballad; sister of Sir Gilbert Elliot (1722–77). Apart from her one poem, Jane Elliot is remembered for her charming cleverness at the age of 18 in saving her father, Sir Gilbert Andrew Elliot (1693–1766), from capture by a band of Jacobites; she was also the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair.

Elliot Islands. Group of small islands in Korea Bay, off the SE coast of the Liaotung Peninsula, NE China. They were used by the Japanese during the Russo-Japanese War as a naval base.

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond (-mur'i.kin.in'mond), Sir Gilbert. [Title, 1st Earl of Minto.] b. at Edinburgh, April 23, 1751; d. June 21, 1814. British politician and diplomat; son of Sir Gilbert Elliot (1722–77). He was governor general of British India from 1807 to 1813.

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond, Gilbert. [Title, 2nd Earl of Minto.] b. at Lyons, France, Nov. 16, 1782; d. July 31, 1859. British politician; son of Sir Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond (1751–1814). He was lord privy seal (1846–52).

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond, Gilbert John. [Title, 4th Earl of Minto.] b. July 9, 1845; d. March 4, 1914. British soldier and administrator; grandson of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond (1782–1859). He served with the Turkish army in 1877, in the Afghan war in 1879, in the Egyptian campaign in 1882, and as chief of staff in the rebellion in NW Canada in 1885. He succeeded to the title in 1891, was governor general of Canada (1898–1904), and was viceroy and governor general of India (1905–10).

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmond, Hugh. b. April 6, 1752; d. Dec. 10, 1830. English diplomat; son of Sir Gilbert Elliot (1722–77).

Elliotson (el'i.ŏt.sŏn, el'yŏt-), John. b. at London, Oct. 29, 1791; d. there, July 29, 1868. English physician and physiologist. He wrote Principles and Practice of Medicine (1839), Human Physiology (1840), and others.

Elliott (el'i.ŏt, el'yŏt), Aaron Marshall. b. at Wilmington, N.C., Jan. 24, 1844; d. Nov. 9, 1910. American philologist and educator. Associate in languages (1876 et seq.), Johns Hopkins; founder (1883) of Modern Language Association and editor of its publications; founder (1894) of Modern Language Notes, the first such specialized journal in the U.S.

Elliott, Charles. b. in Ireland, May 16, 1792; d. Jan. 8, 1869. American Methodist clergyman and writer. He emigrated to the U.S. in 1815, and during the periods 1857–60 and 1864–67 was professor of Biblical literature (and president) at Iowa Wesleyan University.

Elliott, Charles Loring. b. at Scipio, N.Y., in December, 1812; d. at Albany, N.Y., Aug. 25, 1868. American portrait painter. He was elected to the National Academy of Design in 1846.

Elliott, Charles Wyllys. b. at Guilford, Conn., May 27, 1817; d. Aug. 20, 1883. American miscellaneous writer. He published Saint Domingo (1855), a New England History (1857), Book of American Interiors (1876), and Pottery and Porcelain (1877).

Elliott, Charlotte. b. at Clapham, London, March 17, 1789; d. at Brighton, Sussex, England, Sept. 22, 1871. English hymnist, best known for her Just as I Am. For 50 years an invalid, she came under the influence of Caesar H. A. Malan (1787–1864), a Swiss Protestant divine, and devoted her life to writing religious songs and poems. She was the author of Hymns for a Week, which had a sale of 40,000 copies, Hours of Sorrow (1840; many editions), and the Invalid's Hymn Book (1834; published privately), containing "Just as I am, without one plea," the most popular of her 150 hymns.

Elliott, Ebenezer. [Called the "Corn-Law Rhymer."] b. at Masborough, Yorkshire, England, March 17, 1781; d. near Barnsley, England, Dec. 1, 1849. English poet. He was the author of Corn-Law Rhymes (1831), The Village Patriarch (1829), The Ranter, The Splendid Village, and many other poems opposing the English Corn Laws as a "bread tax."

Elliott, Sir Henry Miers. b. at Westminster, London, 1808; d. at Simonstown, Cape of Good Hope, South Africa, Dec. 20, 1853. English historian, long in the service of the East India Company. He wrote a supplement to Wilson's Glossary of Indian Terms, Bibliographical Index to the Historians of Muhammedan India (vol. I, 1849), History of India (8 vols., 1867–77), and others.

Elliott, Jesse Duncan. b. in Maryland, July 14, 1782; d. at Philadelphia, Dec. 10, 1845. American naval officer. He was second in command under Commodore Perry at the battle of Lake Erie (Sept. 10, 1813), and the following month succeeded Perry in the command on Lake Erie. He commanded the sloop of war Ontario in Decatur's squadron employed against Algiers in 1815.

Elliott, John. b. in Lincolnshire, England, April 22, 1858; d. at Charleston, S.C., May 26, 1925. Scottish portrait and mural painter who spent the greater part of his life in America; husband of Maud Elliott. He began his artistic training by drawing from marble sculptures at the London British Museum and by doing cast drawing at the Paris École des Beaux-Arts. He later studied under Duran at Paris, at the Julian Academy, and under di Villegas at Rome. Some of his best-known works are The Triumph of Time, a mural (in the Boston Public Library), a series of 16 War Portraits, red-chalk drawings of young Americans who were killed in action in World War I, and Diana of the Tides, another mural (both in the National Museum at Washington, D.C.). The Vintage, which he made for the Chicago home of Mrs. Potter Palmer, is regarded as one of his most beautiful pieces. As a portrait painter he is best known for those of King Humbert of Italy, the Marquis of Winchester, the Duke of Cambridge, Victor Chapman, Rose Farwell, General Arthur Wauchope, Lady Katherine Thynne (later Lady Cromer), and Samuel Gridley Howe and Julia Ward Howe, whose daughter, Maud, he married on Feb. 7, 1887.

Elliott, Maud. [Maiden name, Howe.] b. at Boston, Nov. 9, 1854; d. at Newport, R.I., March 19, 1948. American writer who was awarded (1917) with her sister Laura E. Richards the Pulitzer prize for The Life and Letters of Julia Ward Howe (1916), a biography of their mother. She married (1887) John Elliott, the painter. Her list of books includes Mammon, Roma Beata, The Story of an Artist, Atlanta in the South, Three Generations, My Cousin, F. Marion Crawford (1934), Uncle Sam Ward and his Circle (1938), Recollections of the Civil War (1943), and This Was My Newport (1944).

Elliott, Maxine. [Original name, Jessie Dermot.] b. at Rockland, Me., Feb. 5, 1871; d. at Juan les Pins, France, March 5, 1940. American actress. Married (1898) and divorced (1908) Nathaniel C. Goodwin after a previous divorce (1896) from George A. McDermott. Made her debut (1890) with E. S. Willard; hired (1894) as leading lady with Rose Coghlan, appeared (1895–97) in Shakespearian parts with Augustin Daly's company; co-starred (1898–1903) with Nat Goodwin in America and England; owner and manager (1908 et seq.) of the Maxine Elliott Theater at New York; her successes included Her Own Way (1903–05), Her Great Match (1905–07), Under the Greenwood Tree (1907), and Myself–Bettina (1908).

Elliott, Sarah Barnwell. b. in Georgia, 1848; d. at Sewanee, Tenn., Aug. 30, 1928. American novelist, short-story writer, and suffragist; granddaughter of the botanist Stephen Elliott (1771–1830). She became widely known through "Jerry," a serial (1890–91) in Scribner's Magazine and one of the first American novels concerned with Southern mountaineers. She held office in the Tennessee State Equal Suffrage Association, the Southern Woman Suffrage Conference, and the Civic League of Sewanee. Author also of The Felmeres (1879), The Durket Sperret (1898), The Making of Jane (1901), and the biography Sam Houston (1900).

Elliott, Stephen. b. at Beaufort, S.C., Nov. 11, 1771; d. at Charleston, S.C., March 28, 1830. American botanist. He was cofounder (1828) of the Southern Review and author of Botany of South Carolina and Georgia (1821–24).

Elliott, Stephen. b. at Beaufort, S.C., Aug. 31, 1806; d. at Savannah, Ga., Dec. 21, 1866. American bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church; son of Stephen Elliott (1771–1830).

Elliott, William. b. at Beaufort, S.C., April 27, 1788; d. there, Feb. 3, 1863. American politician and writer.

Ellis (el'is). City in W central Kansas, in Ellis County, ab. 110 mi. W of Salina: railroad repair shops. 2,649 (1950).

Ellis, Alexander John. [Original surname, Sharpe.] b. at Hoxton, near London, June 14, 1814; d. at London, Oct. 28, 1890. English phonetician and mathematician. He wrote Alphabet of Nature (1845), The Essentials of Phonetics (1848), On Early English Pronunciation (1869–71), with especial reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer, and others.

Ellis, Augustine ap. See Ap Ellis, Augustine.

Ellis, Edward Sylvester. b. at Geneva, Ohio, April 11, 1840; d. at Cliff Island, Me., June 20, 1916. American writer of juveniles, dime novels, and popular works on history, notable as the author of Seth Jones, or the Captive of the Frontier (1860). One of the first dime novels, this work sold upwards of 600,000 copies. He also wrote textbooks on grammar, physiology, mythology, and arithmetic; his interpretations of current events included Great Leaders and National Issues of 1896 (1896), The Story of South Africa (1899), and Voters' Guide for the Campaign of 1900.

Ellis, George. b. at London, 1753; d. April 10, 1815. English author. He published Specimens of the Early English Poets (1790; 6th ed., 1851), Specimens of Early English Romances in Metre (1805; ed. by Halliwell, 1848), and others.

Ellis, George Edward. b. Aug. 8, 1814; d. Dec. 20, 1894. American Unitarian clergyman. He was pastor of the Harvard Unitarian Church at Charlestown, Mass. (1840–69) and was professor of systematic theology in the Harvard Divinity School (1857–63). He wrote A Half-Century of the Unitarian Controversy (1857), and contributed to the Narrative and Critical History of America, edited by Justin Winsor.

Ellis, George Washington. b. at Weston, Platte County, Mo., May 4, 1875; d. at Chicago, Nov. 26, 1919. American lawyer, novelist, and diplomat. From 1902 to 1910 he was secretary of the U.S. legation in Liberia. When he returned to the U.S., he practiced law at Chicago, becoming known through his cases in every court in Illinois, and in the U.S. Supreme Court. For a brief period, from 1917 until his death, he was assistant corporation counsel for the city of Chicago. He was on the editorial staff of the Journal of Race Development (under the auspices of Clark University), and he wrote Negro Culture in West Africa (1914), The Leopard's Claw (1917), a novel of jungle adventure, both results of his eight-year stay in Liberia, and Negro Achievements in Social Progress (1915).

Ellis, Havelock. [Full name, Henry Havelock Ellis.] b. at Croydon, Surrey, England, Feb. 2, 1859; d. at Hintlesham, England, July 8, 1939. English man of letters and anthropologist. For a short time he practiced medicine in England, but left the medical profession to write. He edited the works of John Ford and of Christopher Marlowe in, and was over-all editor of, the Mermaid Series of old English dramatists, and wrote The New Spirit (1890), The Criminal (1890), Man and Woman (1894), Affirmations (1897), The Evolution of Modesty (1899), Analysis of Sexual Impulse (1903), Sexual Selection in Man (1905), The Soul of Spain (1908), The Task of Social Hygiene (1912), and The Dance of Life (1923); his seven separate volumes on the manifestations of sex form Studies in the Psychology of Sex (1897–1928). The latter work was of the greatest importance in changing the general attitude towards sex and the problems caused by it. Ellis's anthropo-sociological approach to the psychology of sexual abnormality has influenced almost all writers since on the subject.

Ellis, Sir Henry. b. at London, Nov. 29, 1777; d. there, Jan. 15, 1869. English antiquary, chief librarian of the British Museum (1827–56). He edited Brand's Popular Antiquities (1813) and, with others, Dugdale's Monasticon (1817–33), wrote the introduction to Domesday Book (1816), and published Original Letters Illustrative of English History (1824–46).

Ellis, Job Bicknell. b. near Potsdam, N.Y., Jan. 21, 1829; d. Dec. 30, 1905. American mycologist. His large collection of fungi is now housed in the herbarium of the New York Botanical Garden. He was coauthor with B. M. Everhart of The North American Pyrenomycetes (1892).

Ellis, Robinson. b. at Barming, near Maidstone, Kent, England, Sept. 5, 1834; d. at Oxford, England, Oct. 9, 1913. English classical scholar, philologist, teacher, and translator. He was educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, at Rugby, and at Balliol College, Oxford, winning scholarships and prizes. Elected a fellow of Trinity in 1858, he became later (1883) Oxford reader in Latin, Corpus professor of Latin literature (1893), and vice-president (1879–93) of Trinity. He was professor of Latin (1870–76) at London University College, and contributed to the New English Dictionary, the English and American Journal of Philology, and other classical organs. He was the author of Poems and Fragments of Catullus Translated (1866), Commentary on Catullus (1876), and an edition of Ovid's Ibis (1881).

Ellis, Sarah Stickney. b. at London, 1812; d. at Hoddesdon, Hertfordshire, England, June 16, 1872. English authoress; wife of William Ellis (1794–1872). She wrote Women of England (1838), Daughters of England (1842), and others.

Ellis, William. b. at London, Aug. 29, 1794; d. at Hoddesdon, Hertfordshire, England, June 9, 1872. English missionary in Polynesia; husband of Sarah Stickney Ellis. He published Missionary Narrative of a Tour through Hawaii (1827), Polynesian Researches (1829), History of Madagascar (1838), Three Visits to Madagascar (1858), and other works on missions.

Ellis, William. b. Jan. 1, 1801; d. at London, Feb. 18, 1881. English writer on social science. He became an assistant underwriter of the Indemnity Marine Insurance Company in 1824, and chief manager in 1827. He founded (1848–52) five schools, which he named Birkbeck schools. Author of Outlines of Social Economy (1846), Education as a Means of Preventing Destitution (1851), and Philo-Socrates (1861).

Ellis-Fermor (-fėr'môr), Una Mary. b. Dec. 20, 1894—. English lecturer and literary critic. She was a lecturer (1918–30) and reader (1930–47) in English literature at Bedford College, University of London. Her books include Christopher Marlowe (1926), Jacobean Drama (1936), Some Recent Research in Shakespeare's Imagery (1937), The Irish Dramatic Movement (1939), and Frontiers of Drama (1945).

Ellis Island. [Former names, Bucking Island, Gibbet Island, Oyster Island.] Small island in Upper New York Bay, ab. 1 mi. SW of the Battery; a U.S. immigrant station from 1891 to 1943. It was purchased (1808) by the government from New York state. At the height of immigration to the U.S. more than a million individuals were processed here annually. The immigrant reception center having been moved to Manhattan, the buildings on Ellis Island are used to house immigrants who must be detained or deported.

Ellison (el'i-sən), Mrs. Character in Henry Fielding's Amelia.

Elliston (el'is-tən), Robert William. b. at Bloomsbury, London, April 7, 1774; d. at Blackfriars, London, July 8, 1831. English actor and manager. He made his first appearance on April 14, 1791, at the Bath Theatre as Tressel in Richard III, and after a career showing great versatility and power, together with many excesses and absurdities, he died the first comedian of his day. Some of his best characters in comedy were Doricourt, Charles Surface, Rover, and Ranger, and in tragedy Hamlet, Romeo, and Hotspur.

Ellisville (el'is-vil). City in SE Mississippi, a county seat (with Laurel) of Jones County, near the Tallahala Creek. It is the seat of Jones County Junior College. The city was an antisecessionist center during the Civil War. 3,579 (1950).

Ellora (e-lōr'ə). [Also: Elora, Elura.] Town in Hyderabad, Union of India, ab. 167 mi. NE of Bombay. It contains a Dravidian rock-cut temple, anterior in date to 1000 A.D., remarkable not only in itself, but because the rock is cut away outside as well as inside, leaving the monument isolated and complete throughout. It consists of a central sanctuary or vimana, with a pyramidal roof ab. 80 ft. high, preceded by an enclosed porch of 16 columns, before which are two isolated pylons in succession, reached by bridges. The court is surrounded by a peristyle within which there is a series of cells. The sculptured decoration is elaborate, combining geometrical and arabesque motifs with figure sculpture.

Ellore (e-lōr'). [Also, Elur.] City in the Kistna district, Madras state, Union of India, W of the mouths of the Godavari River, ab. 250 mi. N of the city of Madras; oilseeds, tobacco, rice, and cotton. 64,911 (1941).

Ellsberg (elz'bėrg), Edward. b. at New Haven, Conn., Nov. 21, 1891—. American naval officer, engineer, and author, noted as a naval salvage expert. Graduated (1914) from U.S. Naval Academy; awarded M.S. (1920) at Massachusetts Institute of Technology; served in World War I and World War II. Awarded Distinguished Service Medal of U.S. for work in directing salvage operations (1926) to raise U.S. submarine S-51 which had sunk (1925) off Block Island after collision; also directed (1927) initial salvage operations on sunken U.S. submarine S-4; promoted (1929) to commander. Chief engineer (1926–35) of Tide Water Oil Company; invented improved methods of dehydrating and dewaxing lubricating oils; developed techniques of cracking crude oil for antiknock gasoline; inventor of underwater torch for cutting steel. Advanced to captain (1942) and awarded Legion of Merit for salvaging (1942) scuttled drydocks at Massawa, Eritrea, and later in salvaging vessels in North African area. Took part in installation of artificial harbors for Normandy invasion. His writings include Salvage Operations on S-51 (1927), On The Bottom (1929), Thirty Fathoms Deep (1930), Pigboats (1931), Ocean Gold (1935), Spanish Ingots (1936), Hell on Ice (1938), Men Under the Sea (1939), Captain Paul (1941), I Have Just Begun to Fight (1942), Under the Red Sea Sun (1945), and No Banners, No Bugles (1949).

Ellsworth (elz'wėrth). City in SE Maine, county seat of Hancock County, on the Union River ab. 20 mi. SE of Bangor. It is a resort center for the Mount Desert region. Forest fires which swept this part of New England in 1947 and spread to many settled communities did extensive damage in the city. 3,936 (1950).

Ellsworth, Elmer Ephraim. b. at Mechanicsville, N.Y., April 11, 1837; shot at Alexandria, Va., May 24, 1861. American officer of Zouaves at the beginning of the Civil War. He moved to Chicago at an early age, and became a solicitor of patents. He accompanied Lincoln to Washington in March, 1861. In April, 1861, he organized at New York a Zouave regiment of firemen (the 11th New York), of which he became colonel. He occupied Alexandria, Va., with his regiment on May 24, 1861. Seeing a Confederate flag flying from the Marshall House, he ascended to the roof to remove it, and on descending was shot by James T. Jackson, the keeper of the hotel.

Ellsworth, Henry Leavitt. [Called the "Father of the Department of Agriculture."] b. at Windsor, Conn., Nov. 10, 1791; d. at Fair Haven, Conn., Dec. 27, 1858. American agriculturist and lawyer; son of Oliver Ellsworth and twin brother of William Wolcott Ellsworth. Practiced law (1813 et seq.) at Windsor, Conn.; president (1819–21) of Aetna Insurance Company, Hartford, Conn.; appointed commissioner (1832) to superintend resettlement of Arkansas Indians; as commissioner of patents (1835–45), he was influential in gaining the first congressional appropriation (1839) for agricultural research. Resigned (1845) to become an agent at Lafayette, Ind., for the purchase and settlement of Western lands.

Ellsworth, Lincoln. b. at Chicago, May 12, 1880; d. at New York, May 26, 1951. American engineer and polar explorer. He worked as a railroad and mining engineer in Canada and Alaska, led an expedition (1924) through the Andes to the headwaters of the Amazon, made a polar flight with Roald Amundsen in 1925, and was one of the leaders of the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile transpolar flight (1926) from Spitsbergen to Alaska in the airship Norge. He was director of scientific investigation for the Wilkins-Ellsworth trans-Arctic submarine expedition in 1931, and in 1935 made a 2,300-mile flight across the Antarctic, claiming 300,000 sq. mi. of new territory for the U.S., and receiving a gold medal from the U.S. Congress in recognition of his achievement. Another flight made by him in 1939 into the interior of Antarctica enabled him to claim an additional 81,000 sq. mi. of land for the U.S. He is the author of The Last Wild Buffalo Hunt (1915), First Crossing of the Polar Sea (1926), Search (1932), and Beyond Horizons (1938).

Ellsworth, Oliver. b. at Windsor, Conn., April 29, 1745; d. Nov. 26, 1807. American jurist, Revolutionary patriot, and chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. He attended Yale and Princeton, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1771. Having set up his practice at Hartford, he moved there in 1775 and soon became recognized as one of Connecticut's foremost lawyers. During the Revolution he served on the Connecticut Committee of the Pay Table, performing some important missions for it, served (1777 et seq.) as a delegate to the Continental Congress, and in 1779 became a member of the Connecticut council of safety. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, where he took part in bringing about the compromise providing for equality of representation in the Senate, and may have been the originator of the term "United States." He was one of Connecticut's first two senators under the new government, establishing a reputation as a statesman whose counsel was sought and esteemed. Among his achievements were the framing of the first bill regulating the consular service, the creation of the measure admitting

North Carolina, the framing of the nonintercourse act which brought Rhode Island into the Union, the reporting of the first 12 amendments and the first set of Senate rules, and his chairmanship of the committee which brought in the bill organizing the federal judiciary. Made chief justice in 1796, he served until 1799, when he became commissioner to France, holding the latter post until 1800.

Ellsworth, William Wolcott. b. at Windsor, Conn., Nov. 10, 1791; d. at Hartford, Conn., Jan. 15, 1868. American politician and jurist; son of Oliver Ellsworth and twin brother of Henry Leavitt Ellsworth. He was governor of Connecticut from 1838 to 1842.

Ellwangen (el'väng.ẹn). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Baden, American Zone, formerly in the Jagst Kreis (district) of the free state of Württemberg, situated on the Jagst River ab. 46 mi. NE of Stuttgart. It has knitwear and furniture manufactures, dairies and agricultural trade. There are various beautiful churches, including the Romanesque Church of Saint Veit, with baroque interior (13th century), the Wolfgang Church (15th century), and the Protestant parish church (18th century). The town grew from a Benedictine abbey, and became part of Württemberg in 1802. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic; there is a considerable Protestant minority. 10,390 (1950).

Ellwood (el'wŭd), Charles Abram. b. near Ogdensburg, N.Y., Jan. 20, 1873; d. at Durham, N.C., Sept. 25, 1946. American sociologist. He was a professor at Missouri for 30 years and at Duke from 1930 to 1944. Author of Sociology and Modern Problems (1910), The World's Need of Christ (1940), and other books.

Ellwood, Thomas. b. at Crowell, Oxfordshire, England, 1639; d. at Amersham, Buckinghamshire, England, March 1, 1714. English Quaker, friend of Milton. He wrote Sacred History of the Old Testament and New Testament (1705–09), his autobiography (1714), and others.

Ellwood City. Borough in W Pennsylvania, in Beaver and Lawrence counties, on Connoquenessing Creek: manufactures of steel, steel pipe, and steel tubing. 12,945 (1950).

Elm (elm). Village in C Switzerland, in the canton of Glarus, noted for the fatal landslip of the Tschingelberg, Sept. 11, 1881. Pop. 785 (1941).

El Maghreb el Aqsa (el mä'greb el äk'sạ). Arabic name of Morocco.

El Majdal (el mäj'däl). Arabic name of Magdala.

Elmali (el.mä.li'). [Also: Almali, Elmalu; Turkish, Elmalı.] Town in S Turkey, near Antalya: sheep raising, cotton, and wheat. Pop. ab. 5,000.

Elman (el'mạn), Mischa. b. at Talnoi, in the province of Kiev, Russia, Jan. 21, 1891—. American violinist. He began his studies at Odessa, displaying unusual ability while still very young. In 1901 he went to St. Petersburg and became a pupil of Leopold Auer. He made his debut at Berlin, on Oct. 14, 1904, and has since appeared in most of the important cities on the Continent, in England, the Orient, and America. He made his New York debut (Dec. 10, 1908) with the Russian Symphony Orchestra, and became a U.S. citizen in 1923.

El Mansura (el män.sö'rạ). See Mansura.

Elmblad (elm'bläd), Magnus Henrik. b. at Herrestad, in Småland, Sweden, 1848; d. in Sweden, 1888. Swedish-American poet. Elmblad is regarded by some as the greatest American poet to have written in the Swedish language. He emigrated to America (Chicago) in 1871, subsequently working as a journalist and newspaper editor for the Swedish-American press. His powerful poetic descriptions of American freedom and natural beauty received attention in Sweden, and he received a prize from the then very conservative Swedish Academy. Elmblad returned to Sweden in 1884. His best-known works many be found in Amerika-svensk lyrik genom 100 år (American-Swedish Poetry Through 100 Years, 1949).

"Elm City." Nickname of New Haven.

El Mekheir (el me.ċhār'). See Berber, town.

Elmer Gantry (el'mẽr gan'tri). Novel by Sinclair Lewis, published in 1927. The book has as its central theme the travesties on Christian ethics committed in the name of organized religion. Gantry is a hypocritical minister with a professional interest in conversion and an absorption in the lucrative aspects of his calling.

Elmes (elmz), James. b. at London, Oct. 15, 1782; d. at Greenwich (now part of London), April 2, 1862. English architect and writer on art. He published Sir Christopher Wren and his Times (1823), Dictionary of the Fine Arts (1826), and others.

Elmet (el'met). Small British kingdom conquered (c625) by Edwin, king of Northumbria. It corresponded roughly to the modern administrative county of West Riding in Yorkshire.

El Metemmeh (el me.tem'me). See Metemmeh.

Elmhurst (elm'hẽrst). City in NE Illinois, in Du Page County: seat of Elmhurst College. 21,273 (1950).

Elmina (el.mē'nạ). [Also: Dena; Portuguese, São Jorge da Mina.] Town in Gold Coast colony, W Africa, ab. 5 mi. W of Cape Coast on the shore of the Gulf of Guinea. It was founded by the Portuguese, was conquered by the Dutch in 1637, and was transferred to the British in 1872. It is noted for its ancient fort, and for its ancient gold-mine workings. Pop. ab. 5,000.

El Mina (el mē'nạ). Seaport of Tripoli in NW Lebanon, on the Mediterranean coast ab. 47 mi. N of Beirut. Pop. ab. 7,000.

El Minya (el min'yạ). See Minya.

Elmira (el.mī'rạ). City in S New York, county seat of Chemung County, on the Chemung River. Manufactures include precision tools, structural steel, fire engines, fire-fighting apparatus, chemicals, knit goods, and glass bottles. It is the seat of Elmira College and a state reformatory. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) is buried at Elmira, which was his summer home for many years. 49,716 (1950).

Elmira Heights. Village in S New York, in Chemung County: northern suburb of Elmira. 5,009 (1950).

Elmire (el.mẽr). In Molière's Tartuffe, the young wife of Orgon and sister of Cléante.

El Misti (el mēs'tē). See Misti.

Elmo (el'mō), Castle of Saint. See also Sant'Elmo Castle.

Elmo, Castle of Saint. Fort at Malta, said to be so named from Ermo, an Italianized variant of Erasmus (a Syrian martyr of the 3rd century).

Elmont (el'mont). Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Nassau County, on Long Island. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 8,957 (1940).

El Monte (el mon'tē). Unincorporated community in W central California, in Contra Costa County E of San Francisco. 2,502 (1950).

El Monte. City in S California, in Los Angeles County, S of Los Angeles. It has a lion farm. 8,101 (1950).

Elmoran (el.mō.ran'). See Masai.

Elmore (el'mōr), Margaret. In Lovell's play Love's Sacrifice, Matthew Elmore's daughter, who gives the name to the play by sacrificing her lover, giving him up because of her father's guilt.

El Morro National Monument (el mor'ō). National monument in W New Mexico, ab. 58 mi. by road SE of Gallup. The chief feature is a sandstone monolithic rock, covering 12 acres, known as Inscription Rock from the hundreds of inscriptions carved on it. The rock was a watering-place on the old Acoma-Zuñi trail, and has the ruins of two old Zuñi pueblos on top. The earliest legible date is 1605, carved by Juan de Oñate, the first colonizer of New Mexico. Area, ab. 0.4 sq. mi.

Elmosiro (el.mō.sē'rō). See Mosiro.

Elmsford (elmz'fọrd). Village in SE New York, in Westchester County near White Plains. 3,147 (1950).

Elmshorn (elms'hôrn). City in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, British Zone, formerly in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, ab. 19 mi. NW of Hamburg. It is a manufacturing center, with cement works, lumber mills, metallurgical, furniture, shoe, and leatherware manufactures, canneries, flour mills, a sugar refinery, and various foodstuff industries. The surrounding region is a dairying, cattle and hog raising, and market-gardening district. 36,186 (1950).

Elmsley (elmz'li), Peter. b. 1773; d. at Oxford, England, March 8, 1825. English philologist, principal of St. Alban Hall, Oxford, and professor of ancient history in the university (1823–25). He is known chiefly for his critical studies of Sophocles and Euripides.

El Mudo (el mö'ᴛʜō). Epithet of Navarrete or Navarete, Juan Fernández.

El Muerto (el mwer'tō). Mountain in the Andes of Chile, on the border of Argentina. Elevation, ab. 21,222 ft.

Elmwood (elm'wůd). Unincorporated community in C Connecticut, in Hartford County, SW of Hartford. Under the new urban definition established for use in the 1950 census it was counted with adjoining urban areas. The last official enumeration was 2,890 (1940).

Elmwood Park. Village in NE Illinois, in Cook County: suburb of Chicago. 18,801 (1950).

Elmwood Place. Village in SW Ohio, in Hamilton County: suburb of Cincinnati. 4,113 (1950).

Elnasl (el.nas'l). The third-magnitude star γ Sagittarii, sometimes called Warida.

El Nath (el nath'). See Nath.

Elnathan (el'nā.than, el.nā'thạn). In the Bible, the maternal grandfather of Jehoiachin.

Elne (eln). [Ancient names, Illiberis, Helena.] Town in S France, in the department of Pyrénées-Orientales, ab. 13 mi. SE of Perpignan. It has a cathedral. Pop. ab. 4,000.

El Obeid (el ō.bād'). Capital of Kordofan province, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, in NE Africa, in about the middle of the province. Before its occupation by the Mahdi (1883), El Obeid was the great market for the Egyptian trade in gums and ostrich feathers. Later these articles were sent to Tripoli by way of Ouadai. Near here, on Nov. 3 (and the following days), 1883, the Mahdists exterminated an Egyptian army under Hicks Pasha (William Hicks). The town came under Anglo-Egyptian control in 1899. It is the center of a road network radiating in all directions, and is the western terminus of the railway from Khartoum via Sennar. 72,300 (est. 1949).

Elobey (ā.lō.ʙā'), Great. See Great Elobey.

Elobey, Little. See Little Elobey.

Eloesser (e.lės'ėr), Arthur. b. 1870—. German journalist, critic, and historian of literature at Berlin. He is the author of Das bürgerliche Drama (1898), Heinrich von Kleist (1904), Thomas Mann (1925), and Die deutsche Literatur vom Barock bis zur Gegenwart (1930).

Éloi (ā.lwȧ), Saint. See Saint Eligius or Éloi or Eloy.

Eloikob (e.loi'kōb). See Lumbwa.

Élomire (ā.lo.mēr). Anagram under which Molière was attacked by Le Boulanger de Challussay, an unknown author, in a scurrilous play Élomire hypocondre, ou les médecins vengés (1670). In 1663, in a play Zélinde, by De Villiers, various persons of quality meet and attack the reputation of Élomire (Molière).

Elora (e.lō'rạ). See Ellora.

El Oro (el ō'rō). Province in SW Ecuador. Capital, Machala; area, 2,288 sq. mi.; pop. 83,712 (est. 1944).

Eloth (ē'loth). An ancient name of Aqaba; see also Elath.

Eloy (ā.lwȧ), Saint. See Saint Eligius or Éloi or Eloy.

Eloy (ē'loi). Town in S Arizona, in Pinal County, on the Santa Cruz River ab. 50 mi. NW of Tucson, in a farming region. It was incorporated as a town in 1949. Pop. 3,580 (1950).

El Paraíso (el pä.rä.ē'sō). Department in S Honduras, on the Nicaraguan border: rubber. Capital, Yuscarán; area, 2,858 sq. mi.; pop. 82,572 (1950).

El Paso (el pas'ō). [Former name, Franklin.] City in W Texas, county seat of El Paso County, on the Rio Grande at the Mexican-U.S. border, opposite Ciudad Juárez, Mexico: rail, highway, and airline center, noted for its copper smelters and refineries, cotton gins, and cotton textile mills. It is the site of Fort Bliss, and the seat of the Texas College of Mines and Metallurgy. The passage of the Rio Grande through the mountains here was named El Paso del Norte by Spanish explorers in the 16th century. Missions were established in the area soon afterward, but the first permanent settlement on the present site was not made until the early 19th century, and it became part of Texas only after the Mexican War. 96,810 (1940), 130,485 (1950).

El Paso del Águila (el pä'sō del ä'gē.lä). Spanish name of Eagle Pass.

El Paso del Norte (el pä'sō del nôr'tā). Former name of Ciudad Juárez.

El Paso de Robles (el pas'ō dẹ rō'blẹs). [Also, Paso Robles.] City in SW California, in San Luis Obispo County, on the Salinas River ab. 25 mi. N of San Luis Obispo. It is a resort, with hot sulfur springs. Almonds are raised in the region. 4,835 (1950).

Elphege (el'fẹj), Saint. See Saint Ælfheah.

Elphin (el'fin). Town in Connacht province, Irish Republic, in County Roscommon, ab. 15 mi. N of Roscommon. It is the seat of a bishopric. 548 (1936).

Elphinstone (el'fin.stōn, -stọn), Arthur. [Title, 6th Baron Balmerino.] b. 1688; executed 1746. Scottish warrior and Jacobite leader.

Elphinstone, George Keith. [Title, Viscount Keith.] b. at Elphinstone Tower, near Stirling, Scotland, Jan. 7, 1746; d. at Tullyallan, March 10, 1823. British admiral. He was in 1800 appointed commander in chief in the Mediterranean, where he took Malta and Genoa. He subsequently coöperated with Abercromby in the military operations in Egypt, obtained the rank of admiral in 1801, and in 1814 was created Viscount Keith of the United Kingdom.

Elphinstone, Hester Maria. [Title, Viscountess Keith.] b. 1762; d. at London, March 31, 1857. Englishwoman, famous for her friendship with Samuel Johnson; daughter of Henry Thrale and his wife Hester (later Mrs. Piozzi), and herself wife (married 1808) of George Keith Elphinstone. Her education (from 1765) was directed by Johnson.

Elphinstone, James. [Title, 1st Baron Balmerino.] b. c1553; d. at Balmerino, Scotland, in July, 1612. Scottish politician. One of commissioners of the treasury known as the Octavians (1595); secretary of state (1598); nominated one of the commissioners to discuss union with England (1604). He was condemned to death (1609) for having gained James I's signature to a letter (1607) to Pope Clement VIII, which James had not read, that committed James to Catholicism; he was imprisoned, but was released in the same year.

Elphinstone, John. [Title, 2nd Baron Balmerino.] d. at Edinburgh, Feb. 28, 1649. Scottish politician; son of James Elphinstone, 1st Baron Balmerino. Elphinstone was noted for his active opposition to the ecclesiastical measures of Charles I.

Elphinstone, Mountstuart. b. Oct. 6, 1779; d. at Limpsfield, Surrey, England, Nov. 20, 1859. English statesman and historian, one of the chief founders of the Anglo-Indian empire. He entered the civil service of the East India Company in 1796, was appointed ambassador to the court of Kabul in 1808, was resident at the court of Poona (1810–17), and was governor of Bombay (1819–27). Author of Account of the Kingdom of Cabul (1815) and History of India (1841).

Elphinstone, William. b. at Glasgow, 1431; d. at Edinburgh, Oct. 25, 1514. Scottish prelate and statesman. He graduated with the degree of M.A. at the University of Glasgow in 1452, and subsequently studied law at the University of Paris, where he lectured for a time on this subject. He returned to Glasgow in 1474, was appointed bishop of Aberdeen in 1483, became lord privy seal in 1492, and in 1494 obtained a papal bull for the founding of King's College at Aberdeen, which was completed in 1506.

Elpidon (el.pē'dôn). Pseudonym of Bałucki, Michał.

El Progreso (el prō.grā'sō). Department in C Guatemala. Capital, El Progreso; area, 742 sq. mi.; pop. 46,555 (1950).

El Puerto (el pwer'tō). See Puerto de Santa María.

El Qantara (el kan'tạ.rạ). See El Kantara.

El Qatar (el kä'tär). See Qatar.

El Qatif (el kä'tif). Former name of Dhahran.

El Qoseir (el kō.sār'). See Kosseir.

El Quiché (el kē.chā'). See Quiché, Guatemala.

El Quds esh Sherif (el köts esh she.rēf'). Arabic name of Jerusalem.

El Quseir (el kö.sār'). See Kosseir.

El Qusur (el kö'sör). An Arabic name of Luxor.

El Recreo (el rā.krā'ō). [Also, Sabana Grande.] City in N Venezuela, in the Distrito Federal. 57,466 (1950).

El Reno (el rē'nō). City in C Oklahoma, county seat of Canadian County, ab. 25 mi. NW of Oklahoma City, near the North Canadian River: railway center; flour milling and marketing and shipping of agricultural products. Nearby is the U.S. military station, Fort Reno, from which the city derives its name. 10,991 (1950).

El Riachuelo (el rē.ä.chwā'lo). River in E Argentina, flowing into the Río de la Plata.

El Rosario (el rō.sä'ryō). See Rosario, Mexico.

Elsa (el'sạ). Town in S Texas, in Hidalgo County, in the Rio Grande valley ab. 45 mi. NW of Brownsville. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 1,006 (1940), 3,179 (1950).

Elsaesser (el'zes.ẹr), Martin. b. at Tübingen, Germany, May 28, 1884—. German architect. His designs, representing a sharp departure from traditional styles, are incorporated in many schools and churches built by him. He served as professor at the Technische Hochschule at Stuttgart and as director of the Academy of Applied Arts at Cologne, and became (1925) director of architecture for the city of Frankfort on the Main.

El Said (el sä.ēd'). See Upper Egypt.

El Salvador (el sal'vạ.dôr; Spanish, el säl.bä.ʏнōr'). [Also: Salvador; official Spanish name, República de El Salvador.] Smallest and most densely populated republic of Central America, bounded on the NW by Guatemala, on the N by Honduras, on the E by the Gulf of Fonseca and Honduras, and on the S by the Pacific Ocean.

Population, Area, Political Divisions. The republic is divided into 14 departments for administrative purposes. Capital, San Salvador; area, 13,176 sq. mi.; pop. 1,187,136 (1950).

Terrain. The surface is traversed by several mountain ranges with intervening fertile valleys and plains; there are many active or quiescent volcanoes, and earthquakes are frequent.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Coffee is the principal export crop, although sugar cane, henequen, and balsam wood are also important, chiefly in trade with the U.S. Maize, which occupies the largest acreage, is consumed domestically. Its industries produce henequen bags, cotton textiles, and consumer goods.

History. The territory of El Salvador was invaded by Pedro de Alvarado in 1524, and conquered by Jorge de Alvarado in 1528. Independence was proclaimed in 1821, and from 1823 to 1839 the country was a state of the Central American Union. Since then, there have been frequent revolutions and wars with other Central American republics. The constitution of 1886 was abrogated in 1939, two years after El Salvador withdrew from the League of Nations. The country has a republican form of government; the national assembly is the legislative body. The president is elected for a term of four years and is not permitted to succeed himself.

Elsass (el'zäs). German name of Alsace.

Elsass-Lothringen (el'zäs.lō'tring.ẹn). German name of Alsace-Lorraine.

Elsberg (elz'bėrg), Louis. b. at Iserlohn, Prussia, April 2, 1836; d. at New York, Feb. 19, 1885. American physician, specializing in laryngology. In 1861 he gave a course, the first of its kind, on diseases of the throat, and in the following year he conducted the first public throat clinic. He founded the Archives of Laryngology, a quarterly, in 1880, and he was working on a textbook in his field when he died. In addition to his knowledge of the throat, both in health and in disease, Elsberg was a student of music, a combination that brought speech and voice students and opera singers to him as patients.

El Segundo (el sẹ.gun'dō). City in S California, in Los Angeles County, SW of Los Angeles: oil refineries and oil storage tanks. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 3,738 (1940), 8,011 (1950).

Elsene (el'sẹ.nẹ). Flemish name of Ixelles.

Elser (el'sėr), Frank Ball. b. at Fort Worth, Tex., Jan. 9, 1885; d. Feb. 1, 1935. American journalist and playwright. City editor (1908–14) of the Associated Press at New York; special correspondent (1915–16) abroad for the Associated Press and the New York Times. Author of the novel The Keen Desire (1926) and the plays Mr. Gilhooley (1930), Low Bridge (1932), and, with Marc Connolly, The Farmer Takes a Wife (1934), which was subsequently filmed.

Elsevier (el'zẹ.vēr). See Elzevir.

Elsheimer (els'hī.mėr), Adam. [Called (in Italy) Adamo Tedesco, meaning "Adam the German," or Il Tedesco, meaning "the German."] b. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, 1578; d. 1620. German mythological and Biblical painter and etcher, teacher of Pieter Lastman, who taught Rembrandt. Art critics regard him as one of the founders of modern landscape painting. He was especially successful in securing light effects and he was fond of moonlight and torchlight scenes. Some of his best paintings are John the Baptist Preaching and The Fall of Troy (at Munich), Saint Paul at Lystra (Frankfort), Ceres (at the Prado, Madrid), Phileomon and Baucis (Dresden), The Good Samaritan (the Louvre, Paris), and The Flight into Egypt.

Elshender (el'shẹn.dėr). [Also called Canny Elshie (el'shi).] In Sir Walter Scott's novel The Black Dwarf, the name used by Sir Edward Mauley, the Black Dwarf.

Elsie Dinsmore (el'si dinz'mōr). See Dinsmore, Elsie.

Elsie Venner (el'si ven'ėr). Novel by Oliver Wendell Holmes, published in 1861.

Elsinore (el'si.nōr). English name of Helsingør.

Elskamp (els'kämp), Max. b. at Antwerp, Belgium, May 5, 1862; d. there, Dec. 10, 1931. Belgian poet. He was one of the leading exponents of symbolism in Belgian literature, and drew his themes from the life of the common people. Interested in folklore, he founded the Folklore Museum at Antwerp, of which he was the first director. His collected poems were published under the title Louange de la vie (1898). During the 1920's he was regarded by French-language Belgian poets as their master. Among his works are Dominicales (1892), Salutations dont d'angéliques (1893), Sous les tentes de l'exode (1921), La Chanson de la rue St. Paul (1922), Aegri somnia (1924), Les Fleurs vertes (1934), and Les Joies blondes (1934).

Elskwatawa (el.skwä'tạ.wạ). See Tenskwatawa.

Elsmere (elz'mir). Town in N Delaware, in New Castle County: residential suburb of Wilmington. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than tripled. 1,630 (1940), 5,314 (1950).

Elsmere. Town in N Kentucky, in Kenton County near Covington. 3,483 (1950).

Elson (el'sọn), Arthur. b. at Boston, Nov. 18, 1873; d. 1940. American musicologist; son of Louis Charles Elson. He was the author of A Critical History of Opera (1901), The Musician's Guide (1912), The Book of Musical Knowledge (1914), and A History of Vocal Music (1918).

Elson, Henry William. b. in Muskingum County, Ohio, March 29, 1857—. American historian, lecturer, and educator. Professor of history and economics (1905–16) at Ohio University; president (1916–21) of Thiel College, Greenville, Pa.; lecturer on history (1927–32) at New York University. Author of History of the United States (5 vols., 1906), A Guide to American History (1909), Guide to English History (1911), Modern Times and the Living Past (1921), United States—Its Past and Present (1925), Through the Years with Our Constitution (1937), and other books.

Elson, Louis Charles. b. at Boston, April 17, 1848; d. there, Feb. 14, 1920. American music critic and writer. Among his works are National Music of America and its Sources (1899), Shakespeare in Music (1900), and History of American Music (1904). He edited Modern Music and Musicians (20 vols.) and the University Encyclopedia of Music (10 vols., 1912).

Elspeth (el'spẹth). In Sir Walter Scott's Antiquary, the old mother of Saunders Mucklebackit. She is apathetic and deaf, and keeps secret the crime of her mistress, in which she had assisted, till just before her death.

Elsschot (el'sċhôt), Willem. [Pseudonym of Alfons de Ridder.] b. 1882—. Flemish novelist. His sharp criticism of society and bourgeois morality is, in the opinion of many critics of modern Flemish literature, shrewdly camouflaged by a pleasant and humorous tone in such novels as Villa des Roses (1913), Lijmen (The Inveiglers, 1927), Kaas (Cheese, 1933), Tsjip (1934), Pensioen (1937), Het Been (The Leg, 1938), De Leeuwentemmer (The Lion Tamer, 1940), and Het panterschip (The Ironclad, 1941).

Elssler (els'lėr), Fanny. b. at Vienna, June 23, 1810; d. there, Nov. 27, 1884. Austrian dancer. She abandoned the stage in 1851. Her sister Thérèse (1808–78), also a dancer, contracted a morganatic marriage with Prince Adalbert of Prussia.

Elster (el'stėr). [Also, Bad-Elster.] Town in E Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the free state of Saxony, situated in the valley of the Weisse Elster River, near the border of Czechoslovakia, S of Plauen. It is a popular health resort with radioactive mineral springs and mud baths, parks, and a theater. The springs are visited by people suffering from dietetic, intestinal, and skin diseases, and anemia. 3,657 (1946).

Elster, Black. See Schwarze Elster.

Elster, Ernst. b. 1860—. German historian of literature, professor at Marburg. He is the editor of a critical edition of Heine's works (1924 et seq.), but chiefly known as the author of Prinzipien der Literaturwissenschaft (2 vols., 1897 et seq.), which represents an early attempt to emancipate literary historiography from mere data-gathering.

Elster, Julius. b. at Blankenburg, Germany, Dec. 24, 1854; d. at Wolfenbüttel, Germany, April 8, 1920. German physicist. In collaboration with H. F. Geitel he devised the earliest practical photoelectric cell. He also constructed an electroscope (named for him) for measuring the emanations of radioactive substances.

Elster, Schwarze. See Schwarze Elster.

El Supremo (el sö.prā'mō). See Francia, José Gaspar Rodriguez.

Elswick (elz'wik, el'sik). Ward of Newcastle, in NE England, in Northumberland, ab. 270 mi. N of London by rail. It has shipyards and ordnance manufactures. 13,028 (1931).

El Teb (el teb'). Locality between Tokar and Trinkitat, in what is now NE Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, in the vicinity of Suakim. Here, on Feb. 29, 1884, the British under General Graham defeated the Mahdists under Osman Digma.

Eltekeh (el'tę.ke). [Modern name, Beit Likia.] In ancient geography, one of the cities on the border of Dan. Near here Sennacherib defeated an Egyptian army which was coming to the relief of Ekron.

Elten (el'tęn), H. D. Kruseman van. See Kruseman van Elten, H. D.

Eltham (el'tham). Former town in SE England, in Kent (now in the County of London, in SE London, in Woolwich metropolitan borough), ab. 9 mi. SE' of Charing Cross station, London. It contains the ruins of Eltham Palace, formerly a royal residence.

Elton (el'tọn) or Eltonskoe (el'tọn.skọ.yę). Salt lake in the U.S.S.R., in the Stalingrad oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 80 mi. E of Stalingrad: noted for its production of salt. Length, ab. 10 mi.

Elton, Oliver. b. at Holt, Norfolk, England, June 3, 1861—. English literary historian. Lecturer (1890–1900) at Owens College at Manchester; professor (1900–25) of English literature at Liverpool University. Author of The Augustan Ages (1899), Modern Studies (1907), a series entitled Survey of English Literature: 1780–1830 (1912), 1830–80 (1920), and 1730–1780 (1928); The English Muse (1930), and Essays and Addresses (1939).

El Trocadero (el trō.kä.ᴛʜā'rō). See under Puerto Real, Spain.

Eltville (elt'vil). [Also: Elfeld; Latin, Altavilla.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Hessen, American Zone, formerly in the province of Hesse-Nassau, Prussia, situated on the Rhine River between Bingen and Mainz. The center of a wine, fruit, and vegetable growing district, it has wine trade and produces sparkling wines. Gutenberg opened a printing shop here in 1465. Pop. 6,304 (1946).

Éluard (ā.lü.ar, -lwar), Paul. b. near Paris, Dec. 14, 1895; d. Nov. 18, 1952. French poet, notably successful in treating themes of pain and solitude. He is the author of Capitale de la douleur (1926), Les Dessous d'une vie (1926), La Vie immédiate (1932), and others. At first a Dadaist, he has occasionally collaborated with the surrealists, as in L'Immaculée conception (1930; with André Breton).

Elul (e.lōl'). Twelfth month of the Hebrew civil year and sixth in the Hebrew ecclesiastical calendar, falling roughly during August or September. In the Babylonian system the month was known as Ululu.

El Uqsor (el ůk'sôr). Arabic name of Luxor.

Elur (e.lör'). See Ellore.

Elura (e.lö'rą). See Ellora.

Elusa (e.lö'sa). See under Eauze.

Elvas (el'vąsh). [Arabic, Balesh; Latin, Alpesa.] City and concelho (commune) in E central Portugal, in the province of Alto Alentejo, in the district of Portalegre, situated on a tributary of the Guadiana River near the Spanish border, ab. 137 mi. NE of Lisbon. It is a center for the local wine, olive oil, and livestock trade and has metallurgical industries; copper and iron ore are mined in the vicinity. The cathedral is in Gothic style, with additions in the so-called Emmanuel style and Renaissance modifications; the convent and church of the Dominicans date from the 13th and 16th centuries; there is a library, theater, and museum, and the ruins of a medieval castle in Moorish-Romanesque style. The aqueduct of Amoeira was erected between 1498 and 1622. Formerly of considerable strategic importance, Elvas has strong fortifications which date from the 18th century. The city was a Moorish stronghold in the early Middle Ages and was retaken by Portugal in 1230. It was the seat of a bishopric from 1570 to 1882. Conquered by the French in 1808, it was ceded to Portugal by the convention of Sintra in the same year. Pop. of concelho, 28,602 (1940); of city, 12,413 (1940).

Elvehjem (el.vā'ęm), Conrad Arnold. b. at McFarland, Wis., May 27, 1901—. American biochemist, professor, educator, and author. He was educated at the Stoughton (Wis.) high school, and the University of Wisconsin, where, since 1930, he has been an assistant professor, associate professor, and full professor (since 1936), chairman of the biochemistry department (since 1944), and dean of the graduate school (since 1946). All his degrees (B.S., 1923; M.S., 1924, thesis on Studies on Calcium Metabolism; and Ph.D., 1927, thesis on The Relation of Iron and Copper to Nutritional Anemia) are from Wisconsin. From 1924 to 1929, after receiving his second degree, he was an instructor in biochemistry. The author of over 500 articles, and of special chapters to various books, he has contributed to Nature, the American Journal of Public Health, the Scientific Monthly, Science, Chemical and Engineering News, and the Journal of Home Economics. In 1941 he wrote The Vitamin Content of Meat, with Harry A. Waisman. He was selected to deliver the Harvey Society lecture in 1940, the Herter lecture in 1942, and the Sigma Xi lecture (he is a member of the honorary scientific fraternity) in 1943. Among prizes that he has won are the Mead Johnson award, in 1939, for his work on the vitamin B complex, the Grocery Manufacturers of America award, in 1942, and the Willard Gibbs medal, in 1943. In 1937 he made one of his outstanding discoveries, that nicotinic acid (niacin), which is part of the vitamin B complex, was a cure for black tongue in dogs, a disease corresponding to human pellagra, and his results were later applied to treating human beings. He also discovered that chick dermatitis was due to pantothenic acid deficiency, and that copper is essential to the formation of hemoglobin.

Elvestad (el'vę.stä), Sven. [Pseudonym, Stein Riverton.] b. at Halden, Norway, Sept. 7, 1884; d. 1934. Norwegian writer, best known for numerous detective stories published under his pseudonym. He also published essays and novels with literary pretensions.

Elvey (el'vi), Sir George Job. b. at Canterbury, England, March 27, 1816; d. at Windlesham, Surrey, England, Dec. 9, 1893. English organist and composer of religious works, such as anthems, oratorios, and odes. He was organist (1835 et seq.) at Saint George's Chapel, Windsor.

El Viejo (el ʙyā'hō). Volcano in W Nicaragua, NW of Managua. Elevation, ab. 5,838 ft.

Elvira (el.vī'rą). In Dryden's Spanish Friar, a young wife who by the aid of the Spanish friar attempts to intrigue with Lorenzo, who turns out to be her brother.

Elvira. Sister of Don Duarte in Colley Cibber's Love Makes a Man.

Elvira. Mistress of Pizarro in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's Pizarro, adapted from Kotzebue.

Elvira (el.vē'rā). Name of the principal female character in Bellini's opera I Puritani, Verdi's opera Ernani, and Auber's opera Masaniello. In Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, she is a former mistress of Don Giovanni who attempts to prevent his further seductions.

Elvire (el.vēr.) Name of the principal female character in Molière's Dom Juan.

Elwell (el'wel), Frank Edwin. b. at Concord, Mass., June 15, 1858; d. Jan. 23, 1922. American sculptor. He studied sculpture at the École des Beaux-Arts at Paris and under Falguière, and modeled the first statue by an American sculptor to be placed in Europe (at Edam, Netherlands). Among his works are Dickens and Little Nell (at Philadelphia), equestrian statue of General Hancock (Gettysburg), Awakening of Egypt, Greece and Rome (for the New York custom house), Despatch Rider, and busts of Elihu Yale (for the Yale Club at New York), Vice-President Morton, and others.

Elwend (el.vend'). See Alwand.

Elwes (el'wẹs), John. [Original surname, Meggott.] b. at Westminster (now part of London), April 7, 1714; d. at Marcham, Berkshire, England, Nov. 26, 1789. English miser; son of a brewer named Meggott. Elwes was his mother's name, which he took in 1750. He inherited wealth and was well educated, but was controlled by a morbid disinclination to spend money upon his personal wants, which manifested itself in various extraordinary ways. In other respects he was not illiberal, and he was extravagant in speculation and gaming.

Elwin (el'win), Whitwell. b. at Thurning, Norfolk, England, Feb. 26, 1816; d. at Booton, Norfolk, England, Jan. 1, 1900. English divine, critic, and editor. For many years (1849–1900) rector at Booton, he was also associated with the Quarterly Review, as a contributor (1843–85) and as an editor (1853–60). He edited (1871–72) five volumes of a ten-volume edition of Pope, the work later being completed by W. J. Courthope. A specialist in the 18th century, he wrote for the Quarterly Review papers on Johnson, Fielding, Goldsmith, Sterne, Gray, and Cowper; with others, they were published in Some Eighteenth Century Men of Letters (1902).

Elwood (el'wụd). City in C Indiana, in Madison County. It has trade in livestock, tomatoes, and grain, and manufactures trailers. It was the birthplace of Wendell L. Willkie. 11,362 (1950).

Elwund (el.vund'). See Alwand.

Ely (ē'li). [Old English, Ēlig, meaning "Eel Island."] Urban district and market town in E England, in the Isle of Ely (an administrative county of the geographical county of Cambridgeshire), situated on the left bank of the river Ouse ab. 15 mi. NE of Cambridge, ab. 71 mi. NE of London by rail. Ely is an ancient city, one of the last English strongholds to resist the Normans, and was a medieval port. It contains a famous cathedral, begun in 1083. The nave and W tower were completed toward the end of the 12th century, and the W porch or "galilee" dates from c1215. The Norman choir was replaced by the existing presbytery in the middle of the 13th century, and the octagonal central lantern was finished in 1328. The large Lady chapel adjoining the N transept, with elaborate vaulting and ornate arcading under the large windows, was built in the middle of the 14th century. The exterior of the church is distinguished by its high, castellated W tower. Under the tower is a curious galilee or entrance-porch, which opens into an unfinished W transept. The nave is imposing, with its long ranges of Norman arches and its lofty triforium gallery. Its roof is of wood. The vaulting of the octagon forms the only existing pointed dome of its type. The presbytery is among the most excellent achievements of work in the so-called Decorated style. The cathedral measures 520 by 77 ft.; length of transept, 178½ ft.; height of nave, 62 ft.; of choir vaulting, 70 ft. Pop. 9,898 (1951).

Ely. City in NE Minnesota, in St. Louis County, on Lake Shagawa: summer resort and iron-mining center. 5,474 (1950).

Ely. City in E Nevada, county seat of White Pine County: center of Nevada's principal copper-mining area. 3,558 (1950).

Ely, Eugene Burton. b. at Davenport, Iowa, Oct. 21, 1885; d. at Macon, Ga., Oct. 19, 1911. American aviator. On Nov. 14, 1910, he first demonstrated the feasibility of starting an airplane from a vessel. In his Curtiss biplane he left the deck of the U.S. cruiser Birmingham, stationed in Hampton Roads, Va., and five minutes later landed safely on Willoughby Spit near Norfolk, a distance of about 3 miles. At San Francisco, on Jan. 23, 1911, he flew to the battleship Pennsylvania, alighted, and returned, covering a distance of about 12 miles.

Ely, Isle of. Marshy plain in E England, in Cambridgeshire, situated N of the river Ouse, in the SE portion of the Fenland. It forms part of Bedford Level and gives its name to an administrative county of the geographical county of Cambridgeshire. It was a stronghold of the Saxons under Hereward. The marshland has now largely been drained and reclaimed.

Ely, Isle of. [Sometimes called the Cambridgeshire Fens.] Inland administrative county (the N part of the geographical county of Cambridgeshire) in E England, bounded on the N by Lincolnshire, on the NE and E by Norfolk, on the SE by West Suffolk, on the S by Cambridgeshire (administrative county), and on the W by Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire. It is called "isle" because part of the administrative county formerly stood as an island of higher ground among the fens, or marshes, surrounding it. These have now been largely drained and are very fertile. It is chiefly an agricultural county, raising large quantities of fruit. It specializes, however, in the raising of root crops, chiefly potatoes and turnips, for the London market. Some wheat is also raised. March is the county seat; area, ab. 374 sq. mi.; pop. 89,038 (1951).

Ely, Richard of. See Fitzneale or Fitznigel, Richard.

Ely, Richard Theodore. b. at Ripley, N.Y., April 13, 1854; d. at Old Lyme, Conn., Oct. 4, 1943. American economist. He was graduated from Columbia (1876), studied abroad (1877–80), taking the degree of Ph.D. at Heidelberg, had charge of political economy at the Johns Hopkins University (1881–92), and held the professorship of political economy at the University of Wisconsin. Thereafter he did perhaps more than any other American of his day to awaken a popular interest in economics. He was founder of the American Economic Association and its president from 1899 to 1901. His works include French and German Socialism (1883), Problems of To-day (1888), Outlines of Economics (1893; revised ed., 1908), Socialism and Social Reform (1894), Monopolies and Trusts (1900), and Studies in the Evolution of Industrial Society (1903).

Ely Chapel. Chapel of the former palace of the bishops of Ely, in the City of London. It is a fine example of architecture in the so-called Decorated style.

Elymaïs (el.i.mā'is). Ancient Greek name of Elam.

Elymas (el'i.mạs). [Also, Bar-Jesus.] Sorcerer, mentioned in the New Testament. Acts, xiii. 6.

Elyot (el'i.ọt, el'yọt), Sir Thomas. b. probably in Wiltshire, England, before 1490; d. at Carlton, Cambridgeshire, England, March 20, 1546. English scholar and diplomat. He was educated at home. In 1511 he was clerk of assize on the western circuit, and in 1523 Cardinal Wolsey gave him the position of clerk of the privy council. He was sheriff of Oxfordshire and Berkshire in 1527. In 1531 he published The Boke named the Governour, which related to the education of statesmen and was dedicated to Henry VIII. This secured royal patronage, and he was appointed ambassador to the emperor Charles V. In 1535 he was again sent to the emperor, following him to Naples. He was member of Parliament for Cambridge in 1542. He also wrote Of the Knowledge which maketh a Wise Man (1533), Pasquil the Playne (1533), The Castel of Helth (a lay medical guide, 1534), Bibliotheca (a Latin and English dictionary, 1538), The Defence of Good Women (1545), and others.

Ely Place (ē'li). Place on Holborn Hill, London, the entrance to which is almost opposite Saint Andrew's Church. The town house of the bishops of Ely stood here, and the place was entered by a great gateway built (1388) by Bishop Arundel.

Elyria (ẹ.lir'i.ạ). City in N Ohio, county seat of Lorain County, on the Black River ab. 25 mi. SW of Cleveland. It is a marketing center for a grape, dairy, cattle, and fruit producing area; manufactures include heavy machinery, steel tubing, fishing tackle, and toys. It was settled in 1817, and is the seat of a hospital for crippled children. 30,307 (1950).

Elysée (ā.lē.zā'), Palace of the. Palace at Paris, built in 1718 for the count of Evreux, and since the reign of Louis XV the property of the state. It was used as a private residence by Napoleon I and Napoleon III, to escape the publicity of the Tuileries. During the republic of 1848 it was the official residence of the president of France, as it has been under several subsequent governments.

Elysian Fields (ẹ.lizh'ạn). Name given to a region near the ancient town of Baiae (modern Baia), Italy, which is particularly fertile and delightful, and is, therefore, supposed to resemble the Elysium or Elysian Fields of Greek mythology.

Elysium (ē.liz'i.um, -lizh'um). [Also, Elysian Fields.] Abode of the souls of the good and of heroes exempt from death, in ancient classical mythology. It is described, particularly by later poets, as a place of exceeding bliss, and contrasted with Tartarus, an afterworld of torment. Some have thought it to be in the center of the earth, some in the Islands of the Blest, and some in the sun or mid air. In the Odyssey it is a plain at the end of the earth "where life is easiest to man. No snow is there, nor yet great storm nor any rain."

El Yunque (el yŏng'kā). Mountain in NE Puerto Rico. Elevation, ab. 3,790 ft.

Elze (el'tsẹ), (Friedrich) Karl. b. at Dessau, Anhalt, Germany, May 22, 1821; d. at Halle, Germany, Jan. 21, 1889. German literary critic, professor of the English language and literature at Halle from 1875. He published critical editions of Hamlet (1857, 1882), of Chapman's Alphonsus, and of Rowley's When You See Me, Essays on Shakespeare, William Shakespeare (1876; Eng. trans., 1888), Notes on Elizabethan Dramatists (1880–84), and others.

Elzevir or Elsevier or Elzevier (el'zẹ.vēr). Family of Dutch printers, celebrated especially for their editions of classical authors, and of French authors on historical and political subjects. Louis, the founder of the family, was born (c1540) at Louvain, near Brussels, and died at Leiden, Feb. 4, 1617. The first book he printed was J. Drusii Ebraicarum quaestionum, sive quaestionum ac responsionum libri duo (1583), but the first book he published at his own risk was a Eutropius by P. Merula (1592). He had seven sons, five of whom followed his profession: Matthieu (1564 or 1565–1640), Louis (1566 or 1567–c1621), Gilles (d. 1651), Joost (1575 or 1576–c1617), and Bonaventure (1583–1652). The last was the most celebrated.

Emancipation, Edict of. Document or edict, called a ukase in czarist Russia, by which 23 million serfs were liberated. It was issued by Alexander II on March 3, 1863, although it had been previously announced in 1861. By its terms, the great Russian landholders were compensated by the government for the loss of their serfs, and the peasants themselves were required to make annual payments over a period of years. The edict not only freed the serfs, who made up about one third of the population, but it gave them portions of land to live on and to cultivate.

Emancipation Act of the Indians. See Dawes General Allotment Act.

Emancipation Proclamation. Proclamation by which, on Jan. 1, 1863, President Lincoln, as commander in chief of the armies of the U.S., declared as a military measure, in accordance with notice proclaimed on Sept. 22, 1862, that within certain specified territory in armed rebellion all persons held as slaves "are, and henceforward shall be, free." It did not free all the slaves in America, but only those in territory then in rebellion and not occupied by U.S. troops. In a strict legal sense, slavery in the U.S. was finally and completely abolished only with the 13th Amendment to the Constitution in 1865.

Emants (ā'mänts), Marcellus. b. 1848; d. 1923. Dutch novelist, playwright, and poet. His entire deterministic and pessimistic work gives a refined psychological dissection of mankind, demonstrating how the vital instincts of life ultimately lead to destruction and death. This philosophy first was expressed in the epics Lilith (1879) and Godenschemering (Twilight of the Gods, 1883). He wrote many novels, including Een nagelaten bekentenis (A Posthumous Confession, 1894), Inwijding (Initiation, 1901), Waan (Delusion, 1905), and Liefdesleven (Love's Life, 1916). His more than 20 plays include Fatsoen (Respectability, 1890), Artiest (1895), Een Kriezis (1897), Domheidsmacht (Power of Stupidity, 1904; a very successful play), Om het mysterie (Around the Mystery, 1907), Geuren (Swanky, 1909), and Dokter Ahasverus (1923).

Emanuel I (of Portugal) (ē.man'ū.ẹl). [Also: Emmanuel, Manuel; Portuguese, Manoel; called "the Great" and "the Happy."] b. May 31, 1469; d. at Lisbon, Dec. 13, 1521. King of Portugal; cousin of John II, whom he succeeded in 1495. He promoted the expeditions of Vasco da Gama, Cabral, Corte-Real, and Albuquerque.

Emanuel, Paul. In Charlotte Brontë's novel Villette, a lecturer in Madame Beck's school.

Emaus (em'ạ.us, e.mā'us). Former spelling of Emmaus, Pa.

Emba (em'bạ). River in the U.S.S.R., in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic, Asiatic Russia, which flows into the Caspian Sea, through rich oil fields, from the NE. Length, ab. 375 mi.

Embargo Act. Act passed (Dec. 22, 1807) by the U.S. Congress for the purpose of preserving American neutrality and bringing the warring European powers (France and Great Britain) to terms. It forbade all trade out of American ports, and, it was hoped, would turn the tables on England and France, who were restricting American trade. The act was supplemented by those of Jan. 9, 1808, and March 12, 1808. They proved unenforceable, particularly in the New England states, and disrupted national unity. The embargo was a major test of the Jefferson administration and was finally withdrawn (March 1, 1809) in favor of a nonintercourse law.

Embarras (em'brô, em.bar'ạs). [Also, Embarrass.] River in E Illinois, flowing generally S and SE to join the Wabash near Lawrenceville, Ill. Length, ab. 195 mi.

Embarrassments. Collection of tales by Henry James, published in 1896. It includes the story "The Figure in the Carpet."

Embden (em'dẹn). See Emden.

Embden (emp'dẹn), Gustav. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Nov. 10, 1874; d. at Nassau, Germany, July 25, 1933. German physiologist. He was assistant to F. Hofmeister at the Institute of Physiological Chemistry at Strasbourg and assistant to Paul Ehrlich at the Institute of Experimental Therapy at Frankfort on the Main. He became (1906) director of the Chemical-Physiological Institute and was named (1914) director of the Institute of Vegetative Physiology at the University of Frankfort. He became privatdocent of experimental physiology (1907) at the University of Bonn, and professor (1909) and full professor (1914) of psychology at Frankfort. His studies of intermediate products of metabolism were noteworthy, as were his investigations in the quantitative physiology of the muscles and their action, and his work on fat and carbohydrate embolism and the origin of lactic acid. He was the author of Chemismus der Muskelkontraktion und Chemie der Muskulatur (1925); coeditor of the Handbuch der normalen und pathologischen Physiologie.

Embick (em'bik), Stanley Dunbar. b. in Franklin County, Pa., Jan. 22, 1877—. American artillery officer, active in World War I and World War II. Graduate (1899) of U.S. Military Academy; chief of staff (1917–18), American section of Supreme War Council at Versailles; one of American delegation to Paris Peace Conference (1918–19); on War Department general staff (1926–30); appointed major general (1936); commanded (1938–40) 4th corps area; appointed (1939) lieutenant general, in command (1939–40) of Third Army; retired and recommissioned in 1941; member (1940–42) of joint U.S.-Canada defense board; chairman (1942–46) of Inter-American Defense Board.

Embla (em'blạ). See Ask and Embla.

Embrica (em'bri.kạ). Ancient name of Emmerich.

Embrun (äṅ.brėṅ). [Ancient name, Ebrodunum.] Town in SE France, in the department of Hautes-Alpes, near the Durance River, ab. 19 mi. E of Gap. It has a medieval cathedral. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Embury (em'bėr.i), Philip. b. at Ballygaran, Ireland, 1728; d. at Camden, Washington County, N.Y., 1773. First Methodist preacher in America. He began preaching at New York in 1766.

Emden (em'dẹn). [Also, Embden.] City in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated on the Dollart, a bay of the North Sea, near the mouth of the Ems River and the Dutch border, ab. 46 mi. NE of Oldenburg. As the terminus of the Dortmund-Ems Canal and the Ems-Jade Canal, it is one of the chief seaports for the industries of the Ruhr basin. The chief export is coal; imports include iron ore (mainly from Sweden), lumber, and grain. Emden has large-scale herring fisheries, shipyards, fish-smoking plants, blast furnaces, and also important cattle, hog, and sheep markets. The city came under the sovereignty of the counts of East Friesland in the 15th century, but retained a relative independence as a free imperial city. In 1744 it became part of Prussia, and it was declared a free port by Frederick II in 1751. It belonged to France (1795–1806), to the Netherlands (1806–14), and to Hanover (1815–66), and finally once more to Prussia. Emden is traversed by canals and had up to World War II an architectural character reminiscent of Dutch cities. There were old fortifications and houses, a beautiful Renaissance Rathaus (city hall) dating from 1576, the Reformed Great Church in the Gothic style of the 12th century, the Gothic Gasthaus Church, the Ostfriesisches Landesmuseum, and the Nordsee Museum. All of these were utterly destroyed in the many bombings of the harbor installations in the period 1943–45. Canadian troops occupied the city in 1945. Pop. 37,252 (1950).

Emelie or Emelye (em'ę.li). See Emilia.

Emerald Hill (em'ėr.ạld). Suburb of Melbourne, Australia, 1½ mi. S of that city.

"Emerald Isle." A nickname of Ireland.

Emerald Isle, The. Comic opera in two acts by Arthur Sullivan, with a libretto by Basil Hook, first performed at the London Savoy Theatre on April 27, 1901, having been brought to completion by Edward German after the death of the composer.

Emergency Banking Act. Act passed by the U.S. Congress on March 9, 1933, as a result of the financial crisis which in that year brought the temporary closing of every bank in the U.S. A measure of the early New Deal, the act enabled sound banks to reopen at once and provided that banks concerning which any doubts existed should remain closed until their soundness had been established. It also forbade the export of gold except under official license and prohibited gold hoarding. The act effectively halted the crisis and within a week of its passage some 90 percent of the banking resources of the nation were again fluid.

Emergency Fleet Corporation. Agency incorporated (April 16, 1917) into the U.S. Shipping Board to buy, construct, equip, and operate merchant ships for the U.S. government. Edward M. Hurley was named chairman of the Shipping Board and Charles M. Schwab of Bethlehem Steel made head of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. To build a "bridge of ships" to France, the Corporation constructed several large steel shipyards, among them the Hog Island yard, invested in other yards, and requisitioned the construction being carried on in the U.S. for foreign contractors. The total American tonnage in operation at the outbreak of the war was less than one million and the corporation planned an increase to 17 million. Although it scarcely realized the completion of its full construction schedule, it enabled the large-scale transport of American troops and military supplies.

Emergency Relief and Construction Act. Act of the U.S. Congress passed in 1932 for the purpose of stimulating employment by means of public works construction. It authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) to make a total of one-and-a-half-billion dollars in loans to states and local agencies for the financing of self-liquidating work projects.

Emergency Tariff Act of 1921. Protectionist measure which was vetoed by President Wilson shortly before he left office and was passed by a special session of the U.S. Congress soon after President Harding's inauguration. The schedules increased rates on wheat, corn, wool, sugar, meat, and other agricultural produce, and prohibited the entry of German dyestuffs.

Émeric-David (em.rēk.dȧ.vēd), Toussaint Bernard. [Also, Toussaint Bernard David.] b. at Aix, in Provence, France, Aug. 20, 1755; d. at Paris, April 2, 1839. French archaeologist. He became docteur en droit at Aix in 1775, and went to Paris to complete his studies in jurisprudence. He occupied himself with law, business, and archaeological studies until the Revolution, when he escaped death by flight (1793). After the 9th Thermidor he returned to Paris, and in 1800 won the first prize of the Institute with his essay on the causes of the perfection of sculpture in antiquity. On April 11, 1816, he was elected member of the Institute. On Oct. 14, 1825, he was called to take part in the continuation of L'Histoire littéraire de France. His principal works are Recherche sur l'art statuaire, considéré chez les anciens et les modernes, Discours historique sur la peinture moderne, Discours historique sur la gravure en bois, Discours historique sur la sculpture française, and Histoire de la peinture au moyen âge.

Emerson (em'ėr.sọn), Benjamin Kendall. b. at Nashua, N.H., Dec. 20, 1843; d. at Amherst, Mass., April 7, 1932. American geologist, professor of geology and mineralogy in Amherst College from 1872, and in Smith College from 1878 to 1912. He was geologist of the U.S. Geological Survey, and was president of the Geological Society of America in 1899. His investigations were concerned chiefly with the geology of Massachusetts.

Emerson, Charles Phillips. b. at Methuen, Mass., Sept. 4, 1872; d. Sept. 26, 1938. American physician. He was graduated (M.D., 1899) from the Johns Hopkins University, was a resident physician at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, and was professor of medicine and dean (1911–32) of the Indiana School of Medicine, where he became (1932) research professor of medicine. Among his works are Clinical Diagnosis (1906) and Essentials of Medicine (1908).

Emerson, Edward Waldo. b. at Concord, Mass., July 10, 1844; d. there, Jan. 27, 1930. American writer and editor; son of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Author of Emerson in Concord (1889), Life and Letters of Charles Russell Lowell (1907), Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar (1911; with Moorfield Storey), Henry Thoreau as Remembered by a Young Friend (1917), and Early Years of the Saturday Club (1918); editor of Correspondence between John Sterling and Ralph Waldo Emerson (1897), the Centenary Edition (1903–04) of his father's writings, and, with Waldo Emerson Forbes, the Journals of Ralph Waldo Emerson (1909–14).

Emerson, George Barrell. b. at Kennebunk, Me., Sept. 12, 1797; d. at Newton, Mass., March 4, 1881. American educator, and writer on education. He taught at Boston many years, and in 1831 assisted in the organization of the Boston Society of Natural History, of which he became president in 1837. He wrote Report on the Trees and Shrubs Growing Naturally in the Forests of Massachusetts (1846).

Emerson, Oliver Farrar. b. near Wolf Creek (now Traer), Iowa, May 24, 1860; d. at Ocala, Fla., March 13, 1927. American philologist. He was an instructor of English (1889–91) and assistant professor (1892–96) at Cornell, and professor of English (1896–1927) at Western Reserve University. His written works include The Ithaca Dialect: A Study of Present English (1891), History of the English Language (1894), Brief History of the English Language (1896), Middle English Reader (1905), Outline History of the English Language (1906), and editions of Johnson's Rasselas (1895), Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Edward Gibbon (1898), and Poems of Chaucer (1911).

Emerson, Ralph Waldo. b. at Boston, May 25, 1803; d. at Concord, Mass., April 27, 1882. American essayist, poet, and lecturer during the so-called American Renaissance. He was associated with Bronson Alcott, Henry David Thoreau, Jones Very, and Margaret Fuller in the literary and philosophical movement known as Transcendentalism. He disseminated in America the principal tenets of European Romanticism as reflected in the writings of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Carlyle. His philosophic idealism, at first derived from Plato, Plotinus, and the 17th-century Neoplatonists, was later indebted to the writers of China, Persia, and India. He graduated from Harvard College in 1821, and taught for a few years, and then studied theology. Licensed as a Unitarian clergyman in 1826, he was pastor (1829–32) of the Second Church, Boston. He resigned his ministry over a matter of principle (see his Sermon on the Lord's Supper). In 1832–33 he visited Europe, met Landor, Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Carlyle, and upon his return began his long career as public lecturer and moral philosopher. After 1834 he lived at Concord, made famous as a literary center. His first three published challenges were: Nature (1836), a statement of his idealistic philosophy and a condemnation of American materialism; The American Scholar (1837), a declaration, originally given as the Phi Beta Kappa address at Harvard in 1837, of scholarly ideals and of America's literary independence from England; and Address at Divinity College (1838), his renunciation of formal Christianity in favor of a transcendent spiritual philosophy. His platform addresses, meanwhile, were condensed and revised for publication as the famous Essays (1841-44). He contributed to The Dial (1840-44) and became one of its editors. His fame soon spread to Europe, which he revisited in 1847, the year in which the first edition of his Poems appeared. His later works include Representative Men (1850), Memoir of Margaret Fuller (1851), English Traits (1856), Conduct of Life (1860), Society and Solitude (1870), Letters and Social Aims (1875), and Natural History of Intellect (1893). He edited Parnassus (1874), an anthology of English poetry.

Emerson, William. b. at Hurworth, near Darlington, England, May 14, 1701; d. there, May 20, 1782. English mathematician.

Emery (em'ėr.i), Henry Crosby. b. at Ellsworth, Me., Dec. 21, 1872; d. at sea, Feb. 6, 1924. American political economist, chairman of the U.S. Tariff Board from 1909. He was instructor and professor of political economy at Bowdoin College (1894–1900) and professor of political economy at Yale University (1900 et seq.).

Emeryville (em'ėr.i.vil, em'ri-). Town in W central California, in Alameda County, E of San Francisco. 2,889 (1950).

Emesa (em'ę.są). Latin name of Homs, Syria.

Emich (ā'miċh), Friedrich. b. at Graz, Austria, 1860; d. 1940. Austrian analytical chemist. A professor at Graz (1889–1931), he pioneered in working out micromanipulative methods, and wrote Laboratory Michrochemistry (1st ed., 1924; 2nd ed., 1931; translated into English and Russian).

Emigrant Aid Company. Society, or company, the idea of which originated with Eli Thayer in the early months of 1854, before the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. Its aim was to help New Englanders who were against slavery to settle in Kansas. In April, 1854, the Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Company, which later changed its name to the New England Emigrant Aid Society, received a charter.

Émigrés (ā.mē.grā). In French history, the royalists who left France in 1789 and succeeding years, and took refuge in Germany, Switzerland, Great Britain, and other countries. Part of them fought against the French revolutionary armies, and many had their headquarters at Koblenz. Some returned during the consulate or empire, others not until the restoration of a Bourbon king to the French throne following the fall of Napoleon I. Nearly all had lost their property, but after the restoration some of them received government grants.

Emi Koussi (ā'mē kö'sē). See under Tibesti.

Émile (ā.mēl). [Also, De l'éducation, meaning in English, "Of Education."] Treatise on education, by Jean Jacques Rousseau, published in 1762; named after its chief character.

Emilia (ę.mil'i.ą, -mil'yą). [Also: Emelie, Emelye, Emily.] Character in Chaucer's Knight's Tale, Dryden's Palamon and Arcite, Beaumont and Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen, and other versions of the same story. She is a very beautiful woman, loved by both Palamon and Arcite, and won by the former.

Emilia. In Shakespeare's tragedy Othello, the wife of Iago. She reveals his perfidy, and he kills her.

Emilia. Attendant on Hermione in Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale.

Emilia (ā.mē'lyä), Reggio. See Reggio nell'Emilia.

Emilia Galotti (ā.mē'lē.ä gä.lot'tē). Tragedy by Lessing produced in Germany in 1772, and produced on the English stage by Thompson in 1794.

Emilia Gauntlet (ę.mil'i.ą, -mil'yą; gänt'lęt, gônt'-). See Gauntlet, Emilia.

Emiliani (ā.mē.lyä'nē), Saint Jerome. See Saint Jerome Emiliani.

Emiliani Giudici (ā.mē.lyä'nē jö'dē.chē), Paolo. b. at Mussomeli, Sicily, June 13, 1812; d. at Tunbridge, England, Sept. 8, 1872. Italian historian of literature. He wrote Storia della letteratura italiana (1855), Storia dei comuni italiani (1851), and others.

Emilia-Romagna (ā.mē'lyä.rō.mä'nyä). [Latin, Aemilia.] Compartimento (region) in N Italy, containing the provinces of Bologna, Ferrara, Forlì, Modena, Parma, Piacenza, Ravenna, and Reggio nell' Emilia. It consists of the fertile plain stretching S of the Po River in the N, the Apennines in the S, and the Adriatic coast in the E. It produces rich harvests of grain, vegetables, sugar, wine, and fruits, raises cattle, pigs, and fowl, and has important industries. It is named after the Aemilian Way of the Romans (built in 187 B.C.) which ran from Piacenza to Rimini. Under divided sovereignty, the region developed a rich culture in the Middle Ages and in the period of the Renaissance. Prior to the unification of Italy, it consisted of the duchies of Parma and Modena and the papal Romagna. It was joined to Italy in 1860. Area, 8,542 sq. mi.; pop. 3,339,058 (1936), 3,535,002 (1951).

Emilio (ā.mē'lyō), Paolo. [Latinized, Paulus Aemilius.] b. at Verona, Italy; d. at Paris, May 5, 1529. Italian historian. He was summoned to France in the reign of Charles VIII to write a history of French royalty, De rebus gestis Francorum (French trans., 1581).

Emily (em'i.li). Heroine of Ann Radcliffe's Mysteries of Udolpho.

Emily. [Called "Little Em'ly."] In Charles Dickens's David Copperfield, Mr. Peggotty's niece. She is affianced to Ham Peggotty, and is afterward betrayed by Steerforth.

Emily Costigan (kos'ti.gan). See Costigan, Emily or Milly.

Emin (e.mēn'), Mihail. See Eminescu, Mihail.

Éminence Grise (ā.mē.näṅs grēz). Painting by Gérôme, in the Museum of Fine Arts at Boston. It represents Father Joseph, the noted secretary to and confessor of Cardinal Richelieu, descending a palace staircase, feignedly oblivious of the cringing before him and the gestures of hatred behind him of a body of brilliant courtiers. (Father Joseph, whose original name was François Le Clerc du Tremblay, was called Éminence Grise (that is to say, the "Gray Cardinal") in contradistinction to his master Richelieu, called Éminence Rouge (the "Red Cardinal"). The terms derived originally from the predominant color of the robes worn by each man.

Eminent Victorians (vik.tōr'i.ąnz). Volume of biographical studies of Cardinal Manning, Florence Nightingale, Dr. Thomas Arnold, and General Charles Gordon, by Lytton Strachey, published in 1918. Strachey's satirical and intimate analyses of character helped usher in a new era in biographical writing.

Eminescu (e.mē.nes'kö), Mihail. [Original surname, Iminovici or Emin.] b. at Ipateşti, near Botoşani, in Moldavia, Dec. 20, 1849; d. at Bucharest, 1889. Rumanian poet, journalist, and actor.

Emin Pasha (ā'mēn pä'shä). [Original name, Eduard Schnitzer.] b. at Oppeln, Germany, March 28, 1840; killed near Nyangwe, in the Congo region, 1892. African explorer. Born of Jewish parents, he became a Protestant in 1846, and professed Islamism when he entered the service of Mohammedan governments. After studies in medicine and ornithology he went (1865) to Turkey, where he accompanied a high official in his journeys until 1873. In 1875 he made a short visit to Germany. In 1876 he joined the Englishman Gordon Pasha (Charles George Gordon; also called "Chinese Gordon"), then governor of the Sudan, explored the Nile up to Lake Albert, and visited Mtesa, King of the Ganda tribe in East Africa, in 1877. In 1878 he was made bey and governor of the Equatorial Provinces. In a few years he raised his ruined provinces to relative prosperity, made considerable scientific collections, and completed the accounts of Schweinfurth and Junker. From 1883 he was cut off, by the Mahdi, from communication with Egypt, and his position soon became precarious. Stanley went to his relief, and both reached the east coast in 1889. In the service of Germany he returned to the lakes in 1890, accompanied by Dr. Stuhlmann and Lieutenant Langheld. He established the station of Bukoba, in Tanganyika, and left it in charge of Lieutenant Langheld. With Dr. Stuhlmann he then proceeded westward, intending, despite contrary orders, to make his way to the west coast by way of the Shari River. At Momfu, west of Lake Albert, the rebellion of his carriers compelled him to change his route (1891). Dr. Stuhlmann returned to the coast with the richest harvest of scientific data ever gathered by an African expedition up to that time. Emin was killed by the Arabs, by order of Chief Kibonge, near Nyangwe, in what is now the Belgian Congo, in October, 1892. Two of the murderers confessed in April, 1894.